¶ 20. By the employment of the word "nurses" in Comp. L. 1897, § 4424 as amended by Pub. Acts 1903, No. 7, requiring the employment of nurses and providing other assistance to persons quarantined with dangerous communicable diseases, is not meant that more than one nurse must be employed in every case, but the board of health is given a discretion as to number and occasion.—Rohn v. Osmun, 143 Mich. 68.

¶ 21. The duty of providing nurses and assistance, imposed upon the board of health, to persons quarantined with dangerous and communicable diseases as prescribed by Comp. L. 1897, § 4424 as amended by Pub. Acts 1903, No. 7, is a quasi judicial power, and the neglect of such duty does not entitle a party injured by negligent action in the matter to an action, so long as the officer is acting within his jurisdiction, and is not guilty of an invasion of private rights, and is not acting from corrupt motives.—Rohn v. Osmun, 143 Mich. 68.

§ 7. Medical treatment at public charge.

Liability for failure to provide treatment, see ante § 6.

Liability for services supplied or expense incurred, see post § 11 et seq.

Treatment for rabies, see Comp. L. 1915, § 5122.

Public care and support of poor persons, see Poor Persons.

§ 8. Infirmaries and pesthouses.

Statutory provisions as to hospitals and pesthouses, see Comp. L. 1915, § 5075 et seq.

¶ 22. Under the charter of the city of Detroit, § 178, providing that the council shall have power to provide for the preservation of the general health of the inhabitants of the city, to make regulations to secure the same, to prevent the introduction or spread of contagious or infectious disease, and suppress disease generally, and to establish a board of health and prescribe its duties, the city had power to authorize the board of health to hire a steamboat for use as a quarantine station for a rental of $5,000 for two years and to agree to keep it insured for the benefit of the lessor, and such power was not limited by section 240, providing that no contract shall be let or entered into for the construction of any public work to be done, or for the purchase or furnishing of supplies for the city, and no such public work, performance, purchasing or supplying shall be commenced until approved by the council, and until the contract therefor has been duly approved and confirmed by the council, and section 241, providing that no contract for the purchase or furnishing of any material, printing or supplies, if the purchase of such material or supplies shall exceed $200 shall be let or entered into except to and with the lowest bidder with adequate security.—City of Detroit v. Grummond, 216 Fed. 273.

§ 9. Destruction and abatement of unwholesome conditions.

Compensation of owners, see post § 10.

Judicial notice of tendency of organic matter to decay and emit noisome odors, see Evidence § 8, ¶ 20.

Abatement of nuisances in general, see Nuisances.

Powers and duties of local health officers, see Comp. L. 1915, § 5048 et seq.

¶ 23. Proceedings of a board of health to abate a ditch as a nuisance are ineffective where the record contains no action upon a petition to the board other than a motion directing that notice to abate the nuisance created by the drain be served, which notice was never served on one of the owners.—Chase v. Middleton, 123 Mich. 647.

¶ 24. The State Board of Health has power under Act No. 98, Pub. Acts 1913, to make an order which is enforceable by a court of chancery, requiring the abatement of a nuisance by compelling the enlargement of an inadequate sewer maintained by the City of Detroit, into which the Village of Highland Park is entitled to cast its sewage.—City of Detroit v. Village of Highland Park, 186 Mich. 166. (Equally divided court.)

¶ 25. An order made by the State Board of Health requiring the abatement of a nuisance consisting of an inadequate sewer of the City of Detroit, into which the Village of Highland Park was entitled to cast sewage, held properly enforced by a court of chancery after a full hearing, by requiring the city to enlarge the sewer.—City of Detroit v. Village of Highland Park, 186 Mich. 166. (Equally divided court.)

§ 10. Compensation for destruction or loss.

Liability for cost of articles to replace those destroyed, see post ¶ 44.

General law of condemnation and appropriation of property for public use and right to compensation for property, see Eminent Domain.

Liability of city for rental of house as pesthouse obtained by trick on part of health officer, see also Eminent Domain, ¶ 125.

Damages for loss of animals destroyed to prevent spread of rabies, see Comp. L. 1915, § 5114 et seq.

¶ 26. Local Acts of 1893, No. 403, prescribing the powers and duties of the board of health of the city of Detroit, provides: "In case of pestilence or epidemic disease, it shall be the duty of the board of health to take such measures, and to do and order and cause to be done such acts, for the preservation of the public health, as they may in good faith deem the public safety and health to demand." Held, that it was the duty of the board to award compensation for damages directly arising from its action in using a hotel for a hospital during an epidemic of smallpox among the inmates, and in causing the destruction of infected property.—Safford v. Detroit Board of Health, 110 Mich. 81.

¶ 27. A city board of health is not compelled to allow compensation for losses of rent and cost of renovation and chattels destroyed occasioned by the quarantining and disinfecting of premises wherein smallpox has broken out, if the only use made of the premises was such as was necessary for the proper care of the patients who were found there suffering from the disease.—Webb v. Detroit Board of Health, 116 Mich. 516.

¶ 28. If the officers of a city board of health are so negligent in the matter of disinfecting property as to cause unnecessary damage, they as individuals, and not the city, are liable if any liability attaches.—Webb v. Detroit Board of Health, 116 Mich. 516.

¶ 29. A city is not liable for the negligence of its board of health whereby one who had been exposed to smallpox was allowed to go without being placed in quarantine, and so was received into a boarding-house occasioning loss and damage to the proprietor.—Gilboy v. City of Detroit, 115 Mich. 121.

Liability of city or county for negligent acts of health officers, see note 11 N. C. C. A. 406-413.

§ 11. Liability for services or expense.

See also ante ¶ 14.
Stating and recording claim, see post § 14.
Presentment and audit of claim, see post § 16.
Proper remedy or procedure to enforce and collect, see post § 18.

¶ 30. When the board of health of a township necessarily incurs expenses in providing for the protection of its inhabitants against a sickness dangerous to the public health by the removal of persons infected to a building provided for them, such expenses are a charge against the county which it is the duty of the board of supervisors to allow. People ex rel. Bristow v. Macomb County Supervisors, 3 Mich. 475.

¶ 31. The charter of Flint (L. 1867, Act No. 372, § 19), requires the common council to take measures for the preservation of the public health. Pub. L. 1879, Act No. 145, (How. St. § 1681), makes the council the board of health where no other board is appointed. Held, that a nurse employed by the council to care for smallpox patients was entitled to compensation primarily from the city, even where the patient was of sufficient ability to pay for the service himself; and Comp. L. § 1706 (How. St. § 1647), making the cost of services rendered to such persons an individual liability, does not exempt the city from the immediate liability, if, indeed, it applies at all in cases of public emergency.—Rae v. City of Flint, 51 Mich. 526.

¶ 32. The authority of a township board of health, under How. St. § 1647, to guard against smallpox, extends to making contracts for the nursing of patients and to destroying infected clothing. And when it has allowed the accounts for such services rendered and property destroyed, the board of supervisors must pass such accounts; they cannot refuse on the ground that the patients were themselves able to pay, or that sundry taxpayers considered the charges extortionate.—Elliott v. Kalkaska Sup'rs, 58 Mich. 452.

¶ 33. Where a health officer has been called in consultation by another physician to determine whether the patient is infected with a disease dangerous to the public health and renders his services as health officer under Comp. L. 1897, § 4460 and not section 4424, he is, therefore, entitled to compensation from the city or village under section 4462 and not from the county under section 4424.—Browne v. Board of Supervisors of Livingston County, 126 Mich. 276.

¶ 34. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 4424 providing that expenses incurred by boards of health in segregating and caring for persons infected with any disease dangerous to the public health, may be recovered from the proper county, a village cannot recover an amount paid to its health officer as a donation in excess of the charges presented by him for his services.—Village of Durand v. Shiawassee County Sup'rs, 132 Mich. 448.

¶ 35. Under Comp. L. 1897, §§ 4460, 4462, making it the duty of a health officer to disinfect rooms, clothing, and premises likely to be infected, and entitling him to receive from the township, city or village of which he is an officer, compensation at not less than two dollars per day, services rendered by a health officer in disinfecting and fumigating houses in which persons having contagious and communicable diseases had been confined are ordinary services required of the officer, and covered by the salary paid such officer by the city, and he is not entitled to compensation therefor from the county, as provided for in certain cases by Comp. L. 1897, § 4424.—Tabor v. Board Sup'rs Berrien Co., 156 Mich. 176.

§ 12. ——Claims for services rendered to board of health.

Liability as between several counties or townships, see post § 13.
Liability of county for services to local board by physician under annual contract, see post ¶ 54.
Presentment and audit of claims, see post § 16.
Conclusiveness of amount allowed by health board, see also post § 17.

¶ 36. Where the obligation of a board of supervisors to allow a claim for removing an infected person, or for medical attendance upon a sick person, depends upon the person's inability to pay, such inability is a question of fact to be passed upon by the board.—People ex rel. Bristow v. Macomb County Sup'rs, 3 Mich. 475; Farnsworth v. Kalkaska County Sup'rs, 56 Mich. 640.

¶ 37. The board of health of a township has power, and it is its duty, during the prevalence of a contagious disease, if necessary, to employ a physician, and the township is primarily liable in the premises, and such physician is not bound to look anywhere else for payment, his contract being with the township.—Wilkinson v. Township of Long Rapids, 74 Mich. 63.

¶ 38. Within reasonable bounds at least, the health officers' conclusion that a disease is communicable, and a menace to public health, must be conclusive on the county in the matter of allowance of claims for expenses incurred in the treatment of such diseases.—Township of Cedar Creek v. Wexford County Sup'rs, 135 Mich. 124.

¶ 39. The services of a person employed by the board of health as a quarantine guard to prevent the spread of a contagious disease, are a proper claim against the board of supervisors, under Pub. Acts 1903, No. 7, since such services are usual and absolutely necessary in such cases.—Bishop v. Ottawa County Sup'rs, 140 Mich. 177.

¶ 40. A board of supervisors has no authority to disallow part of a physician's charges as allowed and certified by a township board of health, for services rendered under the direction of the latter board in the time of an epidemic, upon the ground that some of the patients were financially able to pay for such services.—McKillop v. Cheboygan County Sup'rs, 116 Mich. 614.

¶ 41. A physician employed by the agent of a township board of health to treat scarlet fever patients, under a resolution of the board authorizing such agent to quarantine the patients until the danger of communicating the infection had passed, and during such time to provide for their wants, is entitled to recover from the township the reasonable value of his services rendered under such employment.—Wilkinson v. Township of Long Rapids, 74 Mich. 63.

¶ 42. A county is liable for extraordinary services performed by a village health officer, under arrangement with the local board of health, in suppressing an epidemic of smallpox, the persons afflicted being in indigent circumstances, under How. St. §§ 1647, 1648, 1681, making it the duty of boards of health, in case of infectious disease, to provide for the safety of the inhabitants by isolating the infected person, and providing assistance and necessaries, "at the charge of the person himself * * * if able, otherwise at the charge of the county," although the statute (sections 1681b, 1681d), prescribing the duties of the local health officer in such cases, provides that he shal be entitled to compensation from the village of which he is officer.—Village of St. Johns v. Clinton County Sup'rs, 111 Mich. 609.

¶ 42a. A claim for nurse hire and supplies furnished to persons ill with infectious disease, at the direction of a village health board and allowed by such board, was properly presented to the board of county supervisors under Comp. L. 1897, § 4424, as an original claim against the county, and it was the duty of such supervisors to pay the bills, the same having concededly been reasonable and contracted in good faith, and they could not defend on the ground that the afflicted persons were residents of other counties.—Zimmerman v. Cheboygan Co. Sup'rs, 133 Mich. 494.

¶ 43. A druggist furnishing to a city board of health formaldehyde for fumigating and disinfecting residences where indigent persons infected with smallpox had lived, may recover the amount of his claim therefor from the county, under 2 Comp. L. 1897, § 4424.—Baar v. Board Sup'rs Ottawa Co., 151 Mich. 505.

¶ 44. One who furnishes indigent persons articles of furniture to take the place of furniture which has been destroyed by order of a city board of health, in order to prevent the spread of disease, cannot enforce a claim for such furniture against the county, under 2 Comp. L. 1897, § 4424.—Baar v. Board Sup'rs Ottawa Co., 151 Mich. 505.

¶ 45. A county's liability to a physician for services rendered during an epidemic under direction of the board of health includes services for patients who were financially able to pay for treatment.—McKillop v. Cheboygan County Sup'rs, 116 Mich. 614.

§ 13. ——As between several counties or townships.

¶ 46. A board of supervisors to whom claims for nurse hire and supplies furnished to persons ill with infectious disease, allowed by a village board under Comp. L. 1897, § 4424 had been properly presented, were required to pay the claims, and they had the right thereafter to pursue the claims against any other county they deemed liable therefor, by reason of such persons having been residents of such other county.—Zimmerman v. Cheboygan Co. Sup'rs, 133 Mich. 494.

¶ 47. One county may maintain an action in assumpsit against another county for the expenses incurred in caring for an indigent smallpox patient under Comp. L. 1897, § 4424 making such an expense a charge upon the county where he belongs where neither he nor other persons liable for his support can pay, without presenting its claims for audit to the board of supervisors of the other county as required by Const. art. 10, § 10 inasmuch as the county rendering the care is in the first place liable for the services rendered and the payment therefor was not a voluntary one.—Arenac County Sup'rs v. Iosco County Sup'rs, 144 Mich. 52.

¶ 48. Where a local board of health of one county supplies relief and care to a patient while in that county, who is a resident of another county, the allowance of the account by the board of supervisors of the former county does not create any legal liability on the part of the latter county.—Board Sup'rs Arenac Co. v. Board Sup'rs Iosco Co., 158 Mich. 344.

¶ 49. Under 2 Comp. L. 1897, § 4424, where the local board of health of a county allows an account for relief furnished, the decision is binding upon the board of supervisors of both that county and the county in which the patient resides, as respects the character of the disease, the necessity for relief, and the services rendered.—Board Sup'rs Arenac Co. v. Board Sup'rs Iosco Co., 158 Mich. 344.

§ 14. Record and statement of claim.

Mandamus to compel certification of claim to auditing officers, see post ¶ 73.

¶ 50. The proviso to Comp. L. 1897, § 4424 added by Pub. Acts 1895, No. 97, which requires that the statement of expenses incurred by boards of health in caring for persons sick with smallpox or other diseases dangerous to the public health, and presented to the board of supervisors of the proper county, shall be itemized, is mandatory.—Village of Durand v. Shiawassee County Sup'rs, 132 Mich. 448.

¶ 51. The proviso to Comp. L. 1897, § 4424, requiring township boards of health to keep and present an itemized statement of articles and services furnished to each person taken in charge pursuant to such act, was met when the board in question had before them and allowed such itemized accounts and rendered such an account.—Township of Cedar Creek v. Wexford Co. Sup'rs, 135 Mich. 124.

¶ 52. The requirement that the local health board shall keep and render an itemized and separate statement of expenses incurred in caring for each person, sick with a contagious disease (Pub. Acts 1895, No. 97), was sufficiently met, where, it appeared that such board had before them an itemized account, and certified thereto, and the question of whether or not such board kept a book for such records is immaterial.—Township of Cedar Creek v. Board of Sup'rs of Wexford Co., 135 Mich. 124; Bishop v. Ottawa County Sup'rs, 140 Mich. 177.

§ 15. Contract or approval of employment or contract.

¶ 53. The fact that the board of health of a village, during an epidemic of smallpox, employed one of its members, the local health officer, to render extraordinary services, and fixed the compensation therefor, does not preclude the village from recovering from the county the sum so paid, if the officer took no part in fixing such compensation, and it was reasonable in amount.—Village of St. John v. Clinton County Sup'rs, 111 Mich. 609.

¶ 54. A board of county supervisors which made a year's contract with a physician for care and treatment of all indigent persons within the county afflicted with diseases dangerous to public health, was not separately liable to such physician for services performed at the direction of a village health board to persons afflicted with an infectious disease, although such health board allowed the bill as a claim against the county.—Zimmerman v. Cheboygan Co. Sup'rs, 133 Mich. 494.

¶ 55. The allowance to the health officer of a township, for attendance upon patients and consultations with other physicians was sustained where, although no express direction to perform such services was given by the board of health, they knew that the services were being rendered and appeared to have acquiesced, and where they afterwards allowed the bill.—Township of Cedar Creek v. Wexford Co. Sup'rs, 135 Mich. 124.

¶ 56. On authority of Township of Cedar Creek v. Gladwin County Sup'rs, 135 Mich. 124, county supervisors were required to pay claims for medical services rendered by a physician in cases of infectious disease, where the original hiring was made informally and not by formal action of the board of health, but where itemized bills were presented and allowed at regular and formal meetings of such board.—Pierce v. Gladwin Co. Sup'rs, 136 Mich. 428.

¶ 57. Where a physician informs a county supervisor that he has been treating a poor person but will not continue to do so unless he is to receive pay from the county, and said supervisor tells him that if he will go ahead and treat said person said supervisor will present his bill to the board of supervisors, there is sufficient evidence to support a finding of a legal contract between the county and said physician.—Chapman v. Board Sup'rs Muskegon Co., 169 Mich. 10.

¶ 58. A physician cannot recover for services rendered to indigent persons prior to the date of the agreement made by him with the supervisors for the rendering of services to said persons.—Chapman v. Board Sup'rs Muskegon Co., 169 Mich. 10.

¶ 59. In a suit against a county for services rendered by a physician to an alleged indigent person, the question of the pecuniary ability of the patient is not controlling where there has been a legal employment of said physician by the county.—Chapman v. Board Sup'rs Muskegon Co., 169 Mich. 10.

¶ 60. Where a plaintiff physician makes a contract with the board of supervisors to render professional services to indigent persons, and employs another physician to do the actual attendance, plaintiff may recover for medicines furnished by him, though the same were administered to the patient by said other physician.—Chapman v. Board Sup'rs Muskegon Co., 169 Mich. 10.

§ 16. Allowance and audit of claim.

Power of board to charge county or township, see ante § 12.
Statement and record of claim, see ante § 14.
Matters concluded by audit, see post § 17.
Disallowance in part, see also ante ¶ 40.
Audits of claims in general, see Counties, VI; Municipal Corporations, XIV; Townships, VI.
Audit of claims by county board and allowance of claims audited by other boards and made a county charge, see Counties §§ 44, 45.
Right to hearing before county board empowered to determine reasonableness of claims, see Counties § 46.

¶ 61. A claimant for services rendered by order of the local board of health, under Pub. Acts 1903, No. 7, may present his claim to the board of supervisors direct, and it is not necessary that the municipality shall first make payment of such claim and then present it to the supervisors as a county charge before mandamus proceedings to compel the supervisors to audit and allow such claim. Bishop v. Ottawa County Sup'rs, 140 Mich. 177.

¶ 62. The effect of Pub. Acts 1903, No. 7, amending Comp. L. 1897, § 4424 providing that the boards of supervisors shall audit claims for services in cases of contagious diseases is not to substitute the judgment of the board for that of the board of health as to whether in a given case a person had a dangerous communicable disease. Where the board of health has acted and has filed the statement with the county clerk as provided by statute the board of supervisors must proceed to audit the bill.—Thomas v. Ingham County Sup'rs, 144 Mich. 319.

¶ 63. Where a doctor's itemized statement of services rendered during an epidemic of contagious diseases was placed before the board of supervisors and certified to by the local board of health it is the duty of the board of supervisors to proceed to audit the account, under Pub. Acts 1903, No. 7, providing for the auditing of bills incurred by the public in cases of infectious diseases, and requiring the board of health to file such bills with the county clerk, notwithstanding the fact that on the bill being referred back to the board of health because of a defective certificate (no certificate being in terms required by the statute) the board having changed in personnel then denied that the services had been rendered at their request.—Dawe v. Board of Health of City of Monroe, 146 Mich. 316.

¶ 64. Under Local Acts 1903, Act No. 540, § 7, providing that no bills against Saginaw county shall be audited or allowed in any other manner than by the board of auditors of such county, an order drawn by the superintendent of the poor, required auditing by such board, notwithstanding Comp. L. § 4506, subd. 7, authorizing such superintendents to draw on the county treasurer for necessary expenses.—Morrison v. Kent, 135 Mich. 38.

¶ 65. Under the charter of the City of Saginaw, Local Acts 1889, No. 455, giving the council power to create a board of health and to appoint the proper officers, and under an ordinance of that city establishing a board of health and health officers and giving the board such powers as township boards have under How. St. chap. 39, the board of health is the proper body to determine the correctness of a physician's bill for services and the city council cannot reduce that amount and escape liability for the balance by showing the receipt and acceptance by the physician of a smaller amount in full payment; such acceptance is without consideration.—Pease v. Common Council of Saginaw, 126 Mich. 436.

¶ 66. Pub. Acts 1895, Act No. 10, created a new board of health for the City of Detroit, and provided that the existing board should turn all of its assets over to the new one, which should assume and pay all lawful claims outstanding against the old board. Each board was empowered to appoint all of its employees, and to fix their compensation, which was to be paid them upon vouchers drawn by the board. Held, that the power so conferred included the authority to pass upon all claims for compensation; and that, where the claim of an employee of the old board had been allowed at a certain amount by the new, the common council had no power to review such action, and increase the amount of the award.—Schneider v. Blades, 108 Mich. 3.

¶ 67. An allowance to the health officer of a township, for attendance upon patients and consultations with other physicians, was sustained, although the inference was that such claimant may have participated in its allowance by the health board, there being nothing to rebut an approval by the others.—Township of Cedar Creek v. Wexford Co. Sup'rs, 135 Mich. 124.

§ 17. ——Matters concluded by audit and allowance.

Effect of allowance to bind county or township or city answerable over to paying city or county, see ante ¶ 49.
Duty to audit claims as presented, see ante § 16.
Matters open to consideration on audit, see ante § 16.

¶ 68. When a physician has presented a bill to a county for services rendered to indigent persons, his bill has been audited, and he has received without protest the amount allowed thereon, he is estopped to claim the balance as services rendered under Comp. L. 1897, § 4424, relating to contagious diseases.—Browne v. Board of Supervisors of Livingston County, 126 Mich. 276.

¶ 69. Acceptance of part of the compensation fixed by a board of health, which had power thereto, does not estop the recipient, a physician who treated contagious diseases, from recovering the balance of the whole sum allowed from the city, its council having attempted to require a remission of part by fixing a lesser sum which was the sum accepted.—Pease v. City of Saginaw, 126 Mich. 436.

¶ 70. The question of the ability of a patient infected with disease taken in charge by a township health board, to pay, is foreclosed by the allowance by the township board.—Township of Cedar Creek v. Wexford Co. Sup'rs, 135 Mich. 124.

¶ 71. The allowance by a township board of health, of claims for expenses incurred in the treatment of contagious diseases, under Comp. L. 1897, chap. 108, § 4424, was final and binding on the board of supervisors as to the character of the disease, the necessity and the fitness of the articles and services furnished and rendered, as well as the fact that they were furnished.—Township of Cedar Creek v. Wexford Co. Sup'rs, 135 Mich. 124.

§ 18. Remedy on claim by action or appeal.

Actions against governmental subdivisions, see generally Counties; Municipal Corporations; Townships.
Proceedings reviewable in certiorari, see Certiorari § 17.
Certiorari to review action of auditing bodies, see Certiorari § 21.

¶ 72. By Pub. Acts 1903, No. 7 and No. 101, the power to audit, allow, and pay claims for services rendered in caring for the sick under the direction of the board of health of a village is taken away from the board of health, and conferred upon the board of supervisors, which alone is liable for such services; and an action of assumpsit no longer lies against a village to recover for such services alleged to have been performed.—Sawyer v. Village of Manton, 145 Mich. 272.

¶ 73. Mandamus will lie to compel a village board of health properly to certify a claim to the board of supervisors for services performed under its direction, and assumpsit is not proper against such village; where on a claim for services performed nursing contagious cases under the direction of the health officer, such board of health fails or refuses to furnish to the board of supervisors such certified claim.—Sawyer v. Village of Manton, 145 Mich. 272.

¶ 74. Under Const. 1908, art. 8, § 9, and Act. No. 58, Pub. Acts of 1909, § 2, a physician may appeal to the circuit court from a decision of the board of supervisors denying his claim for professional services rendered to indigent persons of the county prior to the year 1908.—Chapman v. Board Sup'rs Muskegon Co., 169 Mich. 10.

HEARING to HIGHWAY ROBBERY.

Cross-References.

Hearing—
On appeal, see Appeal, XII, A.
On certiorari, see Certiorari § 44 et seq.
In equity, see Equity.
In law cases generally, see Trial.
Essential of due process, see Constitutional Law §§ 128-132.
Hearsay—
See Evidence, VII; Indictment, VIII, B.
Heating—
Duty and rights under leases and tenancies, see Landlord and Tenant, IV.
Heating Fixtures—
See Fixtures; Landlord and Tenant, IV, E.
Heat of Passion—
See Homicide.
Heavy Loads or Vehicles—
As element in liability for injuries on highways or bridges, see Highways, XII; Bridges, III.
Duty towards other users of street, see Highways, XIII.
Regulative powers over street uses, see Highways, IX, XI; Municipal Corporations, IX.
Overloading floors as negligence, see Buildings; Master and Servant, III; Negligence.
Heirs—
See generally Descent.
Interpretation of word as used in deed or will, see Deeds, III; Wills, VI.
Distribution and adjustment of rights in administration, see Estates of Decedents, XII, XIII.
Hereditaments—
Inheritable rights, see Descent; Real Property.
Incorporeal hereditaments, see Real Property; Easements.
High Schools—
See Schools.
High Seas—
Great lakes as waters within admiralty and federal jurisdiction, see Admiralty § 1; Courts, V, A; Indictment, III.
High Water Mark—
As boundary on lake or stream, see Boundaries §§ 13, 20.
Rights of riparian owners, see Waters, IV; Navigable Waters, II.
Highway Robbery—
See Crimes § 126; Indictment.

HIGHWAYS AND STREETS.

TREATS of the general law of highways, streets and alleys, of motor vehicle laws and regulations, and of the statutory establishment of so-called private roads. The matters comprised are detailed in the analysis which follows and the matters excluded are particularly shown by cross-references which follow the analysis and by those throughout the body of the topic.

I. GENERAL NATURE, REQUISITES, KINDS, AND EXISTENCE (§§ 1-6).
II. LOCATION AND ESTABLISHMENT (§§ 7-97).
III. ROUTE, BOUNDARIES AND TERMINI; SURVEYS AND RECORDS (§§ 98-104).
IV. CONSTRUCTION, IMPROVEMENT AND REPAIRS (§§ 105-114).
V. ALTERATIONS, EXTENSIONS, GRADES AND CHANGES OF GRADE (§§ 115-124).
VI. ABANDONMENT, VACATION AND DIMINUTION (§§ 125-139).
VII. HIGHWAY OFFICERS AND DISTRICTS (§§ 140-145).
VIII. COSTS AND EXPENSES, FUNDS AND TAXES (§§ 146-153).
IX. PUBLIC CONTROL AND REGULATION (§§ 154-155).
X. TITLE AND ESTATE OF THE PUBLIC; PERMISSIBLE USES AND RIGHTS OF ABUTTERS (§§ 156-167).
XI. OBSTRUCTIONS, ENCROACHMENTS AND UNAUTHORIZED USES AND INJURIES TO HIGHWAY OR ITS APPURTENANCES (§§ 168-196).
XII. DEFECTIVE AND DANGEROUS WAYS AND SURROUNDINGS (§§ 197-363).
XIII. RIGHT TO USE WAY AND LAW OF THE ROAD (§§ 364-410).
XIV. MOTOR VEHICLE REGULATIONS, RIGHTS AND DUTIES (§§ 411-413).
XV. PRIVATE ROADS AND FOOTWAYS (§§ 414-421).

Analysis.

I. General nature, requisites, kinds, and existence.

§ 1. Nature and kinds of ways.
§ 2. State roads.
§ 3. Requisites of highways.
§ 4. Nature and status of alleys.
§ 5. Evidence as to character and existence of way.
§ 6. Law and fact questions as to nature of way.

II. Location and establishment.

A. By Dedication or Prescription and User.

§ 7. In general.
§ 8. Dedication or recognition by conveyance.
§ 9. Necessity and sufficiency of acceptance by public.
§ 10. Establishment by user and prescription.
§ 11. Character and sufficiency of public use.
§ 12. ——Time or duration and continuity of user.
§ 13. ——User of varying or shifting way.
§ 14. ——Use under temporary or permissive license.
§ 15. ——User of private roads.
§ 16. ——Knowledge of servient owner.
§ 17. Interruption or interference to cut off prescription.
§ 18. Delay, laches and estoppel.
§ 19. Estoppel of public by taxation or other recognition of private right.
§ 20. Burden of proof, presumptions and evidence.
§ 21. ——As to dedication or prescription.
§ 22. Questions of law and fact.

B. By Statutory Procedure.

1. Application or petition and procedure thereon.

§ 23. In general.
§ 24. Necessity for jury or special commissioners.

§ 25. Joinder and misjoinder of proceedings.
§ 26. Roads affecting more than one township.
§ 27. Power and jurisdiction of highway commissioners.
§ 28. ——Over lands in railroad or other public use or navigable waters.
§ 29. Application or petition.
§ 30. Notice of hearing, persons to be served, service and posting.
§ 31. ——Affidavit, return and proof of service.

2. Hearings, laying out, estimates and appraisements.

§ 32. Hearings and adjournments.
§ 33. Scope of hearing and issues.
§ 34. Order laying out road or denying it.
§ 35. ——Implication as to bridges and necessary adjuncts.
§ 36. Estimates and appraisements and measure of compensation.
§ 37. ——Damages for crossing railroads.
§ 38. ——Interest on damages appraised.
§ 39. Return and record of hearing, view and appraisement.
§ 40. ——Burden of proof and presumptions as to necessity.

3. Payment of awards and completion of proceedings.

§ 41. In general; right and necessity.
§ 42. Orders for payment.
§ 43. Estoppel by acceptance of award.

4. Appeals, injunctions and judicial review.

§ 44. In general; right of review and remedies.
§ 45. Appeals to township board.
§ 46. ——Disqualification of members and substitutions.
§ 47. ——Orders appealable and view, hearing, and scope of review.
§ 48. ——Decision on appeal, record, conclusiveness, and effect.
§ 49. ——Objections and defects barred or cured by appeal.
§ 50. Appeals from township board to circuit court, and trials therein.
§ 51. Review on writ of error to circuit court.
§ 52. Certiorari or mandamus to review proceedings.
§ 53. ——From supreme court.
§ 54. ——Grounds and propriety of allowing writ.
§ 55. ——Interest or grievance to relator.
§ 56. ——Time for writ, laches and delay.
§ 57. ——Petition for certiorari, writ and service.
§ 58. ——Parties relator and respondent.
§ 59. ——Return to certiorari.
§ 60. ——Scope of review in general and form of relief granted.
§ 61. Injunction as remedy.

5. Street opening in cities and villages.

§ 62. In general; nature and form of proceedings.
§ 63. Strictness of procedure.
§ 64. Necessity and measure of compensation and persons entitled.
§ 65. Public uses and necessity or propriety of street.
§ 66. ——Effect of contract not to open street.

§ 67. Property or quantum of estate necessary or subject to appropriation.
§ 68. Resolution or other preliminaries by municipal council.
§ 69. Previous effort to purchase or obtain consents.
§ 70. Maps and surveys.
§ 71. Proper and necessary parties.
§ 72. Petition for condemnation.
§ 73. Summons or notice of proceedings.
§ 74. ——Service of notice or process.
§ 75. ——Service by publication.
§ 76. ——Return and proof of service.
§ 77. Necessity for jury.
§ 78. Character of jury and qualifications of jurors.
§ 79. Venire and return thereto.
§ 80. Functions of jury and questions triable.
§ 81. Oath of jurors.
§ 82. Procedure on hearing.
§ 83. ——Argument and assistance of counsel.
§ 84. Presumptions and evidence as to necessity and compensation.
§ 85. Instructions and special questions.
§ 86. Award, finding or judgment.
§ 87. ——Specification of benefits.
§ 88. ——Conclusiveness and collateral attack.
§ 89. Abandonment or discontinuance of proceedings.
§ 90. Costs, witness fees and allowance for attorneys.
§ 91. Appeal or review.
§ 92. Procedure for appeal.
§ 93. Scope of appeal, presumptions and matters reviewable.
§ 94. Certiorari to review proceedings.
§ 95. ——Time for writ, laches, waiver and delay.
§ 96. Injunctions and other actions and suits.

6. State highways and local systems.

§ 97. In general.

III. Route, boundaries and termini; surveys and records.

§ 98. Route and boundaries.
§ 99. Width.
§ 100. ——Of dedicated or prescriptive highway.
§ 101. Termini and connection with other ways.
§ 102. Surveying and recording.
§ 103. Presumptions and evidence.
§ 104. Instructions and questions for jury.

IV. Construction, improvement and repairs.

§ 105. In general; construction work and contracts.
§ 106. Sidewalks and crosswalks.
§ 107. Duty and necessity of construction.
§ 108. ——Culverts, drains and ditches.
§ 109. ——Highway bridges.
§ 110. ——Joint roads and bridges.
§ 111. Liability for diversion of surface waters.
§ 112. Petition and proceedings for work or repairs.
§ 113. ——Line or boundary bridges.
§ 114. Judicial review or relief against improvement proceedings.

V. Alterations, extensions, grades, and changes of grade.

§ 115. Alterations and changes in location.
§ 116. Alterations in plan or structure.
§ 117. Extensions and plan or course of same.
§ 118. Power to establish and change grades.
§ 119. Actionable change of grade.
§ 120. ——Diversion of surface water by change.
§ 121. Damages for separation of crossing grades.
§ 122. Procedure to ascertain grade damages.
§ 123. Condemnation of property to widen or alter way.
§ 124. Judicial review of or relief from alteration proceedings.

VI. Abandonment, vacation and diminution.

§ 125. In general; powers of officers and municipalities.
§ 126. Release of public rights.
§ 127. Ground, purpose and occasion for vacation.
§ 128. Vacation upon conditions.
§ 129. Abandonment and nonuser or adverse possession.
§ 130. Proceedings for discontinuance or vacation.
§ 131. ——Notices and service or publication and proof of same.
§ 132. ——Order or findings, return, and record of vacation.
§ 133. Condemnation and payment of damages.
§ 134. Landowners entitled to object.
§ 135. Estoppel, waiver and cure of defects in vacation.
§ 136. Vacation by judicial proceedings.
§ 137. Judicial review of or relief from vacation proceedings.
§ 138. Reversion or inurement to abutters.
§ 139. Re-establishment of vacated or abandoned way.

VII. Highway officers and districts.

§ 140. In general; authority, powers and duties.
§ 141. Township and county systems or general plan of control.
§ 142. Control over state roads.
§ 143. Contract by or with boards and officers.
§ 144. Torts by officers and official misfeasance.
§ 145. City and village powers.

VIII. Costs and expenses, funds and taxes.

§ 146. In general.
§ 147. Application and allotment of funds.
§ 148. Borrowing money or incurring debt.
§ 149. ——For road tools and machinery.
§ 150. ——For bridge work or construction.
§ 151. Apportionment of expense of joint or boundary roads and bridges.
§ 152. Payments and disbursements.
§ 153. Refunds for sums spent on state reward roads.

IX. Public control and regulation.

§ 154. In general.
§ 155. Judicial control and supervision.

X. Title and estate of the public; permissible uses and rights of abutters.

§ 156. In general; nature of public estate.
§ 157. Proper highway uses and additional servitudes.

§ 158. Injuries and damages from added uses.
§ 159. Common rights other than travel.
§ 160. Abutters' rights in general.
§ 161. Rights of access; walks and driveways.
§ 162. Rights in cul de sac or disconnected way.
§ 163. Rights in soil of way or growing products.
§ 164. Trees in highway.
§ 165. Sidewalks and appurtenances built by abutter.
§ 166. Subsurface uses and easements.
§ 167. Rights and liabilities of subsurface owners and users towards each other.

XI. Obstructions, encroachments and unauthorized uses and injuries to highway or its appurtenances.

§ 168. In general.
§ 169. Tracks, wires and pipe lines illegally in way.
§ 170. Buildings and structures in way.
§ 171. Steps, platforms, awnings and other building appurtenances.
§ 172. ——Subsurface spaces and vaults.
§ 173. Trees and growing things.
§ 174. Temporary uses interfering with travel.
§ 175. Processions and street assemblages.
§ 176. Unusual or illegal vehicular traffic.
§ 177. Coasting or playing in way.
§ 178. Ditch or drain as encroachment or obstruction of way.
§ 179. Interference with highway ditch or drain.
§ 180. Inclosing disused or disconnected ways.
§ 181. Obstruction of alleys.
§ 182. Prescription, estoppel and acquiescence.
§ 183. Abating, preventing or removing obstruction without litigation.
§ 184. Removal of fences.
§ 185. Actions and suits to remove encroachments or open way.
§ 186. Ejectment against encroacher or incloser.
§ 187. Summary and statutory proceedings to remove.
§ 188. ——Order and notice to remove.
§ 189. ——Counter notice of claim of right.
§ 190. ——Pleadings and issues, evidence, trial, and judgment.
§ 191. ——Appeal or other review of proceedings.
§ 192. Actions to redress or prevent injuries to highways.
§ 193. Penalties and penal actions.
§ 194. Encroachment of highway on abutter.
§ 195. Injury to or withdrawal of abutter's lateral support.
§ 196. Liability and remedy for obstruction of access.

XII. Defective and dangerous ways and surroundings.

A. General Duties and Liabilities of Counties, Cities, Villages, and Officers.

§ 197. In general; nature and source of liability.
§ 198. Municipal charter provisions.
§ 199. Extent of duty and care in general.
§ 200. Liability for failure to construct.
§ 201. Defective plan and manner of construction.
§ 202. ——Of culverts and bridges.

§ 203. Duty to inspect and keep in repair.
§ 204. ——Sidewalks and footways.
§ 205. ——Crosswalks.
§ 206. ——Boulevards and parkways.
§ 207. ——Alleys.
§ 208. ——Ditches and gutters.
§ 209. ——Trees and overhanging or projecting objects.
§ 210. ——Bridges and culverts.
§ 211. Duty to provide railings, barriers or warning signals.
§ 212. ——On bridges and approaches.
§ 213. ——During construction work or to protect against excavations.
§ 214. Officer or municipality charged with the duty.
§ 215. ——Bridges and culverts and approaches thereto.
§ 216. ——Roads and bridges under joint control.
§ 217. Persons to whom duty owing.

B. Notice and Opportunity to Make Safe.
§ 218. In general; necessity of notice or knowledge of defect or danger.
§ 219. ——Defective culverts and bridges.
§ 220. Sufficiency of notice or knowledge.
§ 221. ——Proper officer or person to affect with notice.
§ 222. ——Constructive notice.
§ 223. ——Of condition of bridges and culverts.
§ 224. Opportunity, time and means to repair or protect.
§ 225. ——Bridges and culverts.

C. Duty and Negligence Towards Vehicle Users; What Constitutes Defects in Way.
§ 226. Improper condition of street or highway in general.
§ 227. Obstructions and objects in streets.
§ 228. Operations and conditions frightening horses.
§ 229. Towards users of heavy vehicles or engines.
§ 230. ——On bridges and culverts.
§ 231. Towards bicyclists.

D. Duty and Negligence Towards Foot Travelers, and What Constitutes Defects.
§ 232. Defective walks and crosswalks in general.
§ 233. Holes, excavations and depressions in walk.
§ 234. Holes and dangerous conditions beside walk or way.
§ 235. Accumulations of water, snow and ice.
§ 236. Obstructions and objects on sidewalk.
§ 237. Defective and unsafe roadways.
§ 238. Speeding or racing in roadway.

E. Duty and Negligence Towards Other Persons, Licensees and Wrongdoers.
§ 239. Persons working in street or highway.
§ 240. Children or others playing in street.

F. Proximate Cause, Contributory Negligence, and Acts of Third Persons.
§ 241. Proximate cause and concurrent causes.
§ 242. ——Pedestrians stepping or falling into holes or depressions.

§ 243. ——Horses stepping into or shying at holes.
§ 244. ——Frightening of horses.
§ 245. ——Backing or turning from side of bridge or culvert.
§ 246. ——Collapse of bridge under load.
§ 247. Contributory negligence.
§ 248. ——Deviating from traveled portion of street or highway.
§ 249. ——Using bridges and culverts.
§ 250. Contributory negligence of foot travelers.
§ 251. ——Avoidance of holes, excavations and depressions.
§ 252. ——Walking on icy walks.
§ 253. Responsibility for acts of third persons.
§ 254. ——Acts of public contractors.
§ 255. Acts of abutting owners or their agents or contractors.

G. Liability of Abutters, Private Persons and Corporations.

1. To persons injured on highway.

§ 256. In general; abutters' liability.
§ 257. ——Absence of or defective sidewalks.
§ 258. ——Defective walls and fences.
§ 259. ——Objects thrown or falling into streets and alleys.
§ 260. Liability of corporations and persons constructing, repairing or using streets.
§ 261. Liability to licensees and trespassers.
§ 262. Corporation or person under duty to keep in repair.

2. To indemnify or exonerate the public.

§ 263. Liability over to public in general.
§ 264. Injuries from bridges and culverts.

H. Actions for Injuries.

1. Actionable rights and form of action.

§ 265. Right of action in general.
§ 266. Notice and statement of claim.
§ 267. ——Description of injury and specification of claim.
§ 268. ——Waiver of notice or defects therein.
§ 269. ——Estoppel or limitation on recovery by claim.
§ 270. Appearance or examination on hearing of claim.
§ 271. Nature and form of remedy.

2. Parties and pleading.

§ 272. Parties.
§ 273. Pleading.
§ 274. ——Allegations as to place of injury and public nature of way.
§ 275. ——Allegations as to notice or knowledge of defect.
§ 276. ——Allegations as to notice of claim.
§ 277. Issues and variance.
§ 278. ——In actions for injuries from bridges and approaches.
§ 279. ——In actions against abutters and other private persons or corporations.

3. Burden of proof, presumptions and evidence.

§ 280. Burden of proof and presumptions.
§ 281. ——As to notice or knowledge and opportunity to repair.
§ 282. ——As to negligence of abutter or private person or corporation.

§ 283. Admissibility of evidence.
§ 284. ——Negative testimony as to defects or negligence.
§ 285. ——As to identity, nature or gravity of defects.
§ 286. ——Subsequent conditions at or near place.
§ 287. ——Subsequent repairs or precautions.
§ 288. ——Conditions at other places.
§ 289. ——Other accidents and mishaps in vicinity.
§ 290. ——As to fright of other horses.
§ 291. ——As to notice and opportunity to make safe.
§ 292. ——Previous or existing conditions as bearing on notice.
§ 293. ——Previous accidents as bearing on notice.
§ 294. ——As to construction, strength and condition of bridges and culverts.
§ 295. ——In actions against abutters and third persons.
§ 296. ——As to care or negligence by plaintiff.
§ 297. ——Evidence as to making claim and notice thereof.
§ 298. Weight and sufficiency of evidence.
§ 299. ——To show negligence of defendant.
§ 300. ——To show notice or knowledge of defect.
§ 301. ——To show contributory negligence.
§ 302. ——Of notice or presentment of claim.
§ 303. ——In actions for injuries from bridges and culverts.
§ 304. ——In actions against abutters or private parties.

4. Questions of law and fact.

§ 305. In general.
§ 306. Condition and safety of roadway.
§ 307. ——Objects or impediments in street or road.
§ 308. ——Holes, depressions and excavations.
§ 309. ——Warning signals, barriers and railings.
§ 310. ——Temporary conditions, guards and warnings.
§ 311. ——Fright of horses.
§ 312. Condition and safety of walks and crossings.
§ 313. ——Inequalities of surface, holes and breaks.
§ 314. ——Accumulations of ice and snow.
§ 315. ——Handrails and barricades, lights and warnings.
§ 316. ——Temporary walks.
§ 317. In actions against abutters and private parties.
§ 318. ——Signs, wires and other objects liable to fall.
§ 319. ——Dangers caused by excavations or construction work.
§ 320. ——Protective measures, lights, signals and barriers.
§ 321. Condition and safety of bridges and culverts.
§ 322. ——Absence of guard railings.
§ 323. Notice of defects and opportunity to make safe.
§ 324. ——Sidewalks.
§ 325. ——Of defective bridges and culverts.
§ 326. ——Notice to persons or corporations responsible for conditions.
§ 327. Proximate cause.
§ 328. Contributory negligence of vehicle users or drivers.
§ 329. ——Avoidance of objects and obstructions.
§ 330. ——Avoidance of known defects in road.
§ 331. ——Disregard of or mistake as to warning signals.
§ 332. ——In use of bridges, culverts and approaches thereto.
§ 333. Contributory negligence of foot travelers.
§ 334. ——Use of defective walk or way.
§ 335. ——Avoidance of holes, breaks and defects.

§ 336. ——Deviation from traveled part of walk or way.
§ 337. Contribution to negligence of private party or abutter.
§ 338. ——Overhanging and falling objects.
§ 339. Directing verdict.
§ 340. ——Snow and ice conditions.
§ 341. ——In actions against private parties.
§ 342. ——On want of proof of cause of injury.
§ 343. ——On contributory negligence of vehicle user.
§ 344. ——On contributory negligence of pedestrian.

5. Instructions.

§ 345. Necessity and sufficiency in general.
§ 346. As to duty and negligence respecting safety of roadways.
§ 347. ——As to fright of horses.
§ 348. ——As to protecting openings, excavations, draw bridges, etc.
§ 349. ——Danger from electric wires.
§ 350. ——Knowledge or notice of defect or condition.
§ 351. As to duty and negligence respecting safety of walks.
§ 352. ——Plan and construction.
§ 353. ——Inspection or notice of defect.
§ 354. ——Opportunity to make safe.
§ 355. Construction and maintenance of bridges and culverts.
§ 356. ——Notice and opportunity to repair.
§ 357. In actions against private persons and abutters.
§ 358. Proximate cause.
§ 359. Duty of traveler and contributory negligence.
§ 360. ——Pedestrians and users of walks.
§ 361. ——Of persons using bridges and culverts.
§ 362. ——Towards conditions caused by private parties.

6. Verdict, findings and judgment.

§ 363. In general.

XIII. Right to use way and law of the road.

A. In General.

§ 364. Common right of use.
§ 365. Manner, kinds and purposes of use.
§ 366. Use by automotive vehicles and bicycles.
§ 367. Reciprocal rights and duties.
§ 368. Driving and handling horses; law of the road and speed.
§ 369. Driving and handling motor vehicles.
§ 370. ——Statutory regulations; speed, passing, stops, etc.
§ 371. Duties of bicyclists.

B. Injuries to Other Users.

1. Duties and negligence.

§ 372. Actionable wrongs or neglect.
§ 373. Duty and negligence towards children and incapables.
§ 374. Statutory liabilities respecting automobiles.
§ 375. Negligence by servant or borrower of automobile.
§ 376. Causing fright of horses.
§ 377. Passing on wrong side.
§ 378. Racing and immoderate driving.
§ 379. Improper hitching, standing or parking.
§ 380. Animals driven upon or turned into highway.

§ 381. Proximate cause.
§ 382. Contributory negligence of pedestrians.
§ 383. ——Of vehicle users.

2. Actions for injuries.

§ 384. Form of action.
§ 385. Pleading; declaration.
§ 386. ——Issues and variance.
§ 387. Burden of proof and presumptions.
§ 388. Admissibility of evidence.
§ 389. ——To show notice of horse's vicious character.
§ 390. ——Negligent driving or handling of motor vehicles.
§ 391. Weight and sufficiency of evidence.
§ 392. ——Negligent operation of motor vehicles.
§ 393. ——Contributory negligence.
§ 394. Questions of law and fact.
§ 395. ——Negligence or mismanagement of horses.
§ 396. ——Negligence or misuse of automotive vehicles.
§ 397. ——Negligence in coasting on street.
§ 398. ——Negligence in driving or turning animals on way.
§ 399. Contributory negligence as fact or law question.
§ 400. ——Of persons driving or handling horses.
§ 401. ——Of persons driving or handling motor vehicles.
§ 402. ——Of bicyclists.
§ 403. ——Of pedestrians.
§ 404. Directing verdict.
§ 405. Instructions.
§ 406. ——As to burden of proof and presumptions.
§ 407. ——As to proximate cause.
§ 408. ——As to duty or negligence in driving horses.
§ 409. ——As to duty or negligence with automobiles and motorcycles.
§ 410. ——As to contributory negligence.

XIV. Motor vehicle regulations, rights and duties.

§ 411. In general.
§ 412. Headlight and signal regulations.
§ 413. Statutory liabilities of owners.

XV. Private roads and footways.

§ 414. In general; establishment under statute.
§ 415. Petition and proceedings thereon.
§ 416. ——Jury and jurors.
§ 417. Costs, expenses and assessments.
§ 418. Opening and application to use.
§ 419. Rights and easements in the way.
§ 420. Duties and negligence towards users of way.
§ 421. ——Pleading, evidence and trial practice.

General powers, duties, functions, rights, and liabilities of cities, villages, townships, and counties not involving the specific law of highways, see Municipal Corporations; Townships; Counties.

Duties and liabilities of railroad and street railway companies operating on streets, see Railroads, VIII; Street Railways, IV.

Railroad crossings over highways and liabilities of railroad corporations relative thereto, see Railroads, VIII.

General law of private easements, see Easements.

General law of plank roads or other toll roads, see Toll Roads.

I. GENERAL NATURE, REQUISITES, KINDS AND EXISTENCE.

Location and establishment by dedication, prescription or statutory proceedings and condemnation, see post II.
Route, boundaries, termini, surveying and recording of ways, see post III.
Construction, improvement and repairs, see post IV.
Alterations, extensions, grades and changes of grade, see post V.
Abandonment, vacation or diminution of roads, see post VI.
Highway officers and districts, see post VII.
Costs and expenses, funds and taxes, see post VIII.
Public regulation and control, see post IX.
Relative rights of public and abutters, see post X.
Encroachments, obstructions and nuisances and abatement of them, see post XI.
Tort liability for defective and dangerous ways resulting in injuries to person or property, see post XII.
Tort liability of travelers towards each other, see post XIII, B.
General rights to use roads and ways and law of the road, see post XIII, A.
Motor vehicle regulations, rights and duties, see post XIV.
Establishment and opening private roads by statutory proceedings, see post XV.

§ 1. Nature and kinds of ways.

State roads, see post § 2.
Requisites of highways, see post § 3.
Nature and status of alleys, see post § 4.
Evidence as to character and existence of way, see post § 5.
Law and fact questions as to nature of way, see post § 6.
Boulevards and parkways as highways within requirement that municipality inspect and repair, see post § 206.
Allegation in declaration for highway injuries, as to public nature of way, see post § 274.
Sidewalks and crosswalks as ways within statutory requirement to inspect and repair, see post §§ 204, 205.
Canals as public ways, see Canals § 1.
Navigable waters as public ways, see Navigable Waters.
Railroads as "highways" within federal statute granting right of way over public lands, see Railroads, III.

¶ 1. Ways must be either public or private; there is no intermediate species of way for any purpose of passage.—Tillman v. People, 12 Mich. 401.

¶ 2. The word "road" has a varied meaning; it signifies a way of travel, and may mean a private way or a public thoroughfare. Burdick v. Harbor Springs Lumber Co., 167 Mich. 673.

¶ 3. The meaning of the word "road" is to be ascertained from the context, both in common usage and in statutes and decisions. —Burdick v. Harbor Springs Lumber Co., 167 Mich. 673.

§ 2. State roads.

Location and establishment of state highways, see post § 97.
Control over state roads, see post § 142.

¶ 4. State roads are such only as have been laid out by legislative authority.—Davies v. Saginaw County Sup'rs, 89 Mich. 295.

¶ 4a. A road built under legislation appropriating swamp lands therefor, empowering two counties to build it jointly, and appointing commissioners to lay it out and superintend its construction, the contract being in fact let, and the work done being supervised and accepted by the state through its agents and officers, is a state road.—Davis v. Ontonagon County Sup'rs, 64 Mich. 404.

§ 3. Requisites of highways.

See also post ¶ 34.
Cul de sac as highway, see also post ¶ 354.
What included in term "street" for regulative purposes, see post ¶ 544.
Highways within meaning of statutory duty to inspect and keep in repair, see post § 203.
Statutory provisions as to what shall be deemed highways, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4307.
Ferry landings as public highways, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4490.

¶ 5. To constitute a highway the way must be one over which all the people of the state have a common and an equal right to travel; or, at least, a general interest to keep unobstructed.—People v. Jackson, 7 Mich. 432; People v. Beaubien, 2 D. 256.

¶ 6. A highway is a way or a thoroughfare open to all; a way over which the public at large has a right of passage.—Burdick v. Harbor Springs Lumber Co., 167 Mich. 673.

¶ 7. A road that can be advantageously used by the public only by trespassing on private property is not properly a public highway.—Ayres v. Richards, 41 Mich. 680.

¶ 8. There can be no highway that is not made so by common or statute law, or that is not under public custody; and, unless coming under some constitutional protection, there is none than can exist where the law has provided that it shall not exist.—Horn v. People, 26 Mich. 221.

¶ 9. A temporary road outside of the established highway which is used during the construction of a viaduct over an interurban railroad does not constitute a public highway under Laws 1909, No. 283, chap. XXII, § 1, How. 2nd Ed., § 2462, so as to render a township liable for injuries to one using such temporary road, as a result of defects therein.—Brown v. Township of Byron, 189 Mich. 584.

¶ 10. A road that has never been regularly laid out or opened by the proper authorities, and which is in fact unused and is unfit for travel and closed against the public, is not a "highway" within the meaning of the provision of the railroad law which makes a company laying track across public highways liable for injuries resulting from neglect to restore them to a proper condition, even though the owners of land along the road had moved their fences back so as to open it as a highway and had been paid for their lands by the township, and a bridge had been built upon it by the public authorities.—Flint & P. M. R. Co. v. Willey, 47 Mich. 88.

§ 4. Nature and status of alleys.

Rights of abutters on alleys, see post § 160 et seq.
Subsurface easements and rights in alleys, see post § 166.
Right to damages on vacation of alley, see post § 133.
Wrongfulness of obstructing alley, see post § 181.
Duty to inspect and keep alleys in repair, see post § 207.
Alleys as highways within meaning of statutes as to inspection and repair of highways, see post § 207.
Actionable negligence towards users of private alleys, see post § 420.
Private alleys and easements therein, see Easements.

¶ 11. An alley is not meant primarily as a substitute for a street, but only as a local accommodation to a limited neighborhood and the public has no general right of way through it.—Beecher v. People, 38 Mich. 289; Horton v. Williams, 99 Mich. 423.

¶ 12. Alleys are not public highways and cannot be governed by the same rules. They are for the accommodation of abutting owners, and the public has no general right of way through them.—Bagley v. People, 43 Mich. 355.

¶ 13. An alley is not a highway in the proper sense of the term, as it is intended for the convenience of adjacent property and not for general travel or passage like streets.—Krause v. Lewis, 144 Mich. 549.

¶ 14. An alley is no more than a way subject to a modified supervision, and liable to be used for drainage and other urban service, under municipal regulation.—Edison Illuminating Co. v. Misch, 200 Mich. 114.

¶ 15. An alley is not properly a highway, and is no more than a way subject to a modified supervision, and liable to be used for drainage and other urban services under municipal regulation, but intended for the convenience of adjacent property and not for travel or passage, like streets; the necessity for streets and for alleys cannot be put on the same footing.—Paul v. City of Detroit, 32 Mich. 108.

¶ 16. An alley is not a public highway within the meaning of Laws 1887, Act No. 264 (How. St. § 1446c et seq.), requiring highways, etc., to be kept in repair, etc.—Face v. City of Ionia, 90 Mich. 104.

§ 5. Evidence as to character and existence of way.

Employment by highway officer to look after alleged road as evidence that it was a road, see also post ¶ 683.
Presumptions and evidence as to dedication or prescription, see post §§ 20, 21; Dedication §§ 24-26.
Presumptions and evidence as to width, boundaries and termini, see post § 103.
Evidence of existence of alley as essential to conviction for obstruction, see post ¶ 700.
Impropriety of trial of existence of highway in summary proceedings for removal of obstructions, see post § 190.
Judicial notice of names and existence and location of streets, see Evidence § 9.
General rules of evidence as to documentary or record proofs, see Evidence, IV, V, VIII, C.
Instruction in trespass as to burden of proof of highway pleaded as defense, see Trespass, II.

¶ 17. The fact that no road work was done on a specific portion of a road, where an obstruction was, is not material on the question whether there was a road there, where it appears that no work was needed at that point because it was passable without working and other parts were worked and passable and in use.—Neal v. Gilmore, 141 Mich. 519.

¶ 18. Evidence of a general understanding in the community that a certain street in public use is a public highway is admissible to show its public character.—Village of Grandville v. Jenison, 84 Mich. 54.

¶ 19. Existence of a street is shown by evidence that a plat and dedication was made, duly recorded, approved by the board of public works of the city (Detroit), that the street appears thereon, that soon after men in the employ of the board of public works prepared it for travel and the city paid for the work.—People v. Wolverine Mfg. Co., 141 Mich. 455.

¶ 19a. Existence of a street is recognized by a party petitioning for the vacation thereof to the public authorities.—People v. Wolverine Mfg. Co., 141 Mich. 455.

§ 6. Law and fact questions as to nature of way.

¶ 20. In an action of ejectment where the issue is whether the alley in dispute is a public or a private way the question whether it was originally laid out as a private way is properly submitted to the jury.—Chapman v. City of Sault Ste. Marie, 146 Mich. 23.

¶ 21. Where the question was whether the plaintiff had an available road to market, it was proper to charge that a road, whether lawfully laid out or not, was not a public way for the purposes of the case unless in condition for use.—Wicks v. Ross, 37 Mich. 464.

II. LOCATION AND ESTABLISHMENT.

A. BY DEDICATION OR PRESCRIPTION AND USER.

§ 7. In general.

Establishment by statutory proceedings, see post II, B.
Dedication or recognition by conveyance, see post § 8.
Necessity and sufficiency of acceptance by public, see post § 9.
Establishment by user and prescription, see post § 10.
Character and sufficiency of public use, see post §§ 11-16.
Interruption or interference to cut off prescription, see post § 17.
Delay, laches and estoppel to deny, see post §§ 18, 19.
Burden of proof, presumptions, evidence and questions of fact and law, see post §§ 20-22.
Abandonment and nonuser or adverse possession, see post § 129.
Re-establishment of vacated or abandoned way, see post § 139.
Title and estate of public and rights of abutters in general, see post X.
Right to convert into highway lands taken by condemnation for nonhighway purposes, see Eminent Domain ¶ 511.
Statutory provisions in general, see Comp. L. 1915, §§ 4287-4317.

¶ 22. During the period from 1851 to 1859, when highways could not be established by condemnation, they could still be established by dedication or acquiescence.—Bumpus v. Miller, 4 Mich. 159; Nye v. Clark, 55 Mich. 599.

¶ 23. The law providing for condemnation proceedings has no application to the case of a dedication of a highway by the owner, or where, from his long acquiescence in the public use of it, a dedication is presumed by law so that the public has the right by his assent.—Bumpus v. Miller, 4 Mich. 159.

¶ 24. The adoption by the governor and judges of the plan of the City of Detroit did not, of itself, make public highway of that portion of the projected streets which was covered by private claims and occupied as private property.—People v. Jones, 6 Mich. 176.

§ 8. Dedication or recognition by conveyance.

User as implied dedication, see post ¶ 29.
Presumptions and evidence as to dedication, see post § 21.
Width of dedicated or prescriptive highway, see post § 100.
Increase of dedicated width by public user, see post ¶ 342.
Facts requisite to make out dedication of alley as public one, see Dedication ¶ 19.
Dedication of "private way" parallel with and laterally adjoining highway, see Dedication ¶ 146.
Conformity of plats to adopted city plan and approval by city authorities as prerequisite to dedication, see Dedication §§ 21, 22.
Sufficiency of statutory plat to describe and define boundaries and plan of streets, see Dedication § 22.
Sufficiency under statute of frauds of written grant of use of streets, see Frauds, Statutes of ¶ 312.

¶ 25. Highways by user are based upon an implied dedication by the land-owner.—Kruger v. Le Blanc, 70 Mich. 76.

¶ 26. By conveying land with recognition of the existence of a public street, a grantor estops himself from afterwards claiming title to any portion thereof.—Crosby v. City of Greenville, 183 Mich. 452.

§ 9. Necessity and sufficiency of acceptance by public.

Title of abutter to strip dedicated but not accepted, see post ¶ 495.
Time allowable for acceptance of offer to dedicate, see Dedication §§ 8-11.
Acts essential or sufficient as acceptance of dedication, see Dedication §§ 8-11.
Using, working and improving road or street as acceptance of dedication, see Dedication § 10.
Manner of acceptance of dedication of alleys in original plat of Detroit, see Dedication ¶ 49.

¶ 27. Public user alone, when sufficiently general and long continued, will constitute an acceptance of a county road.—Adams v. Iron Cliffs Co., 78 Mich. 271.

¶ 28. In order that a way may be established by user not only must the general public use it and travel upon it as a thoroughfare but the implied dedication must be accepted by the public authorities and the way taken in charge and maintained as other highways.—Chapman v. City of Sault Ste. Marie, 146 Mich. 23.

§ 10. Establishment by user and prescription.

Public use of way after formal discontinuance as re-establishing it, see post ¶ 498.

Presumptions and evidence as to prescription, see post § 21.
Prescription as to road over public lands, see also post ¶ 685.
Right to appropriate highway moneys to roads laid out by user, see post § 147.
Prescriptive right as against abutting owner to have additional servitude in highway, see post XI; and see also Railroads, III.
Prescription in favor of right to obstruct or inclose part of way, see post § 182.
General law of prescription on private easements, see Easements §§ 11-13.

¶ 29. Highways by user are based upon an implied dedication by the landowner.—Kruger v. Le Blanc, 70 Mich. 76.

¶ 30. User of land as a highway for the statutory period conclusively establishes the dedication of the land for that purpose.—Campau v. City of Detroit, 104 Mich. 560.

¶ 31. Public highways may be established by user under Laws 1909, Act No. 283, chap. I, § 20, How. 2nd Ed., § 2193.—Brown v. Township of Byron, 189 Mich. 584.

§ 11. Character and sufficiency of public use.

Time or duration and continuity of user, see post § 12.
User of varying or shifting way, see post § 13.
Use under temporary or permissive license, see post § 14.
User of private roads, see post § 15.
Knowledge of servient owner, see post § 16.

¶ 32. To constitute a highway by user, there must be a defined line, and it must be used and worked upon by the public authorities, and traveled over and used by the public, for ten consecutive years, without interruption, and the possession by the public must be exclusive as against the owner of the soil or any other person, open and notorious, and accepted by the public generally.—Alton v. Meeunberg, 108 Mich. 629.

¶ 33. A road that has been used and recognized for twenty-one years, and had previously been laid out, surveyed, fenced and worked by the highway commissioners as a town-line road, is properly treated as a public highway, even though it has been allowed to grow up in brush outside of the actual roadway.—Nye v. Clark, 55 Mich. 599.

¶ 34. That a street is used by only a limited number of people will not prevent its becoming a highway by user, where it is traveled as much as the circumstances of the surrounding population and their business require.—Village of Grandville v. Jenison, 84 Mich. 54.

¶ 35. The fact that no part of a highway was opened and worked within four years after it was laid out, as required by Comp. L. 1897, § 4063, does not prevent the road from becoming public by user under section 4061; it merely requires a user for ten years instead of eight.—Neal v. Gilmore, 141 Mich. 519.

¶ 36. The statute (R. S. of 1846, ch. 25, § 29) providing, among other things, that all roads not recorded, which have been used as public highways twenty years or more, shall be deemed public highways, applies not only to cases where the twenty years had elapsed as the taking effect of the law, but also the cases where a portion of that time had elapsed and it was completed afterwards.—Bumpus v. Miller, 4 Mich. 159.

¶ 37. Under Comp. L. 1857, § 1079, declaring all unrecorded roads that had been used twenty years or should thereafter be used for ten years to be public highways, the question of dedication is not involved; after the prescribed period of undisturbed user, the right of the owner of the land to dispute the public user is barred, so far as the prospective provisions of the statute are concerned, whatever his intention may be.—Ellsworth v. City of Grand Rapids, 27 Mich. 250.

¶ 38. It is no defense to a suit for encroaching upon a highway claimed to have become such by use prior to the encroachment, that travel had not then been continuous over its entire length for the statutory period, if travel over the part encroached upon had been so continuous.—Village of Grandville v. Jenison, 86 Mich. 567, adhering on rehearing to opinion in 84 Mich. 54.

§ 12. ——Time or duration and continuity of user.

Statutory provision as to effect of use as highway for ten years, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4307.
Public use for eight years of road laid out but not recorded, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4307.

¶ 39. A road which for forty years has been recognized and treated by the public as a highway must be regarded as having become a highway by user, even though it was not legally laid out by the commissioners.—Wayne County Savings Bank v. Stockwell, 84 Mich. 586.

¶ 40. Uninterrupted user for ten years of a street actually though not legally laid out by the action of highway commissioners who opened such street upon a petition asking for the opening of another will constitute the street a public highway under How. St. § 1315.—Village of Grandville v. Jenison, 84 Mich. 54.

¶ 41. User for ten years will not, under the provisions of Comp. L. 1871, § 1268, of itself make a road a public highway if proceedings have not been taken to lay it out or establish it as one.—Potter v. Safford, 50 Mich. 46.

§ 13. ——User of varying or shifting way.

See also post ¶ 358.

Routes, boundaries, width, and termini of highways in general, see post III.

¶ 42. A variation of two or three rods in the traveled track at one end of a highway, made such by twenty years' user—the variation having existed only twelve years—will not take away the right of the public to use the road.—Bumpus v. Miller, 1 Mich. 159.

¶ 43. The establishment of a highway by user is not shown by proof of public travel on different tracks over wild and unoccupied land bordering on a river, the course of such travel being shaped with reference to high and low water.—Lyle v. Lesia, 64 Mich. 16.

¶ 44. A highway on a lake shore is not made out by user where the high water line of the lake was never established and the way ran through a swamp and was shifting and at time of trial is 157 feet from the lake.—Schroeder v. Village of Onekama, 95 Mich. 25.

¶ 45. Under How. St. § 1315 providing that all roads used as such for ten years or more, whether any record or other proof of their establishment exists or not, and all roads laid out and not recorded which shall have been used 8 years or more shall be deemed public highways, a road, deflected from the line to make it passable, which had been recognized as a township road for more than ten years, was deemed such a road.—Bigelow v. Brooks, 119 Mich. 208.

§ 14. ——Use under temporary or permissive license.

See also post ¶ 53.

User of private roads, see post § 15.

¶ 46. As a general rule permissive use by the public of a private way cannot convert it into a public way.—Galinski v. City of Detroit, 193 Mich. 184.

¶ 47. The mere permissive use of a private road by the public, however long continued, will not make it a public highway.—Weihe v. Macatawa Resort Co., 198 Mich. 334.

¶ 48. One over whose land a highway by user is claimed may show that the user was under an agreement made with him by the highway authorities that the public might cross his land temporarily, to avoid a defect in the true highway, until the latter could be put in safe condition, and that he continued to allow such use relying on the commissioner's promise, renewed from time to time, to make repairs and to replace the fence; such use of defendant's land did not operate to establish a highway, and his consent thereto was a revocable license.—Commissioner of Highways of Township of Homer v. Riker, 79 Mich. 551.

§ 15. ——User of private roads.

Use under temporary or permissive license, see ante § 14.

Establishment of private roads by statutory proceedings, see post XV.

¶ 49. A public right of way can be acquired by the city over a private way only by an uninterrupted and undisputed user of the land for the prescribed period.—City of Detroit v. Myers, 152 Mich. 666.

¶ 50. Permissive or invited use of a private road by the public is not such use as will of itself convert it into a public highway under Comp. L. 1897, § 4061, however long continued.—Stickley v. Township of Sodus, 131 Mich. 510.

¶ 51. Comp. L. 1871, § 1268 (see How. St. § 1315), makes any road that has been used ten years a public highway whether recorded or not. Held, that this does not apply to mere private ways and cannot make a private way a public highway. It was meant to cure defects in laying out and recording public ways.—Green v. Belitz, 34 Mich. 512.

¶ 52. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 4061, providing that "all roads that shall have been used as such for ten years or more * * * shall be deemed public highways," a private road opened and maintained by a landowner for access to a private dock and ferry, does not become a public highway though used by the public without objection, so as to make the township liable for injuries caused by defects therein, where there has been no act by the township authorities hostile to the private ownership.—Stickley v. Township of Sodus, 131 Mich. 510.

¶ 53. A private road cannot be converted into a highway by time and public use, standing alone, no matter how long continued; invited or permissive use granted by the owners will not avail; but if the relations between the public and the owners change, where official action is being taken to make it a part of a highway system, and the owners have notice of that attitude, which is accompanied by the exercise of public control and public maintenance, said road may and will, in due course of time, become a highway by prescription.—Hinckley v. Dennison, 169 Mich. 361.

¶ 54. A road was originally private and controlled by the owner of the land across which it ran, who maintained a gate across it. In 1882 action was taken by the proper township authorities to open said road for a public thoroughfare, as a part of the highway system of the township. In the course of said proceedings the highway commissioner had said gate removed, took charge of the way, and threw it open to the public with the full knowledge of the then owner. Its peaceable use as a highway continued until 1910. It was from time to time improved at public expense. Held, said road under Comp. Laws 1897, § 4061, became a public highway.—Hinckley v. Dennison.—109 Mich. 361.

¶ 55. The mere fact that a private road is used by the public for the statutory period does not establish a public highway by user within Comp. Laws 1897, § 4061, when the public authorities have not taken charge of the highway.—South Branch Ranch Co. v. Emery, 191 Mich. 188.

§ 16. ——Knowledge of servient owner.

¶ 56. Actual knowledge by a property owner that a portion of his land is being held adversely by city as an alley is unnecessary where the circumstances are such that he ought to have known it.—Village of Manchester v. Clarkson, 195 Mich. 354.

§ 17. Interruption or interference to cut off prescription.

See also post ¶ 343.

Change in way established for ten years, see post § 115.

Discontinuance of way by abandonment, nonuser or adverse possession, see post § 129.

Obstructions, encroachments and unauthorized uses, see post XI.

¶ 57. Where the owner of the land actually used as a public road merely makes and records a plat upon paper, ignoring the existence of the road, it is not such an interference with the public user of the road as to affect the statutory limitation by which ten years' undisputed use makes it a public highway.—Ellsworth v. City of Grand Rapids, 27 Mich. 250.

¶ 58. The running of limitations in favor of a city to a public alley is not prevented by the mere recording of a conveyance of a right of way deed which would reduce the alley from public to private.—Chapman v. City of Sault Ste. Marie, 146 Mich. 23.

§ 18. Delay, laches and estoppel.

Estoppel to assert existence of highway, see also post ¶ 343.

Estoppel of public by taxation or other recognition of private right, see post § 19.

Creation of highway by user and acquiescence amounting to prescription, see ante § 10 et seq.

¶ 59. Comp. L. 1871, § 1268, in providing that "all roads not recorded which have been used ten years or more, or which may hereafter be laid out and not recorded, and which shall have been used ten years or more, shall be deemed public highways," means that where the public authorities have taken proceedings for the establishment of a public way, a party proposing to contest them must do so within a reasonable time.—Potter v. Safford, 50 Mich. 46.

¶ 60. In an action to recover a penalty for obstructing a highway, the defendant is not estopped to deny the existence of the highway from the fact that he signed the petition for it, or worked upon it and received compensation from public funds, where the proceedings to establish the same were clearly void as to all others.—La Barre v. Bent, 154 Mich. 520.

¶ 61. On a bill to remove obstructions in a street defendant, whose predecessor in title never had any deed to the land alleged to be that portion of the street encroached upon, has no equity to make defense that the public user did not include the place in question so as to constitute it a street.—Village of Grandville v. Jenison, 86 Mich. 567, adhering on rehearing to opinion in 84 Mich. 54.

§ 19. Estoppel of public by taxation or other recognition of private right.

Capacity of public or public officers as such to be estopped, see Estoppel § 3.

¶ 62. The rights of the public in a highway which has become such by user are not affected by the listing of the land for taxation to the former owner, and the payment by him of the taxes so assessed.—Campau v. City of Detroit, 104 Mich. 560.

¶ 63. The assessment of taxes upon lots according to a plat so covering a road in actual use that the lots lie partly within and partly without the space covered by the road does not estop the public or cut off their right to the use of the road, especially when the public right to the highway has become absolute by statutory limitation.—Ellsworth v. City of Grand Rapids, 27 Mich. 250.

¶ 64. While the rights of the public in a highway cannot be admitted away by taxing officers, the fact that the land has been at all times listed as private property is of some significance, in connection with other facts, as affecting the question of adverse, exclusive, and uninterrupted public user.—City of Detroit v. Myers, 152 Mich. 666.

§ 20. Burden of proof, presumptions and evidence.

As to dedication or prescription, see post § 21.

Questions of law and fact, see post § 22.

General law of evidence, see Evidence.

¶ 65. In a contest between the owner of adjoining land and a municipality claiming the existence of a public street or highway over such land, the burden of proof is on the latter.—Diamond Match Co. v. Village of Ontonagon, 72 Mich. 249.

¶ 66. Evidence held insufficient to establish a highway by user continuing an existing highway over a strip of ground between a lake and another highway, paralleling the lake.—Village of Grosse Pointe Shores v. Holmes, 196 Mich. 183.

¶ 67. Under How. St. § 1315, providing that all roads laid out and not recorded which have been used for eight years or more shall be deemed public highways, the records of a defective proceeding for laying out a highway and evidence that it was generally understood in the community that it was a highway, is admissible to show that a highway had been laid out and used long enough to become a public highway.—Gage v. Township of Pittsfield, 120 Mich. 436.

¶ 68. Where land was conveyed to a township for a road in consideration of the closing of another highway, without the deed being recorded, and subsequently the new road was abandoned and the old one reopened, held, on the recording by the township of the deed many years later, that the evidence did not show use and possession sufficient to give it title to the land described in the deed.—Hodges v. Township of West Bloomfield, 186 Mich. 259.

¶ 69. In establishing the character of a rarely traveled road as a highway by user, evidence of an understanding in the community that the way was public was held admissible, in connection with evidence of its use, as tending to negative any supposition that the use was merely by license or sufferance.—Wicks v. Ross, 37 Mich. 464.

¶ 70. In showing the public character of a road, evidence that the overseer of highways has allowed a road tax to be worked out on it was held admissible as bearing on the question, if guarded by the charge that his act did not make it a public highway.—Wicks v. Ross, 37 Mich. 464.

¶ 71. The survey of a road under Comp. L. 1857, § 991, subd. 3, for the purpose of ascertaining and describing it as one which had been used as a highway for twenty years, in order that it may be recorded, is not the laying out of a highway, and the certificate of such survey is inadmissible to prove that the highway described in it had been laid out by the commissioners.—Parker v. People, 22 Mich. 98.

¶ 72. Evidence of the general understanding in the community that a certain street in public use was a highway, and of the refusal of the supervisor to assess the land so used, although requested to do so, on the ground that it was a highway, is admissible to show its public character.—Village of Grandville v. Jenison, 84 Mich. 54.

§ 21. ——As to dedication or prescription.

Evidence of road by user, see also post ¶ 684.
Presumptions and evidence of dedication, see also Dedication §§ 24-26.

(4 Mich. Dig. 28)

¶ 73. The fact that an alley, title to which is claimed by adverse possession by a city, is exceedingly crooked is merely evidence which may be used to rebut the presumption of dedication, arising from uninterrupted use.—Village of Manchester v. Clarkson, 195 Mich. 354.

¶ 74. Where the statute (Comp. L. 1871, § 1345, How. St. § 1474) required the acknowledgment of plats to be under the officer's seal, the record of such plat is unauthorized, and is not evidence of the plat's execution and validity so as to prove the existence of a highway by dedication.—City of Grand Rapids v. Hastings, 36 Mich. 122.

¶ 75. The evidence, though conflicting, was sufficient to sustain a jury finding that a highway was accepted by the public and used, where it appeared that one of the taxpayers at a somewhat indefinite time had worked out his highway labor tax on that road, doing such work as to fit it for travel, that a box drain was put in at one place to facilitate passage, and where the overseer of highways testified that three years before he had caused the statute labor to be worked out on it, and where the road was used in traveling to a certain resort or picnic ground, in hauling water from a bay, and in hauling fishing gear and fish, although there were no houses along its course and parts of it were sometimes impassable and at first neighbors turned their cattle out on it.—Neal v. Gilmore, 141 Mich. 519.

§ 22. Questions of law and fact.

Dedication or prescription of road as law or fact question, see ante § 22.

¶ 76. Where the location of a highway by user is in dispute, and the evidence is conflicting, the court should submit the question to the jury.—McKay v. Doty, 63 Mich. 581.

¶ 77. In an action by a city to recover a delinquent special sewer assessment, in which the defense was that the assessment was void because the sewer was run across defendant's private property without permission, held that it was a question for the jury whether defendant had consented to, acquiesced in, or knew of any public user or improvements upon the land as an alley, where it appeared that defendant testified that he had lived in another city for many years, and had no knowledge of the claimed user, or of any facts tending to establish the alley or that the sewer had been built and one of his stores connected with it until the action was brought, but he also testified that he visited the city about once a year to look after his property and to make repairs and improvements, when necessary, either attending to them personally or directing others to do so.—Village of Manchester v. Clarkson, 195 Mich. 354.

B. BY STATUTORY PROCEDURE.

Titles and rights acquired by establishment of road or street, see post X.
Re-establishment of abandoned or vacated way, see post § 139.

1. Application or petition and precedure thereon.

§ 23. In general.

Establishment by dedication, prescription or user, see ante II, A.
Hearings, laying out and appraisements, see post II, B, 2.
Payment of awards and completion of proceedings, see post II, B, 3.
Appeals, injunctions and judicial review, see post II, B, 4.
Proceedings for street opening in cities and villages, see post II, B, 5.
Establishment of state highways and local systems, see post II, B, 6.
Proceedings for construction, improvement and repair, see post IV.
Alteration, extensions and changes of grade, see post V.
Proceedings for vacation or discontinuance, see post VI.
Statutory procedure to establish "private" roads, see post XV.
Necessity as basis for laying out private way, see post § 414.
Necessity for jury or special commissioners, see post § 24.
Joinder and misjoinder of proceedings, see post § 25.
Roads affecting more than one township, see post § 26.
Power and jurisdiction of highway commissioners, see post §§ 27, 28.
Application or petition, see post § 29.
Notice, service and proof thereof, see post §§ 30, 31.
Special and summary character of proceedings for opening highways, see post ¶ 158.
Titles and rights of abutters and of the public in the road or street, see post X.
Establishment of wharf under guise of highway, see Wharves.
General law of condemnation for public use, including all matters which are not peculiar to highway or street opening proceedings, see Eminent Domain.
What constitutes a "taking" or "injuring" of property for highway uses or for other public uses, see Eminent Domain, III.
Partial validity of act for opening streets which contains inoperative provisions as to widening proceedings, see Statutes, V.
Provisions of the constitution as to eminent domain, see Const. art. XIII, §§ 1, 2.
Proceedings by county road commissioners for laying out highway, see Comp. L. 1915, §§ 4357-4362.
Proceedings on laying out highway which crosses railroad, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4314.
Establishment of line roads, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 356, amending Comp. L. 1915, § 4299.
Provisions for laying out temporary roads, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4453 et seq.

¶ 78. Proceedings to establish a public highway under Laws 1909, Act No. 283, chap. I, §§ 1-6, How. 2nd Ed., §§ 2174-2179, must comply strictly with the statutes, or they are void.—Brown v. Township of Byron, 189 Mich. 584.

¶ 79. A public highway may be established under Laws 1909, Act No. 283, chap. I, §§ 1-6, How. 2nd Ed., §§ 2174-2179, by proceedings instituted by the commissioner of highways of a township upon written application of freeholders and notice to landowners to be affected, appraisement of damages, and the making of a proper record in the office of the township clerk.—Brown v. Township of Byron, 189 Mich. 584.

¶ 80. From 1851 to 1859 there was no law under which a highway could be legally laid out through condemnation of land to be taken therefor.—People v. Kimball, 4 Mich. 95; People ex rel. Holcomb v. Lowell, 9 Mich. 144.

¶ 81. The validity of the proceedings of a commissioner of highway in laying out a highway is a question of law to be determined from the record and independent facts.—Letourneau v. Erickson, 182 Mich. 617.

§ 24. Necessity for jury or special commissioners.

See also post ¶ 183.
Necessity for jury in street opening proceedings in cities and villages, see post § 77.
Constitutional prerequisites and necessity for jury in condemnation proceedings, see Eminent Domain § 76.
Granting appeal de novo without jury as denying right to jury, see Constitutional Law § 192.
Right to jury, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4295.

¶ 82. Since the constitutional amendment adopted in 1860 a jury or commissioners appointed by a court of record cannot be considered essential to the validity of action by highway commissioners in either laying out or discontinuing highways.—People ex rel. Goldsmith v. Nankin Highway Com'rs, 15 Mich. 347.

§ 25. Joinder and misjoinder of proceedings.

Proceedings to vacate or discontinue highway, see post VI.
Joint proceedings by adjoining townships, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4297.
Joint proceedings by township and adjoining city or village, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4298.

¶ 83. Proceedings to discontinue a highway, to lay out a new one, and to build a bridge, cannot be united in one petition.—Cox v. Commissioner of Highways of Hartford Township, 83 Mich. 193.

¶ 84. Proceedings to open one highway and discontinue another cannot be combined; only one proceeding can be taken at a time, and every road must be opened or closed on its own merits.—Shue v. Richmond Township Highway Commissioner, 41 Mich. 638.

§ 26. Roads affecting more than one township.

Necessity of joint action to vacate road, see post § 125.

¶ 85. A proceeding to lay out a township-line road is void if action is taken by the commissioner of one township only, inasmuch as How. St. §§ 1296, 1305, provide for joint action by the commissioners of both townships, and the proceedings must be filed and recorded with the clerk in both townships.—Brewer v. Gerow, 83 Mich. 250.

§ 27. Power and jurisdiction of highway commissioners.

Authority of commissioner over road affecting more than one township, see ante § 26.

Over lands in railroad or other public use or navigable waters, see post § 28.

Highway officers in general, see post VII.

Joint action by highway commissioners of adjoining townships, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4288, ¶ 2.

Authority of highway commissioner to lay out highway through uninclosed and unimproved lands without application, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4288, ¶ 4.

Authority of commissioner to adjourn hearing, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4292.

Necessity for concurrence by resolution of township board, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4292.

Authority of highway commissioner to appropriate in excess of one hundred dollars, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4292.

Authority of highway commissioner to remove fences and open up highway after payment or tender of award, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4305.

Duty of highway commissioner to endeavor to secure right of way by gift or purchase, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4306.

Authority of highway commissioner on neglect of special commissioners, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4312.

¶ 86. A highway commissioner has jurisdiction under § 1, subdivision 4, of Act No. 283, Public Acts 1909 (How. St., 2nd Ed., § 2174), to lay out on his own motion a highway on a section line through uninclosed and unimproved land.—Letourneau v. Erickson, 182 Mich. 617.

¶ 87. Instead of bringing suit to determine whether a landowner has encroached upon a public highway the legal existence of which he denies, the highway commissioner may take such landowner at his word and institute condemnation proceedings.—Dewey v. Kaner, 80 Mich. 280.

¶ 88. Under the statute of 1861, p. 246, the commissioners of highways have no power to entertain a second application for laying out the same road within one year from the first and any proceedings thereunder are void.—People ex rel. Sage v. Springwells Township Board, 13 Mich. 462.

§ 28. ——Over lands in railroad or other public use or navigable waters.

¶ 89. The statute confers power upon a commissioner of highways to lay out a highway across village depot grounds, except where the concurrent use of the land will be impossible, or attended by serious inconvenience to the railroad company; and, in order to defeat this right, the company should clearly prove its intention so to use the land as to show its good faith and the incompatibility of the two uses.—Battle Creek & S. R. Co. v. Tiffany, 99 Mich. 471.

¶ 90. An authority to lay out highways does not include a power to lay out a highway over navigable waters.—Highway Com'r Tp. Hope v. Ludwick, 151 Mich. 498.

¶ 91. Highway commissioners have no jurisdiction to lay out a highway into navigable waters of a meandered lake, beyond low water mark.—Highway Com'r Tp. Hope v. Ludwick, 151 Mich. 498.

¶ 92. The statutory proceedings for laying out and establishing highways do not in terms or by inference contemplate the condemnation of rights and interests in and to navigable waters, and compensation therefor.—Highway Com'r Tp. Hope v. Ludwick, 151 Mich. 498.

§ 29. Application or petition.

Notice of hearing and service of notice, see post § 30.

Affidavit and proof of service, see post § 31.

Time within which second application for same road may be entertained by commissioner, see also ante ¶ 88.

Street opening proceedings in cities and villages, see post II, B, 5.

Petition for condemnation in street opening proceedings, see post § 72.

Petition for vacation, see post § 130.

Petition in condemnation proceedings in general, see Eminent Domain §§ 60-69.

Description of route to be stated in application, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4289.

Freeholders' application for establishment of highway by township commissioner, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4288, ¶ 1.

Application of freeholders of adjoining township and city or village, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4288, ¶ 3.

Application of freeholders of adjoining townships for joint action by commissioners, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4288, ¶ 2.

¶ 93. The description in a petition for a highway is sufficiently certain, if places are designated which will enable persons familiar with the locality to locate the way with reasonable certainty.—Page v. Boehmer, 154 Mich. 693.

¶ 94. Under sections 8, 9 and 10, c. 9, Act 283, Pub. Acts 1909, relating to the opening of highways, it is not necessary in order to give the highway commissioners jurisdiction that the petition for said highway be signed by a resident of the township.—Burdick v. Harbor Springs Lumber Co., 167 Mich. 673.

¶ 95. A petition which does not purport to be signed by freeholders of the township confers no jurisdiction to lay out a highway.—Wilson v. Township Board of Burr Oak, 87 Mich. 240.

¶ 96. Under R. S. 1846 it was requisite to the valid laying out of a highway that application should be made therefor in writing by ten or more freeholders, and notice of the application given to the persons interested in the lands, and that a survey of the road should be made and incorporated in an order to be made by the commissioners and filed in the office of the township clerk. And where none of these facts was shown, and the road had never been opened or used, or regarded by the commissioners as a highway, a mandamus to the township board, to show cause why they should not pay the damages to a party through whose land a road was claimed to have been laid, was refused.—People ex rel. Chubb v. Scio Township Board, 3 Mich. 121.

§ 30. Notice of hearing, persons to be served, service and posting.

Affidavit, return and proof of service, see post § 31.

Summons or notice of proceedings for street opening and service thereof, see post §§ 73-76.

Notice in vacation proceedings and persons entitled to be notified, see post § 131.

Notice of hearing on application to be served on owners or occupants, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4290.

Method of service of notice of application on railroad companies, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4290.

Necessity and sufficiency of service of notice of appeal to township board, see post § 45, ¶¶ 163, 164.

¶ 97. Proceedings to lay out a highway are void where a person whose land is to be taken was not served with notice and did not by appearance at the hearing waive her right to notice.—Sherman v. Peterson, 91 Mich. 480.

¶ 98. In proceedings to lay out a highway the statute requires the highway commissioners to issue their notice for convening the town board within five days after their receipt of the freeholders' application; therefore a delay of more than a month was held fatal.—Detroit Sharpshooters' Ass'n v. Hamtramck Highway Com'rs, 34 Mich. 36.

¶ 99. Where notice of proceedings to lay out a public highway sufficiently states the starting point and width, the use of the words "varying so far as is necessary to find suitable ground for making a good and substantial road" will not vitiate the legality of the highway so far as it actually follows the survey lines.—Shepard v. Gates, 50 Mich. 495.

¶ 100. Ten full days' notice—excluding both day of service and day of meeting—of a meeting of the commissioner to determine the necessity of laying out a highway must be served upon the owners or occupants of the land through or adjoining which it is proposed to lay out said road (How. St. § 1298).—Conquard v. Boehmer, 81 Mich. 445; Dixon v. Port Huron Highway Commissioner, 75 Mich. 225.

¶ 101. Under How. St. § 1298 requiring ten days' notice of hearing of the petition ten full days are necessary; and where the notice was dated May 9 and the hearing fixed for May 19 the time intervening was held insufficient.—Cox v. Commissioner of Highways of Hartford Township, 83 Mich. 193.

¶ 102. The ten days' notice of proceedings to determine the necessity of a public highway excludes the day of service as well as of meeting.—People ex rel. Platt v. Clay Township Highway Com'r, 38 Mich. 247.

¶ 103. Under section 4038, Comp. L. 1897, requiring notice of application for the laying out of a public highway to be served on landowners interested, a notice is sufficient although it omits to describe the proposed road as a "public" highway, where it was personally served, and there was no claim that its object was unknown.—Gorham v. Johnson, 157 Mich. 433.

¶ 104. Under Comp. Laws, § 4038, 1897, requiring service of notice of an application to lay out a highway, it is unnecessary, where such service is made, to post copies of the notice.—Gorham v. Johnson, 157 Mich. 433.

¶ 105. In proceedings to establish a highway a notice of the hearing served upon parties whose premises are affected, which notice shows the time fixed for the hearing to be only one day from the date of service and one from the date of notice, is bad.—Dixon v. Commissioner Highways of Township of Port Huron, 75 Mich. 225.

¶ 106. Under How. St. § 1298, proceedings to lay out a highway through lands occupied by a tenant are void, where notice of hearing upon the application for laying out the highway is not served upon such occupant.—Welch v. Hodge, 94 Mich. 493.

¶ 107. Notice of the opening of a highway to persons other than the occupant of the land was not necessary, where such occupant had been in exclusive possession for more than 18 years prior to the laying out of the highway.—Nedow v. Porter, 122 Mich. 456.

¶ 108. R. S. 1846, ch. 25, § 2, made it the duty of the township clerk, on receiving an order from the commissioners of highways laying out a road, forthwith to post a copy of such order on the outer door of the house or building where the township meeting was usually held, or, if there was no such house or building, then in one of the most public places in the township. Where it appeared that a copy of the order was posted upon an inside door of a tavern, which was one of the two places in the township at which the township meeting was held alternately, it was held, first, that there was no house, or building, within the contemplation of the statute, where the township meeting was usually held; second, that the court would presume, in the absence of any showing to the contrary, that the tavern where the notice was posted was one of the most public places in the township.—People ex rel. Anderson v. La Grange, 2 Mich. 187.

§ 31. ——Affidavit, return and proof of service.

Proof of service in street opening proceedings, see post § 76.

Affidavit of service of notice, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4291.

¶ 109. The affidavit of service of notice by the highway commissioner of the time and place for determining the necessity for laying out a highway is in the nature of legal process, and must show that the commissioner obtained jurisdiction to proceed to the hearing.—Truax v. Sterling, 74 Mich. 160.

¶ 110. Proceedings to lay out a highway are void where the return shows no proof of service upon the owner and occupant of the land.—Cox v. Commissioner of Highways of Hartford Township, 83 Mich. 193.

¶ 111. An affidavit of service upon a railroad company of a notice of a meeting by a highway commissioner to determine the necessity of laying out a highway, which shows that such service was made "by leaving a copy of the notice with their freight agent at Dorr station," without giving his name or showing that he was in charge of the freight office, is fatally defective.—Truax v. Sterling, 74 Mich. 160.

¶ 112. An affidavit of service upon a railroad company of a notice of a meeting by a highway commissioner to determine the necessity of laying out a highway, which fails to show that the persons with whom, or at whose place of residence, the notice was left were either owners or occupants of the lands on the line of the proposed highway, is fatally defective.—Truax v. Sterling, 74 Mich. 160.

¶ 113. The statutory notice in proceedings for the opening of highways is in the nature of process, and it is indispensable that there be legal evidence that it has been given.—Dupont v. Hamtramck Com'rs, 28 Mich. 362.

¶ 114. In proceedings to lay out a highway the return of the highway commissioners that they proceeded to lay out the road in question, "after due notice given according to law," is not sufficient proof of service of the statutory notice; in such proceedings jurisdictional facts must be distinctly shown.—Dupont v. Hamtramck Highway Com'rs, 28 Mich. 362.

¶ 115. A return of service of notice in highway proceedings should state specific facts from which the sufficiency of the service may be determined by the tribunal which is to act instead of by the officer who serves process.—People ex rel. Goldsmith v. Nankin Highway Com'rs, 14 Mich. 528.

¶ 116. The proceedings in laying out a highway cannot be sustained unless it appears that the statutory notice of the proceedings was given.—Blodgett v. Whaley, 47 Mich. 469.

¶ 117. Proof that notice of proceedings to lay out a highway has been served on owners and occupants concerned should be in writing, sworn to, and filed with the township board. An undated statement by a highway commissioner which neither describes the notice nor gives any date to fix the time of service is insufficient.—Detroit Sharpshooters' Ass'n v. Hamtramck Highway Com'rs, 34 Mich. 36.

¶ 118. A showing of notice of a meeting to be held April 25th will not uphold a meeting held May 11th, in the absence of any showing that notice of such latter meeting was given, or that it was held as an adjourned meeting.—Pegler v. Grand Rapids Highway Com'rs, 34 Mich. 359.

2. Hearings, laying out, estimates and appraisements.

§ 32. Hearings and adjournments.

Scope of hearing and issues, see post § 33.

Order laying out road or denying it, see post §§ 34, 35.

Estimates and appraisements and measure of compensation, see post §§ 36-38.

Return and record of hearing, view and appraisement, see post §§ 39, 40.

Appeals, injunctions and judicial review, see post §§ 44-61.
Adjourned hearings, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4292.

¶ 119. Jurisdiction of proceedings to lay out a highway is lost if the commissioner does not meet at the place mentioned in the notice of a meeting to view the premises, even though such commissioner went to the barn on the same premises on which was the dwelling place designated in the notice, the landowner not being present or assenting to the proceedings taken.—Barlow v. Oscoda Highway Com'r, 59 Mich. 443.

¶ 120. Proceedings to lay out a highway by an appropriation of lands of non-consenting parties were held void where the commissioners, when they met and ordered the highway laid out, had no evidence before them that the statutory notice had been given to the owners and occupants of the lands through which it was proposed to lay it.—Names v. Olive & Robinson Highway Com'rs, 30 Mich. 490.

¶ 121. In proceedings to establish a highway, by adjourning the hearing to another day without specifying the hour and place, jurisdiction to proceed is lost.—Dixon v. Commissioner of Highways of Township of Port Huron, 75 Mich. 225.

¶ 122. The power of a commissioner of highways to adjourn the hearing of an application to lay out a highway is limited to twenty days by How. St. § 1300, and a longer adjournment ousts him of jurisdiction, and renders void his action in laying out a highway at such adjourned hearing.—Wilson v. Atkin, 80 Mich. 247.

§ 33. Scope of hearing and issues.

¶ 123. The usual and paramount issues on a proceeding by a highway commissioner to lay out a highway, are the public necessity, and the damages to be awarded for the property taken.—Letourneau v. Erickson, 182 Mich. 617.

§ 34. Order laying out road or denying it.

Implication as to bridges and necessary adjuncts, see post § 35.

¶ 124. Where application is made for laying out a highway, under the statute of 1861, the commissioners must lay out the whole road applied for or no part of it.—People ex rel. French v. Springwells Township Board, 12 Mich. 434.

¶ 125. An order of a highway commissioner to lay out a highway beginning at a certain point, "running nearly in a northwesterly direction, near where the travel is now seeking to get the best route" to another specific point, is void for the uncertainty in the description.—Blodgett v. Whaley, 47 Mich. 469.

¶ 126. Where the statute (Rev. St. 1846, chap. 25, § 1) required the commissioners of highways, in laying out a road, to incorporate an accurate survey thereof in an order signed by them, such order to be filed and recorded, a survey found of record, purporting to be a copy of the field-notes of a survey, is insufficient to show a regularly laid out highway; on the contrary it tends to disprove it.—Kruger v. Le Blanc, 70 Mich. 76.

§ 35. ——Implication as to bridges and necessary adjuncts.

¶ 127. Construction of the necessary bridge is implied, where the proceedings for laying out a highway were regular and the said highway was to extend across a millpond, although the petition made no reference to the construction of a bridge.—Andrews v. Weckerman, 144 Mich. 199.

§ 36. Estimates and appraisements and measure of compensation.

Damages for crossing railroads, see post § 37.
Interest on damages appraised, see post § 38.
Measure of compensation in street opening proceedings in cities and villages, see post § 64.
Highway damages for taking property for opening in so far as ordinary rules for admeasurement of such damages govern and are applied, see Eminent Domain, IV.
Measure and elements of damages for "taking" or "injuring" property, see Eminent Domain, IV.
Payment of awards, see post §§ 41-43.
Procedure to assess damages on laying out highway by county board, see Comp. L. 1915, § 2291.
Determination of necessity and appraisal of damages on hearing, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4292.
Estimate of damages of highway parallel to and within one-half mile of existing highway, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4292.

¶ 128. As the public takes only easement rights over lands condemned for highway purposes, the benefits which would follow the fee, as well as such benefits as would come by reason of the improvement, should be taken into consideration in assessing damages and set-off as against the damages arising by reason of the taking of the lands for highway purposes.—Township of Custer v. Dawson, 178 Mich. 367.

¶ 129. Where a highway is laid out parallel to and within one-half mile of an existing highway, the damages awarded to the owner of lands taken cannot be estimated at less than their value for general farming purposes unless by his assent, which fact must appear by the return of the commissioner.—Truax v. Sterling, 74 Mich. 160.

¶ 130. Damages for opening a private way as a public one cannot be reduced by the fact that the owner had allowed the public to use it after the previous proceedings had been quashed.—Ayres v. Richards, 41 Mich. 680.

§ 37. ——Damages for crossing railroads.

Damages for separation of crossing grades, see post § 121.

¶ 131. The damage to a railroad from opening a street across it includes the expense entailed by the crossing, and may involve outlays for making it safe.—Grand Rapids v. Grand Rapids & I. R. Co., 58 Mich. 641.

¶ 132. The laying out of a highway across a railroad entitles the railroad company to include in its damages the expense of cattle-guards, fencing and other outlays to complete the approaches, besides the cost of maintaining them.—Chicago & G. T. R. Co. v. Hough, 61 Mich. 507.

¶ 133. The damages awarded to a railroad company where a street is opened through its right of way should cover not only the use of the land taken, but also any extra expense created by the use of the right of way for the street in the ordinary use of the company's road, and such other damage as it may sustain by injury to its track, right of way and franchise occasioned by the crossing, and which may properly be considered as the natural, necessary and proximate cause thereof. The company cannot recover expenses made necessary in order to comply with the police regulations of the state or municipality, but such damages only as arise in making the structural changes necessary to comply with statutory regulations, and which must necessarily continue in the future operation of its road.—In re First Street, City of Grand Rapids v. Grand Rapids & I. R. Co., 66 Mich. 42.

§ 38. ——Interest on damages appraised.

¶ 134. A township is not liable for interest on damages appraised for laying out highway.—People ex rel. Anderson v. La Grange, 2 Mich. 187.

§ 39. Return and record of hearing, view and appraisement.

Burden of proof and presumptions as to necessity, see post § 40.

Return of commissioner to certiorari, see post § 59.

Notice and affidavit of service as part of record to be present with commissioner on hearing, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4291.

Commissioner's return after final determination, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4293.

Necessity for commissioner to view premises described in petition, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4292.

¶ 135. Proceedings to open a highway, where the highway commissioner's return to the township clerk shows neither the time nor the manner of notice and gives no full account of the transactions giving authority to act, must be quashed.—Shue v. Richmond Township Highway Commissioner, 41 Mich. 638.

¶ 136. Failure of the report of a highway commissioner establishing a highway to show when the petition therefor was received does not affect its validity, if the dates appear from the petition itself and the recitals of the notice.—Gorham v. Johnson, 157 Mich. 433.

¶ 137. Where, in proceedings to establish a highway, the record and return contained a copy of the notice of the application therefor, and proof by the commissioner's affidavit that service was made within the proper time, it sufficiently appeared that proof of service was made, and was before the commissioner at the time his action was taken, although neither fact was shown by the record and return.—Gorham v. Johnson, 157 Mich. 433.

¶ 138. In proceedings to establish a highway, it was not necessary that the record and return state what occurred at the meeting prior to the commissioner's proceeding to view the premises, further than to state that the "commissioner and others were assembled," and that "there was a discussion among them regarding the laying out of the proposed highway, after which they dispersed," where it appeared that the commissioner immediately proceeded to make a view, determined that the road was necessary, and that it should be laid out.—Gorham v. Johnson, 157 Mich. 433.

¶ 139. Proceedings for laying out a highway are void unless the commissioner's return affirmatively shows that he determined such action was necessary.—Truax v. Sterling, 74 Mich. 160; Cox v. Commissioner of Highways of Township of Hartford, 83 Mich. 193.

¶ 140. The highway commissioner's failure to show by his return that notice was served upon an occupant of land through which a highway is to be laid is fatal to the validity of his proceedings.—Wilson v. Township Board of Burr Oak, 87 Mich. 240.

¶ 141. Proceedings to establish a highway must be quashed where the commissioner's return to the township clerk does not show when the application was made, or who were the owners of the lands over which the road was to be laid out, or whose interest would be affected, or what the damages awarded were, the value of the land for farming purposes, or that there was a public necessity for the laying out of the road and for the taking of the land affected for such purpose.—Cowing v. Ripley, 76 Mich. 650.

¶ 142. If the record of proceedings to lay out a highway, required by the statute to be kept by the town clerk, contains no proof of service or posting of the statutory notices, it is jurisdictionally defective.—Van Auken v. Vernon & Shiawassee Highway Com'rs, 27 Mich. 414.

¶ 143. If the commissioner's report to the township clerk does not show that notice of the application therefor, and of a hearing upon it, had been given to the parties interested, and even if proof of notice has been duly filed, the proceedings are fatally defective if the report does not show when the hearing took place, since it would not show that the commissioner took action on the day fixed in the notice for the hearing, and therefore would not show that parties interested had a chance to be heard.—Moetter v. Grosse Pointe Highway Com'r, 39 Mich. 726.

¶ 144. The record of proceedings to lay out and establish a highway must show legal evidence of the petition, the notice, and service; and recital of these facts in the commissioner's return is not sufficient.—Schroeder v. Village of Onekama, 95 Mich. 25.

¶ 145. An insufficient return by highway commissioners as to the giving of notice of proceedings taken by them to lay out a highway is not cured by a subsequent affidavit of service by one of their number, that implies that no proof of service was before them when they acted, other than the mere oral statement of the commissioner who made the service, which cannot be proof to the others, or to third persons, who are entitled to have the facts put on record. Jurisdiction to take from a private owner the possession of his lands can never rest on such a basis as the mere oral statement of the fact of service.—Dupont v. Hamtramck Highway Com'rs, 28 Mich. 362.

¶ 146. Whether the return of the highway commissioners can be cured by an affidavit, subsequently made, of the facts, showing that notice was duly given by one of the commissioners, and that at the time of acting they had the proof of that fact actually before them, quære.—Dupont v. Hamtramck Highway Com'rs, 28 Mich. 362.

¶ 147. Under section 4041, Comp. L. 1897, requiring that in proceedings to establish a highway the commissioner must sign the map and survey of the road, his signature to the record and return containing the map and survey is sufficient.—Gorham v. Johnson, 157 Mich. 433.

¶ 148. Survey found of record, purporting to be copy of field-notes, held insufficient to show regularly laid out highway where statute required survey to be incorporated in order signed by commissioners, etc.—Kruger v. Le Blanc, 70 Mich. 76.

§ 40. ——Burden of proof and presumptions as to necessity.

¶ 149. If the statutory notice of proceedings to lay out a highway may ever be dispensed with, the public authorities who have attempted without notice to appropriate lands for the highway must, when the validity of their proceedings is questioned, show that the circumstances existed to justify their action; the burden is upon them of making out the exceptional case, and not upon the owners of showing the contrary.—Names v. Olive & Robinson Highway Com'rs, 30 Mich. 490.

3. Payment of awards and completion of proceedings.

§ 41. In general; right and necessity.

Orders for payment, see post § 42.

Estoppel by acceptance of award, see post § 43.

Necessity for compensation in street opening proceedings in cities and villages, see post § 64.

Constitutional necessity and time for payment, see Eminent Domain, IV.

Apportionment and assessment of benefits in levying local assessments, see Local Improvements, VI.

Authority and duty to remove fences on receipt of award, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4305.

¶ 150. A private way cannot be converted into a public highway without compensation to the owner of the lands over which it runs.—Ayres v. Richards, 41 Mich. 680.

¶ 151. Damages to the value of the land for farming purposes, taken by a commissioner of highways in laying out or altering a highway, must be allowed to the owner before the public can acquire any rights or interest in the property condemned.—Weber v. Stagray, 75 Mich. 32.

¶ 152. Township authorities cannot refuse to make payment for lands taken for a highway in 1859, on the ground that a road was laid out over the same line in 1857 since from 1851 to 1859 there was no law under which a highway could be legally laid out by condemnation proceedings.—People ex rel. Holcomb v. Lowell Township Board, 9 Mich. 144.

¶ 153. A jury was summoned in 1859, on the warrant of a justice, to determine the necessity of taking the relator's lands for a highway, and to assess his damages. The jury found the taking necessary, and assessed the damages; and their finding was filed in the town clerk's office, but not certified by the justice as required by law. The amount of damages was levied and collected by tax, and the road opened. It was held that the town could not resist the payment of the damages to the relator, on the ground that the justice had failed to certify the finding.—People ex rel. Holcomb v. Lowell Township Board, 9 Mich. 144.

§ 42. Orders for payment.

Payment of damages awarded, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4311.

¶ 154. Where a highway was laid out through the lands of an individual in 1860, and his damages were appraised, and an order on the township treasurer tendered for the amount, which order was payable "to the owner or occupant, or to the person entitled thereto, for the land so taken," it was held that the order was insufficient, and its tender did not authorize the highway commissioners to take possession of the land. It should have designated the payee, so as to show on its face the person to whom it was payable.—Lull v. Curry, 10 Mich. 397.

¶ 155. Questions involved in the merits of the controversy before the commissioners or the appraisers, or the fraud or misconduct of the parties or officers, cannot be inquired into by the township board upon an application for an order upon the treasurer for the amount of damages assessed.—People ex rel. Anderson v. La Grange Township Board, 2 Mich. 187.

§ 43. Estoppel by acceptance of award.

¶ 156. Unconditional acceptance of a township order in satisfaction of damages occasioned by laying out a highway estops one from afterwards contesting the proceedings on the ground of mere irregularities therein.—Prescott v. Patterson, 49 Mich. 622.

¶ 157. Where a commissioner in a petition for a highway has jurisdiction over the person and the subject-matter, the participation of the person in, and his acceptance of, the award, estops him and his grantee from contesting the validity of the award.—Page v. Boehmer, 154 Mich. 693.

4. Appeals, injunctions and judicial review.

§ 44. In general; right of review and remedies.

Appeals to township boards, see post §§ 45-49.
Appeals from township board to circuit court and trials therein, see post § 50.
Review on writ of error to circuit court, see post § 51.
Certiorari or mandamus to review proceedings, see post §§ 53-60.
Injunction as remedy, see post § 61.
Appeal and review in street opening proceedings, see post §§ 91-95.
Nonliability of officers for laying out highway, see post § 144.
Subjecting land to public street use by force as actionable trespass, see Eminent Domain ¶ 493.
Limitations of common law and chancery actions for relief, see Limitations.
Persons entitled to appeal to township board, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4294.

¶ 158. Proceedings relating to opening a highway are special and summary in character, and, while subject to judicial review and supervision for certain purposes, are not judicial proceedings.—Hartz v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 164 Mich. 231.

¶ 159. A party who is not notified of proceedings to establish a highway can lose nothing by a failure to appeal to the township board.—Names v. Olive & Robinson Highway Com'rs, 30 Mich. 490.

¶ 160. Appeal to the township board is the only way to secure a review of the adequacy of the compensation allowed for land taken for a highway.—Weber v. Ryers, 82 Mich. 177.

¶ 161. The owners of lands appropriated under void highway proceedings may bring trespass when their occupation is disturbed.—Names v. Olive & Robinson Highway Com'rs, 30 Mich. 490.

§ 45. Appeals to township board.

Disqualification of members and substitutions, see post § 46.
Orders appealable and view, hearing and scope of review, see post § 47.
Decision on appeal, record, conclusiveness and effect, see post § 48.
Objections and defects barred or cured by appeal, see post § 49.
Power of township board over disputed questions on application for order upon treasurer for damages, see ante ¶ 155.
Right, method and procedure on appeal to township board, see Comp. L. 1915, §§ 4294, 4295.
Appeals on laying out highways between township and city or village, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4301.
Necessity for concurrence by resolution of township board, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4292.

¶ 161a. Where a road is regularly applied for, and the commissioners decide to lay out a part of it only, any person through whose lands the road runs as laid is entitled to take proceedings to test the validity of their action.—People ex rel. French v. Springwells Township Board, 12 Mich. 434.

¶ 162. An appeal to the township board from the decision of a highway commissioner in laying out a highway across appellant's land need not specify the reasons for the appeal. (How. St. §§ 1302, 1303.)—Brown v. Township Board of Greenfield, 92 Mich. 294.

¶ 162a. The action of township boards on appeal from the highway commissioners cannot be sustained if it does not appear that the party injured by it had notice of their meeting, even though the return shows that it was held at his house.—Prescott v. Patterson, 44 Mich. 525.

¶ 163. The township board has no jurisdiction to entertain an appeal from a decision of the commissioner of highways on a petition for the opening of a highway, holding that the highway was a necessary public improvement, without service of notice of the appeal as required by How. St. § 1302, and merely fixing a time and place for hearing the appeal gave no jurisdiction.—Sanger v. Township Board of Brownstown, 118 Mich. 19.

¶ 164. Failure to serve statutory notice of an appeal taken to the township board from a decision of the commissioner of highways on a petition for the opening of a highway and consequently void action by the board without service of notice, does not prevent service of new notice to give the board jurisdiction to act on the appeal after service.—Sanger v. Township Board of Brownstown, 118 Mich. 19.

¶ 165. On taking an appeal to the township board from the decision of the highway commissioner that a proposed road is necessary, appellant has no further responsibility than duly to make and file his claim of appeal; and the failure of the township clerk to serve a sufficient notice of appeal as required by How. St. § 1302 does not prejudice appellant's right to the appeal.—Sanger v. Township Board of Brownstown, 118 Mich. 19.

§ 46. ——Disqualification of members and substitutions.

¶ 166. A township board on appeal cannot legally proceed to lay out a highway if two of its acting members are financially interested in its being laid out.—Wilson v. Township Board of Burr Oak, 87 Mich. 240.

¶ 167. Members of a township board who took part on the hearing of an appeal by a landowner from the decision of the highway commissioner on necessity of a highway across appellant's land, and who decided that the highway was a public necessity, which decision was quashed, are disqualified from sitting on the hearing of a second appeal one having made affidavit that the highway was a necessity, and another having declared that if he had it to do over again he would do as he did before.—Locke v. Highway Com'r of Wyoming T'p, 107 Mich. 631.

¶ 168. A township board is not disqualified to hear an appeal from a decision of a highway commissioner because two of its members had, just before the hearing of his appeal, participated in determining the appeals of others who had complained of the determination of the commissioner.—Bogue v. De Long, 147 Mich. 63.

¶ 169. A member of a township board is not disqualified from sitting in the hearing of an appeal from the determination of a highway commissioner merely from the facts that his wife was a sister of the deceased wife of one of the freeholders who had signed the application of the highway and is the chief promoter, that his own wife had signed a former application for the opening of this highway, and as a member of the board he had voted for a resolution authorizing the expenditure of $1,000 in opening the highway. These facts at most furnish only evidence of partiality, of interest, or that he had prejudged the case and are overcome by a return that he was disinterested and impartial.—Bogue v. De Long, 147 Mich. 63.

¶ 170. Where on appeal from the decision of the highway commissioner establishing a road, it appears that two of the township board are disqualified to sit on the appeal other justices of the peace than the ones disqualified may be called in to make a quorum, according to express provisions of How. St. § 745.—Locke v. Wyoming Township Highway Commissioner, 107 Mich. 631.

¶ 171. Where a town-clerk is incapacitated to sit as a member of the township board consisting of two justices of the peace, the supervisor and the township clerk, under Comp. L. 1897, § 2344, upon an appeal to it from the decision of the highway commissioner in laying out a public highway, the deputy clerk cannot fill his place as a member of the board.—Dubois v. Riley Township Board, 126 Mich. 587.

§ 47. ——Orders appealable and view, hearing, and scope of review.

¶ 172. No appeal lies to the township board from refusal by the highway commissioner to lay out a highway.—Wilson v. Township Board of Burr Oak, 87 Mich. 240.

¶ 172a. A township board sitting to hear an appeal from the action of a highway commissioner in laying out a road has power to adjourn for any reasonable cause to a specified day.—People ex rel. Van Scoy v. Essex Township Board, 38 Mich. 615.

¶ 172b. A township board, on an appeal from a highway commissioner, cannot go beyond the grounds of the appeal and pass on other matters.—People ex rel. Tefft v. Hamtramck Township Board, 38 Mich. 558.

¶ 172c. A township board has no power to review the proceedings of the commissioners in laying out and establishing a road except on appeal; nor to review the proceedings of the appraisers except to see that they were not void for want of jurisdiction.—People ex rel. Anderson v. La Grange Township Board, 2 Mich. 187.

¶ 173. On an appeal to the township board from the decision of the highway commissioner in proceedings to establish a highway, Pub. Acts 1905, No. 195, does not require that the township board shall view the premises. While a view may be helpful and desirable it is not error to fail to make it, especially when it was not asked for.—Bogue v. De Long, 147 Mich. 63.

¶ 174. On appeal to the township board from the commissioner to lay out a highway, taken under How. St. §§ 1302, 1303, but stating no reasons, the only questions open to the appellant are the necessity, and, if that is found to exist, the damages.—Brown v. Township Board of Greenfield, 92 Mich. 294.

¶ 175. The township board, upon appeal from award in highway proceedings, is not bound by the decision of the commissioner as to the amount of damages to be awarded, but may, under How. St. 1304, diminish or increase the same.—Brown v. Greenfield T'p Board, 109 Mich. 557.

¶ 176. Where several property owners appeal from the action of a highway commissioner in laying out a highway each has not the separate right to have determined the question of necessity.—Bogue v. De Long, 147 Mich. 63.

§ 48. ——Decision on appeal, record, conclusiveness, and effect.

¶ 176a. Proceedings of highway commissioners to lay out a highway are to be affirmed or reversed as an entirety, and the fact that the proposed road is a long one, and the parties who complain are injured by only a very small portion of it, cannot save the rest, for it is uncertain whether the commissioners would have decided to open anything less than the whole road.—Names v. Olive & Robinson Highway Com'rs, 30 Mich. 490.

¶ 177. The decision of township board on appeal from commissioner's action in laying out highway is final and conclusive.—Soller v. Township of Brown, 67 Mich. 422.

¶ 178. The determination of a township board upon an appeal from a decision of the commissioner of highways locating a road across appellant's land, and awarding compensation for the land so taken, is, under How. St., § 1303, final and conclusive.—Brown v. Greenfield T'p Board, 109 Mich. 557.

¶ 178a. The fact of notice of a meeting of township boards to review the action of highway commissioners is jurisdictional and must appear of record.—Prescott v. Patterson, 44 Mich. 525.

¶ 178b. Notice of an appeal to the township board from an order opening or extending a highway is needful to confer jurisdiction to proceed, and cannot therefore be shown by a mere recital in the final order of the board to the effect that due notice had been given.—People ex rel. Tefft v. Hamtramck Township Board, 38 Mich. 558; Brazee v. Raymond, 59 Mich. 548.

¶ 178c. The proceedings of a township board reversing an order opening or extending a highway were quashed for want of a proper showing of notice of an appeal from the order.—Brazee v. Raymond, 59 Mich. 548.

§ 49. ——Objections and defects barred or cured by appeal.

¶ 179. An appeal to the township board from proceedings to lay out or alter a highway is a waiver of such defects and irregularities as do not show a want of jurisdiction or that the proceedings were void.—Weber v. Stagray, 75 Mich. 32; Brown v. Township of Greenfield, 92 Mich. 294; Prescott v. Patterson, 44 Mich. 525.

¶ 180. Jurisdiction over the person of a landowner in proceedings to lay out a highway is secured where he participates in such proceedings, and takes an appeal.—Page v. Boehmer, 154 Mich. 693.

¶ 181. Whether the highway commissioner before whom proceedings were brought to establish a highway was disqualified is immaterial when the township board before whom the appeal was brought was qualified. Plaintiff's rights having been finally determined by a qualified tribunal, it is of no consequence that they were once determined by a disqualified tribunal.—Bogue v. De Long, 147 Mich. 63.

§ 50. Appeals from township board to circuit court, and trials therein.

Appeal to circuit court from township board and trial therein, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4295.

¶ 182. A dispute as to the location of a section line on which it is proposed to establish a highway, must be settled before steps are taken to open and improve the road; which may be done on an appeal to the circuit court, under § 8 of Act No. 283, of Public Acts 1909 (How. St., 2nd Ed., § 2174), from the decision of the township board.—Letourneau v. Erickson, 182 Mich. 617.

¶ 183. A statute providing for an appeal to the circuit court from the decision of a highway commissioner and a town board laying out a highway, is not in contravention of section 2, art. 3 of the Michigan Constitution, for failing to provide that the case must be heard by a jury of twelve freeholders, inasmuch as said section 2 expressly excludes the necessity for such a jury in the case of decisions by commissioners of highways.—Loomis v. Hartz, 165 Mich. 662.

¶ 184. On the hearing of an appeal from the decision of a highway commissioner in laying out a road, the jury should be instructed either that the land taken as shown by the survey attached to the commissioner's return, alone should be considered in awarding damages, or, if the location is in dispute, that the true location should be determined and damages assessed with reference to the land actually taken.—Letourneau v. Erickson, 182 Mich. 617.

¶ 185. It is sufficient, in a proceeding to open a highway, to instruct the jury that in order for a public necessity for it to exist it is not requisite that the road should be absolutely necessary to the public, but that it is sufficient if the public is interested, within reason, in having it opened.—Rogren v. Corwin, 181 Mich. 53.

¶ 186. Where the record of the proceedings, as kept in the highway commissioner's book, is introduced to prove the establishment of a highway, and on their face they are void, it is reversible error to let the question of the existence of the highway go to the jury on such evidence.—La Barre v. Bent, 154 Mich. 520.

¶ 187. The finding of a jury as to the true location of a highway, when in dispute, is a material part of the verdict on an appeal from a proceeding to establish a highway.—Letourneau v. Erickson, 182 Mich. 617.

§ 51. Review on writ of error to circuit court.

¶ 188. Proceedings for the condemnation of land for highway purposes under Pub. Acts 1909, Act 283, How. 2nd Ed., § 2173, are properly reviewable by writ of error.—Township of Custer v. Dawson, 178 Mich. 867.

§ 52. Certiorari or mandamus to review proceedings.

From supreme court, see post § 53.
Grounds and propriety of allowing writ, see post § 54.
Interest or grievance to relator, see post § 55.
Time for writ, laches and delay, see post § 56.
Petition for certiorari, writ and service, see post § 57.
Parties relator and respondent, see post § 58.
Return to certiorari, see post § 59.
Scope of review in general and form of relief granted, see post § 60.
General law of certiorari and mandamus, see Certiorari; Mandamus.
Scope of review on certiorari, and presumptions and construction of the return in general, see Certiorari §§ 48-61.
Certiorari to review street opening proceedings, see post §§ 94, 95.

¶ 189. Under Act No. 283, Pub. Acts 1909, which provides for an appeal from the decision of highway commissioners and of a town board ordering the laying out of a road, but which grants no right to review said order by writ of certiorari, the property owner has a complete remedy by appeal to the circuit court, and cannot review said order by certiorari issuing from the circuit court.—Hartz v. Brown, 165 Mich. 660.

§ 53. ——From supreme court.

¶ 190. Proceedings relating to the opening of highways may be reviewed by certiorari, and in such review the supreme court may inquire as to the manner in which the inferior bodies have exercised their jurisdiction.—Hartz v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 164 Mich. 231.

¶ 191. Relator appealed from a decision of a township board in certain highway proceedings. The circuit judge dismissed the appeal on the ground that the statute creating the right of appeal was unconstitutional. Held, relator's proper remedy was by certiorari from this decision, and that mandamus would not lie to vacate this final ruling of the circuit judge.—Hartz v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 164 Mich. 35; Hartz v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 164 Mich. 231.

§ 54. ——Grounds and propriety of allowing writ.

¶ 192. Proceedings connected with the local administration of the state, such as highway openings, etc., will not be reviewed on certiorari unless the court is satisfied that some serious injury has been done the petitioner, and that he has not delayed complaining until rights have been fixed.—Nightingale v. Simmons, 66 Mich. 528.

¶ 193. A review of highway and similar proceedings cannot be had in the supreme court on certiorari unless plaintiff has been prevented from resorting to his statutory appeal without his fault, or unless the case presents strong equities to dispense with it.—Nightingale v. Simmons, 66 Mich. 528.

¶ 194. Where one who felt himself aggrieved by the action of highway commissioners in the matter of laying out a road on a town line took advantage of the appropriate statutory remedy by appeal to the township boards, the supreme court declined to order a writ of certiorari to review the proceedings, no exceptional circumstances being shown.—Burt v. Sumpter & Van Buren Highway Com'rs, 32 Mich. 190.

¶ 195. The decision of the township board on appeal from a highway commissioner's action in laying out a highway is final (How. St. §§ 1302, 1303), and precludes a resort to certiorari except in case of peculiar circumstances; and such circumstances do not exist where the petitioner merely contended that the commissioner's proceedings were irregular, and did not claim damages before the board.—Soller v. Township of Brown, 67 Mich. 422.

¶ 196. If the only question is as to the amount of damages, certiorari will not lie to the commissioner to remove highway opening proceedings to the supreme court, where no reason is given for not resorting to the remedy by appeal.—Detroit & B. C. R. Co. v.

Graham, 46 Mich. 642; Flint & P. M. R. Co. v. Norton, 64 Mich. 248.

¶ 197. The remedy by certiorari to review void proceedings to lay out a highway is not precluded by an action of trespass brought because of the disturbed occupation.—Names v. Olive & Robinson Highway Com'rs, 30 Mich. 490.

§ 55. ——Interest or grievance to relator.

¶ 198. Certiorari to review proceedings to lay out a highway was quashed where the petitioner's interest arose only from his being a tax payer and therefore liable to be called upon to pay a trifling portion of the tax which would be levied to satisfy the appraised damages. His interest was too remote and the amount involved too small.—Vanderstolph v. Highway Com'r, 50 Mich. 330.

§ 56. ——Time for writ, laches and delay.

¶ 199. Fifteen months after the laying out of a highway by the commissioner of highways, the proceedings were removed by certiorari to the circuit court. The person prosecuting the writ had notice of and was present at the proceedings, but made no effort to prevent the improvement and use of the highway by the public until the time of the issuance of the writ. Held, that the writ was properly dismissed in discretion of the court.—Burnett v. Swaney, 114 Mich. 609.

§ 57. ——Petition for certiorari, writ and service.

Oath to application for certiorari, see also Certiorari ¶ 96.

¶ 200. In an application for certiorari to bring up for review proceedings to lay out a highway, a showing that some portion of the applicant's lands have been appropriated is a sufficient showing of injury thereto.—Names v. Olive & Robinson Highway Com'rs, 30 Mich. 490.

¶ 201. A copy of the petition on which a certiorari to review a highway opening proceeding has been allowed should be served with the writ. No error can be relied on unless specified, and respondents are entitled to have their attention called to what they are concerned to explain.—Nightingale v. Simmons, 66 Mich. 528.

¶ 202. A writ of certiorari to review proceedings to lay out a highway will be dismissed with costs if, though there was excusable failure to appeal, there is no showing of any intention to appeal after the complaining party became aware of the action taken.—Wilder v. Hubbell, 43 Mich. 487.

¶ 203. Where a review of highway opening proceedings is sought on certiorari, the oath of the party himself showing why he is justified in resorting to this remedy should be presented.—Nightingale v. Simmons, 66 Mich. 528.

§ 58. ——Parties relator and respondent.

¶ 204. Two landowners having like complaints against the action of a commissioner of highways in laying out a road, and whose injuries are of the same nature, may join in certiorari proceedings to review such action.—Cowing v. Ripley, 76 Mich. 650.

¶ 205. Where commissioners of highways laid out and established a road, and an appeal was taken from their decision, which affirmed what the commissioners had done, a certiorari sued out for the purpose of reviewing the decision of the township board, directed to the commissioners instead of to the township board, was dismissed for the misdirection.—Goodrich v. Lima Highway Com'rs, 1 Mich. 385; French v. Springwells Highway Com'rs, 12 Mich. 267.

§ 59. ——Return to certiorari.

Commissioner's return to township clerk, see ante § 39.

Right of clerk to fees before making return to certiorari, see Certiorari ¶ 107.

¶ 206. On error to a judgment of the circuit court on certiorari to review the action of a highway commissioner in laying out a highway, the supreme court will disregard the findings of fact by the circuit court, and dispose of the case on the commissioner's return to the writ, which must be taken as true.—Gorham v. Johnson, 157 Mich. 433.

¶ 207. It is from the records made and returned to the township clerk by a commissioner of highways, of his action in laying out a road, that the legality of such action is to be determined on certiorari to review the same, and not from his return to such writ outside of such records.—Cowing v. Ripley, 76 Mich. 650.

¶ 208. Proceedings to lay out a highway, are defective and must be quashed if the highway commissioner's return to writ of certiorari fails to show that the statutory notices of the proceedings were served or posted.—Pegler v. Grand Rapids Highway Com'rs, 34 Mich. 359; People ex rel. Gray v. Brockway Highway Com'r, 40 Mich. 165; Nielsen v. Wakefield, 43 Mich. 434.

¶ 209. Where the return on certiorari shows that the proceedings to lay out a highway do not show any proof of service or posting of the notice required by the statute, except the certificate of the commissioners that they have laid out the highway, in which they recite that they have "given notice according to law," the action of the commissioners is without jurisdiction and void.—Van Auken v. Vernon & Shiawassee Highway Com'rs, 27 Mich. 414.

§ 60. ——Scope of review in general and form of relief granted.

See also ante ¶ 190.

¶ 210. Proceedings to lay out a town-line road, where no damage appears to have been done to plaintiff, who has been guilty of laches, and where there is no reason to doubt the fairness of the action complained of, are not reviewed on certiorari for technical objections.—Carpenter v. Highway Com'rs, 64 Mich. 476.

¶ 211. The adequacy of the compensation awarded by a highway commissioner for land taken for highway purposes is not reviewable by certiorari.—Weber v. Ryers, 82 Mich. 177.

¶ 212. On a proceeding to lay out a highway the highway commissioner's failure to show in his return that he met those interested at the place specified in his notice for viewing the premises cannot be complained of by one whose affidavits for certiorari to review the opening proceedings shows that plaintiff met him at such place to oppose his action.—Soller v. Township of Brown, 67 Mich. 422.

¶ 213. On certiorari to review the proceedings of a township board upon appeal from the action of the highway commissioner in laying out a highway, the commissioner's action will not be passed upon where he is not a party to the writ.—Brazee v. Raymond, 59 Mich. 548.

¶ 214. Upon certiorari against the township board and the highway commissioner of the township to review the proceedings of such board on an appeal from an order of the commissioner establishing a highway, the court cannot enter an order for the board to reconvene and consider the appeal. The sole question presented being, was the action valid.—Dubois v. Riley Township Board, 126 Mich. 587.

¶ 215. A statement by the circuit court in setting aside for total want of jurisdiction the decision by a township board on appeal from the decision of the commissioner of highways on a petition for the opening of a highway that the circuit court's action was "without prejudice to prior proceedings," is proper but unnecessary since quashing the action of the board left the original order in statu quo.—Sanger v. Township Board of Brownstown, 118 Mich. 19.

§ 61. Injunction as remedy.

Injunction as remedy in street opening proceedings in cities and villages, see post § 96.

General law of injunctions and occasion and propriety for injunctive relief, see Injunctions.

Dismissal of injunction as bar to further proceedings, see Former Adjudication § 17.

¶ 216. Where the law affords a plain and adequate remedy for persons aggrieved by the action of commissioners in the opening of highways, relief will not be given by injunction.—Burdick v. Harbor Springs Lumber Co., 167 Mich. 673.

¶ 217. Where an award of a board of highway commissioners in laying out a highway is void for want of jurisdiction because of a failure to give the notice required by law, the giving of such notice being treated as a jurisdictional matter, a court of equity may enjoin further proceedings for the opening of the highway.—Burdick v. Harbor Springs Lumber Co., 167 Mich. 673.

¶ 218. Where road commissioners acting as public officers under an unfounded claim of authority are endeavoring to appropriate complainant's land to the use of the public for a highway, they may be enjoined from entering upon the land and from removing trees, buildings, and fences therefrom, and in such case, the court having properly acquired jurisdiction for the purposes of the injunction, may in order to prevent a multiplicity of suits and to do complete justice between the parties, under the prayer for general relief, award damages for the injuries already committed.—Burdick v. Harbor Springs Lumber Co., 167 Mich. 673.

¶ 218a. A bill in chancery for an injunction lies in favor of the owner of property abutting on a highway who has released a certain number of feet off of his land for highway purposes, against the highway commissioner to enjoin the incorrect location and opening of the highway entirely upon complainant's land, other than the land released or that on which the quarter section line was situated, and the cutting down of trees, he not having an adequate remedy at law through appeal under the provisions of Pub. Acts 1909, No. 283, How. 2nd ed., § 2173 et seq., and amendments, pursuant to which the proceedings were taken to lay out and open the proposed highway.—Groves v. Bowman. 201 Mich. 46.

¶ 218b. Where the petition for the laying out of a highway on the quarter line is regular and the surveyor by mistake locates it elsewhere the laying out of the highway may be enjoined.—Loud v. Deacon, 189 Mich. 177.

¶ 218c. One in possession claiming title may have an injunction against an intruder who threatens to enter and dispossess him for the purpose of laying out a public street. Diamond Match Co. v. Village of Ontonagon, 72 Mich. 249.

¶ 219. Where a bill is filed by a railroad company to restrain a highway commissioner from opening a highway which he has laid out across complainant's depot grounds, and on the hearing it appears that complainant was allowed $100 for its damages, and that it has no just reason to oppose the laying out of the highway, the proceedings of the commissioner will not be reviewed.—Battle Creek & S. R. Co. v. Tiffany, 99 Mich. 471.

¶ 220. On the bare fact established by a sworn answer to the bill that a proposed road is a public necessity without any showing of special circumstances to support establishment of a cul de sac road, injunction will not be granted against the opening of it as a road essentially private in character but petitioned for as a public road.—Fields v. Colby, 102 Mich. 449.

¶ 221. A bill to enjoin a highway commissioner from opening a highway is properly dismissed where it alleges that the complainant appealed from the action of the commissioner to the township board in accordance with Comp. L. 1897, § 4042 and the testimony shows a full hearing before the said board unimpeached by either the bill or the testimony on the ground urged for injunction.—Campau v. Le Blanc, 127 Mich. 179.

5. Street opening in cities and villages.

§ 62. In general; nature and form of proceedings.

Strictness of procedure, see post § 63.
Necessity and measure of compensation and persons entitled, see post § 64.
Public uses and necessity or propriety of street, see post §§ 65, 66.
Property or quantum of estate necessary or subject to appropriation, see post § 67.
Resolution or other preliminaries by municipal council, see post § 68.
Previous effort to purchase or obtain consents, see post § 69.
Maps and surveys, see post § 70.
Petition and proceedings thereon, see post § 71 et seq.
Powers of cities and villages, see also post ¶ 517.
Proceedings by township highway commissioner, see ante II, B, 1-4.
Proceedings to open private alleys and ways, see post XV.
What constitutes a "taking" or "injuring" of property for street uses or for other public uses, see Eminent Domain, III.
Street opening proceedings in fourth-class cities, see Comp. L. 1915, §§ 3136-3164.
Street opening proceedings by villages, see Comp. L. 1915, §§ 2784-2819.
Right on street opening to condemnation proceedings under general law, see Comp. L. 1915, § 3137.

¶ 222. The taking of a citizen's lands for a public highway is taking property for the use and benefit of the public, within the meaning of article 18, § 2 of the constitution.—Truax v. Sterling, 74 Mich. 160.

¶ 223. In street opening cases the city may proceed under Laws 1883, Act No. 124, or by express terms of section 24 of that act under their local charters or other special acts.—Trowbridge v. City of Detroit, 99 Mich. 443.

¶ 224. The constitution of 1850 did not abolish then existing highway laws beyond repealing the provisions for assessing damages in taking lands where the owners did not acquiesce.—Nye v. Clark, 55 Mich. 599.

¶ 225. A city charter providing for condemnation of land for public use may validly permit separate parcels of lands owned by different persons to be condemned by the same jury.—Kundinger v. City of Saginaw, 59 Mich. 355.

¶ 226. Where the contemplated street improvement looks to the establishment of a continuous street, the proceedings for the same may be joint although certain parts of the highway are called by different names.—City of Detroit v. Robinson, 93 Mich. 426.

§ 63. Strictness of procedure.

¶ 227. Proceedings whereby private property is taken against the owner's will for opening a street, being special and adverse, must comply strictly with every provision of the law that is not so purely formal as in no way to bear upon the protection or rights of the parties to be affected. And since, by the same course of proceedings, the value of the land is determined, and the cost of the improvement is levied against the parties to be charged, the inquiry involves not only those principles governing the taking of private property for public use, but also those bearing on assessments to apportion public burdens.—Powers' Appeal, 29 Mich. 504.

§ 64. Necessity and measure of compensation and persons entitled.

Measure and elements of damages for "taking" or "injuring" property, see Eminent Domain, IV.

¶ 228. One who petitions for the laying out of a street is not estopped from claiming damages for his land taken therefor.—Turner v. Village of Stanton, 42 Mich. 506.

¶ 229. Any waiver of damages ought to appear of record in the proceedings of a village board in laying out a street across the land of private persons.—Turner v. Village of Stanton, 42 Mich. 506.

§ 65. Public uses and necessity or propriety of street.

Necessity for establishment of alley, see also ante ¶ 15.
Effect of contract not to open street, see post § 66.

¶ 230. Property cannot be taken for public street use unless there is a necessity, and this must be a real necessity.—City of Detroit v. Daly, 68 Mich. 503.

¶ 231. In estimating the necessity it makes no difference to the public who owns the land. The necessity must be as great where the land is owned separately as where it is part of a larger property.—City of Detroit v. Daly, 68 Mich. 503.

¶ 232. There is no public necessity for the taking of land for the extension of a street where the new portion of the street, as extended, will end at a recreation park, thus forming a mere cul de sac, which is a private way.—In re Opening of Willis Avenue, How. N. P. 265.

§ 66. ——Effect of contract not to open street.

¶ 233. Proceedings for a street opening are not precluded by a prior agreement of a municipality not to extend the street.—In re First St., City of Grand Rapids v. Grand Rapids & I. R. Co., 66 Mich. 42.

¶ 234. Estoppel of city from opening a street across railroad track by its action in leading the railroad company to lay out money and fix its location on the faith of agreement that the street in question would not be opened, quære.—Grand Rapids v. Grand Rapids & I. R. Co., 58 Mich. 641.

§ 67. Property or quantum of estate necessary or subject to appropriation.

Nature of the estate taken and rights of the public and abutters, see post X.

¶ 235. It can never be necessary to take a fee-simple absolute for either alleys or streets.—Paul v. City of Detroit, 32 Mich. 108.

¶ 236. The charter of Detroit does not sanction the taking of the absolute fee of lands for alleys, or make highways of them, when established.—Paul v. City of Detroit, 32 Mich. 108.

¶ 237. The parcels of land sought to be taken for a street need not be contiguous.—City of Detroit v. Robinson, 93 Mich. 426.

¶ 238. In proceedings to open a street, it is not necessary to condemn a public alley crossed thereby, since the condemnation of the land abutting on the alley leaves no one who is in position to complain of its use for a public street.—Scotten v. City of Detroit, 106 Mich. 564.

§ 68. Resolution or other preliminaries by municipal council.

Previous effort to purchase or obtain consents, see post § 69.

Maps and surveys, see post § 70.

Resolution by city council, see Comp. L. 1915, § 3188.

Resolution for street opening by village council, see Comp. L. 1915, § 2786.

¶ 239. A resolution in a street-opening case was fatally defective where it did not contain the separate descriptions of the land proposed to be taken, and the names of the several owners.—City of Owosso v. Richfield, 80 Mich. 328.

¶ 240. The authorities of a village become moving parties in the character of plaintiffs or petitioners when they decide to commence proceedings to open a street.—People ex rel. Bingham v. Brighton, 20 Mich. 57.

§ 69. Previous effort to purchase or obtain consents.

In proceedings for widening streets, see post § 123.

Necessity and sufficiency of previous effort to purchase or obtain consent, see also Eminent Domain § 59, ¶ 186.

Necessity of making landowner with whom previous settlement has been made party respondent in street opening proceedings, see post ¶ 247.

Right of city to secure property for street purposes by negotiation and purchase, see Comp. L. 1915, § 3164.

Right of village to acquire property for street opening by purchase or negotiation, see Comp. L. 1915, § 2819.

¶ 241. The charter of Saginaw provides that when it becomes necessary to take private property for a street the council shall first treat with the owner before taking steps to condemn it. Held, that this requirement is jurisdictional; and that merely receiving a proposal from the owner and tabling it is insufficient; acceptance or a counter-proposal is necessary.—Laue v. City of Saginaw, 53 Mich. 442.

¶ 242. In proceedings for opening a street it need not be alleged in the petition nor need it be shown that an attempt to obtain the land by dedication or sale for the proposed improvement was made and failed before condemnation proceedings were instituted.—City of Detroit v. Beecher, 75 Mich. 454.

§ 70. Maps and surveys.

Map and survey for proposed street as preliminary, see ante § 70.

¶ 243. The map accompanying the petition in a street opening case showed the location of the proposed improvement, and of each parcel of land to be taken, but failed to show the boundary line between a parcel of land only a part of which was to be taken and the land adjoining the remainder of said parcel. The parcel was admitted by the city attorney to be of a certain depth, and all of the testimony was based upon this assumption. Held, that the jury, permitted to take the map to the jury room, could not have been misled by the omission to define thereon said boundary line.—City of Detroit v. Bruder, 104 Mich. 221.

§ 71. Proper and necessary parties.

Necessity that names of owners be stated in resolution, see ante ¶ 239.

Village authorities as parties complainant, see also ante ¶ 240.

¶ 244. The village corporation is party, in the nature of plaintiff or petitioner, to proceedings for the opening of streets, etc., under the general act for the incorporation of villages.—People ex rel. Bingham v. Brighton, 20 Mich. 57.

¶ 245. Proceedings to open a street across the land of a railroad company were held invalid where the company was not named in the proceedings and did not appear, even though damages were awarded to it for the land taken.—Detroit, M. & T. R. Co. v. City of Detroit, 49 Mich. 47.

¶ 246. The mortgagees of the franchises and easements of a railway company need not be made parties to a proceeding to condemn a right of way across its track for a street, if the track is not disturbed and the company is left in control of the road.—Grand Rapids v. Grand Rapids & I R. Co., 58 Mich. 641.

¶ 247. An owner with whom a settlement has been made by the city for his land need not be joined in condemnation proceedings with the owners of other lands for the same street opening improvement.—City of Detroit v. Robinson, 93 Mich. 426.

§ 72. Petition for condemnation.

Petition for highway proceedings by township commissioner, see ante § 29.

Summons or notice of proceedings, see post §§ 73-76.

Necessity for jury, see post § 77.

Character of jury and qualifications of jurors, see post § 78.

Venire and return thereto, see post § 79.

Functions of jury and questions triable, see post § 80.

Oath of jurors, see post § 81.

Procedure on hearing, trial and judgment, see post §§ 82-88.

Abandonment or discontinuance of proceedings, see post § 89.

Appeal and review, see post §§ 91-95.

Injunction and other actions, see post § 96.

Petition in condemnation proceedings in general, see Eminent Domain §§ 60-69.

Petition for condemnation filed by city, see Comp. L. 1915, § 3139.

Petition by village for street opening, see Comp. L. 1915, § 2787.

¶ 248. A petition stating that the object of a proposed public improvement is the opening and extending of a designated street between two streets where not already opened to a certain width, and that, in making and maintaining the proposed improvement, a perpetual right of way over the different pieces or parcels of private property described in the petition will be necessary, and that such right of way is proposed to be used for the purposes of a public street and highway, states fully enough, in "a general way," the nature and extent of the use of the land that will be required in making and maintaining the proposed improvement.—City of Detroit v. Beecher, 75 Mich. 454.

¶ 249. Under Laws of 1887, Act. No. 48 (How St. § 3064c), relating to proceedings for local improvements, and requiring that the petition shall be signed by the city attorney in his official capacity, a petition for a street opening signed "the city of Detroit, by W. S. S., City Attorney," is sufficient.—City of Detroit v. Beecher, 75 Mich. 454.

¶ 250. The requirement that petitions for the condemnation of land for street purposes shall separately describe the land owned by each respondent, and state his interest therein, is to enable the jury to determine the damages suffered by each; and an objection that certain of the parcels affected are not so described is unavailable, where the owners of such parcels have given their assent to the proceedings, and have agreed to convey their interests.—Pontiac v. Lull, 111 Mich. 509.

¶ 251. Under Laws of 1887, Act No. 48, § 3 (How. St. § 3064c) relating to local assessments and requiring the petition to be "verified by the city attorney or by sone person having knowledge of the facts," the city attorney's affidavit that the petition for a street opening "is true to the best of his knowledge and belief" is sufficient.—City of Detroit v. Beecher, 75 Mich. 454.

¶ 252. A petition in condemnation proceedings for a street opening will not be held invalid for failure to set up that certain persons have a right of passage over the premises sought to be condemned, where such right would be in no way impaired by the appropriation of the land for the purpose contemplated.—City of Pontiac v. Lull, 111 Mich. 509.

§ 73. Summons or notice of proceedings.

Notice of hearing in highway proceedings by township highway commissioner, see ante § 30.

Service of notice or process, see post § 74.

Service by publication, see post § 75.

Return and proof of service, see post § 76.

Issuance and service of summons on hearing for street opening by city, see Comp. L. 1915, §§ 3140, 3141.

Issuance and service of summons in street opening proceedings by village, see Comp. L. 1915, § 2789.

¶ 253. The notice to be given by the city attorney in street-opening cases is in the nature of process, and must comply with the statute in every essential particular or the proceeding will be inoperative.—Specht v. City of Detroit, 20 Mich. 168.

¶ 254. In proceedings to take lands for an alley, notice to the persons liable to pay for the alley is just as essential as is notice to those whose lands are taken.—Paul v. City of Detroit, 32 Mich. 108.

¶ 255. Where an alley is to be opened under the amendment to the Detroit charter in 1869, the notice will be defective if it fails to state that the jury to be summoned will apportion and assess the compensation to be paid for property taken to and upon all lots, premises or subdivisions thereof, within the block in which the alley is situated, and which will be benefited, etc.—Specht v. City of Detroit, 20 Mich. 168.

¶ 256. The summons in proceedings for opening a street will meet the requirement that it shall state briefly the object of the petition if it clearly states that the object is to open the street, naming it, and describes the beginning and terminus of the improvement and the width thereof.—City of Detroit v. Beecher, 75 Mich. 454.

¶ 257. A city charter required notice in street-opening cases to be served "as soon as practicable," and return to be made at least six days before the time appointed for hearing. The resolution was adopted August 8, the hearing was fixed for September 18, and the notice was served on the last of the parties September 9. The return appearing to be made within the time required, and nothing appearing to show that an earlier notice was practicable, it was held that no question of law could arise in respect to it.—Campau v. City of Detroit, 14 Mich. 276.

¶ 258. The charter of Grand Rapids provides that, in proceedings to open streets, the setting aside of the report of a jury by order of the court shall not make it necessary to begin back anew, and allows a new jury to be called on application, without any new notice either of such application or of the original resolution of the common council; held, therefore, that the consequences of any legal error committed before the appointment of the first jury attaches to and vitiates all subsequent steps in the proceeding.—Powers' Appeal, 29 Mich. 504.

¶ 259. The personal notice in street opening proceedings required to be served by the marshal is distinct from the advertised notice required to be given by the common council and not by the marshal.—Powers' Appeal, 29 Mich. 504.

¶ 260. In proceedings to take lands for alleys, the notice prescribed by the old charter of Detroit, which recites that the council have determined to make the improvement, and to take therefor such property as may be necessary, of which notice the court is required to deliver a copy to the jury in connection with its instructions, is objectionable as leading the jury to infer that they need only inquire whether the land described is necessary for the alley, and not whether the alley is necessary.—Paul v. City of Detroit, 32 Mich. 108.

§ 74. ——Service of notice or process.

Return and proof of service, see post § 76.

¶ 261. Where a statute providing for the taking of land by a city for public use specifies what notice shall be given, and does not include personal service, it excludes that method, and the statute is void.—Kundinger v. City of Saginaw, 59 Mich. 355.

¶ 262. Service of notice of proceedings for a street opening is necessary to give jurisdiction to the court.—Powers' Appeal, 29 Mich. 504.

¶ 263. Title 4 of the city charter of Saginaw (Local L. 1883, Act No. 227) is fatally defective in not providing for personal service of notice upon resident owners of property sought to be taken for public use, where such service can be had within the city.—Kundinger v. City of Saginaw, 59 Mich. 355.

¶ 264. There is much reason for claiming that the former charter of Detroit requires notice by publication to be given in all cases of proposed street opening. But where it appears that there was a defect in the publication of such notice, and it does not appear that all the landowners were personally served, the proceedings are held invalid, though the party making the objection was himself personally served.—Brush v. City of Detroit, 32 Mich. 43.

¶ 265. The return of the marshal in street opening proceedings being required to be made at least six days before the day appointed for the hearing, no notice which is required to be included in such return will be valid if made later than six clear days before the day of hearing.—Powers' Appeal, 29 Mich. 504.

§ 75. ——Service by publication.

See also ante ¶ 264.

¶ 266. Notice to a nonresident by publication in proceeding for the condemnation of land, sufficient.—Tuller v. City of Detroit, 97 Mich. 597.

¶ 267. Proceedings to open a street held erroneous by reason of defective and unreasonably published notices.—Osborne v. City of Detroit, 32 Mich. 282.

¶ 268. The provision of the charter of Muskegon that the first publication of a notice of an application for the impanelling of a jury in condemnation proceedings for street opening shall be made at least thirty days before the day of hearing requires that thirty full days shall intervene between such publication and the day of hearing.—Rifenburg v. City of Muskegon, 83 Mich. 279.

¶ 269. The choice of the daily papers in which the resolution in street opening proceedings is to be published must be made by those who are appointed to give that notice, viz., the common council. A common council can act only by written resolutions.—Powers' Appeal, 29 Mich. 504.

§ 76. ——Return and proof of service.

Affidavit and proof of service of summons in street opening by city, see Comp. L. 1915, § 3141.

Affidavit and proof of service of summons in street opening by village, see Comp. L. 1915, § 2789.

¶ 270. A city charter which requires the marshal to make his return of the service of notice in a street-opening case at least six days before the day appointed for the hearing means six full days.—City of Owosso v. Richfield, 80 Mich. 328.

¶ 271. Under the course of procedure marked out by the charter of Grand Rapids for opening streets, the recorder's court gets no jurisdiction to act in the absence of legal proof of legal notice to the parties entitled to be heard.—Powers' Appeal, 29 Mich. 504.

¶ 272. Where the charter requires that notice to a nonresident in proceedings for opening and maintaining a street, may be given by "posting the same, with a copy of said resolution, in some conspicuous place upon the property intended to be taken," a return that service was made on a nonresident "by posting notice on premises" is not sufficient.—City of Owosso v. Richfield, 80 Mich. 328.

§ 77. Necessity for jury.

Constitutional prerequisites and necessity for jury in condemnation proceedings, see Eminent Domain § 76.

Necessity for jury in street opening, see Comp. L. 1915, §§ 2790, 3142.

¶ 273. In proceedings to take land for an alley, both the persons liable to pay for the alley and those whose lands are taken have a right to be heard before a jury.—Paul v. City of Detroit, 32 Mich. 108.

¶ 274. The recorder of Kalamazoo, upon proper petition and showing, must call a jury to assess damages in proceedings to condemn land for a street.—Goodell v. Kalamazoo City Council, 63 Mich. 416.

§ 78. Character of jury and qualifications of jurors.

Venire and return thereto, see post § 79.

Character of jury and jury trial in condemnation proceedings, see Eminent Domain § 78.

Character of jury and qualifications of jurors in street opening, see Comp. L. 1915, §§ 2790, 3142.

¶ 275. Where a municipal charter provides, in a case of proceedings to open streets, that the excess, if any, of damages over the benefits shall be laid on the whole city as a tax, and requires the jury drawn to assess the damages to be freeholders resident within the city, the jury cannot be declared legally disinterested, as each freeholder has a direct interest in having the assessment so laid as not to fall on the city at large, and thereby charge their own lands and the lands of relations.—Powers' Appeal, 29 Mich. 504.

¶ 276. A statute providing for the taking of property by a city for public use is not unconstitutional because it does not require the jury of condemnation to be composed of parties not interested, but simply requires a juror to swear that he is not interested in the property taken. If a juror is specially interested in having a street opened he is disqualified, and may be challenged for cause.—Kundinger v. City of Saginaw, 59 Mich. 355.

§ 79. Venire and return thereto.

Qualification of jurors, see ante § 78.

Drawing and impanelling jury in condemnation proceedings, see Eminent Domain § 81.

Manner of impanelling jury in street opening proceedings by city, see Comp. L. 1915, § 3142.

Manner of impanelling jury in street opening proceedings, see Comp. L. 1915, §§ 2790, 3142.

¶ 277. The act of the village clerk in issuing a venire in proceedings for the opening of streets, etc., under the general act for the incorporation of villages, is purely ministerial, and if he is also a justice of the peace he may make the venire returnable before himself as such justice.—People ex rel. Bingham v. Brighton, 20 Mich. 57.

¶ 278. The jury must be composed of disinterested nonresident freeholders, and the return to the venire must show the persons summoned to possess the qualifications. This is a jurisdictional requirement which cannot be supplied by a parol or overlooked.—People ex rel. Bingham v. Brighton, 20 Mich. 57.

¶ 279. Where a city charter authorizes a justice of the peace to issue a venire to summon a jury to pass on the necessity of condemning lands for a street, and to assess their value in case the price of the right of way cannot be agreed upon between the common council and the owners, the fact of the disagreement is not one of which the justice may take judicial cognizance simply, but it must be proved to him and be matter of record in his office, and the record of the proceedings is fatally defective if it does not show evidence of an attempt to agree on the price.—Morseman v. City of Ionia, 32 Mich. 283.

§ 80. Functions of jury and questions triable.

In proceedings for widening street, see post § 123.

Power of same jury to act in condemnation of separate parcels of land owned by different persons, see also ante ¶ 225.

Functions of jury in street opening proceedings, see Comp. L. 1915, §§ 2791, 3143.

¶ 280. Act 124 of 1883 (How. St. §§ 3064a-3064y), providing for the taking of private property by municipal corporations for public use, is not open to the objection that it does not require the necessity of the proposed improvement to be determined by the jury.—City of Detroit v. Beecher, 75 Mich. 454.

¶ 281. Laws of 1883, Act No. 124, providing for the taking of private property for public use by cities, etc., which limits the power of the jury to determining the necessity and the damages, and confers upon the common council the power to assess damages according to benefits; is not invalid as letting the jury pass on damages and necessity without knowing how much will be assessed.—Beecher v. City of Detroit, 92 Mich. 268.

¶ 282. In proceedings for taking private property for public improvements, the fact of the public necessity of the proposed improvement must be found, and not simply the fact that the particular land is necessary to carrying it out; under the constitution the determination of this necessity must be made by the jury; the action of a common council, in passing upon the policy of opening a street over private property which they cannot obtain without adverse proceedings, is not judicial action or final; they stand rather in the position of mere petitioners, and the decision rests with the jury and not with the city.—Powers' Appeal, 29 Mich. 504.

¶ 283. It is for the jury and not for the court to fix the amount of damages where land is taken for a public street.—City of Grand Rapids v. Luce, 92 Mich. 92.

¶ 284. The essential duty of a jury in a street-opening proceeding is to pass on the necessity for the work, and not merely the necessity of taking the land for it.—Grand Rapids v. Grand Rapids & I. R. Co., 58 Mich. 641.

¶ 285. In street-opening proceedings under Laws of 1877, Act No. 201, the jury should make a separate assessment against each parcel of land included in the assessment district designated by the council.—Rentz v. City of Detroit, 48 Mich. 544.

§ 81. Oath of jurors.

Oath of jurors in street opening proceedings, see Comp. L. 1915, §§ 2791, 3143.

¶ 286. The oath administered to the jury in a street-opening case is the measure and limit of their legal action, and must plainly require them to determine the necessity of taking the land sought to be acquired for public use; and an oath which simply requires the jury "to ascertain the necessity for using the property intended to be taken, if it be intended to take any, for such improvement," is not sufficient.—City of Owosso v. Richfield, 80 Mich. 328.

¶ 287. The oath required by Laws 1883, Act No. 124, having been taken by the jury which was properly instructed by the court as to its duties, was held in street-opening case to include a determination by the jury of the necessity of making the proposed improvement.—In re First St., City of Grand Rapids v. Grand Rapids & I. R. Co., 66 Mich. 42.

§ 82. Procedure on hearing.

Argument and assistance of counsel, see post § 83.

In general condemnation proceedings, see Eminent Domain, V.

¶ 288. In proceedings to condemn land for street purposes the court, to prevent abuse, may limit the number of witnesses produced at the hearing to prove a single point.—Dorland v. Grand Rapids Superior Judge, 78 Mich. 182.

§ 83. ——Argument and assistance of counsel.

¶ 289. Except where inquests of damages are provisional and not conclusive, advice of counsel to juries is not allowed; it amounts to embracery.—Paul v. City of Detroit, 32 Mich. 108.

¶ 290. In proceedings to take land for alleys the city is a mere party litigant, and its relations to the jury must be governed accordingly; the requirement in the charter of Detroit that the city attorney give the jury legal advice and counsel concerning their duty, whenever requested, and draw up their verdict in the form of a report for their signature, when they have agreed, is in plain violation of the rule requiring juries to be absolutely free from the influence or counsel of any party on whose affairs they are to act.—Paul v. City of Detroit, 32 Mich. 108.

§ 84. Presumptions and evidence as to necessity and compensation.

In proceedings for widening street, see post § 123.

Power of court to limit number of witnesses to prove single point, see also ante ¶ 288.

Evidence as to damages in condemnation proceedings in general, see Eminent Domain § 95 et seq.
General law of evidence, see Evidence.
Opinion evidence as to necessity and existence of public use for street, see Evidence § 219.
Applicability of presumption of regularity and legality of official action to street-opening proceedings, see Evidence § 38.

¶ 291. In proceedings to condemn lands for a city street there is no evidence showing necessity, where it merely appears that the proposed street would be a convenience to some lots north of the property sought to be taken, and that there are some lots on the south that would be benefited somewhat. —City of Detroit v. Daly, 68 Mich. 503.

¶ 292. A finding that a necessity for opening a street exists is sustained by evidence that there is a considerable population which would thereby secure a more direct route into the city; that the fire department would secure better facilities for protection against fire; that a better communication with the school would be afforded children living in the vicinity; and that the opening would bring people living beyond, five blocks nearer the center of the city.—City of Detroit v. John Brennan & Co., 93 Mich. 338.

¶ 293. The admission in evidence, in proceedings to condemn land for a street, of the opinions of certain witnesses as to the necessity of taking such land for public use, is not a substantial error, where the jurors are from the vicinage, the testimony is full, showing the relation of the proposed improvement to public travel and other streets, and the witnesses give the facts on which their opinions are based.—City of Pontiac v. Lull, 111 Mich. 509.

¶ 294. Whatever the jury may learn of the lands sought to be condemned in a street-opening case under Laws 1883, Act No. 124, by a view of the premises may be used by them in determining the weight of conflicting testimony; but upon this view alone they cannot entirely disregard all other evidence, and fix and determine the compensation according to their own whims and caprices. —City of Grand Rapids v. Perkins, 78 Mich. 93.

§ 85. Instructions and special questions.

¶ 295. A charge, in a proceeding to open a street, that if the benefit to the public of the city exceed the cost and expense of making the improvement the jury is justified in finding that there was a public necessity for making such improvement cannot be complained of when taken in connection with other instructions in regard to the necessity and the limits of damage.—City of Detroit v. John Brennan & Co., 93 Mich. 338.

¶ 296. It is not error to refuse to submit special questions to the jury in condemnation proceedings to open a street; How. St. § 7606, is not applicable.—City of Grand Rapids v. Luce, 92 Mich. 92.

§ 86. Award, finding or judgment.

Specification of benefits, see post § 87.
Conclusiveness and collateral attack, see post § 88.
Verdict and award in street opening proceedings, see Comp. L. 1915, §§ 2792, 2793, 3144, 3145.
Confirmation by court of award and determination of jury, see Comp. L. 1915, §§ 2795, 3147.

¶ 297. In street-opening cases under the former charter of Detroit there must be a written finding or report by the recorder, setting forth all questions arising and action had before him which will not otherwise appear on the record. And no ruling can be reviewed in the supreme court which does not appear in that or some other part of the return.—Duffield v. City of Detroit, 15 Mich. 474.

¶ 298. In order to find that a street is a public necessity it need not be found that the cost of opening added to the cost of grading would not exceed the value of the benefit to the public.—City of Grand Rapids v. Luce, 92 Mich. 92.

¶ 299. Whether, under Laws 1887, Act No. 48, §§ 2, 3 (How. St. §§ 3064a-3064y), relating to local assessments, the jury, in order to find necessity for street opening, must determine that the benefit to the public will be equal to the cost of the improvement, quære; the court being equally divided.—City of Detroit v. Beecher, 75 Mich. 454.

¶ 300. In a street-opening case the jury are not precluded from estimating and determining the whole cost of the improvement before they find the necessity for it, and the compensation of the individual owners is to be apportioned afterwards, as a natural sequence.—City of Detroit v. Beecher, 75 Mich. 454.

§ 87. ——Specification of benefits.

¶ 301. So much of the charter of Detroit as permits a jury, in proceedings to take land for a public way, to find generally the difference between the value of the land taken and the enhanced value of the owner's land not taken, and to charge the result upon the assessment district, instead of finding the damages and the benefits separately, violates the constitutional requirements of just compensation and of uniform apportionment of assessments, and is void.—City of Detroit v. Daly, 68 Mich. 503; City of Detroit v. Beecher, 69 Mich. 15; City of Detroit v. Sauer, 69 Mich. 164; City of Detroit v. Chaffee, 68 Mich. 635.

¶ 302. In proceedings under the former charter of Detroit to open a street against the will of the landowner there must be a separate finding by the jury of the amount of damages and of the benefits, and the jury must concur in both items.—Duffield v. City of Detroit, 15 Mich. 474.

¶ 303. Where, under Local Acts 1885, No. 354, land is sought to be taken for a street, the jury's finding does not show what the land taken was worth, or how much was deducted for benefits, but simply states that respondent is entitled to compensation to the amount of one dollar, after including benefits, judgment must be set aside.—City of Detroit v. More, 76 Mich. 515.

§ 88. ——Conclusiveness and collateral attack.

General law of collateral attack on judgments, see Judgments, VII.

¶ 304. The award of the jury in a street opening proceeding will not be disturbed where the jury saw the property and heard conflicting testimony as to the damages, though the values ascribed to several parcels leaves a question whether the award, as far as applicable to the damages caused by taking one of two contiguous parcels, was not reached by an improper mode of computation; where on another view it was sustainable as damages to other parcels.—City of Detroit v. Bruder, 104 Mich. 221.

¶ 305. Where, pursuant to Saginaw's City Charter, title 15, § 3, as amended by Local Acts of 1893, No. 402, the necessity for a proposed public improvement (a street opening) and for taking private property therefor, and the compensation to be paid for the land taken, have been determined by proceedings in the recorder's court, the judgment so obtained cannot be attacked collaterally by one whose land was assessed to defray the cost of the improvement, but who was not a necessary party to the proceeding.—Brown v. City of Saginaw, 107 Mich. 643.

¶ 306. The general statute authorizing the taking of private property for public use in cities and villages (How. St., ch. 83) provides that the petition to the court thereunder shall recite the adoption by the common council of the prescribed resolution of necessity; that notice shall be given to the owners of land sought to be taken; that, no sufficient cause to the contrary being shown, the court may impanel a jury to determine the questions of necessity and compensation; and that the judgment of the court confirming the verdict of the jury shall be final and conclusive as to all persons interested therein. Held, that in street opening proceedings the statute contemplates a judicial determination of the questions raised by the averments of the petition; hence a judgment of confirmation necessarily includes a determination by the court that the proceedings were properly instituted; and such judgment is not open to collateral attack.—Scotten v. City of Detroit, 106 Mich. 564.

¶ 307. The purpose of the trial provided for by How. St. §§ 3064g-3064k, is to determine the questions of the public necessity for the improvement (a street opening) and for taking the property sought to be condemned, and the amount of compensation to be awarded therefor. In that proceeding there are two safeguards for the protection of the taxpayer, namely, his representation by the public authorities, and the provision that the judgment is to be entered, upon the verdict of the jury, by the court; and it is not contemplated that these questions shall be open to review in a tax proceeding.—Borgman v. City of Detroit, 102 Mich. 261.

§ 89. Abandonment or discontinuance of proceedings.

¶ 308. It seems that it is for the city council to determine whether any effort has been made to obtain the land required for street opening by amicable agreement with the owner before filing the petition and that it is competent for the council to abandon the proceedings if a settlement is refused.—Goodell v. Kalamazoo City Council, 63 Mich. 416.

§ 90. Costs, witness fees and allowance for attorneys.

Costs allowed under Detroit boulevard act, see Eminent Domain ¶ 393.

Costs on certiorari to quash proceedings, see Costs ¶ 571.

Construction costs and expenses generally, see post VIII.

¶ 309. Where an item taxed as costs in a proceeding to condemn land for street purposes has been excluded on appeal because counsel for respondents had not complied with Comp. Laws 1897, § 644, the trial court has no jurisdiction to entertain a petition for a nunc pro tunc order which will authorize such item to be taxed as costs.—City of Grand Rapids v. Coit, 151 Mich. 109.

¶ 310. Under How. St. § 3064q, which provides that witnesses in a street-opening case shall be entitled to receive from the city the same fees as are provided by law for similar services in an ordinary action at law in the circuit courts, the fees of a respondent's witnesses attending in good faith should be taxed on the filing of the affidavit required for the taxation of witnesses' fees in circuit courts.—Dorland v. Grand Rapids Superior Judge, 78 Mich. 182.

¶ 311. How. St. § 3064s, making it lawful for the judge in a street-opening case to order the payment by the city to any respondent of such a reasonable attorney fee as he may deem just, not exceeding $25, is not mandatory, but the matter of attorney fees is discretionary with the judge.—Dorland v. Grand Rapids Superior Judge, 78 Mich. 182.

§ 91. Appeal or review.

Ordinary highway appeals or review, see ante II, B, 4.

In proceedings to widen streets, see post § 124.

Procedure on appeal, see post § 92.

Scope of appeal, presumptions and matters reviewable, see post § 93.

Certiorari to review proceedings, see post §§ 94, 95.

Right of appeal to circuit court in street opening proceedings, see Comp. L. 1915, §§ 2798, 3150.

Appeal from circuit court to supreme court in street opening proceedings by village, see Comp. L. 1915, §§ 2811, 2812.

¶ 312. A statute providing for the taking of property by a city for public use is not invalid because it gives no right of appeal. —Kundinger v. City of Saginaw, 59 Mich. 355.

¶ 313. The provision of Saginaw Charter, title 15, § 16, that any person whose property is taken "or assessed" may appeal from such judgment, cannot be construed as giving the right of appeal to one whose land is assessed but not taken for the improvement, thereby implying that he is a necessary party to the proceeding, it being apparent that the words "or assessed" were retained in such section by mere inadvertence upon the amendment of the original charter (Local Acts of 1889, No. 455), which provided that the common council should fix the assessment district when it passed the resolution declaring the necessity for the improvement, that the proceedings should be instituted against those whose lands were to be assessed, as well as against the owners of property proposed to be taken, and that the assessment of benefits should be made by the jury awarding the damages, all of which provisions were changed by the amendment of 1893.—Brown v. City of Saginaw, 107 Mich. 643.

¶ 314. The appeal will not lapse in a street opening case, even if the right to settle a case is lost, the appellants having a right to go to a hearing upon the pleadings, files and records in the cause.—Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Chambers, 89 Mich. 5.

§ 92. Procedure for appeal.

Procedure on appeal in street opening proceedings, see Comp. L. 1915, §§ 2799-2810, 3151-3157.

¶ 315. A city's appeal in proceedings under How. St. §§ 3064a-3064y, from a verdict that there is no public necessity for opening a street, will be dismissed if notice of appeal is not served on all the respondents as required by section 21 of that act. —City of Grand Rapids v. Chicago & W. M. R. Co., 95 Mich. 473.

¶ 316. A verdict in a street-opening case was rendered January 12 and confirmed January 23, and the respondents filed a claim for appeal and an approved bond within the statutory time. Upon filing such claim they requested the official stenographer of the court, who took the testimony, to furnish them with a transcript of his minutes, which was not done until April 15, 1891, leaving only eight days within which to prepare and present a case for settlement. Held, that under the settled practice according to that of chancery it was the duty of the presiding judge to settle a case, and to that end to grant an extension of time for such settlement.—Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Chambers, 89 Mich. 5.

§ 93. Scope of appeal, presumptions and matters reviewable.

¶ 317. The objection that, before proceedings to open a street were taken, no attempt was made to obtain the consent of property owners cannot be raised on review in the supreme court if not made at an earlier stage.—Grand Rapids v. Grand Rapids & I. R. Co., 58 Mich. 641.

¶ 318. Upon an appeal in proceedings to open a street under Laws 1883, Act No. 124, an appellant may avail himself of an objection to the charge of the court, and of an exception taken thereunder by another respondent.—City of Grand Rapids v. Perkins, 78 Mich. 93.

¶ 319. The presumption is against the existence of any such bias on the part of a street-opening jury as will make its verdict unfair.—Grand Rapids v. Grand Rapids & I. R. Co., 58 Mich. 641.

¶ 320. In reviewing a judgment in proceedings to open a city street, where the inquiry goes to whether the jury awarded adequate damages to property holders, if there is nothing in the record to show bad faith or improper conduct on the part of the jury, and if the record does not warrant the claim of such property holders that the jury disregarded the rule which entitled them to actual compensation of the jury's finding should not be disturbed.—City of Detroit v. Kreamann, 79 Mich. 584.

§ 94. Certiorari to review proceedings.

In proceedings to widen street, see post § 124.

Time for writ, laches, waiver and delay, see post § 95.

General law of certiorari, see Certiorari.

¶ 321. The proceedings for the opening of streets, etc., under the general act for the incorporation of villages are so far judicial in their nature as to be subject to review in the supreme court on certiorari.—People ex rel. Bingham v. Brighton, 20 Mich. 57.

¶ 322. The provision of a statute giving a party claiming damages in a village street opening case an appeal to the circuit court, held not to preclude the supreme court from exercising its supervisory power by certiorari to review questions other than those of damages solely.—People ex rel. Bingham v. Brighton, 20 Mich. 57.

¶ 323. In an alley-opening case, in Detroit, where plaintiff in certiorari did not appear in any stage of the proceeding, and where the statutory requirements in regard to notice were not complied with, the writ was allowed to prevent "a failure of justice," notwithstanding an appeal was given by statute, the time for taking which had passed.—Specht v. City of Detroit, 20 Mich. 168.

¶ 324. Where an owner of land objects to its condemnation for a street, and the municipal authorities offer to release the land if he will relinquish the damages awarded therefor, he has no right to a writ of certiorari to review the proceeding.—Goodell v. Kalamazoo City Council, 63 Mich. 416.

¶ 325. On certiorari to review proceedings to open a street the plaintiff cannot rely on grievances to others or oppose a street that does not take his own land; the only legal redress he can get is the prevention of the unauthorized use of his land.—Goodell v. Kalamazoo City Council, 63 Mich. 416.

§ 95. ——Time for writ, laches, waiver and delay.

¶ 326. Where the judgment confirming the award in a proceeding under the general law to open a street has not been appealed from within five days, as provided in How. St. § 3064l, certiorari to review such proceedings will not be allowed after a lapse of six months in behalf of some of the respondents therein, especially where there are a large number of corespondents who must be presumed to have acquiesced in the verdict, and who might be prejudiced if the judgment were disturbed.—City of Detroit v. Murphy, 95 Mich. 531.

¶ 327. Where there are a large number of corespondents interested in a street opening proceeding, who have presumably acquiesced in the verdict and complied therewith, and might be prejudiced by disturbing the judgment, the rule is especially applicable that at common law the writ is not one of right, and should not be granted after any considerable delay, unless the court is satisfied that such delay is not due to the petitioner's negligence.—City of Detroit v. Murphy, 95 Mich. 531.

¶ 328. One who attacks a street-opening assessment for his failure to obtain merely trivial or nominal damages must proceed with special alacrity to entitle himself to the intervention of a court.—Rentz v. City of Detroit, 48 Mich. 544.

¶ 329. Proceedings to open a street were taken under Laws of 1877, Act No. 201, and were confirmed, although the damages had not been properly apportioned among the parties affected. The statute allows five days for taking an appeal, but none was taken. More than six months after the confirmation of the proceedings, and after most of the assessments had been collected, they were brought up on certiorari for review, but after the writ was issued the complaining parties paid the damages assessed against them. Held, that they thereby waived the error, and the writ was dismissed.—Rentz v. City of Detroit, 48 Mich. 544.

§ 96. Injunctions and other actions and suits.

General law of injunctions, see Injunctions.

Estoppel to have injunction for nonpayment of damages for raising grades for railroad in street, see Estoppel ¶ 155.

¶ 330. One whose property abuts upon a proposed alley cannot enjoin the city from opening such alley, upon the ground of special injury, where his property is located in a congested portion of the city, and the evidence indicates that the proximity of the alley, insuring as it would space and light on one side of his house, will enhance its market value rather than impair it.—Schmolt v. Nagel, 151 Mich. 502.

6. State highways and local systems.

§ 97. In general.

Uniform system of construction under state reward plan, see post ¶ 366.

Refunds or rewards to townships for sums spent on state reward roads, see post § 153.

Adoption of county, township or general system of highway control and administration, see post § 141.

Control and administration, powers and relative duties of officers, see post § 142.

Necessity of record of proceedings to lay out state roads, see also post ¶ 474.

Provisions for state reward trunk line highways, see Comp. L. 1915, §§ 4851-4859.

Routes and branches of state trunk line highways, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4852.

Constitutional provision for adoption of district road system by electors of proposed district, see Const. art. VIII, § 26.

Procedure for adoption of county road system, see Comp. L. 1915, §§ 4347-4351.

Effect of county road system on township plan, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4377.

¶ 331. The words "trunk line" used in Act No. 334 of Pub. Acts 1913, in referring to trunk line highways, are used in the same sense as applied to "trunk line" railroads connecting termini which are some distance apart.—Luce v. State Highway Commissioner, 181 Mich. 599.

¶ 332. The provisions of section 2, Act No. 334, Pub. Acts 1913, that on petition to the state highway commissioner of two or more contiguous counties through their boards of county road commissioners, or on his own initiative, shall as he may deem necessary, cause preliminary surveys to be made through such counties of one or more routes for state trunk line highways which he shall submit to the designated boards and officers of such counties for their concurrence in selecting the route for such highway, does not confer on the state highway commissioner power to establish trunk line highways other than those expressly enumerated in such act, since section 2 merely permits local bodies to select the route of trunk line highways when there are two or more feasible routes within their county between the termini mentioned in the act.—Luce v. State Highway Com'r, 181 Mich. 599.

¶ 333. Sole and arbitrary power to select the route of and to establish trunk line highways other than those enumerated in the act, is not conferred by § 9 of Act No. 334, Pub. Acts 1913, on the State Highway Commissioner, such section being limited by section 2 of the act.—Luce v. State Highway Com'r, 181 Mich. 599.

III. ROUTE, BOUNDARIES AND TERMINI; SURVEYS AND RECORDS.

§ 98. Route and boundaries.

Width, see post §§ 99, 100.
Termini and connection with other ways, see post § 101.
Surveying and recording, see post § 102.
Presumptions, evidence, instructions and jury questions, see post §§ 103, 104.
Requisites of description of route in application or petition, see ante ¶ 93.
Sufficiency of description of route in notice of proceedings to lay out highway, see ante ¶ 99.
Sufficiency of description of route in commissioner's order determining necessity and laying out highway, see ante ¶ 125.
Power to select route of trunk line highways, see ante § 97, ¶¶ 332, 333.
Powers of highway officers respecting boundaries, see also post ¶ 500.
User of varying or shifting way as determinative of establishment of highway, see ante § 13.
Center or side line as boundary of lot, see Boundaries §§ 19-21.
Call for highway as boundary of private tract, see Boundaries §§ 13, 19.
Sufficiency of statutory plat to describe and define boundaries and plan of streets, see Dedication § 22.

¶ 334. Where a lot owner, in order to keep people in a public alley from molesting his premises, builds a fence back from the platted boundary line of the valley, and upon his own lot, without having any intention of establishing the fence as the boundary, the city acquires no rights in the owner's lot thereby, and is controlled by the platted boundary.—Weber v. City of Detroit, 159 Mich. 14.

¶ 335. Long practical acquiescence as between the public and a private owner, as to the true line of the latter's fences along the highway, will bind the public.—Gregory v. Knight, 50 Mich. 61.

¶ 336. The fact that a resurvey of a road through a certain section did not change its line, and the fact that at the time of a later conveyance the line was fixed conformably, indicate that there was no recognized change in the location of the roadway.—Hoffman v. City of Port Huron, 102 Mich. 417.

§ 99. Width.

Width of dedicated or prescriptive highway, see post § 100.
Estoppel to claim or deny full width, see post § 182.
Space over which regulative powers extend, see post § 154.
Encroachment on abutter by allowing footings of embankments to extend beyond road lines, see post ¶ 701.
Condemnation of land to widen way, see post § 123.
Vested rights in width or extent, see Constitutional Law § 247.
Power to locate and enfranchise street railway on margin of road within portion forbidden to be graded or cut, see Street Railways, I.
Statutory provisons as to width, see Comp. L. 1915, §§ 4288, 4304, 4307, 4407.
Width of highways laid out by county road commissioners, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4357.
When width of highway may be less than four rods, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4317.
Classes and width of roads for which state rewards will be given, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4387.
Provisions for restoration to full width on road's becoming reduced below fifty feet, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4395.

¶ 337. A street includes the whole width of the public way.—Brevoort v. City of Detroit, 24 Mich. 322.

¶ 338. As the statute (How. St. § 1296) providing that public highways shall not be less than four rods in width does not operate to restrict them to such width, proceedings to open a highway 100 feet wide may be sustained.—Brown v. Greenfield T'p Board, 109 Mich. 557.

¶ 339. It is presumed that a highway on a section line intersecting a creek and ravine was laid out across such ravine at the full statutory width prescribed by Comp. L. 1897, § 4036, to wit, four rods.—Schneider v. Township of Brown, 142 Mich. 45.

¶ 340. Comp. L. 1897, § 4061, providing that all highways shall be four rods in width and where situated on section lines such lines shall be the center of such roads and the roads shall be two rods in width on each side of the line, cannot be construed to transfer to the public land actually owned, possessed and occupied by an individual without giving him any opportunity of contesting the claims of the public or asserting his own rights. Such a construction would render it unconstitutional.—Watz v. Sunderland, 147 Mich. 96.

¶ 341. How. St. § 1365 providing that when any public highway "which passes along the bank" of any lake, river, "or other watercourse," and which is not included in the limits of a city or village, shall, by the washing away of the bank, or from any other cause, become reduced to a width of less than fifty feet, the highway commissioner shall lay out such highway upon adjacent land to that width, does not apply to a highway which has become reduced in width by the washing away of the bank of a ditch or other artificial watercourse laid in the highway.—DeLapp v. Beckwith, 114 Mich. 394.

¶ 342. An owner of unoccupied land platted the same, and on the plat indicated the limits in the width of a highway dedicated to the township and accepted by it. Held, the bounds of the street dedicated could not thereafter be widened by a mere user by the public.—Bedard v. Simons, 160 Mich. 545.

¶ 343. Abutting owners on a highway duly laid out and established are not estopped from claiming that it is a public highway for its full width by the fact that their grantor maintained a fence across part of it for a few months.—Van Brunt v. Lynch, 76 Mich. 455.

¶ 344. That portion of Shelby street, between Jefferson avenue and Woodbridge street, as projected on the plan of the City of Detroit, being, at the time of its adoption, claimed and occupied as private property, and so continuing to be claimed and occupied thereafter, and the corporate authorities having many years after the adoption of the plan, under their authority to lay out streets through private property, caused a street to be laid out along it, but of less width than the street as originally projected, paying the occupants of the land for the strip so taken, it was held that this was a waiver of any right of the authorities, if they had any under the plan, to that portion of the projected street outside of the lines of the street so opened.—People v. Jones, 6 Mich. 176.

¶ 345. The rights of the public in that part of a highway and bridge which crossed a creek and ravine will be held to have been limited to the actual public use, where the road located on the section line intersecting the creek, deviated as it approached the creek and for some years crossed the creek on a dam, but thereafter was carried across on a bridge built after the dam had ponded the ravine and in a manner not occupying the entire four rods which makes the normal width of a highway.—Schneider v. Township of Brown, 142 Mich. 45.

§ 100. ——Of dedicated or prescriptive highway.

Dedication as impliedly of full statutory width, see Dedication § 81.
Width of roads established by user or prescriptive right, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4307.
Width of purchased or dedicated highways, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4407.

¶ 346. A highway by user includes only so much land as is used for that purpose, and it cannot be extended by How. St. § 1315 upon adjacent lands against the owner's consent except under proper condemnation proceedings.—Coleman v. Flint & P. M. R. Co., 64 Mich. 160; Schelmer v. Price, 65 Mich. 638.

¶ 347. A highway by user need not necessarily be of statutory width, but it becomes such to width and extent used.—Wayne County Savings Bank v. Stockwell, 84 Mich. 586.

¶ 348. How. St. § 1315, in declaring that where highways by user are situated on survey lines such lines shall be the center of the way with two rods on each side thereof, cannot be construed to abrogate any such highway and shift its position; its effect is only to make two rods on each side the limit of the road, except where land-owners have such prescriptive rights against the public as to reduce such limits.—McKay v. Doty, 63 Mich. 581.

¶ 349. Where the public has used a portion of a strip of land reserved in the plat as a private way, it does not necessarily follow that the public right acquired is one for the full statutory width of a street.—City of Detroit v. Myers, 152 Mich. 666.

¶ 350. A dedication for a highway is presumably of the statutory width of four rods, and is not confined to the beaten or traveled way.—Bumpus v. Miller, 4 Mich. 159.

¶ 351. A dedicated highway is presumably of the full legal width, but where the owner's actions indicate a restriction to a narrower space it is as wide as the actual user.—Kruger v. Le Blanc, 70 Mich. 76; Coleman v. Flint & P. M. R. Co., 64 Mich. 160.

§ 101. Termini and connection with other ways.

Variation in course of extension from older portion of way, see post § 117.

¶ 352. There is no statute or rule of law that expressly determines that, before a public highway can be laid out, it must have certain and definite termini in other public highways.—Fields v. Colby, 102 Mich. 449.

¶ 353. A highway leading to a navigable stream does not necessarily continue over all wharves and erections that may be placed beyond the terminus at the shore in its natural state.—Horn v. People, 26 Mich. 221.

¶ 354. A cul de sac, in the interior of a city block, opening into other alleys which extend to public streets, but having itself no communication with streets except through those alleys, not being capable of forming a passage-way from one street to another, but furnishing access only to the rear of lots in the block, and never opened, worked or used as a highway, and not shown to have dwellings upon or adjoining it, to which it gives access, is not a way for the obstruction of which an indictment will lie. —People v. Jackson, 7 Mich. 432.

§ 102. Surveying and recording.

Record of proceedings to lay out highway, see ante § 39, ¶¶ 136-138, 140, 142, 147.
Necessity for recording where user continues ten years, see also ante ¶ 51.
Necessity of record of state roads, see also post ¶ 474.
Record of private roads, see post § 418.
Records of vacation proceedings, see post § 132.
Admissibility of survey to prove establishment of highway, see ante ¶ 71.
Record of plat as evidence to prove dedication, see ante § 21, ¶ 74.
Copy of field notes of survey as sufficient record of laying out of highway, see ante ¶ 126.
Actions against surveyors for malfeasance or misfeasance, see Officers, VI, A; Surveyors.
Provisions relating to survey when laying out way and marks and monuments of survey, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4303.
Necessity of filing certified record of street opening proceedings in office of attorney general, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 47.
Surveying state roads, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4566.
Marking and monumenting survey of state road, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4566.
Surveys and recording of streets in fourth-class cities, see Comp. L. 1915, § 3090.
Surveys of village streets under direction of councils, see Comp. L. 1915, § 2653.
Recording of proceedings of boards of supervisors, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4526.
Survey establishing location and grade of highway to be made by commissioner before beginning permanent improvements on highways, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 68, amending Comp. L. 1915, § 4332.
Petition and proceedings to locate and survey roads, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4523.
Provisions for restoring or supplying records of roads, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4308.
Payment for surveys, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4316.

¶ 355. The board's action in laying out or discontinuing state road must be recorded and must be signed by chairman and clerk (How. St. § 501).—Pearsall v. Eaton County Sup'rs, 71 Mich. 438.

§ 103. Presumptions and evidence.

Statutory presumption as to title to four rods, see also post ¶ 682a.
General law of evidence, see Evidence.
Parol evidence to locate written description of highway, see Evidence § 184.
Maps, plats and deeds as best evidence of road locations, see Evidence § 124.
Official survey as documentary evidence of road lines, see Evidence § 541.
Fencing in part during term of prescription as evidence of intent to dedicate limited width, see Dedication § 25, ¶¶ 104, 105.
Road record as evidence to locate boundary calling for road, see Boundaries § 29.

¶ 356. Where a highway through a village was originally laid out as a government road one hundred feet wide, and abutters had platted to that width, evidence to show an acceptance of a dedication to the width of one hundred and thirty feet must be unequivocal and satisfactory. Evidence that houses had been built back at varying distances from the original line, and that sidewalks had been ordered laid by the village authorities in front of the premises by the owners, would not establish an acceptance. —Irving v. Ford, 65 Mich. 241.

¶ 357. Evidence held to show that "River Road" in the City of Detroit is identical with the old road provided for by Act of Congress in 1824 and laid out thereunder, that it should be 66 feet in width and the lines as run by the city surveyor to be the same as for the old road, although surveys show that portions of it may have been laid in the river.—Hammond v. City of Detroit, 129 Mich. 295.

¶ 358. In retracing a road not officially located or traveled within definite limits testimony that the way varied over a strip ten to thirty rods wide is admissible only as a last resort.—Hoffman v. City Port Huron, 102 Mich. 417.

¶ 359. On a bill by the owner of land abutting on a highway to enjoin the highway commissioner from trespassing on complainant's land to incorrectly locate the highway and injuring complainant's property, evidence held sufficient to sustain a decree for complainant as to the location of the boundary line, where aside from plaintiff five witnesses who were pioneers in the locality testified to seeing line surveyed and located as alleged by plaintiff.—Groves v. Bowman, 201 Mich. 46.

¶ 360. The ex parte action of surveyors and highway commissioner is not entitled to credence and authority upon the true lines of a highway and the fact of encroachment.—Gregory v. Knight, 50 Mich. 61.

¶ 361. After the establishment of a highway has been shown by other evidence, an early territorial record of its survey may be produced in proof of the line where the road was.—Merrill v. Village of Kalamazoo, 35 Mich. 211.

¶ 362. A survey of a road commencing at a point on a township line and thence running south along the land in question and terminating at a "point" beyond it where there was no east and west road is presumed to have closed with an existing highway.—Hoffman v. City of Port Huron, 102 Mich. 417.

§ 104. Instructions and questions for jury.

¶ 363. The absence of evidence that the authorities had formally accepted a strip of land whereby a public highway is widened is not conclusive of the rights of one claiming such portion of such strip as fronted his lot; where the owners of lands adjacent to such highway have acquiesced for many years in such change in the highway lines and have located the lines of buildings with reference thereto; and the location of the boundary line of such lot as regards such strip is a question for the jury.—Rix v. Smith, 145 Mich. 203.

IV. CONSTRUCTION, IMPROVEMENT AND REPAIRS.

§ 105. In general; construction work and contracts.

Statutory procedure for location and establishment, see ante II, B.
Duty and necessity of construction and improvement, see post §§ 107-110.
Petition and proceedings for repairs or work, see post §§ 112, 113.
Sidewalk and crosswalk work, see post § 106.
Judicial review of proceedings, see post § 114.
Necessity of determining location of section line on which highway is to be established before beginning construction work, see also ante ¶ 182.
Repair and improvement at public expense as determinative of public character of road, see ante ¶¶ 54, 55.
Liability of municipality for failure to construct, see post § 200.
Liability for defective plan and manner of construction, see post § 201.
Liability for failure to keep in repair, see post § 203.
Duty to provide safe guards or warning signals pending construction, see post § 213.
Nonliability of public to abutter for soil used to improve way, see post ¶¶ 598, 599.
Injury to abutter's lateral support by taking soil for road improvement, see post ¶ 702.
Officers empowered to contract and limitations on their powers, see post § 143.
Contracts with or rendition of services by officers, see post § 143.
Purchases of road machinery, see post § 143.
General law of local improvements and local assessments to pay for same, see Local Improvements.
Constitutional provisions as to engagement in works of internal improvement, see Constitutional Law §§ 281-286.
Construction and operation of contracts for construction work on streets, see Building and Construction Contracts; Contracts, VI, VII.
Making and interpretation of public contracts in general, see Public Contracts; and see also Townships, III.
Proceedings for making local street improvements, see Local Improvements.
Contracts with street railways for or in respect to paving of space occupied by tracks, see Street Railways, I, III.
Mode of providing funds for construction and repair, see post VIII; Taxes.
Authority of representative to petition for street improvement, see Estates of Decedents ¶ 204.
Construction of wharf under guise of highway improvement, see Wharves.
Constitutional power of state to aid in highway improvements, see Const. art. X, § 14.
Power of legislature to provide for laying out, construction, improvement and maintenance of highways by state, counties, townships and road districts, see Const. art. VIII, § 26 (amendment of 1917).
What constitutes improvements of highway, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 125, § 5, amending Comp. L. 1915, § 4675.
Power of county road commissioners to construct, improve, gravel, grade and drain roads under their jurisdiction, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 356, amending Comp. L. 1915, § 4365.
Lighting of highways in unincorporated villages by township board, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 264.
Improvement and maintenance of line roads, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 356, amending Comp. L. 1915, § 4299.
Provisions relating to formation of good roads districts, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4337 et seq.
Provisions for county road system, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4347 et seq.
Plan and specifications of state reward roads, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4387.
Power to purchase land for gravel for roads, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4491.
Approval of county highway engineer of road work under county road system where cost exceeds $500, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 68, amending Comp. L. 1915, § 4382.

Authority of county road commissioner and state highway commissioner to make contracts under $500 without advertising, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 125, § 65, amending Comp. L. 1915, § 4735.
Paving and grading in fourth-class cities, see Comp. L. 1915, § 3091 et seq.
Provisions for moving or restoring full width to roads which have become reduced below fifty feet in width, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4395.

¶ 364. Under Act No. 283, Public Acts of 1909, How. 2nd Ed., § 2173, county roads may be constructed by contract.—Brandt v. Luce, 177 Mich. 184.

¶ 365. Where the state has provided for the construction of a state road for a specified grant of swamp lands to be selected by named counties, to be in full payment thereof, a board of supervisors cannot vote to the contractor who takes the contract on the terms specified by the statute, a bonus of a certain sum per mile for building the road, even though the contractor took the job partly in consideration of the bonus.—Davis v. Ontonagon County Sup'rs, 64 Mich. 404.

¶ 366. Comp. L. 1915, § 4386, requiring the state highway commissioners to furnish general plans and specifications for state reward roads, whether such roads are to be built by the township or county road commissioners, and providing for inspection by such commissioners before the reward is paid, provides for a uniform system in road construction.—Township of Clearwater v. Kalkaska County Board Sup'rs, 195 Mich. 323.

§ 106. Sidewalks and crosswalks.
Duty of city or abutters to construct walks, see post § 107..
Removal of walk as trespass to abutter, see post § 165.
Irreviewableness of plan for construction, see post § 114.
Judicial review of action allotting sidewalk space, see post § 114.
Statutory obligation of abutter to make sidewalks, see Local Improvements.
Assessments for sidewalks, see Local Improvements.
Provisions for construction of sidewalks along roads outside of incorporated municipalities, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4571 et seq.

¶ 367. Since section 19, ch. 4, Act No. 283, Pub. Acts 1909, How. Ann. St., 2nd Ed., § 2250, conferring authority over highways upon boards of county road commissioners, expressly limits their jurisdiction to the traveled portion of roads, bridges and culverts, they have no authority over or power to build sidewalks along and on the sides of country roads.—Ferguson v. County of Muskegon, 181 Mich. 335.

§ 107. Duty and necessity of construction.
Bridges, see post § 109.
Culverts, drains and ditches, see post § 108.
Joint roads and bridges, see post § 110.
Liability in tort for injuries due to failure to keep safe for travel, see post XII, A.
Mandamus to compel building of roads and bridges, see Mandamus, III.

¶ 368. It is the duty of the townships to keep state and territorial roads and the bridges upon them in good repair while such roads are used as public highways.—Delta Lumber Co. v. Board of Auditors & Wayne County Sup'rs, 71 Mich. 572.

¶ 369. Under the charter of West Bay City, ch. 23 (Local Acts 1897, No. 442), which authorizes the city to require the owners and occupants of adjacent property to build, rebuild and maintain sidewalks along their property under the direction of the common council, and also provides that the council may provide by ordinance for rebuilding and keeping in repair and pay the cost thereof, it is not the duty of the city to construct sidewalks.—Thompson v. City of West Bay City, 137 Mich. 94.

¶ 370. An ordinance requiring that sidewalks, built by owners of adjacent property, shall be constructed only by permission of, and under the supervision of the city council, does not make it the duty of the city to build sidewalks where the charter places such duty upon the lot owners, even though the city also pays part of the cost.—Thompson v. City of West Bay City, 137 Mich. 94.

§ 108. ——Culverts, drains and ditches.
Liability for defective plan and manner of construction, see post § 202.
Duty to inspect and repairing ditches and culverts, see post §§ 208, 210.
Provisions for drains along and within highways, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4510 et seq.
Consent of township highway commissioner to construction of open drain along public highway, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 121, amending Comp. L. 1915, § 4512.

¶ 371. The power of highway commissioners in drainage matters is restricted to highway needs, and they cannot usurp the functions of drain commissioner.—Conrad v. Smith, 32 Mich. 429.

¶ 372. Highway commissioners cannot exceed their statutory powers for the purpose of cutting ditches; the power to do this belongs in general to the drain commissioners; the power of the former is restricted to highway needs and to works of small extent and expense.—Conrad v. Smith, 32 Mich. 429.

¶ 373. Highway authorities have no more right than private persons to cut drains that will flood the lands of individuals; and when an overseer does so, he and his assistants are liable for the injury.—Cubit v. O'Dett, 51 Mich. 347.

¶ 374. Highway commissioners have the right to have the surface water, falling or coming naturally upon the highway, drain through the natural and usual channel upon and over the lower lands, and may construct drains and ditches for that purpose.—Tower v. Township of Somerset, 143 Mich. 195.

¶ 375. A highway commissioner must make adequate provision for carryng water from a ditch across a highway through a culvert, by providing tile or pipe of sufficient size to carry the water at all seasons of the year.—Miller v. Harmer, 173 Mich. 560.

¶ 376. Public authorities for the purpose of improving a highway have no right to divert the natural course of surface water so as to impose a new servitude upon another's land.—Smith v. Township of Eaton, 138 Mich. 511.

§ 109. ——Highway bridges.

Power to borrow money or incur debt, see post § 150.
Petition and proceedings for construction and repair of line bridge, see post § 113.
Construction of bridge implied from proceedings to lay out highway, see also ante § 35.
Duty to inspect and repair bridges, see post § 210.
Duty of mill owners to provide bridge over race or dam, see Mills.
Duty of maintaining viaducts for railroads over streets or streets over railroads, see Railroads, IV.
Contracts with railroads respecting construction and upkeep of viaducts and bridges, see Railroads, IV.
Permission to bridge navigable waters, see Navigable Waters, II.
Provisions for erection of highway bridges and repairing of same, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4415 et seq.
Township liability to keep up bridges within villages, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4440.

¶ 377. A county is not required to maintain or repair bridges; that duty rests upon the townships. So held, even in case of a bridge over a state road, which many years before the legislature by special act had authorized the county to rebuild, and which for a time was afterwards kept up by the townships.—Delta Lumber Co. v. Wayne County Auditors, 71 Mich. 572.

¶ 378. Municipalities are under no legal obligation, outside of the constitution and statutes, to build bridges where none has been before.—Fulton Iron & Engine Works v. Township of Kimball, 52 Mich. 146.

¶ 379. A commissioner of highways will not be compelled in any case to repair a bridge not shown to be a public highway. The fact that the highways leading to the river on either side are public ways does not make the bridge a public bridge and highway, or cast any duty upon the township to build or repair, or make the township responsible for non-repair.—Travis v. Skinner, 72 Mich. 152.

¶ 380. It is the duty of the highway commissioners of townships to build, rebuild or repair bridges and keep them in repair where they are not called upon to expend more than $1,000 (How. St. §§ 1379-1381).—Bigelow v. Brooks, 119 Mich. 208.

¶ 381. It is no defense to a petition in mandamus to compel the township highway commissioner to build a bridge that no money has been voted by the electors to construct the bridge; the statute provides for issuing orders and the method for collecting them (Comp. L. 1897, § 4130).—Berube v. Wheeler, 128 Mich. 32.

§ 110. ——Joint roads and bridges.

Apportionment of expense, see post § 151.
Provision for joint erection and upkeep, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4423 et seq.
Provisions as to joint county roads under county road system, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4363.
Provisions for joint action on state line roads, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4315.
Provisions for repairing bridges partly in several townships or municipalities, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4441 et seq.
Joint construction of state line bridges, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4527.

¶ 382. The duty of the several highway commissioners to rebuild a bridge on a town-line road extends to a road on a point off of the town-line, where the authorities for both townships had regarded the deflected road in question as part of the town-line road and had for ten years recognized a joint obligation to construct and maintain the bridge.—Bigelow v. Brooks, 119 Mich. 208.

¶ 383. An allotment of the line road in sections to the several townships, one section including the bridge in question, does not impose the whole burden on the allottee township, where it also appeared that the construction of the bridges on the town line was not included in the allotment, and that the authorities had acted jointly in building and repairing such bridges. It was the duty of such two townships to rebuild the bridge in question and keep it in repair.—Bigelow v. Brooks, 119 Mich. 208.

¶ 384. The "necessity of the public safety" mentioned in the statute (Comp. L. 1897, § 4131), refers to the bridge on the highway of which it is a part and not to a bridge on another highway several miles distant. The necessity of the public highway in question has been settled in the proceeding to lay it out. A bridge must be built so as to constitute an essential part of the highway in question.—Berube v. Wheeler, 128 Mich. 32.

¶ 385. It is lawful for a township, with the authority of the board of supervisors, and by virtue of an express grant from the legislature, to assume voluntarily the erection and maintenance of a drawbridge over a navigable stream that is the dividing line between it and another township.—Dietrich v. Schremms, 117 Mich. 298.

§ 111. Liability for diversion of surface waters.

Power and authority to construct drains and ditches, see ante § 108.

Ditch or drain as nuisance or obstruction to travel, see post § 178.

Diversion caused by change of grade, see post § 120.

General law of surface waters, see Waters, II.

General law of drains, see Drains.

Liability of city or village for defects in sewers or for failure to provide sewers, see Municipal Corporations, XII.

¶ 386. Injury occasioned to an abutting owner by a lawfully constructed highway ditch is damnum absque injuria.—Eagle Township Highway Com'rs v. Ely, 54 Mich. 173.

¶ 387. The liability imposed upon municipalities by How. St. §§ 1446c-1446e, for injuries resulting from their neglect to keep their highways in reasonably safe condition, is limited to injuries to persons and property upon the highway, and does not extend to injuries to abutting lands resulting from obstructions in the highway diverting surface water.—Tatman v. City of Benton Harbor, 115 Mich. 695.

¶ 388. Highway officers have no more right than private persons to cut drains which will flood the lands of private owners; and in an action against such an officer for injury caused by a ditch which he has dug, defendant cannot complain of an instruction that he would not be liable unless the ditch brought upon the plaintiff's land the drainage of a greater area than was drained upon it before.—Cubit v. O'Dett, 51 Mich. 347.

¶ 389. A man obtained permission from the overseer of highways to clear out a certain ditch "if it would benefit the road." Held, that his brother could not maintain an action against the overseer for injuries done his premises by the improvement.—Parker v. Fields, 48 Mich. 250.

¶ 390. In an action for damages for flooding lands, it is error to instruct the jury that highway authorities have the right to turnpike a road, put ditches along the sides, and put in culverts as necessary to properly construct the road, since the highway authorities have no more right than private persons to cut drains which will flood the lands of individuals.—Breen v. Hyde, 130 Mich. 1.

§ 112. Petition and proceedings for work or repairs.

For line or boundary bridges, see post § 113.

Power to make change of grade after petition and proceedings are begun, see also post ¶ 408.

Petitions and proceedings for local improvements and assessments, see Local Improvements.

Proceedings to require construction of sidewalks by abutters, see Local Improvements.

Procedure under state reward road system, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4378 et seq.

Application for highway improvements by abutting owners, see Pub. Acts. 1917, No. 125, § 4, amending Comp. L. 1915, § 4674.

Proceedings for improvements based on application of abutting owners, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 125, §§ 7-14, amending Comp. L. 1915, §§ 4677-4684.

Petition for improvements presented to state highway commissioner and proceedings thereon, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 125, §§ 37, 38, amending Comp. L. 1915, §§ 4707, 4708.

Petition by highway commission for drainage improvement, see Pub. Acts. 1917, No. 125, § 56, amending Comp. L. 1915, § 4726.

Liability of petitioners for cost of improvements, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 125, § 6, amending Comp. L. 1915, § 4676.

¶ 391. In a suit against a township for the balance due on a contract for improving a highway, the township defended on the ground that the petition for the improvement, presented to the township board, was not signed, as required by the statute, by a majority of the resident property holders upon the portion of the highway sought to be improved. Held, that the township was not estopped, by reason of the determination of the township board that the petition presented had been properly signed, from making such defense.—Collins v. Township of Grand Rapids, 108 Mich. 675.

¶ 392. Comp. L. 1897, § 4163, requiring notice to be given to the adjoining owner before trees are cut by highway authorities, in order to give an opportunity to remove them, only applies to trees growing upon the margin of the highway.—De Boer v. Adams, 159 Mich. 560.

§ 113. ——Line or boundary bridges.

¶ 393. Laws of 1889, Act No. 62 (How. St. § 1310a et seq.), which authorizes the board of supervisors of a county to order the construction of a bridge, and fix the respective portions which each township in which it is situated shall contribute towards its construction, etc., only applies to townships in which a portion of the bridge when built is actually located.—Township of Frenchtown v. Monroe County Sup'rs, 89 Mich. 204.

¶ 394. Without discussing Laws 1899, Act No. 62 at length, it was suggested that many imperfections could be pointed out which would render it practically incapable of enforcement.—Township of Frenchtown v. Monroe County Sup'rs, 89 Mich. 204.

¶ 395. How. St. § 1310a et seq., will not be given such retrospective action as would destroy the agreements lawfully made and existing between such townships at the date of its passage, and having been acted upon for years respecting a joint bridge.—Bigelow v. Brooks, 119 Mich. 208.

¶ 396. Under Pub. Acts 1889, No. 62 (Comp. L. 1897, §§ 4051-4056), providing for the construction of bridges partly in one township and partly in another, and for the calling of a meeting of the board of supervisors on application of one of the townships, and providing that the board shall have the power and it shall be their duty to grant or refuse the prayer of the petitioner and to fix the character of the bridge and the proportions of cost to be borne by each of the townships, the action of the board thereunder may be by majority vote, although a two-thirds vote is required by Comp. L. 1897, §§ 2484 (as amended by Pub. Acts 1905, No. 98), and 2485, in taking the actions therein enumerated among which is that of determining the relative proportions which townships shall contribute to the building and repairing of joint roads and bridges. Accordingly Pub. Acts 1905, No. 306, which covers the same subject as the act of 1889 and repeals it, is also satisfied by a majority vote according to the usual order of procedure.—Horner v. Board of Sup'rs of Ionia County, 147 Mich. 581. (See Comp. L. 1915, §§ 4441-4446 for the statutes which supplant Pub. Acts 1905, No. 306.—Editor.)

¶ 397. A petition first presented by one of the townships at a meeting held pursuant to notice duly served, the highway commissioners and the township boards of two adjoining townships being present confer about the rebuilding of a bridge that had been destroyed by a freshet, and the officials of the other having refused to do anything for the rebuilding of the bridge, and the supervisors having passed such a resolution by a majority vote, is in substantial compliance with the provisions of Pub. Acts 1905, No. 306 providing for ordering the building of bridges between townships on application.—Horner v. Board of Supervisors of Ionia County, 147 Mich. 581.

§ 114. Judicial review or relief against improvement proceedings.

See also post ¶ 548.

Review of local improvement proceedings, see Local Improvements, III, VII.

Nonestoppel by bidding for construction of ditch to assert that construction is illegal, see also Estoppel ¶ 206.

Review on certiorari of proceedings for improvement of highway, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 125, § 66, amending Comp. L. 1915, § 4736.

¶ 398. Municipal discretion as to how much of a street shall be set aside for the actual highway, and how much for the sidewalk, trees, gutters, etc., cannot be reviewed judicially or passed upon by a jury so long as no distinct legal duty has been violated. McArthur v. City of Saginaw, 58 Mich. 357.

¶ 399. Courts or juries cannot interfere with the discretion of municipal authorities in determining where or upon what plan sidewalks or crosswalks shall be built, or as to the connections of such walks, or the access to them.—Williams v. City of Grand Rapids, 59 Mich. 51; Irving v. Ford, 65 Mich. 241; Shippy v. Village of Au Sable, 65 Mich. 494.

¶ 400. Under Comp. L. 1915, § 4736, providing that highway improvement proceedings are subject to review by certiorari, and for a speedy bringing of the writ, that the circuit court shall hear and determine same without delay, and if any material defect be found in such proceedings they shall be set aside in so far as erroneous, and that the entire proceedings shall not be set aside except where the county road commissioners have no jurisdiction, and that if certiorari be not brought within the time prescribed the improvement shall be deemed to have been legally ordered and established, and its legality shall not thereafter be questioned in any action at law or suit in equity, where taxpayers fail to bring certiorari to review the proceedings because of defective advertising for bids within the prescribed time, the proceedings cannot thereafter be questioned in any action at law or suit in equity.—McDermott v. Board of Road Commissioners of Kent County, 199 Mich. 613.

¶ 401. Where an improvement of a highway is undertaken by the authorities in good faith, it cannot be enjoined by a complainant merely because his access to the highway will be rendered less convenient, while his neighbors will secure an advantage.—Dean v. Millard, 151 Mich. 582.

¶ 402. It would seem that a pretended improvement of a highway, for the purpose of procuring an advantage to one owner at the expense of other abutting owners, may be enjoined.—Dean v. Millard, 151 Mich. 582.

V. ALTERATIONS, EXTENSIONS, GRADES AND CHANGES OF GRADE.

§ 115. Alterations and changes in location.

Condemnation or ascertainment of damages, see post § 123.

Opening of other street as consideration for vacation of one, see post § 127.

Estoppel to question vacation and relocation at other place, see post ¶¶ 481, 482.
General provisions as to alterations of highways, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4288 et seq. [Note. The procedure for altering highways is contained in the same chapter and sections with that relating to laying out highways. Fuller references to the statutes may be found cited ante II, B, which relates to laying out proceedings.]
Provisions for widening narrowed roads, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4395 et seq.

¶ 403. A street that has been established and recognized for more than ten years cannot be shifted unless according to charter and statutory conditions.—Pratt v. Lewis, 39 Mich. 7.

¶ 404. Since Laws of 1881, Act No. 243, went into effect, a highway commissioner may alter a highway (unless it is a line road between municipalities), though it has been long established.—Weber v. Ryers, 82 Mich. 177.

§ 116. Alterations in plan or structure.

Changes in location, see ante § 115.
Changes in course or direction of extension, see post § 117.
Changes in grades, see post § 118 et seq.
Separation of crossing grades, see post § 121.
Requisites of estoppel to prevent restoration of drain to its original place, see Estoppel ¶ 116.

¶ 405. Where it was open to the jury on the evidence to find that a road was at first laid out on a section line intersecting a creek, that at first it deviated to cross on plaintiff's dam, that the bridging or embanking across was deferred and that plaintiff acquiesced in the right of the township authorities to bridge or embank meanwhile, that eventually it was bridged and later banked across leaving a culvert for the free flow of water between the two parts of plaintiff's dam and taking away only the ponding capacity of the space within the highway boundaries, it was error to charge that if plaintiff had during those years used the space under the bridge for floodage the township had no right to deprive him of it by changing the bridge to an embankment.—Schneider v. Township of Brown, 142 Mich. 45.

§ 117. Extensions and plan or course of same.

Necessity or propriety of extension of street, see also ante ¶ 232.
Provisions as to rural roads extended from existing streets, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4304.

¶ 406. A variation of a few degrees in extending a street from its course is not prohibited by law, and is within the discretion of a city, if ratified by the finding of the jury that such course is necessary.—City of Detroit v. Beecher, 75 Mich. 454.

§ 118. Power to establish and change grades.

Necessity of established grade to make change actionable, see post § 119.
Establishment of grade as precedent to grade damage proceeding, see post ¶ 425.
Dedication as implied waiver of damages from change of grade, see Dedication § 30.
Regulation of grade level of railroad in street or crossing street, see also Railroads, IV; Street Railways, III.
Establishment and change of grade of street or interurban railway on highway, see Street Railways, III.
Changes of grade in fourth class cities, see Comp. L. 1915, § 3091 et seq.
Establishment and change of grade in villages, see Comp. L. 1915, § 2654 et seq.
Provisions as to reduction of grades on rural roads, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4638.
Provisions relative to separation of highway and railroad grades and elimination of grade crossings, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4750 et seq.
Provisions as to permission to cross railroads and for fixing grades by State Railroad Commission and State Highway Commissioner, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4314.

¶ 407. The Detroit board of public works is required to "establish a system of grades for all streets and alleys," and grades when once established cannot be changed except by resolution of the council. Held, that this does not mean that after the system itself is established no grade shall be changed, but that an established grade, whether fixed by the board or previously, shall not be changed without authority; the mere approval by the council of a paving contract that involves a change of grade cannot be construed as authorizing the board to change it if the specific question was not presented in the resolution for approval. And as to the establishment of a system of grades, it is sufficient if a general scheme is determined upon, and particular grades are fixed as occasion requires, but always subordinate to the general purpose.—Larned v. Briscoe, 62 Mich. 393.

¶ 408. Under Local Acts 1901, No. 303 authorizing a township to improve certain highways and requiring that the township board shall determine the expediency of the improvement, prepare plans and specifications, fix the amount necessary to be raised, and then submit to the electors the question of issuing bonds for the purpose upon notice containing a copy of the resolution declaring the expediency of the improvement, the manner thereof and the amount necessary, and that the board shall thereafter let the contract according to the plans and specifications, and further providing that the board and the highway commissioner shall determine the details of the contract let, the board may, in good faith, change the grade of the highway to be improved, after the matter has been submitted to the electors, since to hold otherwise would bind them to any error made in the plans, there being no provision in the law for a second submission.—Campau v. Highway Commissioner of Grosse Pointe, 132 Mich. 365.

§ 119. Actionable change of grade.

Damages for separation of crossing grades, see post § 121.

Procedure to ascertain damages, see post § 122.

Diversion of water by change of grade, see post § 120.

What changes of grade amount to a "taking" or "damaging," see Eminent Domain, III.

¶ 409. Damage to adjacent property caused by lawful change of grade of city street is damnum absque injuria.—City of Pontiac v. Carter, 32 Mich. 164.

¶ 410. An unauthorized or illegal change of grade is an actionable injury.—Larned v. Briscoe, 62 Mich. 393.

¶ 411. Damages suffered by an adjacent owner by reason of a change in grade cannot be recovered in the absence of a statute giving right to such recovery.—Cummings v. Dixon, 139 Mich. 269.

¶ 412. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 2784 providing that whenever the grade of a street has been established and improvements made in conformity therewith the grade shall not be changed without compensation to the owner for damages therefrom, damages are recoverable only in case of a change from a grade deliberately established by a competent municipal authority in the prescribed manner.—Cummings v. Dixon, 139 Mich. 269.

¶ 413. In the absence of a previously established street grade an abutting property owner cannot recover damages from a municipality for changing the grade of a street.—Labadie v. Village of Ford, 185 Mich. 402.

§ 120. ——Diversion of surface water by change.

For diversion in construction or repair of road, see ante § 111.

¶ 414. Although a village has the undoubted right to change the grade of a street without being liable to an adjacent owner for a consequent casting of surface waters on his premises, it will be liable for destroying a gutter which had been constructed while the building of such adjacent owner was being erected, and so changing the grade of the street that the waters which had theretofore been carried off were precipitated against and into such building.—Morley v. Village of Buchanan, 124 Mich. 128.

§ 121. Damages for separation of crossing grades.

Procedure to ascertain damages, see post § 122.

Damages for crossing railroad on establishment of highway, see ante § 37.

Damages for viaduct as additional servitude, see also post ¶ 582.

Liability of railroad to abutter, see also post ¶ 706.

Measure and elements of damages for taking and injuring property by change of grade, see Eminent Domain, IV.

Impairment or vacation of highway use or access as a "taking," see Eminent Domain § 25.

Acts of municipality amounting to proprietary or ministerial doings as distinguished from governmental and nonactionable doings, see Municipal Corporations, XII.

¶ 415. Where a city builds a bridge for a crossing over a railroad track in a public street having no charter power to alter grades in that manner it is liable as a wrongdoer for an injury thereby inflicted upon an abutting owner in the usual and ordinary enjoyment of his property.—Schneider v. City of Detroit, 72 Mich. 240.

¶ 416. A city constructing a bridge in a street over a railroad track without eminent domain proceedings, is liable to an abutting owner for damages from depreciation in rental value resulting from such structure. Phelps v. City of Detroit, 120 Mich. 447.

¶ 417. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 4229 et seq., providing for ascertaining damages resulting from a separation of grades at railroad crossings "to all parties sustaining damage thereby," requiring that among others the petition shall name "lessees * * * and others interested in the property * * * including those in possession of the premises," and providing for awarding to the parties interested compensation for damages, one occupying part of the right of way of a railroad company agreeing to such separation of grades may recover for damages due to the destruction of its access by the change of grade and the consequent injury to its improvements made under the lease; since the agreement of the lessor company does not bind the lessee.—City of Detroit v. C. H. Little Co., 141 Mich. 687.

¶ 418. Comp. L. 1897, § 4244, providing for an award of damages upon separation of railroad and highway grades, is a remedial statute, declaring the right of the individual to compensation for damages sustained by him for the public benefit.—City of Detroit v. Detroit United Ry., 156 Mich. 106.

¶ 419. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 4244, authorizing an award of damages to abutting property owners on the separation of highway and railroad grades, compensation can be given only for damages to property abutting upon that portion of the street the grade of which is to be changed, and for such only as are caused by such change; there can be no award for damages resulting to abutters from the elevation of the railroad tracks as distinguished from those due to change of the street grade.—City of Detroit v. Detroit United Ry., 156 Mich. 106.

¶ 420. The petitioner, the City of Detroit, brought proceedings to lower the grade of a street at a railroad crossing. The defendants, abutting owners, claimed damages under the statute providing for the separation of the grades of streets and of railroads crossing them. Held, they were entitled to damages, since the statute was intended to apply to ordinary highway and street grades, and was not limited to grades created by the city and duly recorded.—City of Detroit v. Snyder, 156 Mich. 511, on rehearing 159 Mich. 227.

¶ 421. In a petition by a city to lower the grade of a street, under the statute providing for the separation of the grades of streets and of railroads crossing them, abutting owners were made an allowance for a paving assessment levied against them. Held, the allowance was improper since such matters were subject to the jurisdiction of the recorder's court in proceedings relating thereto.—City of Detroit v. Snyder, 156 Mich. 511, on rehearing 159 Mich. 227.

§ 122. Procedure to ascertain grade damages.

General law of eminent domain, including all matters which are not peculiar to change of grade proceedings, see Eminent Domain.

¶ 422. Although an agreement between a city and a railroad company for the construction of a viaduct to carry a street across the track is for the purpose of obtaining a right of way over the track where there is no existing right of way, it is none the less subject to the provisions of Pub. Acts 1893, No. 92, and is not enforceable until the damages to abutting owners are fixed by judicial proceedings, or by compromise, under section 3 of the act.—Harper v. City of Detroit, 110 Mich. 427.

¶ 423. In a proceeding for the determination of damages caused by the separation of railroad and highway grades, the petitioner for such change of grades does not bear the burden of reducing to certainty testimony too uncertain in nature to establish a right to compensation.—City of Detroit v. Detroit United Ry., 156 Mich. 106.

¶ 424. Under Comp. L. 1897, ch. 102, providing separate grades for railroads and public highways and streets, where railroads intersect such highways and streets, a city cannot have one jury in one proceeding determine the necessity of grading three streets, and ascertain the resulting damage to all property abutting upon those streets and affected by the change.—City of Detroit v. Dailey, 156 Mich. 9.

¶ 425. The establishment of a street grade held not shown by competent municipal authority in the form of a permanent record as required by law, so as to entitle an abutting property owner to damages for a subsequent alteration of the grade.—Labadie v. Village of Ford, 185 Mich. 402.

§ 123. Condemnation of property to widen or alter way.

Review of proceedings by certiorari, see post § 124.

Damages for removal of fences to prevent snow drifting, see post ¶ 656.

General law of condemnation for streets, see ante II, B; and see Eminent Domain.

Liability for constructing bridge in street without condemning right, see Bridges § 22.

Procedure to widen parkways and boulevards belonging to park system, see Parks.

¶ 426. An attempt to agree with the owner upon a purchase of the premises is a condition precedent to adverse proceedings to take private property to widen a village street.—Arnold v. Village of Decatur, 29 Mich. 77.

¶ 427. Proceedings by a highway commissioner, under How. St. §§ 1296-1304, to condemn land for widening a highway are not irregular and premature on account of the pendency of a certiorari to review proceedings previously taken, and afterwards held void, to discontinue such highway.—Weber v. Stagray, 75 Mich. 32.

¶ 428. Evidence tending to show whether or not a proposed improvement by grading and widening a highway is in itself a public necessity, is admissible in favor of a landowner whose property is sought to be condemned by reason of such improvement.—City of Grand Rapids v. Coit, 149 Mich. 668.

¶ 429. In a proceeding to take private property for the widening of a village street, the jury must pass upon the necessity of the taking.—Arnold v. Village of Decatur, 29 Mich. 77.

§ 124. Judicial review of or relief from alteration proceedings.

Review in street opening cases, see ante II, B, 4.

General law of certiorari, injunctions and other forms of judicial relief, see Certiorari; Injunctions; and like topics.

¶ 430. In certiorari to review a proceeding to alter and widen a highway the objection that the commissioner had no jurisdiction because no highway existed there will be overruled where the commissioner's return shows a highway by user for more than thirty years and less than four rods wide.—Dewey v. Kaner, 80 Mich. 280.

¶ 431. Where on the review of proceedings to alter a highway the objection is made that the commissioner did not have present at the hearing of the application, notice and proof of service, it will not be sustained where it appears from the return of the commissioner that he offered to go after said papers, but that the attorney of the person making the objection told him it was not necessary, and where it also appears that the township clerk's books containing a record of the papers were present, and that the commissioner had inspected the original papers before the hearing.—Dewey v. Kaner, 80 Mich. 280.

VI. ABANDONMENT, VACATION AND DIMINUTION.

§ 125. In general; powers of officers and municipalities.

See also post ¶ 517.
Grounds and occasions for vacating, see post § 127.
Vacating on conditions, see post § 128.
Abandonment, disuse or sufferance of adverse possession, see post § 129.
Procedure to vacate or abandon, see post §§ 130 et seq., 136, 137.
Condemnation of rights and payment of damages, see post § 133.
Objections, estoppel and cure of defective vacations, see post § 135.
Review of vacation proceedings, see post § 137.
Reversion of title to abutters, see post § 138.
Re-establishment of way, see post § 139.
Nonjudicial character of proceedings by supervisors, see post ¶ 451.
Vacation proceedings as recognition of existence of street, see ante ¶ 19a.
Discontinuance of highway as affecting obligation to inspect and repair, see post § 203.
Revocation of dedication, see Dedication §§ 14-16.
Constitutional inhibition of legislative vacation, see Const. art. VIII, § 27.
Power of county road commissioners to abandon or vacate county road, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 356, amending Comp. L. 1915, § 4364.
Power of board of supervisors to discontinue or vacate, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4523 et seq.
Vacations by village councils, see Comp. L. 1915, § 2652.

¶ 432. Highway commissioners have power to discontinue roads, notwithstanding the provision in the constitution conferring authority on the boards of supervisors.—People ex rel. Goldsmith v. Nankin Highway Com'rs, 15 Mich. 347.

¶ 433. Under How. St. § 1310 a town-line road which had for ten years been recognized as such by the authorities, could not be discontinued, except by the joint act of the authorities of the two townships.—Bigelow v. Brooks, 119 Mich. 208.

¶ 434. The courts and the common council of the City of Detroit have concurrent jurisdiction over the vacation of streets in that city.—Detroit Real Estate Inv. Co. v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 137 Mich. 108.

¶ 435. The right of the City of Detroit under its charter of 1904, § 169, to vacate a street or alley by proper proceedings, when deemed necessary in the public interest, is clear.—Michigan Cent. Ry. Co. v. Miller, 172 Mich. 201.

§ 126. Release of public rights.

Power of legislature to extinguish public easements in street, see also post ¶ 556.

¶ 436. The rights of the public in city streets may be extinguished by legislation.—Cooper v. City of Detroit, 42 Mich. 584; Horn v. People, 26 Mich. 221.

§ 127. Ground, purpose and occasion for vacation.

Imposition of conditions, see post § 128.
Allegation or showing of grounds in petition, see post § 130.
Sufficiency of record to show purpose and necessity, see post § 132.
Sufficiency of objections on judicial review, see post § 137.

¶ 437. The proper municipal authorities can discontinue a portion of a street, if they could do so otherwise, in consideration of the opening of another street and outlet by a private citizen whose interests are affected in both cases.—Bauman v. Campau, 58 Mich. 444.

¶ 438. It is a fatal objection to the action of the city council in vacating part of a public alley that the proceedings show upon their face that the inducement for the council's action was the division of the property attempted to be acquired by the vacation between the moving party in the vacation proceedings and the city.—Horton v. Williams, 99 Mich. 423.

¶ 439. The legality of the action of a city council in vacating a street cannot be questioned on the ground that the street becomes the property of the abutting owners who are instrumental in having the street vacated.—Curtis v. Charlevoix Golf Assn., 178 Mich. 50.

§ 128. Vacation upon conditions.

Effect of cessation of condition to re-establish way, see post ¶ 497.

¶ 440. A city council, in granting a petition to vacate a street, may impose conditions.—Detroit Real Estate Inv. Co. v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 137 Mich. 108.

§ 129. Abandonment and nonuser or adverse possession.

Nonuser of dedicated way as nonacceptance thereof, see ante § 9.

Right of abutters to close cul de sac or blind way, see also post § 162.
Inclosing disused or blind way as nuisance or obstruction, see post § 180.
Title by adverse possession of highway, see Adverse Possession §§ 2, 5, 28, 51.
Sufficiency of uses by abutter to constitute adverse possession, see Adverse Possession § 28.
Evidence as to adverse possession of way or part of it, see Adverse Possession § 51.
Effect of quit claim to public for street uses as raising estoppel to assert adverse after acquired title, see Estoppel § 19.
Abandonment and nonuser as discontinuance of private easements, see Easements, IV.
Provisions as to discontinuance by four years failure to be worked after laying out, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4309.

¶ 441. There are cases where the abandonment of a street may be presumed by nonuser.—Devaux v. City of Detroit, H. 98.

¶ 442. The general highway laws provide for vacating highways by nonuser as well as by direct proceedings.—Cooper v. City of Detroit, 42 Mich. 584.

¶ 443. Highways may be wholly or partially discontinued by nonuser.—Gregory v. Knight, 50 Mich. 61; Lyle v. Lesia, 64 Mich. 16; Coleman v. Flint & P. M. R. Co., 64 Mich. 160.

¶ 444. Where a highway has been formally abandoned and a new one opened and used instead of it, the old road may be considered vacated.—Lyle v. Lesia, 64 Mich. 16.

¶ 445. A highway can be lost in whole or in part by nonuser, but the portion kept in use will not be affected by the nonuser of the remainder.—Wayne County Savings Bank v. Stockwell, 84 Mich. 586.

¶ 446. The rights of the public in a highway will not be lost by anything short of an actual abandonment of the use by which it was acquired.—Village of Grandville v. Jenison, 84 Mich. 54.

¶ 447. Under How. St. § 1315, a road that has been "laid out and not recorded and actually used for eight years" becomes a public highway; and mere nonuser for two years does not, in the absence of proceedings to discontinue the highway, entitle a railroad company crossing the road to exclude the public by fencing in its right of way.—McNamara v. Minneapolis, St. P. & S. Ste. M. R. Co., 95 Mich. 545.

¶ 448. Nonuser of a highway is not necessarily shown by encroachments upon it at various times by the building of chicken-parks, the piling of lumber, etc., which do not obstruct travel.—Village of Grandville v. Jenison, 84 Mich. 54.

¶ 449. The admitted fact that a strip of land adjoining plaintiff's land has been legally laid out and established as a public highway, will defeat his recovery against defendant for trespass thereupon, even though for a few months plaintiff has inclosed such strip with a fence.—Van Brunt v. Lynch, 76 Mich. 455.

¶ 450. Abandonment of a highway lying between complainant's two parcels of land and title thereto in complainant by adverse possession is shown by the evidence, in an action to enjoin trespass by a highway officer, where it appears that more than twenty years prior to the action the inhabitants of the vicinity had formally assented to the abandonment of an adjoining portion of such highway, thereby closing one exit to the portion lying between complainant's two parcels of land; that thereupon complainant ran a fence across such highway inclosing such portion as lay between his lands, and continued thereafter in the sole and uninterrupted possession and use of such land.—Lawrence v. Kirby, 145 Mich. 432.

§ 130. Proceedings for discontinuance or vacation.

Notice requisite to jurisdiction, see post § 131.
Requisites of the record of the proceedings, see post § 132.
Joinder of proceedings to discontinue with proceedings to lay out highway, see ante § 25.
Vacation of plats as such, see Dedication § 36.
General provisions as to vacation or discontinuance of highways, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4288 et seq. [Note. The procedure for vacating highways is contained in the same chapter and sections with that relating to laying out highways. Fuller references to the statutes may be found ante II, B, which relates to laying out proceedings.]

¶ 451. The action of a board of supervisors in ordering a portion of a state road to be vacated is legislative in its character and not subject to the same rules as judicial proceedings.—People ex rel, Greenman v. Shiawassee County Sup'rs, 38 Mich. 642.

¶ 452. Proceedings to vacate streets are proceedings in rem.—Detroit Real Estate Inv. Co. v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 137 Mich. 108.

¶ 453. A board of supervisors has jurisdiction under How. St. § 497, to discontinue a state road without the presentation of a petition therefor, and an insufficient petition is a mere irregularity, not going to the jurisdiction.—Pearsall v. Eaton County Sup'rs, 71 Mich. 438.

¶ 454. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 2782, How. 2nd ed., § 6001, no petition need be filed with the common council as the initial act for the vacation of a street, the council being empowered to act on its own motion.—Curtis v. Charlevoix Golf Ass'n, 178 Mich. 50.

¶ 455. Where a city charter does not require the purpose of vacating a street to be expressed, nor make the expression of it obligatory on the subsequent occupation, the expression of a specific purpose in the proceedings to vacate it is surplusage.—Cooper v. City of Detroit, 42 Mich. 584.

¶ 456. A petition for discontinuance of a road signed by persons describing themselves as "freeholders and residents of the townships of Oneida and Delta" does not show in which each of the signers resides and therefore cannot show that a statutory number resides in each.—Pearsall v. Eaton County Sup'rs, 71 Mich. 438.

¶ 457. Discontinuance of a highway that has been in use for twenty years must rest on the unanimous approval of the town board, and that should precede the return made by the commissioner of highways as to his proceedings.—Shue v. Richmond Township Highway Commissioner, 41 Mich. 638.

¶ 458. On May 18 a highway commissioner pursuant to How. St. § 1300 adjourned for twenty days a proceeding to discontinue a highway. Held, that the hearing should have been on June 7, and that one on June 6 made the proceedings void.—Price v. Stagray, 68 Mich. 17.

§ 131. ——Notices and service or publication and proof of same.

Necessity and requisites of petition, see ante § 130.
Showing of notice in record, see post § 132.
Effect of inaction by omitted party to cure proceedings, see post ¶ 483.
Presumption on certiorari as to notice having been given, see post § 137.

¶ 459. An adjoining land-owner is entitled to notice of proceedings to discontinue a state road.—Pearsall v. Eaton County Sup'rs, 74 Mich. 558. Former certiorari by same parties, see 71 Mich. 438.

¶ 460. Notice to an occupant of land traversed by a highway, with reference to which his houses, wells, barns, and orchards have been located, of its proposed discontinuance by the board of supervisors, under How. St. §§ 497, 498, is essential to the validity of the discontinuance proceedings.—Curry v. Place, 99 Mich. 524.

¶ 461. Local Acts of 1895, No. 353, amending the city charter of Jackson and authorizing the vacation of any street or part of street, without application to the court, if all persons interested in the plat, or a "distinct part thereof," consent thereto, requires the consent of those persons only who have a legal right to compensation on the vacation of the street, and notice to others owning property on the plat is not essential to jurisdiction.—Baudistel v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 113 Mich. 687.

¶ 462. Proceedings of the board of supervisors discontinuing part of a state road may be adjudged void for want of notice and compensation to an adjoining land-owner.—Pearsall v. Eaton County Sup'rs, 74 Mich. 558.

¶ 463. Proceedings by a highway commissioner to discontinue a highway are void where there was a failure to serve process on all of the occupants.—Hatt v. Township Board of Napoleon, 144 Mich. 266.

¶ 464. Failure to serve the statutory notice on a life tenant occupying the land makes proceedings by a highway commissioner to discontinue a highway void although one occupant who was reversioner was served.—Hatt v. Township Board of Napoleon, 144 Mich. 266.

¶ 465. Proceedings to discontinue a highway are void if taken upon a notice shorter than ten days under How. St. § 1298, and accordingly a notice on June 1st for a hearing on June 6th is void.—Price v. Stagray, 68 Mich. 17.

¶ 466. The owner of a parcel of land not fronting upon any highway, and whose only outlet is a private way two rods wide, belonging to him, and extending therefrom to the public highway, is entitled to notice of proceedings to discontinue such public highway as much as if his whole parcel abutted upon it.—People ex rel. Phillips v. China Highway Com'r, 35 Mich. 15.

¶ 467. Notice of proceedings to discontinue a highway must be given to any person whose premises will be left by such action without any outlet or approach on one side. Goss v. Westphalia Township Highway Com'r, 63 Mich. 608.

¶ 468. The requirement is jurisdictional that before a highway commissioner can take any proceedings to discontinue a public highway an affidavit showing the time and manner of serving notice of such proceedings must be made and annexed to the notice or a copy thereof. An ex post facto compliance with this requirement is insufficient.—Goss v. Westphalia Highway Com'r, 63 Mich. 608.

¶ 469. The statute required notice of proceedings to vacate a highway to be served on the owners or occupants of lands through which the road passed, either personally or by copy left at their residences, and by posting in three public places of the township. Held, that the return of service should show the names of persons served, and whether served by copy left or personally; and it should show the particular places in which notices were posted. In the absence of such a return an order of commissioners vacating the road would be without jurisdiction.—People ex rel. Goldsmith v. Nankin Highway Com'rs, 14 Mich. 528.

§ 132. ——Order or findings, return, and record of vacation.

Imposition of conditions, see also ante § 128.
Time for hearing, see also ante ¶ 458.
Length of notice required, see ante § 131.
Adverse decision by council as bar to judicial vacation, see post ¶ 485.
Necessity that record of township vacation proceedings be signed by chairman and clerk of board, see also ante ¶ 355.
Vacation order as adjudication in rem, see ante ¶ 452, and see also Former Adjudication ¶ 20 and § 77.
Vacation of street as revocation of dedication thereof, see Dedication § 15.
Vote required to discontinue road existing for ten or more years, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4302.

¶ 470. When a road is discontinued the record filed with the township clerk must show everything necessary to render the proceedings valid; e. g., notice to parties interested.—People ex rel. Mead v. Caledonia Highway Com'rs, 16 Mich. 63.

¶ 471. Proceedings to discontinue a highway are void unless the commissioner's return shows he viewed the premises and found a public necessity for such discontinuance and the return that he laid out or discontinued a highway is not sufficient.—Furman v. Furman, 86 Mich. 391.

¶ 472. Where the facts set forth in a petition to vacate a portion of a state road fairly tend to show that the public would be benefited thereby, a finding by the board of supervisors that they were sufficient cannot be questioned.—People ex rel. Greenman v. Shiawassee County Sup'rs, 38 Mich. 642.

¶ 473. When commissioners of highways have gone out of office it is incompetent for them to make any addition or amendment to a return of their proceedings already made and filed with the town clerk; e. g., in discontinuing a highway; whether they could have made such additions before, quære.—People ex rel. Mead v. Caledonia Highway Com'rs, 16 Mich. 63.

¶ 474. How. St. § 501, requiring every order, resolution and determination of the board of supervisors made in pursuance of the act authorizing it to lay out or discontinue state roads to be recorded in the records of the board and to be signed by the chairman and clerk, is mandatory, and in the absence of such authenticated record the presumption that public officers perform their duty cannot sustain the action taken.—Pearsall v. Eaton County Sup'rs, 71 Mich. 438.

§ 133. Condemnation and payment of damages.

Causing or procuring vacation as injury to other owner's right of access, see also post ¶ 704.
General law of condemnation proceedings, see Eminent Domain.
Impairment or vacation of highway use or access as a "taking," see Eminent Domain § 25.
Provisions as to damages from discontinuance or vacation, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4525.

¶ 475. Abutting lot owners have an interest in the land embraced in a public alley, and the city council has no right, under How. St. § 2622, which authorizes it to vacate alleys in the city whenever it shall deem the same a public improvement, and provides that if, in so doing, it shall be necessary to take or use private property, the same may be taken in the manner provided for taking private property, for public use, to vacate part of said alley, without first compensating said abutting lot owners for any damages by them sustained, though their lots may not abut upon the portion so vacated.—Horton v. Williams, 99 Mich. 423.

¶ 476. One who has no property abutting upon a street which has been vacated and no private way connecting with it, cannot recover damages for the closing of the street.—Beutel v. West Bay City Sugar Co., 132 Mich. 587.

§ 134. Landowners entitled to object.

Grounds for objection, see also ante ¶¶ 438, 439.
Persons entitled to notice, see ante § 131.
Persons entitled to damages for vacation, see ante § 133.
Vested rights against discontinuance or vacation, see Constitutional Law § 247.

¶ 477. Persons not abutting owners and having no interest in the fee of a vacated street, cannot question the legality of the vacation proceedings.—Curtis v. Charlevoix Golf Ass'n, 178 Mich. 50.

¶ 478. Under How. St. § 1298, which requires notice to be given to owners and occupants of land through or adjoining which it is proposed to discontinue a highway, only such persons can complain of a discontinuance, one whose premises lie beyond an intervening street which he must cross to reach the discontinued way, and which street which communicates in various directions and furnishes abundant guards against isolation, cannot complain.—Kimball v. Homan, 74 Mich. 699.

¶ 479. A discontinuance of highway which necessitates the making of a short turn by a nearby property owner and his selecting either of two roads a little distance away, instead of going to a neighboring city by an unbroken straight line, is not a tangible grievance to his convenience of passage.—Kimball v. Homan, 74 Mich. 699.

¶ 480. A complainant who is not materially injured in his means of ingress and egress is not entitled to enjoin a city from closing an alley.—Schmolt v. Nagel, 151 Mich. 502.

§ 135. Estoppel, waiver and cure of defects in vacation.

Conclusiveness of record as to grounds and necessity, see ante § 132.
Amendments of record to cure proceedings, see ante § 132.
Correct final decision as curing intermediate defects, see also post ¶ 486.
Power of legislature to cure proceedings, see post ¶ 506.

¶ 481. Where the action of highway commissioners in altering and practically vacating part of a highway had for twelve years been accepted as valid by the public and by all concerned in the premises, the public authorities cannot set up the irregularity of their own proceedings, and thus acquire for public use, without compensation, land embraced in the vacated road.—Lyle v. Lesia, 64 Mich. 16.

¶ 482. A small portion of a street that had been opened under an invalid statute was afterward discontinued so that travel was deflected from a straight line at its outlet, but the distance to be traveled was not substantially increased. The discontinued part had never been completed as a street, and was taken for business purposes and fenced in. Before this a curb had been run across it where its original outlet had been. Held, that private citizens could not maintain a bill to remove obstructions and compel the reopening of the street, especially if they raised no objection until several years after these changes were made, and showed no grievance more substantial than a mere sidetracking of the street without other inconvenience.—Bauman v. Campau, 58 Mich. 444.

¶ 483. Where proceedings to discontinue a highway were void as to any of the parties they are invalid as to all, and the fact that a life tenant and occupant not served with the statutory notice took no proceedings to establish the invalidity of the proceedings does not cure any invalidity.—Hatt v. Township Board of Napoleon, 144 Mich. 266.

§ 136. Vacation by judicial proceedings.

Concurrent powers of courts and city council, see also ante § 125.
Concurrent jurisdiction of vacation proceedings, see also Courts ¶ 225.

¶ 484. The power of the courts to vacate a city street upon petition of the abutting landowners is not necessarily subject to the acquiescence of the city authorities. It should, however, when opposed by them, be sparingly exercised.—In re Albers' Petition, 113 Mich. 640.

¶ 485. Proceedings for the vacation of a street cannot be brought in the courts after the city council has lawfully acted upon a petition for the same purpose, unless a change in circumstances is shown which justifies it.—Detroit Real Estate Inv. Co. v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 137 Mich. 108.

§ 137. Judicial review of or relief from vacation proceedings.

Persons entitled to relief or protection, see also ante § 134.
Judicial vacation after refusal of council to vacate, see ante ¶ 485.
Pendency of certiorari as bar to new proceeding to widen way, see ante ¶ 427.
Delay as objection to certiorari to review discontinuance, see Certiorari § 23.
Proper respondents to certiorari to review vacation, see Certiorari § 26.

¶ 486. If, on presentation of a proper petition to vacate a portion of a state road, the board of supervisors acquire jurisdiction to act, and do not in their final determination of the case exceed their jurisdiction, defects in their intermediate proceedings will not invalidate their conclusion or make it subject to review on certiorari.—People ex rel. Greenman v. Shiawassee County Sup'rs, 38 Mich. 642.

¶ 487. Proceedings to vacate a highway are void unless the statutory notice is given beforehand to owners and occupants of lands that will be affected thereby. And where the petition for certiorari to review the proceedings avers that there was no notice, and the return does not show that there was any, it is assumed that there was no service.—Ross v. Taylor Township Highway Com'rs, 32 Mich. 301.

¶ 488. The fact that a street is made less conspicuous by discontinuing a portion of it is too shadowy a grievance, if depreciation in the value of property thereon is not shown, to sustain a bill in equity to require it to be opened again.—Bauman v. Campau, 58 Mich. 444.

¶ 489. On a suit for injunction seeking to restrain the vacation of a certain alley adjoining complainant's premises, where it appeared such vacation would result in a benefit to his premises either by adding thereto the vacated alley or by furnishing him a paved area in the rear of his premises, resulting in an enhanced value to his premises, held that the bill was properly dismissed.—Swanteck v. City of Detroit, 196 Mich. 307.

¶ 490. The members of a city council should be made parties to a bill against abutters charging collusion and fraud in vacating a street.—Curtis v. Charlevoix Golf Ass'n, 178 Mich. 50.

§ 138. Reversion or inurement to abutters.

Invalidity of vacation procured in order to obtain land by reverter, see ante ¶¶ 438, 439.

Rights of abutters in way, see post X, XI.

Conveyance of dedicator's lands in plat as carrying reverted street, see Deeds ¶ 199.

¶ 491. Upon the vacation of a street or alley the land reverts to the abutting owner or owners.—Michigan Cent. Ry. Co. v. Miller, 172 Mich. 201; Edison Illuminating Co. v. Misch, 200 Mich. 114.

¶ 492. Under Comp. Laws 1897, § 3377, How. 2nd ed., § 2522, providing that upon the vacation of a street or alley the same shall be attached to the lot or ground included in a plat and bordering on such street or alley, where an alley is vacated the land in such alley to the center of it becomes attached to an adjoining lot, and upon the sale of a specified number of feet off the part of the lot abutting on such alley, measurement must be made from the center of the alley.—Gazley v. Koepke, 195 Mich. 509.

¶ 493. Where a lot is conveyed as abutting upon a street or alley the dedication of which is to the perpetual use of the public, reserving to the dedicators, their heirs and assigns, "the reversion thereof whenever discontinued by law," the grantee takes the land to the center of the street or alley thereafter vacated.—Scudder v. City of Detroit, 117 Mich. 77.

¶ 494. Where land was conveyed to a township for a road in consideration of the abandonment of another highway, the deed not being recorded, and the new road was subsequently abandoned and the old road reopened, held that the recording of the conveyance many years later by the township did not confer any rights on it in the land therein described.—Hodges v. Township of West Bloomfield, 186 Mich. 259.

¶ 495. Where a strip three feet wide on the edge of land dedicated to a city for a street and included in the description has never been used and occupied by the public, it becomes the property of the abutting property owner.—Werner v. Hinz, 172 Mich. 360.

§ 139. Re-establishment of vacated or abandoned way.

¶ 496. Where any part of a highway has been extinguished and turned to other uses, it cannot be renewed without the same methods of dedication or user which would turn other lands into public ways.—Cooper v. City of Detroit, 42 Mich. 584.

¶ 497. Where a highway is vacated conditionally it is not re-established by the suspension of the conditional occupation.—Cooper v. City of Detroit, 42 Mich. 584.

¶ 498. The use of a highway, as such, for eight years after its discontinuance by the board of supervisors of the county, makes it a public highway by virtue of such subsequent user, under How. St. § 1315, which provides that "all roads which have been or which may hereafter be laid out and not recorded, and which shall have been used eight years or more, shall be deemed public highways."—Curry v. Place, 99 Mich. 524.

VII. HIGHWAY OFFICERS AND DISTRICTS.

§ 140. In general; authority, powers and duties.

Power and jurisdiction of township highway commissioner, see ante §§ 27, 28.

Relative powers of highway and drain commissioners, see ante § 108.

Adoption and election for township, county or general system of control, see post § 141.

Control over state roads, see post § 142.

Power to raise money, see post § 146.

Power of county road commissioners as to building sidewalks, see ante § 106.

Power to alter established way, see ante § 115.

Establishment and changes of grade, see ante § 118.

Power to abandon or vacate, see ante § 125.

Nonjudicial character of proceedings, by officers to vacate, see ante ¶ 451.

Duty to institute summary proceedings to remove obstruction, see post § 187.

Proper party plaintiff in action for injury to road or bridge, see post § 192.

Necessity of record to support presumption of duty regularly done, see also ante ¶ 474.

General law of officers, see Officers.

Law of officers peculiar to township officers and not peculiar to highway administration, see Townships, V.

Encroachment on constitutional office of highway commissioner, see Constitutional Law ¶ 1132.

Authority of township highway commissioners to lay out highways, see also Eminent Domain ¶ 17.

Officers empowered to act in granting franchises or permits for use of streets for street railways, see Street Railways, I.

Road districts for purpose of taxation, see Taxes, IV.

Duty to maintain bridge over race, see Mills.

For statutes relating to the official organization of cities and villages, see the respective charters.

Power of legislature to prescribe powers and duties of boards of supervisors, county and district road commissioners, and township highway commissioners and overseers in relation to highways, see Const. art. VIII § 26 (amendment of 1917).

Powers granted county road commissioners and state highway commissioner, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 125, amending Comp. L. 1915, § 4672.
State highway department and its duties for promoting construction of roads, see Comp. L. 1915, §§ 4378-4394.
Officer under state reward system, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4378 et seq.
General statutory duties of commissioners and overseers, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4471 et seq.
Miscellaneous provisions relating to officers (duties of clerk, administration of oaths by commissioner, power to examine witnesses, fees of officers, etc.), see Comp. L. 1915, § 4477 et seq.
Powers and duties of the board of supervisors, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4518 et seq.
Powers and duties of supervisors, see Comp. L. 1915, § 2288 et seq.
Quorum required for board of county road commissioners, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 356, amending Comp. L. 1915, § 4355.
Election, tenure and power of good roads commissioners, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 268, amending Comp. L. 1915, § 4341.
Election and tenure of county road commissioners, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 356, amending Comp L. 1915, § 4352 et seq.
Election, tenure, salary and duties of state highway commissioner, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 177, amending Comp. L. 1915, § 4379.

¶ 499. Highway commissioners are constitutional officers (Const. art. XI, § 1), and no provision has been made by law subjecting them to the general direction of the township.—Burnham v. Township of Byron, 46 Mich. 555.

¶ 500. Highway commissioners and township boards have no authority to act for the mere purpose of settling boundaries, and cannot properly disturb any possession with that object.—Shue v. Richmond Township Highway Com'rs, 41 Mich. 638.

¶ 501. The care and supervision of all highways and bridges is in the hands of the highway commissioners of the several townships in which they are situated.—Delta Lumber Co. v. Board of Auditors & Wayne County Sup'rs, 71 Mich. 572.

¶ 502. State agents appointed by the governor under an act of the legislature to improve a highway cannot become town officers by acquiescence. The town has no share in their appointment, and they interfere with the functions of such town officers as are constitutionally provided for.—People ex rel. Hubbard v. Springwells Township Board, 25 Mich. 153.

¶ 503. Boards of supervisors have no control over roads not state or territorial; they cannot raise money except for their own roads.—Attorney General v. Bay County Sup'rs, 34 Mich. 47.

§ 141. Township and county systems or general plan of control.

Refund to township of sums spent on state reward roads, see post § 153.
General law of elections not involving matters peculiar to voting on submitted questions, see Elections.
Constitutional provisions for county, district or township road systems, see Const. art. VIII, § 26.
Power of legislature to provide by law for submission question of adoption of county road system to electors of counties, see Const. art. VIII, § 26 (amendment of 1917).
Statutory provisions relating to "good roads districts," see Comp. L. 1915, § 4337 et seq.
Proceedings for formation of good roads district, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 268, amending Comp. L. 1915, § 4342.
Provisions for county road system, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4347 et seq.
Statutory provisions establishing county road system in various counties of state and creating county highway department, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 305.
Provisions for system of highway labor tax in working roads, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4612 et seq.
Rights of townships operating under township highway system, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 271, amending Comp. L. 1915, § 4377.
Jurisdiction of board of county road commissioners over county road system, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 356, amending Comp. L. 1915, § 4364.

¶ 504. Pub. Acts 1895, No. 230, providing that a township might adopt a township road system, is repealed by implication in so far as it relates to Saginaw County, by Loc. Acts 1899, No. 419, as amended by Loc. Acts 1901, No. 335, providing for the control and improvement of the roads in Saginaw County and the raising of funds therefor, the provisions of the latter act being inconsistent with the right of any township within that county to control its own roads under a township system.—Saginaw Co. Sup'rs v. Hubinger, 137 Mich. 72.

¶ 505. Under Const. art. IV, § 49, providing for the adoption of county road systems by a majority vote of the electors of the county, a majority of the votes cast at the election is sufficient.—Shearer v. Board of Supervisors of Bay County, 128 Mich. 552.

§ 142. Control over state roads.

Establishment of state highways, see ante II, B, 6.
Refund to townships of amounts spent on state reward roads, see post § 153.
Local control over state roads, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4313.

¶ 506. The legislature has power by mere enactment to vacate or alter a state road, and it may consequently confirm the irregular action of the supervisors to the same end.—People ex rel. Bristol v. Ingham County Sup'rs, 20 Mich. 96.

¶ 507. The board of supervisors having full control over the opening, altering and discontinuing of state and territorial roads, the exercise of such power by highway commissioners was repugnant thereto.—People ex rel. Goldsmith v. Nankin Highway Com'rs, 15 Mich. 347.

§ 143. Contract by or with boards and officers.

Contracts for construction and rights of parties, see also ante § 105.
Borrowing money or incurring debt for tools and machinery, see post § 149.
Relative powers of commissioner and board as to allotment of moneys, see post ¶ 521.
Public contracts for road and bridge work or construction, see Public Contracts; Townships, III.

¶ 508. Highway commissioners have no authority to contract with persons who have not themselves bid for work that under the statutes can only be let on sealed proposals.—Beard v. Burdell Township Clerk, 58 Mich. 245.

¶ 509. A board of county road commissioners of a county which has adopted the county road system pursuant to Act No. 283, P. A. 1909, How. 2nd Ed., § 2173, may purchase road construction machinery without advertising for bids therefor.—Brandt v. Luce, 177 Mich. 184.

¶ 510. The power of the board of county road commissioners to purchase machinery for road construction under Act No. 283, Public Acts 1909, How. 2nd Ed., § 2173, may be exercised when contracts for road building are let, and also when bids have been rejected and the work is performed by day labor.—Brandt v. Luce, 177 Mich. 184.

¶ 511. The board of highway commissioners may ratify an unauthorized contract for doing work which it is within their general powers to contract for, and can do so either while the work is in progress or after it is completed, by action at a meeting held pursuant to notice, or at a meeting of all the members without notice; but the members of the board severally have no such power.—Taymouth Township v. Koehler, 35 Mich. 22.

¶ 512. A de facto commissioner of highways let a job without requiring the bidders to offer security at the time of letting, and without finishing the contract then or adjourning the proceedings to some stated day. The successful bidder some days afterwards refused to sign the contract, and the commissioner, without acting publicly, gave the job to the next higher bidder. Held, that the proceedings did not conform to the statute, and that the township treasurer could not be compelled to pay the order issued by the commissioner to the contractor.—Mackenzie v. Baraga Township Treasurer, 39 Mich. 554.

¶ 513. Plaintiff highway commissioner put his own man and team to work upon a highway. Held, he could not recover against the township for time spent in overseeing them in their work.—Baars v. Township of Laketon, 163 Mich. 665.

§ 144. Torts by officers and official misfeasances.

Responsibility of municipality or township for misdoings of officers, see Municipal Corporations, XII, XV; Townships, IV.
Penalties and forfeitures for official delinquency or misdoing, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4458 et seq.

¶ 514. The discretion of the overseer of highways, in deciding how and where he will distribute highway labor, is limited by the rights of individuals, and he and his assistants are jointly liable for the invasion of those rights; and accordingly a person sued for flooding caused by a highway ditch is not absolved by the fact that it was made under the overseer's direction.—Cubit v. O'Dett, 51 Mich. 347.

¶ 515. Highway commissioners are not liable for their action in laying out a highway where they have jurisdiction and violate no law.—Sage v. Laurain, 19 Mich. 137.

¶ 516. The penalty for violation of "the provisions of this act" provided in Pub. Acts 1891, No. 130 (Comp. L. § 4087), an amendment to a section of the general highway law adding new duties, applies only to violations of the provisions of the amending act and not to the failing to perform the duties prescribed in the various sections of the amended statute in force at that time, where the original law prescribes punishment for the neglect of duties as to which it is not expressly repealed.—Hatch v. Calhoun Circuit Judge, 127 Mich. 174.

§ 145. City and village powers.

Power to regulate motor vehicle traffic, see post § 411.
General regulative and police powers of cities and villages, see Municipal Corporations, IX.

¶ 517. A power conferred upon a common council to establish, alter, vacate, and abolish highways, streets, alleys, and public grounds within the city, does not confer absolute authority upon the common council.—Schmolt v. Nagel, 151 Mich. 502.

VIII. COSTS AND EXPENSES, FUNDS AND TAXES.

§ 146. In general.

Application and allotment of funds, see post § 147.

Borrowing money and incurring debt, see post §§ 148-150.
Apportionment of expenses among two or more townships, see post § 151.
Paying and disbursing funds, see post § 152.
Refunds or state rewards, see post § 153.
City and village powers, see post § 145.
Want of sufficient signers to petition for improvement as defense to liability for work, see ante ¶ 391.
Duty and obligation to construct and repair, see ante §§ 107-110.
Costs of procedure in street opening proceedings, see ante § 90.
Constitutional limitations on indebtedness without vote of people, see also Constitutional Law § 277.
Taxing power, limitations and purposes, see Taxes, I.
District in which property or person is taxable for roads, see Taxes, IV.
Levying the taxes, see Taxes, VII.
Working out highway tax by labor, see Taxes, III, VIII.
Accountings by official collectors and custodians for tax moneys, see Taxes, X.
Local assessments to pay for city or village improvements, see Local Improvements.
Local assessments for rural highway improvements, see Local Improvements.
General law of the fiscal affairs of cities and villages, townships and counties, see Counties; Municipal Corporations; Townships.
Provisions as to election of overseer duties and meetings under labor tax system, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4612 et seq.
Highway taxes and the assessment thereof, see Comp. L. 1915, ¶ 4492 et seq.
Highway tax provisions, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4318 et seq.
Provisions as to labor tax, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4614 et seq.
Provisions for improvements to be paid for by local assessments, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4671 et seq.
Provisions relating to cost and expenses of bridges, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4415 et seq.

¶ 518. Boards of supervisors have control of none but state and territorial roads, and cannot raise money for others.—Attorney General v. Bay County Sup'rs, 34 Mich. 47.

§ 147. Application and allotment of funds.
Provisions as to funds in fourth class cities, see Comp. L. 1915, § 3213 et seq.
Maintenance and upkeep of state rewarded roads, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 356, amending Comp. L. 1915, § 4389.
Manner in which commissioners may expend improvement fund, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 332, amending Comp. L. 1915, § 4327.

¶ 519. Highway funds may be appropriated to work highways by user as well as those laid out by statute.—Peninsula Iron & Lumber Co. v. Township of Crystal Falls, 60 Mich. 510, ¶ 520. The word "townships," as used in Laws 1887, Act No. 200, § 5, which provided that "all money-tax assessed and collected within any township for highway purposes shall be expended within the limits of the township on which the same may be assessed," and in Laws of 1889, Act No. 274, which substantially re-enacts the same provision, means surveyed townships and not political townships.—Manistee Lumber Co. v. Township of Springfield, 92 Mich. 277.

¶ 521. Pub. Acts 1907, No. 108, dividing taxes for highway purposes into a road repair tax and a highway improvement tax, and determining the method of expenditure, and amount to be used under the supervision of the township board, is inconsistent with and repeals by implication Pub. Acts 1907, No. 37, § 3, authorizing the highway commissioners of a township to buy material for purposes approved by the township board.—Reimink v. Strabbing, 157 Mich. 332.

§ 148. Borrowing money or incurring debt.
For road machinery, see post § 149.
For bridge work or construction, see post § 150.
Powers of supervisors to raise money for roads, see also ante ¶ 503.
General law of municipal and public bonds, see Municipal Bonds.
Provisions relative to township road bonds, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4499 et seq.

¶ 522. Highway commissioners can only act when authorized; there is no general presumption that they can bind their township by obligations which they may see fit to issue, and if, in a proceeding to enforce such obligations, there is no finding of their authority to issue them, it must be assumed that none existed.—Hosier v. Higgins Township Board, 45 Mich. 340.

¶ 523. The amount of money which the board of supervisors can authorize a township to raise by tax or loan in any one year to build or repair roads or bridges under How. St. § 483, subd. 15, is limited to $1,000. —Newaygo County Mfg. Co. v. Echtinaw, 81 Mich. 416.

¶ 524. The right of the commissioner of highways to expend $1,000 in the building and repairing of bridges in his township during the year, and to cause said sum to be certified to the supervisor for assessment (How. St. §§ 1379, 1380), is not affected by the voting of a labor and money tax by the electors under How. St. § 1327; such tax is not intended to meet anything but the ordinary improvement of highways and bridges during the year.—Longyear v. Aplin, Auditor General, 72 Mich. 415.

§ 149. ——For road tools and machinery.

¶ 525. Comp. L. 1897, § 4194, authorizes a highway commissioner to contract for and purchase on instalments a road machine, and his power to contract is derived from a properly signed and certified petition of a majority of the taxpayers representing more than one half of the taxable property in the district "to be ascertained by the last preceding assessment roll," accordingly a petition signed by less than one half of the taxpayers or representing less than one half of the taxable property would confer no greater authority upon the commissioner to contract than though no petition had been presented to him.—Indiana Road Machine Co. v. Keeney, 147 Mich. 184.

¶ 526. Under Act No. 283, P. A. 1909, How. 2nd Ed., 2173, providing that the board of county road commissioners may incur liability for an amount not exceeding three-fourths of the tax on hand. Held, a payment for machinery, portion of the cost being deferred, is valid, and must be charged only on the fund in hand.—Brandt v. Luce, 177 Mich. 184.

¶ 527. Sections 8 and 10 of Act No. 108, Pub. Acts 1907, permit the borrowing of money by townships for the purchase of road tools only after the tax therefor has been determined.—Power v. Gray, 186 Mich. 646; Power v. Balitz, 186 Mich. 652.

¶ 528. Sections 8 and 10 of Act. No. 108, Pub. Acts 1907, do not authorize the issuance of township orders for road tools payable three years after date.—Power v. Gray, 186 Mich. 646; Power v. Balitz, 186 Mich. 652.

¶ 529. A township order for road tools issued previous to the adoption of § 10 of Act No. 283, Pub. Acts 1909, § 2183, How. St., 2nd Ed., and payable three years after date without the authorization of the electors under § 2269, Comp. Laws 1897, § 1326, How. St., 2nd Ed., is void.—Power v. Gray, 186 Mich. 646; Power v. Balitz, 186 Mich. 652.

§ 150. ——For bridge work or construction.

Power to raise money for bridge repairs, see also ante ¶ 381.

¶ 530. Highway commissioners have no authority to involve the township in debt at their discretion for building bridges.—Hosier v. Higgins Townshp Board, 45 Mich. 340.

¶ 531. Comp. L. 1897, § 4131, requiring the voters of a township to pass upon the raising of more than $2,000 for building or repairing any bridge in a township, relates to bridges wholly within the township and does not forbid the raising of a larger sum in each of two townships for a boundary line bridge as provided by Comp. L. 1897, §§ 4051-4056.—Ionia Sup'rs v. Ionia Circuit Judge, 134 Mich. 412.

§ 151. Apportionment of expense of joint or boundary roads and bridges.

¶ 532. Laws of 1889, Act No. 230 (How. St. § 1387a et seq.), which provides for the building, etc., of bridges on county-line roads at the joint expense of the adjoining townships, does not affect a pre-existing agreement between townships made under How. St. § 1307, and long acted upon, whereby one township is charged with the duty of maintaining a certain part of the road with the bridge thereupon.—Stitt v. Casterline, 89 Mich. 239.

¶ 533. An allotment of maintenance of a dividing highway made between two townships is valid and effective after having been acted upon for 27 years, although the record does not show that notice was given of the meeting at which the allotment was made.—Brophy v. Schindler, 126 Mich. 341.

¶ 534. Laws of 1857, Act No. 164, although broad enough in its title to repeal all of chapter 25 of Revised Statutes 1846, providing in the body of the act that all acts in contravention are repealed, does not repeal Comp. L. 1857, § 1070, which provides for allotment of township line roads; a reallotment of a road is therefore valid.—Brophy v. Schindler, 126 Mich. 341.

¶ 535. In the absence of constitutional restrictions the legislature has power to provide for the erection of a bridge between two townships, and to repose in the board of supervisors the duty of determining the relative proportion of costs for each township.—Ionia County Sup'rs v. Ionia Circuit Judge, 134 Mich. 412.

§ 152. Payments and disbursements.

Illegality in making of contract as bar to payment for work, see also ante ¶ 512.
Orders payable in the future for road machinery, see also ante ¶ 529.
Orders on township or county treasurers and township or county warrants for payment, see Townships, VI; Counties, VI.
Certification, allotment and grant of state swamp lands for compensation for road work, see Public Lands, IV.
Provisions relating to highway orders and payment of same, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4556 et seq.

¶ 536. Highway commissioners cannot bind their township by a partial payment for work which the township could not have authorized; such as the digging of a sewer within another jurisdiction.—Sault Ste. Marie Highway Com'rs v. Van Dusan, 40 Mich. 429.

§ 153. Refunds for sums spent on state reward roads.

Accountings for taxes collected and disbursed, see Taxes, X.
Rewards and aids payable under state reward system, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4378 et seq.
Roads meriting state reward and amounts thereof, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 356, amending Comp. L. 1915, § 4387.

Additional reward for increase in percentage of gravel in road construction, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 85.
Annual repair reward for maintenance of state reward roads, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 356, amending Comp. L. 1915, § 4398.
Application for state rewards and procedure thereon, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 356, amending Comp. L. 1915, § 4386.
Funds paid for rewards under state reward system, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4388.

¶ 537. A township which has since the adoption of the county road system, expended for state reward roads an amount equal to that expended by the county on county roads within the township, is, under § 26 of Act No. 355, Pub. Acts 1913, entitled to the return from the county of the road taxes paid by it, since such computation is not confined to the taxes paid by the township since the passage of such section.—Township of Clearwater v. Kalkaska County Board Sup'rs, 187 Mich. 516.

¶ 538. Since the rights created between a county and a township by § 26 of Act No. 355, Pub. Acts 1913, with respect to the return to the township of road taxes paid by them, when the total equals the amount expended by the county in county road work within such townships, are not contractual, a retrospective construction of the act, by basing a township's right to such return on the total amount paid in road taxes since the adoption of the county road system and not since the passage of such section, is not prohibited.—Township of Clearwater v. Kalkaska County Board Sup'rs, 187 Mich. 516.

¶ 539. The provisions of Pub. Acts 1909, No. 283, chap. IV, § 27, How. 2nd Ed., § 2258, that in case any organized township shall decide to build a mile or more of state reward road as provided in section 26, as amended by Pub. Acts 1913, No. 355, chap. IV, § 26, the township board of such township shall file a written notice with the board of county road commissioners on or before the first day of May in the year in which such road is to be built, stating that it is the intention of such township to build a certain piece or pieces of road, which shall be fully described in such notice, are not a condition precedent to the right of a refund under section 26, providing that the adoption of the county road system in any county shall not prohibit any organized township from building state reward roads with money raised by tax or bonding, and that where a township raises money by bonding for such purpose the county road tax paid by such township, upon certificate by the township clerk as to amount of bonds remaining unpaid, shall be returned to the township each year to be applied in payment of such bonds until they are fully paid.—Township of Coldsprings v. Kalkaska County Board Sup'rs, 195 Mich. 109.

¶ 540. A demand by a township, which had issued bonds and expended the money for the building of state reward roads, under Pub. Acts 1909, No. 283, chap. IV, § 26, How. 2nd Ed., § 2257, as amended by Pub. Acts 1913, No. 355, chap. IV, § 26, for a return of the county road taxes of the preceding year held to be timely, although the county had expended such taxes in the regular channels of the county road business.—Township of Coldsprings v. Kalkaska County Board Sup'rs, 195 Mich. 109.

¶ 541. Compliance with Pub. Acts 1909, No. 283, chap. IV, § 27, How. 2nd Ed., § 2258, providing that the township board of any township deciding to build one or more miles of state reward roads shall give notice thereof to the county road commissioners before May 1st, and requiring that the county road commissioners furnish engineers or surveyors, and, if it be the piece of road the county road commissioners intend to improve, it shall be constructed in accordance with the plans of the county board, is not a condition precedent to the right to a refund under the provisions of section 26, How. 2nd Ed., § 2215, providing that the adoption of the county road system in any county shall not prohibit any organized township from building state reward roads with money raised by tax or by bonding and in townships where money has been raised by bonding to build such roads, the township clerk shall certify to the board of supervisors, at the annual meeting thereof, the amount of bonds remaining unpaid, and the county road tax paid by such township shall be returned to the township each year to be applied in payment of such bonds until they are fully paid, and that no township shall be entitled to the return of its county road tax until it shall have paid as much money in county road taxes as may have been expended on county roads within such township by commissioners.—Township of Clearwater v. Kalkaska County Board Sup'rs, 195 Mich. 323. (Ostrander, J., dissenting.)

¶ 542. Under Pub. Acts 1909, No. 283, § 26, as amended by Pub. Acts 1913, No. 355, relating to the building of state reward roads by townships with moneys raised by tax or bonding and providing that in townships where money has been raised by bonding to build such roads, the township first shall certify to the board of supervisors, at the annual meeting thereof, the amount of such bonds remaining unpaid, and the county road tax paid by such township shall be returned to it each year to be applied in payment of such bonds until fully paid, but no township shall be entitled to the return of such tax until it shall have paid as much money in county road taxes as may have been expended on county roads within such township by such commissioners, if a township has paid as much money in county road taxes as has been expended on county roads within such township by county commissioner, it is entitled to the return of the whole of the road tax to be used in the payment of bonds, even though a computation shows a balance in favor of the township of less than the amount of the tax for the particular year.—Township of Clearwater v. Kalkaska County Board Sup'rs, 195 Mich. 323. (Ostrander, J., dissenting.)

¶ 543. In computing the amount of taxes expended on county roads within a township by county road commissioners there should be charged to a township not only the amount of road expenditures but its share of overhead expenses.—Township of Clearwater v. Kalkaska County Board Sup'rs, 195 Mich. 323.

IX. PUBLIC CONTROL AND REGULATION.

§ 154. In general.

Legislative control, see post ¶ 556.
Proper party plaintiff in action for injury to road or bridge, see post § 192.
Regulations of travel and use of the road, see post XIII.
Motor vehicle regulations, see post XIV.
Highway officers and districts and their powers, duties and liabilities, see ante VII, post XII.
Power of legislature and right of local self-government, see Constitutional Law §§ 81-88.
Legislative and local powers to grant rights in highways, see Constitutional Law § 81.
State supervision of roads as invasion of right of local government, see Constitutional Law § 82.
Legislative delegations of power over roads and bridges, see Constitutional Law § 89.
Constitutional police regulations of highways and surroundings, see Constitutional Law § 100 et seq.
General police and regulative powers and functions of cities and villages, see Municipal Corporations, IX.
Municipal regulative power as limited to local matters subject to state control of highways, see Municipal Corporations, IX.
Municipal power to grant use of streets, see also Franchises § 1.
Regulation and control of navigable waters in respect to bridging them for highway crossings, see Navigable Waters, II.
Constitutional guaranty of local control, see Const. art. VIII, § 28.
[Note. To cite all statutes either civil or criminal having the nature of regulations affecting or relating to highways and streets in this connection is impossible. Consult indices to the published statutes and see topics in this digest relating to the specific matter of the regulation, e. g., Crimes, II; Highways, XI; Street Railways; Railroads; Navigable Waters.]
Charter power grantable by legislature, see Comp. L. 1915, § 3807.
General highway law, see Comp. L. 1915, chap. 86.
Local control over state roads, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4313.
Control of state roads within municipalities, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4570.
For the charter powers of the various cities and villages over streets and ways, see the respective charters.
Powers of county board over roads, see Comp. L. 1915, § 2288 et seq.
Statutes relating to good roads districts and to county road system, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4337 et seq.
Regulative powers of supervisors, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4518 et seq.
Supervisory power and control in fourth class cities, see Comp. L. 1915, § 3087 et seq.

¶ 544. A city street includes not alone the roadbed, but sidewalks, and the city's jurisdiction and control extend over the entire street dedicated to travel on foot as well as travel in vehicles.—In re O'Brien, 119 Mich. 540.

¶ 545. The general power over streets, their grades and maintenance, and over bridges, which is usually possessed by cities must be considered with reference to, and is limited by, the purposes and uses of public highways.—Ransom v. City of Sault Ste. Marie, 143 Mich. 661.

¶ 546. A city is divested of its control over a street only so far as conflicts with the rights of the plank road company, where its charter empowers the plank road company to take the street and construct thereon a plank road with toll gates and obliges it to keep the road in repair.—Bagg v. City of Detroit, 5 Mich. 336.

§ 155. Judicial control and supervision.

Review of matters relating to construction and repairs, see also ante § 114.
Judicial vacation proceedings, see ante § 136.
General doctrines as to want of judicial power to encroach on or control administrative functions of government, see Constitutional Law, II; and see also Injunctions; Mandamus.

¶ 547. Courts cannot interfere with municipal control over the question as to what streets shall be opened and worked, and how and when. Nor has a court of equity the means or process for executing the decision of such questions.—Bauman v. Campau, 58 Mich. 444.

¶ 548. Courts cannot control municipal discretion as to when or where walks shall be laid in streets.—Irving v. Ford, 65 Mich. 241.

X. TITLE AND ESTATE OF THE PUBLIC; PERMISSIBLE USES AND RIGHTS OF ABUTTERS.

§ 156. In general; nature of public estate.

Quantum of estate to be taken or condemned for streets, see ante § 67.
Nature and extent of abutters' rights, see post § 160.
Nonabutters' rights on vacation of way, see ante §§ 133, 134.
Loss of public rights by abandonment and nonuser, see ante § 129.
Legislative release of public rights, see also ante § 126.
Alterations, extensions and changes, see ante V.
Abandonment and vacation, see ante VI.
Acquiescence between public and abutter as to boundary line as determinative of title and estate of public, see also ante ¶ 335.
Sufficiency of public interest to sustain ejectment against obstructor, see post § 186.
Rights of public in use of alleys, see also ante § 4, ¶¶ 11, 12, 15.
Wrongfulness of obstruction in alley, see post § 181.
Rights and easements in "private" roads laid out under statute, see post § 419.
Power to lay sidewalks, restriction to traveled portion leaving margin clear, see ante ¶ 367.
Character and extent of estates created by common law or statutory dedications, see Dedication §§ 27, 28.
Inalienability of dedicated streets, see Dedication § 29.
Private easements in roads and ways, see Easements.
Private rights by dedication, see Dedication.

¶ 549. Neither the governor and judges nor the common council had or have any power or authority to grant the exclusive use of any of the streets or alleys of the city of Detroit to individuals.—People v. Carpenter, 1 Mich. 273.

¶ 550. The title of a municipality in streets and alleys is such as to enable the public authorities to devote them to public purposes.—Edison Illuminating Co. v. Misch, 200 Mich. 114.

¶ 551. The fee in the streets is in the abutting owners, and the municipality has merely an easement in and over them.—Werner v. Hinz, 172 Mich. 360.

¶ 552. The City of Detroit has no proprietary interest in the land in its streets.—In re Albers' Petition, 113 Mich. 640.

¶ 553. A city has no such interest in its streets as will authorize it to bring ejectment to oust a street railway therefrom.—City of Detroit v. Detroit United Ry., 172 Mich. 136, aff'd in 229 U. S. 39, 57 L. ed. 1056, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 697.

¶ 554. The fee to an alley is in the municipality in trust for the public.—Edison Illuminating Co. v. Misch, 200 Mich. 114.

¶ 555. Where a municipal corporation acquires land for a public highway, the easement thereon belongs to the State, and the city has no right to its possession, other than the public generally.—Graham v. City of Detroit, 174 Mich. 538.

¶ 556. All public highway easements are subject to control or extinguishment by legislative authority.—Horn v. People, 26 Mich. 221; Cooper v. City of Detroit, 42 Mich. 584.

§ 157. Proper highway uses and additional servitudes.

Necessity of paying damages for addition of use or servitude, see post § 158.
Subsurface rights and easements, see post § 166.
Improper or unauthorized structures in way as nuisances, see post § 168 et seq.
[Note. The propriety of devoting highways to uses for the service of the public other than vehicular and foot travel is treated here, but the right of a street railway corporation, telephone line or pipe line or other public utility to use and occupy the streets and the necessity and sufficiency of a grant, franchise or permit, together with the terms and conditions attending the right, are treated in specific topics referred to hereafter.]
Use of highway for public drain, see Drains § 22.
Rights of street and other railroads to use streets, grants of such rights, permits and licenses, and conditions upon such use, see Street Railways, I, III; Railroads, I, III, IV.
Rights of telegraph, telephone and wire lines to use streets and conditions on such use, see Telegraphs.
Right to use highway for toll road and conditions on grant or permit, see Toll Roads.
Rights of water companies to lay pipes in streets and conditions on grants or permits, see Waters, VI.
Power to lease terminus of street for dock or wharf, see also Wharves.
Dedication as implied consent to all ordinary servitudes, see Dedication § 30.
Reservation in deed of right to construct railways in streets, see Deeds ¶ 252.
Right of railroad to cross highway with tracks, see Railroads, III.
Right to condemn land for railroad purposes in street independently of city franchise, see Eminent Domain ¶ 22.
General regulative power of city or village over streets, see Municipal Corporations, IX, D.
Construction of ordinances granting rights in streets, see Municipal Corporations, VI.

Effect of general statute to abrogate municipal power to grant uses in highway, see Municipal Corporations, VI, IX.
Constitutional requirement of local municipal consent to use of streets or roads by public service lines, see Const. art. VIII, § 28.
Provisions relative to grants of franchises on highways, see Comp. L. 1915, chap. 90.
Distance from center line for poles set along way, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4408.

¶ 557. City streets are not exclusively for the passage of persons and vehicles, but for all the other purposes to which it is customary to devote them.—Henkel v. City of Detroit, 49 Mich. 249.

¶ 558. The right of public utilities to use alleys as well as streets, with proper municipal consent, is expressly recognized by the constitution, art. VIII, § 28.—Edison Illuminating Co. v. Misch, 200 Mich. 114.

¶ 559. The use of a public highway by a street railway company is a legitimate use and does not create any additional servitude.—Smith v. Jackson & Battle Creek Traction Co., 137 Mich. 20; Austin v. Detroit, Y. & A. A. Ry., 134 Mich. 149.

¶ 560. A street railway operated by steam or electricity is an additional servitude upon a street or highway.—Nichols v. Ann Arbor & Y. Street R. Co., 87 Mich. 361, per Long and Grant, JJ.

¶ 561. The use of a street by an ordinary street railway does not create an additional servitude.—People ex rel. Kunze v. Fort Wayne & E. R. Co., 92 Mich. 522.

¶ 562. The use of streets in a city for street railway purposes is not an additional servitude.—Mannel v. Detroit, Mt. C. & M. City Ry., 139 Mich. 106.

¶ 563. The use of streets for street railway purposes is a legitimate use, and the general powers vested in a city by its charter "to open, close, and widen streets" and "to prescribe, control, and regulate the manner in which the highways, streets, avenues," etc., "shall be used and enjoyed" are powers broad enough to permit the city to consent to the use of its streets for such purposes by any company having the requisite franchises of a street railway.—Detroit Citizens' St. R. Co. v. City of Detroit, 64 Fed. 628.

¶ 564. An ordinance giving the right to construct and operate a street railway in the center of a street having a drive-way twenty-five feet wide, so as to leave nearly nine feet on each side for the passage of vehicles, does not deprive the general public of the use of the street, nor does it create an additional servitude.—People ex rel. Kunze v. Fort Wayne & E. R. Co., 92 Mich. 522.

¶ 565. A common council cannot so multiply street railway tracks in a particular street as to interfere with the rights of the general public in the street.—Street Ry. Co. of Grand Rapids v. West Side St. Ry. Co. of Grand Rapids, 48 Mich. 433.

¶ 566. The common council of Saginaw is prohibited by Local Acts 1897, No. 465, which prevents it from granting exclusive privileges to the use of the streets, from permitting the erection of a permanent stairway occupying a part of the street where said stairway is used simply as an outside entrance to a private building.—McCormick v. Weaver, 144 Mich. 6.

¶ 567. Whether or not the common council of Saginaw has authority to authorize a stairway encroaching on the public street depends upon the temporary or permanent character of the stairway and on whether or not it would be a nuisance and obstruction; and the charter and ordinances do not authorize such construction where it is permanent in character and for private use.—McCormick v. Weaver, 144 Mich. 6.

¶ 568. The commissioners of internal improvement had no right, under the general powers conferred upon them, to appropriate a portion of a street in the city of Detroit for the purpose of erecting offices and other buildings thereon.—Cooper v. Alden, H. 72.

¶ 569. The common council of Detroit had no right, though acting under a resolution of a public meeting of the freemen, to lease a portion of a public street to the commissioners of internal improvement for the use of the state for the purpose of a railroad depot and tracks connected therewith.—Cooper v. Alden, H. 72.

§ 158. Injuries and damages from added uses.

Liability of street railway to abutter for change of grade by construction of railway, see Street Railways, III.
Impairment of rights of abutting owners by laying of railroad on highway, see Eminent Domain § 23.

¶ 570. Street railways may be authorized and laid in the public streets of cities and villages without compensating the adjacent lot-owners.—Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. v. Heisel, 38 Mich. 62.

¶ 571. The legislature has power to provide that street-railway companies shall pay to abutting owners the damages caused by the construction of their roads.—Taylor v. Bay City Street R. Co., 80 Mich. 77.

¶ 572. Where a municipality has power, derived from the legislature, to accommodate streets to a new use consistent with and in aid of the general use to which streets are devoted, abutting owners whose property is not taken have no remedy for consequential injuries unless the legislature gives them one.—City of Detroit v. Grand Trunk Ry. of Canada, 163 Mich. 229.

¶ 573. The streets of a city may be used for any purpose which is a necessary public one and the abutting owner will not be entitled to a new compensation in the absence of a statute giving it. Therefore, the uses of a street which in no wise interferes with the rights of the abutting owner does not impose a new burden and servitude in addition to what was implied by the dedication.—Detroit City Ry. v. Mills, 85 Mich. 634.

¶ 574. Inasmuch as the abutting owner on condemning land for the use of streets and highways receives as damages the full market value of his land, afterwards there is no such thing as damage to his reversionary interest caused by a use which is not a public one and adds no additional servitude.—Detroit City Ry. v. Mills, 85 Mich. 634.

¶ 575. The setting in a street of poles to aid in the propulsion of street cars by electricity is not, it seems, such a taking of private property as requires a previous condemnation and compensation.—Detroit City R. v. Mills, 85 Mich. 634.

¶ 576. The use of a street for an electric railroad operated with poles and overhead wires is not an additional servitude for which abutting owners are entitled to compensation.—Dean v. Ann Arbor St. R. Co., 98 Mich. 330.

¶ 577. How. St., chaps. 100, 101, authorizing construction along public highways of telegraph lines, are not repugnant to Const., art. 15, § 9, requiring compensation to be made before any person's property is taken by a corporation for public use.—People v. Eaton, 100 Mich. 208.

¶ 578. Condemnation of right of way is unnecessary for an ordinary street electric railway.—Nieman v. Detroit Suburban St. R. Co., 103 Mich. 256.

¶ 579. A street railway company organized under How. St., ch. 94, has no power to construct and operate a railroad along the side of the traveled portion of the public country highway with the consent of the township authorities upon a road-bed not conforming to its grade, but made by means of cuts and fills, without compensation to abutting land-owners; and the construction and operation of such a road will be perpetually enjoined in behalf of such owners.—Nichols v. Ann Arbor & Y. Street R. Co., 87 Mich. 361.

¶ 580. The owner of an abutting premises cannot complain that an electric interurban road is placed on his side of a highway where it is made suitable for crossing between his house and the highway.—Austin v. Detroit, Y. & A. A. Ry., 134 Mich. 149.

¶ 581. The dedication of a street to the public does not authorize it to be used for an ordinary railroad track; and the municipal representatives cannot authorize it to be so used without compensation to adjacent owners.—Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. v. Heisel, 38 Mich. 62; Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. v. Heisel, 47 Mich. 393.

¶ 582. The city of Detroit may build a bridge where necessary for safe passage over a railroad in one of its streets, subject, however, to the payment of damages when such building injures private property.—Schneider v. City of Detroit, 72 Mich. 240.

§ 159. Common rights other than travel.

¶ 583. There is no common of pasture in highways.—Campau v. Konan, 39 Mich. 362.

§ 160. Abutters' rights in general.

Title to fee of street, see also ante § 156.
Rights of access and right to make connections and intersecting driveways, see post § 161.
Rights in blind streets or disconnected ways, see post § 162.
Rights in soil, products and trees, see post §§ 163, 164.
Rights in sidewalks and similar appurtenances, see post § 165.
Subsurface uses and easements, see post §§ 166, 167.
Right of reverter on vacation or discontinuance of way, see ante § 138.
Actionable change of grade, see ante § 119.
Damages for separation of grades, see ante § 121.
Right to damages on vacation of way, see ante § 133.
Railroad crossing viaduct as additional servitude, see ante ¶ 582.
Laying railway on one side of street, see ante ¶ 580.
Right to damages for additional use or servitude, see ante § 158.
Rights in private roads laid out under the statutes, see post § 419.
Right to construct cattle passes and culverts, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4560 et seq.
Duty as to care of hedges, see Comp. L. 1915, §§ 4564, 4565.
Right to complain of drain on highway, see also post ¶ 641.
Effect of dedication and rights passed thereby, see Dedication § 27 et seq.
Terms of deed or record thereof or possession or other fact as notice of rightful fee ownership in street, see Notice and Record of Title.
Effect of deeds to combine fee of street in owner on one side, see Deeds ¶ 91.
Thread or side line of street or way as boundary line, see Boundaries § 19.
Duty of landowners to fence way and liability of owners of animals straying on land, see Fences; Animals.

Rights of abutting owners as to trespassing or straying animals, see Animals §§ 4, 7.
Measure of damage for abutters who do not own soil in street, see Eminent Domain ¶¶ 154-155, 158, 162.
Quantum or character of easement in abutters where street is not accepted and public, see Easements ¶ 110.
Acts on highway as trespass on improved lands of abutter, see Crimes ¶ 439.
Responsibility of township for trespassing acts of officers, see Townships, IV, V.

¶ 584. A lot owner sustains a three-fold relation to the street, (1) as one of the general public, (2) as owner of the reversionary interest to the center of the street, (3) as owner of a lot, possessed of the right of ingress and egress to and from the street. —Detroit City Ry. v. Mills, 85 Mich. 634.

¶ 585. An abutting owner has a right to plant trees, build sidewalks, and do such other acts in the half of a platted street in front of his lots as do not interfere with the public use.—Smeberg v. Cunningham, 96 Mich. 378.

¶ 586. An abutting property owner has the right, as against all the world and even against a municipality, to occupy and use the street in any reasonable manner, so long as public traffic is not interfered with.—Crosby v. City of Greenville, 183 Mich. 452.

¶ 587. Whether the owner of premises fronting upon a city street has the same rights in the street as a proprietor bounded on an ordinary highway, quære.—Bissell v. Collins, 28 Mich. 277.

¶ 588. Purchasers of lots on the governor and judge's plan of Detroit have no other or greater rights in the streets or alleys than if the plan had been laid out by an individual who had legally dedicated the streets and alleys.—Cooper v. Alden, H. 72.

¶ 589. The rights of abutters whose land was condemned for a boulevard in Detroit in 1890 are governed by Local Acts 1889, No. 388, under which the condemnation was had, and not by the former Local Acts 1879, No. 374, which was expressly repealed.—Turner v. City of Detroit, 104 Mich. 326.

§ 161. Rights of access; walks and driveways.

Liability and remedies for injury to access, see post § 196.
Filling up ditch to gain access as "wilful" obstruction, see post ¶ 642.
Liability for injuries to users of driveways and private ways, see post § 420.
Rights in parked spaces in boulevards beside traveled way, see Parks.
Right of landowner to way over lane dedicated as approach to adjacent cemetery, see Cemeteries ¶ 3.

¶ 590. An abutting owner has the right of ingress and egress to and from his lot from an alley.—Edison Illuminating Co. v. Misch, 200 Mich. 114.

¶ 591. Abutting owners have the right of access to the highway, and one who has been cut off therefrom by the running of a ditch, or the improvement of the road, may bridge the ditch, or grade the approach to his premises; but in so doing he must not obstruct the ditch or the way.—Eagle Township Highway Com'rs v. Ely, 54 Mich. 173.

¶ 592. An abutting owner may not be deprived of ingress and egress by means of a driveway to and from his property to the highway in front of it.—Goodfellow Tire Co. v. Commissioner of Parks & Boulevards City of Detroit, 163 Mich. 249.

¶ 593. Under Act No. 374, Local Acts 1879, and its amendments, the Commissioner of Boulevards of Detroit has no authority to refuse a permit to one owning property abutting on the boulevard to make a driveway leading from his property to a boulevard, and mandamus will lies to compel said commissioner to issue the permit.—Goodfellow Tire Co. v. Commissioner of Parks & Boulevards City of Detroit, 163 Mich. 249.

§ 162. Rights in cul de sac or disconnected way.

See also ante ¶ 354.
Wrongful obstruction or inclosure, see post § 180.

¶ 594. The parties interested in the adjacent lots would have a right to close a cul de sac or to regulate its use as to them should seem proper, so far, at least, as respects its use as a way for passage or travel, where it appears that there has never been any act of the public authorities accepting it, and the owners have been allowed to keep a large portion of it closed, and to erect valuable buildings upon it.—Tillman v. People, 12 Mich. 401.

¶ 595. It makes no difference in respect to the right of abutters to close a cul de sac that buildings erected along it, but since removed, were for a time used as dwellings. Any right of way dependent upon such use would cease when the buildings were removed.—Tillman v. People, 12 Mich. 401.

§ 163. Rights in soil of way or growing products.

Right in common in soil or products, see ante § 159.
Right to lateral support and injuries thereto, see post § 195.
Trees growing in way, see post § 164.
Right of abutter to prevent by force destruction of grass in unused part of road, see Assault ¶ 15.

¶ 596. The owner of the soil is not punishable for a nuisance in using any part of it in such a way as not to interfere with the public convenience.—Clark v. Lake St. Clair & Up-River Ice Co., 24 Mich. 508.

¶ 597. Grass growing on the unused part of a public highway belongs to the owner of the fee, and may be protected by such owner against wanton or malicious damage or destruction by a private person.—People v. Foss, 80 Mich. 559.

¶ 598. A landowner could not recover damages from the village for the removal of earth from the street in front of his property for the improvement of the street, where no street grade had been legally established.—Wheat v. Van Tine, 149 Mich. 314.

¶ 599. A landowner is estopped to complain of the removal of earth from the street in front of his premises by the village officers, to the extent to which such removal was authorized and assented to by him.—Wheat v. Van Tine, 149 Mich. 314.

§ 164. Trees in highway.

See also ante ¶ 585.

Notice to remove trees to be destroyed in making road, see also ante ¶ 392.

Trees as nuisances, see post § 632.

Tort liability of municipality or public service corporation for injuring trees in highway, see also Municipal Corporations, XII; Townships, IV; Street Railways; Telegraphs.

Right of telegraph or telephone lines to trim trees interfering with wires, see Telegraphs.

Statutory provisions as to shade trees in highways, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4467 et seq.

Shade trees in village streets, see Comp. L. 1915, § 2660.

Right to trees or timber on newly opened highway, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4483.

¶ 600. The owner of the land over which a highway passes may therein plant trees, set posts, and do such other acts as will add to his convenience or assist in beautifying his premises.—People's Ice Co. v. The Excelsior, 44 Mich. 229.

¶ 601. Trees in a highway are the property of the adjacent owner, and if they encroach on the road so as to necessitate removing them the owner is entitled to a reasonable notice in order that he may remove them for transplanting; and a highway commissioner who wantonly cuts down and sells trees in a highway is liable in trespass.—Clark v. Dasso, 34 Mich. 86.

¶ 602. Permission to road commissioners to open a highway over certain lands upon condition that they pay for timber thereon after estimate by the owner, does not give them authority to cut and sell trees within the limits of the road before the owner has made the estimate, and trees so cut and sold may be recovered by the owner in replevin.—Keweenaw Association v. O'Niel, 120 Mich. 270.

¶ 603. An abutting owner has title to shade trees on the street adjoining his premises.—Stretch v. Village of Cassopolis, 125 Mich. 167.

¶ 604. It is a trespass to cut down and remove trees without previous notice to the abutting owner so that he might protect his rights.—Stretch v. Village of Cassopolis, 125 Mich. 167; Miller v. Detroit, Ypsilanti & A. A. Ry., 125 Mich. 171.

¶ 604a. Cutting branches of trees which obstruct other proper highway uses without having given previous notice to the abutting owner is not a trespass.—Wyant v. Central Telephone Co., 123 Mich. 51.

§ 165. Sidewalks and appurtenances built by abutter.

Duty to build walks, see ante §§ 106, 107.

Removal of sidewalk and retaining wall within street lines by city in improving street as a conversion of them from owner abutting on street, see Conversion § 3, ¶ 10.

Measure of damages for removal of sidewalk in front of lot, see Damages ¶ 424.

¶ 605. Where the city authorities instructed the street commissioner to remove a cement sidewalk that had been built by the city in front of plaintiff's property, and the plaintiff had procured a decree declaring void a special assessment levied against the property for the cost thereof, in an action by plaintiff for trespass it was error to direct a verdict for the defendant, and the case should have been submitted to the jury with proper instructions upon the subject of damages, inasmuch as an actionable trespass had been proved.—Jordan v. Thorp, 142 Mich. 515.

§ 166. Subsurface uses and easements.

Vault as proper use, see also post ¶ 631.

Rights of different subsurface users and licensees toward each other, see post § 167.

Vested character of right to lay sewer, or the like, in street under grant from public, see also Constitutional Law § 247.

¶ 606. Public alleys involve easements in the nature of ways for the installation of water pipes, sewers and other urban services for the general welfare under municipal regulation.—Village of Manchester v. Clarkson, 195 Mich. 354.

¶ 607. A city having no sewer system of its own may grant to a citizen, under proper circumstances and restrictions, the right to construct a private sewer in the streets at his own expense, which may be used by him without interference by other citizens.—Boyden v. Walkley, 113 Mich. 609.

¶ 608. A clerical error in a resolution of the common council granting permission to a lot owner to construct a private sewer in the street, whereby authority was given to construct the sewer upon the "westerly" instead of the "easterly" side of the street, as contemplated by all the parties, will not abridge the rights of the owner in a sewer constructed and maintained for several years upon the easterly side.—Boyden v. Walkley, 113 Mich. 609.

§ 167. Rights and liabilities of subsurface owners and users towards each other.

¶ 609. The rights of a public heating company having its mains in an alley and the rights of its successor are in the nature of continuing easements and are superior to the rights of a mason contractor excavating for a wall to and into the alley.—Edison Illuminating Co. v. Misch, 200 Mich. 114.

¶ 610. Although a city could waive the requirement in the charter of a heating company that it obtain a permit from the department of public works for the laying of steam mains in an alley, the fact that such permit was not obtained may not be presented as a defense in an action by the assignee of such company against a mason contractor for negligence in excavating on the lot of an abutting owner, causing injury to the mains. —Edison Illuminating Co. v. Misch, 200 Mich. 114.

¶ 611. A mason contractor who has the contract for the erection of a basement for a building on a lot abutting on an alley has no right, in the prosecution of his work, to excavate to and into the alley in such a way as to interfere with existing electric conduits of a lighting company and heating mains placed there by authority of the city. —Edison Illuminating Co. v. Misch, 200 Mich. 114.

¶ 612. Evidence held to present a question for the jury as to whether there were surrounding objects and monuments sufficient to put a mason contractor excavating to and into an alley in the progress of the work of constructing a basement to a building upon notice of the presence of the conduits and heating mains of a lighting and heating company.—Edison Illuminating Co. v. Misch, 200 Mich. 114.

XI. OBSTRUCTIONS, ENCROACHMENTS AND UNAUTHORIZED USES AND INJURIES TO HIGHWAY OR ITS APPURTENANCES.

§ 168. In general.

Distinction between obstructions and encroachments, see also post ¶ 698.
Nature and extent of abutters' rights, see ante § 160.
What uses are proper and within contemplated highway servitudes, see ante § 157.
Tracks and public service lines in street, see post § 169.
Buildings and other structures, steps, platforms, awnings, etc., see post §§ 170, 171.
Vaults and other structures below surface, see post § 172.
Trees and growing things, see post § 173.
Temporary uses, see post § 174.
Assemblages and processions, see post § 175.
Unusual uses of the way, coasting, etc., see post §§ 176, 177.
Ditches and drains and interference with highway drainage, see post §§ 178, 179.
Inclosures of blind or disused ways, see post § 180.
Obstructions of alleys, see post § 181.
Prescription and estoppel in favor of obstruction, see post § 182.
Abatement, prevention and removal of obstructions and encroachments, and remedies for abating or removing, see post § 183 et seq.
Actions for injuries to highway, see post § 192.
Penalties and penal actions, see post § 193.
Injuries to or encroachments on abutter, see post §§ 194-196.
Effect on width of highway of obstructing fence, see also ante ¶ 343.
Right to fence private roads laid out under the statute, see post § 419.
General law of public and private nuisances, see Nuisances.
When highway nuisance regarded as indictable, see Nuisances, IV.
Effect of extension of city boundaries to make toll gates a nuisance by inclusion within city, see Nuisances, I.
Encroachments ripening into adverse title, see Adverse Possession §§ 2, 3, 5.
Unauthorized obstruction or structure in highway as nuisance, see also Highways § 168 et seq.
Statutory duty of commissioner to cause removal of obstructions, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4401 et seq.
What fences deemed to be encroachments, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4401.
Disposal of logs, cordwood, etc., lying along way, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4411.
Provisions as to animals running at large on streets, see Comp. L. 1915, § 7293 et seq.

¶ 613. An unauthorized obstruction across a public street is a public nuisance.—Pontiac & L. Plank-Road Co. v. Hilton, 69 Mich. 115.

¶ 614. Encroachments and obstructions in public streets not related to the use thereof as a public thoroughfare are not ipso facto nuisances.—Pastorino v. City of Detroit, 182 Mich. 5.

¶ 615. Any encroachment of a permanent nature upon a street either on or above the surface thereof, which endangers or interferes with its use, is a public nuisance.—Hass v. Booth, 182 Mich. 173.

¶ 616. Not every encroachment on a way is necessarily a nuisance.—People v. Carpenter, 1 Mich. 273; Clark v. Lake St. Clair & New Up-River Ice Co., 24 Mich. 508.

§ 169. Tracks, wires and pipe lines illegally in way.

Prescription as against abutter, see post ¶ 650.
Tracks and the like regarded as proper highway servitudes, see ante § 157.
Right of unlicensed subsurface occupier to recover for injury done by another, see ante § 167.
Nature of franchise or right to lay gas pipes in street, see Gas § 1.
Power to oust public service corporation for noncompliance with conditions, see also Gas ¶ 9.
Judicial notice as to customary placement of telegraph and telephone poles, see Evidence ¶ 121.

¶ 617. A railroad track laid in a city street under proper authority is not a public nuisance.—Felton v. Wedthoff, 185 Mich. 72.

¶ 618. A railroad which is laid in a street under authority of a city ordinance is not a nuisance, although the company has not complied with the provisions of Comp. L. of 1897, § 6234, subd. 5, How. 2nd Ed., § 6587, by making payment of damages and compensation to the adjoining owners.—Plantenga v. Grand Rapids Terminal Ry. Co., 190 Mich. 661.

¶ 619. It seems that a street railway laid in a street without authority is a nuisance.—Township of Bangor v. Bay City Traction & Electric Co., 147 Mich. 165.

¶ 620. A railway built upon a highway without authority of law is not rightfully there and the public may have it removed whether it be called an encroachment, an obstruction, or a nuisance.—Township of Bangor v. Bay City Traction & Electric Co., 147 Mich. 165.

¶ 621. While a railroad lawfully constructed on a highway and rightfully there cannot be held to be an unlawful obstruction of or an encroachment upon the highway, it is an obstruction in the sense that any structure or new use may be an obstruction to its use by the public generally.—Township of Bangor v. Bay City Traction & Electric Co., 147 Mich. 165.

¶ 622. The fact that a railway was built within the limits of a plank road by consent of complainant township, and as claimed nearer the roadway than was authorized, does not make the plank road a nuisance if there is no showing that travel is thereby made more dangerous; and especially not where it appears that if put farther to one side valuable trees would have been destroyed needlessly.—Township of Erin v. Detroit & E. Plank-Road Co., 115 Mich. 465.

§ 170. Buildings and structures in way.

Movable fruit stand in way, see also post ¶ 636.
Proper uses of way, see ante § 157.
Railroad crossing viaduct as additional servitude, see ante ¶ 582.

¶ 623. A boat house standing at the foot of a street upon public land and placed so as to prevent access to an adjoining lot is a nuisance in fact and may be abated by the owner of the lot after notice.—People v. Severance, 125 Mich. 556.

¶ 624. A fruit stand on the sidewalk of a street is a nuisance per se, which may be summarily removed by the municipality under its police power.—Pastorino v. City of Detroit, 182 Mich. 5.

§ 171. Steps, platforms, awnings and other building appurtenances.

Stairways as improper uses beyond power of council to permit, see ante § 157.

¶ 625. A flight of stairs, described in the case, within the limits of Woodward avenue, in the city of Detroit, was held to be an obstruction not authorized by the governor and judges or by the common council.—People v. Carpenter, 1 Mich. 273.

¶ 626. A permanent stairway erected on the public street and used as an entrance to a private building constitutes a nuisance.—McCormick v. Weaver, 144 Mich. 6.

¶ 627. A basement staircase opening in a sidewalk is not per se a nuisance; and permission from the municipal council to make one would itself rebut any presumption that it was.—Everett v. City of Marquette, 53 Mich. 450.

¶ 628. A roof built twelve or fifteen feet above an alley is not necessarily an obstruction, nor is anything that does not interfere with its accustomed use.—Beecher v. People, 38 Mich. 289.

¶ 629. A platform built in an alley, at the rear of a store, for convenience in transferring goods, cannot be assumed, as matter of law, to be an obstruction or a nuisance.—Bagley v. People, 43 Mich. 355.

¶ 630. A wooden awning over a sidewalk in front of a store is not per se a public nuisance.—Hawkins v. Sanders, 45 Mich. 491.

§ 172. ——Subsurface spaces and vaults.

Rights of subsurface use and liability for injury thereto, see ante §§ 166, 167.

¶ 631. Excavations, properly and safely constructed under the public streets in cities for the convenience of the owners of the premises adjoining are not unlawful; and they are not liable to be treated as nuisances if kept in repair, and the use of the street is not interrupted for an unreasonable length of time.—Fisher v. Thirkell, 21 Mich. 1.

§ 173. Trees and growing things.

Rights of abutter and the public respecting trees, see ante § 164.

Provisions for removal or suppression of noxious weeds, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4598.

¶ 632. A tree in the highway is not per se a nuisance.—Clark v. Dasso, 34 Mich. 86.

§ 174. Temporary uses interfering with travel.

See also ante ¶ 567.

¶ 633. Where one creates in a public street obstructions which in the first instance are lawfully there, but which he is bound to remove as speedily as possible, they become unlawful from the beginning if he does not remove them in a reasonable time.—Bowen v. Detroit City R. Co., 54 Mich. 496.

¶ 634. The owners of premises may make temporary and incidental uses of the public sidewalk in front of them, if they do not continue to do so for too long a time, and such invasions of the public right of travel are not in and of themselves nuisances, although they may become such if the obstructions are not removed within a reasonable time.—Maclam v. Hallam, 165 Mich. 686.

¶ 635. The length of time an obstruction may have remained in a public street does not determine its character; whether it is temporary or permanent depends upon its nature.—Pastorino v. City of Detroit, 182 Mich. 5.

¶ 636. A fruit stand located on the sidewalk of a public street is not a permanent obstruction in the sense of the term as applied to inclosures, substantial structures, steps, stairways, walls and other physical attachments to the soil of a permanent nature obtruding upon and obstructing a street. Pastorino v. City of Detroit, 182 Mich. 5.

§ 175. Processions and street assemblages.

¶ 637. Processions in city streets for political, religious, social or other demonstrations, by day or reasonable hours at night, are not necessarily nuisances, and regulation, not prohibition, unless under clear authority of the charter, is the extent of a city's power.—In re Frazee's Case, 63 Mich. 396.

§ 176. Unusual or illegal vehicular traffic.

Penalty for obstruction of way in moving buildings, etc., see Comp. L. 1915, § 4410.

¶ 638. Steam-engines as a means of locomotion in public highways are not necessarily a nuisance.—Macomber v. Nichols, 34 Mich. 212.

§ 177. Coasting or playing in way.

¶ 639. Coasting on a public street is not necessarily a nuisance, and the licensing of such a use of a city street is within the discretion of the common council, which discretion the courts will not review.—Burford v. City of Grand Rapids, 53 Mich. 98.

§ 178. Ditch or drain as encroachment or obstruction of way.

As injury to abutter's access, see also ante § 161, post § 196.

Interference with drain, see post § 179.

Right of abutter to bridge over ditch to gain access to way, see ante § 161.

¶ 640. It has always been the policy of the state to allow the use of highways for drainage purposes.—Kiley v. Bond, 114 Mich. 447.

¶ 641. An adjacent land owner complaining of the enlargement of a drain in a highway as an impairment of the highway must stand on his own equities, and cannot litigate the sufficiency of the drain proceedings to bind the highway officers or the question whether the highway will be safe for use as such with the drain widened as proposed.—Kiley v. Bond, 114 Mich. 447.

§ 179. Interference with highway ditch or drain.

Right to keep ditch open, see also post ¶ 653.

¶ 642. It is "wilfully" obstructing a public highway ditch for one who knows its character to purposely and perversely fill it up in a permanent way, even though his object is to obtain access from his lands to the highway, and the act is done under a mistaken notion of his rights.—Eagle Township Highway Com'rs v. Ely, 54 Mich. 173.

¶ 643. The defense that a ditch laid along a public highway, and used for draining water therefrom, was not legally laid out and established, cannot be pleaded in an action to recover the penalty imposed by How. St. § 1403, for wilfully placing obstructions therein.—Hines v. Darling, 99 Mich. 47.

§ 180. Inclosing disused or disconnected ways.

See also ante § 162.

Encroachments or misuse as evidence of abandonment and nonuser, see also ante ¶¶ 448-450.

Right of public to prosecute for obstruction of a cul de sac, see also ante ¶ 354.

¶ 644. The obstruction of a mere cul de sac in the interior of a city block which led into alleys that extended to public streets was held not to be a public wrong such as might be redressed by public prosecution.—People v. Jackson, 7 Mich. 432; Tillman v. People, 12 Mich. 401.

¶ 645. There is no obstruction of a street, which is a cul de sac entirely inclosed by defendants' land, by their building a fence across it which has remained for more than a year before complaint is made under a city ordinance and where there was no actual use of it; and it is error to charge that it was immaterial whether it was used or not.—People v. Wolverine Mfg. Co., 141 Mich. 455.

§ 181. Obstruction of alleys.

Overhanging roofs, see also ante ¶ 628.
Platform in alley for loading goods, see ante ¶ 629.
Municipal power respecting obstructions, see also post ¶ 699.

¶ 646. Obstructing the use of an alley is not a public wrong, but if wilful may cause such injury to individuals as will support an action for private remedy.—Bagley v. People, 43 Mich. 355.

§ 182. Prescription, estoppel and acquiescence.

Long acquiescence by the public as to location of boundary fence of abutter as binding public, see also ante ¶ 335.
Right to keep prescriptive drain open, see post ¶ 653.
Ejectment as remedy for encroachment or obstruction, see post § 186.
General doctrines of prescription, see ante II, A; and see also Easements; Adverse Possession.
Prescriptive right to maintain stairways in private joint alley, see Easements ¶ 55.
Estoppel to regard street railway as unlawfully on highway, see Estoppel ¶ 211.
Estoppel of consenting person to object to nuisance, see Nuisances, I.
Estoppel as affecting public or title to land, see Estoppel §§ 3, 10, 51.

¶ 647. The location of a highway according to the original survey is generally of no consequence where abutting owners have held continued occupancy for twenty-five years.—Shue v. Richmond Township Highway Commissioner, 41 Mich. 638.

¶ 648. The fact that an adjoining land owner kept and maintained a fence across a portion of a highway, which had been duly laid out and established by the proper authority, did not deprive it of its character as a public highway, nor did it estop such owner or his grantees from claiming it as a public highway.—Van Brunt v. Lynch, 76 Mich. 455.

¶ 649. Where a highway has been legally laid out, abutting owners are not estopped from claiming that it is a public highway for its full width by the fact that their grantor maintained a fence across a part of it for a few months.—Van Brunt v. Lynch, 76 Mich. 455.

¶ 650. A prescriptive easement to maintain a railroad track in a public street may be acquired as against an abutting owner, notwithstanding that the track constitutes a public nuisance.—Felton v. Wedthoff, 185 Mich. 72.

¶ 651. Where the only rights in a highway, title to a part of which was claimed by an abutting owner by adverse possession, obtained by such owner and his predecessors, was a permissive occupancy, such occupancy ceased when the public through its proper officers demanded the use of the entire highway.—Mendel v. Poland, 200 Mich. 571.

¶ 652. A city is not estopped to claim relief on a bill against the owner of a building to restrain the construction of a stairway within the street line from the street to the basement of the building where the only permission granted is by the common council to the predecessor in title of defendant, in face of an ordinance which gave this power to the board of public works, and the predecessor in title did not act upon the permit, and also in view of Pub. Acts 1907, No. 46, denying the right of a person to acquire title to property as against the public by adverse possession.—City of Ann Arbor v. Goodspeed Real Estate Co., 189 Mich. 165.

§ 183. Abating, preventing or removing obstruction without litigation.

Highway commissioner's order to remove, see post § 188.
Justifiable force in preventing misuse of street or alley abutting on premises, see Assault § 18.
Abatement of nuisances by personal acts without resort to judicial proceedings, see Nuisances, II.
Injunction against revocation of license to build projection into street, see Injunctions, II, F.

¶ 653. Where a ditch or drain along a public highway in front of an abutting owner's premises has existed for more than twenty years, and a highway commissioner has the right to keep it open and in good condition, an obstruction in the ditch made by the abutting owner may be removed by the highway commissioner without proceeding under Pub. Acts 1909, Act No. 283, chap. 15.—Miller v. Harmer, 173 Mich. 560.

¶ 654. A highway commissioner having by law "the general care and superintendence of highways" has such a special interest in them as to warrant him in abating a nuisance caused by obstructions as one specially aggrieved thereby, even if not entitled to bring a legal proceeding.—Neal v. Gilmore, 141 Mich. 519.

¶ 655. The methods of dealing with encroachments in highways considered historically.—Township of Lebanon v. Burch, 78 Mich. 641.

§ 184. Removal of fences.

Appeal to circuit court from decision of highway commissioner, see post ¶ 687.
What constitute legal fences, see Fences.
Provisions for removal of fences, etc., on newly opened way, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4395.
Provisions as to moving back fences where road has become reduced below fifty feet, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4395.
Provisions as to damages for removal of fences and improvements in widening ways, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4398.
Removal after judgment in summary proceedings, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4406.
Proceedings for removal of fences dangerous in themselves or tending to obstruct way, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4412 et seq.
Costs and expenses of removing and assessment of expense, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4402.

¶ 656. Under Pub. Acts 1913, No. 125, providing for the removal of fences which cause obstructions to public highways, stump fences standing upon the owners' lands which have been tolerated by long custom, and which the highway commissioner ordered removed because they caused snow to drift into and fill up the highway, are not, by force of such statute, nuisances per se, but such statute proceeds rather along the theory of eminent domain, and damages should be allowed to the owners of such fences.—Township Board of Grant v. Larsen, 192 Mich. 630.

§ 185. Actions and suits to remove encroachments or open way.

Summary remedy under the statute, see post § 187 et seq.
Ejectment as remedy, see post § 186.
Condemnation proceedings as alternative for suit for encroachment, see ante ¶ 87.
Grounds for bill to compel opening of street after attempted vacation, see also ante ¶ 488.
Estoppel of complainants to maintain bill, see also ante ¶ 482.
Estoppel of city to sue, see ante ¶ 652.
Parties defendant to bill for opening street vacated by collusion, see ante ¶ 490.
Defense that public user did not include place in question in action to remove obstruction, see ante ¶ 61.
Want of continuous travel for statutory period as defense in action for encroachment, see also ante ¶ 38.
Ex parte action of surveyors and highway commissioner as evidence of encroachment on highway, see also ante ¶ 360.
Injunctive relief from nuisances, see Nuisances, III; Injunctions.
Injunction as remedy to preserve rights in private way or private rights in public way, see Easements § 40; Injunctions, II, F.
Reasons and considerations governing grant or denial of injunctions, see also Injunctions, I, II.
Actionable obstruction of private easement or of way not accepted by public, see also Easements § 38.
Nuisance as court or jury question, see Nuisance, III, IV.
Matters litigable in bill to restrain construction of drain in highway, see also Drains ¶ 348.
Measure of damages for obstruction of way, see Damages § 105.
Indictment or action for obstructing highway as acceptance of dedication of it, see Dedication ¶ 30.
Concurrent jurisdiction in obstruction cases, see Courts ¶ 229.
Jurisdiction of chancery under the statute, see Jud. Act, chap. VI, § 4, ¶ 1; Comp. L. 1915, § 12302, ¶ 1.

¶ 657. Where a plat was withdrawn after lots had been purchased in accordance with it, it was held that the rights of the lot owners were private and could not be adjudicated in a suit by the city to which they were not parties, nor made the foundation of a public right in a suit brought by the city entirely in behalf of the public to compel the opening of the street and removal of obstruction.—City of Detroit v. Detroit & M. R. Co., 23 Mich. 173.

¶ 658. Unless there are special circumstances chancery will not entertain a bill to remove from a township highway an alleged obstruction.—Township of Greenfield v. Norton, 111 Mich. 53.

¶ 659. The right of a city to a public street may be tried by suit to enjoin private parties from obstructing it; ejectment is not the sole remedy.—City of Mt. Clemens v. Mt. Clemens Sanitarium Co., 127 Mich. 115.

¶ 659a. A municipality may maintain a bill in equity against a street railway company unlawfully occupying the highway to compel the removal of its tracks.—City of Detroit v. Detroit United Ry., 172 Mich. 136, aff'd in 229 U. S. 39, 57 L. ed. 1056, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 697.

§ 186. Ejectment against encroacher or incloser.

See also ante ¶ 553.
Ejectment as remedy for recovery of easement of use of street, see also Ejectment ¶ 11.

¶ 660. A city has no such interest in the lands embraced within one of its streets as authorizes it to bring ejectment therefor, even though its charter gives it the supervision and control of all streets; that is nothing more than the usual power of township officers over their ways or of cities over their streets.—City of Grand Rapids v. Whittlesey, 33 Mich. 109.

¶ 661. A county cannot bring ejectment to remove obstructions from land dedicated to the public use as a street, but held adversely to the public.—Bay County v. Bradley, 39 Mich. 163.

¶ 662. The owner of the record title to land in a platted street in front of his lots has a possessory right thereto as against one who incloses it, since under How. St. § 7790, he has a right to plant trees in it, build sidewalks and do other acts of possession not inconsistent with the public use.—Smeberg v. Cunningham, 96 Mich. 378.

§ 187. Summary and statutory proceedings to remove.

Notice to remove as foundation of the proceeding, see post § 188.
Notice of claim by landowner, see post § 189.
Issues and pleadings, trial and judgment, see post § 190.
Appeal and review, see post § 191.
Available remedy by summary proceedings as reason against allowing injunction, see Injunctions, I, II.
Liability of officer for wrongfully or illegally bringing proceedings to remove obstructions, see Officers, VI, A; and see also Malicious Prosecution.
Jurisdiction of justices of the peace in obstruction proceedings, see Comp. L. 1915, § 14169.

¶ 663. The statute (How. St. §§ 1371, 1372), in regard to removing encroachments on highways gives a public remedy, and is not designed to make it the commissioner's duty to institute proceedings at the instance of a private person, when the commissioner believes, after an honest inquiry, that no unlawful encroachment exists.—White v. Carlisle, Leonidas Highway Com'r, 95 Mich. 288.

¶ 664. The proceeding for the summary removal of encroachments upon a highway does not cover cases where the existence of any highway, including the land where the alleged encroachments are, is disputed in good faith or where the title to land is involved.—Roberts v. Cottrellville Highway Com'rs, 25 Mich. 23; Campau v. Button, 33 Mich. 525; Gregory v. Stanton, 40 Mich. 271; Willson v. Gifford, 42 Mich. 454; Gregory v. Knight, 50 Mich. 61.

¶ 665. The municipal power to prevent the obstruction of public easements does not extend to settling the title to lands, and cannot be exerted in a summary proceeding unless an actual public user has been interrupted.—Beecher v. People, 38 Mich. 289.

¶ 666. Whether a highway lawfully exists over private property is a question which cannot be settled against the owner without the right to a trial in the due course of law, and a municipal board cannot decide upon it so as to bind him, and acts at its peril in attempting it.—Sheldon v. Village of Kalamazoo, 24 Mich. 383.

¶ 667. The statutory action of trespass for encroachments on a highway (Sess. L., 1881. Act No. 243, chap. VI, How. St. § 1372) does not lie where the notice to remove them shows that the alleged encroachment is caused by fences entirely obstructing the road.—Gorham v. Withey, 52 Mich. 50.

¶ 668. Under the statute of 1861 (Comp. L. 1871, § 1291), the proceedings to remove encroachments applied only to highways actually laid out and opened under the statutes, and not to those which exist only by dedication or user.—Parker v. People, 22 Mich. 93; Roberts v. Cottrellville Highway Com'rs, 25 Mich. 23; Campau v. Button, 33 Mich. 525; People v. Smith, 42 Mich. 138.

¶ 669. The highway act of 1881 (How. St. § 1371), protects from encroachment highways by user as well as those laid out by law.—Krueger v. Le Blanc, 62 Mich. 70.

§ 188. ——Order and notice to remove.

Quashal for insufficiency of notices, see post ¶ 681.
Necessity of service to call for service of counter notice, see post § 189.

¶ 670. An order from the commissioner of highways to move one's fence as being an encroachment on the highway must state how far the fence lies from where it ought to lie.—People v. Smith, 42 Mich. 138.

¶ 671. Comp. L. 1871, §§ 1290, 1291, provides that if one whose fence encroaches on the highway does not move it within thirty days after being ordered to do so by the highway commissioner, the latter may sue him. Held, that the landholder cannot be put in default unless he has been distinctly notified how far the fence lies from the true line, and if the notice is defective in that regard, the thirty days do not begin to run until it is perfected.—People v. Smith, 42 Mich. 138.

¶ 672. The order and notice of removal preliminary to an action of trespass, for encroachment upon a highway, must under the statute (How. St. § 1373) be substantially accurate in describing the highway and the encroachment; and the declaration must strictly follow the order.—LeBlanc v. Kruger, 75 Mich. 561.

¶ 673. An encroachment is sufficiently described in an order for removal as a "strip of land two rods in width across the land of A. B., the south end of private claim No. 32, which now lies enclosed by said fence."—Krueger v. Le Blanc, 62 Mich. 70.

¶ 674. Section 4059, 2 Comp. Laws 1897, provides that a commissioner in giving notice to remove a fence encroaching upon the highway, shall not require the removal in less than sixty days, and also not within the period from April 1st to November 1st. On April 12, 1907, defendant served notice on plaintiff to remove his fence in thirty days. Defendant did not himself remove the fence until November 11, 1907. In a suit in trespass by the plaintiff, held, the notice was sufficient under the statute.—Hoag v. Boehmer, 162 Mich. 330.

¶ 675. Notice to remove an encroachment from a highway is properly served upon the occupant of the land adjoining.—Krueger v. Le Blanc, 62 Mich. 70.

¶ 676. In an action for trespass quare clausum where the highway commissioner claimed that the plaintiff had encroached upon a highway, and made an order which was served on him requiring him to remove the fence erected, and no denial in writing was served as required by Comp. L. 1897, § 4122, denying the existence of the highway, and the commissioner after the expiration of thirty days took down the fence and placed the materials on plaintiff's land, the order of the highway commissioner reciting that the road was on the town line and the "east half of said highway is allotted to the township of Frenchtown to maintain," but there was no proof of any such allotment, or even that the fence was not upon the true line as described in the order, such order is not of itself proof of the facts stated therein and in the absence of such proof furnishes no justification for the trespass committed.—Labo v. Asam, 143 Mich. 24.

§ 189. ——Counter notice of claim of right.

Statutory provisions for notice of claim and formation of issue as in trespass, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4402 et seq.

¶ 677. In trespass for an alleged encroachment upon a highway, where it is found that no copy of the order of removal was served upon defendant as required by How. St. § 1371, it is error to reject, under section 1373, defendant's offer of evidence of title to the land, on the ground that defendant had served no notice upon the highway commissioner under section 1372, denying the existence of the highway; defendant was not required to serve such notice unless he had been served with a copy of the order.—Osborn v. Longsduff, 70 Mich. 127.

¶ 678. In an action for obstructing a highway under Comp. L. 1897, § 4157, the defendant is precluded from raising the question of title where he neglects to give notice under Comp. L. 1897, § 782, and bond required by section 784 notwithstanding section 9804 which provides that in suits for penalties or forfeiture, the defendant may give in evidence under the general issue any matter in bar of the action, as this is a general statute not applying to the specific proceedings.—Ramsby v. Bigler, 129 Mich. 570.

§ 190. ——Pleadings and issues, evidence, trial, and judgment.

Sufficiency of description in notice, see ante § 188.

Impropriety of trying title or existence of highway, see also ante § 187.

Evidence that road existed, see ante § 5.

General laws of evidence and trial practice not peculiar to this proceeding, see Evidence; Pleading; Trial; Justices of the Peace, IV.

Credibility and weight of testimony of highway commissioner, see Witnesses, VI.

General law of trespass, see Trespass.

Statutory provisions as to issues joined on notice of claim of right, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4403.

Statutory provisions as to procedure, trial, verdict, and judgment, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4404.

¶ 679. Where a declaration in an action of trespass under How. St. § 1371, for an encroachment upon a highway so describes the highway and the encroachment as to exclude the latter from the limits of the former, to which declaration defendant pleads the general issue with the denial of any encroachment upon the highway as described in the declaration, the defect is fatal to a recovery.—Varden v. Ritchie, 86 Mich. 197.

¶ 680. In proceedings to remove encroachments from highways the jury cannot pass upon anything that is not complained of.—Gregory v. Knight, 50 Mich. 61.

¶ 681. Proceedings to remove encroachments from a public highway must be quashed where neither the notices given nor the findings of the jury furnish any means of finding the extent of the encroachment or its distance from what is said to be the true line of the highway.—Gregory v. Knight, 50 Mich. 61.

¶ 682. A summary proceeding by a highway commissioner before a justice of the peace for the removal of encroachments presupposes that the existence and bounds of the highway are not questioned; and in such a proceeding the title to the highway and its existence cannot be tried as against the landowner.—Gregory v. Knight, 50 Mich. 61.

¶ 682a. Under proceedings commenced by a highway commissioner to procure an adjudication that a fence of defendant was an encroachment upon the public highway, said proceedings being brought under Comp. L. 1897, §§ 4122-4126, a judgment that can be supported upon no other theory than section 4061 giving the public a title to the strip of defendant's land two rods in width on each side of the section line must be reversed inasmuch as this section has no application.—Watz v. Sunderland, 147 Mich. 96.

¶ 683. In an action by a highway commissioner for encroachment upon a public highway it was not error to permit a witness to testify as to his employment by the plaintiff and instructions to him to see whether any obstructions were on the road and to look after it, such evidence having some bearing on the question of whether the public authorities had accepted the road as a highway.—Parkey v. Galloway, 147 Mich. 693.

¶ 684. In an action brought by the Commissioner of Highway under Comp. L. 1897, § 4061 to recover damages for encroachment on a highway which crossed land occupied by defendant, where the question at issue was whether it was a highway by user, evidence that the road was cut in 1872 to enable forest products to get to a shipping point, that it was on land belonging to the United States, that it had been used as a public highway by the public generally, and that the township had expended money on the road was sufficient to send the case to the jury, and it was not error to refuse to direct a verdict.—Parkey v. Galloway, 147 Mich. 693.

¶ 685. Where no request is made and the attention of the trial court is not called thereto, in an action for encroachment on a public highway, it is not error to fail to instruct the jury that the title to the land was in the United States and the township could not gain title by user, that the statute of limitations could not operate against the government.—Parkey v. Galloway, 147 Mich. 693.

§ 191. ——Appeal or other review of proceedings.

Quashal for insufficiency of notices, see ante ¶ 681.
General law of certiorari, see Certiorari.
Certiorari to review orders for removal of obstructions or unlawful objects, see Certiorari § 18.
Proper respondents to certiorari to review encroachment proceeding, see Certiorari § 26.
Return to certiorari in encroachment proceedings, see Certiorari ¶ 114.
Judgment on certiorari to encroachment proceedings, see Certiorari ¶ 228.
Provisions respecting appeals to circuit court, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4405.

¶ 686. Amendment of declaration on appeal, in respect to description of land in action for obstruction of a highway under the statute is precluded by How. St. § 1375, where it would change the issue.—Graham v. Langston, 65 Mich. 45.

¶ 687. Upon appeal to the circuit court from the determination of a highway commissioner in regard to the removal of fences under Pub. Acts 1913, No. 125, held that the circuit court, at the trial on such appeal, correctly excluded evidence that the fences in question were a harborage for noxious weeds, or that they interfered with the enjoyment by others of their property, which were matters which the law was not framed to remedy.—Township Board Grant v. Larsen, 192 Mich. 630.

§ 192. Actions to redress or prevent injuries to highways.

General law of trespass, see Trespass.
Actions of trespass on the case for nuisance, see Nuisances, III.
Treble damages for injuries to roads, see Damages § 209.
Overseer or commissioner as proper party to sue for injury to bridge, see Bridges § 25.
Statutory liability for injury to highway or appurtenances, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4458 et seq.

¶ 688. Actions for injuries to highways and bridges cannot be brought by the township in which they are situated, but must be brought by the overseer of highways, or, if he is disqualified from suing, by the commissioner of highways (Pub. L. 1881, Acts Nos. 242, 243, pp. 285, 288).—Township of Denver v. White River Log & Booming Co., 51 Mich. 472.

¶ 689. Damages to highways, bridges and culverts in a township by flooding cannot be recovered by the township either at law or in equity under the rule established in Township of Denver v. White River Log & Booming Co., 151 Mich. 472, and Township of Merritt v. Harp, 131 Mich. 174, but must be recovered by the overseer or commissioner of highways designated by the statute to sue for such damages.—Township of Merritt v. Harp, 141 Mich. 238.

¶ 690. Whether an overseer of highways can sue for injuries to a highway from acts done before the creation of the township in which he is overseer, and where the only damage alleged, since such township was set off, resulted to it from the cost to the town of making changes in the highway that were rendered necessary by the acts charged, quære.—Shepard v. Gates, 50 Mich. 495.

¶ 691. A joint action cannot be brought by the overseers of two adjoining road districts for an injury caused to a bridge which is partly in each district.—Port Huron Highway Com'rs v. Stockman, 5 Mich. 528.

¶ 692. Commissioners of highways of the township cannot, on the refusal of the respective overseers to prosecute, sue under the statute, and recover in one action for the damages sustained by both districts.—Port Huron Highway Com'rs v. Stockman, 5 Mich. 528.

¶ 693. One action cannot be brought for injuries to highways and bridges in different districts.—Township of Denver v. White River Log & Booming Co., 51 Mich. 472.

¶ 694. In an action under How. St. § 1403, by the highway commissioner against one obstructing a watercourse by building a dam which stopped the flow of water and flooded a highway, it is no defense to set up that the township had constructed a ditch along the highway which brought water upon defendant's land through such watercourse which would otherwise not have reached it. —Commissioner of Highways of the Township of Tittabawassee v. Sperling, 120 Mich. 493.

¶ 695. A township has such interest in its highways that it may maintain a bill to restrain the flooding of such highways though the highways may be under the supervision of the highway commissioner.—Township of Merritt v. Harp, 131 Mich. 174.

§ 193. Penalties and penal actions.

For obstructing highway ditch, see ante § 179.
Estoppel to deny existence of highway in action for obstructing, see ante ¶ 60.
Indictable nuisances, see Nuisances.
Immunity of state from costs in penal actions for obstructions, see Costs § 12.
General law of penal actions, see Penalties.
Penalty for nonremoval after notice, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4402.
Penalties and forfeitures for injury to or obstruction of highways, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4458 et seq.
Trespass as form for collection of penalties, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4484.
Execution on judgment for penalties, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4485.

¶ 696. The penalty for obstructing a highway does not come under Comp. L. 1857, § 5846, How. St. § 9261, relating to undefined misdemeanors, for that only reaches offenses where no penalty has been fixed by statute; and it cannot be enforced by indictment or information.—Pettinger v. People, 20 Mich. 336.

¶ 696a. In a prosecution for penalties for highway obstruction under Comp. L. 1857, § 5122, How. St., § 8439 before a justice of the peace, the supervisor of the township in which the penal acts were done or the prosecuting attorney of the county must intervene.—People v. Navarre, 22 Mich. 1.

¶ 697. In an action by a highway commissioner under 2 Comp. L. 1897, § 4157, which confers no personal right of action, to collect a penalty for the obstruction of a highway, a declaration shows clearly enough that the commissioner and not an individual is suing where it indicates that the action is brought under said statute.—La Barre v. Bent, 154 Mich. 520.

¶ 698. Obstructions have always been distinguished from encroachments by our statutes, and the power conferred upon a city to impose penalties for obstructions would not warrant their being imposed for encroachments.—City of Grand Rapids v. Hughes, 15 Mich. 54.

¶ 699. Until an alley in the city of Detroit has been actually open to the uses for which it was designed, the occupation or obstruction of it cannot properly be punished under city by-laws. In giving the power to regulate the use of alleys, and remove obstructions from them, the city charter contemplates the preservation of actual, and not theoretical, easements, and the protection of the community against actual nuisances which interfere with the accustomed use of the passages.—Jackson v. People, 9 Mich. 111.

¶ 700. A conviction for obstructing an alley in violation of a city ordinance will be reversed where there was no evidence that the alley had ever been opened, used, or worked by the city authorities.—People v. McNamara, 143 Mich. 71.

§ 194. Encroachment of highway on abutter.

Withdrawal of abutter's lateral support, see post § 195.
Liability and remedies for injury to access, see post § 196.
Width of improved way and margins to be left, see also ante IV.
Driving out of way on abutting land as justification for assault, see Assault § 18.

¶ 701. To build an embankment for carrying a highway across a ravine and creek in which a dam has been formed in such manner that the foot of the embankment extends beyond the side boundaries of the highway and on the land under water of the adjoining abutting owner is trespass.—Schneider v. Township of Brown, 142 Mich. 45.

§ 195. Injury to or withdrawal of abutter's lateral support.

Actionable changes of grade, see ante § 119 et seq.

¶ 702. Where a street was marked out on a village plat, but a certain part of it in its natural condition was incapable of use as a way, and for forty years remained so without any act of the authorities to accept or improve it, and the street commissioner then entered and made excavation that he might use the earth in other parts of the town, and in so doing removed the lateral support for adjacent lands to their injury, held, that the commissioner was liable for this injury.—Buskirk v. Strickland, 47 Mich. 389.

§ 196. Liability and remedy for obstruction of access.

Prescriptive right to have tracks in street in front of land, see ante ¶ 650.

¶ 703. A commissioner of highways, or an overseer acting under his direction, incurs no liability to abutting owners if, in the proper exercise of his lawful discretion and for the sole purpose of improving the highway, he runs a ditch in front of their premises which they have to bridge in order to reach the road (Comp. L. 1871, ch. 23).—Eagle Township Highway Com'rs v. Ely, 54 Mich. 173.

¶ 704. An owner of property, who is not entitled to notice of proceedings to vacate a street cannot recover damages for an alleged interference with his right of ingress and egress to a street against one who has caused the street to be vacated.—Beutel v. West Bay City Sugar Co., 132 Mich. 587.

¶ 705. Where one brought action for the obstruction of a highway across a part of which he had himself built a fence, without which his passage would not have been barred, he could not recover.—Roberts v. Fitzgerald, 33 Mich. 4.

¶ 706. An abutting owner whose frontage on a street will be cut off by a railroad crossing embankment and whose passage away from his premises in one direction will be cut off thereby increasing the distance he has to truck his goods, from warehouses on his lots, and reducing the value of the property, suffers a special damage so as to entitle him to maintain injunction proceedings to restrain the railroad from building the embankment.—Dean v. Ann Arbor R. Co., 137 Mich. 459.

XII. DEFECTIVE AND DANGEROUS WAYS AND SURROUNDINGS.

A. GENERAL DUTIES AND LIABILITIES OF COUNTIES, CITIES, VILLAGES, AND OFFICERS.

Construction, improvement and repair of highways, see ante IV.
Obstructions, encroachments and unauthorized uses and injuries to highway, see ante XI.
Right to use way and law of the road, see post XIII.
Injuries to travelers from negligence of other persons traveling on and using street or way, see post XIII, B.

§ 197. In general; nature and source of liability.

Public or private nature of road or way, see ante I.
What are regarded as highways, see ante I.
Extent of duty and care, see post § 199.
Liability for failure to construct, see post § 200.
Liability for defective plan and manner of construction, see post § 201.
Liability for failure to keep in repair, see post § 203.
Liability for failure to provide railings, barriers or warning signals, see post § 211.
Officer or municipality charged with the duty, see post § 214.
Notice of conditions and opportunity to repair as element of negligence, see post XII, B.
Duty and negligence towards vehicle users, see post XII, C.
Duty and negligence towards foot travelers, see post XII, D.
Duty and negligence towards persons other than travelers, see post XII, E.
Proximate cause and contributory negligence, see post XII, F.
Liability of abutters, private persons and corporations, see post XII, G.
Actions for injuries, see post XII, H.
Rights of action for highway injuries, see post § 265.
Notice of claim and injury to mature right to sue, see post § 266 et seq.
Necessity of referring to statute in declaration, see post § 273.
Responsibility of public for acts of third persons, see post § 253.
Liability of township for defects in road opened by landowner for access to private dock and ferry and used by public without objection, see also ante ¶ 52.
Inapplicability of liability statute to damages due to flooding of adjacent lands, see ante ¶ 387.
Nonliability of public for injuries on dedicated street never accepted by public, see Dedication ¶ 43.
General law of negligence, see Negligence.
Actionable death of person, see Death by Wrongful Act.
Inoperativeness of repeal of statute on pending actions, see Statutes, V.
Survivability of cause of action for injury from defect in way, see Abatement § 16.
General law of damages, see Damages.
All damages to individuals from defects in highways as special damages, see Damages ¶ 962.
State decisions on liability of municipalities as rule in Federal courts, see Courts § 29.
Liability of toll road as such, see Toll Roads.
General provisions creative of liability for injuries to person or property, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4584 et seq.
Statutory duty and liability of municipalities, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4584 et seq.
Statutory abrogation of so-called common law liability of officers and municipalities, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4588.
Statutory exemption from liability for injuries on roads in disuse for ten years, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4587.

¶ 707. The liability of municipal corporations for defects in their highways, streets and bridges is purely statutory; at common law no liability attaches.—Dermont v. City of Detroit, 4 Mich. 435; Niles Highway Com'rs v. Martin, 4 Mich. 557; City of Detroit v. Blackeby, 21 Mich. 84; McCutcheon v. Village of Homer, 43 Mich. 483; McArthur v. Saginaw, 58 Mich. 357; Davis v. Jackson, 61 Mich. 530; Roberts v. Detroit, 102 Mich. 64.

¶ 708. At common law neither the city nor the owner of the adjoining lot is liable for an injury caused by the absence of a sidewalk or by neglect to repair an existing walk.—Lynch v. Hubbard, 101 Mich. 43.

¶ 709. The liability of municipalities for injuries upon public highways is purely statutory, is in derogation of the common law, and cannot be enlarged by construction.—Brown v. Township of Byron, 189 Mich. 584.

¶ 710. The right to recover damages for injuries received upon the highways, etc., of the state, in consequence of the negligence of a municipality, is purely statutory, and the legislature has undoubted power to modify, abridge, or even abolish, that right by appropriate action.—Westgate v. Township of Adrian, 161 Mich. 333.

¶ 711. How. St. §§ 8313-14, giving a right of action for a fatal injury, though in derogation of the common law, is a remedial statute, and establishes a general rule which applies as well to townships as to other defendants, even though at the time of its adoption townships were not liable for such injuries but became so afterwards.—Merkle v. Township of Bennington, 58 Mich. 156.

¶ 712. An action brought under § 2 of the act of 1879 (How. St. §§ 1442-1446) is not affected by the repealing act No. 264 of 1887 (How. St. §§ 1446c-1446h), which substantially re-enacts the former act; and judgment in such suit for injuries to person or property may be rendered after the repeal.—Merkle v. Bennington T'p, 68 Mich. 133; Moore v. Township of Kenockee, 75 Mich. 332.

¶ 713. An action begun under How. St. § 1442, for injuries sustained because of a defective street, etc., was not affected by the repeal clause in Laws 1887, Act No. 264, which statute was a substantial re-enactment of the former act.—Alexander v. City of Big Rapids, 70 Mich. 224.

Liability of municipality for personal injuries resulting from defects or obstructions in or upon driveway or street, see note, 5 N. C. C. A. 428-448.

§ 198. Municipal charter provisions.

See also post ¶ 988.

Provisions of charter as to notice of claim, see post §§ 266, 267, 270.

Charter provisions as affecting abutting owners' liability over to the public, see post ¶ 1022.

Provisions imposing penalty on abutting owners for obstructing sidewalks, see post ¶ 995.

Charter exemption of city as class legislation, see Constitutional Law § 216.

Instructions as to duty of municipalities in respect to highways, see post § 346 et seq.

Municipal charters in general, see Municipal Corporations, II.

¶ 714. Inasmuch as Laws 1887, Act No. 264 (How. St. §§ 1446c-1446h) expressly charges cities with the duty of keeping their sidewalks in repair, provides for raising the necessary funds, and declares their liability for failure to perform such duty, it is immaterial whether the charter of a particular city does or does not charge a liability.—Campbell v. City of Kalamazoo, 80 Mich. 655.

¶ 715. The charter of the City of Marquette. ch. 7, § 1, sub. 16 (Local Acts 1895, No. 409) exempting the city from certain liability for sidewalk damages was not repealed by Local Acts 1899, No. 423, inasmuch as the provisions thereof are not in conflict.—Maclam v. City of Marquette, 148 Mich. 480.

¶ 716. A charter giving a city power to direct and regulate the planting, and to provide for the preservation of ornamental trees, does not thereby make it liable for an injury arising from its failure to trim the dead limbs from the trees.—Miller v. City of Detroit, 156 Mich. 630.

§ 199. Extent of duty and care in general.

Persons to whom duty owing, see post § 217.

Liability for defects in temporary road outside established highway in use during construction of viaduct, see also ante ¶ 9.

Evidence as to extent of duty and care, see post § 283.

Sufficiency of evidence to show negligence, see post § 297.

Instructions as to duty respecting safety of roadways, see post § 346.

City, county or township duty to build or repair bridges, see also ante §§ 107-110.

Duty and care of persons making use of streets, see post XIII.

General law of negligence, see Negligence.

Effect of usage as defining due care, see Customs § 9.

¶ 717. The liability for an injury caused by the condition of a street is purely statutory, and the purpose of the statute is to limit the responsibility to reasonable care.—McArthur v. City of Saginaw, 58 Mich. 357

¶ 718. Highways need not be kept absolutely safe for travel; that its highways shall be reasonably safe and fit for public travel is all that the statute requires of a township.—Harris v. Township of Clinton, 64 Mich. 447.

¶ 719. Reasonable care is the limit of a city's liability; all that the statute requires is that streets, bridges, etc., shall be reasonably safe and fit for ordinary public travel.—McArthur v. City of Saginaw, 58 Mich. 357; Woodbury v. City of Owosso, 64 Mich. 239; Shippy v. Village of Au Sable, 65 Mich 494.

¶ 720. The statutory duty resting upon a city to keep its streets in a condition reasonably safe and fit for public travel is entirely independent of the police power vested in the municipality, and requires everything to be done by the city necessary to make such travel reasonably safe.—Joslyn v. City of Detroit, 74 Mich. 458.

¶ 721. The safety required by the statute (Laws 1887, Act. No. 264) extends to travel by night as well as by day.—Sebert v. City of Alpena, 78 Mich. 165.

¶ 722. Municipalities are not required to keep their sidewalks in a perfect condition, and are only liable for injuries where they are not reasonably safe.—Lombar v. Village of East Tawas, 86 Mich. 14.

¶ 723. As cities are not required to keep their streets in a condition absolutely safe for travel, a crosswalk of parallel planks with cobblestone paving between, the planks being higher than the street and their ends being chamfered down to meet the level of the rails of a street railway, cannot be said to be negligent construction, when it is in accordance with the requirements of the locality, and when it is best adapted for the convenience of the public. A crosswalk must be reasonably safe in view of the purpose for which it is constructed, the necessary uses of the street, and all the varying conditions.—Bigelow v. City of Kalamazoo, 97 Mich. 121.

¶ 724. Under § 21, ch. 4, Act No. 283, Pub. Acts 1909, How. Ann. St., 2nd Ed., § 2252, a county is liable only for the neglect of a board of county road commissioners to keep the traveled portion of roads, bridges and culverts under its control in a condition reasonably safe for public travel.—Ferguson v. County of Muskegon, 181 Mich. 335.

¶ 725. An injury caused by negligence and an accident not prevented by negligence are very distinct in operation and effect; the first being covered by the statute imposing the duties of townships in maintaining its highways in a safe condition.—Beall v. Township of Athens, 81 Mich. 536.

§ 200. Liability for failure to construct.

See also post ¶ 760.

Duty and necessity of construction, see ante § 107.

Duty to provide railways and barriers, see post § 211.

Failure to construct sidewalk, see also ante ¶ 708.

Absence of sidewalk as defense in action by pedestrian for injuries, see post § 232.

Liability of abutting owners for failure to construct sidewalks, see post § 257.

¶ 726. A city is not liable for a personal injury caused by a defective cross-walk under Pub. L. 1879, p. 223, where the showing is that no cross-walk had ever existed or been provided for. So held where the common council had caused a street to be graded to a certain cross-street and no farther, and the sidewalk built by the city ended abruptly at the roadway and no continuing cross-walk was laid, so that a man, walking in darkness, stepped off the end of the sidewalk so suddenly that he was ruptured.—Williams v. City of Grand Rapids, 59 Mich. 51.

¶ 727. Pursuant to notice from the common council of a city, all of the lot owners but one in a given district constructed sidewalks in front of their lots. Plaintiff was injured after passing over the open space in front of this lot, by catching his foot in the walk on the other side. Held, by two justices, that there was no more danger in walking over the sidewalk than over those built with steps to crosswalks and streets; that plaintiff had no right to assume that no walk higher than the ground existed beyond the open space; that the case was not one where a sidewalk was out of repair, but where none had ever been built; and that a municipality is not liable for injuries resulting solely from a failure to construct a walk or a part thereof. A third justice concurred in reversing the judgment for plaintiff, and in refusing a new trial, on other grounds.—Shietart v. City of Detroit, 108 Mich. 309.

§ 201. Defective plan and manner of construction.

Instructions as to plan and construction, see post § 352.

Officer or municipality charged with the duty, see post § 214.

¶ 728. A city or village has the right of deciding as to the plan and manner of constructing its streets, bridges, cross-walks, etc., and will not be liable on the ground that the plan is defective.—Williams v. City Grand Rapids, 59 Mich. 51; Shippy v. Village Au Sable, 65 Mich. 494; Davis v. City Jackson, 61 Mich. 530; Woodbury v. City Owosso, 64 Mich. 239.

¶ 729. A municipality cannot construct a dangerous and unsafe road—one not safe and convenient for public travel—and shield itself behind its legislative power to adopt a plan and method of building and constructing in accordance therewith.—Malloy v. Township of Walker, 77 Mich. 448.

¶ 730. The statute of 1879 (How. St. §§ 1442-1446) extends to defects in construction as well as defects through omission to repair, and to neglect to keep the highway in a condition reasonably safe and fit for travel by day or by night.—Carver v. Detroit & S. Plank-Road Co., 61 Mich. 584.

¶ 731. Laws 1887, Act No. 264, requiring cities to keep streets safe for travel, applies to defects in construction as well as to neglect to repair, when the road is unsafe. —Sebert v. City of Alpena, 78 Mich. 165.

¶ 732. A defect in an improvement owing to the bad plan thereof does not subject the municipality to liability, as, where the injured party had fallen into a ditch which was dug across a highway, but was not covered to the full width of the road.—City of Lansing v. Toolan, 37 Mich. 152; Toolan v. City of Lansing, 38 Mich. 315.

¶ 733. Where the duty to build sidewalks rests on the owner or occupant of the adjacent premises, and the performance of it is in no sense the act of the city, the city cannot be sued for injuries resulting from the plan of constructing a walk; as where a step was left at one end of it.—City of Marquette v. Cleary, 37 Mich. 296.

¶ 734. When an appropriation has been made for repairing a street, the repairs made, and the expenses reported, and the bills therefor have been approved and paid by the department that had the authority to direct these things to be done in the first instance, this amounts to an approval of the work and a ratification of the plan upon which it was constructed, and the city is liable only for a defective execution of the work.—Davis v. City of Jackson, 61 Mich. 530.

Liability for injuries caused by excessively oiled highway, see note, 15 N. C. C. A. 530-534.

§ 202. ——Of culverts and bridges.

Duty to provide railings and barriers, see post § 212.

¶ 735. The city is not liable where the injury resulted from a wagon being overturned into a ditch because a culvert was built, in pursuance of its plan, too short.—City of Detroit v. Beckman, 34 Mich. 125.

¶ 736. A township is not negligent in constructing a bridge twenty feet long with one end a foot higher than the other, to conform to the formation of the adjacent land, or in constructing such bridge sixteen feet wide and one inch lower on one side than on the other.—Perkins v. Township of Delaware, 113 Mich. 377.

¶ 737. A county is not liable for the acts of its board of supervisors in causing a bridge to be erected over navigable waters, through a defect in which an injury occurs to an individual using the stream.—Larkin v. County of Saginaw, 11 Mich. 88.

¶ 738. In the absence of statute a city is not liable for an injury to a vessel resulting from its failure to maintain a draw in a bridge in such condition that it may be properly operated, where the city does not derive any benefit from the bridge, but simply maintains it for the public good.—Corning v. City of Saginaw, 116 Mich. 74.

§ 203. Duty to inspect and keep in repair.

Respecting sidewalks, footways and crosswalks, see post §§ 204, 205.
Respecting boulevards and parkways, see post § 206.
Respecting alleys, see post § 207.
Respecting ditches and gutters, see post § 208.
Respecting trees and overhanging or projecting objects, see post § 209.
Respecting bridges and culverts, see post § 210.
What constitutes specific negligence, see post XII, C, E.
Requisites of highways, generally, see ante § 8.
Degree of care required, see ante § 199.
Duty pending the making of repairs, see post § 218.
Obstructions and objects in streets, see post §§ 227, 236.
Notice of danger and opportunity to make safe, see post XII, B.
Duty to repair defects caused by acts or misconduct of third persons, see post § 253.
Enforcement of duty to keep highway in repair, see post § 265.
Presumptions as to repairs, see post § 280.
Burden of proof and presumptions as to notice of condition of streets, see post § 281.
Questions of law and fact as to safe condition of highway, see post § 305.
Instructions as to duty of municipality respecting highways, see post § 346 et seq.
Instructions as to duty and negligence respecting walks, see post § 351.
Construction, improvement and repairs in general, see ante IV.
Liability of abutters, private persons and corporations, see post XII, G.

¶ 739. Though a casual examination of a walk might be sufficient in ordinary cases, it might not be where the officer examining it had been notified of the general bad condition of the walk in the vicinity where an injury occurred.—Hunter v. Village of Ithaca, 141 Mich. 539.

¶ 740. The statute, R. S. 1846, chap. 119, How. St. §§ 8212-8218, does not authorize any action to be brought against township officers by their name of office, except for acts done or contracts made by them while acting within the scope of their official duty and authority, and was not intended to subject townships to any new liability, e. g., for damages sustained by individuals in consequence of the nonrepair of highways and bridges.—Niles Tp. Highway Com'rs v. Martin, 4 Mich. 557.

¶ 741. A city under the statute of 1879 (Gen. Laws 1879, p. 223) is liable to one injured by reason of a defect in one of its streets along which he is passing.—City of Grand Rapids v. Wyman, 46 Mich. 516.

¶ 742. A township is liable under Laws 1879, Act. No. 244 (How. St. §§ 1442-1446) to one who is injured by reason of a defect in a public highway along which he is passing.—Burnham v. Byron Township, 46 Mich. 555.

¶ 743. It is the duty of a township, through its officers, to exercise reasonable supervision over its roads and bridges, and to see, within practical limits, that they are kept in a reasonably safe condition for public travel.—Moore v. Township of Kenockee, 75 Mich. 332.

¶ 744. The first clause of How. St. § 1446f, which provides a remedy for the failure of townships to keep highways in repair, limits the right to bring suit under the first and second sections of the act, for personal injury and injury to property, to public highways which have been in use for ten years.—McKeller v. Township of Monitor, 78 Mich. 485.

¶ 745. The rule that it suffices to keep the traveled portion of the way safe for travel does not apply to a place in a city street where the sidewalks intersected but outside of them and where there was a stone bearing the weight of a manhole cover over which the public might probably travel. The statute, 3 How. St. § 1446e, relating to the duty of keeping streets safe, is broad enough to cover all portions of the street.—Lincoln v. City of Detroit, 101 Mich. 245.

¶ 746. City streets are public highways like all other roads. The city's duty of keeping them in repair is a duty to the public, not to private individuals, the mere neglect of which is a nonfeasance only, and for an injury resulting from such neglect no action arises. In this respect there is no distinction between the liabilities of cities and that of towns and counties.—City of Detroit v. Blackeby, 21 Mich. 84.

¶ 747. Where a village has assumed to dedicate land to the public for highway purposes, and use has been made of the land accordingly, it is immaterial, as bearing upon the duty of the village to keep the way in repair, whether or not it ever became strictly a legal highway.—Williams v. Village of Petoskey, 108 Mich. 260.

¶ 748. The obligation to keep a public way in reasonable repair generally continues until such way is lawfully discontinued or closed.—Speck v. Township of Bruce, 166 Mich. 550.

Liability for defects in highways, streets or sidewalks, which are not within traveled part, see note, 12 N. C. C. A. 736-762.

Liability for permitting untraveled portion of highway to remain in dangerous condition, see note, 15 N. C. C. A. 136-146.

§ 204. ——Sidewalks and footways.

Statutory source of duty, see ante § 197.

Liability for failure to construct, see ante § 200.

Injuries from defective sidewalks and footways, see post § 232.

What constitutes negligence as to walks and towards foot travelers, see post XII, D.

¶ 749. Act 244 of 1879 (How. St. §§ 1442-1446), giving a right of action for injuries sustained by reason of defective public highways, streets, bridges, crosswalks and culverts, did not create a liability for injuries caused by defective sidewalks.—Detroit v. Putnam, 45 Mich. 263.

¶ 750. A plank walk built upon the approach to a bridge, connecting the sidewalk on the street leading to the bridge with a walk on the side of the bridge for foot passengers, is a sidewalk and not a part of the approach proper to the bridge or of the bridge; and prior to the passage of the statute making municipalities liable for defective sidewalks, an action would not lie against a township for injuries sustained by reason of defects in such walks.—Saunders v. Township of Gun Plains, 76 Mich. 182.

¶ 751. If a village causes a sidewalk to be built or assumes control of it, it is its duty to keep it in repair, whether the particular place where the injury occurs is wholly within the line of the public street or not.—O'Neil v. Village of West Branch, 81 Mich. 544.

¶ 752. Where a city charter expressly confers upon a common council the control of all sidewalks and imposes a liability for injury from neglect to repair, the city is liable although the sidewalk was constructed without its order by the abutting landowner.—Fuller v. City of Jackson, 82 Mich. 480.

¶ 753. It is no defense to an action against a village for injuries received from a defective sidewalk that the walk was constructed upon railroad property, if the care and control of the walk had in fact been assumed by the village.—Will v. Village of Mendon, 108 Mich. 251.

¶ 754. A village which has actual notice of a defect in a sidewalk cannot, by ordering it to be repaired by someone else, discharge its duty, so as to escape liability for an injury resulting from the defect, where the repairs were insufficient to render the walk reasonably safe for travel.—Atherton v. Village of Bancroft, 114 Mich. 241.

¶ 755. A city is under legal obligation to maintain in a reasonably safe condition for pedestrians that section of the highway at a street crossing which lies within the lines of the sidewalk if extended, where it appears, from the existence of a beaten foot path at such point, that the same is used for public travel, even though the city has constructed a crosswalk on the opposite side of the street. —Comiskie v. City of Ypsilanti, 116 Mich. 321.

¶ 756. Where a township expends money and appropriates other money for the repair of a sidewalk situated in a village street, it has assumed care and control of the sidewalk so as to be liable for injuries to persons due to nonrepair, under 1 Comp. L. 1897, § 3441; and it is not necessary that the sidewalk should have been established under Act No. 60, Pub. Acts 1883, § 4203.—Welton v. Township of Crystal, 152 Mich. 486.

¶ 757. Where the repair of a village sidewalk is necessary to make a public highway safe and convenient for travel, the township board has power to control the same, as against the abutting owner, under 1 Comp. L. 1897, § 3441 et seq., and 2 Comp. L. 1897, § 4202 et seq.—Welton v. Township of Crystal, 152 Mich. 486.

§ 205. ——Crosswalks.

See also ante ¶ 723.
Liability for failure to construct, see ante § 200.

¶ 758. The walk outside of the extended boundaries of the abutting owner's lot at the intersection of streets held crosswalk, and not sidewalk, so that for a defect therein an injured person could recover under the act of 1879.—O'Neil v. Detroit, 50 Mich. 133.

¶ 759. The city of Detroit in levying sidewalk rates holds abutting owners liable for only so much walk as lies between the extended boundaries of their lots. This practical construction which excludes any part of the walk outside of the extended boundaries was followed where a foot-passenger was injured by a defect in the walk at the intersection of the streets, and the walk outside of such extended boundaries was regarded as part of the crosswalk.—O'Neil v. City of Detroit, 50 Mich. 133.

¶ 760. The statute of 1879 did not give a right of action against a city for not constructing a crosswalk, and imposed no duty of building such a walk; but when once built the duty to keep in repair arises.—Williams v. City of Grand Rapids, 59 Mich. 51.

¶ 761. The fact that a crosswalk was, under the charter of the village, built and repaired by assessment on the adjacent property, does not relieve the village from the duty of keeping the walk in safe condition for travel.—Shippy v. Village of Au Sable, 85 Mich. 280.

¶ 762. In order to render a township liable for injury caused by a defective crosswalk, such walk need not be one that extends across the entire street, nor does a sluiceway built by the township across the roadbed under the crosswalk as originally constructed deprive the walk of its character as a crosswalk.—Frary v. Township of Allen, 91 Mich. 666.

§ 206. ——Boulevards and parkways.

¶ 763. The Detroit Boulevard is a street or highway within How. St. § 1446c et seq. making the city liable for a defective sidewalk under the act, though the local management of it is not in the council but in a board specially created for that purpose. —Burridge v. City of Detroit, 117 Mich. 557.

¶ 764. The boulevard of the city of Detroit is a public highway within the meaning of the statute making municipalities liable for injuries from defective highways; the fact that the control of the boulevard has been confided to the commissioners of parks and boulevards (Local Acts 1889, No. 388), instead of the common council does not make it any the less a city enterprise.—Burridge v. City of Detroit, 117 Mich. 557.

§ 207. ——Alleys.

Duty to keep alleys in repair, see also ante ¶ 16.
Liability of abutting owner for injuries from defective alley, see post § 256.

¶ 765. A city is not liable for an injury arising from the defective condition of a public alley, there being no common-law liability, and an alley not being a highway or street within the meaning of Laws 1887, Act No. 264.—Face v. City of Ionia, 90 Mich. 104.

§ 208. ——Ditches and gutters.

See also ante ¶ 732.

¶ 766. A ditch running along the side of a village street and used to carry off surplus water is not, though covered for the purposes of a sidewalk, a culvert within the meaning of Laws 1879, Act No. 244, How. St. §§ 1442-1445), providing for the recovery of damages sustained from defective streets, bridges, crosswalks and culverts.—Kowalka v. Common Council of Village of St. Joseph, 73 Mich. 322.

§ 209. ——Trees and overhanging or projecting objects.

See also ante ¶ 716.

¶ 767. Where a statute creates a liability on the part of a city for failure to maintain its streets and sidewalks in safe condition, the court will not extend its scope so as to create a duty in the city to keep its trees safely trimmed of dead limbs, such statute being in derogation of the common law.—Miller v. City of Detroit, 156 Mich. 630.

¶ 768. Plaintiff was injured while on a city sidewalk by the falling of a dead limb of a tree standing between the sidewalk and the curb. Held, that Comp. L. 1897, §§ 3441-3443, requiring cities to keep the streets and sidewalks in safe condition, did not lay on defendant city the duty to keep the tree trimmed.—Miller v. City of Detroit, 156 Mich. 630.

¶ 769. Comp. L. 1897, §§ 3441-3443, imposed a liability upon cities for failure to keep their streets and sidewalks in reasonable repair. Held, that this statute did not create a liability for failure to trim off a dead limb of a tree, in a street, which overhung the sidewalk and fell and injured plaintiff.—Miller v. City of Detroit, 156 Mich. 630.

¶ 770. An ordinance provided a penalty against the cutting or injury of trees in its streets by persons other than the adjoining proprietors. Held, this ordinance did not make the city liable for an injury arising from its failure to trim the dead limbs from its trees.—Miller v. City of Detroit, 156 Mich. 630.

Liability of city for injury to person on street caused by fall of tree or branches, see note, 11 N. C. C. A. 741-751.
Liability for injuries to persons struck by protruding or overhanging objects while driving, see note, 11 N. C. C. A. 954-980.

§ 210. ——Bridges and culverts.

See also ante ¶ 724.
As to ditches and gutters, see also ante § 208.
Officer or municipality charged with the duty, see post § 215.
Necessity of notice of defect, see post § 219.
Opportunity to make safe, see post § 225.
Questions of law and fact as to safety of bridges and culverts, see post § 321.
Instructions as to construction and maintenance of bridges and culverts, see post § 355.
Right to indemnity from person responsible for condition of bridge, see post § 264.

¶ 771. Means should be employed by township officers from time to time in making their examinations of bridges, such as will usually disclose the defects to be expected.—Stebbins v. Township of Keene, 55 Mich. 552.

¶ 772. Township officers must be on the watch for defects in township bridges; and their neglect of reasonable and ordinarily effective watchfulness will make the township liable for injuries resulting from such defects.—Stebbins v. Township of Keene, 55 Mich. 552.

¶ 773. A township is bound to make a reasonable inspection of highway bridges maintained by it, and is liable for injuries resulting from the failure to observe that duty.—Bettys v. Township of Denver, 115 Mich. 228.

¶ 774. Under the statute (Comp. L. 1879, p. 223) a township may or may not be liable for any injury sustained from the breaking down of a bridge because of a latent defect therein. Reasonable care and diligence on the part of the township officers in ascertaining the defect are required to absolve the township from liability.—Medina Tp. v. Perkins, 48 Mich. 67.

¶ 775. Laws 1861, Act No. 197 provided that for an injury sustained by an individual upon a public highway "by reason of neglect to keep in repair any bridge or culvert by any township or corporation whose duty it is to keep such bridge or culvert in repair," such township or corporation should be liable in damages. Held that as, before this statute, townships were under no legal duty or obligation to keep highways and bridges in repair, and as the act imposed no new duties upon them, therefore they were not liable under the act for damages occasioned by neglect to keep bridges and culverts in repair.—Township of Leoni v. Taylor, 20 Mich. 148.

¶ 776. One may recover for injury sustained in person and property by reason of the defendant city's neglect of its duty to keep in repair a bridge over which he was lawfully attempting to pass.—Woodbury v. City of Owosso, 64 Mich. 239.

¶ 777. In repairing a bridge it need only be put in the same condition of strength and soundness as new bridges of the same kind. (How. St. §§ 1442-1446.)—Fulton Iron & Engine Works v. Township of Kimball, 52 Mich. 146.

¶ 778. While a township is not required by the statute to change the plan or capacity of its bridges, or to build bridges for unusual loads, it is bound, if it keeps an old bridge, to keep it in such repair as is required by a bridge of that kind.—Stebbins v. Township of Keene, 60 Mich. 214.

¶ 779. Where the public is allowed to use indiscriminately a bridge built by mill-owners in a public highway, and also a public bridge side by side with the former, both equally inviting, without notice as to the private character of the former bridge, the city must keep such bridge in safe condition for travel and is liable for injuries resulting from the falling thereof.—Detwiler v. City of Lansing, 95 Mich. 484.

§ 211. Duty to provide railings, barriers or warning signals.

On bridges and approaches, see post § 212.
During construction work or as protection against excavations, see post § 213.
Officer or municipality charged with the duty, see post § 214.
Liability for failure to construct or for defective plan or manner of construction, see ante §§ 200, 201.
Liability to foot travelers for injuries from holes, excavations and depressions, see post § 233.
Failure to erect barriers and railings as proximate cause of injury, see post § 241.

Allegations of breach of duty to give notice of dangerous way, see post § 273.
Evidence as to usage and custom of erecting railings or barriers, see post § 283.
Questions of law and fact as to barriers, railings and warning signals, see post § 309.
Instructions as to duty to erect railings and barriers, see post § 348.

¶ 780. Where a roadway is built at such a height between hills, and so narrow, as to require barriers or railings to make it reasonably safe and fit for public travel, it becomes the duty of the township to erect them, and failing so to do it must be held liable for injuries resulting from a neglect of such duty.—Malloy v. Township of Walker, 77 Mich. 448.

¶ 781. It is not the duty of a township to provide a railing where a fill in a level highway is only three or four feet high though the fill is only from nine to eleven feet wide.—Canfield v. Township of Gun Plains, 175 Mich. 379.

Sufficiency of guard rail or barrier on bridges as dependent upon ability to withstand automobiles and other vehicles, see note, 9 N. C. C. A. 1022-1025.

§ 212. ——On bridges and approaches.

Liability for defective plan or manner of construction, see ante § 202.
Right of public to recover indemnity from person responsible for defective bridge, see post § 264.
Absence of railings as proximate cause of injury, see post §§ 244, 245.
Evidence as to condition of bridges and culverts, see post § 294.
Questions of law and fact as to guard railings, see post § 322.

¶ 782. The failure of the bridge tender to close the gates on the approach to a drawbridge while the bridge was up, resulting in the automobile going into the river and drowning an occupant riding with the owner, makes the city liable under Comp. L. 1897, §§ 5516-5517 (How. St., 2nd Ed., §§ 4239, 4240).—Beach v. City of St. Joseph, 192 Mich. 296.

Sufficiency of guard rail or barrier on bridges as dependent on ability to withstand automobiles and other vehicles, see note, 9 N. C. C. A. 1022-1025.

§ 213. ——During construction work or to protect against excavations.

¶ 783. A city, while grading and paving a street under the power conferred by its charter, must close to public travel, that portion thereby rendered unfit and unsafe, in order to suspend the duty imposed by statute to keep its streets which are open to public travel in good repair for that purpose.—Southwell v. City of Detroit, 74 Mich. 438.

¶ 784. A city is bound, when excavating in a public street for the purpose of laying water mains and pipes, to use reasonable care to protect travelers from accident.—O'Rourke v. City of Monroe, 98 Mich. 520.

¶ 785. At night, barriers and lights must be placed to give warning of danger; but the city is not required to place barriers to prevent the use of the street along the sides of which the excavation is being made.—O'Rourke v. City of Monroe, 98 Mich. 520.

¶ 786. A city is liable if, after removing a crosswalk and making an excavation, it does not render the descent into the latter safe, or protect it by lights and barriers.—Alexander v. City of Big Rapids, 76 Mich. 282.

¶ 787. The duty resting upon a municipality to cause excavations in the streets occasioned by the construction of a public sewer to be properly guarded and lighted cannot be shifted upon the contractor so as to relieve the city from its obligation.—Baker v. City of Grand Rapids, 111 Mich. 447.

¶ 788. A street need not be closed to travel because a new sidewalk is constructing. The utmost that is required is that the public be excluded from the part of the walk that is not reasonably safe and fit for travel while it is in that condition.—Walker v. City of Ann Arbor, 111 Mich. 1.

¶ 789. A city may avail itself of the placing of barriers and lights by the contractor or the property owner on a sidewalk under repairs, in an action against it for personal injuries received after the removal thereof, with the same effect as if they had been placed by the city itself.—Walker v. City of Ann Arbor, 111 Mich. 1.

¶ 790. In order to suspend the duty imposed by statute to keep streets which are open to public travel in good repair for that purpose, a city, while grading and paving a street under the power conferred by its charter, must close to public travel that portion thereof rendered unfit or unsafe.—Beattie v. City of Detroit, 137 Mich. 319.

¶ 791. A city, leaving a street which is being repaired in condition for travel, is bound to see that it is reasonably safe for travel not only at the time but also that it will remain so notwithstanding the effect of rain or storm which might reasonably be expected at that season of the year.—Beattie v. City of Detroit, 137 Mich. 319.

¶ 792. It is the duty of a city to give plain warning that there is danger in traveling its streets, and this is ordinarily done by displaying a red lamp; the city is not required to barricade its streets so as to preclude injury.—Karrer v. City of Detroit, 142 Mich. 331.

¶ 793. While a highway is undergoing repair, ordinary care must be taken to prevent injuries to travelers thereon, and if the way becomes dangerous or impassable, it must be protected, and fences, barriers or other means must be used to warn travelers of the danger.—Speck v. Township of Bruce, 166 Mich. 550.

¶ 794. A barrier across a highway is one and may be the best or most usual means of giving notice that the highway is closed, but it is not the exclusive means, and it is sufficient if the public by other means equally efficient receives notice that a highway is closed.—Long v. Township of Weare, 195 Mich. 706.

¶ 795. Inasmuch as a city, by granting a permit to plumbers to make an excavation in the street has notice that an excavation is about to be made, it is liable to a third person for the loss of a horse due to leaving the excavation open and improperly guarded at night, and it is immaterial that an ordinance provided that no such excavation should be left open over night.—Repperd v. Chapin, 190 Mich. 19.

§ 214. Officer or municipality charged with the duty.

As to bridges and culverts, see post § 215.
As to joint roads and bridges, see post § 216.
Relative duties and powers of highway officers and districts, see ante VII.
Public duty to erect and repair bridges, officer or division charged with duty, see also Bridges, V.

¶ 796. The enabling act by which a village was incorporated under the general law (How. St., chap. 81) exempted the village from the superintendence of the commissioner of highways of the township in which it was located, and the inhabitants from the performance of highway labor, except as ordered by the village authorities, and forbade the levy by the supervisors of said township of any highway tax upon the taxable property of the village. Held not to relieve the townships from the duty imposed by How. St. § 2583, of keeping in repair bridges in highways leading into or through such village, and not laid out or established by the village authorities, nor to render the village liable for injuries sustained by reason of their nonrepair.—Quinlan v. Village of Manistique, 85 Mich. 22.

¶ 797. A township is liable under statute (How. St. § 1446e) for an injury caused by a defective crosswalk in an unincorporated village.—Frary v. Township of Allen, 91 Mich. 666.

¶ 798. As § 2, chap. 21, Act No. 283, Pub. Acts 1909, How. Ann. St., 2nd Ed., § 2450, expressly confers on townships and unincorporated villages power to establish, build and maintain sidewalks along roads and highways which are under control of boards of county road commissioners, whose jurisdiction extends over the traveled portion of highways only, a county that has adopted the county road system under such act is not responsible for injuries sustained by a pedestrian on a defective sidewalk in an unincorporated village.—Ferguson v. County of Muskegon, 181 Mich. 335.

¶ 799. The liability imposed by § 21, chap. 4, Act No. 283, Pub. Acts 1909, How. Ann. St., 2nd Ed., § 2252, on counties for the failure to boards of county road commissioners to keep roads under their control reasonably safe for public travel, applies to the traveled portion only of roads, bridges and culverts, and the fact that the liabilities imposed on cities, villages and townships for damages for injuries resulting from the failure to keep streets and sidewalks reasonably safe for travel is extended to counties, does not render a county answerable for injuries sustained on a defective sidewalk in an unincorporated village on a road under the control of such board.—Ferguson v. County of Muskegon, 181 Mich. 335.

¶ 800. That boards of county roads commissioners are vested by § 19, chap. 4, Act No. 238, Pub. Acts 1909, How. Ann. St., 2nd Ed., § 2250, with respect to roads, bridges and culverts, with all authority vested in township highway officers, does not disclose a legislative intent to impose upon a county liability for failure to keep sidewalks along roads under the board's control in a condition reasonably safe for travel.—Ferguson v. County of Muskegon, 181 Mich. 335.

Liability of highway officers for injuries caused by defects in highway, see note, 8 N. C. C. A. 133-144.

§ 215. ——Bridges and culverts and approaches thereto.

¶ 801. A graded approach to a bridge is a part thereof, and must be kept in reasonably safe condition by the corporation charged with the care of the bridge itself.—Shaw v. Township of Saline, 113 Mich. 342.

¶ 802. Under How. St. § 2853, making it the duty of the township in which an incorporated village is located to build, control, and keep in repair all bridges within the village limits in highways established by authority other than that of the village itself, the township, and not the village, has the duty of erecting and maintaining the railings and barriers necessary to render a graded approach to such a bridge reasonably safe for public travel.—Shaw v. Township of Saline, 113 Mich. 342.

¶ 803. It is the duty of the Bay County Bridge Commission, to which is given the control of all the bridges within a certain district, comprising two cities separated by a river, to keep in repair the approach to a bridge connecting the cities, theretofore in charge of the board of supervisors, who acquired it from the original construction company, where the approach was constructed upon unplatted land, and has always been repaired by those owning and controlling the structure, and where the act establishing the commission (Local Acts 1889, No. 278, § 4) provides that all moneys raised thereunder shall be expended for the purpose of building, repairing, and operating bridges "and the approaches thereto."—People ex rel. Attorney General v. Bay County Bridge Commission, 115 Mich. 622.

¶ 804. Under 1 Comp. L. § 3441, and 2 Comp. L. §§ 5516-5521, the bridge commission acquiring a drawbridge from Bay County, and controlling the same, is acting in the interest of the public, and is not liable as an independent corporation for torts to third persons arising from the negligent operation of the bridge.—Scharman v. Bay County Bridge Commission, 158 Mich. 77. (Blair, C. J., Moore, Montgomery and McAlvay, JJ., dissenting.)

§ 216. ——Roads and bridges under joint control.

¶ 805. Under the statutes imposing the duty of upkeep for an injury caused to a traveler by the unsafe condition of a state road on the line between two townships, the township to which the care of that portion of the road whereon the accident occurred had been assigned is liable.—Sharp v. Township of Evergreen, 67 Mich. 443.

¶ 806. For an injury caused to a traveler by the unsafe condition of a state road on the line between two townships, the township to which the care of that portion of the road whereon the accident occurred had been assigned is liable.—Sharp v. Township of Evergreen, 67 Mich. 443.

¶ 807. Two townships contracted under Laws 1861, No. 163, § 4, that each should maintain specified divisions of a highway upon the township line between them, and the agreement was performed for many years. Subsequently one township knowingly allowed a bridge on its division to remain out of repair, whereby plaintiff was injured. Held, that plaintiff could recover, although the contract was not recorded as required by the statute.—Hunter v. Township of Dwight, 157 Mich. 634.

¶ 808. By Local Acts of 1879, No. 280, incorporating the village of Petoskey, it was provided that all bridges built and to be built across Bear river, within the limits of the village, should be maintained by the township of Bear Creek at large. The village afterwards constructed a raceway for its own use, running parallel with the river. Across the raceway and river a bridge was constructed by private subscription, which bridge was thereafter recognized by both village and township as a public way. Held that it was the duty of the village to keep in repair that part of the bridge which spanned the raceway.—Williams v. Village of Petoskey, 108 Mich. 260.

¶ 809. The township and not the village is liable for personal injuries caused by defective railing on a bridge over a mill race on a State road within the corporate limits of a village, the road having been laid and the bridge built before the incorporation of the village, under Comp. Laws, § 2775, and Public Acts 1909, ch. VIII, § 26, the authority to repair the bridge being vested in the township and not in the village, and hence the former and not the latter is liable.—McRae v. Township of Hart, 179 Mich. 325.

§ 217. Persons to whom duty owing.

See also ante ¶ 746.

Duty towards bicyclists, see post § 231.

What constitutes negligence towards vehicle users, see post XII, C.

What constitutes negligence towards foot travelers, see post XII, D.

Negligence towards licensees and wrongdoers, see post XII, E.

Negligence towards persons working in street or highway, see post § 239.

Right of action for injury from defective highways, see post § 265.

Parties to actions for injuries, see post § 272.

¶ 810. The provision (How. St. § 1446e), which requires municipalities to keep in reasonable repair all public highways, etc., does not give to everyone a right of action because it imposes a public duty; it must be construed with How. St. §§ 1446c, 1446d, by which are given certain rights of recovery for neglect to perform the duty thus imposed.—Roberts v. City of Detroit, 102 Mich. 64.

¶ 811. A city in this state in the discharge of its public duty in respect to keeping streets and sidewalks in order is under no higher or different obligation to a citizen of Ohio than to one of the state of Michigan.—Detroit v. Osborne, 135 U. S. 492, 34 L. ed. 260, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1012; reversing 32 Fed. 36.

¶ 812. A city is not relieved from liability for a defective walk to a person injured thereby merely because he is the tenant of the premises abutting on the walk, where the defect is not in any way attributable to him.—Hendershott v. City of Grand Rapids, 142 Mich. 140.

Injury to automobile or occupants by defective highway, see note, 8 N. C. C. A. 922-941.

B. NOTICE AND OPPORTUNITY TO MAKE SAFE.

§ 218. In general; necessity of notice or knowledge of defect or danger.

Of defects in bridges, see post § 219.

Of condition of street upon which repairs are being made, see also ante § 213.

Duty to inspect and keep in repair, see ante § 203.
Pleading notice or knowledge of defect, see post § 275.
Burden of proof and presumptions as to notice and opportunity to repair, see post § 281.
Evidence as to notice and opportunity to make safe, see post § 291.
Sufficiency of evidence to show notice or knowledge of defect, see post § 300.
Questions of law and fact as to notice and opportunity to make safe, see post § 323.
Instructions as to notice or knowledge of defect, see post §§ 350, 353, 356.
Statutory notice of claim and injury as foundation for action, see post § 266 et seq.
Statutory provision dispensing with notice of defects in original plan, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4589.
Character and sufficiency of notice required, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4590.

¶ 813. A city cannot be held responsible for any defect in a sidewalk that is not known to any officer whatever, whether connected with the street department or not, or that is not generally known, or not apparent to ordinary observers.—Dewey v. City of Detroit, 15 Mich. 307.

¶ 814. No liability for injuries attaches to a municipality because of latent defects in a sidewalk unless the structure is of such a character that failure to examine would in itself be negligence. The defect must be such as to suggest unsafety.—Lombar v. Village of East Tawas, 86 Mich. 14.

¶ 815. A township is not bound to protect the public against latent defects in a highway which could not be discovered by reasonable diligence.—Wakeham v. Township of St. Clair, 91 Mich. 15.

¶ 816. A township is not liable for an injury resulting from an overflow of the highway where it has not had notice, actual or constructive, of the highway's defective condition.—Smith v. Township of Walker, 117 Mich. 14.

¶ 817. A city is not liable for an injury sustained by the plaintiff in slipping upon an icy sidewalk adjoining her home, where the ice was claimed to have been caused by water which flowed from a private hydrant not exceeding three days prior to the accident, and where the walk was off the business streets and there was no occasion for a city officer to go there until notified of the condition.—Corey v. City of Ann Arbor, 124 Mich. 134.

§ 219. ——Defective culverts and bridges.
Sufficiency of notice, see post § 223.
Duty to inspect and repair bridges and culverts, see ante § 210.
Questions of law and fact as to notice, see post § 325.
Instructions as to notice of condition of bridges and culverts, see post § 356.
Liability toward vehicle users, see post § 280.

¶ 818. A township can hardly be held liable for injuries caused by latent defects in a bridge over a mill-race where they do not affect the traveled part of the way and where the miller has apparently not been negligent in performing his statutory duty of looking after the condition of the bridge.—Abernethy v. Township of Van Buren, 52 Mich. 383; Beckwith v. Township of Van Buren, 66 Mich. 89.

¶ 819. A city can only be held liable for an injury from a defective bridge where it has had notice of the unsafe condition, or where the want of repair could have been discovered by reasonable diligence and continued so long that want of knowledge on the city's part would itself be negligence.—Woodbury v. City of Owosso, 64 Mich. 239.

¶ 820. A township cannot be held liable for injuries received through latent defect in the timber of a bridge, where its officers have no actual notice of the defect and where no neglect of duty on their part is pointed out.—Beckwith v. Township of Van Buren, 66 Mich. 89; Blank v. Township of Livonia, 79 Mich. 1.

¶ 821. A township cannot be held liable for injuries received from the breaking, on account of internal dry rot, of the stringer of a bridge, where such stringer was examined before the accident by chipping and sounding, without defects being found.—Blank v. Township of Livonia, 79 Mich. 1.

¶ 822. Actual or imputed knowledge or notice of a defect in a highway or bridge is necessary to establish liability on the part of a township under Act No. 283, Pub. Acts 1909, § 2463, How. St., 2nd Ed., for injuries sustained as the result of such defect.—Whitford v. Township of Washington, 184 Mich. 422.

§ 220. Sufficiency of notice or knowledge.
Proper person or officer through whom to impute notice, see post § 221.
Sufficiency of constructive notice, see post § 222.
Notice of condition of bridges and culverts, see post § 223.
Sufficiency of evidence to show notice or knowledge, see post § 300.
Necessity of notice, see ante § 219.

¶ 823. Actual notice of the generally broken and unsafe condition of a piece of sidewalk is sufficient to charge the municipality with negligence in not repairing the walk, although notice of the particular defect which caused the injury complained of is not shown.—Fuller v. City of Jackson, 92 Mich. 197.

¶ 824. Under 1 Comp. Laws 1897, §§ 3441-3445, a general statute, cities are liable for injuries due to defective streets and sidewalks when it is shown that the city had reasonable time and opportunity after knowledge of the defect, to repair it, and has not used reasonable diligence. Act No. 566, Local Acts 1905, tit. 24, § 24, provides that the City of Saginaw shall be liable in such case only when written notice of the defect has been sent to the board of public works. Held, that the local act is a valid limitation on the general act.—Forsyth v. City of Saginaw, 158 Mich. 201.

¶ 825. Verbally telling a member of the street committee of a village of a loose plank in a sidewalk, without stating its location, is not sufficient to charge the village with notice of the defect.—Rogers v. Village of Orion, 116 Mich. 324.

¶ 826. A city has notice and knowledge that an excavation is about to be made by plumbers in a street where it grants a permit to the plumbers to do the work.—Repperd v. Chapin, 190 Mich. 19.

§ 221. ——Proper officer or person to affect with notice.

Powers and duties of the respective officers, see ante VII.

¶ 827. The words "after knowledge by or notice to such township," etc., in How. St. § 1446d, relating to the duty of a township in respect to supervision of bridges, do not mean express knowledge or information of defects; "notice" is not synonymous with "knowledge"; and the municipality is chargeable where its proper officer has been advised of defects.—Moore v. Township of Kenockee, 75 Mich. 332.

¶ 828. Notice to an officer charged with the control and supervision of streets, etc.—such as a street commissioner, an alderman, or the city marshal—of the unsafe condition of a cross-walk or sidewalk, is notice to the city.—Dundas v. City of Lansing, 75 Mich. 499; Fuller v. Jackson, 82 Mich. 480.

¶ 829. The city clerk is not an officer charged with the duty to see that sidewalks are kept safe for pedestrians so as to make his knowledge of the defective condition notice to the city.—Corey v. City of Ann Arbor, 134 Mich. 376.

¶ 830. Under Pub. Acts 1887, Act No. 264, imposing liability on municipalities for bodily injuries sustained by neglect to keep public highways in condition reasonably safe and fit for travel, a city was liable for an injury sustained by one who was thrown as the result of a vehicle colliding with stones which had been placed in a public street months

where daily a actual months
City of ¶ 831. ent of

in a st
McEvo
Mich. 1

¶ 832. sidewal
a defe
the cit fore an dition fixing
Mich.

¶ 833. notice
lage o walk i commis cil of in ord Weitze

¶ 834 of the notice of Ken

¶ 835 to a c erly b weak, the to 118 Mi

§ 222.

¶ 836 a publ make accide presum which ure to assume cil, 50

¶ 837 tice of sary t resulta mon C

¶ 838 tice or of rep an inj were and u zoo, 80

¶ 839
duty

condition live near it and frequently pass over the defective part, it is not necessary, in order to render the township liable for an injury, that complaints should be made to such officers.—Malloy v. Township of Walker, 77 Mich. 448.

¶ 840. It is the road-way that the statute (Laws 1887, Act No. 264) requires to be kept in a reasonably safe condition; and whether such way requires the use of the entire width of the street must depend entirely upon the necessities of travel in any given case, and of this the city authorities must take notice, at their own peril; so held where a stump had been left standing in a street.—Sebert v. City of Alpena, 78 Mich. 165.

¶ 841. Where an injury occurred near the line between two lots, it being somewhat uncertain what was the precise spot, and by charter of the city each abutter was required to build his own walk, and it appeared that one walk was in bad condition and unsafe while the other had recently been inspected and reported sound, the city cannot claim that only in case of actual notice of the defect in the walk reported sound could it be held liable; since the general bad condition where the walks join is some evidence of constructive notice.—Nestle v. City of Flint, 141 Mich. 153.

§ 223. ——Of condition of bridges and culverts.

See also ante ¶¶ 834, 835.
Presumptions as to notice or knowledge of condition of bridge, see post § 281.
Evidence as to notice, see post § 294.
Questions of law and fact as to notice of defects, see post § 325.
Opportunity to make safe, see post § 225.

¶ 842. When it is generally known that a bridge has become decrepit, or when it has stood so long that there is much suspicion of it, the officers of the township may not disregard the warning conveyed on the ground of want of actual notice of the dangerous infirmity.—Moore v. Township of Kenockee, 75 Mich. 332.

¶ 843. A city is chargeable with constructive notice of the defective condition of a bridge within its jurisdiction, where the defect is of such long standing and of such character as actually to arrest the attention of passersby, or of persons inspecting the bridge.—Snyder v. City of Albion, 113 Mich. 275.

¶ 844. Notice is imputable from failure to make a full examination when suspicious appearances are revealed when repairs are going on.—Stebbins v. Township of Keene, 60 Mich. 214.

¶ 845. A township which does not have actual notice of a defect in a bridge is not liable for an injury received by a traveler unless the defect was of such a character as to be obvious, and was permitted to remain for an unreasonable length of time.—Whitford v. Township of Washington, 184 Mich. 422.

¶ 846. A city was not liable for an injury sustained through the absence of a short board forming part of the floor of an iron bridge which was first observed to be loose on Saturday night preceding the Tuesday on which the accident occurred, where the board had been put back in place and thus gave no sign of the defect, and where the city had no notice and there was no evidence from which notice could be properly inferred; the mere neglect of the city to inspect not being actionable under Comp. L. 1897, § 3441 et seq., imposing liability for injuries sustained upon a defective bridge provided the city had reasonable notice of the defect.—Thomas v. City of Flint, 123 Mich. 10.

¶ 847. The fact that a hole in a plank culvert in the middle of a street remains from five o'clock in the morning until eight in the evening of the same day is not sufficient to charge a city with negligence, there being no evidence of actual knowledge on the part of, or notice to, the city; the time is too short.—Reed v. City of Detroit, 99 Mich. 204.

§ 224. Opportunity, time and means to repair or protect.

To repair or make bridge safe, see post § 225.
Means to repair as element in negligent failure to repair, see also Bridges § 10.
Burden of proof as to opportunity to repair, see post § 281.
Evidence as to opportunity to make safe, see post § 291.

¶ 848. It cannot be urged as a defense that there were but two street commissioners, and that they could not possibly supervise the streets of a large city so as to discover at once and remedy all defects in streets, etc.; the statute having imposed the duty of repair and the liability for neglect, the city, at its peril, must do whatever is needful to protect itself against actions for injury.—Grand Rapids v. Wyman, 46 Mich. 516.

¶ 849. A city must have not only notice of the defects, but a reasonable time and opportunity after the streets become unsafe, etc., to put them in proper condition before a liability attaches.—McKellar v. City of Detroit, 57 Mich. 158.

¶ 850. A township cannot be charged with negligence in not repairing a hole in its highway by the fact that the overseer of highways found such hole the day before the accident for which suit is brought, where, owing to water which continued to rise and overflow the road there was no opportunity to make repairs.—Smith v. Township of Walker, 117 Mich. 14.

¶ 851. Where it appears from the evidence that a plank in a sidewalk had been loose for two months, the fact that a futile attempt was made three days before the injury therefrom to remedy the defect will not relieve the city from liability.—Moon v. City of Ionia, 81 Mich. 635.

¶ 852. Where a city sought to escape from liability for an injury sustained by reason of a defective sidewalk by claiming that the statute (Laws 1887, Act No. 264), imposing liability in such cases became operative so short a time before the accident that the city could not raise by tax the money necessary to make repairs, the council being prohibited from pledging the city for such purpose, the city could not escape liability if there were funds in the treasury raised on the individual credit of members of the council for the purpose of making repairs. —Moon v. City of Ionia, 81 Mich. 635.

¶ 853. Where, in a suit for personal injuries received by falling upon a defective sidewalk, the testimony, if believed, shows that the walk was repaired and placed in a condition reasonably safe for public travel the day before the accident, it cannot be said that a sufficient length of time had elapsed from which notice of the defective condition of the walk could be inferred, or that the city had had a reasonable time within which to repair the defect.—Dittrich v. City of Detroit, 98 Mich. 245.

¶ 854. Failure to put a sidewalk in proper condition within a reasonable time after notice of a defect therein is essential to the liability of a municipal corporation for personal injuries caused by such defect, whether the notice of the defect be actual or constructive.—Burleson v. Village of Reading, 110 Mich. 512.

¶ 855. Where a village has knowledge of a defective condition of a sidewalk, it is its duty to put it in a reasonably safe condition for travel and this duty is not discharged by sending a man to repair it.—Styles v. Village of Decatur, 131 Mich. 443.

§ 225. ——Bridges and culverts.

See also post ¶ 1107.

Officer or municipality charged with duty to keep bridges in safe condition, see ante § 215.

¶ 856. Want of means is not pleadable by a township which elected to maintain its highways and bridges, not by general taxation as provided by the general highway act, Comp. L. 1897, §§ 4104-4114, but by the labor of the inhabitants, under chapters 2 and 3, sections 4072-4103, since it was not relieved from the obligation to keep its highways in repair as provided by Pub. Acts 1887, Act No. 264; the township had authority to make repairs under sections 1, 2 and 3 of chapter 7 of the highway act.—Pearl v. Township of Benton, 136 Mich. 697.

C. DUTY AND NEGLIGENCE TOWARDS VEHICLE USERS; WHAT CONSTITUTES DEFECTS IN WAY.

§ 226. Improper condition of street or highway, in general.

Extent of duty and care generally, see ante § 199.

Liability for failure to construct, see ante § 200.

Liability for defective plan and manner of construction, see ante § 201.

Duty to inspect highways and keep them in repair, see ante § 203.

Trees on or overhanging way, see also ante § 209.

Duty to provide railings, barriers and warning signals, see ante § 211.

Officer or municipality charged with duty to keep highway in safe condition, see ante § 214.

Notice of conditions and opportunity to make safe, see ante XII, B.

Contributory negligence of vehicle users, see post § 247.

Proximate cause and concurrent causes, see post § 241.

Sufficiency of evidence to show negligence, see post § 299.

Questions of law and fact as to condition and safety, see post §§ 305, 306.

Instructions as to duty and negligence respecting roadways, see post § 346.

Actions for injuries, see post XII, H.

Notice and statement of claim, see post § 266.

Duty and negligence toward foot travelers, see post XII, D.

Injuries to vehicle users from other users of road, see post XIII.

Statutory liability for injuries to horses and vehicles, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4585.

Provisions for erection of railing along narrowed way in lieu of widening same, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4396.

¶ 857. While a roadway otherwise reasonably safe for public travel is not usually made unsafe, within the meaning of the statute, because of natural accumulations of ice or snow thereon, a road may, however, be constructed in such manner as to become unsafe for ordinary travel whenever its surface becomes slippery, and especially when it is covered with snow or ice, and in such case the township may be liable for personal injuries received therefrom.—Stanton v. Township of Webster, 170 Mich. 428.

Injury to automobile or occupants by defective highway, see note, 8 N. C. C. A. 922-941.

§ 227. Obstructions and objects in streets.

Liability of abutting owner for obstructions left in streets, see post § 256.

Declaration for injuries from obstructions in streets, see post § 273.
What constitute obstructions and improper uses, see ante XI.
Proceedings and actions to remove obstructions and open way, see ante XI.

¶ 858. Where a man was thrown out of his buggy and killed in consequence of striking a pile of lumber that projected over the street to the traveled part of the way but not over the latter, which was in proper repair, his administratrix could not recover against the municipality for his death as for an injury caused by failing to keep the street in repair and safe for travel.—McArthur v. City of Saginaw, 58 Mich. 357.

¶ 859. The act "for the collection of damages sustained by reason of defective public highways, streets," etc. (How. St. §§ 1442-1446), covers such defects only as are due to want of repair, and has nothing to do with the presence in the street of building material or other objects that do not affect its condition in that particular.—McArthur v. City of Saginaw, 58 Mich. 357.

¶ 860. The unauthorized or excessive use of portions of the street by an abutting owner in putting lumber or materials thereon, is an abuse to be rectified under the police powers of the city, and does not belong to the making or repairing of the highway.—McArthur v. City of Saginaw, 58 Mich. 357.

¶ 861. A city is not liable for an injury from a boulder temporarily left in the street by the side of the traveled part during steps taken to remove it; allowing things that are not part of the street to stand therein is not putting it out of repair.—Agnew v. Corunna, 55 Mich. 428.

¶ 862. Where a highway has existed for over fifteen years an obstruction therein is not excused by the fact that similar obstructions are common in other roads which, not having been in use for ten years, are not public highways under How. St. § 1315.—Langworthy v. Township of Green, 88 Mich. 207.

§ 228. Operations and conditions frightening horses.

Questions of law and fact as to fright of horses, see post § 311.
Instructions as to fright of horses, see post § 347.
Fright of horses caused by other users of road, see post § 376.
Contributory negligence in driving and handling horses, see post § 247.
Fright or other cause as proximate to injury, see post § 244.

¶ 863. A city is not liable in damages to a person riding in a buggy on the public streets and whose horse became frightened and ran away because of the fact that firemen were flushing the street from a fire hydrant, where it appears that the hydrant had never been used for any other purpose than fire purposes, that no water had ever been sold by the city or used by it for any other purpose than extinguishing fires, and that the sole object of opening and flushing this hydrant was to remove accumulations and obstructions.—Brink v. City of Grand Rapids, 144 Mich. 472.

¶ 864. A city is not liable in damages for injuries sustained by a horse becoming frightened by the flushing of a city fire hydrant, where the city had no pecuniary interest in establishing or maintaining the hydrant and received no compensation for its use, it was maintained entirely by taxation upon the entire city, and its use was for the sole benefit of the entire city, and it was constructed, maintained, and used in a governmental capacity.—Brink v. City of Grand Rapids, 144 Mich. 472.

¶ 865. An action for personal injuries sustained by one riding in a buggy on the public streets by reason of his horse taking fright because of firemen flushing a street from one of the city's fire hydrants cannot be maintained under the statutory liability that a city must keep its streets in a condition reasonably safe for public travel.—Brink v. City of Grand Rapids, 144 Mich. 472.

Horses frightened by various objects on or near highways, see note, 3 N. C. C. A. 859-866.
Liability for injuries caused by frightening horses on streets or highways, see note. 12 N. C. C. A. 145-173.
Duty of persons conducting operations in streets to prevent frightening horses, see note, 12 N. C. C. A. 255-277.

§ 229. Towards users of heavy vehicles or engines.

On bridges and culverts, see post § 230.
Instructions as to opportunity to make repairs, see post §§ 354, 356.

¶ 866. Pub. Acts of 1909, No. 283, chap. XXII, § 1, How. 2nd Ed., § 2462, imposing the obligation upon a municipality to keep and maintain its highways in a condition reasonably safe and fit for travel applies even to the use of the streets by automobiles and heavy motor trucks, as such vehicles must now be regarded as in common use.—Cone v. City of Detroit, 191 Mich. 198.

§ 230. ——On bridges and culverts.

Notice or knowledge of defective condition, see ante §§ 219, 223.
Duty to inspect and repair bridges and culverts, see ante § 210.
Duty to provide railings, barriers or warning signals on bridges, see ante § 211.

Ditches and gutters as culverts within meaning of statutes as to inspection and repair, see ante § 208.
Liability for defective plan and construction, see also ante § 202.
Duty to provide railings and barriers, see ante § 212.
Proximate cause of injury upon bridges and culverts, see post §§ 245, 246.
Contributory negligence in using bridges and culverts, see post § 249.
Pleading issues and variance, see post §§ 273, 278.
Presumption of contributory negligence from knowledge of defects, see ante § 250.
Presumptions as to repairs of bridge, see post § 280.
Evidence as to construction, strength and condition of bridges and culverts, see post § 294.
Evidence to show notice of claim, see post § 303.
Want of railing on bridge as proximate cause of injury, see also Bridges § 11.
Condition of snow on bridge frightening horses, see also Bridges ¶ 22.
Liability of toll bridge company for failing to guard drawbridge, see Toll Roads.
Statutory duty to provide gates and barriers for draw bridges or swing bridges, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4432 et seq.
Statutory width and minimum load limit for bridge or culvert, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4427.

¶ 867. Whether changed conditions in modes of travel and transportation render a repeal of Pub. Acts 1903, No. 71, How. 2nd Ed., § 4235, providing in part that no township shall be liable in damages for damage sustained by the breakage of any bridge or culvert by any steam engine or steam vehicle weighing more than six tons, advisable, held purely a question for legislative determination.—Lundstrom v. Township of Ellsworth, 196 Mich. 502.

¶ 868. A municipality putting up public bridges is not obliged to anticipate every conceivable strain to which they may be subjected, such, for instance, as the passage of heavy machinery of a kind not used when the bridge is built.—Fulton Iron & Engine Works v. Township of Kimball, 52 Mich. 146.

¶ 869. If a bridge is reasonably safe and fit for the ordinary modes of travel in use at the time of its construction, the city cannot be held liable for any injury occasioned by unanticipated and extraordinary use of the same,—such as running steam-engines over it by self-propulsion.—Woodbury v. City of Owosso, 64 Mich. 239.

¶ 870. The duty is only to provide reasonably safe bridges under existing conditions and not to provide structures that will sustain loads that could not reasonably be anticipated.—Moore v. Township of Hazelton, 118 Mich. 425.

¶ 871. Where the driver of an engine was warned to use planks in crossing a bridge, and told by the highway commissioner that it would be safe if planks were used and probably was safe anyway, and planks were used but the engine fell off the planks and through the bridge, the township, not being an insurer, was not liable though the running off the planks was not due to plaintiff's negligence.—Comstock v. Township of Georgetown, 137 Mich. 541.

¶ 872. Pub. Acts 1903, No. 71, How. 2nd Ed., § 4235, providing in part that no township shall be liable for any damage sustained by the breakage of any bridge or culvert by any steam engine or steam vehicle weighing more than six tons, held to embrace reasonable questions of legislative discretion not inhibited by any constitutional provision.—Lundstrom v. Township of Ellsworth, 196 Mich. 502.

§ 231. Towards bicyclists.

Contributory negligence of bicyclist using bridge, see post § 249.
Questions of law and fact, see post § 305.
Instructions in actions for injuries to bicyclists, see post §§ 345, 348.

¶ 873. No recovery can be had for injury to a bicyclist caused by a defective pavement where the street was in a reasonably safe condition for ordinary travel, since How. St. § 1446 et seq., requiring that streets be kept in a reasonably safe condition applies to ordinary vehicles such as wagons and carriages and has no application to travel by means of bicycles.—Leslie v. City of Grand Rapids, 120 Mich. 28.

¶ 874. The riding of a bicycle on a sidewalk is not unlawful at common law.—Lee v. City of Port Huron, 128 Mich. 533.

¶ 875. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 3441, requiring sidewalks to be kept in reasonable repair and fit for travel, a city is liable for injuries sustained by a bicyclist riding upon a defective sidewalk where the defect is such as to be dangerous for the ordinary traffic on the walk.—Lee v. City of Port Huron, 128 Mich. 533.

D. DUTY AND NEGLIGENCE TOWARDS FOOT TRAVELERS, AND WHAT CONSTITUTE DEFECTS.

Actionable injuries to pedestrians from other persons driving on street, see post XIII. B.

§ 232. Defective walks and crosswalks in general.

Holes, excavations and depressions in walk or way where persons walk and dangers beside way, see post §§ 233, 234.
Water, snow or ice on walk, see post § 235.
Obstructions and objects in way, see post § 236.

Defective and unsafe roadways or drives, see post § 237.
Speeding or racing in roadway, see post § 238.
Extent of duty and care, generally, see ante § 199.
Liability for failure to construct, see ante § 200.
Liability for defective plan or manner of construction, see ante § 201.
Duty to inspect and keep in repair, see ante § 203 et seq.
Duty to provide railings, barriers or warning signals, see ante §§ 211 et seq., 226.
Officer or municipality charged with duty of keeping highway in safe condition, see ante § 214.
Notice of danger and opportunity to make safe, see ante XII, B.
Proximate cause of injury, see post § 241.
Contributory negligence of foot travelers, see post § 250.
Actions for injuries, see post XII, H.
Notice and statement of claim to municipality, see post § 266.
Declaration in action for injuries, see post § 273.
Burden of proof, see post § 280.
Sufficiency of evidence to show negligence, see post § 299.
Questions of law and fact as to condition and safety of streets, see post § 305 et seq.
Liability of abutters, private owners and corporations, see post XII, G.
Liability of corporations and persons constructing, repairing or using streets, see post § 260.
Statutory provisions as to railings on narrowed ways, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4396.

¶ 876. Where a village has constructed and maintained a crosswalk on a level with the sidewalk, and an adjoining land-owner in remodeling the sidewalk creates a step or fall to the crosswalk, and the crosswalk at this point is out of repair, the village, after notice, becomes liable for injuries resulting from the obstruction and defect.—Shippy v. Village of Au Sable, 85 Mich. 280.

¶ 877. A rise in a crosswalk, caused by one end of a plank, lying lengthwise in the walk, being raised two inches above the adjoining plank, is not a defect in the walk, so that it is not reasonably safe, within the meaning of How. St. § 1446e.—Weisse v. City of Detroit, 105 Mich. 482.

¶ 878. An abrupt rise of two inches above the level of a sidewalk caused by laying planks lengthwise thereon to permit teams to pass to adjoining premises does not render the walk not "reasonably safe" for public travel.—Yotter v. City of Detroit, 107 Mich. 4.

¶ 879. An earth walk that connects sidewalks on intersecting streets, and that, because of a difference in grade, inclines twelve inches in the three feet of its length, cannot be said to be unsafe.—Wesley v. City of Detroit, 117 Mich. 658.

¶ 880. A city could not defend an action for damages to a pedestrian who fell off the end of a sidewalk into the space left where some 50 feet of the sidewalk had been torn up, on the ground that no sidewalk existed at the point where the accident occurred.—Belyea v. City of Port Huron, 136 Mich. 504.

§ 233. Holes, excavations and depressions in walk.

Duty to provide railings, barriers or warning signals, see ante § 211.
Proximate cause of injury from stepping in holes and depressions, see post § 242.
Contributory negligence in failing to avoid holes and depressions, see post §§ 247, 251.
Avoidance of holes, excavations and depressions, see post § 251.
Proximate cause of the injury, see post § 242.
Declaration for injuries from holes and excavations, see post § 273.
Questions of law and fact as to holes, depressions and excavations, see post § 308.

¶ 881. How. St. § 1445, making it a city's duty to keep its crosswalks in repair, renders a city liable for failure to replace and keep in repair a crosswalk torn up in grading leaving an excavation into which plaintiff fell and was injured.—Alexander v. City of Big Rapids, 70 Mich. 224.

¶ 882. Where a city by tearing up a sidewalk and excavating under it, in the improvement of a street, makes the place a part of the street and allows it to remain so, it is liable to one who without fault on his own part falls into such excavation and is hurt. —Alexander v. City of Big Rapids, 70 Mich. 224; Alexander v. City of Big Rapids, 76 Mich. 282.

¶ 883. Where a city tears up a crosswalk and makes an excavation into which plaintiff, slipping on the sidewalk, falls, the fact that plaintiff's fall began on the sidewalk will not prevent recovery for injuries received, although at the time the city was not liable for injuries from defective sidewalks. —Alexander v. City of Big Rapids, 76 Mich. 282.

¶ 884. A city is not liable for injury to a person walking with a cane caused by the cane going through the walk between the planks which were slightly decayed along the edges, where the walk was in a reasonably safe condition for ordinary travel. Harden v. City of Jackson, 137 Mich. 271.

¶ 885. It is not negligence for a city to use plank walks though they have cracks and knot holes through which a cane might go, since the traveler must know that this is unavoidable.—Harden v. City of Jackson, 137 Mich. 271.

¶ 886. Municipalities are not required to keep their streets and sidewalks absolutely smooth, and a condition of reasonable safety only is required; a depression in a cement sidewalk of only 1⅞ inches, probably caused by the excavation of a sewer underneath in refilling which the ground had not been solidly packed does not constitute such negligence as to make the city liable in an action for injuries sustained.—Bennett v. City of St. Joseph, 146 Mich. 382.

Liability of city for personal injuries resulting from coal holes and other openings in sidewalks, see note, 6 N. C. C. A. 407-415.

§ 234. Holes and dangerous conditions beside walk or way.

Defects and dangers in roadway, see post §§ 237, 238.
Road conditions causing vehicles to leave road and run upon walk, see post ¶ 899.

¶ 887. A township is liable for negligence in leaving unguarded in a highway for an unreasonable length of time a hole so near the highway intended for travel that persons would be likely to get into it in seeking to avoid a hole in the beaten track.—Wakeham v. Township of St. Clair, 91 Mich. 15.

¶ 888. Public travel is not supposed to occupy all parts of a country highway leading out of a village, though within its limits, and the public authorities cannot be expected to put the road in condition as if it were. So held where a woman in leaving the pathway at the side of such a road to go cross-lots fell into a hole.—Keyes v. Village of Marcellus, 50 Mich. 439.

Liability of municipal corporation for personal injury sustained from fall of billboard, see note, 5 N. C. C. A. 954-967.

§ 235. Accumulations of water, snow and ice.

Contributory negligence in walking on icy walks, see post § 252.
Declaration for injuries from accumulations of snow and ice, see post § 273.
Presumptions as to notice or knowledge of icy condition, see post § 281.
Questions of law and fact as to accumulations of ice and snow, see post § 314.
Injuries to vehicle users from accumulations of ice and snow, see ante § 226.

¶ 889. Pub. Acts 1879, p. 223 (How. St., §§ 1442-1446) extends to townships, villages and cities alike, but applies only to injuries that are due to defects from being out of repair, and not to such as are caused by the mere accumulation of ice and snow.—McKellar v. City of Detroit, 57 Mich. 158.

¶ 890. A city is not liable for injuries sustained by slipping on ice in the highway where such ice was by natural causes, through the stoppage of a catch basin but without fault on the city's part, formed from snow that had fallen in the highway.—Kannenberg v. City of Alpena, 96 Mich. 53.

¶ 891. A city is not liable for an injury caused by the accumulation along the sides of the streets and at street crossings of snow removed from sidewalks for foot travel, and from the middle of the street for the passage of vehicles, which snow has been changed by the weather to ice; the legislative intent to impose such liability not appearing in the statute requiring municipalities to keep their streets and walks in a condition reasonably safe for travel.—Hutchinson v. City of Ypsilanti, 108 Mich. 12.

¶ 892. The duty of a municipality to keep sidewalks in a condition reasonably safe for public travel cannot be extended so as to render it liable for injuries received by reason of the formation upon a walk of a thin strip of ice, caused by the discharge, at a point two feet away, of water conducted through a pipe from a sag in an eaves trough.—Gavett v. City of Jackson, 109 Mich. 408.

¶ 893. A city is not liable for injuries received in consequence of a fall on a sidewalk which fall was occasioned by the accumulation upon the sidewalk from natural causes of ice and snow.—Rolf v. City of Greenville, 102 Mich. 544; Wesley v. City of Detroit, 117 Mich. 658.

¶ 894. A city is not negligent in failing to remove from sidewalks accumulations of snow and ice due to natural causes.—Jefferson v. City of Sault Ste. Marie, 166 Mich. 340.

¶ 895. Although a city had made an attempt to clean its sidewalks by the use of a snow plow, it is not liable for a fall caused by the accumulation of ice from water for which the city was in no way responsible or from snow which was trodden down and tramped in and frozen, or from crowning snow left on the walk through the inability of the city to scrape off the hard snow.—Jefferson v. City of Sault Ste. Marie, 166 Mich. 340.

¶ 896. A municipality owes no duty to pedestrians to provide drains for sidewalks that are so situated that accumulations of water and ice can form thereon.—Mayo v. Village of Baraga, 178 Mich. 171.

Liability of municipality for negligence in removing ice and snow from streets or sidewalks, see note, 5 N. C. C. A. 463-482.

§ 236. Obstructions and objects on sidewalk.

Injuries from manhole in roadway, see post ¶ 898.

¶ 897. Where a street is rendered unsafe and unfit for public travel because of the act of a municipality in leaving a pile of sheet steel 30 inches high and weighing 600 pounds on a sidewalk against a building but in so nearly an upright position as to be easily toppled over, the municipality is liable for injuries to a pedestrian received as a result of the tipping over of the steel by some small boys who were playing about it.—Brown v. City of St. Johns, 187 Mich. 641, 14 N. C. C. A. 440.

§ 237. Defective and unsafe roadways.

¶ 898. Plaintiff, while attempting to cross diagonally the intersection of two city streets, was injured by stepping on the edge of a manhole situated just outside the sidewalk, and at the corner formed by the intersection of the two crosswalks with the sidewalk. Held, that it was the city's duty to render the manhole sufficiently safe with reference to the uses the public would probably make of it, but the space covered by the manhole need not be kept as smooth as a sidewalk.—Lincoln v. City of Detroit, 101 Mich. 245.

¶ 899. A city is liable for the death of a person who is killed by an automobile fire truck driven by city firemen where the truck, because of the unreasonably defective condition of the pavement, runs off the street and strikes decedent, and it is immaterial under such theory of the case whether or not the city's employees were negligent.—Cone v. City of Detroit, 191 Mich. 198.

§ 238. Speeding or racing in roadway.

Liability of driver for injuries to other users of road from racing and immoderate driving, see post § 378.

Injuries from fire truck running off the street, see ante ¶ 899.

¶ 900. Comp. L. 1897, chap. 91, relating to recovery of damages for the failure to keep village streets safe and fit for travel, does not cover a case for an injury sustained by a plaintiff by being struck by one of a number of horses engaged in racing in a street under permission of the village officers; the street having been in proper and safe condition.—McCarthy v. Village of Munising, 136 Mich. 622.

E. DUTY AND NEGLIGENCE TOWARDS OTHER PERSONS, LICENSEES AND WRONGDOERS.

Actionable injuries from construction or repair of streets or roads to adjacent property, see ante § 111.

Persons entitled to sue for water diversion, see ante ¶ 389.

Instruction in action for diverting waters, see ante ¶¶ 388, 390.

§ 239. Persons working in street or highway.

Extent of duty and care generally, see ante § 199.

Duty to inspect highways and keep them in repair, see ante § 203.

Persons to whom duty owing, see ante § 217.

¶ 901. The rule that a municipality is liable to strangers in the lawful use of the street, though it let an independent contract to perform the work, has no application to an action for damages by an employee of the contractor for village sewer work, through the caving of the ground where he was digging.—Lenderink v. Village of Rockford, 135 Mich. 531.

¶ 902. A person employed by the fire department of Detroit as an engine driver may claim damages from the city for an injury to him resulting from a defective street and received while driving his engine to a fire.—Coots v. City of Detroit, 75 Mich. 628.

§ 240. Children or others playing in street.

Proximate cause of injury to child, see post § 241.

Contributory negligence of children injured on highways, see post ¶¶ 934, 969.

Duty and negligence of vehicle users towards children and incapables, see post § 373.

Coasting in highway as nuisance, see ante § 177.

¶ 903. An ordinance prohibiting the playing of any game of nine or ten pins, ball, wicket, or other games in any street or other public place, has no application to a child playing at children's games, who was injured on a defective sidewalk while so playing. The "other games" are ejusdem generis of those named.—Beaudin v. Bay City, 136 Mich. 333.

¶ 904. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 3441, providing that any person or persons sustaining bodily injury upon any public street, sidewalk, etc., by reason of neglect in keeping the same reasonably safe for travel, may recover, for his injuries, a child who sustains injury upon a defective sidewalk while at lawful play, which involves travel, is to be regarded as within the spirit of the law and protected.—Beaudin v. Bay City, 136 Mich. 333.

¶ 905. Defendant city strung its electric wire over the grassplot between the sidewalk and the public street. During a storm the wire broke and an end hung down near the ground. Plaintiff, a child of five, stepped upon the plot and was injured by coming in contact with the wire. The evidence was not clear as to how the accident happened, plaintiff being found after the accident, lying on the ground under the wire. There was evidence from which an inference might be drawn that the plaintiff first touched the wire with her head and then with her hand. Held, plaintiff could not be considered a trespasser for "meddling" with the wire.—Johnson v. City of Bay City, 164 Mich. 251.

¶ 906. Defendant city strung its electric wire above the ornamental grassplot included between the public sidewalk and the street curb. The wire broke during a storm and one end of it hung down near the ground. Plaintiff, a child, went upon the grassplot and came into contact with the wire. In a suit for personal injuries, held, plaintiff was not a trespasser in stepping upon the plot.—Johnson v. City of Bay City, 164 Mich. 251.

Liability for injuries caused by or while coasting on or on across public street or highway, see note, 3 N. C. C. A. 514-523.

F. PROXIMATE CAUSE, CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE, AND ACTS OF THIRD PERSONS.

§ 241. Proximate cause and concurrent causes.

Particular causes and conditions, see post §§ 242-246.

Contributory negligence as a cause, see post § 247 et seq.

Injuries caused by acts of third persons, responsibility of public, see post § 253 et seq.

Questions of law and fact as to proximate cause, see post § 327.

Instructions as to proximate cause, see post § 358.

Proximate cause of injury to users of highway from other users, see § 381.

General law of proximate cause, see Negligence, III.

Proximate consequences of injury as compensable damages, see Damages, I-III.

¶ 907. A township is only liable, under How. St., §§ 1446c-1446e, for injuries sustained by reason of its neglect to keep its highways in repair, where such neglect is the proximate cause of the injury.—McKeller v. Township of Monitor, 78 Mich. 485; Beall v. Township of Athens, 81 Mich. 536.

¶ 908. A five-year-old child may recover against a city for an injury caused by the defective condition of a temporary walk approaching an excavation that was recently barricaded, the defective support of the walk and not the want of a good barrier being the cause of injury.—Brydon v. City of Detroit, 117 Mich. 296.

¶ 909. In an action by a traveler on a sidewalk, for injuries sustained by glass falling from a building, negligence in maintaining a window in such a condition that it was liable to fall out, was the proximate cause of the accident, although wind may have been a concurring circumstance.—Detzur v. Stroh Brewing Co., 119 Mich. 282.

¶ 910. Where the playfulness of a colt forced its team mate off the wrought portion of a highway at a point where one might drive at right angles in safety for thirty feet, beyond which an obstruction was struck and an accident resulted, the proximate cause was the action of the colt and not the failure of the defendant township to erect barriers along the highway.—Irwin v. Township of Byron, 183 Mich. 345.

¶ 911. Plaintiff was injured by a runaway team. The evidence showed that the team had become frightened at steam from a furnace before reaching a certain railroad crossing, were prancing and shying, but were not at that time beyond the driver's control. At the railroad crossing the defendant city had permitted the snow to be piled up, so that the team had to make a sharp descent upon the tracks, where the driver was thrown out, and the team being further affrightened by this descent, the runaway followed. Held, the condition of the snow was the proximate cause of the runaway so as to make defendant city liable.—Johnson v. City of Marquette, 154 Mich. 50.

§ 242. ——Pedestrians stepping or falling into holes or depressions.

Liability for injuries to pedestrians from holes and depressions, see ante § 233.

Contributory negligence in failing to avoid holes and excavations, see post § 251.

¶ 912. Where a horse fastened by a third person to a plank in a sidewalk suddenly jerked it out of place just as plaintiff came along, so that the latter stepped into the aperture, and was hurt, the defect in the walk cannot be said to be the primary cause of the injury.—Hembling v. City of Grand Rapids, 99 Mich. 292.

¶ 913. Municipalities are not required to keep sidewalks in a perfectly safe condition and are liable for injuries sustained by pedestrians only when the walks are not reasonably safe, and when it appears that a person is injured by stepping into a hole in an artificial stone walk caused by the breaking of the top cement, and the wear of the grouting beneath, causing a depression about two feet in diameter, and about one and one-half to three inches deep, it cannot be said that the defect renders the walk not reasonably safe.—Jackson v. City of Lansing, 121 Mich. 279.

¶ 914. Where a pedestrian in walking on a rainy day upon an old and rotten sidewalk having several holes, slipped into one of the holes and sustained injury, the slipping was not the proximate cause of the accident.—Burrell v. City of Greenville, 133 Mich. 235.

¶ 915. The doctrine of proximate and remote cause had no application in favor of a defendant city where plaintiff fell into an unguarded excavation in a street in the nighttime, while attempting to board a street car which it was contended by the city had neg-ligently stopped near such excavation.—Monje v. City of Grand Rapids, 122 Mich. 645.

¶ 916. Not the filling up with snow but the digging of a drain fifteen inches deep in the snow on a crosswalk of a paved street which became filled up with light snow so that one traveling on the crosswalk could not see the drain, is the proximate cause of injuries to one who steps into the drain and is injured.—Morrison v. City of Ironwood, 189 Mich. 117.

§ 243. ——Horses stepping into or shying at holes.

Frightening of horses, see post § 244.

¶ 917. Where the owner of a horse is injured by the animal's struggles in seeking to extricate itself from a hole in a township bridge into which it has stepped, the township's negligence in failing to repair the bridge is the proximate cause of injury.—La Duke v. Township of Exeter, 97 Mich. 450.

¶ 918. Where a horse was drowned by slipping on and falling while attempting to break through ice formed over a hole or depression was not the proximate cause of the ~~pression was not the proximate cause of the~~ accident, if but for the ice the passage would have been made safely.—Smith v. Township of Walker, 117 Mich. 14.

§ 244. ——Frightening of horses.

See also ante ¶ 911.

Horses stepping into or shying at holes, see ante § 243.

Backing and turning in fright, see also post § 245.

Questions of law and fact as to fright of horses, see post § 311.

Instructions as to fright of horses, see post § 347.

Liability for operations and conditions frightening horses, see ante § 228.

¶ 919. The statute making a municipality liable for an injury that is due to a street's being out of repair (Laws 1879, Act No. 244), applies only where the want of repair is the immediate cause of the injury; and it is not putting a highway out of repair to let things stand in it for a time that form no part of it. So held where a horse was frightened at the sight of a boulder that had been dug out of the road-bed and left between the gutter and the traveled part of the way until it could be removed by a person who had asked for and obtained it for building purposes.—Agnew v. City of Corunna, 55 Mich. 428.

¶ 920. While plaintiff was driving in a highway in a place where the road-bed had been raised above the surrounding level by an unguarded embankment from nine to fourteen feet wide at the top, his horse shied at a log lying in the highway below the embankment, and, being struck by the whip, plunged down and upset plaintiff's buggy. Held, that the primary cause of the accident was not the negligence of the township in leaving the embankment unguarded, but was the horse's taking fright at the log—for the presence of which, in the place stated, the town was not liable—and the driver's act in whipping him.—Beall v. Township of Athens, 81 Mich. 536.

¶ 921. Where a horse is frightened by the falling of an object from an upper window in a building in front of which he is hitched, and he breaks away, and runs into a lot of iron rails piled in the street for use in rebuilding a street-railway track, and is injured, the proximate cause of the injury is the frightening and running away of the horse.—Bleil v. Detroit St. R. Co., 98 Mich. 228.

¶ 922. A township was not liable for an injury sustained by plaintiff through the tipping of his buggy into a ditch at the side of the roadway in question, because of the fright of the horse; the proximate cause of the accident having been the fright of the horse, and not the absence of railings along the sides of the roadway at its approach to the bridge.—Doak v. Township of Saginaw, 119 Mich. 680.

¶ 923. A township is not responsible for injuries to a driver of a vehicle, caused by a horse being frightened because of a large crack in the snow on the bridge, as the want of barriers was not the proximate cause of the injury, but a remote cause, and the township is liable only where the negligence complained of is the proximate cause of the injury.—White v. Township of Riley, 121 Mich. 413.

¶ 924. Where a horse became frightened by boys in a tree, on a township roadbed 17 feet wide in good condition, while approaching a bridge over a river having no barriers on either side of its approach, and was struck by its driver and could not be kept within the road and went down an embankment and threw the driver; the fright of the horse and not the absence of barriers was the cause of the accident.—Bell v. Village of Wayne, 123 Mich. 386.

¶ 925. The doctrine that a township is not liable for an injury where, though negligent, such negligence was not the proximate cause of the injury, applies in a case where a horse while being driven in a village road became frightened and went down an embankment despite efforts to control it; such not being a mere "shying" of a horse within the rule that mere shying will not absolve the township.—Bell v. Village of Wayne, 123 Mich. 386.

§ 245. ——Backing or turning from side of bridge or culvert.

¶ 926. The statutory liability of a township for injuries from the defective condition of a bridge (How. St. § 1443, as amended by Laws 1885, Act No. 214, § 2) extends to the injury of the driver due to the horse's taking fright at a defect in the bridge and backing through a railing; such is not an indirect and remote injury within the meaning of words used in Agnew v. City of Corunna, 55 Mich. 428, at page 430, which had reference to fright at an object outside of the highway.—Smith v. Township of Sherwood, 62 Mich. 159.

¶ 927. Where plaintiff's horse, frightened by a hole in a bridge, backed against the railing of the bridge, which gave way and threw plaintiff below, the defective condition of the bridge is the proximate cause of the injury.—Smith v. Township of Sherwood, 62 Mich. 159.

¶ 928. Whether the railing of a scow provided by a city as a temporary bridge over a river was sufficiently strong or not is immaterial in an action against the city to recover for the loss of plaintiff's horse which, backing against the rail, fell into the river in consequence of the rail's giving way, if the backing of the horse was not occasioned by the defective condition of the temporary bridge; for in that case defendant's negligence was not the proximate cause of the injury.—St. Clair Mineral Springs Co. v. City of St. Clair, 96 Mich. 463.

¶ 929. Plaintiff, after safely crossing a bridge in defendant's township, stopped to converse with a neighbor. His horse got the checkrein over one of the thills, began backing, and, disregarding both command and whip, backed the vehicle upon and off the bridge. Held, that the absence of railings, conceding that it was the township's duty to provide them, was not the proximate cause of the accident.—Kingsley v. Township of Bloomingdale, 109 Mich. 340.

¶ 930. A township which permits the side railing of a bridge to become and remain out of repairs is liable for injuries occasioned by its giving way and allowing a horse, which shies against it, to fall with the driver to the ground below, where the fright of the horse was due to the tipping of planks improperly nailed; but if some object outside of the bridge was the proximate cause of the horse's taking fright, the township is not liable.—Minkley v. Township of Springwells, 113 Mich. 347.

¶ 931. The fact that the immediate cause of a horse's backing over the unguarded approach to a bridge was that he took fright at a crack in the flooring of the bridge, which, by reason of the action of wind and snow, had apparently largely increased in width, does not render the absence of barriers on the approach so remote a cause of the accident as to prevent a recovery therefor against the township having control of the bridge, based upon its negligence in this respect, if the situation was such as to be calculated to frighten horses of ordinary gentleness.—White v. Township of Riley, 113 Mich. 295.

¶ 932. The absence of side railings along the banked approach to a bridge is the proximate cause of an accident to one who, while driving in the usual track, without fault on his part, is precipitated over the embankment by reason of his horse's slipping on ice, stumbling and falling down over the bank.—Shaw v. Township of Saline, 113 Mich. 342.

§ 246. ——Collapse of bridge under load.

Overloading as contributory negligence, see post § 249.

Evidence as to care or negligence on part of plaintiff, see post § 296.

Duty toward users of heavy vehicles, see ante § 230.

¶ 933. Where, by the breaking of a bridge over a creek crossed by a public highway, an engine and the horses drawing it are precipitated beneath and the horses scalded by steam and hot water escaping from the engine's boiler, such breaking is the proximate cause and the township, if negligent in maintaining the bridge, is liable for the injury from such scalding.—McKeller v. Township of Monitor, 78 Mich. 485.

§ 247. Contributory negligence.

Departing from usual or better way, see post § 248.

In use of bridge, see post § 249.

In use of private ways and drives, see post § 420.

Contributory negligence of foot travelers, see post § 250 et seq.

Contributory negligence to negligence of other drivers, see post §§ 382, 383.

Contributory negligence of bicyclist riding off unrailed bridge, see also Bridges ¶ 27.

Driving unshod horse on slippery bridge approach as contributory neglect, see also Bridges ¶ 65.

Coasting in highway as nuisance, see ante § 177.

Liability to one injured while driving on Sunday, see Sunday.

Burden of proof as to contributory negligence, see post § 280.

Evidence as to contributory negligence, see post §§ 296, 301.

Questions of law and fact as to contributory negligence, see post §§ 328-336.

Instructions as to contributory negligence, see post § 359.

General law of contributory negligence, see Negligence, IV.

Doctrine of contributory negligence of children as dependent on their lesser discretion and knowledge, see Negligence, IV.

Imputed negligence of one person to another, as of driver to passenger, see Negligence, IV.

Last clear chance doctrine or doctrine of gross negligence imposing liability notwithstanding plaintiff's contributory neglect, see Negligence, IV.

¶ 934. The liability of a city is coextensive with its duty respecting the ordinary use of its public streets, but such liability cannot be extended beyond that limit, where a child, attracted by the machinery employed in the construction of a public sewer, is thereby induced to climb upon or over the barriers or guards into the excavation; it appearing that that part of the street was closed against travel, and guarded against accident to persons in the ordinary use of the same.—Hamilton v. City of Detroit, 105 Mich. 514.

¶ 935. If a hole in a highway is so open and notorious that one using ordinary care would observe and avoid it, it is contributory negligence to drive into it.—Wakeham v. Township of St. Clair, 91 Mich. 15.

¶ 936. Plaintiff's intestate, while driving along a street-car track in a narrow and unpaved street, was thrown from his wagon by the wheels dropping into a rut outside of the rails and was killed. The accident occurred in the daytime when the condition of the street and of the tracks, and the liability of the wheels to drop into the rut, were apparent. Held, that there could be no recovery against the city, the danger being an ordinary one incident to the use of the track for driving purposes.—Kornetzski v. City of Detroit, 94 Mich. 341.

¶ 937. As to contributory negligence where a horse was driven upon a trot over cobble-stones scattered about the street, see McCool v. City of Grand Rapids, 58 Mich. 41.

¶ 938. A city when excavating in a public street should leave sufficient room for the passage of vehicles; travelers may use the street if they choose, but, unless the excavation is being negligently made, they assume the risk of fright to their horses.—O'Rourke v. City of Monroe, 98 Mich. 520.

¶ 939. One who, while driving along a highway that is covered with ice, urges his horses forward after they have broken the ice and when they are getting deeper into the water, is so contributorily negligent as to prevent his recovering against the township for a defect in the road.—Smith v. Township of Walker, 117 Mich. 14.

¶ 940. One driving a horse which is accustomed to shy at various objects and at ruts and holes in the road, and, paying no attention to the horse or the road, but admiring the scenery and leaving the lines loose, is guilty of contributory negligence where the horse shies at a washout which is in plain view in a high grade causing the horse, buggy and occupant to roll down the embankment.—Tracey v. Township of South Haven, 132 Mich. 492.

¶ 941. A ditch ran along the east side of defendant township's public road, which ditch was from one foot to eighteen inches wide and from eight to eighteen inches deep. On a hill in said road, said ditch meandered toward the middle of the road, leaving barely space for a wagon to pass on the west side of the road. Plaintiff in the daytime drove his wagon past said ditch on the way to town and stopped and examined same with a view of determining how he might get by on returning after dark from town. Upon returning after dark he stopped upon approaching said ditch, got off his wagon, went ahead and examined same, and decided he could drive by with his wagon. In attempting so to do the wagon slid into the ditch, injuring plaintiff's horse. Held, in a suit to recover for the loss of the horse, plaintiff was not precluded from recovery on the ground of contributory negligence.—Highland v. Township of Garfield, 168 Mich. 538.

¶ 942. One who drives at a trot along a street, upon a dark night, within four or five feet of a lighted red lantern displayed near the center of the street, and seen by him when several rods distant, is guilty of contributory negligence precluding a recovery for injuries sustained by falling into an excavation thus sought to be guarded.—Smith v. City of Jackson, 106 Mich. 136.

¶ 943. In an action against a township for damage to a threshing outfit, where the evidence shows that plaintiff failed to keep the separator traveling behind the engine in moving it on the highway, and the separator slid into a ditch, plaintiff is guilty of contributory negligence and cannot recover. Canfield v. Township of Gun Plains, 175 Mich. 379.

¶ 944. A municipality filled in a water main trench at the side of a street, leaving a roadbed thirty feet in width for travel. The earth had been returned by hand and there was no evidence that it had been tamped, but the trench had been filled so that it was rounded. Plaintiff saw the situation, attempted to drive across the trench after a heavy rain, not at a street intersection, and was injured. Held, the municipality was not liable.—Patow v. Village of Oakwood, 176 Mich. 351.

Use of defective highway or street with knowledge of defect as contributory negligence, see note, 14 N. C. C. A. 366-377.

Use of street or highway during progress of repairs or improvements as contributory negligence, see note, 10 N. C. C. A. 228-241.

Taking blind horse upon highway as negligence, see note, 14 N. C. C. A. 512-520.

Negligence of fireman or police officer in driving at excessive speed as affecting right to recover for injury, see note, 9 N. C. C. A. 665-676.

Driving motor vehicle at excessive speed as contributory negligence barring recovery by operator in action to recover damages for injuries to person or property, see note, 10 N. C. C. A. 820-833.

Violation by driver of automobile of statute or ordinance as to speed as constituting negligence, see note, 13 N. C. C. A. 982-1009.
Intoxication of driver of motor vehicle as precludng recovery for personal injuries, see note, 9 N. C. C. A. 915-916.

§ 248. ——Deviating from traveled portion of street or highway.

As to what constitutes traveled part of the road, see also post ¶ 1465.
Directing verdict because of contributory negligence, see post § 343.

¶ 945. A traveler who deviates from a beaten track in a highway where there is nothing to indicate that any part of the roadbed is unsafe does not, if he uses ordinary care, incur the risk of latent defects in the road.—Wakeham v. Township of St. Clair, 91 Mich. 15.

¶ 946. One who drives in the daytime upon a street railway track laid on an unpaved street with ruts alongside the rails takes his chances of the dropping of a wheel into a rut worn outside the rail.—Kornetzski v. City of Detroit, 94 Mich. 341.

¶ 947. A township's duty to erect guards along a highway which passes over an embankment depends somewhat upon the width of the traveled way; and one who, instead of keeping near the center of a traveled way forty feet wide, unnecessarily drives a strange horse near an embankment, and is injured by the horse's taking fright at an object outside of the way and going over the embankment, is guilty of such contributory negligence as bars recovery.—Kuhn v. Township of Walker, 97 Mich. 306.

¶ 948. In an action to recover damages against a township for personal injuries sustained while plaintiff was driving over a public road, where it appeared that plaintiff was traveling over the center track of the road which had been recently graded in a place of perfect safety which he left for another track so as to get to his home to dinner, held that this was not such an emergency as to relieve plaintiff from a charge of contributory negligence for an injury incurred by reason of so leaving the center track.—Long v. Township of Weare, 195 Mich. 706.

§ 249. ——Using bridges and culverts.

Questions of law and fact as to contributory negligence in use of bridges and culverts, see post § 332.
Instructions as to contributory negligence, see post § 361.

¶ 949. There is contributory negligence in driving across a bridge recklessly and turning off from it abruptly so as to catch the wheel in or upon some crack or obstruction not in the traveled part of the way.—Abernethy v. Township of Van Buren, 52 Mich. 383; Beckwith v. Township of Van Buren, 66 Mich. 89.

¶ 950. A bicyclist was not negligent as matter of law where, misled by the moonlight and shadows on a bridge, which is not in alignment with the road, he turns from one side of the road to the other for a better path and thereby falls off the bridge, which is not protected by a rail.—Lauder v. Township of St. Clair, 125 Mich. 479.

¶ 951. One's recklessness in driving off a bridge and turning abruptly is not excused by the practices of other drivers where he was not familiar with the bridge, and so could not rightfully rely on what they did.—Abernethy v. Township of Van Buren, 52 Mich. 383; Beckwith v. Township of Van Buren, 66 Mich. 89.

¶ 952. One is not contributively negligent as matter of law in not going ahead of his team on a bridge without railings, in the nighttime, though he was familiar with the bridge.—Priebe v. Township of Moorland, 162 Mich. 110.

¶ 953. Where on the opening of a temporary bridge across a stream at the side of a defective highway bridge, the plaintiff's intestate saw the first vehicle cross and turn in safety onto the adjoining land, and also saw the occupants of the second rig thrown from their buggy by the wheels dropping into an open ditch as the driver attempted to turn back into the traveled portion of the road, and the plaintiff's intestate chose the latter route and was thrown from his rig and killed by the dropping of the forward wheels into the ditch, he was guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law.—Hayden v. Township of Bangor, 182 Mich. 601.

¶ 954. One who crosses a bridge with an unusually heavy load does so at his own risk.—Fulton Iron & Engine Works v. Township of Kimball, 52 Mich. 146.

§ 250. Contributory negligence of foot travelers.

Failure to avoid holes and depressions, see post § 251.
Going on icy walks, see post § 252.
Contributory negligence of vehicle users injured from defective highway, see ante, § 247.
Burden of proof as to contributory negligence, see post § 280.
Evidence as to plaintiff's care or negligence, see post § 296.
Sufficiency of evidence to show contributory negligence, see post § 301.
Questions of law and fact as to contributory negligence of foot travelers, see post § 333.
Directing verdict on ground of contributory negligence of pedestrian, see post § 344.
Instructions as to contributory negligence of foot travelers, see post § 360.

¶ 955. The fact that plaintiff in an action for injuries sustained by reason of a defective sidewalk was familiar with the unsafe condition of the walk does not preclude a recovery, if, in passing over the walk, he used such care and caution as a prudent man would ordinarily exercise in view of the danger.—Schwingschlegl v. City of Monroe, 113 Mich. 683.

¶ 956. While contributory negligence is not to be presumed from knowledge of the existence of a defect in a sidewalk, such knowledge enjoins upon the party possessing it a degree of care commensurate therewith. —Dittrich v. City of Detroit, 98 Mich. 245.

¶ 957. In determining whether a traveler who sustained personal injuries as a result of a defect in a city street, the existence of which defect was known to him, was guilty of contributory negligence, the true test is: Was the danger arising from the defect obviously of such a character that no person in the exercise of ordinary prudence would attempt to pass over the street at that point? —Sherman v. Consumers' Power Co., 199 Mich. 543.

¶ 958. A pedestrian about to cross on a portion of the street just outside the walk where a manhole cover rests on a stone support presenting an uneven surface must take notice thereof, and must use such care as is commensurate with the situation as measured by ordinary prudence.—Lincoln v. City of Detroit, 101 Mich. 245.

¶ 959. The plaintiff's knowledge of defects in a walk holds her to a higher degree of care than she would otherwise be required to exercise.—Wolverton v. Village of Saranac, 171 Mich. 419.

¶ 960. A woman cannot be charged with negligence for walking at 8:30 in the evening over a sidewalk which she knew was defective, though she could have avoided it by going across lots by a path but did not consider it safe to do so at that time of the evening.—Oesterreich v. City of Detroit, 137 Mich. 415.

¶ 961. A person who in the dark walks along a strip of sidewalk, which he knows to be out of repair and dangerous, without taking the precaution of going around the dangerous place, is guilty of contributory negligence. (By divided court, per Grant; Ostrander, Hooker and McAlvay, JJ., concurring; Blair, C. J., Montgomery, Brooke and Moore, JJ., dissenting.)—Sargeant v. City of Detroit, 156 Mich. 291.

¶ 962. In an action for personal injuries sustained from falling upon a defective sidewalk where the plaintiff while "walking real fast" was injured through his companion stepping on a loose board which flew up and caught him between the legs, and the condition of the sidewalk had been known to him for two years as defective, and his attention had not been reasonably diverted from existing conditions except by the conversation with his companion, his own conduct created his danger, the circumstances negativing the exercise, and there was such negligence in not noticing and realizing the danger as precluded recovery.—Hodge v. City of St. Louis, 146 Mich. 173.

¶ 963. If a woman has attempted to pass over an unguarded and unlighted crosswalk, where there were no signals to warn her of danger, she is not chargeable with contributory negligence because of the fact that she knew that the walk was partly torn up eight days before.—Finn v. City of Adrian, 93 Mich. 504.

¶ 964. Running upon the lighted sidewalk, in order to avoid being struck by a snowball, is not per se such an act of negligence as will bar a recovery for injuries received from falling into an unguarded excavation which plaintiff saw but not in time to stop, though at walking speed he might have stopped.—Penrose v. Fehr, 113 Mich. 517.

§ 251. ——Avoidance of holes, excavations and depressions.

Avoidance of obvious danger, see also ante § 250.

Sufficiency of declaration to show due care on plaintiff's part, see post § 273.

¶ 965. Unless the place is so dangerous that a prudent man would not travel there one is not negligent because he walks upon a sidewalk knowing of a hole in it.—Germaine v. City of Muskegon, 105 Mich. 213.

¶ 966. In determining plaintiff's contributory negligence in a sidewalk accident case, her efforts to avoid the holes in the walk, the darkness of the night and the speed at which she was walking, together with the other circumstances of the case, should be considered with her knowledge of the defects of the walk, in determining whether she exercised the care which an ordinarily prudent person would under the circumstances.—Wolverton v. Village of Saranac, 171 Mich. 419.

¶ 967. A woman running for a doctor in the dark fell into a ditch where the bridging had been torn up earlier in the evening, and was injured. A judgment holding the municipality liable was left standing by an equally divided court.—Dotton v. Albion Common Council, 57 Mich. 575.

¶ 968. One who comes to a hole in a sidewalk is justified in stepping over it and upon a plank a foot beyond, unless he knows that the plank is weak or broken; the hole is not constructive notice to him that the surrounding planks are defective.—Fuller v. City of Jackson, 82 Mich. 480.

¶ 969. A township is not liable for injuries sustained by a schoolgirl 14 years of age by stepping in a hole in the road which she had known of and walked around for several months, she testifying that she did not think of it at the time.—King v. Township of Colon, 125 Mich. 511.

¶ 970. Under the rule that a party is not precluded from traveling over a highway or sidewalk simply because of knowledge that there is a defect in it, but is bound to exercise such care as a prudent man would exercise in view of the danger; a man 54 years old who on a dark night fell off the end of a sidewalk where it had been torn up and into the space left thereby, was not precluded from recovering where he knew of the condition but was on the lookout for it.—Belyea v. City of Port Huron, 136 Mich. 504.

§ 252. ——Walking on icy walks.

Liability to pedestrians for injuries from accumulations of snow and ice, see ante § 235.

Questions of law and fact as to safety of walks covered with snow and ice, see post § 314.

¶ 971. One who voluntarily attempts to pass over an icy sidewalk, knowing it to be dangerous, is guilty of contributory negligence, precluding a recovery for injuries received from falling thereon.—Black v. City of Manistee, 107 Mich. 60.

¶ 972. A pedestrian who was aware of the risk of passing over an icy sidewalk and took the risk of passing over it, although there was a way of avoiding the danger by stepping out into the street for a short distance, cannot recover against the abutting owner for injuries sustained by stepping on the walk.—Howey v. Fisher, 122 Mich. 43.

§ 253. Responsibility for acts of third persons.

See also ¶ 921.

General duties and liabilities in respect to highways, see ante XII, A.

Injuries caused by boys tipping over sheet steel left in street, see ante ¶ 897.

Liability of drivers for injuries to others from excessive speed or reckless driving, see post § 378.

General doctrine of respondeat superior, see Master and Servant, IV; Agency, II.

Tort liability of municipality, see Municipal Corporations, XII.

¶ 973. Municipal liability for injuries arising from defects in the public ways is the same, so far as concerns innocent persons, whether the condition of the way is due to wear and decay or to the misconduct of individuals in tearing it up; the obligation to repair speedily is the same.—Dotton v. Albion Common Council, 50 Mich. 129.

¶ 974. The duty to keep a crosswalk in repair is as imperative where the defects arise from individual misconduct in tearing it up as where they are due to wear and decay.—Dotton v. Common Council of Albion, 50 Mich. 129.

¶ 975. The statutory duty imposed upon a city to keep its streets in good repair is one which the city itself is required to perform, and continues although the city is obliged under its charter to enter into an engagement with an independent contractor for grading and paving such streets, through whose fault an injury occurs.—Southwell v. City of Detroit, 74 Mich. 438.

¶ 976. A city is liable for injury to a person traveling on its street caused by a timber projecting from a building which, under the license of the city council, was being moved in the street subject to the city marshal's supervision, and which was left unguarded at night.—Hayes v. City of West Bay City, 91 Mich. 418.

¶ 977. A city on one of whose streets a traveler by night has received personal injuries by reason of a plank projecting from a building in course of being moved under the city marshal's supervision, the same having been left unguarded, is not excused by the failure of electric-light contractors to light a lamp near the building, which, if lighted, would probably have been a sufficient warning of the position and condition of the building in the street.—Hayes v. City of West Bay City, 91 Mich. 418.

¶ 978. A township is liable for a defect in the highway though within the right of way of a railroad existing at the time the highway was laid out.—Gage v. Township of Pittsfield, 120 Mich. 436.

§ 254. ——Acts of public contractors.

General liability for act of independent contractor, see Independent Contractors.

¶ 979. It is the duty of a municipality to keep its streets reasonably safe and fit for travel, and it is not relieved of that duty because the street is made unsafe by the act of a third person, such as a contractor working on the street.—Davis v. City of Adrian, 147 Mich. 300.

¶ 980. A city cannot relieve itself by contract of its statutory liability to keep its streets reasonably safe for public travel by turning it over to a contractor.—Barker v. City of Kalamazoo, 146 Mich. 257.

¶ 981. A city cannot escape liability for personal injuries caused by a defective temporary sidewalk placed over a ditch on the ground that the work was in the hands of an independent contractor.—Beattie v. City of Detroit, 129 Mich. 20.

¶ 982. In an action against a city for personal injuries received by the plaintiff as the result of the overturning of a wagon driven by her in running over in the nighttime a pile of gravel left by a contractor unlighted and unguarded, it is immaterial that an ordinance requires proper warning and danger signals; it being the city's duty to see that they are furnished or that the street is closed.—Joslyn v. City of Detroit, 74 Mich. 458.

¶ 983. A city having the responsibility of constructing sewers and their connections under its charter, was liable for an injury sustained by a pedestrian in falling into an excavation, left unguarded in the night time by a plumber licensed to dig up the streets.—Monje v. City of Grand Rapids, 122 Mich. 645.

¶ 984. A city is liable in damages for injuries sustained through the construction and maintenance of a faulty and unsafe crossway constructed while street improvements were being made where the work though done by a contractor was under the supervision and control of city officials.—Barker v. City of Kalamazoo, 146 Mich. 257.

¶ 985. In an action for personal injuries resulting from falling through an opening in the sidewalk from which the grating had been removed where the evidence showed that the grating had been removed from two to five weeks, and that the city officials had knowledge of the situation, the city is liable for damages, even though the situation may have been caused by the acts of a city contractor working on the sidewalks.—Davis v. City of Adrian, 147 Mich. 300.

§ 255. Acts of abutting owners or their agents or contractors.

Sidewalk raised above crosswalk by abutting owner, see ante § 232.

Liability of abutting owners for defects in highway, see post § 256.

¶ 986. The city was not estopped from denying that the space between the street line and the front of a buildng on the lot abutting was a part of the sidewalk, to be kept in repair by such city; where, in an action against such city for personal injuries, it appears that the plaintiff was injured by being struck by a billboard fastened to the front of such building but wholly within such space, and outside of the highway, and where there was no evidence that the city exercised any control over such strip, or that it was covered by any walk built or ordered by such city.—Temby v. City of Ishpeming, 140 Mich. 146.

¶ 986a. A city is not liable under Comp. L. 1897, § 3441, providing for the abatement of a nuisance, for injuries received by a traveler from a billboard fastened to the front of a building facing a street, where such billboard was wholly outside the highway and upon the premises of the owner of such building; since the municipality has no authority to invade private premises and remove therefrom property belonging to the proprietor which may be thought dangerous.—Temby v. City of Ishpeming, 140 Mich. 146.

¶ 987. A city is not liable for injuries sustained by a billboard being thrown by the wind against one who was passing on the street where it appears that the billboard was wholly outside of the highway and upon private ground, and about three feet back of the street line, the sidewalk extending beyond the street line to the building against which the billboard was placed, and it did not appear that the city had ever exercised any control or care over the sidewalk in dispute.—Temby v. City of Ishpeming, 146 Mich. 20.

¶ 988. Under charter provisions of the city of Marquette, ch. 7, § 1, sub. 16 (Local Acts 1895, No. 409), the city is exempted from liability for damages resulting from obstructions made by an abutter on the sidewalk notwithstanding the liability imposed by the general statutes of the state.—Maclain v. City of Marquette, 148 Mich. 480.

¶ 989. A city may be held liable for an injury to the plaintiff caused by the upsetting of her wagon in running over, in the nighttime, an unlighted and unguarded pile of sand in the street in front of a house which a contractor was building for the owner of the adjoining lot.—Joslyn v. City of Detroit, 74 Mich. 458.

¶ 990. A charter provision requiring the city council to "see that all ordinances and resolutions relating to the building, rebuilding and repairing of sidewalks * * * and the keeping of the same free from ice and snow and from all obstructions * * * are strictly enforced," does not make the city liable for an injury caused by an improperly constructed barrier placed along a newly constructed walk by the contractor who built the walk under contract with the owner of the adjoining lot.—Thompson v. City of West Bay City, 137 Mich. 94.

¶ 991. Comp. L. 1897, §§ 3441, 3442, making a muncipality responsible for injury caused by negligence in keeping highways, streets and sidewalks in a reasonably safe condition for travel, and providing that the municipality must have had reasonable notice and time to repair, makes the municipality liable only for its own negligence or for that of one for whose conduct it is legally responsible, and hence it is not liable for the negligence of one who is constructing a sidewalk under contract with the owner of the adjacent property.—Thompson v. City of West Bay City, 137 Mich. 94.

¶ 992. A city is not liable for injury caused by an improperly constructed barrier to keep people off a newly constructed walk placed there by the contractor under contract with the adjoining owner for the construction of the walk, where the duty of building sidewalks was not imposed on the city by law.—Thompson v. City of West Bay City, 137 Mich. 94.

¶ 993. A city is not liable for personal injuries caused by the negligence of a contractor constructing a sidewalk under a contract with the owner of the abutting property, since the city exercised no supervision or control over such construction. (Thompson v. City of West Bay City, 137 Mich. 94, followed.)—Wright v. City of Muskegon, 140 Mich. 215.

¶ 994. Where an obstruction has been placed in a city street by a private contractor preparatory to building a sidewalk, which renders it unfit and dangerous for public travel, there is created, under 1 Comp. Laws 1897, § 3441, a liability against the city for personal injuries resulting therefrom after the city has actual or constructive notice thereof.—Walls v. City of Detroit, 171 Mich. 612.

G. LIABILITY OF ABUTTERS, PRIVATE PERSONS AND CORPORATIONS.

1. To persons injured on highway.

§ 256. In general; abutters' liability.

For defective sidewalks or absence of walks, see post § 257.
For defects in walls and fences, see post § 258.
For falling objects, see post § 259.
Liability of corporations using streets or conducting operations therein or adjacent thereto, see post § 260.
Liability to licensees and trespassers, see post § 261.
Corporations or persons under duty to keep in repair, see post § 262.
Liability over to public to indemnify it, see post §§ 263, 264.
Liability of city for acts of abutting owners, see ante § 255.
Liability of city for neglect of abutting owners' duty to build sidewalk, see ante ¶ 733.
Liabilities for injuries on private ways and drives, see post § 420.
Burden of proof and presumptions as to negligence of abutter or private person, see post § 282.
Admissibility of evidence in actions against abutters, see post § 295.
Sufficiency of evidence, see post § 304.
Issues and variance, see post § 279.
Questions of law and fact in actions against abutters and private parties, see post § 317.
Questions of law and fact as to notice of defective condition, see post § 326.
Questions of law and fact as to contributory negligence, see post § 337.
Instructions in actions against private persons and abutters, see post § 357.
Instructions as to contributory negligence, see post § 362.
Joint and several liability of joint tort feasors and participants, see Torts.
Liability as between landlord and tenant as to injuries from condition of building, see Landlord and Tenant, IV, D.
Coliability of abutter's agent with abutting owner, see Agency § 85.
Duty of carrier as to ways connecting stations and grounds with streets for passengers, see Carriers § 155.
Duty of railroad towards other than passengers, see Railroads, VIII; Master and Servant, III.

¶ 995. A provision in a city charter imposing a penalty upon the owners of buildings for obstructing the sidewalks is designed to create a duty to the public, and a violation of such provision resulting in personal injuries, does not render the owners liable to a private person.—Maclam v. Hallam, 165 Mich. 686.

¶ 996. Inasmuch as an alley is not a highway plaintiff cannot recover for injuries received by falling into an open area opening upon a platform in an alley adjoining defendant's premises, the platform being constructed for storing and handling bulky merchandise handled by defendant.—Krause v. Lewis, 144 Mich. 549.

¶ 997. The construction by an adjacent owner in an alley of a platform to store and handle merchandise was not such as to constitute an invitation to the general public to use the alley as a highway.—Krause v. Lewis, 144 Mich. 549.

¶ 998. The owner of land who has without need or cause left a heap of stones in the highway outside of the traveled road and near his own fence with ample space for travel is liable for an injury occurring therefrom to a horse turned loose in the road.—Bennett v. Hazen, 66 Mich. 657, affirming lower court by equal division.

Liability of abutting owner for personal injuries caused by ice which formed from water cast upon street by artificial means, see note, 3 N. C. C. A. 137-144.

§ 257. ——Absence of or defective sidewalks.

See also ante ¶ 759.
Liability of city for failure to construct sidewalks, see ante § 200.
Liability of city for injuries from defective walks, see ante § 232.

¶ 999. An abutting landowner, not subject to requirements valid under a municipal charter, is not obliged to build or keep up a sidewalk in the highway, and is not liable for injuries sustained by a pedestrian because such sidewalk is too narrow or otherwise defective.—Fletcher v. Scotten, 74 Mich. 212.

¶ 1000. Neither at common law nor by statute has one who has been injured because of a defective sidewalk a right of action against the owner of the adjoining lot.—Lynch v. Hubbard, 101 Mich. 43.

¶ 1001. A lot owner in Detroit is not liable to one who has been injured by his failure to construct or repair a sidewalk in front of his premises; his liability is to the city after the latter has been compelled to pay damages to the injured person, and he is not liable in any event except for his failure to construct or repair within ten days after notice served on him and after the common council has ordered such construction or repair.—Lynch v. Hubbard, 101 Mich. 43.

Liability of abutting owner for personal injury to sidewalk pedestrian from contact with stationary object not projecting into highway area, see note, 15 N. C. C. A. 481-484.

Liability of abutting owner for personal injuries resulting from maintenance of openings in sidewalks, see note, 6 N. C. C. A. 455-480.

§ 258. ——Defective walls and fences.

Liability of building proprietor for defects endangering other persons, see Buildings.

¶ 1002. The law imposes upon the owner of a building partially destroyed by fire the duty of making it reasonably safe for pedestrians in lawful use of the highway and to protect against walls falling in all ordinary weather and such extraordinary occurrences as are likely to happen.—Lauer v. Palms, 129 Mich. 671.

¶ 1003. The owner of a building partially destroyed by fire is liable for personal injuries to a pedestrian on the street caused by a falling wall notwithstanding he has employed competent architects and builders to make the walls safe.—Lauer v. Palms, 129 Mich. 671.

¶ 1004. The owner of a building partially destroyed by fire is liable for personal injuries to a pedestrian on the street caused by a falling wall notwithstanding the tenant of the building has objected to the repair and threatened an injunction; the owner has the power and the duty to enter upon the premises and make them safe.—Lauer v. Palms, 129 Mich. 671.

§ 259. ——Objects thrown or falling into streets and alleys.

Liability to by-passer for injuries from explosives and combustibles, see Explosives and Combustibles, ¶ 28.

¶ 1005. It is negligence to throw bales of hay from the loft of a barn, facing a public street, upon the sidewalk, without first looking into the street and upon the sidewalk, to see if any one is near by, and giving sufficient warning to prevent approach.—Dehring v. Comstock, 78 Mich. 153.

¶ 1006. The maintenance for private purposes of a sign suspended over a crowded city street, which, if permitted to fall, is liable to kill or injure persons lawfully using the sidewalk, imposes a very high degree of care on the one maintaining the sign to keep it in safe condition, and such duty is not lessened by the fact that the sign was erected with consent of the municipal authorities, or that the city might be liable for failing to require the removal of the sign as a nuisance.—Hass v. Booth, 182 Mich. 173.

¶ 1007. A certificate of a city building inspector that he had examined a sign suspended above a sidewalk and found it in safe condition, does not relieve the owner of the sign from liability for an injury to a pedestrian by its fall, since the certificate did not show whether the inspection was adequate, nor tend to prove that the fall of the sign was due to a latent instead of a patent defect.—Hass v. Booth, 182 Mich. 173.

¶ 1008. That a sign over a sidewalk was erected by an independent contractor two years before it fell and injured a pedestrian, does not relieve the owner of the sign from liability.—Hass v. Booth, 182 Mich. 173.

Injury to pedestrians by fall of workman from building, see note, 9 N. C. C. A. 208-222.

§ 260. Liability of corporations and persons constructing, repairing or using streets.

See also ante ¶ 787.

Liability of city for defects caused by public contractors, see ante § 254.

Necessity of notice or statement of claim, see post ¶ 1030.

Declaration in action for injuries, see post § 273.

Issues and variance, see post § 279.

Burden of proof and presumptions as to negligence, see post § 282.

Sufficiency of evidence to show contributory negligence, see post § 301.

Questions of law and fact as to damages caused by excavations and construction work, see post § 319.

Questions of law and fact as to notice of defective condition, see post § 326.

Liability of railroad for injuries to persons or property beside or near to tracks, including frightening horses near by, see Railroads, VIII, E.

Liability of railroad for excavating near roadway and causing injury to traveler, see also Railroads, VIII, E.

Liability of railroad for failure to place surface of road in proper condition at crossing, see Railroads, VIII, D.

Duty of carrier to warn passengers being set down near dangerous or unsafe place in roadway, see Carriers § 184.

Injuries by operation of street railways to persons in street, see Street Railways, IV.
Injuries by railroads operating in or across streets and roads, see Railroads, VIII.
Injuries by interurban railway to animals driven on road, see Street Railways, IV.
General law as to construction and safety of electrical appliances, see Electricity.
Liability of light company for dangerous condition of arc light over public street, see Electricity ¶ 9.

¶ 1009. A street railway company is bound to exercise such care and diligence in clearing its track of snow as not to interfere needlessly with the safety and convenience of persons lawfully using the street; and, if an extraordinary snowfall takes place, it must make extraordinary efforts to dispose of it.—Bowen v. Detroit City R. Co., 54 Mich. 496.

¶ 1010. Any disposition of the snow cleared from a street railway track must be made with due regard to the rights of travel on the highway; and it cannot be charged as a matter of law that the fact that the general level of the road was left above the level of the railway track would not make the disposition of the snow unlawful.—Wallace v. Detroit City Ry. Co., 58 Mich. 231.

¶ 1011. A street railway company which allows material taken from between its rails while repairing its track to remain in the street by its track for a few hours in the daytime is not therein guilty of negligence.—Zanger v. Detroit City R. Co., 87 Mich. 646.

¶ 1012. A street railway company is not guilty of negligence in merely excavating and throwing up earth in the street while engaged in repairing and laying its track; and a declaration in an action for damages for personal injuries stating only the above acts and omissions shows no cause of action.—Cowan v. Muskegon R. Co., 84 Mich. 583.

¶ 1013. It is the duty of a lighting company to restore a city street in which it has laid its cable to a condition of reasonable safety.—Sherman v. Consumers' Power Co., 199 Mich. 543.

¶ 1014. Notice to a lighting company of the dangerous condition of a city street as a result of its imperfect repair thereof after the laying of its cable therein is not necessary in order for it to be chargeable with negligence in the matter.—Sherman v. Consumers' Power Co., 199 Mich. 543.

¶ 1015. A telephone company, in introducing its wire into a store which it did not own or control, lifted up a loose plank in the sidewalk, and replaced it in the same condition. The company having nothing to do with maintaining the sidewalk, and not having created the danger, was not liable to one who thereafter stepped on the plank and was injured.—Davis v. Michigan Bell Tel. Co., 61 Mich. 307.

¶ 1016. One who, in contracting with the city to grade a street, agrees to maintain barriers around all excavations and to indemnify the city against damage occasioned by his negligence in doing the work, is not liable for injuries caused to a vehicle by the defective filling of an excavation where the barrier placed by him is removed and the excavation filled by his servants acting under the direction of the city's board of public works.—Kulwicki v. Munro, 95 Mich. 28.

¶ 1017. In an action for injury to a paving foreman caused by the fall of a telephone pole which was being removed from the street 35 feet from which he was working, the fact that he knew that the wires were being cut and removed, and that some of them had fallen in the street near where he was working, is not sufficient as notice to him that the pole would fall.—Kyes v. Valley Tel. Co., 132 Mich. 281.

¶ 1018. Where the warning lights about an excavation made by a street railway company in a public street were extinguished by an unusual and extraordinary storm, it is not answerable for injuries sustained by a pedestrian who fell into the excavation before a reasonable time had elapsed in which to restore such lights.—Norris v. Detroit United Ry., 185 Mich. 264.

Liability of gas company for injury from escape of gas due to breaking of pipes in use or repair of street or highway, see note, 11 N. C. C. A. 561-580.
Duty of persons conducting operations in streets to prevent frightening horses, see note, 12 N. C. C. A. 255-277.
Liability of electric companies to persons injured by electric wires in public highways (recent cases), see note, 5 N. C. C. A. 926-946.
Injuries to pedestrians caused by charged guy wires, see note, 12 N. C. C. A. 447-467.
Injury by contact with, or fall of, arc lamp, see note, 12 N. C. C. A. 84-98.

§ 261. Liability to licensees and trespassers.

Liability of city to children injured from defective streets, see ante § 240.
Liability of municipality for acts of trespassers, see ante § 253.

¶ 1019. A seven-year-old child, watching a gang of telephone employees stringing cable through a snatch block left unguarded in the street and operated by a team of horses a block away, who had put his hand on the block and it had been crushed by being drawn in, is not a trespasser in the sense that a recovery is barred for the injury sustained.—O'Leary v. Michigan State Tel. Co., 146 Mich. 243.

Liability for injury to or death of volunteer attempting to adjust lights used for street lighting, see note, 11 N. C. C. A. 1063-1071.

§ 262. Corporation or person under duty to keep in repair.

¶ 1020. For injury to a pedestrian by defective planking a railroad company which built a bridge over its tracks under contract with a city under which the company agreed to maintain the masonry and foundations at its own expense and to deliver the bridge to the city, was not liable after the bridge was turned over to the city, as the company was under no legal obligation to maintain the bridge, and the superstructure was to be under the control of the city to be maintained at its expense.—Wetherbee v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 122 Mich. 1.

¶ 1021. Since the public must use a bridge constructed over a mill race on a highway, negligence of the owner in failing to construct or repair the bridge may support an action by an individual lawfully using the highway and injured by defects in the bridge.—McRae v. Township of Hart, 179 Mich. 325.

2. To indemnify or exonerate the public.

§ 263. Liability over to public in general.

See also ante ¶ 1001.

Injuries on bridges, see post § 264.

Judgment against city in action for injuries from highway as res adjudicata in action by city against abutting owner, see Former Adjudication, ¶ 355.

General law of indemnity, see Indemnity.

Liability on express contracts of indemnity, see Indemnity, I.

Indemnification of public by primary wrongdoer to bridge, see Bridges § 24.

¶ 1022. The charter of Detroit of 1883, § 57, authorizes the common council to provide by ordinance that whenever any sidewalk requires to be built or repaired the owner, etc., of the adjacent lot shall be notified to build or repair the same, and declares that if he neglect to do so for a time to be specified in the ordinance, it shall be the duty of the board of public works to build or repair the same, the expense thereof to be assessed upon such lot. Held, that the imposition of the duty upon the board does not relieve the lot-owner of his neglect to repair, and if the city is compelled to pay damages for injuries caused by nonrepair after the time specified has expired, the lot-owner is liable over to the city.—City of Detroit v. Chaffee, 70 Mich. 80.

¶ 1023. A paving contractor who agreed to keep the city harmless from loss by reason of his negligence, and who upon being made defendant with the city in an action for negligence, by arrangement with plaintiff caused the suit to be dismissed apparently without notice to or consent of the city, was not entitled to any notice from the city to defend, as a prerequisite to his liability over to the city for the amount of the judgment against it.—City of Detroit v. Grant, 135 Mich. 626.

§ 264. Injuries from bridges and culverts.

¶ 1024. Where a person, without authority from a township or from the owner of a mill-race, who built and maintained a bridge, took down a good railing thereon and later put up a temporary and inadequate one, and a person using the bridge was injured as a result of leaning on such defective railing and falling into the stream, the township, upon payment of a judgment recovered against it and the owners of the mill-race, may recover indemnity from the person who erected the inadequate railing, although it had notice of its defective condition, as the doctrine of no contribution between joint tort feasors is inapplicable.—Township of Hart v. Noret, 191 Mich. 427.

¶ 1025. In an action by a township to recover indemnity against a person who wrongfully took down a good railing on a bridge over a mill-race, which was built and maintained by the owners of the mill-race, and substituted a temporary and inadequate one without authority from either the township or the owners of the mill-race, the township having paid a judgment in favor of a person injured as a result of falling into the stream while attempting to lean on the railing, a declaration that defendant wrongfully and without authority removed and took away substantial railings from the bridge and later substituted defective railings; that the plaintiff in the former action against the township, while lawfully passing over the bridge, and without any fault on his part, came into contact with such railing, and, as a result of its defective condition, was precipitated into the stream and injured, and that such person recovered a judgment, of a certain amount, which was paid by the city, held sufficient.—Township of Hart v. Noret, 191 Mich. 427.

H. ACTIONS FOR INJURIES.

1. Actionable rights and form of action.

[Note. It is not intended to encroach on the general law of practice and procedure in this division. It is restricted to matters distinctively applicable to actions for damages for injuries to person or property by reason of defective or dangerous highways, streets, walks, and bridges. Actions for injuries occurring on highways but not by reason of any defect or condition of the way are treated post XIII, B, 2 (actions for injuries by negligence in use of way by other drivers), and in Railroads, VIII, D (crossing cases), and in Street Railways, IV (injuries from or incident to operation). Actions for injuries to the highway are treated, ante § 192, and actions for injuries from change of grade or disturbance of ingress or egress or withdrawal of lateral support or diversion of surface waters are treated, ante §§ 111, 114, 119, 124, 195, 196.

Topics treating of general law of practice, such as Parties; Pleading; Process; Evidence; Trial; and the like, should be consulted.]

Matters of practice peculiar to actions against municipalities, townships, counties, and public officers, but not peculiar to highway injury cases, see Counties, VIII; Municipal Corporations, XVI, A; Townships, VIII; Process; Pleading; Trial; etc.

§ 265. Right of action in general.

General duties and liabilities, see ante XII, A.

Nature and statutory source of liability for injury from defective highways, see ante, § 197.

Effect upon pending action of repeal of statute defining municipality's liability, see ante § 197.

Persons to whom municipality owes duty of keeping highways safe, see ante § 217.

Proper and necessary parties, see post § 272.

Time to sue and limitations of the actions, see Limitations.

¶ 1026. The right to recover for injuries arising from want of repair of sidewalks, etc., is a purely statutory one in this state; and, it being optional with the legislature whether it would confer upon persons injured a right of action therefor or leave them without remedy, it could attach to the right conferred any limitations it chose, and it alone, and not the court, can decide whether or not such limitations are reasonable.—Moulter v. City of Grand Rapids, 155 Mich. 165.

¶ 1027. The duty imposed upon townships by How. St. § 1446d, to keep their highways in reasonable repair, etc., may be enforced by information or indictment where the highway has not been used as a public highway for ten years, but a personal action for damages will not lie in such cases.—McKeller v. Township of Monitor, 78 Mich. 485.

¶ 1028. Loss to a husband of the services of his wife, and money expended for surgical attendance and nursing, while she is suffering from injuries received by falling upon a defective sidewalk, do not constitute an injury to "other property," within the meaning of How. St. § 1446d, and the husband has no right of action under said statute for the same.—Roberts v. City of Detroit, 102 Mich. 64.

¶ 1029. The words "other property," as used in How. St. § 1446d, which provides that if any horse or other animal, or any cart, carriage, or vehicle or other property, shall receive injury or damage from defective highways, etc., the municipal corporation in fault shall pay the owner just damages, etc., being preceded by several words descriptive of particular kinds of property, are limited to things of a like kind.—Roberts v. City of Detroit, 102 Mich. 64.

§ 266. Notice and statement of claim.

Description of injury, damages and place of occurrence, see post § 267.

Waiver of notice, see post § 268.

Notice as limitation on amount recoverable or as estoppel, see post § 269.

Appearance or examination on hearing of claim, see post § 270.

Allegations as to notice of claim, see post § 276.

Evidence as to making claim and notice thereof, see post §§ 297, 302.

Action of council upon claim as accrual of action setting limitations in motion, see Limitations, IV.

Statutory notices to municipalities of claims not special to cases of injuries on highways but required in damage claims generally, see Municipal Corporations, XIV, XVI, A.

Uniform provisions for notice of injury and claim for damages, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4591.

Mode and sufficiency of service of notice and officers competent to be served, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4591.

¶ 1030. Where a city charter requires notice to the city of a personal injury suffered on its streets, such fact does not require plaintiff to give like notice in a suit against a paving contractor for leaving a street unguarded at night.—Williams v. Sager, 165 Mich. 635.

¶ 1031. Section 485, Act No. 593, Local Acts 1905, requires that in all cases of injuries resulting from defects in sidewalks, streets, highways, etc., in the City of Grand Rapids, two notices of the claim must be given to the common council before suit can be maintained, one being a "preliminary notice," to state briefly the location of the defect and its general character, and the other a "specific notice," to specify in detail plaintiff's claim.—Moulter v. City of Grand Rapids, 155 Mich. 165.

¶ 1032. Taking chap. 16, § 2, of the charter of the City of Kalamazoo, relating to claims for personal injuries because of defective sidewalks, as an entirety and giving the words their ordinary meaning, it is clear that claims for personal injuries must be presented within four months after such claims shall have arisen.—Woodworth v. City of Kalamazoo, 135 Mich. 233.

¶ 1033. Under Local Acts 1901, No. 468, chap. 6, § 18, requiring a person injured on a public street to present his verified claim to the comptroller within 60 days next after the injury, such person has 60 days excluding the day of the injury for the presentation of his claim.—McEvoy v. City of Sault Ste. Marie, 136 Mich. 172.

¶ 1034. The provisions of a city charter requiring persons claiming damages for injuries sustained on streets and sidewalks to give notice within a fixed period, and providing that no action shall be brought until the common council shall have had a reasonable opportunity to investigate and pass upon the claim, was complied with, where a plaintiff filed her verified claim on September 7th and thereafter met a committee, who laid over the matter for a week, when further witnesses were to be produced, and where suit was commenced late in October without plaintiff having produced such witnesses.—Monje v. City of Grand Rapids, 122 Mich. 645.

¶ 1035. The 1901 amendment of the city of Saginaw charter, by adding a new section, viz., No. 46, to title 17, covered the entire ground relating to notices of injuries sustained upon defective sidewalks, and such act was in direct conflict with the notice provided for under section 17, of tit. 6, of the charter as amended in 1899, and consequently a notice given under the old act was void.—Chamberlain v. City of Saginaw, 135 Mich. 61.

§ 267. ——Description of injury and specification of claim.

Contents and particularity required in notice, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4591.

¶ 1036. Notice to corporation counsel of a claim against the city for personal injuries due to a defective sidewalk is sufficient if it specifies the time, place, cause and nature of the injury in general terms.—Oesterreich v. City of Detroit, 137 Mich. 415.

¶ 1037. A notice of claim for injury from a defective sidewalk is sufficient under the charter of the city of Adrian where the facts as to the time, place, and manner of injury and the amount and nature of damages are set forth without the details as to the way in which the city was in default, and especially so where the city made no suggestion for a more detailed statement of the claim, which had been referred to a committee of the council and rejected.—Davis v. City of Adrian, 147 Mich. 300.

¶ 1038. Notice of a claim for personal injuries against the city under Act No. 344, Local Acts 1901, tit. 7, § 20, is not a pleading, and if sufficiently specific otherwise need not allege the negligence of the defendant.—Knudsen v. City of Muskegon, 158 Mich. 185.

¶ 1039. A notice of a sidewalk injury under the Detroit Charter, § 86, is sufficient which describes the situs as on the "east side of" a given street "between" two other named streets where the council did not ask for more specific information, but by its consideration of the claim implied that the notice was satisfactory.—Wheeler v. City of Detroit, 127 Mich. 329.

¶ 1040. A notice to a city council of a sidewalk injury is sufficiently specific as to the place of the injury where it describes the locus as the north side of a given street in front of a given residence setting out the name of the owner, the house number, the name of the street, the ward and the city.—Wilton v. City of Flint, 128 Mich. 156.

¶ 1041. A notice claiming damages "by reason of personal injuries sustained by falling on a sidewalk" is not sufficiently descriptive of the nature of the injuries to satisfy Detroit Charter, chapter 11, § 46, requiring notice to the legal department of the nature of the injury, notwithstanding reasonably strict construction in favor of the injured party.—Tattan v. City of Detroit, 128 Mich. 650.

¶ 1042. A notice of injury is sufficiently specific, which states that it was caused by a defective sidewalk on the south side of 5th avenue just east and off from S. street, said accident happening on west line of lot occupied by G., the street number of such house being 508, and on or near the east line of the residence occupied by R. (giving his number), specifying that plaintiff's right foot was caught by a board tipped up in said walk, and that the walk was out of repair and had been unsafe for travel and notoriously bad for a long time.—Nestle v. City of Flint, 141 Mich. 153.

¶ 1043. Plaintiff's notice of injury served upon the defendant village, which states that by reason of being tripped on a defective sidewalk, she "sustained personal injuries," is not sufficiently specific to comply with Comp. L. 1897, § 2775, which requires the notice to set forth substantially the extent of such injury; nor is the defect remedied by plaintiff's affidavit, accompanying such notice, in which she avers that she has suffered since such injury and believes she will continue to suffer "great pain and inconvenience" therefrom.—Miller v. Village of Birmingham, 145 Mich. 470.

¶ 1044. A notice of claim for personal injury sustained because of a defective sidewalk which merely gives the location of the action as "sidewalk at the corner of Howard and Twenty-First streets" is insufficient under Local Acts 1895, No. 463, § 46 (the charter of the city of Detroit), requiring that a notice of claim of "the time, place, and cause," as the place is not located with sufficient certainty, there being four corners at the place designated in the notice.—Barribeau v. City of Detroit, 147 Mich. 119.

¶ 1045. A notice of a sidewalk injury to a city council in itemizing the injury need not attach to each item an aliquot part of the damages claimed.—Wilkins v. City of Flint, 128 Mich. 262.

¶ 1046. A notice of the sustaining of injuries upon a sidewalk resulting in the death of the person injured, served upon a village, was not rendered invalid because the administratrix therein demanded one gross amount for various claims for damages, viz.: for the estate under the survival act, for the next of kin under the death act, and for plaintiff and the next of kin individually. —Hunter v. Village of Ithaca, 135 Mich. 281.

¶ 1047. Section 2775, 1 Comp. Laws 1897, as amended by Act No. 223, Pub. Acts 1899, providing that no village shall be liable for damages sustained by any person by reason of a defective sidewalk unless such person shall serve a notice of his claim in writing upon the clerk of the village, and that the notice shall contain certain information as to the accident and damages received, clearly recognizes that as to some injuries the damage cannot be stated exactly, but that the notice should state "the extent of the injury so far as the same has become known." Therefore a claim for permanent damages is not defeated by failure to state in the itemized claim for damages the amount of damages claimed under the head of permanent injuries.—Haney v. Village of Pinckney, 155 Mich. 656.

¶ 1048. Under 1 Comp. Laws 1897, §§ 2754, 2775, as amended by Pub. Acts 1899, No. 223, relating to auditing of accounts against villages and notice of claims for injuries, a notice of claim specifying damages claimed for loss of time, medical attendance, bodily and mental pain, etc., separately, is not rendered insufficient because it includes an item for "permanent injury," but leaves the amount thereof unspecified.—Haney v. Village of Pinckney, 155 Mich. 656.

Sufficiency of statutory notice to municipal corporation of time, place, cause and extent of injury on sidewalk or highway, see note, 2 N. C. C. A. 137.

§ 268. ——Waiver of notice or defects therein.

Necessity of notice and statement of claim, see ante § 266.

Evidence of waiver verified notice as constituting variance, see post ¶ 1082.

¶ 1049. Comp. L. 1897, §§ 2754 and 2755, requiring that a verified claim and a written notice within 60 days be filed before any recovery can be had for personal injuries resulting from defective streets or sidewalks, is not waived where plaintiff's son without any showing of authority appeared before the council just before adjournment and stated that his mother had been injured and had a claim for damages and wanted to know what the village was going to do about it, and the matter was referred to a committee but this did not meet and made no report but a member of the committee at some time told the son that he ought to file a written statement with the clerk.—Blumrich v. Village of Highland Park, 131 Mich. 209.

¶ 1050. Failure to verify the notice of a claim against a village for personal injuries due to a defective sidewalk, as required under Comp. L. 1897, §§ 2754, 2775, is waived where the notice was received without objection to the lack of verification, and the village council appointed an investigating committee which employed physicians who subjected plaintiff to a painful physical examination.—Hunter v. Village of Durand, 137 Mich. 53.

¶ 1051. Any action taken by the village council relative to a claim for personal injuries after the expiration of the statutory period for the filing of notice of such claim, is not a waiver of defects in such notice and does not revive the claimant's right of action, such claim being in tort; where claimant filed a defective notice of injury with the proper village officer within the statutory period.—Miller v. Village of Birmingham, 145 Mich. 470.

§ 269. ——Estoppel or limitation on recovery by claim.

General law of estoppel, see Estoppel.

¶ 1052. Defendant city's charter required that claims for personal injuries against it must be presented to it for allowance before bringing suit. Plaintiff filed a claim for $5,000 damages. Held, she was not prevented from later suing for a sum in excess of this amount, since the said charter provision required only that the facts relating to the claim be filed, and the statement by her of the amount of damages was immaterial.—Johnson v. City of Bay City, 164 Mich. 251.

§ 270. Appearance or examination on hearing of claim.

Presentation and audit of claims in general, see Municipal Corporations, XIV; Townships, VI; Counties, VI.

Provisions for calling and examination of claimant and witnesses before municipal authorities, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4591.

¶ 1053. Under Marquette City Charter (Loc. Acts 1893, No. 323, chap. 11, §§ 19-22) providing that a city shall not be liable in damages for injuries sustained on a defective sidewalk unless the person claiming damages shall within 30 days after the injury give written notice thereof to the mayor, recorder or city attorney, and within 90 days present a sworn statement to the comptroller under oath, stating the time, place, cause and manner of the injury and the witnesses present, if any; the council has no right as a condition precedent to its acting, to demand that the injured person appear personally and with his witnesses before either the council or a committee appointed by it.—Dollar v. City of Marquette, 123 Mich. 184.

¶ 1054. Under Marquette City Charter (Loc. Acts 1893, No. 323, chap. 11, §§ 19-22) providing that a city shall not be liable in damages for injuries sustained on a defective sidewalk, unless the person claiming damages shall within 30 days after the injury give written notice thereof to the mayor, recorder or city attorney, and within 90 days present a sworn statement to the comptroller under oath, stating the time, place, cause and manner of the injury and the witnesses present, if any, and providing for appeal to the circuit court if the claim be disallowed or the party be dissatisfied with the amount awarded; a person so injured who has literally complied with the provisions of the act cannot be required to appear personally and with his witnesses before either the council or a committee appointed by it, and where upon his failure to do so, the claim is laid on the table, there is nothing to appeal from and such person has the right to bring his original action for damages against the city.—Dollar v. City of Marquette, 123 Mich. 184.

§ 271. Nature and form of remedy.

Form of action for injuries to other users of highway, see post § 384.

¶ 1055. Case is the proper action for damages to one's wagon and sleigh from loads of stone deposited by defendant in a public highway through which plaintiff had to drive to reach his own premises.—Green v. Belitz, 34 Mich. 512.

2. Parties and pleading.

§ 272. Parties.

Right of action, see ante § 265.
Persons to whom duty to keep highways and bridges in repair, owing, see ante § 217.
Person entitled to sue for damage by diverted waters, see ante ¶ 388.
General law as to parties, see Parties.
Discontinuance as to defendants joined with municipality, see Discontinuance § 2.

¶ 1056. The owner of the mill race and the township in which the bridge was situated may properly be joined as parties defendant, where a railing gave way on a bridge over a race, since though legal defense is open to one defendant it may not have been open to the other, as both defendants owed ultimately the same duty.—McRae v. Township of Hart, 179 Mich. 325.

§ 273. Pleading.

Allegations as to place and nature of highway, see post § 274.
Allegations as to notice and knowledge of conditions, see post § 275.
Allegations as to giving notice of claim, see post § 276.
Issues under the pleadings and variances in proof, see post §§ 277-279.
Description of injury and specifications of claim in notice of claim, see ante § 267.
General law of pleading, see Pleading; Trespass.
Amendments of declaration, see Pleading, VI.
General rules as to pleading negligence, see Negligence, V.
Pleading damages, see Damages, X.
Amendment of pleadings as ground for continuance, see Continuances § 4.

¶ 1057. A declaration against a village for personal injury from a defective street need not refer expressly to the statute.—Clark v. Village of North Muskegon, 88 Mich. 308.

¶ 1058. A declaration which, in an action against a city, avers that defendant negligently permitted a building, in course of being moved by third parties by permission of the council, to remain in a public street on a certain night, with a timber projecting from under it, and without any lights, danger signals or other suitable warning to persons passing along the street, and that plaintiff, without negligence on her part, while riding along the street, ran against the building and timber, and was then and there thrown out of the buggy in which she was riding, and sustained certain specified injuries, is sufficient to charge defendant with its statutory liability in regard to streets.—Hayes v. City of West Bay City, 91 Mich. 418.

¶ 1059. In an action for an injury caused by obstructions which in the first instance are lawfully in the street, but which defendant is bound to remove as speedily as possible, it is not necessary to allege that they were left there for an unreasonable time; the offense of leaving them there relates back so that it becomes unlawful from the beginning, and the time necessary for their removal is matter of justification and defense.—Bowen v. Detroit City R. Co., 54 Mich. 496.

¶ 1060. In an action for damages to a buggy which was upset by being driven at night against earth thrown up by defendant, a street railway company, in repairing its track, the declaration failed to aver that the earth was allowed to remain for an unreasonable time, or without lights and barriers in the nighttime. Held, that no cause of action was stated; merely excavating and piling up earth not being negligence on defendant's part.—Cowan v. Muskegon R. Co., 84 Mich. 583.

¶ 1061. If the negligence relied upon for recovery in an action against a township for an injury from a defective highway is that the overseer of highways should have given notice that the way was dangerous, the declaration should count upon such negligence.—Smith v. Township of Walker, 117 Mich. 14.

¶ 1062. An allegation that the city negligently allowed a crosswalk to be and continue in a dangerous condition and unguarded, and by reason thereof and "for want of proper and sufficient care in keeping said crosswalk in safe condition, and in allowing said excavation to remain open and unguarded," plaintiff while walking on the crosswalk fell into the excavation and was hurt, is sufficient to plead that plaintiff's injury was the joint product of tearing up a crosswalk and excavating in the street under it.—Alexander v. City of Big Rapids, 76 Mich. 282.

¶ 1063. On the authority of McKellar v. City of Detroit, 57 Mich. 158, a complaint is demurrable which alleges that a previous snowfall had been tramped and beaten down by walking thereon while the snow was soft, after which it had melted on the sides of the walk leaving the center uneven and irregular and higher than the sides of the walk.—Rolf v. City of Greenville, 102 Mich. 544.

¶ 1064. A declaration relating to a single transaction,—the falling of plaintiff into a hole in a sidewalk, and her attempt to extricate herself,—alleging that this occurred notwithstanding she then and there exercised all due care and caution, and was not guilty of negligence, sufficiently shows, in the absence of a demurrer, that she used such care and caution in the attempt to extricate herself.—McKormick v. City of West Bay City, 110 Mich. 265.

¶ 1065. In a declaration against a city for negligent injuries, a count that defendant failed to light its streets, and that it left a dangerous hole in a sidewalk, into which, the walk being unlighted, plaintiff fell and was injured, is good, as predicating negligence in maintaining a bad walk at a dark place.—Griswold v. City of Ludington, 116 Mich. 401.

¶ 1066. A declaration in an action for a sidewalk injury sufficiently apprises the defendant of the plaintiff's claim where it states that the walk had been taken up leaving a depression covered with planks which had become warped and arose above the level of the walk and were unsafe and describes the manner of the injury in detail.—Wilton v. City of Flint, 128 Mich. 156.

¶ 1067. One count alleging negligence on the part of the city in leaving a meter box uncovered is not inconsistent with another count alleging that it was improperly covered by placing loose boards over it.—Knudsen v. City of Muskegon, 158 Mich. 185.

§ 274. ——Allegations as to place of injury and public nature of way.

Variance as to place of accident, see post § 277.

Burden of showing place of accident a public highway, see post § 280.

Rules for pleading place or locality in general, see Pleading.

¶ 1068. A declaration against a city or village for injury from a defective sidewalk, brought under How. St. § 1446f, need not allege that the street has been in use as a public highway for ten years and is open to public travel.—Fuller v. City of Jackson, 92 Mich. 197, overruling Clark v. Village of North Muskegon, 88 Mich. 308.

¶ 1069. In an action declaring on Comp. L. 1897, § 3444, for injuries because of the dangerous conditions of a highway, an exception providing that the highway must have been in use ten years prior to the injury need not be negatived, this being a matter of defense.—Schelske v. Township of Orange, 147 Mich. 135.

¶ 1070. A declaration against a village for a negligent injury sufficiently describes the place where the accident happened if it describes such place as being on the south side of a specified street in front of the premises of the person named.—Clark v. Village of North Muskegon, 88 Mich. 308.

¶ 1071. A declaration in an action for injuries sustained by reason of a defective highway, which alleges that the defendant township had control of that part of the highway which was situated between G. township and defendant township, "being the highway between" certain sections and being "what is known as a town line road" and that the defect in question consisted of a hole of stated dimensions on the north side of and in the traveled portion of said highway, between the sections indicated, is not open to the objection, after a plea of the general issue, that it does not sufficiently describe the place of the injury.—Whoram v. Township of Argentine, 112 Mich. 20.

¶ 1072. An allegation that plaintiff was injured on a defective sidewalk, at a point 125 feet west of a certain street, is to be interpreted as indicating the estimated and not the exact distance.—Williams v. City of Lansing, 152 Mich. 169.

¶ 1073. An allegation in a declaration that Warren Avenue was on the day of the accident, and for a long time previous thereto had been, used and occupied as a public highway, etc., and that Remington Avenue was also a public highway, is a sufficient allegation that the place of an accident occurring at the intersection of said streets was at the time a public highway.—Williams v. Sager, 165 Mich. 635.

§ 275. ——Allegations as to notice or knowledge of defect.

Questions of law and fact as to notice, see post § 323.
Necessity and sufficiency of notice, see ante XII, B.
Evidence as to notice or knowledge, see post §§ 291, 300.
Instructions as to notice, see post §§ 350, 356.
Burden of proof as to notice or knowledge, see post § 280.
Necessity of notice of defect, see ante XII, B.
Pleading in actions for injuries to other users of highways, see post § 385.

¶ 1074. A declaration, in a personal injury case, averring that the accident occurred upon one of the principal streets of a city, by reason of a defective sidewalk, which defect was a dangerous one, and had existed for three months, and that defendant then and there knew that the sidewalk was unsafe and not fit for travel, sufficiently states knowledge or notice of the defect by defendant.—Tice v. Bay City, 78 Mich. 209.

¶ 1075. A declaration for a negligent personal injury which avers that the defendant city well knew, or by the exercise of reasonable care ought to have known, of the dangerous and unsafe condition of the sidewalk upon which plaintiff was injured, avers sufficiently, in the absence of a demurrer, that the defect had existed for such a length of time before the accident as to justify a presumption of notice, which takes the place of actual notice.—Germaine v. City of Muskegon, 105 Mich. 213.

§ 276. ——Allegations as to notice of claim.

¶ 1076. Under Act No. 566, Local Acts 1905, tit. 24, § 24, in a suit for personal injuries due to a defective sidewalk, a declaration which fails to allege that the board of public works had written notice of the defect prior to the accident, is subject to demurrer.—Forsyth v. City of Saginaw, 158 Mich. 201.

§ 277. Issues and variance.

In actions for injuries on bridges and approaches, see post § 278.
In actions against abutters and corporations, see post § 279.
In actions for injuries to other users of highway, see post § 386.
In actions for injuries on private ways, see post § 421.
General law as to issues and variance, see Pleading, IX, X.

¶ 1077. There is no material variance between an allegation of the obstruction of a highway in a specified township and proof that a street in a certain village was obstructed, if it appears that the village was in the township.—Patterson v. Detroit, L. & N. R. Co., 56 Mich. 172.

¶ 1078. Where the declaration in an action for injury from a defective sidewalk alleged that defendant was negligent in permitting the whole sidewalk in front of the premises where the accident occurred to be out of repair, and was not demurred to as too general, the evidence need not be confined to the condition of the walk at a particular place where the accident occurred, but defendant's negligence might be proved as stated in the declaration.—Campbell v. City of Kalamazoo, 80 Mich. 655.

¶ 1079. Under a declaration charging defendant with permitting a sidewalk to become and remain rotten and out of repair, plaintiff may show that the walk had not been rebuilt or repaired for upwards of twenty years.—Haynes v. City of Hillsdale, 113 Mich. 44.

¶ 1080. Plaintiff in an action for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by falling at night into a hole in a sidewalk in front of a particular lot, will not be required, because of evidence of more than one hole in such walk into which she might have fallen, to elect to rely on a particular hole in a particular place; it being sufficient that she show to the satisfaction of the jury that the accident occurred as alleged in the declaration.—Hall v. City of Cadillac, 114 Mich. 99.

¶ 1081. Proof that plaintiff in an action against a city was injured upon the street curb near a chain suspended above and parallel to the curbing and attached to a bridge brace and an upright, was not a variance from an allegation in the declaration that the plaintiff was injured by tripping upon such chain; it appearing that it would have been next to a physical impossibility for plaintiff to have fallen over the curb without getting his other foot under the chain.—Milliken v. City of St. Clair, 136 Mich. 250.

¶ 1082. Evidence of waiver of a requirement of verification is admissible under a declaration alleging performance of a requirement of verified notice to a village of a claim for personal injuries.—Hunter v. Village of Durand, 137 Mich. 53.

¶ 1083. In an action against a city for personal injuries sustained by reason of a defective sidewalk where the declaration averred in substance that the sidewalk was constructed of a plank running lengthwise of the walk resting upon stringers laid crosswise of the walk, that the end of one of the planks had become rotten or broken off which allowed the plank to drop down and rest upon the ground ten inches below the level of the sidewalk, and that plaintiff stepped into the hole, and her foot being caught she fell and received the injuries, but the proof showed that the board looked to be in place but when stepped on went down with plaintiff's weight, and the board was rotten there was no misleading variance.—Epelett v. City of Sault Ste. Marie, 144 Mich. 392.

¶ 1084. Where plaintiff alleged that she was injured on a defective sidewalk, at a point 125 feet west of a certain street, and her proof showed the point to be 93 feet, the allegation of 125 feet is to be interpreted as an estimate, and there is no case of a variance.—Williams v. City of Lansing, 152 Mich. 169.

¶ 1085. In an action against a county to recover damages for injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's maintenance of a temporary way on an incline sloping down from its roadway to a side ditch, where the proof showed that the accident was due to a hole at the bottom of the incline into which one runner of plaintiff's sleigh went, turning it over, held that plaintiff had no legal right to go to the jury upon a claim of negligence not alleged in his declaration.—Johnson v. Muskegon County, 195 Mich. 722. (Moore, J., dissenting.)

§ 278. ——In actions for injuries from bridges and approaches.

¶ 1086. A declaration for injuries on "a bridge" on Lake street in defendant village "constructed across Bear river and flume, as aforesaid," further alleging that for want of a railing plaintiff fell from the bridge over the raceway (flume), is sufficient to allow recovery respecting negligence in keeping up the bridge over the flume, which was a duty of the village; though there were in fact two adjacent bridges, one over the flume and one over the river, and it was the duty of the township at large to keep up the bridge over the river.—Williams v. Village of Petoskey, 108 Mich. 260.

¶ 1087. There is no variance between allegations that the planks in the bridge where the accident occurred were loose, and the stringers uneven, so that the planks were liable to slip off and turn over, and thereby to trip horses, and that decedent's horses became entangled in the loose planks and thereby tripped, and evidence that there was a broken plank and a hole in consequence thereof, and that one of the horses driven by decedent had stepped into the hole, whereby the team became frightened, resulting in the injury complained of.—Merkle v. Township of Bennington, 68 Mich. 133.

¶ 1088. Under a declaration that plaintiff's horse, while alarmed at a hole in the bridge, backed against the railing, which giving way the vehicle and its contents were precipitated below, it is immaterial whether the proof shows that plaintiff was precipitated from the bridge itself or from the abutment of the bridge.—Smith v. Township of Sherwood, 62 Mich. 159.

¶ 1089. In an action for injury from a defective highway, which injury was caused by a horse's backing off from an unguarded approach to a bridge, a variance of four feet between the evidence and the averment in the declaration as to the distance from the end of the bridge to the point at which the horse backed off is not fatal.—Ross v. Township of Ionia, 104 Mich. 320.

¶ 1090. Plaintiff's intention to rely upon structural as well as surface defects in a bridge, by the collapse of which she claims to have been injured, is sufficiently indicated by the averment in her declaration that defendant allowed its sidewalk and bridge "to become and remain broken, torn up, and out of repair, and not reasonably safe and convenient for public travel," and that, "while the plaintiff was walking over said walk and bridge, said sidewalk and bridge, by reason of its being in an unsafe, broken, torn up, and out of repair condition, broke and fell into the river." So held, at least, where, though no demurrer had been interposed, want of notice of the exact nature of the claim was urged to defeat the verdict.—Snyder v. City of Albion, 113 Mich. 275.

¶ 1091. An allegation in a declaration in an action for personal injuries against a township caused by the falling of a bridge, that the original construction of the bridge was defective in that the bridge which crossed a drain, rested on mudsills which were not sunk below the bottom of such drain, and that the bridge was not properly braced and strengthened and no piling or posts were driven to prevent the mudsills from dropping into the drain, does not warrant recovery on the ground of negligent construction, where each count showed that no such claim was relied on but that the accident was ascribed to a subsequent deepening of the ditch whereby the undermining by the action of the water occurred.—Pearl v. Township of Benton, 123 Mich. 411.

¶ 1092. In an action against a township for failing to maintain a bridge in proper condition the declaration alleged fully the defective condition of the bridge, and that because of such condition plaintiff's horse became frightened and sprang suddenly forward with great violence, whereby his wagon came against loose planks, and was suddenly checked, causing plaintiff to be jerked and thrown forward. Held, that proof of the dangerous condition of the bridge and that the horse stepped into holes caused by the loose planks, whereby the progress of the wagon was suddenly checked and plaintiff was thrown forward, sufficiently supports the declaration.—Hunter v. Township of Dwight, 157 Mich. 634.

§ 279. ——In actions against abutters and other private persons or corporations.

¶ 1093. A declaration in an action against a street railway company for an injury resulting from its negelect to properly clean the snow from its tracks, in consequence of which a horse harnessed to a double bobsled was thrown down, described the ridges of snow as "along and very near to said street railway track, and between the double tracks thereof," and stated that as the sleigh struck the ridge between the tracks the horse stepped on the steep and slippery bank piled "along and near said" track. Held, that this distinguished between the two places; and as a like distinction was kept up in further recitals, there was no variance arising out of the question whether it was one ridge or the other that caused the injury.—Wallace v. Detroit City Ry. Co., 58 Mich. 231.

¶ 1094. The variance is fatal, where the declaration in an action for frightening a horse alleges that defendant forced great quantities of steam from his engine near the highway at the time plaintiff was driving by, but the proof shows that the engine of defendant was a gasoline engine, and the horse was frightened by the noise of the exhaust pipe.—Hoyt v. Garlock, 145 Mich. 632.

¶ 1095. In a suit for personal injuries due to the falling of materials from a building in the course of construction, negligence of the defendant must be proved, and the negligence proved must be the negligence charged in the declaration.—Brown v. Bryant, 166 Mich. 180.

3. Burden of proof, presumptions and evidence.

§ 280. Burden of proof and presumptions.

As to notice or knowledge and opportunity to repair, see post § 281.

As to negligence by abutter or private party, see post § 282.

Weight and sufficiency of evidence to sustain burden, see post § 298.

In actions for injuries from other users of highway, see post § 387.

General law of presumptions and burden, see Evidence, II.

Presumptions and burden as to negligence and contributory negligence in general, see Negligence, V.

Res ipsa loquitur rule, see Negligence, V; and see also Carriers, § 210.

Burden on plaintiff to show that neither he nor driver of vehicle was contributively negligent, see Negligence, V.

¶ 1096. In an action to recover damages for injuries received because of a defective sidewalk, plaintiff need not show that the village whose duty it was to keep the walk in order either constructed it or ordered its construction.—Argus v. Village of Sturgis, 86 Mich. 344.

¶ 1097. The provision of How. St. § 1446f, limiting the liability thereby created for injuries sustained from defective highways to those which have been in use ten years, applies only to public highways in townships and expressly excludes streets, sidewalks, etc., in cities and villages; hence plaintiff in a suit for injury from a defective sidewalk need not allege or prove that the street has been used as a highway for ten years.—Fuller v. City of Jackson, 92 Mich. 197, overruling Clark v. Village of North Muskegon, 88 Mich. 308.

¶ 1098. In an action against a city for injuries caused by a defective sidewalk, plaintiff has the burden of showing that she was exercising due care at the time of the accident.—McGrail v. City of Kalamazoo, 94 Mich. 52.

¶ 1099. In an action for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by being thrown from a vehicle because its wheel dropped into a ditch excavated by defendant railway company in the street, it is error to direct a verdict for defendant on the ground that plaintiff had not shown that defendant was acting without authority in constructing its road as it did, the burden of such proof not being on plaintiff.—Kaiser v. Detroit & N. W. Ry., 131 Mich. 506.

¶ 1100. In the absence of any knowledge on the subject or anything apparent to observation that would lead to a contrary opinion, it may be presumed that a township has repaired a weak and shaky bridge after a lapse of a year from the time that it was known to be in that condition.—Moore v. Township of Hazelton, 118 Mich. 425.

Application of doctrine of res ipsa loquitur in action for injuries caused by open coal hole, see note, 5 N. C. C. A. 54.

§ 281. ——As to notice or knowledge and opportunity to repair.

Sufficiency of evidence to show notice or knowledge of defect, see post § 300.

Allegations as to notice or knowledge, see ante § 275.

Questions of law and fact as to notice, see post § 323.

Instructions as to notice, see post §§ 350, 353, 356.

Needlessness of proof of notice of defect in original plan of construction, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4589.

¶ 1101. In an action against a city for injuries from a defective sidewalk, notice to the city of want of repair cannot be presumed unless the defects were so open and notorious, of so long a standing, and of such a character as would naturally arrest the attention of passers-by; and the burden of showing these facts is upon plaintiff.—McGrail v. City of Kalamazoo, 94 Mich. 52.

¶ 1102. Knowledge of one defect in a sidewalk is not inferable from neglect to repair another.—Fuller v. City of Jackson, 82 Mich. 490.

¶ 1103. Notice on the city's part that the sidewalks in the vicinity are out of repair does not show notice of a particular defect in a crosswalk which caused the injury complained of.—Dundas v. City of Lansing, 75 Mich. 499.

¶ 1104. In an action for a sidewalk injury against a city, notice to the city is not inferred, in the absence of proof that the defective condition was notorious, or that any officer had been over it, from the fact that the icy condition had existed for four days.—Corey v. City of Ann Arbor, 134 Mich. 376.

¶ 1105. Notice of the dangerous condition of a sidewalk is not inferred from the fact that the icy condition existed for several days, the president of the council lived across the street from the place of the accident, two patrolmen were frequently seen on the street, and the city clerk passed over the walk the day before the accident.—Corey v. City of Ann Arbor, 134 Mich. 376.

¶ 1106. A city must be presumed to have knowledge of the defect in the street where the rails of an abandoned side track have been permitted to remain, for two and one-half years, slightly covered so as not to be visible but so near the surface as to be dangerous in wet weather.—Cutcher v. City of Detroit, 139 Mich. 186.

¶ 1107. It is not actionable to fail to keep a bridge in a reasonably safe condition for travel unless knowledge or notice of the existence of the defect and an opportunity to remedy it is shown, and such notice is not inferable from a mere failure to seasonably inspect.—Pearl v. Township of Benton, 123 Mich. 411.

§ 282. ——As to negligence of abutter or private person or corporation.

¶ 1108. In a suit for personal injuries arising from the falling of materials from a building, the fact that an injury has resulted from certain conduct of defendant does not establish the further fact that said conduct was negligent.—Brown v. Bryant, 166 Mich. 180.

§ 283. Admissibility of evidence.

Admissibility of particular matters or of evidence to prove particular issues, see post §§ 284-297.

Subsequent acts, facts and conditions and occurrences at other times or places, see post §§ 286-290, 292, 298.

Evidence variant from the allegations, see ante § 277.

Weight and sufficiency of evidence, see post § 298.

General law of evidence, see Evidence.

Judicial notice respecting highway, including sidewalk, construction, see Evidence § 14.

Judicial notice of travel conditions and customs, see Evidence § 13.

Judicial notice of propensities of horses to be frightened as given objects, see Evidence § 4.

Reasonable safety for travel as conclusion for jury and not for witness, see Evidence § 229.

Admissions and declarations of agents as evidence against principal, see Evidence, VII, C, D.

Admissions by road officers as evidence against public, see Evidence § 436.

Planks and like objects from place of accident as evidence, see Evidence, IX.

Proper field and limits of direct and cross-examination, see Examination of Witnesses.

Admissibility of cross-examination of witness as to being heavy taxpayer to affect him with bias, see Examination of Witnesses § 60.

Evidence that it was witness' duty to inspect as corroboration of his testimony, see Witnesses, VI.

¶ 1109. In determining the standard of diligence required from them by law it is proper to consider the size of the township, the sparsity of the population, the number and remoteness of the roads and bridges, and the improbability of finding road officers with exceptional qualifications.—Medina Tp. v. Perkins, 48 Mich. 67.

¶ 1110. As the statute (How. St. §§ 1442, 1443, 1445) requires townships to keep their highways in repair so as to be safe for public travel, the usage and custom generally in regard to erecting railings or barriers along embankments cannot be shown.—Malloy v. Township of Walker, 77 Mich. 448.

¶ 1111. Evidence that it was customary for people to cross a street diagonally in the direction taken by plaintiff when he was injured by falling into a manhole, and that a path had been worn across the street at that point, is admissible on the question of plaintiff's care.—Baker v. City of Grand Rapids, 111 Mich. 447.

¶ 1112. In an action against a city for injuries sustained by a traveler who after crossing a bridge over a small stream, turned to cross the street and in passing between one of the bridge braces and an upright for electric wires, tripped over a chain which, according to custom, swung between the brace and upright, while the draw was closed, there was no error in admitting testimony tending to show a common practice of crossing at the point in question.—Milliken v. City of St. Clair, 136 Mich. 250.

¶ 1113. In an action for injuries received on an alleged defective sidewalk testimony as to whether witness had any trouble in passing over the walk in question and to the effect that such walk was built after the pavement was laid is incompetent and is properly excluded.—Warner v. City of Wyandotte, 175 Mich. 695.

¶ 1114. In an action against a city to recover damages for personal injuries sustained by plaintiff driving in a buggy due to a collision with a wagon standing without a light on one of defendant's streets, evidence offered to show how a certain buggy was driven, held properly excluded where there was no offer to show that such buggy was the one in which plaintiff was riding. —Hall v. City of Flint, 195 Mich. 638.

§ 284. ——Negative testimony as to defects or negligence.

Admissibility of negative evidence, see also Evidence § 80.

¶ 1115. In an action against a city for an injury from a defective street, the defense cannot show that persons living in the immediate vicinity had not noticed the defect, which had existed for several days.—City of Grand Rapids v. Wyman, 46 Mich. 516.

¶ 1116. Where constructive, not actual, notice to a defendant city of a defect in its sidewalk is claimed, testimony of witnesses that they have frequently passed over the walk and would have noticed a defect if one had been there is admissible.—McGrail v. City of Kalamazoo, 94 Mich. 52.

§ 285. ——As to identity, nature or gravity of defects.

¶ 1117. In an action for injuries received by stepping into a hole in a sidewalk the evidence showed that there were several holes, and some of the witnesses could not identify the one into which the plaintiff stepped. Held, that it was not error to ask those witnesses as to the location of the holes they observed, where the court charged that plaintiff could not recover unless the city had notice of the actual hole into which plaintiff stepped, and that the existence of the others could not be used to show notice of this particular defect.—Tice v. Bay City, 84 Mich. 461.

¶ 1118. In an action against a township for damages resulting from a dangerous highway, plaintiff may show as bearing on negligence in keeping up the road the condition of the highway, and whether there were any railings or guides to indicate the position of the highway embankment at a narrow place when covered with water, and to protect persons from the danger of falling off.—Harris v. Township of Clinton, 64 Mich. 447.

¶ 1119. Where, in an action for an injury from a defective sidewalk, a witness has testified that at the place of the accident and for a time before, planks were loose, that he replaced one of them several times, that the sills were decayed, and that one plank was broken in two, his further testimony that when going across the walk great care was necessary if a person stepped on one end or close to the sill, the witness explaining that there was danger of tipping the plank up and throwing it out, was admissible.—Edwards v. Common Council of Village of Three Rivers, 102 Mich. 153.

¶ 1120. A widow of one who is killed as a result of being struck by an automobile fire truck which ran off the street because of a defect in the pavement is not accorded a reasonable opportunity to make actual measurements as to the size and depth of the hole where the defect is repaired within a few days after the accident, and consequently may introduce evidence as to the size and depth of the hole based upon estimates.—Cone v. City of Detroit, 191 Mich. 198.

§ 286. ——Subsequent conditions at or near place.

In actions against abutters and third persons, see post § 295.

Evidence as to conditions at times other than pleaded, see also Evidence § 94.

¶ 1121. In an action for personal injuries sustained by driving an automobile into an excavation on the street evidence of the condition of the pavement the next morning is admissible.—Karrer v. City of Detroit, 142 Mich. 331.

¶ 1122. Where plaintiff sues for an injury sustained by him in consequence of striking a log while he was traveling in the highway at night, it is competent to show the result of a measurement made four weeks after the accident of the size and height of the log, it appearing that the log was firmly imbedded in the earth and that there was no probability of an intervening change of situation.—Langworthy v. Township of Green, 88 Mich. 207.

¶ 1123. In an action against a village for personal injuries to a child resulting from a defective sidewalk it was proper to allow the child's mother to testify that she examined the place of the accident the next morning, where it appeared that the accident had happened after dark the night before, and it could not be well examined before, and it further appeared that the same condition had existed for weeks before. —Shippy v. Village of Au Sable, 85 Mich. 280.

¶ 1124. One who in the morning examines a sidewalk where she was injured the evening before may testify as to its condition in the morning as tending to show its condition at the time of the accident.—Fuller v. City of Jackson, 92 Mich. 197.

¶ 1125. Evidence is admissible, in an action against a city for injuries alleged to have been caused by falling over a loose plank in the sidewalk, to show that upon taking up the walk shortly after the accident the stringers were found to be badly decayed, since such evidence tended to show the actual condition at the time of the accident.—Brown v. City of Owosso, 130 Mich. 107.

¶ 1126. In an action against a city for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by a defective sidewalk, evidence of the condition of the walk on the morning following the injury, is not so remote as to be inadmissible there being no claim that there had been any change in its condition.—Lindley v. City of Detroit, 131 Mich. 8.

¶ 1127. On the question of the condition of a walk alleged to have had decayed stringers and loosened planks, examinations made two or three months after the injury and tests then made are not too remote.—Hunter v. Village of Ithaca, 141 Mich. 539.

¶ 1128. In a case involving the faulty construction of the crosswalk whereon an injury had been sustained a witness may testify that he saw the walk the morning after the accident and that the boards were then loose, such evidence not being too remote and being material to one feature of the case.—Barker v. City of Kalamazoo, 146 Mich. 257.

¶ 1129. A witness testified as to the condition of the sidewalk near the place of plaintiff's injury, as observed by him a week or two after the accident. The court below stated that this evidence was admitted on the understanding that proof was to be offered that no changes had been made in the sidewalk, and that the testimony was only to show that had the city used reasonable diligence, it would have discovered the defect in question. Held, this evidence was properly admitted.—Williams v. City of Lansing, 152 Mich. 169.

¶ 1130. In an action against a city to recover damages for injuries due to a defective sidewalk, held that it was improper for defendant to introduce evidence that the walk was again washed out by flood two years after the accident where the accident was in May following a storm of an hour or two, and the second flood in March two years later followed a storm of longer duration when some snow was still on the hillsides and there were other differences.—Kethledge v. City of Petoskey, 199 Mich. 659.

¶ 1131. In an action for an injury received from a defective sidewalk, there was no error in allowing a witness to testify that he was employed by the city to take up the walk soon after the accident, and that he found the stringers rotten, and had no difficulty in lifting the boards therefrom, the claim being that it was in bad condition so long as to imply notice.—Alberts v. Village of Vernon, 96 Mich. 549.

§ 287. ——Subsequent repairs or precautions.

Nonadmissive character of subsequent repairs and precaution, see also Evidence §§ 399, 400.

¶ 1132. The existence of an actionable defect in a sidewalk cannot be predicated upon the fact of repairs subsequent to the accident for which suit is brought; but where there is abundant proof of the existence of the defect, prior to such accident, the admission of testimony showing such repairs is not prejudicial error.—Lombar v. Village of East Tawas, 86 Mich. 14.

¶ 1133. In an action for injury caused by a log lying in a highway, the fact that the overseer of highways has since the accident cut off the exposed part of the log is inadmissible to show that the township has recognized the dangerous condition of the highway.—Langworthy v. Township of Green, 88 Mich. 207.

¶ 1134. Evidence that a witness had repaired the defective walk for the village, and the proceedings of the council in relation to such repairs, are admissible as bearing on the control of the walk.—Will v. Village of Mendon, 108 Mich. 251.

¶ 1135. In an action for sidewalk injury evidence of repair of the walk after the injury is inadmissible as substantive testimony of negligence.—Zibbell v. City of Grand Rapids, 129 Mich. 659.

§ 288. ——Conditions at other places.

¶ 1136. Evidence by plaintiff, as bearing on the city's negligence, that similar defects had often been suffered to continue for a considerable time without attention from the public authorities, is wholly immaterial, but could not have been injurious to defendant.—City of Grand Rapids v. Wyman, 46 Mich. 516.

¶ 1137. In an action for injury from a defective crosswalk, evidence that sidewalks in the vicinity were out of repair is inadmissible.—Dundas v. City of Lansing, 75 Mich. 499.

¶ 1138. In an action for injury from a defective sidewalk, evidence that the walk's condition was bad at other places beyond the defect that caused the injury is inadmissible.—Tice v. Bay City, 78 Mich. 209.

¶ 1139. Where, in a personal injury action against a city by a pedestrian, the defect complained of was a particular hole large enough to admit plaintiff's foot, evidence offered by plaintiff of other similar holes in the walk, but at points in no way connected with the place of the accident, is inadmissible.—Tice v. Bay City, 78 Mich. 209.

¶ 1140. Where the defect in a sidewalk which occasions an injury arises from a cause which naturally affects the condition of the entire walk, as where it is occasioned by age and subsequent decay, the jury may take into consideration the existence of loose planks in the sidewalk near the place of the accident as evidence that the identical plank on which plaintiff tripped had been loose in such manner as to make defendant negligent in regard to it.—Girard v. City of Kalamazoo, 92 Mich. 610.

¶ 1141. In an action for damages for injuries sustained by a horse becoming frightened from the flushing by firemen of a city fire hydrant, where the particular hydrant was shown never to have been used for any other purpose than in the extinguishment of fires, evidence of the use of other hydrants for other purposes, and uses to which other hydrants had been put is immaterial and is properly excluded.—Brink v. City of Grand Rapids, 144 Mich. 472.

§ 289. ——Other accidents and mishaps in vicinity.

¶ 1142. In an action for an injury from a defective sidewalk, evidence that others had stepped into the same hole in the walk before the time of plaintiff's injury is admissible to show the existence and character of the defect and constructive notice to defendant.—Lombar v. Village of East Tawas, 86 Mich. 14.

¶ 1142a. In an action for injuries sustained because of a defective sidewalk, it was proper to allow a witness who had testified as to the condition of the walk to be asked how he discovered its condition prior to the accident, and to admit his answer that the boards were loose and "jiggled" under his feet and that he stumbled on the boards and had seen others stumble, but had not fallen himself.—Thompson v. Village of Quincy, 83 Mich. 178.

¶ 1143. In an action for injuries caused by being tripped by a loose board in the sidewalk, a witness' testimony that he was tripped by a board in the walk eight months before the accident is admissible as tending to show that the boards were loose, in connection with proof that no repairs were made subsequently and until after the accident to plaintiff.—Alberts v. Village of Vernon, 96 Mich. 549.

¶ 1144. In an action against a city for personal injuries received in a fall caused by a defect in a sidewalk, evidence that three others, walking abreast with plaintiff, also fell down, and from the same cause, is admissible to show the nature of the defect. —Abbott v. City of Detroit, 150 Mich. 245.

¶ 1145. In a personal injury case for injuries sustained through an automobile running into an excavation on the street evidence that on the evening in question two other automobiles went into the same excavation seems to be admissible for the purpose of showing the character and existence of the excavation but not for the purpose of showing any reasonable care on the part of plaintiff.—Karrer v. City of Detroit, 142 Mich. 331.

¶ 1146. Where a city is sued for injuries from a defective bridge, evidence that a few days before the accident another person drove over it and found the planks loose, by reason of which his horses fell through, is competent as tending to show the bridge's condition before the accident complained of occurred, there having been no repairs meantime.—Woodbury v. City of Owosso, 64 Mich. 239.

§ 290. ——As to fright of other horses.

¶ 1147. In a suit against a township for injuries received by plaintiff in being thrown from a bridge through the backing of his horse which took fright at a hole in the bridge it is competent to show particular instances of other horses being frightened at the hole; such evidence tended to show the dangerous character of the bridge, and knowledge thereof on the part of the township authorities.—Smith v. Township of Sherwood, 62 Mich. 159.

¶ 1148. In an action against a township for injuries caused by a horse taking fright at building material stored near a highway for use in a bridge, it cannot be shown that other horses were previously frightened by such material.—Boos v. Township of Northfield, 186 Mich. 386, 12 N. C. C. A. 145.

§ 291. ——As to notice and opportunity to make safe.

Evidence as to existence of other holes, see ante § 285.

Previous conditions, see post § 292.

Previous accidents as bearing on notice, see post § 293.

Negative testimony as to noticeability of the defect, see ante § 284.

Admissibility of admissive declarations by highway commissioner to bind township on question of notice, see Evidence § 436.

¶ 1149. Testimony by president of a village sued for an injury from a defective sidewalk, that he knew of the walk's condition, that defect could have been repaired in twenty minutes, and that before accident he called the village marshal's attention to such defect, is admissible to show negligence on defendant's part, and defendant cannot rebut its effect by showing that such president did not give like information to chairman of street committee.—Edwards v. Village of Three Rivers, 96 Mich. 625.

¶ 1150. In an action against a village for injuries from a defective sidewalk, evidence that notice was given to the corporate authorities that the walk "from the school house to the village," which included the walk on which the accident occurred, was in a dangerous condition, is admissible to charge defendant with notice of the defect in question.—Strudgeon v. Village of Sand Beach, 107 Mich. 496.

¶ 1150a. The capacity of white pine for holding nails when sound, and its lasting qualities, as compared with other timber, may properly be shown in an action wherein defendant is claimed to have had constructive notice, by reason of the lapse of time, of the decay of a bridge built of such material; since the durability of such wood is some evidence as to the time for inspection.—Snyder v. City of Albion, 113 Mich. 275.

¶ 1151. On the question of notice of a defect remaining after the village street commissioner had inspected the sidewalk in response to a direction by a member of the common council, it is competent to show that the attention of the street commissioner and the workman who made the repairs was called to the condition of the walk throughout the block where the defect was.—Hunter v. Village of Ithaca, 141 Mich. 589.

¶ 1152. Notice to a village of the defects in its walks may be shown from conversations of witnesses with the street commissioner.—Wolverton v. Village of Saranac, 171 Mich. 419.

¶ 1153. In an action for injuries sustained from a defective sidewalk, resolutions of the village council passed during the previous two years ordering the repair of the sidewalk are admissible to show knowledge on the part of the village of the defective condition, when accompanied by evidence that the repairs were not made.—Thompson v. Village of Quincy, 83 Mich. 178.

¶ 1154. In an action against a village for injuries from a defective sidewalk a resolution of the village council, adopted not long before the injury, requiring a new walk to be laid from a point east of the place of the accident to a point west thereof is admissible to show knowledge on the part of the authorities of the condition of the walk.—Grattan v. Village of Williamston, 116 Mich. 462.

¶ 1155. In an action against a city for personal injuries resulting from a fall on a sidewalk, rendered defective by the settling of the walk, so as to leave the stump of a tree projecting, resolutions of the city council, requiring the tree to be cut down, are not evidence of notice actual or constructive to the city of the defect, inasmuch as they were passed while the tree was standing.—Lappread v. City of Detroit, 95 Mich. 255.

§ 292. ——Previous or existing conditions as bearing on notice.

See also ante ¶ 1131.
Previous accidents as bearing on notice, see post § 293.

¶ 1156. In an action against a village for injuries resulting from a defective sidewalk evidence of the general defective condition of the sidewalk in the vicinity of the place of the accident is competent.—Styles v. Village of Decatur, 131 Mich. 443; Weitzel v. Village of Fowler, 143 Mich. 700.

¶ 1157. In an action against a city for injuries due to a defective sidewalk, evidence as to the condition of the walk in the vicinity of the place where the accident occurred, at and prior to the time, is admissible upon the question of notice.—Canfield v. City of Jackson, 112 Mich. 120.

¶ 1158. In an action for injury from a defective sidewalk plaintiff has a right, as bearing upon the question of notice, to show the generally bad condition of the walk in front of the premises described in his declaration.—Rodda v. City of Detroit, 117 Mich. 412.

¶ 1159. In an action for injuries caused by a defective sidewalk, evidence of other defects of long standing, and in close proximity to the defect which caused the injury complained of, is admissible as tending to show notice to the corporate authorities of the defective condition of the walk, and of the particular defect which caused the injury.—O'Neil v. Village of West Branch, 81 Mich. 544.

¶ 1160. In an action for injuries caused by being tripped by a loose board in a sidewalk, that was old and the stringers of which were rotten, evidence that no repairs had been made in the walk for more than a year prior to the accident was admissible as tending to show a long continuance of the defective condition of the walk, from which it might be inferred that defendant had notice of such condition.—Alberts v. Village of Vernon, 96 Mich. 549.

¶ 1161. In an action for an injury caused by a defective sidewalk, evidence that other parts of the walk, built at the same time as that part whereon the accident occurred, were out of repair, was admissible on the question of notice.—Haynes v. City of Hillsdale, 113 Mich. 44.

¶ 1162. Testimony is admissible, in an action against a city for injuries alleged to have been caused by falling over a loose plank in a sidewalk, to show the condition of the walk at places other than the immediate place where the accident occurred, the strip of walk being of uniform material and laid at the same time, since such walk may reasonably be supposed to wear out and decay with some degree of uniformity.—Brown v. City of Owosso, 130 Mich. 107.

¶ 1163. In an action against a city for personal injuries sustained through a defective sidewalk, where the declaration alleged that the planks and boards of the walk on the west side of a street between two named streets were loose, etc., and where the defect causing the injury was definitely pointed out, testimony as to the condition of the walk in front of the lot at other places than where the testimony tended to show the accident happened, is admissible for the purpose of charging the city with notice of the condition of the walk.—Boyle v. City of Saginaw, 124 Mich. 348.

¶ 1164. In an action for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by falling into a hole in a cross-walk, it is not error to exclude evidence of the condition of the walk more than two years before the accident since its condition for two years prior to the accident is sufficient time to establish implied notice which is the sole object of such testimony.—Scheel v. City of Detroit, 130 Mich. 51.

¶ 1165. Evidence that an entire piece of sidewalk in front of a particular lot was generally out of repair, that the stringers were rotten so that the nails would not hold, that many of the boards, which were laid crosswise, would fly up when stepped upon, and that this condition existed for more than a year, is admissible to show notice to, and negligence by, defendant.—Campbell v. City of Kalamazoo, 80 Mich. 655.

¶ 1166. Where plaintiff sues a city for injuries sustained by her foot being caught in a hole in a sidewalk, evidence of the long-continued existence of the defect is admissible to show notice thereof to defendant, although it shows that the defect existed before the statute upon which the city's liability is based went into effect (Laws 1887, Act No. 264).—Tice v. Bay City, 84 Mich. 461.

¶ 1167. Evidence as to the generally defective condition of the walk for a distance of four or five rods in either direction from the place of the accident and tending to show age and decay is competent to charge a village with notice, even though the particular defect, loosening and tipping of a plank, which caused the injury may not have been then existent or apparent to ordinary observation.—Will v. Village of Mendon, 108 Mich. 251.

¶ 1168. Where the declaration in an action against a village for injuries sustained by reason of a defective sidewalk avers that the entire walk in front of a specified block had been allowed to become and remain in a dangerous and unsafe condition, evidence of the generally defective condition of such walk is admissible for the purpose of showing notice to the municipal authorities.—Strudgeon v. Village of Sand Beach, 107 Mich. 496.

¶ 1169. In an action against a city for injuries from a defective sidewalk, evidence that the walk was for its full length in front of certain premises in a generally rotten and loose condition six or eight months before the accident, is admissible in order to show notice to and negligence by defendant, even though it appears that some repairs were made upon the walk two months prior to the injury, where there is testimony tending to show that such repairs did not improve the walk's general condition.—Butts v. City of Eaton Rapids, 116 Mich. 589.

¶ 1170. In an action for injury alleged to have been caused by a defective sidewalk, testimony that the walk was repaired shortly before the accident, does not preclude evidence of its condition prior to such repair where it is claimed that the repairs made did not render it reasonably safe and fit for travel.—Styles v. Village of Decatur, 131 Mich. 443.

¶ 1171. In an action for injuries caused by being thrown from a cart owing to a defective street, evidence of the general bad condition of the street in the vicinity of the accident is admissible as bearing upon the question of notice.—Corcoran v. City of Detroit, 95 Mich. 84.

§ 293. ——Previous accidents as bearing on notice.

¶ 1172. In an action against a city for injuries received by falling upon a defective sidewalk, evidence that three or four days later another was injured on the same walk, but with nothing to show under what circumstances, is inadmissible to show that the city had constructive notice of such defect.—McGrail v. City of Kalamazoo, 94 Mich. 52.

¶ 1173. In an action for injuries received from stepping into a hole in a sidewalk, testimony that others had stepped into the same hole, is admissible as bearing upon the question of notice; but it is unimportant whether or not injury resulted.—Moore v. City of Kalamazoo, 109 Mich. 176.

¶ 1174. Where a city is sued for injuries which plaintiff received from stepping into a hole in a sidewalk, testimony that others had stepped into holes in that vicinity is admissible as bearing upon the question of notice.—Moore v. City of Kalamazoo, 109 Mich. 176.

¶ 1175. Testimony that others had fallen off the walk, prior to his injury, at the place where plaintiff was injured, was not admissible in an action for injury from defective sidewalk, where it appeared that a barrier had been erected after they fell, and was there when the plaintiff was hurt.—Vander Velde v. Village of Leroy, 140 Mich. 359.

¶ 1176. In an action for death due to defects in a highway, evidence of previous accidents at such place, as showing constructive notice to defendant, is competent. —Lamb v. Township of Clam Lake, 175 Mich. 77.

§ 294. ——As to construction, strength and condition of bridges and culverts.

¶ 1177. In an action for injury resulting from the breaking of a bridge, evidence of new methods in building bridges is immaterial unless it appears that there was fault in not knowing and using them.—Fulton Iron & Engine Works v. Township of Kimball, 52 Mich. 146.

¶ 1178. In an action against a township for an injury done to heavy machinery from the giving way of a bridge over which it was being moved, there was no error in admitting testimony that the approaches to the bridge were so deep that it had not seemed likely that very heavy loads could be placed on it without using extra teams; and that for several years and up to the day of the accident it had been safely crossed by unusually heavy loads.—Fulton Iron & Engine Works v. Township of Kimball, 52 Mich. 146.

¶ 1179. It may be shown that a bridge was defectively constructed, not according to the plan, and was allowed to remain so until it became dangerous by neglecting the necessary repairs.—Woodbury v. City of Owosso, 64 Mich. 239.

¶ 1180. On issue of the strength of defendant's bridge evidence of the strength of the bridge to sustain heavy loads at the time of the trial and after the structure has been changed, is inadmissible.—Woodbury v. City of Owosso, 64 Mich. 239.

¶ 1181. The general condition of a bridge at the time of an accident from its nonrepair being in issue, it is proper to ask, after evidence had been offered showing the condition of the lugs which carried the floor joists where the accident occurred, about the condition of the lugs on the other part of the bridge.—Woodbury v. City of Owosso, 64 Mich. 239.

¶ 1182. Where the condition of a bridge at the time of an accident is in issue, evidence that some of its planks were loose and that its stringers were rotten less than a month before is admissible.—Lay v. City of Adrian, 75 Mich. 438.

¶ 1183. As bearing on negligence in failing to repair a bridge it is not competent to show in what manner the city repaired the bridge after the accident.—Woodbury v. City of Owosso, 64 Mich. 239.

¶ 1184. In an action against a city under the Highway Damage Act, § 3441 et seq., for the death of the occupant of an automobile who met his death as the result of the car plunging into the river while a drawbridge was open at night, and alleged to be due to the failure of the bridge tender to lower the gates, which were operated by an electric button, and where defendant contended that the accident was due to a defective mechanism which had not been discovered at the time of the accident, held that evidence that the morning after the accident a defect was discovered in the mechanism of the gate which prevented its lowering when the button was turned the first time the defendant attempted to lower it after the accident, that neither the defendant nor its agents knew of any such defect before the injury, nor had any notice, and that one of defendant's officers, when the gate refused to work on a subsequent trial, ordered the draw closed, and fixed the defect so that it then worked, was erroneously excluded.—Beach v. City of St. Joseph, 192 Mich. 296.

¶ 1185. To rebut testimony that the stringers of a bridge were not decayed, as alleged by plaintiff, the latter may in rebuttal interrogate as to the condition of the bridge a witness who had walked over the bridge the day of the accident and before plaintiff left it.—Lay v. City of Adrian, 75 Mich. 438.

¶ 1186. In an action for an injury caused by the falling, through decay, of a sidewalk that formed part of a bridge, testimony of the decayed condition of the timbers in other parts of the bridge is admissible to show constructive notice.—Snyder v. City of Albion, 113 Mich. 275.

¶ 1187. The exclusion of evidence that a threshing machine outfit consisting of a ten-horse engine and a tank full of water is an extraordinary load for a bridge is error where the other party to an action has been allowed to prove that such engines or larger ones frequented the highways of the township.—Moore v. Township of Hazelton, 118 Mich. 425.

¶ 1188. In an action for the wrongful death of a boy while driving along a highway, in the absence of witnesses to the accident, testimony by witnesses acquainted with the highway as to a condition, which would tend to show that the boy was thrown on account of a defective culvert, is admissible.—Miller v. Township of Meade, 128 Mich. 98.

¶ 1189. In an action for injuries caused by the breaking of a bridge while an engine was crossing it, testimony is admissible to show that it was negligent and unusual to take a tank full of water upon the bridge with the engine, such evidence being competent on the question of defendant's negligence and on plaintiff's contributory negligence.—Comstock v. Township of Georgetown, 137 Mich. 541.

§ 295. ——In actions against abutters and third persons.

¶ 1190. In an action for injuries received by plaintiff in falling into a ditch dug by defendant across a sidewalk in front of his premises and left open, unguarded and unlighted at night, an ordinance forbidding the digging of ditches in any public place without permission of public authorities and requiring if dug that a fence or barrier with colored lights at night shall be placed around the excavation, is admissible in evidence as tending to show, not the breach of a public duty, but the degree of negligence, where the action is not based upon the ordinance but upon the common-law right to compensation.—Flater v. Fey, 70 Mich. 644.

¶ 1191. In a suit for personal injuries arising from the falling of materials from a building in the course of construction by defendant, on the question whether plaintiff heard a warning given by one of defendant's employees stationed on the fifth floor, it is error to exclude the evidence of said employee to the effect that he was in the habit of calling down to people, to the engineer, and to the man tending line at the hoist, and that they heard and understood him.—Brown v. Bryant, 166 Mich. 180.

¶ 1192. In an action for a personal injury by stepping into an unguarded excavation in a street while watching defendant's servants, it is competent to show the entire surroundings of the place where the accident occurred.—Le Beau v. Telephone & T. Const. Co., 109 Mich. 302.

¶ 1193. In a suit for personal injuries caused by falling glass from defendant's windows, it is improper to receive testimony on behalf of plaintiff to show the dilapidated condition, after the accident, of the window in question and other windows in the building.—Bannigan v. Woodbury, 166 Mich. 491.

§ 296. ——As to care or negligence by plaintiff.

See also ante ¶¶ 1111, 1112.

Contributory negligence of injured person, see ante § 247 et seq.

Proof of contributory negligence in general, see Negligence, V.

¶ 1194. Testimony that plaintiff's wife was sick, and that he was consequently anxious to reach home, he having left home to perform duties as a constable, cannot be shown to excuse his incurring a risk that he might not otherwise have taken in driving along a dangerous highway.—Harris v. Township of Clinton, 64 Mich. 447.

¶ 1195. In action for negligence in leaving a drawbridge unguarded by reason of a broken guard chain, where a defense of contributory negligence was made, it was proper to receive proof that on a prior occasion deceased rode his bicycle against the chain, since it tended to show knowledge of the situation; but it was inadmissible to show that he was habitually a careless rider and so inferentially was negligent on the occasion when he met his death.—Benedict v. City of Port Huron, 124 Mich. 600.

¶ 1196. Where one sues for injury sustained from an obstruction while driving in a highway, his general method of driving horses cannot be shown, being inadmissible to establish his negligence at the time of the accident.—Langworthy v. Township of Green, 88 Mich. 207.

§ 297. ——Evidence as to making claim and notice thereof.

Sufficiency of evidence as to notice or presentment of claim, see post § 302 et seq.

¶ 1197. Since plaintiff, in an action against a village for personal injuries sustained by reason of a defective sidewalk, must, under section 2775, 1 Comp. Laws 1897, as amended by Act No. 223, Pub. Acts 1899, present his claim as a condition precedent to maintaining an action thereon, testimony of a member of the council detailing an informal conversation among the members of the council present when plaintiff's claim was discussed, and stating that no action was taken, is admissible for the purpose of showing that the claim was presented to the council, and that the council so understood it.—Haney v. Village of Pinckney, 155 Mich. 656.

¶ 1198. Where suit against a township was begun within fifteen months after an injury caused by an obstruction in a highway, there being no dispute as to the fact or extent of plaintiff's injury, and none as to the existence of the obstruction, a highway commissioner's testimony that plaintiff had made no claim against the township does not tend to show that the suit was an "after-thought," and is properly excluded.—Langworthy v. Township of Green, 88 Mich. 207.

§ 298. Weight and sufficiency of evidence.

What facts constitute actionable neglect, see also ante XII, A-XII, E.

Proper and admissible evidence, see ante §§ 283-297.

Burden of proof and presumptions, see ante § 280.
General rules as to weight and sufficiency, see Evidence, X.
Direction of verdict on testimony of doubtful credibility, see also Directing Verdict ¶ 58.

¶ 1199. Testimony that a flag stone in a walk was broken and sunken from two to six inches and that in the evening when it was raining the plaintiff stepped into the depression and was thrown down, is sufficient to support a verdict for the plaintiff in an action for damages against the city.—Williams v. City of West Bay City, 126 Mich. 156.

¶ 1200. In an action for personal injuries sustained from the defective condition of a sidewalk evidence that a private citizen had made some repairs in the walk about two weeks before the accident is not evidence of such repairs as the statute contemplates on the part of the city, and does not require the plaintiff to prove that the sidewalk had become out of repair after such repairs had been made.—Weitzel v. Village of Fowler, 143 Mich. 700.

¶ 1201. In a suit for injury on a defective sidewalk, it is proper for an expert witness to testify that he examined the sidewalk six months after the accident, and found the timbers so rotted that they would not for a year or more past have held a nail, so as to support the inference that the sidewalk was defective at the time of the accident.—Williams v. City of Lansing, 152 Mich. 169.

¶ 1202. In a suit for personal injuries due to plaintiff's coming in contact with the end of defendant's electric wire, which was hanging in the public street near the ground, the jury in answer to a special question found that the wires which passed through the branches of trees did not come in contact with each other so as to burn off the wire in question. The theory of plaintiff was that the wire was burnt off by reason of a "short circuit" formed by contact of the wire with a branch of a tree. Held, that the jury's verdict for plaintiff should not be disturbed in the absence of overwhelming scientific evidence that such a "short circuit" was impossible.—Johnson v. City of Bay City, 164 Mich. 251.

¶ 1203. Plaintiff was injured February 24, 1906, on a sidewalk in front of the house of one Fields. Fields testified for the defendant city that he repaired the walk in question in November, 1905. On cross-examination, court permitted him to testify that the sidewalk was in bad condition when he repaired it. Held, that the latter testimony was admissible, but the jury was not bound to find therefrom that Fields had properly repaired the walk in question.—Williams v. City of Lansing, 152 Mich. 169.

§ 299. ——To show negligence of defendant.

¶ 1204. In an action to recover damages for injuries received because of a defective sidewalk, knowledge of the plaintiff of the existence of the defect is not conclusive evidence of his negligence.—Argus v. Village of Sturgis, 86 Mich. 344.

¶ 1205. A city cannot be held liable for injuries to one who at night fell into an unguarded excavation adjacent to a sidewalk, if the evidence by which the negligence of the city is sought to be established is not inconsistent with positive evidence offered by it to the effect that upon the night in question the place was left by the workmen guarded with proper barriers, thereby permitting the inference that they were subsequently removed in some manner for which the city was not responsible.—Welsh v. City of Lansing, 111 Mich. 589.

¶ 1206. A cement sidewalk of the defendant city connected with a tar sidewalk, the latter being about six inches lower. The fall between the two was bridged by a cement apron, fourteen inches long. The evidence showed that plaintiff's injury was due to stepping into space while passing from the higher to the lower sidewalk, and was not caused by any defect in the sidewalks or the apron, aside from the difference in level. Held, the evidence revealed no liability on the part of the city for negligent injury.—McIntyre v. City of Kalamazoo, 154 Mich. 301.

¶ 1207. Defendant city strung and maintained its electric wires over the grassplot between the sidewalk and the public street. The wires ran through the branches of trees growing on the plot. During a storm a wire broke and one end hung down near the ground. Plaintiff was injured by contact with it. There was evidence that the wires were allowed to remain in contact with a branch of the tree at the place of the accident, and some of defendant's experts who repaired the wire testified that it was burnt off through a "short circuit" formed by the contact of the wire with the limbs of the tree. Held, the finding of the jury that defendant was negligent was based upon sufficient evidence, and should not be disturbed.—Johnson v. City of Bay City, 164 Mich. 251.

§ 300. ——To show notice or knowledge of defect.

Burden of proof and presumptions as to notice of defect, see ante § 281.
Questions of law and fact as to notice, see post § 323.

¶ 1208. A woman was injured by stumbling in a gap in the crosswalk while running for a neighbor, by night, in case of sudden illness; and she brought suit against the municipality for damages. The walk had been out of order before, and planks had occasionally been missing as if torn up in contempt of its dilapidated condition. The place was within sight of the street commissioner's residence. Held, that there were facts to go the jury on the question whether the municipal government did not have notice of the condition of the walk in time to repair it before the accident.—Datton v. Albion Common Council, 50 Mich. 129.

¶ 1209. It is only necessary for a party injured by a defective bridge in an action for damages, to show upon the subject, by testimony, knowledge on the part of the township officers of such a state of facts as reasonably and necessarily make it their duty to examine and act, in order to protect the traveling public, and their neglect to do so.—Stebbins v. Township of Keene, 55 Mich. 552.

¶ 1210. In an action for an injury caused by a defective sidewalk constructive notice to the city of the walk's condition is established by evidence that it was defective for two months in the exact locality of the accident.—Rodda v. City of Detroit, 117 Mich. 412.

¶ 1211. In an action for personal injuries against a city sustained by reason of a defective sidewalk, evidence that the walk in the immediate vicinity of the plank where the accident occurred was in bad condition for two or three years before the injury, and that the plank had been rotted off for some months is sufficient on the question of notice of the defect although there was no direct notice to any officer of the city given by word or writing.—Epelett v. City of Sault Ste. Marie, 144 Mich. 392.

¶ 1212. Where a walk was repaired only three days before the accident there can be no presumption of knowledge by the city of the defective condition of such walk; but where, during the three days, numerous witnesses casually passing observed the defective walk, and where the city street commissioner admitted that he passed over the walk during each of the three days, held, that the jury might find that the city either had actual notice of the condition of the walk or was in fault for not knowing of such condition.—Moon v. City of Ionia, 81 Mich. 635.

¶ 1213. In an action against a village for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by a defective sidewalk, evidence that the hole in the walk had been in existence for two or three months and that it was obvious to passersby, justifies the jury in finding that its existence was generally known and that the village was negligent.—Hunter v. Village of Durant, 137 Mich. 53.

§ 301. ——To show contributory negligence.

What constitutes contributory neglect, see ante XII, F; and see also Negligence, IV.

Instructions as to contributory negligence, see post § 359.

¶ 1214. Where it appears that a plaintiff suing for an injury caused by an obstruction of a highway was using the highway on a proper errand at a place where it was habitually used and where an obstruction making it impracticable or reckless to pass would have been unlawful, and where plaintiff's testimony shows ordinary care, there is no such proof of contributory negligence as authorizes the court to take the case from the jury.—Laughlin v. Grand Rapids St. R. Co., 62 Mich. 220.

¶ 1215. Where a man walking along a country road upon a dark night stepped into a hole, for which he was, however, on the lookout, held, that his knowledge of the defect did not necessarily establish his negligence, but was only a fact for the jury to consider in deciding whether he was negligent or not.—Lowell v. Township of Watertown, 58 Mich. 568.

¶ 1216. Plaintiff's previous knowledge of defects in a sidewalk from which he received injury may be considered by the jury in determining whether he used due care, but is not conclusive against his right to recover.—Grattan v. Village of Williamston, 116 Mich. 462.

¶ 1217. The fact that a pedestrian has knowledge of a defect in a sidewalk does not necessarily establish contributory negligence, but is a fact to be considered by the jury along with other facts in determining the question.—Wadkins v. City of Albion, 201 Mich. 130.

¶ 1218. A claim that plaintiff temporarily forgot the presence of holes in a road at a culvert when he was driving over it in the nighttime cannot be predicated on statements that he was not sure he thought about the chance of an accident where he testified that he was familiar with the highway and kept a good lookout and knew he was in the vicinity of the culvert which he considered dangerous but did not know his exact position until his horses stepped on the planking and that he then tried to pull his horses to one side to keep on the narrow roadway and avoid the holes.—Rohlfs v. Township of Fairgrove, 174 Mich. 555.

¶ 1219. The fact that many teams are driven safely over a road is not conclusive that it is in a reasonably safe condition for travel, nor of the negligence of a traveler who claims to have been injured because of its defective condition.—Hunt v. Township of Lincoln, 131 Mich. 637.

¶ 1220. The concession in the case in question, that if the sidewalk upon which plaintiff sustained injury had not been slippery, plaintiff would have passed in safety the hole into which her foot slipped, disposed of the question of contributory negligence, where the plank upon which she slipped was strong enough to support her and it was therefore not negligent to step there.—Burrell v. City of Greenville, 133 Mich. 235.

§ 302. ——Of notice or presentment of claim.

Admissibility of evidence as to making claim or notice, see ante § 297.

¶ 1221. Service of notice of claim against the city for personal injuries, upon the corporation counsel is sufficiently shown where it appears that such notice properly addressed was handed to the office boy of plaintiff's counsel for delivery, and that he knew the location of the office of the corporation counsel and delivered it there, that the claim was presented to the common council and considered by a committee which made an adverse report without any claim that notice had not been given.—Beattie v. City of Detroit, 137 Mich. 319.

§ 303. ——In actions for injuries from bridges and culverts.

Instructions as to construction and maintenance of bridges and culverts, see post § 355.

¶ 1222. A stringer of a township bridge had been in use three years and had been examined with reference to its soundness only two months before the accident for which suit was brought. There was nothing in the general appearance of the timber or of the bridge to indicate weakness, and several teams were engaged in drawing stone over the bridge only the day before and on the day of the accident, no one discovering or suspecting any infirmity; held, that the town had neither constructive notice nor knowledge that the stringer was defective.—O'Neil v. Township of Deerfield, 86 Mich. 610.

¶ 1223. In an action against a township for damages alleged to have been sustained by reason of its negligence in permitting the supports of a bridge to become rotten, so that one side was lower than the other, the testimony of the highway commissioner that an actual measurement showed an incline of one inch, if unimpeached, must prevail as against the testimony of witnesses who confessedly rely upon estimates in placing the incline at several inches.—Perkins v. Township of Delaware, 113 Mich. 377.

¶ 1224. Evidence that in rebuilding a bridge the township left the mudsills some 12 to 16 inches above the bottom of the drain, is insufficient to s properly constructed wh the mudsills were more from the edge of the d and that the bridge st
after rebuilding thoug peated severe tests, and ened through extraordi
—Pearl v. Township of 275.

§ 304. ——In actions ag
vate parties.

What constitutes action
ante XII, G.

Judgment against a ci an abutting owner appear and defend,
cation § 60.

¶ 1225. Where a hor in a highway to a wat tained an injury from a by defendant in the hi fence and eight or ten traveled road, but with traveled way defendant for having wrongfully the jury having found
v. Hazen, 66 Mich. 657, by equal division.

¶ 1226. The fact alc
suing for injuries caus driving along a street speed ordinance is no him, as it must also a lation contributed to t
Michigan Telephone Co.

4. Questions of Necessity and sufficienc post XII, H, 5.

§ 305. In general.

Condition and safety c
§§ 306-311.

Condition and safety
ings, see post §§ 31

In actions against abut ties, see post §§ 31

Condition and safety of
see post §§ 321,

Notice of defects and safe, see post §§ 3

Proximate cause, see Contributory negligenc seq.

Directing verdict, see
Weight and sufficiency
§ 298 et seq.

¶ 1227. Whether, in way, one's horse brok where before there w is for the jury.—Wak
St. Clair, 91 Mich. 15.

¶ 1228. In an actio jury in which the pla been injured while walking at a certain place on the sidewalk, an issue is raised for the jury by evidence that the plaintiff had his bicycle with him at the time and that the peculiar marks of his bicycle tire were found in the ditch near the sidewalk on the second day after the accident.—Callahan v. City of Port Huron, 128 Mich. 673.

¶ 1229. Whether a particular vehicle is suitable for ordinary road travel as being unwieldy and unmanageable, is for the jury. —Malloy v. Township of Walker, 77 Mich. 448.

§ 306. Condition and safety of roadway.

Particular objects, defects and conditions, see post §§ 306-311.

Condition and safety of walks and crosswalks, see post § 312 et seq.

In actions against abutters for dangerous conditions, see post § 317 et seq.

Condition of bridges and culverts, see post §§ 321, 322.

¶ 1230. A township is not obliged to keep its highways absolutely safe for travel, but only reasonably fit and safe, and such question is for the jury.—Lamb v. Township of Clam Lake, 175 Mich. 77.

¶ 1231. It is a question for the jury to determine whether, under the circumstances of a given case, a highway is reasonably safe and fit for public travel.—Malloy v. Township of Walker, 77 Mich. 448.

¶ 1232. In a suit against a city for injuries arising from a hole in a street pavement, it is not error for the trial court to rule as a matter of law that the hole in the pavement was only three inches deep, where the city photographer has actually measured the depth, and plaintiff's witnesses, who testify as to a different depth, base their conflicting statements only upon estimates.—Jones v. City of Detroit, 171 Mich. 608.

§ 307. ——Objects or impediments in street or road.

Holes and depressions impending use, see post § 308.

Contributory negligence in failing to avoid objects in street, see post § 320.

¶ 1233. It is negligence as a matter of law for a city to permit the rails of an abandoned side track in an unpaved street to remain, for two and one-half years, slightly covered so as not to be visible, but so near the surface as to be dangerous in wet weather.—Cutcher v. City of Detroit, 139 Mich. 186.

§ 308. ——Holes, depressions and excavations.

In actions by foot travelers, see post § 313.

Contributory negligence in failing to avoid holes and excavations, see post § 335.

¶ 1234. A wagon in which plaintiff was riding was turning out of the street car track and one of the wheels went into a depression in the pavement three inches deep, plaintiff being thrown from the wagon thereby and injured. Held, the trial court properly ruled that as a matter of law the city was not negligent in leaving a depression of this depth in the pavement.—Jones v. City of Detroit, 171 Mich. 608.

¶ 1235. In an action by a widow against a city for the death of her husband who was killed as a result of being struck by an automobile fire truck which ran off the street because of a hole in the pavement, where the hole was repaired a few days after the accident, and plaintiff's evidence as to the width and depth of the hole was based on estimates, and defendant's evidence was based on actual measurements, held that it was a question for the jury as to whether the hole was of depth sufficient to make the city liable because of the defective condition of a public street.—Cone v. City of Detroit, 191 Mich. 198.

§ 309. ——Warning signals, barriers and railings.

Questions as to handrails and barriers on walks and cross walks, see post § 315.

Questions as to protective lights, signals and barriers in actions against abutters and private parties, see post § 320.

Questions as to absence of guard railings from bridges and culverts, see post § 322.

Questions as to contributory negligence in disregarding signals, see post § 331.

Instructions as to duty to protect openings, excavations, etc., see post § 348.

¶ 1236. It was a question for the jury to determine, in an action for the death of plaintiff's intestate, resulting from a defective highway, whether the defendant township was liable under How. St. § 1445, which provides that it is the duty of townships to keep in good repair, so that they shall be safe and convenient for public travel, at all times, all public highways under their care and control, which are open to the public, for failure to erect guards and barriers along that portion of the highway where the accident occurred, and which ran along a high embankment, 12 to 16 feet wide at the top.—Malloy v. Township of Walker, 77 Mich. 448.

¶ 1237. The question whether barriers should have been erected along a highway is ordinarily a question for the jury, except when there is no dispute as to the material facts, which, as a matter of law, show that there was no such obvious danger as to require their erection.—Irwin v. Township of Byron, 183 Mich. 345.

¶ 1238. A highway having a clear space thirty feet in width beyond the wrought portion on which one might drive with reasonable safety before reaching a place of danger, is, as a matter of law, reasonably safe for travel without the erection of barriers.—Irwin v. Township of Byron, 183 Mich. 345.

¶ 1239. Where a highway between hills is built at such a height and is so narrow as to require barriers or railings to make it reasonably safe and convenient for public travel, it becomes the duty of the township to erect them, but such question is for the jury, and it is error to charge the jury that such is the absolute duty of the township.—Lamb v. Township of Clam Lake, 175 Mich. 77.

§ 310. ——Temporary conditions, guards and warnings.

¶ 1240. Whether the duty to light an excavation in a public street was discharged by the act of the excavators in leaving at the place a lighted lantern is a question for the jury, where there is evidence that the lantern did not contain sufficient oil to keep it lighted during the time the light was required.—Baker v. City of Grand Rapids, 111 Mich. 447.

¶ 1241. Where a city granted a permit to plumbers to make an excavation in the streets, and the night of the day following the granting of the permit a person driving on the street drove his horse into an excavation which extended nearly across the street, and which was left open and unguarded by barriers, or by lights except on the curbs on each side, and which was impassable except on the south side of the street, held that the question whether the city was negligent in failing to properly guard the excavation was for the jury.—Reppard v. Chapin, 190 Mich. 19.

§ 311. ——Fright of horses.

¶ 1242. The question whether it was negligence for the defendant township to store building materials which frightened the plaintiff's horse, beside a highway for use in a nearby bridge, held properly submitted to the jury.—Boos v. Township of Northfield, 186 Mich. 386, 12 N. C. C. A. 145.

§ 312. Condition and safety of walks and crossings.

Particular conditions and defects as presenting jury questions, see post §§ 313-316.

Conditions of roadways as jury question, see ante §§ 306-311.

Questions in actions against abutters, see post §§ 317-320.

Questions as to bridges, see post §§ 321, 322.

Questions as to notice or knowledge of defects and dangers, see post §§ 323-326.

As to contributory negligence of foot travelers, see post § 333.

Instructions as to duty and negligence respecting walks, see post § 351.

¶ 1243. The question whether a village which was constructing a sidewalk at the time, was negligent in disposing of the material of the old sidewalk, is for the jury.—Finch v. Village of Bangor, 133 Mich. 149.

¶ 1244. Whether the highway at a crossing on the side of the street where there was no walk but a pathway was in a reasonably safe condition for public travel was a question for the jury, where it appeared that a tile drain, which received the water from an open ditch on the opposite side of the street, was allowed to discharge it into a continuation of the ditch at a point within the lines of the sidewalk if extended.—Comiskie v. City of Ypsilanti, 116 Mich. 321.

¶ 1245. Where a municipality leaves a pile of sheet steel 30 inches high and weighing 600 pounds on a sidewalk against a building but in so nearly an upright position as to be easily toppled over it is a question for the jury as to whether the sidewalk is in a condition reasonably safe and fit for public travel.—Brown v. City of St. Johns, 187 Mich. 641, 14 N. C. C. A. 440.

§ 313. ——Inequalities of surface, holes and breaks.

Questions as to holes, depressions and excavations in roadway, see ante § 309.

Questions as to contributory negligence in failing to avoid holes and excavations, see post § 335.

¶ 1246. In an action for personal injuries the question as to whether it was negligence for a city to leave for a long time upon a sidewalk traveled by many persons a flagstone 3½ inches thick, over which plaintiff stumbled, is one for the jury to decide.—Wedderburn v. City of Detroit, 144 Mich. 684.

¶ 1247. A crosswalk was constructed on a level with the curb, and to within 7 to 12 inches thereof, leaving a gutter from 5 to 7 inches deep, with abrupt, vertical sides between the curb and the walk. Plank covers were provided for this gutter and for like openings throughout the city, of which there were a number; but these covers were frequently removed for the purpose of cleaning the gutters, and in some instances were not replaced. Held, in an action for personal injuries sustained by stepping into the open gutter while attempting to cross the street, that it was for the jury to determine whether the crosswalk was reasonably safe for travel.—Schrader v. City of Port Huron, 106 Mich. 173.

¶ 1248. In a suit for personal injuries, a city which left an iron grating used to cover a hole in a public sidewalk projecting one and three-quarters inches above the surrounding level, is held as a matter of law to be not guilty of negligence.—Northrup v. City of Pontiac, 159 Mich. 250.

¶ 1249. The question whether or not a sidewalk in which there was a broken plank which caused a depression of from two to three inches, and which when stepped on would sink down several inches more, was reasonably safe and fit for travel, is for the jury.—Urtel v. City of Flint, 122 Mich. 65.

¶ 1250. In an action for a sidewalk injury, testimony that the planks in a walk had been removed for some distance leaving a drop of 4 to 6 inches is sufficient to go to the jury on the question of whether it was reasonably safe.—Wilkins v. City of Flint, 128 Mich. 262.

¶ 1251. In an action for a sidewalk injury, testimony for plaintiff that she stepped into a hole in a rotten plank in the sidewalk of which the city had notice, controverted by testimony for the defendant, raises a question of fact for the jury as to whether the walk was kept in a reasonably safe condition for travel.—Newman v. City of Ann Arbor, 134 Mich. 29.

§ 314. ——Accumulations of ice and snow.

Directing verdict, see post § 340.

¶ 1252. Where snow is piled up on the highway at a railroad crossing, so as to leave a sharp descent to the track, it is for the jury to say whether, in an injury resulting therefrom, the defect is one for which the city is liable.—Johnson v. City of Marquette, 154 Mich. 50.

§ 315. ——Handrails and barricades, lights and warnings.

Questions as to protective signals, barriers and railings in roadway, see ante §§ 309, 310.

¶ 1253. The sufficiency of a barricade at a defective temporary walk is for the jury, where it appears that the planks in the walk gave way as the traveler, a child, was approaching the barricade.—Brydon v. City of Detroit, 117 Mich. 296.

¶ 1254. In an action against a city for injuries sustained by plaintiff stepping off a sidewalk on a dark night at a point where the sidewalk was about 21 inches above the ground, and where the only negligence alleged was the failure to erect a railing along the sides of the walk, such question of negligence was properly left to the jury.—Hannon v. City of Gladstone, 136 Mich. 621.

§ 316. ——Temporary walks.

See also post ¶ 1283.

¶ 1255. In an action against a city for a sidewalk injury due to a defective plank bridge placed across a ditch in a street being repaired, it is erroneous to hold as a matter of law that the city is not liable on the ground that the independent contractor had no authority to build a temporary bridge under his contract where the contract provides that the roadways should not be wholly obstructed without authority and all the work was done under the supervision of the city authorities and similar bridges had been used at other streets.—Beattie v. City of Detroit, 129 Mich. 20.

§ 317. In actions against abutters and private parties.

Questions as to conditions of roadway and walks, see ante §§ 306-316.

Questions as to contributory negligence, see post § 337.

Directing verdict, see post § 341.

¶ 1256. The question of the negligence of defendant railway company in discharging a volume of hot water into the street in such a way that a thirteen-year-old boy fell therein and was injured, held properly submitted to the jury.—Curtis v. Grand Trunk Ry. Co. of Canada, 178 Mich. 382.

¶ 1257. Where the icy condition of a walk upon which plaintiff fell and sustained injuries for which she sues was not the result of neglect to remove naturally-accruing ice and snow, but was caused by defendant's action in throwing water on the place where it froze, the case is a proper one for the jury.—Canfield v. Chicago & W. M. R. Co., 78 Mich. 356.

§ 318. ——Signs, wires and other objects liable to fall.

¶ 1258. Testimony in an action for personal injuries showing that the defendant telephone company placed a brace wire over the street, that an unusual storm broke down many wires throughout the territory, that the brace wires sagged down and that the plaintiff was injured by driving into it, is sufficient to go to the jury on the questions of negligence and contributory negligence.—Friesenhan v. Michigan Tel. Co., 134 Mich. 292.

¶ 1259. That a sign suspended above a sidewalk had not been inspected for seven months is sufficient to take to the jury the question of the owner's negligence, in an action by a pedestrian who was injured by the fall of the sign.—Hass v. Booth, 182 Mich. 173.

¶ 1260. Whether it was negligence for a workman to leave a ladder unattended leaning against a building in a city street, and which blew over and injured a pedestrian, is a question for the jury.—Bacon v. Candler, 181 Mich. 372.

¶ 1261. The question whether an electric light company could have known, by the exercise of reasonable skill, that attaching a bracket and wire to a brick cornice would subject it to a strain which, by reason of its frail construction, would render it liable to fall and injure pedestrians, was for the jury, upon evidence that the building was brick-veneered, that it had been built twenty-two years, that the front was cracked, and that it was otherwise in bad condition when defendant's employees attached the bracket.—Swanson v. Menominee Elec. L., R. & P. Co., 113 Mich. 603.

¶ 1262. Plaintiff, employed by a carpenter contractor, was on a scaffold working on a bay window. One Bishop, employed by defendant contractors, was painting on a ladder resting at the top against the edge of the roof of the bay window. One of the defendants told Bishop that since it was getting windy he should finish a certain portion and then take the ladder down. Bishop left the ladder resting against the freshly painted surface of the house in order to change his paints. The ladder fell and plaintiff was injured. Held, the court erred in directing a verdict for defendants on the question of negligence, such question being for the jury.—Haxer v. Griessel, 162 Mich. 810.

§ 319. ——Dangers caused by excavations or construction work.

Questions as to holes and excavations in actions against municipality, see ante §§ 309, 313.

¶ 1263. The question as to the depth of a trench left in a street by a power company and into which plaintiff drove, is for the jury.—Sherman v. Consumers' Power Co., 199 Mich. 543.

¶ 1264. In an action against a street railroad company to recover damages for personal injuries due to falling into an excavation made by the defendant in the course of construction of its track, held that it was a question for the jury whether the defendant was negligent.—Norris v. Detroit United Ry., 193 Mich. 578.

¶ 1265. In an action against a lighting company for personal injuries sustained by plaintiff when a front axle of his loaded dray broke as he drove across a trench in a city street, which trench was the result of the power company's laying of a cable in the street, held that the questions as to the depth of the trench and whether the street was reasonably safe for travel were for the jury.—Sherman v. Consumers' Power Co., 199 Mich. 543.

§ 320. ——Protective measures, lights, signals and barriers.

Questions in actions against municipality, see ante §§ 309, 315.

¶ 1266. In an action against a paving contractor for injuries sustained by plaintiff's coming in contact with a board protruding on a street, while he was riding on the running board of a car, where defendant claimed that his work commenced and was being carried on over a block away from the place of the accident, and that no barriers were erected when the work was suspended on the night preceding the day of the accident, testimony tending to show that defendant's operations had extended to the place of the injury and that defendant's contract required the erection of protection around excavations, was sufficient to carry the case to the jury to determine whether defendant's witnesses were mistaken in testifying as to the state of the work at the time in question.—Pomaski v. Grant, 119 Mich. 675.

¶ 1267. In an action for injuries to a horse running into a sagging telephone wire, the question whether the defendant had the right to hang a wire across the street for such a reasonable time as might be necessary for its purposes without taking measures to protect travelers against accident, would depend upon circumstances and is for the jury.—Hovey v. Michigan Tel. Co., 124 Mich. 607.

¶ 1268. Whether a summer storm which extinguished warning lights placed about an excavation in a public street, was such as should have been anticipated and provided against by a street railway company making the excavation, is a question for the jury.—Norris v. Detroit United Ry., 185 Mich. 264.

¶ 1269. Whether a storm which extinguished warning lights about an excavation made by a street railway company in a public street, was an unusual and extraordinary one, held, under the evidence, to be a question for the jury.—Norris v. Detroit United Ry., 185 Mich. 264.

¶ 1270. In a suit for personal injuries against defendant, a paving contractor, for leaving a public street unguarded at night, the court properly leaves the question of negligence to the jury where there is evidence that no danger signal was displayed.—Williams v. Sager, 165 Mich. 635.

¶ 1271. Where a gang of telephone employees was stringing a cable through a snatch block operated intermittently by a team of horses a block away, and the noise attracted a seven-year-old child who approached, placed its hand upon the block and had it crushed by the sudden starting of the team, the question as to whether it was negligence for the employees to leave the snatch block unguarded in the street was one properly submitted to the jury.—O'Leary v. Michigan State Tel. Co., 146 Mich. 243.

§ 321. Condition and safety of bridges and culverts.

Questions as to notice of condition of bridges and culverts, see post § 325.

Questions as to contributory negligence, see post § 332.

Instructions as to construction and maintenance of bridges and culverts, see post § 355.

¶ 1272. Where, in a suit for damages sustained by reason of the breaking of a bridge stringer, the jury finds that to all outward appearance the stringer was sound, but was rotten internally, in the absence of personal knowledge on the part of the proper officers of the hidden defect, the question for the jury is whether said officers used due diligence in discovering such defect, and neglected to do that which common prudence and caution required them to do to ascertain the true condition of the stringer.—McKeller v. Township of Monitor, 78 Mich. 485.

¶ 1273. In an action against a township for injuries to the plaintiff from the falling of a bridge, caused by the breaking of a stringer on one end of the structure, it is proper to submit to the jury whether from the evidence the defendant's officers, in examining the bridge, used the necessary diligence to ascertain its condition.—Blank v. Township of Livonia, 95 Mich. 229.

¶ 1274. The question whether a township is required to provide a bridge sustaining a load such as a threshing machine outfit consisting of a ten-horse engine and a tank full of water, is a question of fact upon which it is proper to receive evidence.—Moore v. Township of Hazelton, 118 Mich. 425.

¶ 1275. In an action for wrongful death, evidence that a culvert was defective and a turn in the road made it probable that the wagon would lurch violently at that place, that the deceased, an eleven-year-old boy was seen driving the team steadily just before he reached the culvert, that the team stopped just beyond and the boy was found crushed by the wheels, is sufficient to go to the jury on the questions of negligence and contributory negligence, notwithstanding the lack of direct testimony as to how the accident occurred.—Miller v. Township of Meade, 128 Mich. 98.

¶ 1276. In an action against a city for injuries sustained by a traveler who after crossing a bridge over a small stream, turned to cross the street and in passing between one of the bridge braces and an upright for electric wires, tripped over a chain which swung parallel to the curb between the brace and the upright according to custom while the draw was closed, the questions of negligence of the city and of contributory negligence on the part of the plaintiff, were for the jury, although the city was required by law to maintain a chain or guard, and plaintiff knew of a practice to suspend the chain at the point in question while a former bridge stood there, but claimed to have had no knowledge of the practice as to the new bridge.—Milliken v. City of St. Clair, 136 Mich. 250.

§ 322. ——Absence of guard railings.

Questions as to guards and railings on roadways and walks, see ante §§ 309, 310, 315, 320.

¶ 1277. Whether a railing along the banked approach to a bridge is necessary for the safety of travelers is a jury question.—Shaw v. Township of Saline, 113 Mich. 342.

¶ 1278. Whether the failure to maintain side railings on a bridge twenty feet long and sixteen feet wide, one end of which was one foot lower and one side one inch lower than the other, constituted negligence, is a question for the jury.—Perkins v. Township of Delaware, 113 Mich. 377.

¶ 1279. Where the evidence is conflicting, the question as to whether or not it is the duty of a township to maintain a rail upon the side of a bridge is for the jury.—Lauder v. Township of St. Clair, 125 Mich. 479.

¶ 1280. Plaintiff's horse while crossing a bridge took fright at the noise of the water flowing over the wasteweir at the end of a dam, the top of which formed the approach to the bridge, backed off the bridge and off the approach, and plaintiff was injured. The bridge was supplied with railings, but the approach was not, nor was there anything provided to hide the water from the sight of horses at any point upon the bridge or the approach. Held, that the question whether or not defendant was guilty of negligence in failing to erect barriers at the sides of the approach should have been submitted to the jury.—Ross v. Township of Ionia, 104 Mich. 320.

¶ 1281. Plaintiff was injured while driving her vehicle upon the approach leading to a highway bridge. The highway and said bridge were being repaired by defendant township, but were not closed by the township authorities, and were being used for travel at the time by the public. Held, the trial court properly left to the jury the question whether it was the duty of the township to erect railings or barriers along said approach.—Speck v. Township of Bruce, 166 Mich. 550.

§ 323. Notice of defects and opportunity to make safe.

Questions of notice as to particular defects, see post §§ 324-326.

Questions as to nature and character of the defects and conditions, see ante §§ 306-322.

Sufficiency of evidence to show notice, see ante § 300.

¶ 1282. It was for the jury to say whether the existence of a chuckhole in a newly filled road had existed long enough to impute notice of the defect, where it had been caused by a heavy rain a few days before plaintiff drove along the road at that place.—Cavanagh v. Township of Riverside, 136 Mich. 660.

¶ 1283. In a suit against defendant city for personal injuries, there was evidence that a contractor paving a street had placed boards from the curb at the crossing to the excavation in the street, for people to walk on; that work had been suspended for ten days, and the boards had been so used for that period; that no barricade or lights were placed at the crossing; and that the work was under the supervision of the department of public works. Held, there was sufficient evidence of notice to defendant and of defendant's liability, to submit the case to the jury.—Hughes v. City of Detroit, 161 Mich. 283.

¶ 1284. Evidence that plaintiff's horse shied at a washout on a high embankment in the road which had existed the whole spring at a point in the road where washouts had occurred during rainfalls in the spring and fall for at least two years, warrants the inference that the washout must have been known to the township officers, and negligence based thereon was properly submitted to the jury.—Tracey v. Township of South Haven, 132 Mich. 492.

§ 324. ——Sidewalks.

Questions as to condition of walks and crosswalks, see ante § 312 et seq.

¶ 1285. In an action against a city for injuries sustained by stepping upon a loose board in a sidewalk where no notice of defect was shown, evidence that the walk was badly out of repair for several months made the question of constructive notice one for the jury.—Ness v. City of Escanaba, 142 Mich. 404.

¶ 1286. A defect in a sidewalk which has existed for a number of months and which could be discovered at a distance of two rods, cannot as a matter of law, be said to be latent.—Urtel v. City of Flint, 122 Mich. 65.

¶ 1287. In an action for a sidewalk injury, the question of notice is for the jury where an inspection of the walk was made ten days before the accident but there is testimony that the walk was out of repair for 3 weeks and that the inspector was informed of it.—Wilkins v. City of Flint, 128 Mich. 262.

¶ 1288. Question of notice to the city is for the jury in an action for injuries alleged to have been caused by falling over a loose plank in the sidewalk, there being evidence that the walk was old, and the stringers rotten so they would not hold nails, that the walk was repaired shortly before the accident but the stringers were not replaced, and that upon taking up the walk shortly after the accident the stringers were found to be badly decayed.—Brown v. City of Owosso, 130 Mich. 107.

¶ 1289. Whether a particular defect in the sidewalk existed a sufficient length of time prior to the accident to constitute constructive notice to the city, was a question for the jury to decide, in an action for personal injuries from such defective sidewalk; where there was an abundance of testimony that such sidewalk, being a plank walk, had been down 15 or 16 years, and was in bad repair, that the stringers were gone, and the boards were rotted; even though the street commissioner testified he had repaired such walk the day before the accident.—Allen v. City of West Bay City, 140 Mich. 111.

¶ 1290. The general bad condition of a sidewalk near the dividing line between two lots about where the injury occurred was properly allowed to send the question of notice to the jury, though in the particular city it was the duty of each abutter to build the walk in front of his own premises, and though an inspector reported a few months before the accident that one of such walks was sound and the other bad whereupon the city ordered the bad walk relaid which had not been done at the time of the accident, the objection urged being that the evidence of bad condition should under the circumstances be limited to that portion of the walk fronting the lot where the injury occurred.—Nestle v. City of Flint, 141 Mich. 153.

¶ 1291. Where it appeared, in an action against a city for injuries sustained by reason of a defective sidewalk, that one of the city councilmen, at noon of the day of the accident, discovered a sound plank out of the walk at the place where the accident subsequently occurred, and replaced it without nailing it, and upon the evening of the same day notified the street commissioner, it was as matter of law not an unreasonable delay and was error to permit the jury to base a finding of negligence upon the failure of such official sooner to notify the commissioner.—McKormick v. City of West Bay City, 110 Mich. 265.

§ 325. ——Of defective bridges and culverts.

Questions as to conditions of bridges and culverts, see ante §§ 321, 322.

¶ 1292. Plaintiff, while riding upon a traction engine, sustained injuries by reason of the collapse of a bridge, due to the decay of the stringers, which had been in use for fifteen years. In an action against the township, persons who lived near the bridge testified that it had been in bad condition for some time; that it would shake when teams passed over it; and that they were afraid to drive across it with heavy loads. One witness testified that he had gone upon the bridge with the overseer of highways, and that it shook when they jumped upon it. This witness was contradicted by the overseer. The commissioner of highways testified that he went under the bridge two months before the accident, and made a careful examination, without finding any evidence of decay. Held, that there was evidence to go to the jury on the question of notice.—Aben v. Township of Ecorse, 113 Mich. 9.

¶ 1293. Where, in an action to recover for injuries to a traction engine by reason of a defective bridge, witnesses testify that before the accident they noticed appearances of decay in the stringers of the bridge, the question whether the facts testified to are sufficient, if true, in connection with the other facts in the case, to constitute constructive notice to the township of the particular defect that caused the accident is one of fact for the jury and not of law for the court.—Randall v. Township of Southfield, 116 Mich. 501.

¶ 1294. In an action for injuries to a threshing machine outfit caused by the fall of a bridge, it is proper to submit to the jury the question of the plaintiff's knowledge and opportunities of knowing if the bridge has been repaired.—Moore v. Township of Hazelton, 118 Mich. 425.

¶ 1295. A question as to whether a township had notice, prior to the date of an injury, that snow would create an appearance upon single-floor bridges at night to the effect that seams or cracks would appear wider than they really were, is properly given to the jury in an action for injuries sustained because of a horse's shying and backing up, causing a vehicle to fall off the bridge, and a driver to become injured.—White v. Township of Riley, 121 Mich. 413.

¶ 1296. The question of notice, in an action against a township for injuries caused by the fall of a bent under a bridge, should be submitted to the jury where there is testimony that the imperfect condition of the bridge was visible and generally known for a long period.—Pearl v. Township of Benton, 131 Mich. 275.

§ 326. ——Notice to persons or corporations responsible for conditions.

Questions as to dangers and defective conditions, see ante §§ 317-320.

¶ 1297. Whether a street railway company had a reasonable time to restore warning lights at a point where it had torn up the street, after they were extinguishd by an unusual and extraordinary storm, is a question for the jury.—Norris v. Detroit United Ry., 185 Mich. 264.

§ 327. Proximate cause.

Direction of verdict for want of proof, see post § 342.

Instructions as to proximate cause, see post § 358.

¶ 1298. It was a question for the jury to decide whether an accident to travelers in a "long carry-all," a long wagon with front wheels turning under it, upon a highway at a place where it ran along an unguarded embankment, would have occurred if such highway had been in proper condition; where it appeared that such highway was worn into ruts from two to four inches deep, and was icy and slippery and the rear wheels did not follow in the track of the front ones.—Malloy v. Township of Walker, 77 Mich. 448.

¶ 1299. Where, in an action against a township for negligent injuries, it appears that as plaintiff's horse shied at some object by the roadside, one of the wheels of the wagon struck a log near the center of the highway, it cannot be said as matter of law that the mere shying of the horse, rather than the obstruction in the highway, was the proximate cause of the injury.—Langworthy v. Township of Green, 95 Mich. 93.

¶ 1300. In an action for negligent injury it appeared that a highway in defendant township crossed a ravine by a culvert some six feet high; that the highway was built up across the ravine for quite a distance, and at the top was some thirty feet wide, until, arriving within forty feet of the culvert, it narrowed to thirteen or fourteen feet on top; that the culvert was six feet high, made of planks sixteen feet long, and extended about a foot beyond the embankment, and was of the width of about five feet; that at the southwesterly corner of the culvert, and extending across to the middle of the traveled track, there was a hole, or washout, about two feet wide, and from four to seven feet long, and from one to two feet deep; that there was no railing or barrier along the embankment; that, just as plaintiff got nearly to the culvert, his horse shied at the hole, and jumped over the embankment on the other side, carrying plaintiff and the buggy with him. One count of the declaration alleged all of the defects as producing the injury complained of. Held, that the court properly submitted the question to the jury whether the proximate cause of the injury was one or all of the defects combined.—Simons v. Township of Casco, 105 Mich. 588.

¶ 1301. Whether the plaintiff in an action for injury from a defective sidewalk was injured because he slipped and fell on the walk, or because of stepping on the edge of the walk and falling off because of the lack of a proper railing, was properly submitted to the jury, where the testimony was not so conclusive as to enable the judge to dispose of it as a matter of law.—Vander Velde v. Village of Leroy, 140 Mich. 359.

¶ 1302. Where a team has already become frightened by some object, and is then further frightened, until beyond the control of the driver, by a defect in defendant city's highway, it is a question for the jury to say whether, but for the defect, the driver would have regained control, and whether therefore the defect was the proximate cause of the accident.—Johnson v. City of Marquette, 154 Mich. 50.

¶ 1303. A horse is not to be considered as matter of law beyond control that merely shies or starts, and for a moment has his own way.—Johnson v. City of Marquette, 154 Mich. 50.

¶ 1304. The questions whether the fright of the plaintiff's horse was attributable to the negligence of the defendant township in storing building material near a highway for use in a bridge, and whether it was likely to frighten a horse of ordinary gentleness, held properly submitted to the jury. —Boos v. Township of Northfield, 186 Mich. 386, 12 N. C. C. A. 145.

§ 328. Contributory negligence of vehicle users or drivers.

Questions as to contributory negligence of foot travelers, see post §§ 333-336.

In actions against private party or abutter, see post §§ 337, 338.

¶ 1305. A person is not guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law in riding on the top of a load of bolts loaded on a rack and piled about three and a half feet high, where the forward wheels of the wagon dropped into a mud hole with such force as to throw him off and seriously injure him.—Hunt v. Township of Lincoln, 131 Mich. 637.

¶ 1306. Whether there was contributory negligence in riding on a wagon loaded with wood piled crosswise as it was drawn over a former corduroy road lately covered with soil and gravel which recent rains had washed out, is for the jury.—Cavanagh v. Township of Riverside, 136 Mich. 660.

¶ 1307. In an action against a township for damages for personal injuries sustained by a person being kicked by a horse when he fell from a load of lumber on which he was riding, upon the wagon dropping into a rut in the approach to the bridge, causing the team to become frightened and to kick and run away, where it appeared that the lower part of the load of lumber consisted of stuff piled between the upright standards of the bolsters, that several bunches of shingles were placed on the top and that plaintiff and the driver were each seated upon a bunch of shingles about three feet from the front end of the load, held that it was a question for the jury whether plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence.—Pool v. Township of Montague, 194 Mich. 476.

¶ 1308. It cannot be said to have been negligent as matter of law to drive a horse loose in a country highway from a farm to a watering place 160 rods distant; but the question is for the jury on evidence as to the age and disposition of the horse and the circumstances.—Bennett v. Hazen, 66 Mich. 657, per Morse and Champlin, JJ., Campbell, C. J., and Sherwood, J., dissenting on the ground that such negligence was shown by the fact that the horse strayed and was brought back into the road and started on a run putting it out of control.

¶ 1309. It is for the jury whether there was contributory negligence, where plaintiff's intestate was found dead in a stream 75 feet distant and 25 feet below the level of the traveled part of a plank road at a point where a railroad bordered one side and there was no barrier on the river side, and where there were marks in the soil indicative of excited movements of the horse, which with the buggy was found next morning on the opposite bank uninjured, and where decedent was a healthy, strong man, skilful with horses, sober at the time, was traveling at a reasonable hour, and no witness saw the accident.—Carver v. Detroit & S. Plank Road Co., 69 Mich. 616.

§ 329. ——Avoidance of objects and obstructions.

Questions of contributory negligence respecting particular things or conditions, see also post §§ 329-332.

Questions of negligence contributory to that of abutter or other private party, see post §§ 337, 338.

Questions of contributory negligence by foot travelers, see post §§ 333-336.

¶ 1310. Where the driver of a cutter which collided with stones in a street and caused plaintiff in an action against a city, to be thrown out and injured, had known for months of the presence of such stones and had ceased driving there on that account, and after ceasing driving there had passed the place daily without observing the stones, and had at the time of the accident supposed that the stones had been removed, he could not be said as a matter of law to have been guilty of contributory negligence. —McEvoy v. City of Sault Ste. Marie, 136 Mich. 172.

¶ 1311. Where a township left certain bags of cement covered with white canvas on the side of the road, and thereby caused plaintiff's horse to become frightened so that plaintiff, in urging her beyond said bags, lost control of her, with the result that horse, buggy, and occupants were precipitated into a culvert, negligently left open by said township, plaintiff's contributory negligence in attempting to drive past the cement is a question of fact for the jury.—Judd v. Township of Caledonia, 150 Mich. 480.

¶ 1312. Whether a plaintiff injured by driving his automobile into a sand pile left in a city street by a private contractor is guilty of contributory negligence in failing to observe the pile while driving at a high rate of speed, is a question for the jury.—Walls v. City of Detroit, 171 Mich. 612.

§ 330. ——Avoidance of known defects in road.

Questions as to contributory negligence of foot travelers in failing to avoid defects, see post § 335.

¶ 1313. A person who, in the lawful use of a highway, comes to a defective place such as a flooded reach in a road which had been narrowed by encroachment of a bordering stream, may yet proceed if it is consistent with reasonable care so to do; and that is generally a question of fact for the jury, depending on the nature of the obstruction or defect, and all the surrounding circumstances.—Harris v. Township of Clinton, 64 Mich. 447.

¶ 1314. A person is not guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law in driving over a corduroy road which he knows to be in general in a dangerous condition but which others are using daily, where he does not know of any particular defect and there is no other accessible way to drive around this piece of road.—McTiver v. Township of Grant, 131 Mich. 456.

¶ 1315. In an action for personal injuries received from being thrown out of a cart wherein plaintiff was driving, "hurrying along," at night at a rate of speed not clearly shown to be rapid or improper over a street known to plaintiff to be defective, the question of contributory negligence was for the jury.—Corcoran v. City of Detroit, 95 Mich. 84.

¶ 1316. Whether one who was injured while driving along the highway at night was guilty of contributory negligence in forgetting a defect which he had noticed the morning before is a question for the jury under the proven circumstances, and the case should not be permitted to turn solely upon the question whether he in fact did or did not remember the defect at night.—Bouga v. Township of Weare, 109 Mich. 520.

¶ 1317. Whether one was guilty of contributory negligence in riding along the traveled portion of a highway without taking precautions to avoid a defect therein which he knew to have existed some months before, but which he supposed had been remedied, is a question for the jury.—Whoram v. Township of Argentine, 112 Mich. 20.

¶ 1318. In an action for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by a defective highway, the question of contributory negligence is for the jury under evidence that plaintiff had driven over the place the day before, and the fall before, and that others had driven over it safely, and no evidence to show that plaintiff could have avoided driving over the place in question.—Hunt v. Township of Lincoln, 131 Mich. 637.

¶ 1319. The questions of negligence of defendant city and of contributory negligence of a traveler, in an action against such city for injuries to such traveler from a defective street, were for the jury, where it was the claim of plaintiff, supported by evidence, that the city had allowed such street, which descended a hill, to remain gullied or washed out so that the traveled portion was dangerously narrow, that there were no barriers; and where defendant claimed and introduced evidence tending to support the same that such traveler was familiar with that part of the city, that he might have gone a safe way by another street, that his horse was smooth shod, although the streets were covered with ice.—Warn v. City of Flint, 140 Mich. 573.

¶ 1320. The question as to whether the driver of an automobile who sees an elevation in the highway 15 or 20 rods away which is not guarded or lighted and slows down his car to 6 or 7 miles per hour, and does not see a sluiceway on the other side of the elevation until too late, in proceeding after observing such elevation exercises the care and caution that an ordinarily careful and prudent man would have exercised under similar circumstances, is for the jury to determine.—Loose v. Township of Deerfield, 187 Mich. 206.

§ 331. ——Disregard of or mistake as to warning signals.

¶ 1321. In an action for personal injuries sustained by running one's automobile into an excavation in the street, on the theory that red lights were at the curb line only, and that the barricade was so far back to the north as not to be visible from the south, there being some testimony to that effect, the question was properly left to the jury as to whether plaintiff exercised common prudence, after seeing the light to act on the assumption that it marked danger only near the west curb, and that it would be safe to travel on the east side.—Karrer v. City of Detroit, 142 Mich. 331.

¶ 1322. Contributory negligence as a matter of law cannot be imputed to one who, while driving down a dark street in which he knew a sewer was being constructed, relied upon the red lights as locating the place of danger, and was injured by running his buggy wheel over a pile of dirt fifty feet from the nearest light.—Taylor v. City of Jackson, 151 Mich. 639.

¶ 1323. In an action against a city for damages for the loss of a horse which at night fell into an open and unbarricaded excavation extending nearly across a street, where the only passageway was on the south side of the street, and the evidence was conflicting as to the exact location of the signal lights, and as to the effect which the electric light, together with the shade produced at the point of the excavation had, held that the question of the contributory negligence of the driver was for the jury. —Repperd v. Chapin, 190 Mich. 19.

§ 332. ——In use of bridges, culverts and approaches thereto.

Questions as to condition of bridges and culverts, see ante § 321.

¶ 1324. To drive along an embankment forming part of a highway, and built across low land as an approach to a bridge across a river, at the time of an overflow, and at a place where the river had previously narrowed the roadway, is not negligence per se; whether it would be negligence in a particular case depends on the circumstances, and is for the jury.—Harris v. Township of Clinton, 64 Mich. 447.

¶ 1325. Whether the owner of a horse, in permitting it to be driven unshod when the roads were slippery because of rains, was guilty of contributory negligence, precluding a recovery for damages resulting from its inability to keep its footing upon an inclined highway and bridge, which was unprotected by barriers, was a question for the jury, as was also the question of the negligence of the driver in not alighting before attempting to drive up the incline.—Perkins v. Township of Delaware, 113 Mich. 377.

¶ 1326. In an action for personal injuries caused by an engine's breaking through a bridge, where it appears that plaintiff had been warned that the bridge was not very strong, the question of contributory negligence in attempting to cross with a tank full of water attached to the engine, is for the jury.—Comstock v. Township of Georgetown, 137 Mich. 541.

¶ 1327. A drawbridge was opened with no signal of danger except a bell placed upon it. The night was dark, and a bicyclist approaching at a moderate speed ran into the open bridge and was drowned. There was evidence that he looked both up and down the river and directly ahead while approaching. Held, he was not, as a matter of law, guilty of contributory negligence.—Scharman v. Bay County Bridge Commission, 158 Mich. 77. (Brooke and Grant, JJ., dissenting.)

¶ 1328. Plaintiff on dismounting from his bicycle upon a bridge over a mill race on account of an accumulation of dirt washed upon the bridge either struck, pushed against or rested upon a temporary railing of the bridge, which being insecure gave way, causing him to fall some twenty feet into the stream below. In an action against the township and the owner of the mill his contributory negligence was held to be for the jury.—McRae v. Township of Hart, 179 Mich. 325.

¶ 1329. Plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law where it appears that when he was driving his team in the nighttime at a walk over a culvert, at each end of which large holes had been washed in the roadway, one of the horses stepped in a hole and pulled the rig into it and injured him, that the road had been defective for several months, that plaintiff had used it hundreds of times and knew of its extremely dangerous condition and how to avoid the danger, that at the time of the accident he knew he was at the culvert when his horses stepped on the planking, that he could not see the road but attempted to drive on the narrow roadway between the holes, that he had his team under full control and that by alighting and using his lantern he could have passed safely.—Rohlfs v. Township of Fairgrove, 174 Mich. 555.

¶ 1330. Whether a plaintiff in riding in a vehicle driven by her mother upon the approach to a bridge, is guilty of contributory negligence, where the defendant township has permitted a pile of sand and a layer of boards to be placed on said approach with the result that the vehicle is overturned and plaintiff injured, is a question of fact for the jury.—Speck v. Township of Bruce, 166 Mich. 550.

¶ 1331. In an action against a city for the death of an occupant of an automobile, who was riding with the owner, resulting from the automobile plunging into a river at night after a drawbridge had been raised, and alleged to be due to the failure of the bridge tender to lower the gates when the drawbridge was open, where it appeared that the owner of the automobile had passed over the bridge a number of times and knew that the drawbridge was provided with gates which were lowered when the drawbridge was opened, and other safeguards were provided in the way of lights and stop signals, held that it was a question for the jury whether the driver of the automobile acted as a reasonable and prudent man would act.—Beach v. City of St. Joseph, 192 Mich. 296.

§ 333. Contributory negligence of foot travelers.

Particular questions, see also post §§ 334-336.

Questions as to contributory negligence of vehicle users, see ante §§ 328-332.

Questions in actions against private party or abutter, see post § 337.

Direct verdict on ground of contributory negligence, see post § 344.

¶ 1332. A person is not guilty, as matter of law, of contributory negligence, who is walking along a street in the night without exercising any unusual precaution or thinking of danger, when he has no knowledge of the bad condition of a sidewalk.—Pearll v. City of Bay City, 174 Mich. 643.

¶ 1333. It cannot be said as a matter of law that the plaintiff in an action for sidewalk injury was guilty of contributory negligence in running along a snow covered and wet sidewalk with both hands in his overcoat pockets.—Wilton v. City of Flint, 128 Mich. 156.

¶ 1334. The question whether a woman was negligent in stepping in the darkness from a sidewalk bed over the curb and into the gutter about 15 or 19 feet from the crosswalk, is for the jury.—Finch v. Village of Bangor, 133 Mich. 149.

¶ 1335. Contributory negligence is properly for the jury in an action against a city for personal injuries caused by stepping into a gutter, where the evidence showed that the existence of the gutter was well known to plaintiff, that it was broad daylight, that she was carrying packages which had gotten disarranged and she was arranging them, that her attention was diverted by the packages, and that she did not know that she was so near the place.—Herring v. City of St. Joseph, 137 Mich. 480.

§ 334. ——Use of defective walk or way.

Question as to voluntary use of defective or dangerous roadway by driver, see ante §§ 329-331.

¶ 1336. Previous knowledge or means of knowledge on the plaintiff's part of the defect in a street or walk which caused the injury out of which the action arose is not conclusive evidence of negligence; and where the question is in doubt it should go to the jury.—Dundas v. City of Lansing, 75 Mich. 499; Argus v. Village of Sturgis, 86 Mich. 344; Graves v. City of Battle Creek, 95 Mich. 266.

¶ 1337. It is not negligence per se for one knowing of defects in a sidewalk to attempt to pass over it.—Sias v. Reed City, 103 Mich. 312; Oesterreich v. City of Detroit, 137 Mich. 415; Hodge v. City of St. Louis, 146 Mich. 173.

¶ 1338. In an action against a city for personal injury due to a defective sidewalk the fact that the plaintiff although she knew of the defect did not have it in mind at the time of the injury raises a question of fact for the jury as to contributory negligence.—Vergin v. City of Saginaw, 125 Mich. 499.

¶ 1339. Because the plaintiff did not have her eyes upon the board at the time it cannot be said as a matter of law that she was guilty of contributory negligence where she was crossing a temporary crosswalk constructed while street improvements were being made, when she had not seen the crossing before, and walking thereon just behind her husband, she was injured by her husband stepping on a short board which sprang up and tripped her, the board which tripped her not being the one she was walking on.—Barker v. City of Kalamazoo, 146 Mich. 257.

¶ 1340. A woman, carrying her child in arms along a sidewalk whereon paving stones are scattered, and who stepping over them trips on one and stumbles and is hurt is guilty of contributory negligence as matter of law.—Grandorf v. Detroit Citizens' St. R. Co., 113 Mich. 496.

¶ 1341. In an action for injuries alleged to have been caused by a defective sidewalk, the question of contributory negligence in walking upon the walk after dark, is for the jury though plaintiff knew that the boards were accustomed to rattle when walked upon.—Styles v. Village of Decatur, 131 Mich. 443.

¶ 1342. Contributory negligence was for the jury in an action for injuries from a defective sidewalk, where the plaintiff's own testimony shows he was familiar with the walk and had used it almost daily, and that there was another street over which he could have traveled in going to his home.—Vander Velde v. Village of Leroy, 140 Mich. 359.

¶ 1343. In an action for personal injuries sustained by falling on a defective sidewalk, under the instruction given the court did not err in submitting the question of contributory negligence to the jury upon the theory that plaintiff had knowledge of the defective condition of the sidewalk, whereas the defendant's whole case, on the question of contributory negligence, was based upon the theory that on the night of the accident she could, by the exercise of ordinary care, have avoided the accident.—Proulx v. Bay City, 143 Mich. 550.

¶ 1344. Plaintiff approached a certain crosswalk of defendant city. She noticed that some of the boards were broken and that there were holes in it. She told her little girl to wait behind as there was not room for both of them to cross without falling into a hole. Plaintiff stepped upon an apparently sound board in order to step across the hole. The board gave way, and she was injured. Held, she was not as a matter of law guilty of contributory negligence.—O'Connor v. City of Detroit, 160 Mich. 193.

¶ 1345. Plaintiff was injured while walking on certain boards placed by a contractor of the defendant city on the curb at a crossing, and running down into the street, which was excavated preparatory to being paved. Under the evidence the manner of the plaintiff's injury was in dispute. Held, the question of her contributory negligence was for the jury.—Hughes v. City of Detroit, 161 Mich. 283.

§ 335. ——Avoidance of holes, breaks and defects.

By drivers in roadway, see also ante §§ 329-331.

¶ 1346. Plaintiff's contributory negligence in using a sidewalk in which there were holes is a question for the jury.—Wolverton v. Village of Saranac, 171 Mich. 419.

¶ 1347. Where, in an action for injuries received by stepping into a hole in a sidewalk, it appears that the accident occurred in broad daylight, that the defect was plainly visible, and that plaintiff had been accustomed to pass the place at least once a week, and had never noticed the defect, which according to her theory was of long standing, the question of her contributory negligence should be submitted to the jury, although she further testifies that she was exercising ordinary care and caution, and walking quietly along the street.—Mackie v. City of West Bay City, 106 Mich. 242.

¶ 1348. A pedestrian, perfectly familiar with the existing conditions, is, as a matter of law, guilty of contributory negligence, precluding a recovery for injuries sustained by falling from the side of a walk unguarded by a rail into an excavation, during the night time, where, instead of guiding himself by the rail on the other side, he directed his course by a light, which proved not to be the one he supposed it to be.—Church v. Village of Howard City, 111 Mich. 298.

¶ 1349. One is not necessarily precluded from recovering for injury caused by a defect in a highway simply because he was aware of such defect, but this fact, with all others, is proper to be taken into consideration by the jury in determining whether, under all of the facts and circumstances, he was guilty of carelessness or negligence without which he would not have been injured. So held, where plaintiff, who on a dark and stormy night had been injured by stepping into a hole in a defective sidewalk, testified that she knew of the bad place in the walk; that on passing over it earlier in the evening, she spoke of it to two girls who were with her; that on her return she said to the girls, "We will have to look out for that bad place in the walk"; that she was walking on the outside of the walk, and her companions on the inside; that they all walked somewhat rapidly in that way until she stepped into the hole; and that she was paying attention to the defect in the walk, and was watching for it, but reached it sooner than she expected.—Sias v. City of Reed City, 103 Mich. 312.

¶ 1350. A boy ten years of age, who is injured, while running upon a sidewalk, by stepping into a hole therein, of the existence of which he has knowledge, is not guilty of contributory negligence, as a matter of law, but it is for the jury to say whether he used such care and discretion as boys of his age usually exercise under like circumstances.—Strudgeon v. Village of Sand Beach, 107 Mich. 496.

¶ 1351. In an action for personal injury caused by a defective sidewalk testimony that the plaintiff stepped into a small hole in the sidewalk, that he and others were accustomed to walk over this sidewalk daily, that the hole was filled with leaves and dirt, and that the nearest electric light, if it was burning, was 300 ft. distant is sufficient to justify leaving the question of contributory negligence to the jury.—Kopelka v. City of Bay City, 125 Mich. 625.

¶ 1352. In an action against a city for a sidewalk injury, the question of contributory negligence of the plaintiff is properly left to the jury on evidence that the plaintiff on returning from work slipped in the hole in the sidewalk and was injured, that having passed over the sidewalk many times, and knowing its dilapidated condition she was walking slowly "picking her way along" to avoid the dangerous places, that there were other sidewalks not quite so convenient and she could have avoided the danger by walking on the ground alongside the walk, and that the evening was dark and the electric light half a block away.—Barnes v. City of West Bay City, 138 Mich. 93.

¶ 1353. Want of care as a matter of law is not shown, in an action for personal injury caused by a defective walk, by testimony that plaintiff might have seen the hole in the walk had she looked for it and if she had not been carrying anything, and that a plank tipped up and then she fell into the hole, since though she might have seen the holes and avoided them, it does not follow that she was in fault in not discovering that the plank would tip up and cause her to fall.—Oesterreich v. City of Detroit, 137 Mich. 415.

§ 336. ——Deviation from traveled part of walk or way.

¶ 1354. The mere fact that plaintiff made use of a customary path crossing a street instead of the crosswalk, at night, did not, as a matter of law, render him guilty of contributory negligence respecting a manhole into which he fell.—Baker v. City of Grand Rapids, 111 Mich. 447.

¶ 1355. Contributory negligence of a pedestrian is for the jury on evidence that the plaintiff instead of following the crosswalks went upon a man-hole at the intersection of and just outside the walks in attempting to cross the street diagonally and was injured by the tipping of the cover, and where there was testimony that he was intoxicated, which he denied on cross-examination.—Lincoln v. City of Detroit, 101 Mich. 245.

§ 337. Contribution to negligence of private party or abutter.

As to overhanging or falling objects, see post § 338.

Questions of law and fact generally in actions against abutters and private persons for highway injuries, see ante § 317 et seq.

Questions as to contributory negligence in actions against the public, see ante §§ 328-336.

¶ 1356. In a suit for personal injuries against a paving contractor for leaving a public street unguarded at night, resulting in injuries to plaintiff, the question of contributory negligence is for the jury.—Williams v. Sager, 165 Mich. 635.

¶ 1357. Where, in an action for a personal injury, the evidence shows that defendant took up a sidewalk and dug a ditch across and left it exposed at night, and that plaintiff stepped off the walk upon the ground and then fell into the ditch, it being very dark, the case should not be taken from the jury on the ground of contributory negligence.—Flater v. Fey, 70 Mich. 644.

¶ 1358. Whether one who, in passing along a sidewalk, and while absorbed in watching the workmen in an excavation being made from the street into an area under the sidewalk, walks into a manhole left open for the purpose of hoisting through it the material excavated from the area, not seeing a barrel which had been placed beside the manhole as a means of guarding it, is guilty of contributory negligence, is a question for the jury.—Le Beau v. Telephone & T. Const. Co., 109 Mich. 302.

¶ 1359. Where the danger is not clearly obvious, a person will not be guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law in attempting to drive across a known depression in a city street even though such depression could be avoided.—Sherman v. Consumers' Power Co., 199 Mich. 543.

¶ 1360. Whether, in attempting to drive across a known depression in a city street, plaintiff, suing the lighting company responsible for the defect for personal injuries sustained, was guilty of contributory negligence held, in view of the evidence, to have been a question of fact.—Sherman v. Consumers' Power Co., 199 Mich. 543.

¶ 1361. Contributory negligence is for the jury in an action for injury to a paving foreman caused by the fall of a telephone pole which was being removed from the street, 35 feet from where he was working, it appearing that no warning was given him by the company and the evidence being conflicting as to whether he was aware of the danger.—Kyes v. Valley Tel. Co., 132 Mich. 281.

¶ 1362. Where a gang of telephone employees was stringing a cable through a snatch block operated intermittently by a team of horses a block away the question as to whether a seven-year-old child is guilty of contributory negligence in approaching and putting his hand on the block while it is not being operated is one for the jury.—O'Leary v. Michigan State Tel. Co., 146 Mich. 243.

¶ 1363. Where a thirteen-year-old boy was struggling in the street with another boy for the possession of swimming trunks, and fell into a pool of hot water discharged into the street by defendant railway company, the question of whether plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence was for the jury.—Curtis v. Grand Trunk Ry. Co. of Canada, 178 Mich. 382.

§ 338. ——Overhanging and falling objects.

¶ 1364. In an action for injuries to a horse through striking a sagging telephone wire in a street, while being driven at a pace of 12 miles an hour, the question whether such a pace was unusual or dangerous is one for the jury in the absence of proof that the pace was dangerous.—Hovey v. Michigan Telephone Co., 124 Mich. 607.

¶ 1365. In an action for injuries to a horse going at about twelve miles an hour, running into a telephone wire which in being carried across a street sagged near the ground, it is a question for the jury to say whether plaintiff had reason to expect and should have seen the obstruction, knowing that defendant was then stringing wires.—Hovey v. Michigan Telephone Co., 124 Mich. 607.

¶ 1366. In a personal injury case it appeared that the defendant company was stringing wires along the road in front of the plaintiff's premises, that trees had been felled on the plaintiff's premises for the purpose of clearing the way, that while the plaintiff was engaged in removing the trees he drove his horses over slack wires which a short time later were drawn up by the lineman farther up the road and that the plaintiff in attempting to hold the wires down to get the team out of danger was thrown down and injured. Held, error to instruct the jury, that as a matter of law, the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence.—Balderson v. Portland Tel. Co., 173 Mich. 412.

¶ 1367. Plaintiff, employed by a carpenter contractor, was on a scaffold working on a bay window. One Bishop, employed by defendant painting contractors, was painting on a ladder resting at the top against the edge of the roof of the bay window. The wind was blowing. Bishop left the ladder to change his paints and the ladder blew down and injured plaintiff. Plaintiff testified that while he knew Bishop was engaged about his painting job, he was busy with his own duties and paid little attention to him. Held, plaintiff was not as a matter of law guilty of contributory negligence.—Haxer v. Griessel, 162 Mich. 310.

§ 339. Directing verdict.

See also ante ¶ 1262.
On particular questions and grounds, see post §§ 340-344.
What constitutes material variance between allegations and proof, see ante § 277.
Weight and sufficiency of evidence, see ante § 298.
General law of directing verdict, see Directing Verdict.

¶ 1368. Plaintiff, while passing over a sidewalk in the defendant city, was tripped by a loose section of the planking, and sustained injuries for which she brought suit. Upon the trial she produced witnesses who testified that, at the place where the accident occurred, a board in the walk was split diagonally from one end, so as to leave a pointed piece of the plank, too short to reach both stringers, fastened only at one end, and liable to fly up when stepped on at the outer end, which projected nearly a foot over the edge of the stringer. One witness testified that he knew that the split had existed for a month before the accident, because he had tripped there one night himself. On cross-examination this witness stated that no one, who did not know that the board was loose, would notice it; but there were other witnesses who testified that the defect was plainly visible. The circuit judge directed a verdict for defendant, on the ground that the defect was not such a one as would attract attention, and that the city was not negligent in not discovering it. Held, that the question of notice should have gone to the jury.—Menard v. City of Bay City, 114 Mich. 450.

¶ 1369. Where, in an action to recover for injuries caused by a defective sidewalk defendant claims the defect was caused by driving a heavily loaded wagon over the walk two days before the accident, and that it did not have notice of the defect, and where there is testimony that the accident occurred at a point east of where the wagon passed, it is not error to refuse to direct a verdict for defendant based on the assumption that the "undisputed" evidence showed a recent defect made by the wagon.—Butts v. City of Eaton Rapids, 116 Mich. 539.

¶ 1370. One Maynard, a licensed plumber, opened a street with the commissioner's permission to connect a private sewer. He left the ditch open at night without danger signals. One Collins discovered the ditch and warned the police. Before the arrival of the police, who acted promptly, to place the signals, plaintiff was injured in the ditch. Held, a directed verdict for defendant city should be reversed.—Bonneville v. City of Alpena, 158 Mich. 279. (Brooke, J., dissenting.)

¶ 1371. Three wooden steps were a part of the defendant village's sidewalk. The risers were decayed, as were also the two inch steps, and the city had nailed upon the steps some one-inch boards over the rotted places. Plaintiff was injured while stepping on the space between a one-inch board and the riser by the giving way of the step board. The city had condemned the walk prior to the accident, and knew of the defects. Held, it was error to direct a verdict for the defendant, as the question of negligence was for the jury.—Seeger v. Village of Hart, 160 Mich. 134.

¶ 1372. The refusal of the trial court to direct a verdict for defendant in an action against a city for injuries due to a defective sidewalk on the ground that the walk was reasonably safe was not reversible error where there was evidence that the depression in the walk causing the accident was three or four inches, and the court instructed the jury that defendant was not liable unless plaintiff was injured as the result of a depression of at least two inches.—Wadkins v. City of Albion, 201 Mich. 130.

¶ 1373. In an action for damages against a township based on the fact that while plaintiff was moving his threshing outfit and in passing over a fill in the highway, the separator slid into a ditch and was overturned, there being no evidence that the fill at the point where the accident occurred was not in a condition reasonably safe and convenient for public travel, it is error to deny defendant's motion to direct a verdict.—Canfield v. Township of Gun Plains, 175 Mich. 379.

§ 340. ——Snow and ice conditions.

Conditions as questions of law or fact, see ante § 314.

¶ 1374. In an action against a city for injuries sustained by falling on the ice on a sidewalk, evidence of the existence of a depression in the walk which caused water to collect, and that the liquid from a garbage can had flowed across the walk in this place for several years, is sufficient to reverse a directed verdict and judgment for the defendant.—Navarre v. City of Benton Harbor, 126 Mich. 618.

¶ 1375. Testimony of a road foreman to the effect that six hours before the accident there was no ridge of ice in the street, is not sufficient to justify a verdict directed in favor of defendant, a city, especially where witnesses for plaintiff testify that there was such a ridge, and that plaintiff slipped upon it.—Bowen v. City of Detroit, 150 Mich. 546.

¶ 1376. The defendant city built a cinder foundation for a cement walk, and left it incomplete during the winter. During snowy and icy weather, plaintiff slipped on the ice collected on the cinder walk, which had become roughened, fell, and injured herself. Held, that the trial court properly directed a verdict for the city.—Pringle v. City of Detroit, 152 Mich. 445.

¶ 1377. Defendant township's public road crossed a ravine. Defendant constructed an embankment across the ravine from dirt thrown up from the land lying near the highway. The embankment was rolling in shape, with only about two feet to spare at either side of each wagon track. No railing was provided and the embankment was some five feet high at the culvert. The hind runners of plaintiff's sled slipped on the snow and ice covering the embankment while crossing same, slid off into the ravine, and plaintiff was injured by the overturning of the sled caused by the striking of the runners against the culvert. Held, the trial court erred in directing a verdict for defendant, since the questions as to whether the roadway was reasonably safe for travel, whether the driver of the horses was negligent, and whether the proximate cause of the injury was the icy and slippery condition of the road, should have been submitted to the jury.—Stanton v. Township of Webster, 170 Mich. 428.

§ 341. ——In actions against private parties.

Questions of law and fact, see ante § 317 et seq.

¶ 1378. The action of the trial court in directing a verdict for defendant in a suit for injuries sustained by falling upon an icy sidewalk was held to have been erroneous, in that the evidence offered by plaintiff as to defendant's negligence in failing to keep his eave troughs in repair, thereby permitting an accumulation of ice, raised a question of fact for the jury.—Howey v. Fisher, 111 Mich. 422.

¶ 1379. In a suit for personal injuries caused by falling glass, the trial court properly refuses to instruct for a verdict for defendant on the ground that there is no evidence of negligence, where a witness testifies that defendant as agent of the premises in question permitted the glass in the window of a building to remain for a long time in such a broken condition as to be likely to fall down upon passers-by.—Bannigan v. Woodbury, 166 Mich. 491.

§ 342. ——On want of proof of cause of injury.

¶ 1380. In an action against water commissioners for damages, brought by a person injured through being thrown out of his wagon, as the result, according to his claim, of a jolt, when the wheels struck a ridge of earth left after the laying of water pipes along a street near a railroad, if it is shown that the ridge was eighteen feet from the railroad and that the plaintiff was about to cross the track when his team became frightened and started, and it is not shown what caused the jolt or frightened the team it is proper to direct a verdict for the defendant. —Westfall v. Board of Water Commissioners of Detroit, 93 Mich. 211.

¶ 1381. In an action to recover from a township damages for injuries sustained by plaintiff in falling from his bicycle and over the edge of a culvert on a highway, which it is alleged defendant failed to keep in repair, a verdict was properly directed for defendant where it appeared that the accident was caused, not by a hole in the road, nor the narrowness of the culvert or approaches, but by reason of the bicycle slewing in the sand, or striking a stone, or in some manner undisclosed getting out of plaintiff's control, and throwing him over the bridge.—Briggs v. Township of Pine River, 150 Mich. 381.

§ 343. ——On contributory negligence of vehicle user.

Questions of law and fact as to contributory negligence, see ante § 328 et seq.

¶ 1382. A horse that was driven on a trot was permanently injured by stepping on a cobblestone of which there were several scattered about the street, and there was evidence that they could be seen by the driver. An action against the city for the injury was taken from the jury. Upon review the supreme court was equally divided and the result was not disturbed.—McCool v. City of Grand Rapids, 58 Mich. 41.

¶ 1383. In an action against a municipal corporation to recover damages for personal injuries sustained by plaintiff while driving in a buggy which collided with a wagon having no light thereon standing on a public street of defendant, where there was evidence tending to support defendant's claim that certain conditions were such that due care on plaintiff's part would have discovered such wagon and also evidence tending to sustain plaintiff's claim that certain other conditions were such as to charge defendant with a duty to hang out a danger signal, held the testimony presented issues of fact and motion to direct a verdict for defendant was properly denied.—Hall v. City of Flint, 195 Mich. 688.

§ 344. ——On contributory negligence of pedestrian.

Questions of law and fact as to contributory negligence of pedestrian, see also ante § 333.

¶ 1384. In an action against a city for injuries caused by a defective crosswalk, verdict for defendant should be directed on the ground of contributory negligence where plaintiff's testimony shows that she knew of the bad condition of the walk, that it was light enough to see it, that she knew she must exercise a great deal of care, and that she took the chance of going over safely there being a safe way within a few feet of the walk in question.—Irion v. City of Saginaw, 120 Mich. 295.

¶ 1385. Where the plaintiff who knew a street was being paved, walked at a crossing in the nighttime and while looking at a team instead of where he was going fell into an excavation, contributory negligence appeared on plaintiff's own testimony and a verdict should have been directed for the city.—Cloney v. City of Kalamazoo, 124 Mich. 655.

¶ 1386. Verdict for defendant should not be directed, in an action against a village for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by a defective sidewalk, on the ground of contributory negligence though it appeared by plaintiff's testimony that he knew of the defect several weeks before the injury, where it also appeared that he knew that repairs had recently been made in the vicinity and that he believed that the defect had been remedied.—Hunter v. Village of Durand, 137 Mich. 53.

¶ 1387. In an action for personal injuries sustained through the alleged defective condition of a walk, the defense being contributory negligence, where the want of care is not established as a matter of law the matter should be placed before the jury and it is error to direct a verdict.—Lewis v. City of Marshall, 146 Mich. 389.

¶ 1388. In a suit against a township for personal injuries sustained through its negligence in leaving a ditch open in a public road, the plaintiff testified that in approaching the road by a path she lost her direction and while in a confused state of mind stumbled along in the darkness. In another part of her testimony she stated that though confused at the time, she thought she knew where she was just before falling into the ditch. Held, the court properly refused to direct a verdict in favor of the defendant on the ground that plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence in continuing the walk when she was confused as to her whereabouts, such question being for the jury. —Hunt v. Township of Douglass, 165 Mich. 187.

¶ 1389. The fact that the plaintiff knew that there were holes in the gravel walk which she was traversing, and that she had this defect in mind at the time of her injury, caused by stepping into one of the holes, does not change the question of her negligence from one of fact to one of law, and justify the trial court in directing a verdict.—Wolverton v. Village of Saranac, 171 Mich. 419.

¶ 1390. Plaintiff was crossing a bridge running north and south. There was evidence that just as he was stepping off the north end of the bridge, his attention was distracted by a whistle, and he stepped into a depression fifteen inches deep, and sustained an injury; that he did not notice the depression until he was just stepping into it; and that the depression was caused by the rotting out of a crosswalk which had partially been replaced by cinders. Held, the court was in error in directing a verdict for defendant on the ground of the contributory negligence of plaintiff.—Willard v. City of Detroit, 164 Mich. 241.

5. Instructions.

Questions for the court and jury respectively, see ante XII, H, 4.

§ 345. Necessity and sufficiency in general.

As to duty and negligence respecting roadways, see post §§ 346-350.

As to duty and negligence in respect to walks and crosswalks, see post §§ 351-354.

As to construction and maintenance of bridges and culverts, see post §§ 355, 356.

In actions against abutters and private persons, see post § 357.

As to proximate cause, see post § 358.

As to contributory negligence, see post §§ 359-362.

Directing verdict, see ante § 339 et seq.

General law of instructions and necessity and sufficiency of cautionary and general instructions not peculiar to highway injury cases, see Instructions.

Erroneous comments by judge in course of trial, see Trial, II.

Instructions in bridge cases, see also Bridges § 21.

¶ 1391. In an action for damages for personal injuries to an equestrian resulting from being thrown from his horse, stumbling on the highway, where the testimony conflicts as to whether the horse stepped into a visible hole in the surface or whether a river had so disintegrated the bed of the road as to leave a crust of earth which the horse broke through, it is error to refuse to charge that if the hole did not exist before the accident, but was made at the time of the accident by plaintiff's horse, and there was nothing on the road's surface to give notice that the water underneath was eating away a hole, then plaintiff could not recover.—Wakeham v. Township of St. Clair, 91 Mich. 15.

¶ 1392. Where the declaration and the plaintiff's evidence in an action for a sidewalk injury are based upon his having been injured while walking at a certain place on a sidewalk, the defendant is entitled to an instruction that if he was injured while riding his bicycle on the sidewalk he could not recover, upon evidence to support that theory.—Callahan v. City of Port Huron, 128 Mich. 673.

¶ 1393. In the case of injury by plaintiff's wagon overturning at a washed out place in the road while trying to pass around it on the side, the question to be submitted to the jury was whether the defect which caused the accident was such that it rendered the highway not reasonably safe and fit for travel, and an instruction to the effect that people sometimes get hurt when nobody is to blame, in which case there is no redress, was erroneous, as tending to obscure the issue.—Handy v. Township of Meridian, 114 Mich. 454.

¶ 1394. In an action for personal injuries sustained by running an automobile into an excavation in the street an instruction which assumes that certain lights were back of the curb, where there was convincing testimony that they were not, is prejudicial because the jury would naturally infer that the trial judge believed the lights were at the curb, or at least remote from the center of the street.—Karrer v. City of Detroit, 142 Mich. 331.

§ 346. As to duty and negligence respecting safety of roadways.

As to fright of horses, see post § 347.
As to protection of openings, holes, draw bridges, etc., see post § 348.
As to dangerous wires, see post § 349.
As to notice or knowledge, see post § 350.
As to walks and crosswalks, see post §§ 351-354.
As to bridges and culverts, see post §§ 355, 356.

¶ 1395. An instruction that the law imposing on townships the duty of keeping public highways in a reasonably safe condition for public travel must be "construed reasonably, taking into consideration that townships must perform their duties by means of public officers," is improper, as justifying the inference that, because the township is obliged to act through officers, its negligence in the performance of a duty imposed by statute in plain and unambiguous terms may be excused under circumstances that would not excuse such negligence in an individual.—Handy v. Township of Meridian, 114 Mich. 454.

¶ 1396. In an action against a township for death resulting from a defective highway, it is error to instruct the jury that defendant was obliged to make an approach to a fill "straight and level," or a particular embankment "of a safe width and level," or to construct barriers on its sides.—Lamb v. Township of Clam Lake, 175 Mich. 77.

§ 347. ——As to fright of horses.

¶ 1397. The instructions in an action against a township for injuries sustained by a traveler's horse becoming frightened at building materials left by the township beside a highway for use in a nearby bridge, held as favorable as the plaintiff could require.—Boos v. Township of Northfield, 186 Mich. 386, 12 N. C. C. A. 145.

§ 348. ——As to protecting openings, excavations, draw bridges, etc.

¶ 1398. In an action for personal injury against a city a request to charge that a city ordinance as a matter of law obligated the city to guard an excavation is properly refused as the ordinance at most affords only evidence of negligence.—Sterling v. City of Detroit, 134 Mich. 22.

¶ 1399. In an action against a city for the death of a bicyclist while riding through an open draw at night and drowning, refusal to instruct that if the deceased rode over the draw because of the absence of the chain which he was looking for, plaintiff was entitled to recover, is not error where the request for such charge left out other circumstances.—Benedict v. City of Port Huron, 124 Mich. 600.

¶ 1400. In an action against a city for the death of a bicyclist by his riding on a moonlight night into an open draw and drowning, where the proof showed that the deceased knew he was approaching a place that might be dangerous, the refusal of a request to instruct the jury that the deceased had a right to assume that the city would do its duty in the premises, was not error when coupled with the implication that the deceased was under no obligation to look for danger if he could not reasonably be expected to see or expect that the draw was open.—Benedict v. City of Port Huron, 124 Mich. 600.

¶ 1401. In an action against a city for the death of a bicyclist by riding at night through an open drawbridge and drowning, it was not error for the court to fail to call the attention of the jury to differences in the condition of the bridge and surroundings at the time of the accident from those existing at the time of the trial, where the request and the jury could not have failed to understand, if possessed of ordinary intelligence, that it was the condition upon the former and not the latter occasion that they were considering.—Benedict v. City of Port Huron, 124 Mich. 600.

§ 349. ——Danger from electric wires.

Instructions in cases of personal injury from electricity, see also Electricity § 11.

¶ 1402. Plaintiff's intestate was killed while grasping a "hanger" wire used to raise and lower the electric street light. Plaintiff requested an instruction that the intestate was entitled to presume the wire safe to handle, and, in the absence of knowledge of danger on his part, was not obliged, in order to escape contributory negligence, to look out for any danger. Held, this instruction was properly refused as casting a duty on the defendant to warn the intestate of danger likely to arise from the latter's interference with the former's plant, and also because there was evidence that plaintiff's intestate had been warned of the danger.—Charette v. Village of L'Anse, 154 Mich. 304.

¶ 1403. Plaintiff's intestate was killed by grasping a "hanger" wire used to raise and lower an electric street light. The court instructed that the defendant village owed no duty to station an officer at each pole, or to inclose the pole so that the wire could not be reached by anybody, but that the question was whether, having placed the wire out of ordinary reach, a reasonably careful man would have thought it necessary to take further precautions. Held, this instruction, taken with others, was proper.—Charette v. Village of L'Anse, 154 Mich. 304.

¶ 1404. Plaintiff's intestate, a boy of fourteen, was killed by an electric shock while taking hold of a "hanger" wire used to raise and lower the electric street light. There was evidence that certain other boys and young men were known occasionally to have operated this wire. Held, that an instruction that under the evidence, as a matter of law, a custom did not exist among the inhabitants of the defendant village giving a right to operate the wire, was proper.—Charette v. Village of L'Anse, 154 Mich. 304.

§ 350. ——Knowledge or notice of defect or condition.

Instructions as to notice of defective walks, see post § 353.

Instructions as to notice of defective bridges and culverts, see post § 356.

¶ 1405. In an action for injuries caused by a defect in a highway which had existed for a sufficient length of time to charge the township officers with notice, it was error to instruct the jury that there was a question for their consideration as to whether the defect was such that the township officers, "by reason of investigation," should have seen it.—Handy v. Township of Meridian, 114 Mich. 454.

§ 351. As to duty and negligence respecting safety of walks.

As to plan and construction, see post § 352.

As to inspection and notice of defect, see post § 353.

As to opportunity to make safe, see post § 354.

Instructions as to duty and negligence respecting roads, see ante §§ 346-350.

Questions of law and fact as to condition and safety of walks, see ante § 312.

¶ 1406. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 3443, requiring municipalities to keep their sidewalks in reasonable repair and in addition reasonably safe and fit for travel, it is error to instruct the jury that the municipality is required to keep its sidewalks in good repair and safe and convenient for public travel.—Phalen v. City of Detroit, 126 Mich. 683.

¶ 1407. In an action against a city for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by stepping into a hole in the sidewalk, an instruction that "the law requires the city to keep its sidewalks in suitable repair, so that persons traveling over them, exercising ordinary care, may do so with safety," is error since it fixes a higher standard than is required by Comp. L. 1897, § 3441, which requires reasonable repair and a condition reasonably safe and fit for public travel.—Caldwell v. City of Detroit, 137 Mich. 667.

¶ 1408. The statement in the charge to the jury in a personal injury case against a city, that a city is bound to make safe all of its sidewalks, standing alone, applies too stringent a rule.—Renaud v. City of Bay City, 124 Mich. 29.

¶ 1409. An instruction in an action against a city for injuries alleged to have been caused by a defective sidewalk, which imposes a higher degree of care upon the city than is required by statute, is error though the testimony given by plaintiff is undisputed, since the question of reasonable repair and reasonable safety is for the jury, except in cases altogether free from doubt.—Caldwell v. City of Detroit, 137 Mich. 667.

¶ 1410. In an action for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by a defective sidewalk upon which plaintiff was walking after dark, it is not error to instruct that it is the duty of a village to keep its sidewalks in a condition reasonably safe and fit for travel by night as well as by day.—Styles v. Village of Decatur, 131 Mich. 443.

¶ 1411. Where the injury to a pedestrian took place on a man-hole cover at the intersection of sidewalks but just outside them, a charge was misleading which told the jury that it was "the duty of the city to keep that manhole in just as safe condition as the sidewalk itself"; for it may have induced the jury to believe that a man-hole cover and its supports must be as smooth and even as the walk designed for pedestrians.—Lincoln v. City of Detroit, 101 Mich. 245.

¶ 1412. In an action against a village for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by a defective sidewalk, it is not error to refuse an instruction which implied an obligation on the part of plaintiff to exercise more than ordinary care, where the court properly instructed as to contributory negligence and reasonable and ordinary care.—Hunter v. Village of Durand, 137 Mich. 53.

¶ 1413. Incorrect statements of the rule of liability of the city for defective sidewalks, taken without their context in the charge, are not error, where the remainder of the charge repeatedly states that the city is not an insurer of travelers and requires only that it keep its walks reasonably safe for ordinary travel.—Hendershott v. City of Grand Rapids, 142 Mich. 140.

¶ 1414. It is not error for the court to refuse to instruct the jury, in a suit for injuries received by reason of a defective sidewalk, to the effect that defendant city, with 300 miles of sidewalk, would not be held to as great diligence in caring for them as a small village would be.—Moore v. City of Kalamazoo, 109 Mich. 176.

¶ 1415. In an action for personal injuries against the city, an instruction that "if under the circumstances as they appeared and as detailed to you the plaintiff may not have deemed it to be unsafe and dangerous to walk on and he thought it was proper and suitable for him to walk over and you find he was justified in using it as he did, then that place having remained there so long it was the duty of the city to have put it in repair; and the city so far as that is concerned, not having put it in repair, in case a person is injured without fault on their part, the city is liable," when taken in connection with other instructions is not open for objection that the jury would infer that the plaintiff was the one to decide whether the sidewalk was safe.—Kopelka v. City of Bay City, 125 Mich. 625.

§ 352. ——Plan and construction.

¶ 1416. Municipal liability for injury cannot be predicated upon the manner of the connection of a crosswalk and sidewalk, and instructions leaving the proper manner of construction of a crosswalk to the jury, and holding that any walk not safe for children is unlawful, are erroneous.—Shippy v. Village of Au Sable, 65 Mich. 494.

¶ 1417. A jury is properly instructed as a matter of law that an inequality of two inches or less in a sidewalk does not render it not reasonably safe for public travel. (Ostrander, C. J., Bird and Moore, JJ., dissenting.)—Baker v. City of Detroit, 166 Mich. 597.

§ 353. ——Inspection or notice of defect.

Instructions as to notice of defective roadways, see ante § 350.

Questions of law and fact as to notice of defective walks, see ante § 324.

¶ 1418. In an action for an injury from a defective sidewalk it is error to assume, in instructing the jury, that it is the municipality's duty to make such an inspection of sidewalks as would disclose latent defects if any existed. In the absence of actual notice the liability is only for such defects in sidewalks as are apparent, or are suggested by appearances, or as are disclosed by a test in the ordinary use of such walks.—Hembling v. City of Grand Rapids, 99 Mich. 292.

¶ 1419. Where, in an action for injuries caused by a defective sidewalk, defendant requests a charge that if its street commissioner, shortly before the accident, went over the walk and examined it carefully and did not see the defect, then he used due care and diligence and defendant is not liable, it is proper to add the instruction that the jury may consider all the testimony as to the previous existence of the defect in determining whether such officer used due care.—Tice v. Bay City, 84 Mich. 461.

¶ 1420. In an action for an injury from a defective sidewalk, the court, after stating to the jury the rule of presumptive notice, said that it appeared that defendant had men whose duty it was to inspect the walks, and to use reasonable diligence and care to find out whether they were in a reasonably safe condition; and that if they used such care and diligence, and were unable to find the defect, or did not find it, defendant did not then have knowledge, and the plaintiff could not recover, but that if they neglected to perform these duties, defendant would be liable for the defect. Held, that the instruction meant no more than that the failure to inspect the walk, or to inspect it properly, did not prevent the application of the rule of presumptive notice.—Germaine v. City of Muskegon, 105 Mich. 213.

¶ 1421. In an action against a municipality for injuries sustained by stepping into a hole in a sidewalk, an instruction that defendant would be presumed to have had notice of the hole in the walk, if it rendered it out of reasonable repair, and had existed for from one to six months before the injury, and was of such a character as would naturally arrest the attention of persons passing by, if objectionable as determining, as a matter of law, what would be reasonable notice, is cured by a subsequent charge that, before plaintiff can recover, the jury must find that defendant, after constructive notice of such hole, had sufficient time to put it in repair, and neglected to do so.—Mulliken v. City of Corunna, 110 Mich. 212.

¶ 1422. In an action for an injury from a defective sidewalk an instruction to the jury that if the sidewalk generally was in bad condition so that an accident might happen, that was notice to the authorities, was sustained.—Grattan v. Village of Williamston, 116 Mich. 462.

¶ 1423. An instruction that defendant "had notice of the condition of the walk, whatever it was" is not erroneous under uncontradicted evidence that a witness, who lived within a few yards of the alleged defective place in the sidwalk, called the attention of the street commissioner to the condition of the walk all along the place where the hole was alleged to be, since the qualification "whatever it was" made it notice of the condition which actually existed.—Hart v. Village of New Haven, 130 Mich. 181.

¶ 1424. A charge that if a defect in a walk has existed "for quite a length of time—a month or more we will say—that would be constructive notice to the city," is error; since it is a question of fact whether it has existed long enough for that.—Hendershott v. City of Grand Rapids, 142 Mich. 140.

¶ 1425. In a suit against a city for personal injuries received in a fall alleged to have been caused by the defective condition of a crosswalk, an instruction that before the jury can find for plaintiff, it must determine that the defect was a patent one, and of such a character as to put the sidewalk in a condition not reasonably safe and fit for travel, that it had existed for so long that want of knowledge of it by the proper city officials was improbable, that the accident happened to plaintiff at that point, and that injuries resulted therefrom, is proper, and is all that defendant is entitled to on the question of constructive notice and latent defects.—Abbott v. City of Detroit, 150 Mich. 245.

§ 354. ——Opportunity to make safe.

Instructions as to opportunity to repair bridges and culverts, see post § 356.

¶ 1426. Where a city is sued for injuries caused by a defective sidewalk, it is proper to charge that in order to return a verdict for plaintiff the jury must find that defendant had reasonable time to make repairs after notice of the defect and had not used reasonable diligence.—Fuller v. City of Jackson, 82 Mich. 480.

¶ 1427. In an action against a village for injuries occasioned by a defective sidewalk it appeared that defendant had been incorporated for about fifteen months, and had collected a tax for village purposes, and that the failure to repair was caused by the street commissioner's neglect to notify the abutting owner. Held not error to refuse to charge that defendant lacked the time and means or had used due diligence to make repairs.—Lombar v. Village of East Tawas, 86 Mich. 14.

¶ 1428. Where a horse which had been fastened to a plank in a sidewalk jerked it out of place just as plaintiff came along, so that the latter was hurt, it was misleading for the court to instruct the jury that the city's obligation was to repair "speedily"; there being no showing of actual notice to the city, and no pretense that a reasonable time to repair had elapsed, while the time required to operate as constructive notice was insufficient.—Hembling v. City of Grand Rapids, 99 Mich. 292.

§ 355. Construction and maintenance of bridges and culverts.

On opportunity to make safe, see post § 354.
Questions of law and fact as to condition and safety of bridges and culverts, see ante § 321.

¶ 1429. In an action for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by the defective condition of a bridge, the fact that the court in the charge to the jury recognized the failure to erect railings for the bridge, which was only 3½ feet high and from 12 to 14 feet wide and 8 feet long, as negligence, is not reversible error where such instruction was immediately followed by one which limited the right to recover upon a finding relative to a hole in the bridge.—Bratfisch v. Township of Mason, 120 Mich. 323.

¶ 1430. In an action for injuries to a threshing engine through the collapse of a bridge, an instruction concluding with the words "There is something left at least that you can remember; that the engine went down and was injured; that the bridge gave way; that they were starting to use considerable caution by putting planks across, making it double plank floor; how the engine went off; how the bridge gave way; and all about it. That is something that we must leave to the judgment of eleven men" is erroneous as liable to create a wrong impression as to what would establish the defendant's negligence.—Coan v. Township of Brownstown, 126 Mich. 626.

§ 356. ——Notice and opportunity to repair.

¶ 1431. Where the testimony was conflicting as to whether, for a long time prior to an accident, a bridge had been out of repair at the place where the accident occurred, and some recent repairs had been made, it was proper for the court to direct the jury's attention to the precise place in controversy, and to the disputed question whether it had been repaired there as bearing on notice of the defect.—Merkle v. Township of Bennington, 68 Mich. 133.

¶ 1432. A charge of the court that proximity of a highway commissioner's residence to a bridge claimed to be defective is evidence tending to show notice on the township's part of the dangerous condition is not objectionable.—La Duke v. Township of Exeter, 97 Mich. 450.

¶ 1433. A statement, in a charge to the jury, of the law governing actual notice, of which there was no evidence, in an action for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by a defective bridge, is not reversible error where it was immediately followed by instructions regarding constructive notice upon which the jury alone could base their verdict.—Bratfisch v. Township of Mason, 120 Mich. 323.

¶ 1434. In an action against a township for personal injuries caused by an engine which broke through a bridge, requests to charge as to latent defects not being notice to the township are properly refused where it appeared that the township officers had notice and claim to have given the information to plaintiff.—Comstock v. Township of Georgetown, 137 Mich. 541.

¶ 1435. An instruction in an action for injuries sustained from a defect in a bridge, which implies that township officers when crossing the bridge, should have observed defects which an ordinary traveler would not have noticed, held erroneous.—Whitford v. Township of Washington, 184 Mich. 422.

§ 357. In actions against private persons and abutters.

¶ 1436. In a suit for personal injuries caused by falling glass, where the negligence alleged by the declaration is that defendant permitted the windows to get out of repair, and with knowledge of their condition permitted them to remain out of repair, it is improper for the court to give an instruction setting out the defendant's duty to inspect the premises.—Bannigan v. Woodbury, 166 Mich. 491.

¶ 1437. In a suit for personal injuries arising from the falling of materials from a building in process of construction by defendants, plaintiff testified that he was passing by the building at the time of the injury along the sidewalk in the public streets, and when he came to the alley running back of the building he did not enter said alley, but turned out towards the middle of the street. His declaration alleged that he was injured while entering said alley, and was orally amended at the trial to conform to his testimony. Held, the trial court erred in submitting to the jury a theory that plaintiff might recover even though he was entering into said alley at the time of the accident.—Brown v. Bryant, 166 Mich. 180.

¶ 1438. In a suit for personal injuries arising from the falling of materials from a building in the course of construction, plaintiff's evidence and the circumstances of the case tended to show that certain false work was in position; that the hoisting of material from the ground to the places where it was needed was a method used by the defendant in the process of construction; that the tearing loose of portions of the false work was not an accompaniment of the hoisting of material and was not intended to take place; that such tearing loose was due to some fault or mismanagement either in the manner in which the false work was constructed, or in which the hoisting was carried on; that it was the duty of certain employees of the defendant to keep materials which were being hoisted away from the openings in the building and away from the walls, and when the material reached a proper elevation to pull or swing it into the building; that the particular material which was being hoisted was improperly handled in this respect by said employees; and that while it was ascending under power from the steam engine it caught and tore loose some of the false work which, with the material being hoisted, fell to the ground. No evidence was introduced by defendant tending to prove that the hoisting upon this occasion was properly done. Held, the court properly instructed the jury that the defendant was negligent.—Brown v. Bryant, 166 Mich. 180.

¶ 1439. In an action against a street railroad company for damages for personal injuries due to falling into an excavation made by the defendant in the course of the construction of its track, an instruction on the liability of the defendant for negligence, where the street was rendered dangerous because of storms, held proper.—Norris v. Detroit United Ry., 193 Mich. 578.

§ 358. Proximate cause.

Questions of law and fact as to proximate cause, see ante § 327.

¶ 1440. Plaintiff sought to recover of a township for damages sustained by the slipping of his wagon and team over an embankment in a public highway and contended defendant was negligent in failing to place barriers on the side of the sloping road. Defendant properly requested instructions to the effect that plaintiff could not recover if the proximate cause of the accident was the icy condition of the road and not the failure of the defendant to furnish said barriers. Held, the failure of the court to give these requested instructions did not constitute error where the trial judge in his general charge accurately covered the point of proximate cause raised by defendant in its requests.—West Michigan Park Ass'n v. Pere Marquette R. Co., 172 Mich. 179.

¶ 1441. Plaintiff sued a township for injury to his horses and sleigh arising from the slipping of the same over an embankment in a sloping public road cut into a hillside. The court instructed that if the injury was the combined result of an accident, namely, the slipping on the ice, and the insufficiency of the road for lack of proper barriers, plaintiff might recover; that if the cause of the accident was the slipping on the ice either by the horses or of the sleigh, and there was no other cause for the accident, the defendant would not be liable; but that if the road required a barrier in order to make it reasonably safe and the accident would not have happened, even though the horses or sleigh had slipped, if the highway had been in a reasonably safe condition for public travel, plaintiff should recover. Held, the question of proximate cause was presented in a manner sufficiently favorable to defendant. —Lubbers v. Township of Manlius, 172 Mich. 387.

§ 359. Duty of traveler and contributory negligence.

As to foot travelers, see post § 360.
As to travel on bridges, see post § 361.
As to contribution to abutter's negligence, see post § 362.
Questions of law and fact as to contributory negligence, see ante § 328 et seq.

¶ 1442. In an action for personal injuries sustained by an automobile running into an excavation in the street the defendant city is not entitled to have a request given which applies the rule that those attempting to cross street-car tracks whereon electric cars are operated must before crossing, "stop, look, and listen" when there is no track on the street where the accident occurred.—Karrer v. City of Detroit, 142 Mich. 331.

¶ 1443. Plaintiff's sleigh and team while being driven by his son were injured by slipping over an embankment in a sloping public road. Up to three years prior to the accident, the plaintiff had been for many years township supervisor. Defendant township requested the court to charge that if plaintiff had known for a number of years that the road was defective and did not notify the highway commissioner or the overseer of highways of the fact, to have the same put he was guilty of contrib could not recover. Hel properly rejected and th structed that plaintiff c less the son exercised view of the condition of bers v. Township of Ma ¶ 1444. In an action sustained by driving an excavation, where the that he was not negli ward as he did, an insti denly put in danger is tively to do that whic ended, it is seen might the peril escaped, is per to defendant's claim of aging the car after dis tion.—Karrer v. City o 331.

§ 360. ——Pedestrians a

¶ 1445. An instructio which treats previous fect in a sidewalk as covery, without regard had it in mind at the taken to avoid injury Flint, 122 Mich. 65.

¶ 1446. In an actio jury, a request to cha at the time she stepped sidewalk upon which s afflicted with any dise for her to use more c holes in the walk than narily healthy persons, —Edwards v. Common Three Rivers, 102 Mi

¶ 1447. Having cha the municipality is onl fects in sidewalks as suggested by appearan closed by a "test in th nary use of such walk his own motion for th "ordinary use" of the w as a person walking o regard for the walk as a person going ov way "and having par duty of ascertaining walk with reference to and fit for public tra that if such an inspe though they failed t that caused the accid not be liable.—Hunter 141 Mich. 539.

¶ 1448. In an actio injuries received by sidewalk, it is proper that there is no eviden ligence on plaintiff's part, that being a question of fact for the jury, in determining which, the condition and situation of the walk, plaintiff's knowledge of it, the time of day when the accident occurred, and other circumstances connected therewith, should be considered.—McGrail v. City of Kalamazoo, 94 Mich. 52.

¶ 1449. In a suit against a township for personal injuries sustained through its negligence in leaving a ditch open in a public road, defendant's counsel by a lengthy cross-examination of plaintiff sought to show that she fell into the ditch through continuing to wander about after she knew she had lost her sense of direction, and requested the court to charge specially that if this were true plaintiff could not recover. Held, it was error to refuse the requested instruction.—Hunt v. Township of Douglass, 165 Mich. 187.

§ 361. ——Of persons using bridges and culverts.

¶ 1450. A man was driving a traction engine across a bridge. The bridge gave way and the driver's foot slipped and caught in the chain so that he was seriously hurt. Held, that in an action for the injury the court should have charged, if there was evidence to support the instruction, that the driver was negligent in having no guard for his foot if he knew of the danger, or in removing it if there had been one.—Stebbins v. Township of Keene, 55 Mich. 552.

§ 362. ——Towards conditions caused by private parties.

¶ 1451. Where, in a suit to recover damages for injuries sustained by being hit by a bale of hay, thrown from a barn loft upon a public sidewalk, there is no proof that plaintiff saw other bales fall, or that she was where she could not well avoid seeing them, there can be no inference that she saw them, and the court's failure to instruct the jury that if plaintiff had seen other bales fall she should have been wary of the one causing the injury is not error.—Dehring v. Comstock, 78 Mich. 153.

¶ 1452. In an action against a contractor for injuries sustained by a passenger on a car by coming in contact with a protruding board used in connection with work on a street, an instruction stating that it was not negligence for plaintiff to ride on the running board of the car, was not error in view of the undisputed testimony that the car was full and that he could not get inside.—Pomaski v. Grant, 119 Mich. 675.

6. Verdict, findings and judgment.

§ 363. In general.

Directing verdict, see ante § 339 et seq.
General law as to verdict and findings, see Verdict.
General law of judgments and enforcement thereof, see Judgments.
Judgments against municipalities and means of enforcing same, see also Municipal Corporations, XVI, A; Townships, VIII; Mandamus.

¶ 1453. In an action for injuries because of the dangerous condition of a highway a finding that the highway was dangerous for the reason stated is to be treated as including a finding that there was an unwarranted obstruction to travel at that point, and it is unnecessary to show the width that the highway had been opened for public use and that certain logs were within the limits of the highway as opened for public travel.—Schelske v. Township of Orange, 147 Mich. 135.

¶ 1454. In an action for personal injuries by reason of dangerous condition of a highway where the court found that the highway was in a dangerous condition, that plaintiff, while using ordinary care to avoid injury, sustained an injury through no fault of his but by reason of the dangerous condition of the highway, and that defendant had notice of this dangerous condition a sufficient time to have placed the highway in a proper condition, if a statement or finding that the highway was dangerous is equivalent to a finding that it was not reasonably safe the necessary facts to support the judgment appeared.—Schelske v. Township of Orange, 147 Mich. 135.

XIII. RIGHT TO USE WAY AND LAW OF THE ROAD.

A. IN GENERAL.

§ 364. Common right of use.

Proper kinds of use, see post § 365.
Use by automotive vehicles, see post § 366.
Reciprocal rights and duties, see post § 367.
Rules for driving, see post §§ 368-371.
Law of the road to turn to the right, see post § 368.
Public easement in the highways, see ante X.
Common rights other than travel, see ante § 159.
Private easements in ways and passages, see Easements.
Rights of street railway in using street with respect to other users, see Street Railways, IV.

¶ 1455. A highway is for the general public to use for passage and traffic, without distinction; and the restrictions upon its use are only such as to secure to the public the largest practicable benefit from the easement.—Macomber v. Nichols, 34 Mich. 212.

¶ 1456. Those who use highways for the customary purposes of travel and passage have the first right, and their use must not be obstructed unless under exceptional circumstances.—Burford v. City of Grand Rapids, 53 Mich. 98.

§ 365. Manner, kinds and purposes of use.

Use by motor vehicles and bicycles, see post § 366.
Uses and servitudes proper to highways, see ante § 157 et seq.
Maximum weight of vehicle permitted to operate in highway, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 132, § 1.
Maximum wheel loads, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 132, §§ 2, 3.
Regulation as to brakes on vehicles, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 132, § 4.
Regulations and restrictions of use of sidewalks on rural highways, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4578 et seq.

¶ 1457. By the common law every person may use the public highway for passage, but not for pasturage, except opposite his own premises.—Robinson v. Flint & P. M. R. Co., 79 Mich. 323.

Injury by or while driving ambulance, see note, 3 N. C. C. A. 444-455.

§ 366. Use by automotive vehicles and bicycles.

Use of steam engines or other unusual vehicles as nuisances, see ante § 176.
Duty and care in driving and handling motor vehicles, see post § 369.
Duties of bicyclists, see post § 371.
Contributory negligence of persons using automotive vehicles and bicycles, see post §§ 401, 402.
Questions of law and fact as to negligence or misuse of automotive vehicles, see post § 396.
Statutory liabilities respecting automobiles, see post § 374.
Motor vehicle regulations, rights and duties, see post XIV.
Regulations respecting vehicles propelled by steam, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 181, amending Comp. L. 1915, § 4793 et seq.

¶ 1458. Persons using horses for travel or traffic have no greater rights in the highway than those who use other permissible means of locomotion upon it, e. g., steam-engines; improved methods of transit cannot be excluded from existing public roads if not inconsistent with present methods.—Macomber v. Nichols, 34 Mich. 212.

¶ 1459. Users of automobiles enjoy the same rights in streets and highways as do drivers of horses.—Wright v. Crane, 142 Mich. 508.

¶ 1460. Under a charter expressly conferring the entire control and the power to regulate the use of streets and sidewalks upon the common council, it is competent to pass an ordinance allowing the use of certain sidewalks for bicyclists.—Lee v. City of Port Huron, 128 Mich. 533.

What are vehicles within meaning of statute declaring "rule of the road," see note, 12 N. C. C. A. 278-287.
Use on street or highway of automobile without license, see note, 1 N. C. C. A. 88-100.
Absence of vehicular license as affecting right of driver, owner or occupant, to recover for injuries, and as affecting their liability for injuries inflicted upon others, see note, 9 N. C. C. A. 828-838.

§ 367. Reciprocal rights and duties.

Actionable wrongs or neglect, see post § 372 et seq.
Passing on wrong side, see post § 377.
Questions of law and fact as to observance of duty, see post § 394 et seq.
Instructions as to duty in using streets, see post §§ 408, 409.

¶ 1461. Persons exercising their right to use highways must do so with due care and regard for the like rights of others.—Burford v. City of Grand Rapids, 53 Mich. 98; Wright v. Crane, 142 Mich. 508.

¶ 1462. Highways, whether by land or water, must be used with due regard to their lawful and proper use by others.—People's Ice Co. v. The Excelsior, 44 Mich. 229.

¶ 1463. The rights of travelers upon a highway are mutual and co-ordinate; each should so use his right of passage as to avoid causing injury or detriment to another having a like right.—Pigott v. Engle, 60 Mich. 221.

¶ 1464. The rights of a pedestrian and of the driver of an automobile on a street are equal, and their duty to exercise the degree of care that the ordinarily careful and prudent person would when moving along the street for the purpose of determining whether any danger is apt to come to either at a street crossing is reciprocal.—Wilson v. Johnson, 195 Mich. 94.

Right of way at street intersection as between drivers of vehicles, see note, 15 N. C. C. A. 463-480.

§ 368. Driving and handling horses; law of the road and speed.

Rules for driving of motor vehicles and bicycles, see post §§ 369-371.
Actionable negligence, see post § 372 et seq.
Racing and immoderate driving, see post § 378.
Improper hitching, see post § 379.
Evidence to show notice of horse's vicious character, see post § 389.
Questions of law and fact, see post §§ 395, 400.

Instructions as to duty and negligence in driving horses, see post § 408.
Statutory law of the road, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4592.
Penalty for nonobservance of law of the road, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4592 et seq.
Regulations and penalties concerning drunken drivers, driving at running gait, leaving horses unfastened or unattended, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4594 et seq.
Prohibition against intoxicated person using highway, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 164.
Regulation as to fast driving over bridges, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4438 et seq.

¶ 1465. The "traveled part of the road" (Comp. L. 1871, § 2002, How. St., § 1456) means that part which is wrought for traveling, and is not confined simply to the most traveled wheel track.—Daniels v. Clegg, 28 Mich. 32.

¶ 1466. In the use of a public highway one has a right to exact from others ordinary prudence and to rely upon it in determining his own means of using the road; he may travel upon any portion of it except when he is about to meet and pass another's vehicle, when he must seasonably turn to the right of the middle of the traveled part of the road.—Daniels v. Clegg, 28 Mich. 32.

¶ 1467. Driving a horse along the crowded streets of a city at the rate of six miles an hour may, under certain circumstances, be negligence.—Stroub v. Meyer, 132 Mich. 75.

§ 369. Driving and handling motor vehicles.

Right of automotive vehicle to use road, see ante § 366.
Actionable negligence, see post § 372 et seq.
Statutory liabilities respecting automobiles, see post § 374.
Racing and immoderate driving, see post § 379.
Burden of showing negligence, see post § 387.
Admissibility of evidence as to negligence in handling motor vehicles, see post § 390.
Weight and sufficiency of evidence as to negligent operation of motor vehicles, see § 392.
Questions of law and fact as to negligence or misuse of automobiles, see post §§ 395, 401.
Instructions as to duty or negligence with automotive vehicles, see post § 409.
Motor vehicle regulations, rights and duties, see post XIV.

¶ 1468. Users of automobiles, like drivers of horses, must, in the use of their means of locomotion, observe due care towards others having occasion to travel the highway.—Wright v. Crane, 142 Mich. 508.

¶ 1469. It is the duty of the driver of an automobile to operate it on a public highway at a proper and reasonable rate of speed with regard to the traffic and use thereof under existing conditions, and to avoid, so far as possible, endangering the life or limb of other persons, as well as the safety of property.—Winckowski v. Dodge, 183 Mich. 303.

¶ 1470. Irrespective of which side of a street an automobile passes another vehicle coming from the opposite direction, it is settled law that the driver of each must look out for pedestrians suddenly appearing from behind the other vehicle.—Winckowski v. Dodge, 183 Mich. 303.

¶ 1471. Where the driver of an automobile is justified in taking the left side of a street in passing another vehicle, it is his duty to observe that degree of caution and to proceed with care at such reduced speed as is commensurate with such unusual conditions.—Winckowski v. Dodge, 183 Mich. 303.

Liability for various automobile accidents, see note, 2 N. C. C. A. 806-810.

§ 370. ——Statutory regulations; speed, passing, stops, etc.

Municipal power to regulate motor vehicles, see post § 411.
Equipment regulations and regulations as to signals and lamps, see post § 412.
Statutory liabilities of owners of motor vehicles, see post § 413.
Statutory regulations as to tire gauge and speed of motor trucks and trailers, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 132.

¶ 1472. An automobile upon the highway in the hands of an incompetent or a reckless driver may result in great injury to persons and property, and because of this fact, the state, in the exercise of its police power, may pass statutes in relation to the ownership of automobiles and the running thereof.—Johnson v. Sergeant, 168 Mich. 444.

¶ 1473. Section 1 and subdivision 3 of section 10 of Public Acts of 1909, pages 772 and 780, making the owners of motor vehicles liable for any injury occasioned by the negligent operation by any person of such motor vehicles, whether such negligence consists in violation of the provisions of a statute or in failure to use ordinary care and making the act applicable to any person, firm, association or corporation renting a motor vehicle or having the exclusive use thereof, is not invalid as exceeding the police power of the state.—Johnson v. Sergeant, 168 Mich. 444.

¶ 1474. It constitutes actionable negligence to drive an automobile, in violation of Act No. 318 of Pub. Acts 1909, How. Ann. St., 2nd Ed., ch. 31, in a city at a speed greater than ten miles an hour, and, while running on the wrong side of a street, to turn into an intersecting street at the left of the center line thereof.—Holden v. Hadley, 180 Mich. 568.

¶ 1475. To operate an automobile at a speed in excess of that prescribed by Act No. 318, Public Acts 1909, How. St., 2nd Ed., ch. 31, is negligence per se.—Levyn v. Koppin, 183 Mich. 232.

¶ 1476. Under section 7 of Act No. 318, Public Acts of 1909, How. St., 2nd Ed., § 2493, it is the duty of the driver of an automobile on meeting a pedestrian in a street, either in the business or residence portion of a town, to give reasonable warning of his approach, to reduce the speed of his automobile to ten miles an hour, and to use every precaution to insure the former's safety.—Levyn v. Koppin, 183 Mich. 232.

¶ 1477. Under Pub. Acts 1909, No. 318, § 6, subd. 5, How. 2nd Ed., § 2492, subd. 5, relating to the duty of a driver of an automobile desiring to pass another vehicle going in the same direction, it is the duty of the driver of an automobile who observes a wagon standing on the right side of a street near the center to express his desire to pass so that the other vehicle may turn to the right and allow him to pass to the left of it on the right-hand side of the street, where there is room to do so.—Wilson v. Johnson, 195 Mich. 94.

¶ 1478. By construing section 12, Act No. 196, Pub. Acts 1905, to mean that motor vehicles shall not be driven in any portion of a city devoted wholly or partly to business at a higher rate of speed than eight miles an hour, the court does not render the provisions so uncertain or indefinite as to make it void, nor does such a construction make an unreasonable requirement in compelling a driver to determine the character of the portion of the city through which he is passing.—People v. Dow, 155 Mich. 115.

¶ 1479. Under Pub. Acts 1905, No. 196, § 12, limiting the rate of speed of motor vehicles "in the business portion" of cities and villages to eight miles an hour, such vehicles cannot be driven more than eight miles an hour in any portion of a city devoted to business; the requirement is not restricted to a single central business area of any city.—People v. Dow, 155 Mich. 115.

Duty of driver of automobile to signal following cars before stopping or changing course, see note, 10 N. C. C. A. 562-569.
Horses frightened by automobiles; duty of operator of automobile, see note, 2 N. C. C. A. 806-808.
Sufficiency of signal given to automobile operator to stop machine to avoid frightening horse, see note, 8 N. C. C. A. 1079-1088.

§ 371. Duties of bicyclists.
Rights of use of highway by bicyclists, see ante § 366.
Proximate cause of injury from collision with bicycle, see post § 381.
Variance in action for injuries from collision between automobile and bicycle, see post ¶ 1522.
Burden of disproving negligence, see post § 387.
Questions of law and fact as to contributory negligence of bicyclists, see post § 402.

¶ 1480. A bicycle is a vehicle, and is to be so regarded in determining the degree of care to which the rider should be held in the use of the public highways.—Myers v. Hinds, 110 Mich. 300.

B. INJURIES TO OTHER USERS.

1. Duties and negligence.

§ 372. Actionable wrongs or neglect.
Particular acts of neglect and negligence of or by particular classes of users of way, see post §§ 373-380.
Proximate cause and contributory negligence, see post §§ 381-383.
Actions for injuries, see post § 384 et seq.
Burden of proof and evidence as to negligence, see post § 387 et seq.
Actionable injuries caused by negligent condition of roadway or walk, see ante XII.
Duties and liabilities of persons driving on or otherwise using private ways open to the public, see post § 420.
Negligence by driver towards other occupant of vehicle, see Negligence.
Street railway collisions and injuries to others on highway by street railway cars, tracks and appliances, see Street Railways, IV.
Actionable injury to travelers (including those by automobile) at railroad crossings, see Railroads, VIII, D.
Liability of railroad to persons injured by stalled automobile on track, see Railroads, VIII, D.
Liability of manufacturers or dealers for defects in thing sold (automobile), see Negligence.
Liability of garage keeper as bailee for damage to vehicle by collision, see Bailments § 13.
Municipal liability for tort by employer or department in use of motor vehicle, see Municipal Corporations, XII.
Actionable death of person, see Death by Wrongful Act.
Liability of traction engine operator for fires spread from engine, see Fires § 3.
General law of respondeat superior as applied to injuries by servant's careless driving, see Master and Servant, IV.
Master's liability to chauffeur, see Master and Servant, III; Workmen's Compensation Law.

Imputation of agent's knowledge to corporation for purpose of predicating negligence thereon, see also Corporations § 148, ¶ 557.
Criminal liability for killing or injuring person, see Crimes; Homicide; Indictment.
Statutory liability of masters of servants driving vehicles for hire, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4598.

¶ 1481. The owner of a truck, driven by his servant, is answerable for injuries to another caused by the truck, when the horses drawing the same were running away; provided the driver lost control of the horses through his want of due care.—Silsby v. Michigan Car Co., 95 Mich. 204.

¶ 1482. The employer of decedent, a milk wagon driver, is not a joint tort feasor with the owner of a truck whose servant drove it into the milk wagon, killing decedent.—Dettloff v. Hammond, Standish & Co., 195 Mich. 117, 14 N. C. C. A. 901.

¶ 1483. Drivers of automobiles on highways are not insurers against accidents arising from negligence of children or their parents.—Barger v. Bissell, 188 Mich. 366.

What are vehicles within meaning of statute declaring "rule of the road," see note, 12 N. C. C. A. 278-287.
Liability for injuries or damage caused by horse running away without negligence of driver, see note, 3 N. C. C. A. 532-547.
Liability for injury or loss caused by collision occasioned by vehicle turning into or emerging from alley or like way, see note, 12 N. C. C. A. 909-924.
Liability of owner or operator of vehicle on street or highway by overtaking pedestrian thereon, see note, 12 N. C. C. A. 436-445.
Liability for injuries to persons on sidewalk or street caused by fall of objects from vehicles, see note, 11 N. C. C. A. 255-262.
Signal from traffic officer as affecting question of negligence of driver of vehicle, see note, 13 N. C. C. A. 1117-1126.
Liability of overtaking or overtaken vehicle on street or highway for injury or damage caused by collision, see note, 12 N. C. C. A. 625-650.
Recent cases on injuries due to the negligent operation of automobiles and the duty and liability of owners and operators thereof, see note, 4 N. C. C. A. 1-39.
Liability of automobile owner or driver for injury to pedestrian at street crossing in absence of ordinance regulating precedence, see note, 15 N. C. C. A. 978-1012.
Liability of owner of automobile for injury to pedestrian at street crossing where ordinance gives pedestrian precedence, see note, 14 N. C. C. A. 1089-1101.
Injury by automobile to person going to or from street car, see note, 2 N. C. C. A. 410-420.
Automobiles injuring persons boarding or alighting from street cars, see note, 8 N. C. C. A. 580-587.
Liability for injury to pedestrian struck by automobile while making emergency turn to avoid collision with another vehicle or pedestrian, see note, 15 N. C. C. A. 776-779.
Injury to pedestrian by skidding of automobile, see note, 2 N. C. C. A. 305-308.
Injuries received in collision between automobile and coasting sled, see note, 4 N. C. C. A. 14, 15.
Collision of bicycles with automobiles, see note, 4 N. C. C. A. 13, 14.
Liability of automobile owner or driver for injury to person employed on street, see note, 15 N. C. C. A. 848-868.

§ 373. Duty and negligence towards children and incapables.

Presumption of negligence from accident to child, see post ¶ 1530.
Variance as to presumptive negligence, see post ¶ 1523.
Liability of municipality for injuries to children from defective highways, see ante § 240.

¶ 1484. The owner of a wagon is not answerable for the death of a child seven years of age who, without the knowledge of the driver of the wagon, suddenly ran out from the side of the road and while attempting to climb on the side of the wagon fell under the wheels and was killed.—Eichkern v. Park Brewing Co., 181 Mich. 1.

Liability of owner of automobile for injury to children in streets, see note, 8 N. C. C. A. 369-385.
Liability of automobile owner or driver for injury to child pedestrian in streets, see note, 15 N. C. C. A. 781-800.

§ 374. Statutory liabilities respecting automobiles.

Common law liability, see ante §§ 372, 373, post § 375 et seq.
Statutory liability of owner of motor car for injuries done with it, see post § 413.
Regulations as to signals and lights, see post § 412.
Driving regulations, see ante § 370.
Municipal power to regulate motor vehicles, see post § 411.
Rights of use of highways by automotive vehicles and bicycles, see ante § 366.
Rules for driving and handling motor vehicles, see ante § 369.
Evidence as to negligent driving and handling of motor vehicles, see post § 390.

General regulations of Motor Vehicle Law, see Comp. L. 1915, chap. 89, especially section 4825.

¶ 1485. Pub. Acts 1909, No. 83, How. 2nd Ed., § 2506, prohibiting the unauthorized using or taking of automobiles, does not of itself give a right of action to pedestrians injured upon the street, since they do not belong to the class for the protection of which the law was passed.—Johnston v. Cornelius, 200 Mich. 209.

¶ 1486. Where one driving an automobile on a highway, has ample space to pass a pedestrian and guides the machine so as to strike the pedestrian in passing, he is guilty of negligence.—Schock v. Cooling, 175 Mich. 313.

¶ 1487. Under Public Acts of 1909, page 772, relating to the regulation of motor vehicles, the securing of judgment against the driver of an automobile is not prerequisite to bringing action against the owner thereof for violation of said statute. Johnson v. Sergeant, 168 Mich. 444.

§ 375. Negligence by servant or borrower of automobile.

Liability of owner under statute for injury done with car, see post § 413.
Burden of proof as to negligence, see post ¶ 1528.
Master's liability for injury to third persons, see Master and Servant, IV.

¶ 1488. Where the owner of an automobile lends it to a third person and at the invitation of the borrower accompanies him on a ride, and the borrower operates the machine and is in entire control thereof, the owner is not liable in the absence of statute, for injuries sustained by a plaintiff on account of the borrower's negligent driving of the machine.—Hartley v. Miller, 165 Mich. 115.

¶ 1489. The owner of an automobile is not liable for injuries inflicted as the result of its negligent operation in his absence by a third person.—Levyn v. Koppin, 183 Mich. 232.

¶ 1490. In an action for damage caused by defendant's chauffeur to the front of plaintiff's store when such chauffeur ran defendant's automobile against the store front, in the absence of any statute enlarging the responsibility of the car owner, defendant's liability depends upon whether the chauffeur, when the accident occurred, was acting as his servant and within the scope of his employment.—Brinkman v. Zuckerman, 192 Mich. 624.

¶ 1491. An automobile not being a "dangerous instrumentality" in the legal sense, the relation between the owner of the car and his chauffeur is determined, in so far as torts to third parties are concerned and in the absence of a statute, by the general rules relative to master and servant.—Brinkman v. Zuckerman, 192 Mich. 624.

¶ 1492. In so far as the liability of a father owning an automobile is concerned with regard to injuries inflicted by his son, the fact that the son is driving the car without the father's knowledge distinguishes his liability from that in cases where the son was driving the car for members of the family.—Johnston v. Cornelius, 193 Mich. 115.

Liability of owner of automobile for negligence of borrower, see note, 1 N. C. C. A. 126-132.
Liability of employer for injury by chauffeur when using automobile on own account without former's consent, see note, 2 N. C. C. A. 422-429.
Liability of employer for injury by chauffeur using automobile on his own account without employer's consent, see note, 2 N. C. C. A. 806-808.
Liability of master for negligence of his servant temporarily in the service of another, see note, 6 N. C. C. A. 357-371.

§ 376. Causing fright of horses.

Negligence of public in suffering conditions to frighten horses, see ante § 228.
Regulations concerning use of traction engines and motor vehicles, see Comp. L. 1915, chap. 89.

¶ 1493. Inconvenience incident to the reasonable use of highways under impartial regulations; e. g., the frightening of horses by non-negligent use of steam-engine as means of locomotion on the highway is damnum absque injuria.—Macomber v. Nichols, 34 Mich. 212.

¶ 1494. Hallooing on the public highway to the driver of a team for the purpose of warning him that another driver wishes to pass him cannot be treated as an act of negligence that will make one jointly liable with the driver if the latter's team takes fright and does the passing team an injury, —especially if the warning was meant to prevent a collision.—Pigott v. Lilly, 55 Mich. 150.

¶ 1495. Driving along a highway a team with a rope dragging behind, and turning, in passing another team, so that the rope is dragged under the feet of plaintiff's horses, making them unmanageable, constitutes negligence.—Barnes v. Brown, 95 Mich. 576.

Liability for personal injuries caused by horse taking fright at noise of automobile, see note, 1 N. C. C. A. 107-118.
Liability for injuries caused by frightening horses on streets or highways, see note, 12 N. C. C. A. 145-173.

Horses frightened by automobiles; duty of operator of automobile, see note, 2 N. C. C. A. 806-808.
Sufficiency of signal given to automobile operator to stop machine to avoid frightening horse, see note, 8 N. C. C. A. 1079-1088.

§ 377. Passing on wrong side.

Reciprocal rights and duties, see ante § 367.
Duty to turn to the right, see also ante § 368.

¶ 1496. A driver on the wrong side of the road who fails to exercise due care while attempting to pass another driver coming from the opposite direction also on the wrong side is not precluded thereby from recovering for injuries to his property resulting from a collision, where the conduct of the other party is wanton and wilful.—Tyler v. Nelson, 109 Mich. 37.

Turning vehicle to wrong side of road in emergency, while meeting or overtaking another vehicle, as actionable, see note, 12 N. C. C. A. 844-858.
Liability of overtaking or overtaken vehicle on street or highway for injury or damage caused by collision, see note, 12 N. C. C. A. 625.

§ 378. Racing and immoderate driving.

See also ante ¶ 1467.
Liability of municipality for injuries to pedestrians from speeding or racing in roadway, see ante § 238.

¶ 1497. Two persons racing in sleighs on a public street make a plain and serious danger to every other person driving along the street, and it is itself an act of such negligence as to make the racing parties responsible for a collision caused by it.—Potter v. Moran, 61 Mich. 60.

§ 379. Improper hitching, standing or parking.

Duty in driving and handling horses, see ante § 368.
Driving animals on highway or turning them loose into way, see post § 380.
Questions of law and fact as to negligent driving or handling of horses, see post §§ 395, 400.
Instructions as to duty or negligence in driving horses, see post § 408.
Liability for personal injury sustained from runaway of horse caused by improper hitching, see note, 6 N. C. C. A. 1043-1048.

¶ 1498. Leaving a buggy standing at an angle to the beaten track, and so near that by backing one foot it would be in the way of passing vehicles, is negligence.—Joslin v. Le Baron, 44 Mich. 160.

§ 380. Animals driven upon or turned into highway.

Questions of law and fact as to negligence in driving animals, see post § 398.
General liabilities for injuries by or to animals, see Animals.

¶ 1499. One who turns his cattle into the highway and allows them to run at large therein contrary to the statute is liable, though the cattle are not vicious, for damage done by them while so at large in overturning plaintiff's sulky.—Shipley v. Colclough, 81 Mich. 624.

¶ 1500. A wild bull, two and one-half years old, is a dangerous animal to be driven in the street.—Barnum v. Terpening, 75 Mich. 557.

¶ 1501. In an action for damages for personal injuries inflicted by the defendant's bull, driven in the street, the fact that the bull had never attacked any one prior to the injury sued for will not bar a recovery. —Barnum v. Terpening, 75 Mich. 557.

¶ 1502. In an action for damages for personal injuries inflicted by the defendant's bull driven in the street, facts that the bull was never actually vicious up to the time of his attack upon the plaintiff, and that the person then driving him had no knowledge of such viciousness, will not bar a recovery if the manner of driving and managing the animal was negligent.—Barnum v. Terpening, 75 Mich. 557.

§ 381. Proximate cause.

Instructions as to proximate cause, see post § 407.
Proximate cause of injury from defective highways and bridges, see ante § 241.
Concurrent liability of negligent user of highway with carrier of passenger in street car, see also Carriers § 149.
General law as to proximate cause, see Negligence, III.

¶ 1503. One who rides a bicycle down a narrow path beside the roadway at the rate of five or six miles an hour, giving no warning of his approach, at a time when the path is occupied by many other persons going in the same direction, is not relieved from liability for running into a pedestrian by the fact that the accident was caused by his striking an obstacle—at least if it does not appear that he was unable to see and avoid such obstacle by the exercise of due care.—Myers v. Hinds, 110 Mich. 300.

¶ 1504. Where defendant left his team standing over a foot path, and plaintiff's intestate, a girl 5 years of age, in coasting down the path, was carried against the heels of the horses and killed, her own act and not that of defendant, even conceding the latter to have been negligent, was the proximate cause.—Stoll v. Laubengayer, 174 Mich. 701.

§ 382. Contributory negligence of pedestrians.
Proximate cause of accident, see ante § 381.
Weight and sufficiency of evidence as to contributory negligence, see post § 393.
Questions of law and fact as to contributory negligence, see post § 399.
Instructions as to contributory negligence, see post § 410.
Contributory negligence of persons injured from defective highways and bridges, see ante § 247 et seq.
General law of contributory negligence, see Negligence, IV.
Negligence towards person in position of discovered peril due to his own negligence (last clear chance rule), see Negligence, IV.
Doctrine of imputed negligence of driver to occupant of vehicle, see Negligence, IV.
Doctrine of contributory negligence as affected by childhood of the person, see Negligence, IV.

¶ 1505. It is not necessarily negligence to walk in the traveled part of a city street if it is not shown that it is usually so occupied with teams as to make foot travel imprudent.—Cleveland v. Newsom, 45 Mich. 62.

¶ 1506. There is no imperative rule of law requiring pedestrians lawfully using the public ways to be continuously looking or listening to ascertain if automobiles are approaching.—Gerhard v. Ford Motor Co., 155 Mich. 618.

¶ 1507. Usually, a country highway is not, as a railroad crossing is, a place of danger to be approached and traversed only after looking and listening for coming vehicles.—Hill v. Lappley, 199 Mich. 369.

¶ 1508. One, who starts to cross a bridge when a vicious bull is being driven across and is tossed by the bull, is not contributively negligent if ignorant of the bull's vicious disposition.—Barnum v. Terpening, 75 Mich. 557.

¶ 1509. A woman 77 years of age, who is in full possession of her faculties, except that her eyesight is impaired so that she cannot see a great distance, and who, after looking in both directions before alighting from the rear of an automobile truck and seeing no vehicles coming, alights backwards and starts to cross the street without seeing any vehicle and steps directly in front of an automobile headed in the same direction as the truck, and is struck thereby, is guilty of contributory negligence.—Hill v. Lappley, 199 Mich. 369.

¶ 1510. A pedestrian is guilty of contributory negligence where, in the middle of a block of a narrow street 30 feet in width, he suddenly and unexpectedly steps from behind a standing automobile where he cannot be seen by the driver of an approaching automobile truck, with his back turned toward it as he proceeds in a diagonal direction across the street, with his coat collar turned up and his head down, and he not only fails to look, but is apparently so engrossed with other thoughts that he fails to hear either the noise of the truck or the shout of warning from the companion of the driver.—Fulton v. Mohr, 200 Mich. 538.

Duty of pedestrian to watch for automobiles in crossing street, see note, 2 N. C. C. A. 289-297.
Liability of owner or driver of automobile for injury to person walking upon a city street elsewhere than at street intersections, see note, 15 N. C. C. A. 880-917.
Attempting to stop runaway horse as negligence, see note, 16 N. C. C. A. 167-173.
Right to recover for injuries sustained while attempting to stop runaway horses, see note, 9 N. C. C. A. 890-893.

§ 383. ——Of vehicle users.
Last clear chance rule, see Negligence, IV.
Doctrine of imputed negligence of driver to occupant of vehicle, see Negligence, IV.
Breach of rules of the road or of automobile laws as contributory negligence defeating recovery from street railway of railroad company, see Street Railways, IV, C; Railroads, VIII, D.

¶ 1511. One cannot recover for injury to his horse and vehicle resulting from defendant's negligence in driving on the wrong side of a highway, if by using ordinary care himself he might have avoided the collision which caused it.—Daniels v. Clegg, 28 Mich. 32.

¶ 1512. One driving a carriage on a dark night is not guilty of contributory negligence, if, hearing a buggy coming at full speed behind him, he takes the side of the road that belongs to him, though it turns out that if he had remained where he was he would have escaped injury.—Flower v. Witkovsky, 69 Mich. 371.

¶ 1513. On approaching a street intersection a person is not bound to stop his automobile on observing another automobile coming at a high rate of speed, where the driver of the latter vehicle has ample room to avoid a collision.—Brown v. Mitts, 187 Mich. 469.

¶ 1514. One cannot recover for an injury done his wagon by collision if his driver's want of ordinary care contributed to produce the collision.—Mabley v. Kittleberger, 37 Mich. 360.

2. Actions for injuries.

Actions for injuries on private ways by reason of negligence of defendant, see post § 421.

General law of actions for negligence, see Negligence, V.

§ 384. Form of action.

Form of action for injuries from defective highways, see ante § 271.

¶ 1515. For injuries resulting from a collision of vehicles caused by defendant's negligence, case is proper.—Bradford v. Ball, 38 Mich. 673.

§ 385. Pleading; declaration.

Issues and variance of proofs from allegations, see post § 386.

Pleading in actions for injuries from defective highways, see ante § 275.

General law of pleading, see Pleading.

Pleading assault in maliciously driving against plaintiff on road, see Assault § 21, ¶ 80.

¶ 1516. In an action against the owner of an automobile truck for negligent death of a pedestrian a declaration alleging that defendant did not use proper and reasonable caution and judgment in operating its automobile truck when coming out of the dark passageway of its building and across the public sidewalk approach and highway and when approaching intestate, and that, although it was known that deceased was not aware of the approach of the truck, defendant failed to sound a warning signal and ran over him, held to sufficiently charge negligent management and operation of the truck.—Tuttle v. Briscoe Mfg. Co., 190 Mich. 22, 12 N. C. C. A. 909.

¶ 1517. The declaration in an action against an express company for its servant's negligence in driving over plaintiff alleged that defendant by its agent so carelessly drove its horse and wagon that by and through said agent's carelessness and improper conduct the said horse and wagon were driven over plaintiff while he was lawfully and with all due care walking along the highway there. Held, a sufficient averment that defendant's agent was negligent in driving at all, under the circumstances, in the place and time where the accident occurred.—Post v. United States Express Co., 76 Mich. 574.

¶ 1518. Where a declaration in a personal injury case alleged four particulars of negligence: (1) that defendant knowingly employed an incompetent driver; (2) that the team was so afraid of street cars, fractious and unmanageable that it was negligent to permit them to be driven on streets where cars were operated; (3) that the driver was careless in his manner of driving on this occasion; (4) the use of an insufficient and unsafe drawbolt, only the second and fourth can be considered as concurrent acts of negligence, the others being separate and distinct allegations of negligence.—Warren v. Porter, 144 Mich. 699.

¶ 1519. Declaration held to state a cause of action for negligent operation of automobile.—Holden v. Hadley, 180 Mich. 568.

¶ 1520. A cause of action is stated by a declaration alleging that the plaintiff, while riding a bicycle with due care on a city street, was struck and injured by an automobile driven by the defendant, in violation of Act No. 318 of the Pub. Acts 1909, How. Ann. St., 2nd Ed., ch. 31, at a greater rate of speed than ten miles an hour, on the wrong side of the street, while he attempted to turn into an intersecting street at the left of the center line thereof.—Holden v. Hadley, 180 Mich. 568.

¶ 1521. In the absence of a demurrer a declaration in an action for injuries caused by an automobile running into a standing vehicle, which did not allege the defendant's duty and any breach thereof, held sufficient, where the facts pleaded clearly implied the defendant's duty to operate his car in a careful manner, and its breach.—Jolman v. Alberts, 186 Mich. 643.

§ 386. ——Issues and variance.

In actions for injuries from defective highways, see ante § 277.

Issues and variance generally, see Pleading, IX, X.

¶ 1522. In a suit to recover for the death of plaintiff's decedent, caused by a collision between defendant's automobile and the decedent's bicycle, the proofs do not support the declaration which alleges a head-on collision while decedent was proceeding in a northerly direction along the east side of the street, when they show that he was in fact attempting to cross the street in a southwesterly direction.—Gibbs v. Dayton, 166 Mich. 263.

¶ 1523. The question of presumptive negligence of an unlicensed chauffeur in running over a child will not be considered when the declaration fails to aver negligence in such particular.—Barger v. Bissell, 188 Mich. 366.

§ 387. Burden of proof and presumptions.

Weight and sufficiency of evidence, see post § 391.

Instructions as to burden of proof and presumptions, see post § 406.

In actions for injuries from defective highways, see ante § 280.

Burden and presumptions as to negligence in general, including res ipsa loquitur rule, see Negligence, V.

General law as to burden of proof and presumptions, see Evidence, II.

¶ 1524. In an action to recover damages arising from a collision on a highway, the burden of proof is on the plaintiff to prove negligence and misconduct on the other's part, and to show ordinary care and diligence on his own.—Daniels v. Clegg, 28 Mich. 32.

¶ 1525. A bicyclist has the burden of disproving his negligence when he rides up behind another, who is walking where he has a right to walk, without giving any warning, strikes him with his vehicle.—Myers v. Hinds, 110 Mich. 300.

¶ 1526. The burden of proof rests on the plaintiff in an action for personal injuries, to show the negligence of the defendant in driving an automobile into the rear of the vehicle in which the former was riding.—Grogitzki v. Detroit Ambulance Co., 186 Mich. 374.

¶ 1527. The burden does not rest on the defendant in an action for personal injuries caused by an automobile, to show that he exercised ordinary care and prudence in operating the car, since it was incumbent on the plaintiff to establish the negligence of the defendant.—Grogitzki v. Detroit Ambulance Co., 186 Mich. 374.

¶ 1528. The burden of proof in an action against the owner of an automobile to recover for the death of a pedestrian who was killed while attempting to cross a street by such automobile, which was driven by an agent of defendant, to show that the defendant, through its agent, was guilty of negligence that was the proximate cause of the injuries to the deceased, and that the deceased was not guilty of carelessness or negligence that caused, or contributed to cause, the injuries that he received, is on the plaintiff.—Amley v. Saginaw Milling Co., 195 Mich. 189.

¶ 1529. There is no presumption of negligence in not turning out of the traveled track to avoid colliding with a team hitched by the roadside, but negligence must be proved.—Joslin v. Le Baron, 44 Mich. 160.

¶ 1530. The fact that an accident occurred to a child does not raise a presumption that the driver of an automobile was negligent.—Barger v. Bissell, 188 Mich. 366.

¶ 1531. No presumption of negligence arises from the fact that an automobile in charge of the defendant's servant, ran into the rear of the plaintiff's vehicle and injured him.—Grogitzki v. Detroit Ambulance Co., 186 Mich. 374.

¶ 1532. Where the undisputed testimony shows that at the time a pedestrian was struck by an automobile it was being operated on the wrong side of the street in attempting to pass around another vehicle, a presumption of negligence on the part of the driver of the automobile arises.—Winckowski v. Dodge, 183 Mich. 303.

¶ 1533. Father's ownership of automobile which son was shown to have been driving at time of accident, to plaintiff's intestate, held under the evidence, to give rise to no presumption of liability on the part of the father.—Johnston v. Cornelius, 193 Mich. 115.

Application of doctrine of res ipsa loquitur in action by trespasser for injuries by, see note, 5 N. C. C. A. 33-35.

§ 388. Admissibility of evidence.

As to particular evidence or issues, see post §§ 389, 390.

Weight and sufficiency of evidence, see post § 391 et seq.

Judicial notice as to speeds, see Evidence, I.

Judicial notice as to automobile speeds, see Evidence ¶ 114.

General law of evidence, see Evidence.

Evidence of ill will to show intentional collision, see also Evidence ¶ 542.

Admissions and declarations by agents as evidence against principal, see Evidence, VII, C, D.

Proper scope of cross-examination, see Examination of Witnesses § 51.

Cross-examination of party as to circumstances of injury, see Examination of Witnesses § 52.

¶ 1534. In an action for an injury caused by a street collision it is proper to show the position of plaintiff's vehicle and how it came there; to prove that he was not in fault in occupying that position, and what the result would have been if he had done differently; to show how the other driver handled his team and his whip, and to testify that, knowing plaintiff's position, he was careless.—Joslin v. Grand Rapids Ice & Coal Co., 53 Mich. 322.

¶ 1535. In an action for damages sustained by a collision on the highway, it appeared that defendant, who was approaching plaintiff in a buggy on the opposite side of the road, drove across, and ran into and injured plaintiff's horse. Held, that evidence of defendant's ill-will towards plaintiff, before and up to the time of the collision, was properly admitted, as bearing upon his intent or motive in so crossing the road.—Tyler v. Nelson, 109 Mich. 37.

Evidence as to noise made by automobile in action for personal injuries caused by horse taking fright, see note, 1 N. C. C. A. 117.

§ 389. ——To show notice of horse's vicious character.

See also post ¶ 1545, and see Animals § 16.

¶ 1536. In an action by one, who while on her front lawn, was injured by a runaway horse, evidence that the driver of the horse had heard of its running away before, is admissible as tending to show notice of its vicious character.—Dyer v. Peoples Ice Co., 188 Mich. 203.

¶ 1537. In a personal injury case where the plaintiff was injured by a runaway team of horses, evidence of the man who sold the horses to the agent who had purchased them for defendant that he had been informed by the former owner that they had run away once was admissible against the objection that it was too remote, it bearing upon the character of the team and tending to show notice to defendant of the necessity of care and caution.—Warren v. Porter, 144 Mich. 699.

§ 390. ——Negligent driving or handling of motor vehicles.

¶ 1538. Where plaintiff was struck by defendant's automobile and it is claimed that defendant was running without lights contrary to statute, evidence showing that other automobiles were lighted at the time is admissible as bearing on the question whether it was sufficiently dark to warrant the carrying of lights.—Schock v. Cooling, 175 Mich. 313.

¶ 1539. The testimony of a locomotive engineer as to the speed of an automobile which is passing should be received in an action for damages for personal injuries against the owner unless it is clearly apparent that it could be of no value to the jury.—Harnau v. Haight, 189 Mich. 600, 13 N. C. C. A. 566.

¶ 1540. A city ordinance requiring slowly moving vehicles to keep as closely as possible to the curb on the right so as to permit more swiftly moving vehicles free passage on their left is immaterial as evidence to show contributory negligence in an action by a bicycle rider against the owner of an automobile for damages for personal injuries received as a result of an apparent collision while going in the same direction, and while plaintiff was near the center of the street, where the plaintiff's theory was that the defendant while driving his unlighted automobile overtook plaintiff and ran plaintiff down, and defendant's theory was that his car was well lighted, and that plaintiff was not riding in front of his car, but at one side, and turned as defendant came by and ran into the automobile.—Harnau v. Haight, 189 Mich. 600, 13 N. C. C. A. 566.

¶ 1541. In an action for damages for personal injuries alleged to be due to the negligent driving of an automobile which frightened plaintiff's horse so that it tipped over the buggy in which plaintiff was riding, held that the evidence of plaintiff and her daughter, who were accustomed to driving horses, to meeting automobiles and to riding on trains, as to the speed of the automobile, was admissible, especially as the accident occurred in the day time, and an unobstructed view of the automobile could be had for 15 to 20 rods.—Faulkner v. Payne, 191 Mich. 263.

¶ 1542. In an action for damages for personal injuries sustained as the result of a buggy in which plaintiff was riding at night on the right side of an unlighted street being struck in the rear by an automobile having small kerosene lights, but no headlight burning, the exclusion of evidence on behalf of defendant as to why defendant did not have his headlight on, held to be correct, where the count alleging negligence in failure to light the car was withdrawn.—Jolman v. Alberts, 192 Mich. 25.

¶ 1543. In an action for a collision between automobiles at a street intersection the attorney for the defendant held not to have been unduly restricted in cross-examining the plaintiff as to whether he could have stopped his car in time to avoid the accident after observing the danger.—Brown v. Mitts, 187 Mich. 469.

What evidence admissible as to speed of motor vehicles, see note, 13 N. C. C. A. 566-586.

§ 391. Weight and sufficiency of evidence.

See also ante ¶ 1522.

As to operation of motor vehicles, see post § 392.

As to contributory negligence, see post § 393.

Admissibility of evidence, see ante § 388 et seq.

¶ 1544. The failure of a driver to exercise due care and caution in attempting to pass another upon the highway is not conclusively established by evidence that he did not observe the law of the road.—Tyler v. Nelson, 109 Mich. 37.

¶ 1545. Testimony of previous conduct of a horse in breaking its tie strap and running away, and that the defendant knew of this and thereafter had frequently taken the precaution of unhitching the horse from the buggy when tying him for any length of time, is sufficient to support a verdict and judgment for the plaintiff for injuries received through the horse breaking away and colliding with the plaintiff's vehicle.—Sinsabaugh v. Brown, 126 Mich. 538.

¶ 1546. Where, in an action for an injury from a collision caused by the negligence, or design, of defendant's teamster, the latter has testified that he was unable to restrain his horses, and that they were running against his will, it cannot be held indisputable that the damage was done by the teamster's wantonness.—Vernon v. Cornwell, 104 Mich. 62.

¶ 1547. The presumption of fault in a driver of a vehicle where he fails to turn to the right of the center of the road upon meeting another vehicle may be overcome by evidence showing reasonable grounds for his choice of position and that his presence there in no way interfered with the free passage of the other party.—Buxton v. Ainsworth, 138 Mich. 532.

¶ 1548. In an action for personal injuries caused by collision of two teams on the highway, testimony that the road looked as though gravel had been dumped, one load in a place, and had not been worked down any by travel, is sufficient to show that the gravel on the road had not been leveled.—Buxton v. Ainsworth, 138 Mich. 532.

§ 392. ——Negligent operation of motor vehicles.

¶ 1549. In a personal injury suit based on an automobile accident, proof of an absence of lights on the car is testimony tending to prove negligence in view of statutory requirements.—Zoltovski v. Gzella, 159 Mich. 620.

¶ 1550. A witness in a personal injury suit against an automobile owner testified that the machine was going "a good deal faster than a horse trots, and pretty fast." Held, the evidence did not establish the fact that the car was exceeding the ordinance speed limit or going with excessive rapidity. —Zoltovski v. Gzella, 159 Mich. 620.

¶ 1551. Plaintiff sued for personal injuries arising from the running away of his team caused by the negligent driving of defendant's automobile. There was clear testimony showing the excessive speed of the automobile and as to defendant's defective control of the same. The evidence was not definite as to whether or not defendant's automobile actually struck plaintiff's team. Held, the court properly refused to grant a new trial for defendant on the ground that the testimony was vague and uncertain.—Matla v. Rapid Motor Vehicle Co., 160 Mich. 639.

¶ 1552. The fact that an automobile when it struck a pedestrian, was not running in excess of the statutory speed limit in nonbusiness sections of the city, does not conclusively establish the driver's freedom from negligence.—Winckowski v. Dodge, 183 Mich. 303.

¶ 1553. The violation of a speed ordinance by the driver of a motorcycle, with whom another is riding, in attempting to cross a street in front of an approaching automobile is merely evidence of negligence. —Weber v. Beeson, 197 Mich. 607.

¶ 1554. A prima facie case of negligence on the part of the driver of an automobile, is shown where the undisputed testimony establishes a causal connection between the injury of a pedestrian and the negligent operation of such vehicle on the wrong side of the street at the time of the injury.—Winckowski v. Dodge, 183 Mich. 303.

¶ 1555. Testimony tending to show that an automobile running from twelve to fifteen miles an hour, was swung to the left side of a narrow street in order to pass on the wrong side of an approaching loaded vehicle which was closely followed by another, and that the automobile without slacking speed was turned diagonally across the street into the narrow space between the two vehicles, when a child who had been riding on the rear of the first vehicle, suddenly jumped off and as he started towards the side of the street was struck and injured by the automobile, is sufficient to support a finding that the latter vehicle was not being operated as required by statute with due regard to the safety of persons and traffic on the street.—Winckowski v. Dodge, 183 Mich. 303.

¶ 1556. In an action against the owner of an automobile for damages for injuries to a seven-year-old child sustained while endeavoring to cross a street diagonally and away from a well equipped automobile which was being driven slowly, within the speed limit, by an experienced driver, the view of the child being obscured by a high topped grocery wagon alongside the curb, evidence held insufficient to show negligence in failing to stop the car sooner upon sight of the child.—Barger v. Bissell, 188 Mich. 366.

¶ 1557. In an action for damages on account of the death of one who was struck by an automobile driven by the son of the owner, in which action the owner of the car and his son were both joint defendants, held, under the undisputed evidence, that the owner of the car was not guilty as alleged.—Johnston v. Cornelius, 193 Mich. 115.

¶ 1558. In an action for damages on account of the death of one who was killed by an automobile driven by the son of the owner of the car in which the owner and son are joint defendants, contradictory statements in the evidence of the son which tended to impeach him, held not to show any liability on the part of the father where such liability would not be shown if the son's testimony were eliminated from the case.—Johnston v. Cornelius, 193 Mich. 115.

§ 393. ——Contributory negligence.

¶ 1559. In a suit to recover for the death of plaintiff's intestate caused by a collision between intestate's bicycle and defendant's automobile, where the evidence shows that as the automobile was running south in the center of the street, the intestate got on his bicycle on the east curb and rode in a southwesterly direction in front of the automobile, and the evidence does not show whether or not the intestate, in mounting his wheel, looked about him on the street, the plaintiff fails to discharge the burden of proof resting upon him to show absence of contributory negligence on the part of decedent.—Gibbs v. Dayton, 166 Mich. 263.

¶ 1560. Plaintiff, a teamster of mature years and in possession of all his faculties was struck by a taxicab while crossing the street. It appeared that the day was clear and bright, that the street was comparatively deserted, it being Sunday, and that an unobstructed view for half a mile could be had along the street. Defendant's testimony tended to show that the automobile was not running at excessive speed. Plaintiff testified that he did not see or hear the machine. Held, that plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence.—Tolmie v. Woodward Taxicab Co., 178 Mich. 426.

¶ 1561. After a careful trial of an action for personal injuries sustained by a boy 13 years of age who was run over by a motor truck, the court is justified in declining to grant a new trial on the ground of alleged discrepancies in the boy's testimony given on the several trials of the case, as to whether he rode toward the curb on his bicycle after passing the truck in question and before he fell; since such discrepancies merely presented a question for argument to the jury.—Goosen v. Packard Motor Car Co., 174 Mich. 654.

§ 394. Questions of law and fact.

As to particular matters, see post §§ 395-398.

As to contributory negligence, see post §§ 399-403.

Occasion for directed verdict, see post § 404.

Necessity, propriety and sufficiency of instructions, see post §§ 405-410.

In actions for injuries from defects in highways, see ante XII, H, 4.

In action for negligent driving in private way, see post § 421.

¶ 1562. Usually, when persons having an equal right to use a highway come into collision and one is injured and brings an action, the question of his due care and of defendant's negligence are questions for the jury.—Hill v. Lappley, 199 Mich. 369.

¶ 1563. In an action for injuries caused by a collision with defendant's truck, the evidence as to whether there was a driver on the truck at the time of the accident is sufficient to go to the jury; where the plaintiff testifies that as he fell from his buggy he had a glance at the driver, still on his box, and a policeman testifies that immediately afterwards he conversed with the driver, still on the box.—Silsby v. Michigan Car Co., 95 Mich. 204.

¶ 1564. In an action for injuries received by being run over by defendant's runaway team, the testimony of the team's driver and of other witnesses was positive that the team was hitched by means of a strap and weight. Plaintiff testified on direct examination that she passed by the horses while they were standing, and that they were not fastened. On cross-examination she testified that the reason why she knew they were not hitched was because the horses stood with their faces towards her; that she meant that they were not hitched to some post or object, and her reason for so stating was that she did not see any post or object to which they could have been hitched. Held, that plaintiff was in a position to see, and that her testimony elicited upon cross-examination is not such as to justify the court in holding that there was no evidence to show that the team was unhitched.—Doyle v. Detroit Omnibus Line Co., 105 Mich. 195.

¶ 1565. Where in an action for personal injuries sustained by being struck by a runaway horse belonging to defendant, the testimony fairly raised the question as to whether the driver had hitched the horse, the case was properly submitted to the jury.—Jordan v. Le Messurier, 155 Mich. 188.

¶ 1566. In an action by one who rode on a motorcycle with another person against the owner of an automobile to recover for personal injuries due to the colliding of defendant's automobile with the rear wheel of the motorcycle, held that it was a question for the jury whether the collision occurred on the street on which plaintiff was proceeding or on the intersecting street from which defendant turned to go in the same direction as plaintiff.—Weber v. Beeson, 197 Mich. 607.

¶ 1567. The question of the ownership of an automobile which caused an injury was properly submitted to the jury when depending on conflicting testimony.—Webber v. Billings, 184 Mich. 119.

¶ 1568. In an action for damages for injury to an automobile due to a collision with another automobile held that it was a question for the jury whether the driver of defendant's car was operating it with defendant's knowledge and consent.—Cady v. Doxtator, 193 Mich. 170.

§ 395. ——Negligence or mismanagement of horses.

¶ 1569. Whether it is negligence toward other drivers and horses to drive across a city street a horse harnessed, and drawing a whiffletree with a long chain attached, such as is commonly used in moving lumber, is a question for the jury, especially where the driver is shown to have been negligent in his manner of driving.—Bueck v. Lindsay, 65 Mich. 105.

¶ 1570. In an action for negligence in driving a certain horse and express wagon over plaintiff, there was evidence that the horse was nervous and prancing and that he was hurrying across a railroad track when plaintiff was knocked down. Held, that the question whether the driving was at too high a rate of speed was for the jury.—Post v. United States Express Co., 76 Mich. 574.

¶ 1571. To leave a horse unhitched is not negligence per se, but is to be judged as negligence by considering the temper of the horse, and the particular circumstances under which he was left, and the question is for the jury.—Doyle v. Detroit Omnibus Line Co., 105 Mich. 195.

¶ 1572. Where a witness testifies that plaintiff, a child, started to cross the street, and that defendant's milk wagon crossed from the other side, and drove toward the plaintiff, and up against the gutter, in a fast trot, and injured the plaintiff, there is evidence to go to the jury, of defendant's negligence.—May v. Hill, 152 Mich. 158.

¶ 1573. Plaintiff was at work as a street cleaner on the traveled portion between the street-car track and the curb, the strip being twenty-two feet in width. There was evidence that he was facing the west; that his scraper was making some noise; that he did not hear defendant's carriage approach from behind; that his companion working on the opposite side did not hear it; that it was daylight; and that defendant's horse was under her control. Defendant ran into plaintiff and injured him. Held, there was sufficient evidence to require the court to submit the question of defendant's negligence to the jury.—O'Donnell v. Lange, 162 Mich. 654.

¶ 1574. In an action for damages for personal injuries received as a result of being knocked down by a runaway horse, in which the evidence was conflicting as to the disposition of the horse to run away, and as to the sufficiency of the bridle used, held that defendant's negligence was a question for the jury.—Laskowski v. People's Ice Co., 190 Mich. 331.

¶ 1575. In an action by the driver of a horse and light wagon against an ice company to recover damages for personal injuries sustained as the result of a collision between plaintiff's wagon and defendant's wagon, while attempting to pass, alleged to be due to the defendant's horse, which was proceeding without a driver, turning to the left towards the curb when plaintiff's horse had passed defendant's horse, and bringing the rear inside wheels of the wagons in collision, held, on conflicting evidence, that it was a question for the jury whether defendant's horse turned towards the curb and caused the collision.—Hogendyk v. Consumers' Ice Co., 194 Mich. 631.

§ 396. ——Negligence or misuse of automotive vehicles.

¶ 1576. Whether, in a particular case, there is negligence in the management of a steam-engine as a means of locomotion in a highway is a question of fact for the jury.—Macomber v. Nichols, 34 Mich. 212.

¶ 1577. The use of a steam-engine as a means of locomotion on a highway is not necessarily a nuisance, and if injury arises from such use the question is one of fact whether negligence was imputable from the conduct of the parties, and to whom; it is immaterial that the engine was calculated to frighten horses of ordinary gentleness.—Macomber v. Nichols, 34 Mich. 212.

¶ 1578. The degree of care required of either the driver of a horse or the chauffeur of an automobile is governed by the character of the agency employed; and whether it is the exercise of due care for an automobile driver to run his machine in the dark without the warning to one approaching from the opposite direction which a headlight affords, is a question for the jury.—Wright v. Crane, 142 Mich. 508.

¶ 1579. In a suit for personal injuries from a runaway of plaintiff's horse, which was frightened by defendant's automobile, there was contradictory evidence as to whether defendant stopped when signaled to do so, and whether he gave a share of the road. Held, the question of defendant's negligence was properly left to the jury.—Chapman v. Strong, 162 Mich. 623.

¶ 1580. Where plaintiff was struck by defendant's automobile, there being evidence that defendant was driving his car at excessive speed without giving proper warning, the question whether defendant is guilty of negligence is properly submitted to the jury.—Schock v. Cooling, 175 Mich. 313.

¶ 1581. Plaintiff's testimony, in an action for injuries caused by an automobile collision, that he was driving his car at the rate of eight or ten miles an hour when he was struck by an automobile coming along an intersecting street at thirty miles an hour; that he saw the car when it was twenty feet away, and that his car was carried sideways across the street by the force of the collision, held to justify submission of the case to the jury.—Andries v. Everitt-Metzger-Flanders Company, 177 Mich. 110,

¶ 1582. Where a loaded wagon closely followed by another was turning into an intersecting street, and a small boy who was riding on the rear of the wagon jumped off, and as he started to run to the opposite side of the street, was struck and injured by an automobile coming from the opposite direction, which in violation of ordinance was turned to the left in order to pass around the loaded wagon and between it and the following one, the question of the negligence of the driver of the automobile is for the jury, where no warning of the approach of the automobile was given, and the testimony as to whether it might have been stopped in time to have averted the accident was conflicting.—Winckowski v. Dodge, 183 Mich. 303.

¶ 1583. Whether the circumstances justified the driving of an automobile on the wrong side of a street at the time of a collision with a pedestrian, is a question for the jury, and not one of law for the court. —Winckowski v. Dodge, 183 Mich. 303.

¶ 1584. The question of the negligence of the defendant whose automobile, to the injury of the plaintiff, was run into the rear of a vehicle in which the latter was riding, is for the jury.—Grogitzki v. Detroit Ambulance Co., 186 Mich. 374.

¶ 1585. In an action against the owner of an automobile truck for the negligent death of a pedestrian who was on or near the sidewalk in front of the driveway leading into defendant's building and was walking diagonally away from the building and an outcoming truck, where it appeared that defendant's driver saw decedent turn back, upon hearing some one call, held that the question of the negligence of the driver was for the jury.—Tuttle v. Briscoe Mfg. Co., 190 Mich. 22, 12 N. C. C. A. 909.

¶ 1586. In an action for damages for personal injuries sustained as a result of the buggy in which plaintiff was driving on the right side of an unlighted street at night being struck in the rear by an automobile having small kerosene lights, but no headlight, burning, where there was evidence on the part of the plaintiff that an approaching automobile gave such a bright light that he could not see clearly, that he was operating his car when and just before the collision occurred at a speed of four or five miles per hour, that he did not see the buggy until he was within 8 or 10 feet of it, that he did not intentionally strike it, and that he thought he could not go any farther out into the street without being struck by the approaching car, and that he could pass the buggy in which plaintiff was sitting, and other witnesses testified that they saw defendant's car approaching 150 to 200 feet, running close to the curb, and the count alleging negligence in driving an improperly lighted automobile was withdrawn, held that the question whether defendant was prudent or careless in driving his car upon the buggy was for the jury.—Jolman v. Alberts, 192 Mich. 25.

¶ 1587. In an action against the owner of an automobile to recover for the death of a person who was killed by defendant's automobile while walking diagonally across a street with a companion, held under conflicting evidence, that it was a question for the jury whether defendant's driver, who had just turned his car around and was proceeding on his way, was guilty of negligence and whether deceased was guilty of contributory negligence.—Amley v. Saginaw Milling Co., 195 Mich. 189.

¶ 1588. In an action against the owner of an automobile to recover for the death of a traffic policeman held, on conflicting evidence, that it was a question for the jury whether defendant's automobile was proceeding at a rate greater than 10 miles per hour when it struck deceased.—Wilson v. Johnson, 195 Mich. 94.

¶ 1589. In an action to recover damages for injuries to plaintiff's automobile from a collision with defendant's automobile, whether defendant should have discovered the alleged negligence of plaintiff in driving and operating his car in time to avoid such collision held for the jury.—Whitman v. Collin, 196 Mich. 540.

¶ 1590. In an action by one riding on a motorcycle with another person against the owner of an automobile to recover for personal injuries due to the colliding of defendant's automobile with the rear wheel of the motorcycle, where it appeared that when they reached the south line of an intersecting street they stopped for a moment and, seeing nothing to interfere, proceeded to cross the street; that when the street car tracks were reached an automobile was observed on the north side of the intersecting street 150 feet away coming at an unusual speed; that they thought they had time to cross; that the driver of the motorcycle blew his horn and proceeded north on his way at an increased speed in excess of that allowed by a city ordinance, and that the traffic on the intersecting street had the right of way, held that it was a question for the jury whether plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence. —Weber v. Beeson, 197 Mich. 607.

¶ 1591. In an action by an occupant of an automobile against the owner of another automobile to recover damages for injuries sustained in a collision, where it appeared that the accident occurred at the southeast corner of a street intersecting a north and south street, from which latter street the car in which plaintiff was riding had turned to go east, defendant's car coming from the east and the driver intending to go south, held that it was a question for the jury as to whether defendant was negligent or plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence.—Hopkins v. Tripp, 198 Mich. 94.

§ 397. ——Negligence in coasting on street.

¶ 1592. It is not negligence per se to coast on a public street.—Burford v. City of Grand Rapids, 53 Mich. 98; Burt v. Staffeld, 121 Mich. 390.

¶ 1593. It is not negligence per se to coast on a public street, but a question for the jury is presented, as to negligence in coasting, where there is evidence that the coaster has attained a very high rate of speed, and is not able to control the sled so as to prevent collision with pedestrians.—Burt v. Staffeld, 121 Mich. 390.

§ 398. ——Negligence in driving or turning animals on way.

¶ 1594. In an action for injuries received from a wild bull, two and one-half years old, driven in the street, it is for the jury to say whether such driving with the animal's head tied to one foot, after notice that it would be safer to lead him by a ring in his nose, and with knowledge of his wildness and the nature of such an animal, was negligence.—Barnum v. Terpening, 75 Mich. 557.

¶ 1595. In an action for personal injuries the fact that the bull which attacked defendant had never attacked any one prior to the injury sued for is a circumstance to be considered by the jury as bearing upon the question of the defendant's negligence in driving it in a highway in a given manner.—Barnum v. Terpening, 75 Mich. 557.

§ 399. Contributory negligence as fact or law question.

Of particular persons, see post §§ 400-403.
In driving on private way, see post § 421.
Instructions as to contributory negligence, see § 410.

¶ 1596. Plaintiff was at work as a street cleaner on the traveled portion between the street-car track and the curb, the strip being twenty-two feet in width. There was evidence that he was facing the west; that his scraper was making some noise; that he did not hear defendant's carriage approach from behind; that his companion working on the opposite side did not hear it; that it was daylight; and that defendant's horse was under her control. Defendant ran into plaintiff and injured him. Held, that plaintiff was not obliged to neglect his work to avoid a collision and the question of his contributory negligence was for the jury.—O'Donnell v. Lange, 162 Mich. 654.

¶ 1597. In an action against the owner of an automobile to recover for the death of a traffic policeman, who was killed near the south crossing of a north and south street, while proceeding towards the center of the street, by defendant's automobile which was being driven in a northwesterly direction over the crossing and to the left of the center of the north and south street, where the evidence was conflicting as to whether the deceased, when the car had approached to within a couple of lengths from him, nodded his head towards the west and indicated that the car should go that way, held that it was a question for the jury whether the deceased was guilty of contributory negligence.—Wilson v. Johnson, 195 Mich. 94.

§ 400. ——Of persons driving or handling horses.

¶ 1598. The question of whether turning a horse suddenly in order to avoid a collision was in the exercise of ordinary care, is one for the jury.—Buxton v. Ainsworth, 153 Mich. 315.

¶ 1599. In a suit for personal injuries from a runaway of plaintiff's horse, which was frightened by defendant's automobile, the evidence indicated that while the horse was a spirited one, it could be controlled; that plaintiff did not see the automobile until he had started down the hill; that he could not well turn around; that there was room to pass; that plaintiff would have been successful in passing if defendant had turned to the right and given part of the highway; and that the defendant paid no attention to the plaintiff. Held, the question of contributory negligence was properly left to the jury.—Chapman v. Strong, 162 Mich. 623.

¶ 1600. In a suit against defendant automobile owner for an injury to plaintiff from the running away of his team caused by the negligent driving of defendant, held, it is for the jury to say under disputed evidence whether the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence in the way he handled his team.—Matla v. Rapid Motor Vehicle Co., 160 Mich. 639.

¶ 1601. In an action by the driver of a horse and light wagon against an ice company to recover damages for personal injuries sustained as the result of a collision between plaintiff's wagon and defendant's wagon, while attempting to pass, where it appeared that plaintiff's wagon, at the time he turned to go in the opposite direction from that in which he had been going, was on a line 3 or 4 feet from the ice wagon and 8 or 10 feet from the curb on his right and that defendant's horse, which was unattended, after the horses passed each other, turned sharply to the right so as to bring the rear wheels in collision, held that it was a question for the jury whether plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence in not driving closer to the curb or in not watching the final clearance of the wagons more closely.—Hogendyk v. Consumers' Ice Co., 194 Mich. 631.

¶ 1602. In an action to recover damages for injuries sustained as the result of the horse drawing the wagon in which plaintiff was riding becoming frightened at an automobile while passed to the right, and running away, evidence held insufficient to show that plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law in failing to turn to the right to allow the automobile to pass.—Kasprzak v. Chapman, 197 Mich. 552.

¶ 1603. In an action by the owner of a team against the master of a driver of an automobile to recover damages for injury to the off horse of plaintiff's team, due to a collision at the northeast corner of a street intersection, when plaintiff's driver, who had driven from the north, was endeavoring to turn to the east on the north side of the east and west street, and defendant's driver, who had been driving west on the east and west street was endeavoring to turn to the north at such intersection, and it appeared that the automobile driver was driving his car at an excessive speed and did not see plaintiff's driver until close to the street intersection, held that it was question for the jury whether plaintiff's driver was guilty of contributory negligence.—Eberle Brewing Co. v. Briscoe Motor Co., 194 Mich. 140.

§ 401. ——Of persons driving or handling motor vehicles.

¶ 1604. In an action by the owner of a two-passenger motorcycle against the owner of a motor truck for damages for personal injuries sustained as the result of a collision when defendant's motor truck, which was ahead of plaintiff's motorcycle, started to turn to the left across the street before reaching a street intersection, where the evidence was conflicting as to the rate of speed of both the motorcycle and the motor truck and whether defendant gave a signal as he was about to turn, held that it was a question for the jury whether plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence.—Greenleaf v. Lambert, 192 Mich. 411.

¶ 1605. In an action to recover damages for injuries to plaintiff's automobile from a collision with defendant's automobile, whether plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence held for the jury.—Whitman v. Collin, 196 Mich. 540.

§ 402. ——Of bicyclists.

¶ 1606. A boy eighteen years of age, experienced in riding on a bicycle, is guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law where at a street crossing in the daytime he clearly sees an automobile 100 feet away coming down the wrong side of the intersecting street at the rate of twenty miles an hour and continues on his way without looking again until within ten feet of the automobile, and it is too late to avoid a collision.—Ude v. Fuller, 187 Mich. 483.

¶ 1607. In an action by a bicycle rider against the driver of an automobile to recover damages for personal injuries sustained in a collision at a street intersection occurring after plaintiff had crossed the intersecting street and defendant had turned on the latter street to go in the same direction as plaintiff, held that the questions of negligence and contributory negligence were for the jury.—Vezina v. Shermer, 198 Mich. 757.

¶ 1608. A bicycle rider who is riding on the right side of a paved street beyond the intersection with a cross street with his head down because of the wind and is not on the lookout for vehicles going in the opposite direction on the same side of the street and does not see a runaway horse which was running on the other side of the street in the direction opposite to that in which he was going when it turned and crossed the street and ran down the same side of the street in the opposite direction to which he is going and collides with him, causing his death, is not guilty of contributory negligence, as a matter of law, so as to bar recovery for his death in an action against the driver of an automobile which collided with the wagon to which the horse was attached and caused the horse to run away.—Dier v. Voorhees, 200 Mich. 510.

§ 403. ——Of pedestrians.

¶ 1609. In an action for personal injuries received in a public street through being struck by a horse and buggy driven by defendant whether plaintiff was contributorily negligent in turning his back to defendant's approaching team, both being in a street where there were no other teams and there being sufficient room for defendant to pass, was for the jury to determine.—Lazell v. Kapp, 83 Mich. 36.

¶ 1610. Question of negligence and contributory negligence held to be for the jury where plaintiff's wife, on a rainy night but in a well lighted street was struck by defendant's horse which was being driven at the rate of six miles an hour, while she was proceeding from the curb a distance of 24 feet to a street car which she was about to board, it being the duty of both to exercise reasonable care.—Stroub v. Meyer, 132 Mich. 75.

¶ 1611. A pedestrian crossing a street is not required to exercise the same degree of care as when crossing a railroad, and the question of contributory negligence of a pedestrian, injured by colliding with a coasting sled is for the jury, where such pedestrian knew of the coasting on the street, which was icy, the collision occurring in the evening, when there was no artificial light, although the evidence did not show that the pedestrian looked up the hill or knew that the sled was uncontrollable.—Burt v. Staffeld, 121 Mich. 390.

¶ 1612. The failure of a woman 74 years old, who had seen a vehicle approach 3 or 4 rods away when she stepped from the curb to cross the street in a diagonal direction, to look again in the direction of the approaching vehicle, was not negligence as a matter of law.—Graham v. Evening Press Co., 135 Mich. 298.

¶ 1613. In an action for personal injuries sustained by a woman 74 years old, who after looking in both directions before stepping into the street and seeing defendant's horse and wagon about 3 or 4 rods away, started to cross diagonally and was struck by the horse when she had traveled about 20 feet from the curb, the questions of the negligence of defendant and contributory negligence of plaintiff, were for the jury.—Graham v. Evening Press Co., 135 Mich. 298.

¶ 1614. In an action for injuries caused by being run over by an automobile, evidence that the plaintiff, in getting off his wagon, looked and saw no automobile, took out some packages, and had taken five or six steps when he was struck by defendant's automobile, did not show that plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law, but the question was one for the jury.—Gerhard v. Ford Motor Co., 155 Mich. 618.

¶ 1615. Plaintiff testified that in crossing the street she stopped between the tracks of the street railway and looked in both directions; that she proceeded to cross the street and was struck by defendant's automobile; that no horn or signal was given of the approach of said automobile; that the large lamps in front were not lighted; and that the two oil lamps, while burning, were obscured by the rain covering the glass. There was evidence that plaintiff was pushed on the pavement some sixty feet after being struck. Defendant testified that he stopped his automobile to wait for plaintiff to cross; that he saw her stop on said tracks and supposing she was waiting for him to pass, started up again; and that he was going only about seven miles an hour. Held, under said evidence the questions of contributory negligence were properly left to the jury.—Bouma v. Dubois, 169 Mich. 422.

¶ 1616. Where plaintiff, while walking across the highway, was struck by defendant's automobile, the question whether plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence is properly submitted to the jury.—Schock v. Cooling, 175 Mich. 313.

¶ 1617. In an action against the owner of an automobile truck for the negligent death of a pedestrian who was on or near the sidewalk in front of a driveway leading into a building, where there was evidence that the driver blew the horn and that decedent, who was walking away from the truck, did not hear the signal, held that the question whether decedent was unaware of his danger until too late was a question for the jury.—Tuttle v. Briscoe Mfg. Co., 190 Mich. 22, 12 N. C. C. A. 909.

¶ 1618. In an action against the owner of an automobile truck for the negligent death of a pedestrian who was on or near the sidewalk in front of the driveway leading into a building and was walking diagonally away from the building and an outcoming truck, and in which the evidence was conflicting as to whether, while on his way across the driveway, decedent turned back, upon hearing some one call, and suddenly stepped in front of the oncoming truck when it was so near him that the driver by exercising ordinary vigilance could not have avoided injuring him, held that the contributory negligence of decedent in the emergency situation was a question for the jury.—Tuttle v. Briscoe Mfg. Co., 190 Mich. 22, 12 N. C. C. A. 909.

§ 404. Directing verdict.

Weight and sufficiency of evidence, see ante § 321.

General law as to directing verdict, see Directing Verdict.

¶ 1619. Plaintiff was riding his bicycle north on Washington Street. At Tenth Street, intersecting Washington Street at right angles, plaintiff was along the east side of a wagon going in the same direction with him. Defendant was coming in his automobile from the north on Washington Street, and at the intersection instead of keeping to the right, as required by section 16, Act No. 196, Pub. Acts 1905, he swerved diagonally towards plaintiff, and injured him. Held, the court properly refused to direct a verdict for defendant on the ground of his lack of negligence or on the ground of plaintiff's contributory negligence.—Reed v. Martin, 160 Mich. 253.

¶ 1620. Plaintiff was driving west on a street. When she approached the cross street she saw a street car approaching from the north, and stopped a few feet from the track to let it pass. Defendant coming from the south in an automobile ran into her carriage and injured her. Held, the court properly refused to direct a verdict for the defendant on the ground that she was as a matter of law guilty of contributory negligence.—Ketchum v. Fillingham, 162 Mich. 704.

¶ 1621. Upon seeing defendant's automobile coming over a hill some twenty-five rods distant, on the public road, the plaintiff's horse became restive and finally reared upon plaintiff, causing plaintiff's injury. Plaintiff clung to the horse's head stall and gave defendant no signal to stop. Held, the court improperly directed a verdict for defendant, as the questions of negligence and contributory negligence should have been submitted to the jury.—Cusick v. Kinney, 164 Mich. 25.

¶ 1622. In an action for injuries to plaintiff's automobile caused by collision with a runaway team, it was not shown that defendant's driver was negligent nor that the harness, sleigh or other appliances were defective. The court directed a verdict for defendant on the ground that the plaintiff could not maintain the action because of failure to comply with the statute as to licenses. Held, that a directed verdict could be sustained on the ground that plaintiff had failed to show that defendant was negligent.—Stuch v. Town, 178 Mich. 477.

¶ 1623. A motion to direct a verdict for the defendant in an action for a collision between automobiles, on the ground of the contributory negligence of the plaintiff in not stopping his car on observing the defendant approaching at an unlawful rate of speed, held properly denied.—Brown v. Mitts, 187 Mich. 469.

¶ 1624. In an action against the owner of a wagon to recover damages for personal injuries sustained as the result of plaintiff being run over by defendant's wagon which was being driven by defendant's son, while plaintiff was attempting to cross to the east side of a north and south street, and where it appeared that defendant's wagon had been driven from the east on the east and west street and had turned south on the right-hand side of the north and south street behind an automobile which obscured plaintiff's view, held that the evidence as to the negligence of the driver and contributory negligence of the plaintiff being conflicting, the court did not err in refusing to direct a verdict in favor of defendant.—Hook v. Soloman, 194 Mich. 517.

§ 405. Instructions.

Particular instructions, see post §§ 406-410.
Law and fact questions, see ante §§ 393-404.
General law of instructions, see Instructions.

¶ 1625. Plaintiff averred in his declaration that defendant ran his automobile at an excessive speed; that he failed to slow down at the crossing; that the machine ran into plaintiff's team; and that the team took fright, ran away, and injured plaintiff. Plaintiff's proof did not show that the automobile struck the team, but did support the other allegations. Held, the court properly refused to instruct that unless the automobile actually collided with the team, plaintiff could not recover.—Matla v. Rapid Motor Vehicle Co., 160 Mich. 639.

¶ 1626. An instruction in an action for injuries sustained in a collision between automobiles at a street crossing, held sufficient when considered as a whole.—Brown v. Mitts, 187 Mich. 469.

¶ 1627. An instruction that the mere happening of an accident and the receiving of an injury by the plaintiff, is in the absence of proof of negligence not sufficient to entitle him to recover should have been given in an action for injuries caused by the defendant's automobile running into the rear of the vehicle in which the former was riding.—Grogitzki v. Detroit Ambulance Co., 186 Mich. 374.

§ 406. ——As to burden of proof and presumptions.

Rules as to burden of proof and presumptions, see ante § 387.

¶ 1628. In an action against the owner of an automobile to recover for the death of a person who was killed by defendant's automobile while walking diagonally across a street with a companion, an instruction that the burden of proof was upon plaintiff to establish all the elements of his cause by a preponderance of the evidence and that he must show that the defendant, through its agent in charge of the car, was guilty of negligence that was the proximate cause of the injuries to the deceased and that the deceased himself was free from any carelessness or negligence that caused or contributed to cause the injuries that he received, held proper.—Amley v. Saginaw Milling Co., 195 Mich. 189.

¶ 1629. In an action for personal injuries caused by being struck by a wagon it was error to refuse an instruction in behalf of defendant that the burden was upon plaintiff to show by fair preponderance of the evidence that she was free from contributory negligence.—Beattie v. J. L. Hudson Co., 180 Mich. 111.

¶ 1630. An instruction that a presumption of negligence which the defendant must rebut by evidence showing the exercise of ordinary care and prudence, arose from the fact that his automobile ran into the rear of a vehicle in which the plaintiff was riding and injured him, held erroneous.—Grogitzki v. Detroit Ambulance Co., 186 Mich. 374.

¶ 1631. Where, in a suit by a plaintiff motorcyclist against a defendant automobile owner for injuries sustained in a collision, the defendant requests the court to charge that the presumption is against the person on the wrong side of the road, the court sufficiently covers the point by charging that if plaintiff so cut the corner as to come into the way of defendant and cause the collision, he cannot recover.—Scott v. Dow, 162 Mich. 636.

§ 407. ——As to proximate cause.

Rules as to proximate cause, see ante § 381.

¶ 1632. In an action for personal injuries sustained in a collision between two automobiles whereby one was forced over an embankment, an instruction to find for defendant if the force of the collision was not in itself sufficient to force the car over the embankment was error.—Granger v. Farrant, 179 Mich. 19.

¶ 1633. In a suit for injuries by an automobile, the court instructed the jury as to the duty of defendant to sound his horn at the street crossing and to keep within the speed regulations, without stating in direct connection therewith, that defendant would not be liable for failure to do said things unless said failure caused the accident and unless plaintiff was free from contributory negligence. He also instructed that plaintiff would "perhaps" not be entitled to recover if she was crossing the street without taking notice and in a careless manner. In other parts of the charge the court clearly instructed the jury that plaintiff could not recover unless defendant's negligence was the proximate cause of the accident, and unless plaintiff was free from contributory negligence. Held, the charge should be read as a whole, and when so read was not erroneous.—Bouma v. Dubois, 169 Mich. 422.

§ 408. ——As to duty or negligence in driving horses.

¶ 1634. An instruction that under the evidence plaintiff, who sues for injury caused by reckless driving of defendant's servant, cannot recover unless the team was being driven too rapidly toward the place of the accident, is properly refused where there is evidence that the driver was otherwise negligent in managing the team.—Williams v. Edmunds, 75 Mich. 92.

¶ 1635. In an action for personal injuries it was error to instruct the jury that if plaintiff was injured by the defendant who was traveling in the same highway he cannot recover even though the defendant was negligent unless the defendant saw plaintiff in or approaching a place of danger, and knew or had reason to know that plaintiff was not aware of the danger, and saw him in such position of danger in time to prevent the injury by using ordinary care and did not use that care, where such an instruction was outside the issues made by the pleadings.—Denman v. Johnston, 85 Mich. 387.

¶ 1636. In an action for personal injury caused by a collision of vehicles on a highway, an instruction that even though the plaintiff was negligent if the defendant's conduct was wanton and wilful or reckless the plaintiff may recover, is erroneous where the jury is left without explanation of what constitutes wanton, wilful or reckless conduct in such a case.—Buxton v. Ainsworth, 138 Mich. 582.

¶ 1637. In an action to recover for personal injuries caused by a runaway team where there were several grounds of negligence alleged in the declaration, but the plaintiff claimed to recover upon one and upon this the case was submitted, the instructions on that one suffice if they correctly state the law.—Warren v. Porter, 144 Mich. 699.

§ 409. ——As to duty or negligence with automobiles and motorcycles.

Duty and rights in driving automotive vehicles, see ante § 369.

¶ 1638. In an action for injuries caused by a collision between two automobiles at a street intersection, an instruction to the effect that it was the duty of both drivers to use the care and caution that a man of average prudence would exercise under like circumstances, approved.—Andries v. Everitt-Metzger-Flanders Company, 177 Mich. 110.

¶ 1639. Upon the question of defendant's negligence in causing his automobile to collide with plaintiff's carriage at a street corner, a charge stated that the defendant owed the duty of having his automobile under control when approaching and passing street intersections, of operating it at such a speed as is reasonable and proper, having regard to the traffic conditions of the street and the safety of the people, and of using such ordinary care, prudence, and caution as the ordinarily prudent man would use under the circumstances. This was coupled with the charge that plaintiff could not recover unless she was free from negligence. Held, the instructions were sufficient to define the issues of negligence involved.—Ketchum v. Fillingham, 162 Mich. 704.

¶ 1640. In an action for injuries sustained by a pedestrian from an automobile operated at a speed in excess of that prescribed by Act No. 318, Public Acts 1909, How. St., 2nd Ed., ch. 31, an instruction that the defendant would not be liable if under the circumstances he exercised ordinary care, is reversible error.—Levyn v. Koppin, 183 Mich. 232.

¶ 1641. An instruction that the operation of an automobile at a speed in excess of that prescribed by Act No. 318, Public Acts 1909, How. St., 2nd Ed., ch. 31, is negligence per se, should be given in an action for injuries sustained by a pedestrian from the negligent operation of an automobile.—Levyn v. Koppin, 183 Mich. 232.

¶ 1642. A requested instruction as to the duties of drivers of automobiles towards each other on approaching street intersections, held sufficiently covered by the general charge.—Brown v. Mitts, 187 Mich. 469.

¶ 1643. An instruction as to the degree of care required of the driver of an automobile upon approaching a horse and wagon and as to that required of the driver of the wagon, held not misleading when considered with other portions of the charge.—Jordan v. Wixson, 189 Mich. 288 (distinguishing Levyn v. Koppin, 183 Mich. 232).

¶ 1644. In an action for damages for personal injuries sustained as a result of the buggy in which plaintiff was riding on the right side of an unlighted street at night being struck in the rear by defendant's automobile, which had two kerosene lamps, but no headlight, burning, and where it appeared that defendant's view of the buggy was obscured as the result of the bright light of an approaching automobile, an instruction that the evidence was given so as to place the jury themselves at the place and time of the accident so that they could then say whether it had been proven by a preponderance of evidence that the defendant did not do what an ordinarily careful and prudent man would have done under the circumstances, and that the proof of the act alone was not proof of negligence, held not erroneous.—Jolman v. Alberts, 192 Mich. 25.

¶ 1645. In an action against the owner of an automobile to recover for the death of a traffic policeman near a street crossing while deceased was proceeding in a northeasterly direction towards the center of the intersecting streets, where it appeared that defendant turned his automobile while going north to the left of the center of the street, held that the refusal of a requested instruction for defendant that if defendant made a mistake in judgment in such a great emergency what the defendant did could not be construed as negligence or carelessness, was proper, as the question of whether or not the emergency was caused by the defendant should have been included.—Wilson v. Johnson, 195 Mich. 94.

¶ 1646. In an action to recover damages for personal injuries, where the testimony of the defendant showed he was driving his automobile at an excessive speed at a street intersection where, had he looked when he first reached the cross street, he could have seen another automobile which was approaching on the cross street at a high rate of speed in time to have stopped his own car before reaching the other car, but he failed to so look, and, when he later observed the other car, and in order to avoid it, turned suddenly and struck and injured plaintiff, held, having, by his own testimony, placed himself in a place of danger where he was obliged to act without care as to third persons, defendant was not entitled to an instruction on the doctrine of instinctive action.—Kovacevic v. Reid, 196 Mich. 288.

¶ 1647. In an action against the driver of an automobile to recover for the death of a pedestrian who was struck and killed on a dark night by the car defendant was driving, an instruction that defendant, in approaching the crossing was also approaching a third person standing in the highway waiting for a street car and that defendant should have given reasonable warning of his approach and slowed down to ten miles per hour; that the statute required that a reasonable warning be given a person standing in the street, and that if defendant and such third person saw each other as the car approached the crossing, the automobile having the usual lights upon it at the time, there was, as a matter of law, reasonable warning given such third person, was incorrect.—Johnston v. Cornelius, 200 Mich. 209.

§ 410. ——As to contributory negligence.

¶ 1648. It is proper to charge that age and sex should be considered in deciding the question of the negligence of one who had not avoided a collision on the highway; and that if the care is such as would ordinarily be taken by a person of the age and sex of the party concerned there is no contributory negligence.—Daniels v. Clegg, 28 Mich. 32.

¶ 1649. The court did not err, in an action for a personal injury, in refusing to charge the jury, that plaintiff cannot recover if the jury find from the evidence that had the plaintiff continued to drive straight ahead the collision would not have occurred; where there was testimony tending to support the claim of the plaintiff that as plaintiff was driving at the rate of 5 or 6 miles an hour well over on her right of way and within 12 or 14 inches of the curb, in broad day light and the street being unobstructed, and there being upwards of 30 feet of paved street on the left of plaintiff between her buggy and the curb of the street, defendant, approaching from the rear driving his team at the rate of 10 or 12 miles an hour, collided with the back of plaintiff's buggy causing the injury complained of.—Ladd v. Germain, 145 Mich. 225.

¶ 1650. A requested instruction in an action for a collision between automobiles at a street intersection, that the plaintiff could not recover if he approached the crossing on the wrong side of the street, held sufficiently covered by the general charge.—Brown v. Mitts, 187 Mich. 469.

¶ 1651. A requested instruction that the plaintiff could not recover for a collision with the defendant's automobile if the accident was traceable to the negligence of the plaintiff, held sufficiently covered by the general charge.—Brown v. Mitts, 187 Mich. 469.

¶ 1652. An instruction that if the plaintiff were sleeping or "nodding" he would be guilty of contributory negligence, should have been given in an action for injuries due to the defendant's automobile running into the rear of a vehicle in which the former was riding.—Grogitzki v. Detroit Ambulance Co., 186 Mich. 374.

¶ 1653. Plaintiff sued defendant automobile owner for injury in a collision between defendant's automobile and plaintiff's motorcycle. Defendant requested the court to charge that plaintiff's motorcycle was a motor vehicle within the meaning of the Michigan Motor Vehicle Law. The court charged that plaintiff was bound to observe the same rules of the road as defendant, and that if he was running his motorcycle in excess of the speed allowed under the laws of Michigan and the traffic ordinance of the city he could not recover.—Held, defendant's request was sufficiently covered.—Scott v. Dow, 162 Mich. 636.

XIV. MOTOR VEHICLE REGULATIONS, RIGHTS AND DUTIES.

§ 411. In general.

[Note. Because of the comparative newness of the motor vehicle laws the decisions thereunder are not numerous. Cases wherein a common law liability has been asserted are treated with other cases on common law liability for negligence in driving, although the automobile cases are distinguished as much as possible. See ante XIII, B.]

Duties and corresponding liabilities of drivers, see ante XIII.

Right to use the road, see ante § 366.

Duties in driving and handling cars, see ante §§ 369, 370.

Statutory liabilities for misuse of motor vehicles in driving, see ante §§ 374, 375.

Statutory liability of owner of car for injury done therewith, see post § 413.

Use of unusual vehicles or means of propulsion as nuisance, see ante § 176.

Liability of municipality for injury to heavy vehicles from defective highways and bridges, see ante §§ 229, 230.

Motor Vehicle Law as proper police regulation, see Constitutional Law § 100.

Due process in Motor Vehicle Law and Regulations, see Constitutional Law § 158.

Motor Vehicle Law as invasion of right of local government, see Constitutional Law § 81, ¶ 399.

Requiring display of number plate as unreasonable search or seizure, see Constitutional Law § 211.

Requiring motor vehicle to carry number as compelling self-crimination, see Constitutional Law § 201.

Validity and effect of Motor Vehicle Tax Law, see Taxes, I.

Rights and liabilities of garage keepers as bailees, see Bailments; Liens.

Garage and repair liens, see Liens; Bailments.

Automobile insurance, see Insurance.

General regulations respecting motor vehicles (Motor Vehicle Law), see Comp. L. 1915, chap. 89.

Registration laws, see Comp. L. 1915, chap. 89.

¶ 1654. A city or village may regulate by ordinance the use of automobiles within its limits, where such regulations do not conflict with any general state law.—People v. McGraw, 184 Mich. 233.

¶ 1655. Under the city charter of Detroit 1904, § 170, giving the common council authority to control, prescribe, and regulate the manner of using and enjoying its streets, and highways, the council has power to pass an ordinance requiring registration and numbering of motor vehicles for the purpose of identifying automobiles which endanger the safety of travelers.—People v. Schneider, 139 Mich. 673.

§ 412. Headlight and signal regulations.

Driving rules and regulations, see ante §§ 369, 370.

¶ 1656. The statutory duty to maintain headlights on automobiles is not for the sole purpose of warning persons not in the car but for the purpose of lighting the way for some distance for the driver of the car.—Jolman v. Alberts, 192 Mich. 25.

¶ 1657. Pub. Acts 1909, No. 318, § 6, providing that every motor vehicle operated on the public highways shall be provided with a suitable bell, horn or other device for signaling, and shall display at night at least two lighted lamps on the front and one on the rear of each vehicle, which shall also display a visible red light from the rear, and § 7, providing that upon approaching a person walking in the roadway of a public highway a person operating a motor vehicle shall slow down to a speed not exceeding ten miles per hour and give reasonable warning of its approach, when read together, contemplate an audible warning when approaching pedestrians in the streets and highways in the nighttime by the use of a suitable and adequate bell, horn or other device.—Johnston v. Cornelius, 200 Mich. 209.

Sufficiency of automobile headlights, see note, 15 N. C. C. A. 350-362.

§ 413. Statutory liabilities of owners.

Liability for negligence by servant or borrower, see also ante § 375.

Due process in law making owner liable for injury by motor vehicle, see Constitutional Law § 158.

¶ 1658. The term "owner" as used in Act 318, P. A. 1909 relating to the regulation of motor vehicles and of the operators thereof does not include a person who may be only mediately or immediately in the possession of the vehicle but means the real owner or any person, firm, etc., renting such a vehicle or having the exclusive use thereof for more than 30 days.—Daugherty v. Thomas, 174 Mich. 371.

¶ 1659. The word "stolen" as used in Act 318, P. A. 1909, subd. 3, § 10, providing that owners of motor vehicles are liable for injuries caused by the negligent operation thereof by any person except by one who has stolen such vehicle does not mean vehicles taken in violation of Act 33, P. A. 1909 which makes it a felony to take or use them without authority "without intent to steal the same."—Daugherty v. Thomas, 174 Mich. 371.

¶ 1660. Where the owner of an automobile leaves it at a shop for repairs and employees at such shop while testing it, without the owner's knowledge or consent, negligently ran against plaintiff and injured him neither malfeasance, misfeasance or nonfeasance on the part of the owner is shown.—Daugherty v. Thomas, 174 Mich. 371.

¶ 1661. Under the Motor Act, sub. 3, of sec. 10 of Act 318, Public Acts of 1909, according to the decision in Daugherty v. Thomas, 174 Mich. 371, a corporation is not liable for death caused by one of its automobiles, driven by a daughter of one of its officers.—Mitchell v. Van Keulen & Winchester Lumber Co., 175 Mich. 75.

Liability of owner of automobile for death or injury due to negligent operation of car by member of the family, see note, 14 N. C. C. A. 453-481.

XV. PRIVATE ROADS AND FOOTWAYS.

§ 414. In general; establishment under statute.

Sufficiency of public user of private road to convert it into public highway, see ante § 15.

Petition and proceedings thereunder, see post §§ 415, 416.

Right of person connected by private way to notice of proceeding to vacate main road, see ante ¶ 466.

Proceedings for establishment of highways generally, see ante II, B.

General law of easements of way, see Easements.

Deed or reservation in deed of easements of way, see Deeds §§ 45-48, 70.

Provision of the constitution as to opening private roads, see Const. art. XIII, § 3.

Provisions for establishment and opening of private roads and passages, see Comp. L. 1915, chap. 92, and see also § 4447 et seq.

¶ 1662. Sections 7 to 10, c. 9, Act 283, Pub. Acts 1909, provide for the opening of highways for private and not for public use, and are unconstitutional as being in contravention of section 3, art. 13 of the Constitution.—Burdick v. Harbor Springs Lumber Co., 167 Mich. 673.

¶ 1663. Where a defendant owner of forty acres of land is entitled by circumstances to a way of necessity over complainant's "forty," he is not obliged to condemn a private way under the statute provided for that purpose.—Moore v. White, 159 Mich. 460.

¶ 1664. Property cannot be condemned for a private way as a mere convenience, but only when there is no other access to the petitioner's land, and when condemned its use must be limited by absolute necessity and confined to the petitioner and the owner.—People ex rel. Ayres v. Richards, 38 Mich. 214.

¶ 1665. One who has already a private right of way is not obliged to wait until his easement expires before instituting proceedings to obtain a continuance of or substitute for it, but may move a reasonable time before it expires.—Palmer v. Clement, 49 Mich. 45.

¶ 1666. The common council of Detroit cannot take proceedings to open a private alley except on application by responsible and interested parties.—People ex rel. City of Detroit v. Recorder's Court Judge, 40 Mich. 64.

§ 415. Petition and proceedings thereon.

Opening the road and applying it to use, see post § 418.

¶ 1667. A notice served on Friday of proceedings to be taken on the following Monday to lay out a private road, held too short, where the statute provided no particular time but where by analogy the highway law requires not more than ten nor less than five days.—People ex rel. Ayres v. Richards, 38 Mich. 214.

¶ 1668. Proceedings to open a private way must be quashed with costs where a petition fails to allege that the petitioner has no other access to his lands, where there is no service of notice on the owner or occupant, where the record contains no recital that eighteen disinterested freeholders were selected or that six names were struck off, or that a citation was issued by the commissioner to such freeholders, or that the jury was sworn, or that the commissioner proceeded to lay out the road, and where no record was made and recorded in the township clerk's office as required by How. St., § 1391.—Hall v. Pettit, 88 Mich. 158.

¶ 1669. The objection, in proceedings to lay out a private way, that the petition therefor was not sworn to, is waived if the parties proceed to strike a jury without objection.—Palmer v. Clement, 49 Mich. 45.

¶ 1670. In a proceeding to lay out a private way a commissioner of highways has no authority to determine the facts contained in his return; they must be shown to have been proved before a jury.—People ex rel. Ayres v. Richards, 38 Mich. 214.

¶ 1671. In proceedings to lay out a private way the jury must find that there is a necessity for it; it is not enough that they "adjudge and determine that a private highway be established."—Rundell v. Highway Com'rs, 47 Mich. 575.

§ 416. ——Jury and jurors.

Jury in eminent domain proceedings, see Eminent Domain, V, C.

¶ 1672. In proceedings to lay out a private road the constitution requires a jury. —People ex rel. Ayres v. Richards, 38 Mich. 214.

¶ 1673. A jury is indispensable in laying out a private road over another's land without his consent.—People ex rel. Ayres v. Richards, 38 Mich. 214.

¶ 1674. A statutory requirement that the venire for a jury in proceedings to lay out a private way shall be returned forthwith is practically met by making it returnable next day at one o'clock.—Palmer v. Clement, 49 Mich. 45.

¶ 1675. Jurors in proceedings to lay out a private way are not disqualified by having served in previous ineffectual proceedings, taken by the same person, for obtaining another right of way to reach the same lands. —Palmer v. Clement, 49 Mich. 45.

¶ 1676. Where a party to condemnation proceedings, to lay out a private way, instead of striking off a juror says he does not care which name is struck off, and that the highway commissioner may strike one off himself, he cannot afterward object to the course taken.—Palmer v. Clement, 49 Mich. 45.

¶ 1677. One who has taken compensation for land condemned for a private way cannot afterwards object to the validity of the proceedings on the ground of a juror's incompetency; it was his duty to inquire therein while proceedings were pending.—Chatterton v. Parrott, 46 Mich. 432.

§ 417. Costs, expenses and assessments.

¶ 1678. Whether part of the expense of opening a private road can be assessed in the shape of benefits upon the property therefor, when the owners have not petitioned for the road and do not need it, quære.—Schehr v. City of Detroit, 45 Mich. 626.

¶ 1679. Whether persons petitioning for a private road through the private property of others who do not desire it should not pay the entire expense of opening it, quære. —Schehr v. City of Detroit, 45 Mich. 626.

§ 418. Opening and application to use.

¶ 1680. The statute (How. St., §§ 1388-1393) for laying out private roads contemplates not only a record of the description and laying out, but an actual opening of the road, involving the taking down of cross-fences, and excluding the presumption that the possession is to remain in the owner of the fee.—Harvey v. Crane, 85 Mich. 316.

§ 419. Rights and easements in the way.

Construction of railroad on private way as "taking" for which compensation must be made, see Eminent Domain ¶¶ 56, 57.

¶ 1681. The owner of a private road laid out under How. St., §§ 1388-1393, is entitled to fence the right of way when such fence is a necessary incident to the reasonable enjoyment of the road.—Harvey v. Crane, 85 Mich. 316.

¶ 1682. In an action of trespass for tearing down a fence on the line of a private road, the respective rights of the owner in fee and the owner of the private road are adjudicated, that the owner of the private road has a right to an unobstructed passage at all times over the fee owner's land, and possesses such other rights as are incident or necessary to the enjoyment of such right. Where the limits of the way are defined he not only has the right of free passage over the traveled part but on such portions as he thinks proper or necessary. The owner of the fee, subject to the easement may use the land for any purpose not inconsistent with the easement. The rights of the owners of the easement are paramount, to the extent of the grant, to those of the owner of the soil. The latter is under no obligation to repair the way as that duty belongs to the owner of the easement. What is a proper and reasonable use by the fee owner is a question of fact to be determined by the trial court or jury.—Harvey v. Crane, 85 Mich. 316.

§ 420. Duties and negligence towards users of way.

¶ 1683. Premises upon which gas works are located with driveways to and from the street for wagons hauling coke need not have fences along such driveways in order to prevent injury to persons who, for their convenience, or for other reasons than defects in the usual way of entrance and departure, leave such ways and one who leaves such a way to seek a different exit becomes at best a licensee, and cannot recover for injuries from a defect at a distance from the way.—Armstrong v. Medbury, 67 Mich. 250.

¶ 1684. An injury from a mining blast to a person passing along a thoroughfare on the premises of the mining company is not excused by the fact that the road is not a public highway, if the company had opened it for the convenience of all persons who had occasion to use it.—Beauchamp v. Saginaw Min. Co., 50 Mich. 163.

§ 421. ——Pleading, evidence and trial practice.

¶ 1685. In an action for negligence for injuries from a collision in a driveway from a street to a freight house and used by patrons going to and fro, the reputation of defendant's driver as a careful driver is not in issue, and is immaterial.—Boick v. Bissell, 80 Mich. 260.

¶ 1686. In an action for injuries sustained from a collision in a drive-way it is competent to show that plaintiff was loading his wagon in the customary manner in such drive-way, and that defendant's driver knew what the customary way of loading was there, as affecting the question of his negligence in driving as close as he did to plaintiff's wagon.—Boick v. Bissell, 80 Mich. 260.

¶ 1687. The court did not err in submitting to the jury the question of contributory negligence of plaintiff injured by falling over a railing 19 inches high into an open area beside a sidewalk in an alley on defendant's premises, used by permission as a public walk, where it appeared that plaintiff worked for some time in an office on the side of such alley, from the windows of which he could look down upon it, that he had many times passed along such sidewalk, and that on the evening of his accident, though it was quite dark, he could see the sidewalk, in going along upon it, but that his attention was diverted from such sidewalk.—Breeze v. Powers, 80 Mich. 172.

¶ 1688. Where in an action for injuries received from a collision in a drive-way it appeared that plaintiff was loading his wagon in the customary manner in such drive-way, and that defendant's truck passed so near as to injure plaintiff, although there was ample room in the way, that although plaintiff saw the truck approaching when it was ten or twelve feet distant, the question of negligence of the defendant should have been left to the jury.—Boick v. Bissell, 80 Mich. 260.

¶ 1689. The question of contributory negligence should have been left to the jury, where in an action for injuries received from a collision in a driveway, it appeared that there was plenty of room for defendant to pass without colliding with plaintiff, who while loading his wagon with lumber in the customary manner in such drive-way, and with his back to defendant's wagon, stooped over to fasten a chain, the plaintiff claiming that defendant swerved his team out of a straight course, and thus striking him, defendant claiming that plaintiff threw out his foot after the front wheels passed.—Boick v. Bissell, 80 Mich. 260.

¶ 1690. One engaged in unloading freight from a truck in a railroad company's private way, and who occupies such a position as to give passing vehicles a passage way eighteen feet wide, is not bound to assume that another truck will run over him; and his failure to cease removing his freight and to guard against being struck on hearing the approach of defendant's truck is not such contributory negligence as requires a verdict for defendant, but the question is for the jury.—Foley v. Riverside Storage & Cartage Co., 85 Mich. 7.

¶ 1691. It is not contributory negligence as a matter of law for a plaintiff whose team is standing across a narrow road to move them forward two or three feet and step between the rear of the wagon and the warehouse in order to secure his load before drivnig away.—Prieur v. E. H. Stafford Co., 126 Mich. 169.

¶ 1692. It is evidence of negligence sufficient to go to the jury where the defendant drove a wagon with projecting load along a narrow road so as to come in contact with another's team and wagon standing across the road and caused the horses to back the wagon against the plaintiff who was out of sight between the rear of his wagon and a warehouse, the space for passage being visibly insufficient.—Prieur v. E. H. Stafford Co., 126 Mich. 169.

HINDERING CREDITORS to HOLES.

Cross-References.

Hindering Creditors—
- Fraudulency of transfers, see Fraudulent Conveyances.
- Fraudulent chattel mortgages and conditional sale, see Chattel Mortgages, I, D; Sales, XII.
- Ground for creditors' suit or bill in aid of execution, see Creditors' Suits.
- Ground for attachment, see Attachment § 8 et seq.
- Ground for garnishment, see Garnishment § 16.

Hiring—
- Bailments for hire, see Bailments § 11.
- Of services and labor, see Master and Servant, II.

History—
- Subject of judicial knowledge, see Evidence § 8; Indictment, VIII, A.
- As aid in constitutional construction, see Constitutional Law § 9.

Hitching Horses—
- Duty and liability of persons hitching or allowing horses in streets, see Highways §§ 368, 379.

Hitching posts as obstructions or dangers in way, see Highways, XI, XII.
Hoists—
In buildings, see Buildings; Master and Servant, III.
In mines, see Mines; Master and Servant, III.
Holding Corporations—
See Corporations, especially Corporations §§ 85, 306 et seq.; Foreign Corporations.
Illegal combinations, see Combinations.
Holding Out—
As estoppel, see Estoppel, III; Agency §§ 19, 27; Partnership, I, IV, A.
As fraud, see Fraud; Fraudulent Conveyances, I.
Holding Over—
By tenant, see Landlord and Tenant.
Remedy to expel hold-over tenant, see Forcible Entry.
Adverse possession by holding over occupancy begun under grant or lease, see Adverse Possession § 26.
By officer, see Officers, IV.
Holding to Bail or for Trial—
See Arrest, VII et seq.; Civil Arrest § 16.
Holes—
Liability for negligence in allowing holes to exist causing injury, see Highways, XII; Buildings; Carriers, IV, E, 2; Master and Servant, III; Railroads, VIII; Negligence.

HOLIDAYS.

TREATS of days appointed or proclaimed for cessation of business as distinguished from Sunday, which see.

Computation of time respecting included or final days which are holidays, see Time.
Judicial notice of holidays, see Evidence § 6.
Detention of prisoner over holiday without opportunity for bail as false imprisonment, see False Imprisonment ¶ 62.
Statutory holidays for acceptance and payment of bills and notes, holding of courts, and relative to continuance of suits, see Comp. L. 1915, § 6232. The enumerated days are: New Year's Day, Lincoln's Birthday (Feb. 12th), Washington's Birthday (Feb. 22d), Decoration Day (May 30th), Fourth of July, Labor Day (first Monday in September), Christmas Day. Also every Saturday from noon to midnight is a half holiday, and all election days, and any day appointed by the President or by the Governor as a day of fasting or prayer and thanksgiving.
Provision for holiday on ensuing Monday where date of statutory holiday falls on Sunday, see Comp. L. 1915, § 6233.
Validity of instruments executed on Columbus Day (Oct. 12th), see Comp. L. 1915, § 1095.
Provision for ordering issuance and service of writs on holiday or Sunday, see Jud. Act, chap. XIII, § 26; Comp. L. 1915, § 12429.

¶ 1. A judgment of a justice of the peace rendered on December 26th, when that was a legal holiday, is void.—Orban v. Northwestern Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 169 Mich. 404.

¶ 2. It is a judicial act for a justice of the peace to render judgment, and the performance of it involves the "holding of court." This is forbidden by Comp. L. 1871, § 1559, How. St. § 1591, for statutory holidays, or for the day following where they fall on Sunday, and a judgment so rendered is void.—Hemmens v. Bentley, 32 Mich. 89.

¶ 3. Issue of justice's summons is a mere ministerial act and valid though done on a legal holiday.—Smith v. Ihling, 47 Mich. 614.

HOLOGRAPHS to HOMEOPATHY.

Cross-References.

Holographic Wills—
See Wills, IV.
Home—
In the sense of domicile, see Domicile.
In the sense of asylum for infirm, dependent or indigent persons, see Asylums; Charities; Poor Persons.
Homeopathy—
See Medicine and Surgery.

HOMESTEADS.

TREATS of the constitutional and statutory right of a person to hold exempt from execution or other judicial process land on which he dwells and of the right of his family to hold it in succession to him.

Analysis.

I. Nature of right in general.

§ 1. Policy and construction of the law.
§ 2. Nature of exemption.
§ 3. ——Homestead "as an entirety."

II. Persons entitled.

§ 4. In general; what debtors entitled.
§ 5. Nonresidents.
§ 6. Tenants in common.
§ 7. Life tenants and lessees.

III. Property claimable or exempt; proceeds and substitutes.

§ 8. In general; character and amount.
§ 9. Rural or urban character of land.
§ 10. Parcel or "lot" comprising several parts or tracts.
§ 11. ——Effect of previous several ownership.
§ 12. Common or joint undivided interests.
§ 13. ——Separate floors of buildings.
§ 14. ——Partnership property.
§ 15. Buildings on another's land.
§ 16. Equitable interests and contract rights.
§ 17. Value of property.
§ 18. Wife's separate property.
§ 19. Proceeds of sale.
§ 20. ——Property purchased with proceeds or by exchange.

IV. Liabilities inferior and superior to exemption.

§ 21. In general.
§ 22. Attachment or execution liens.
§ 23. Judgments founded in tort or fraud.
§ 24. Decree for alimony.
§ 25. ——Rights of purchaser under decree.
§ 26. Equities and equitable liens.
§ 27. Vendor's contracts and mortgages.
§ 28. ——Purchase mortgages.

V. Acquisition, claim and loss or bar of right.

§ 29. In general.
§ 30. Necessity and sufficiency of occupancy.
§ 31. ——Occupancy after levy.
§ 32. ——Occupancy in part for other purposes or by other persons.
§ 33. ——Temporary absence.
§ 34. Necessity and sufficiency of intention.
§ 35. Right to claim, claim by wife.
§ 36. ——Claim by grantee.
§ 37. Mode of assertion of claim.

§ 38. ——Selection.
§ 39. ——Appraisal.
§ 40. Abandonment, waiver or loss.
§ 41. ——Removal of family.
§ 42. ——By act of one spouse.
§ 43. ——Conveyance by husband to wife.
§ 44. Partial abandonment for residence purp
§ 45. Release.
§ 46. Separation of husband and wife.
§ 47. ——Desertion by wife or husband.
§ 48. Estoppel to claim.
§ 49. ——Two homesteads.
§ 50. Death without wife or issue surviving.

VI. Alienation or incumbrance of homestead property.

§ 51. Antenuptial mortgages, contracts and c
§ 52. Postnuptial mortgages and conveyances
§ 53. ——Formal requirements.
§ 54. Necessity and sufficiency of wife's cons
§ 55. ——Effect of subsequent divorce, deser
§ 56. ——Consent obtained by fraud.
§ 57. Necessity of husband's signature to wif
§ 58. Rights under sole deed.
§ 59. ——Conveyances subject to life estate o
§ 60. ——Effect of subsequent abandonment.
§ 61. ——Conveyance prior to selection of h
§ 62. ——Separate quitclaim deed by wife.
§ 63. Rights under sole mortgage.
§ 64. ——Effect of secret marriage or absenc
§ 65. Rights under sole contract, assignment
§ 66. Conveyance from one spouse to other.
§ 67. Conveyance to wife through third pers
§ 68. Exchange of homesteads.
§ 69. Repurchase and revival of right.

VII. Rights of surviving spouse, children or heirs.

§ 70. Rights of widow.
§ 71. ——Remarriage.
§ 72. ——Rights of absent or nonresident wi
§ 73. Homestead in addition to dower.
§ 74. Rights of minor children.
§ 75. ——Removal from homestead.
§ 76. ——Sale subject to homestead.
§ 77. Rights of heirs.

VIII. Setting out homestead, and subjection of excess.

§ 78. Selection by claimant.
§ 79. Suits or proceedings to set out or allot
§ 80. Setting out as incidental relief in othe
§ 81. Subjection of excess value.

IX. Protection and assertion of right in collateral acti

§ 82. In general.
§ 83. Suits in equity.

§ 84. Suits for specific performance.
§ 85. Ejectment and summary proceedings.
§ 86. Action for damages.
§ 87. Creditors' suits and suits in aid of execution.
§ 88. Foreclosure suits.

Exemptions of personalty, see Exemptions.
Exemption of building and loan stock, see Exemptions § 24.

I. NATURE OF RIGHT IN GENERAL.

§ 1. Policy and construction of the law.

Validity of legislation affecting right, see Constitutional Law § 290.
Provisions of the constitution guaranteeing homestead, see Const. art. XIV, §§ 2-4.

¶ 1. Provisions exempting homesteads from execution are to be construed liberally.—Barber v. Rorabeck, 36 Mich. 399; Lozo v. Sutherland, 38 Mich. 168; Bouchard v. Bourassa, 57 Mich. 8; Canney v. Canney, 131 Mich. 363.

¶ 2. An intention to modify to the debtor's prejudice the right of exemption is not lightly to be inferred from a statute having other purposes.—Barber v. Rorabeck, 36 Mich. 399.

¶ 3. The constitutional provisions which protect homestead rights are strictly exemption provisions and give the right only against the creditors, and the statutes have not enlarged it.—Patterson v. Patterson, 49 Mich. 176.

§ 2. Nature of exemption.

See also post ¶¶ 85, 152.
Homestead "as an entirety," see post § 3.
Persons entitled, see post II.
Property claimable or exempt, see post III.
Claim of homestead as evidence of place of domicile, see Domicile ¶ 23.
Reckoning homestead as part of husband's means in fixing alimony, see Divorce § 159.

¶ 4. The homestead exemption is not an exemption of the fee, but only of the land so long as it is occupied as a homestead; the land is assets when needed for the payment of demands against the estate. So where a widow bought lands sold by her husband's administrator for the payment of debts, and afterwards sold and left them, held, that after the children became of age no one could raise the question of homestead against the validity of the administrator's sale.—Drake v. Kinsell, 38 Mich. 232.

¶ 5. The homestead right is not strictly an estate; it is merely a right to enjoy the interest of the possessor, or of the deceased husband or ancestor, as against creditors who would take it away, or as against the grantee or mortgagee of a married owner whose wife did not in due form consent to his deed.—Robinson v. Baker, 47 Mich. 619.

¶ 6. A homestead is an artificial estate in land, devised to protect the possession of the owner against the claims of creditors while the land is occupied as a home; but it does not protect a person in possession against the claims of the legal owner of the land.—Buckingham v. Buckingham, 81 Mich. 89.

§ 3. ——Homestead "as an entirety."

¶ 7. The constitution exempts a homestead only as an entirety.—Beecher v. Baldy, 7 Mich. 488; Amphlett v. Hibbard, 29 Mich. 298; Tharp v. Allen, 46 Mich. 389.

¶ 8. The ultimate fee in land which is a homestead, cannot be taken and sold under execution against the owner.—Burkhardt v. James Walker & Son, 132 Mich. 93.

II. PERSONS ENTITLED.

§ 4. In general; what debtors entitled.

Nonresidents, see post § 5.
Tenants in common, see post § 6.
Life tenants and lessees, see post § 7.
Right of grantee to claim, see post § 36.
Right of wife to claim, see post § 35, ¶¶ 99, 100.

¶ 9. A homestead not exceeding in value the legal limitation is exempt from levy and sale on execution by creditors, even though it was purchased by one already indebted.—Meigs v. Dibble, 73 Mich. 101.

¶ 10. The nature and extent of the husband's interest in a homestead of which his wife is the owner in fee, has not been very accurately defined; but it has been said that he has no technical estate which he can transfer to anybody else; but as head of a family, he has possession jointly with his wife, and has therefore a right to complain of any unlawful interference. As against creditors of the wife, he is entitled to be protected in his possession and occupancy of the homestead.—Buckingham v. Buckingham, 81 Mich. 89.

§ 5. Nonresidents.

¶ 11. No homestead rights are acquired in her husband's lands in Michigan by a wife who never comes to or resides in the state and whose husband resides here.—Black v. Singley, 91 Mich. 50.

§ 6. Tenants in common.

Joint or undivided interests as property claimable or exempt, see post §§ 12-14.

General law as to tenants in common, see Tenants in Common.

¶ 12. A tenant in common may have a homestead right in his interest in the undivided premises.—King v. Welborn, 83 Mich. 195.

¶ 13. A tenant in common may have the benefit of a homestead in lands held in common.—Lawrence v. Morse, 122 Mich. 269.

§ 7. Life tenants and lessees.

General law as to life tenants, see Life Estates.

General law as to landlord and tenant, see Landlord and Tenant.

¶ 14. A homestead may be acquired in land held by a life tenant.—Myers v. Myers, 186 Mich. 215.

¶ 15. A lessee of lands who erects a dwelling house thereon, and actually occupies the lands, is entitled to a homestead exemption.—Maatta v. Kippola, 102 Mich. 116.

¶ 16. A son who goes upon his father's land with the father's consent, and occupies a building already there, but who takes and holds possession under no claim of enjoyment that would create a homestead interest, and after his father's death pays rent to the representative of the estate, is merely a lessee, so far as his exclusive possession is concerned, and he can convey his interest without his wife's consent.—Tharp v. Allen, 46 Mich. 389.

III. PROPERTY CLAIMABLE OR EXEMPT; PROCEEDS AND SUBSTITUTES.

§ 8. In general; character and amount.

Rural or urban character of land, see post § 9.

Parcel or "lot" comprising several parts, see post §§ 10, 11.

Common or joint undivided interests, see post §§ 12-14.

Building on another's land, see post § 15.

Equitable interests and contract rights, see post § 16.

Value of property, see post § 17.

Wife's separate property, see post § 18.

Proceeds of sale, see post §§ 19, 20.

Alienation or incumbrance, see post VI.

Setting out homestead, see post VIII.

Property rights between husband and wife, see Husband and Wife, II.

Amount of homestead exemption, see Const. art. XIV, § 2.

What constitutes homestead, see Jud. Act, chap. XXIII, § 73; Comp. L. 1915, § 12888.

Statutory provisions where property exceeds $1,500 in value, see Jud. Act, chap. XXIII, §§ 80, 81; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 12895, 12896.

¶ 17. The constitution of 1850 is repugnant to the act of 1848 as respects the value of the homestead to be exempted, and to that extent repeals it. If a place occupied as a homestead is within the constitutional quantity, but exceeds the value of $1,500, it may be reduced in quantity so as to bring it within the required value, provided it can be so reduced by division as to leave a homestead within the specific value without cutting off any of that which, in fact, goes to constitute it a homestead. In other words, so as to leave a dwelling-house, with the out-buildings and appurtenances necessary to its ordinary use as such.—Beecher v. Baldy, 7 Mich. 488.

¶ 18. If, when reduced so far as it is divisible, the homestead still exceeds the value of $1,500, it is not such a homestead as is exempted by the constitution.—Beecher v. Baldy, 7 Mich. 488.

¶ 19. Execution was levied upon land in which the debtor did not designate his homestead. He afterward sold a portion of it, and this same parcel was afterward sold to satisfy the execution, and was bid in by the creditor. Ejectment by the execution purchaser was resisted by the debtor's grantee on the ground that the officer levying execution had not set off the homestead. Held, that the plaintiff in ejectment might show that the debtor, after selling what he had of the premises levied upon, had mortgaged the rest and had referred to it in the mortgage as "that portion occupied by me as a homestead."—First Nat. Bank v. Jacobs, 50 Mich. 340.

§ 9. Rural or urban character of land.

¶ 20. An extension of village limits so as to include a farm occupied as a homestead, and within the constitutional exemption as to size and value, will not operate to reduce or diminish the right of exemption to the equivalent of a town lot, according to the recorded plat, where the property is still occupied as a homestead and cultivated as a farm.—Barber v. Rorabeck, 36 Mich. 399.

¶ 21. Platting agricultural lands for partition only, and not for sale or as town lots, will not bring them within the constitutional provision which exempts a town lot only, with the house upon it, from sale on execution; the owner remains entitled to the exemption of forty acres.—Bouchard v. Bourassa, 57 Mich. 8.

§ 10. Parcel or "lot" comprising several parts or tracts.

Effect of previous several ownership, see post § 11.

¶ 22. A widow's homestead is properly considered as covering two city lots where they adjoin fronting on the same street in a single inclosure, and both together are worth less than the amount of the homestead exemption, and where, by a mistake, her house, which was meant to stand upon one of the lots, was so built as to encroach a few inches on the other.—Geiges v. Greiner, 68 Mich. 153.

¶ 23. Where a house is constructed upon two lots a homestead may be had in the premises, and if the property is worth more than $1,500, creditors can by a sale secure their rights in the balance.—King v. Welborn, 83 Mich. 195; Lamont v. Le Fevre, 96 Mich. 175.

¶ 24. On authority of King v. Welborn, 83 Mich. 195, there may be a homestead in a lot of 60 feet front containing a dwelling house occupied by a married man as his dwelling and built in the center of the lot, one-half on each side.—Barkume v. Phelps, Brace & Co., 141 Mich. 545.

§ 11. ——Effect of previous several ownership.

¶ 25. The homestead exemption of forty acres is not affected by the fact that the parcel claimed as exempt was formerly owned in severalty by two or more persons. —Bouchard v. Bourassa, 57 Mich. 8.

§ 12. Common or joint undivided interests.

Separate floors of buildings, see post § 13.
Partnership property, see post § 14.
Building occupied only in part as dwelling of claimant, see post § 32.
Life tenants as persons entitled, see ante § 7.
Property rights between husband and wife in general, see Husband and Wife, II.

¶ 26. A homestead right may be claimed in land held in joint tenancy or in common with the wife or with others.—Lozo v. Sutherland, 38 Mich. 168; Sherrid v. Southwick, 43 Mich. 515; Tharp v. Allen, 46 Mich. 389; Cleaver v. Bigelow, 61 Mich. 47.

¶ 27. Land held by entirety may be subject to homestead.—Cole v. Cole, 126 Mich. 569.

¶ 28. A husband cannot claim, as against a judgment creditor, a homestead in an undivided one-eighth interest in fifty-seven acres of land, the remaining seven-eighths of which is owned by his wife, where the entire tract exceeds in value $1,500.—McBride v. Putnam, 99 Mich. 469.

¶ 29. A homestead will not attach to an undivided interest in a tract of land which, as a whole, exceeds the homestead limit both in acreage and in value, where there has been no separation of the undivided interests; and therefore it is not necessary to the validity of a mortgage upon such undivided interest that the wife of the owner should join therein.—Hooper v. McAllister, 115 Mich. 174.

¶ 30. Where a testator wills land upon which buildings stand to his daughter, and to his son a one-third interest in the buildings, intending the daughter to own the land where they stand and to control them, the son, living in the house but paying board to her, cannot be said to have a homestead interest therein; since he does not own the land.—Barbo v. Jeru, 155 Mich. 353.

§ 13. ——Separate floors of buildings.

¶ 31. Whether, under Comp. L. 1871, §§ 6137-6145, How. St. §§ 7721-7729, there is any practical mode, without further legislation, of working out and securing any homestead in an undivided portion of premises, particularly where a claim of homestead is set up to the upper story only of a building owned in common with other persons, quære.—Amphlett v. Hibbard, 29 Mich. 298.

§ 14. ——Partnership property.

General law of partnership, see Partnership.

¶ 32. A homestead interest in partnership land cannot be acquired by one partner.—Michigan Trust Co. v. Chapin, 106 Mich. 384.

¶ 33. A claim of homestead in partnership lands is not sustainable on a record showing no permanent residence on the land before it became partnership assets.—Chase v. Angell, 148 Mich. 1.

§ 15. Buildings on another's land.

See also ante ¶ 15.
House on leased land as homestead, see Jud. Act, chap. XXIII, § 78; Comp. L. 1915, § 12893.

¶ 34. Comp. L. 1871, §§ 6137, 6142, 6145, How. St. §§ 7721, 7726, 7729, bring within the homestead exemption houses that stand on land not owned by the person claiming the exemption. Held, that the removal of such a house by its owner to another site does not subject it to seizure and sale on execution while in transit.—Bunker v. Paquette, 37 Mich. 79.

¶ 35. No homestead right can attach to a house erected on land under contract of purchase and wrongfully removed by the vendee to a third person's land; such house being personal property.—Michigan Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Cronk, 93 Mich. 49.

§ 16. Equitable interests and contract rights.
General principles of equity, see Equity.

¶ 36. A homestead may be claimed in land of which a party is in possession under a contract to purchase.—McKee v. Wilcox, 11 Mich. 358.

¶ 37. Where a contract purchaser, on completing his payments, causes the land to be deeded to another, he cannot claim homestead rights in it.—Fairbairn v. Middlemiss, 47 Mich. 372.

¶ 38. Homestead rights can be claimed in land held under a part-paid certificate of purchase of school land.—Allen v. Cadwell, 55 Mich. 8.

¶ 39. A written contract provided that S., in consideration of the sum of $225, would convey certain lots to L.; that L. should erect a dwelling house upon one of the lots, for which S. would furnish the lumber and do the mason work; and that L. should purchase the lots, and pay for them, and for the labor and material in the manner thereinafter provided. By a further provision, S. was to deliver to L., when the house should be completed, a statement of labor and materials furnished by him, the full amount whereof should, when agreed upon, with the $225 for the lots, be filled into "the annexed land contract," which should then be executed by the parties. No time for the payment or conveyance was otherwise provided and the contract was never executed. Held, that L. acquired no homestead rights by virtue of his possession under such contract, it amounting merely to an agreement between the parties that, in case certain conditions should be performed, a contract of sale would be made on terms to be agreed upon.—Rentchler v. Lawton, 113 Mich. 14.

¶ 40. Homestead attaches under oral contract for purchase of land followed by occupancy and where a written contract is subsequently entered into, and improvements are made.—Gardner v. Gardner, 123 Mich. 673.

§ 17. Value of property.
Subjection of excess of value, see post § 81.
Necessity for finding as to value of land in judgment for ejectment, see post ¶ 269.
Necessity that bill for protection of homestead show value, see post ¶ 245.
Constitutional provisions as to value, see Const. art. XIV, § 2.

¶ 41. In determining, in case of asserted homestead, the value of the premises with reference to the question of exemption, the value at the time the lien is claimed to have attached, not when the improvements are made, governs.—Mills v. Hobbs, 76 Mich. 122.

¶ 42. On the question whether land purchased at execution was worth more than $1,500 and therefore not within limits of a homestead, the sum paid at the execution sale is not the controlling evidence; hence in ejectment by the purchaser where the jury found the value to be less than $1,500; defendant was entitled to judgment.—Riggs v. Sterling, 60 Mich. 643.

§ 18. Wife's separate property.
See also ante ¶ 10.
What constitutes wife's separate property, see Husband and Wife, II, C.

¶ 43. Premises having the legal qualities of a homestead and occupied as such by husband and wife, though the husband has only an equitable interest, will be protected as a homestead, although the legal title in the property is vested in the wife.—Orr v. Shraft, 22 Mich. 260.

¶ 44. A husband occupying a dwelling house owned by his wife does not have a "homestead" within the meaning of Pub. Acts 1887, No. 50 (How. St. § 3981) providing for exemption from execution of building association stock unless holder has a "homestead."—Morley Bros. v. National Loan & Investment Co., 120 Mich. 171.

§ 19. Proceeds of sale.
Property purchased with proceeds or by exchange, see post § 20.
Exemption of proceeds of sale to amount of $1,500, see Jud. Act, chap. XXIII, § 81; Comp. L. 1915, § 12896.

¶ 45. General creditors of a husband have no lien on the proceeds of the sale of his homestead pursuant to a decree of divorce.—Canney v. Canney, 131 Mich. 363.

§ 20. ——Property purchased with proceeds or by exchange.

¶ 46. A homestead is established so as to defeat a bill in aid of execution by evidence that the lot in question was purchased to replace a prior homestead taken on condemnation proceedings, and that subsequent to the levy, the old house had been purchased and moved upon the new lot.—Corey v. Waldo, 126 Mich. 706.

¶ 47. A house and lot received in exchange for a homestead by a widow, or the proceeds of the sale of the homestead which are to be invested in a new home, are exempt during the transition, provided neither exceed the statutory limit of $1,500.—Steel v. Blanchette, 193 Mich. 167.

IV. LIABILITIES INFERIOR AND SUPERIOR TO EXEMPTION.

§ 21. In general.
Attachment or execution liens, see post § 22.
Judgments founded in tort or fraud, see post § 23.
Decree for alimony, see post §§ 24, 25.

Equities and equitable liens, see post § 26.
Vendor's contracts and mortgages, see post §§ 27, 28.
Incumbrances on homestead, see post VI.
Right of dower in homestead lands, see Dower § 53.
Rights and priorities under mechanics' liens, see Mechanics' Liens, VI.
Mechanics' liens on homesteads, see Mechanics' Liens, III, IV.
Invalidity of oral agreement for mechanics' lien, see Mechanics' Liens, IV.
Priorities over lien by agreement for work done on premises, see Liens.
Nonexemption of homestead from levy for taxes, see Jud. Act, chap. XXIII, § 79; Comp. L. 1915, § 12894.
Mechanics' liens on homesteads, see Comp. L. 1915, § 14797.
Liability for taxes and sale for taxes, see Jud. Act, chap. XXIII, § 79; Comp. L. 1915, § 12894.

¶ 48. While lands of an intestate descend subject to his debts under Comp. L. 1897, § 9064, an interest or estate may exist in such lands or in a part of them superior immediately to the rights of creditors; homestead rights are such interests, and these rights attach whether the estate be solvent or insolvent.—In re Emmons' Estate, 142 Mich. 299.

¶ 49. As an administrator is trustee of the assets that come into his hands for the benefit of all interested therein, he cannot, by misapplying the trust funds belonging to the estate in the purchase of a homestead, obtain a right superior to that of the creditors who have been injured by such application.—Pierce v. Holzer, 65 Mich. 263.

§ 22. Attachment or execution liens.

General law as to attachment liens, see Attachment.
Lien and priorities on execution, see Executions, V.

¶ 50. Execution cannot be levied on joint property of the husband and wife occupied by them as their homestead.—Vinton v. Beamer, 55 Mich. 559.

¶ 51. When a lien by attachment has once become operative a subsequent taking of possession for a homestead will not defeat it, although no provision is made for ascertaining the homestead right until execution is sued out.—Davis Sewing Machine Co. v. Whitney, 61 Mich. 518.

¶ 52. An attachment, levied upon a homestead during the absence of the husband and wife therefrom, fails to operate if they resume possession before the deposit in the office of the Register of Deeds of the certified copy of the writ and description of the attached property, under How. St., § 7995.—Davis Sewing Machine Co. v. Whitney, 61 Mich. 518.

¶ 53. A levy under a judgment in attachment against land alleged to have been conveyed in fraud of creditors takes precedence over a right of homestead acquired by the debtor upon a reconveyance to him subsequent to the levy.—Noble v. McKeith, 127 Mich. 163.

§ 23. Judgments founded in tort or fraud.

¶ 54. The homestead exemption holds against a judgment for costs in the defendant's favor on reversal of a judgment in the plaintiff's favor in an action of tort.—Kruger v. LeBlanc, 75 Mich. 424.

¶ 55. Const. art. XVI, § 2, exempting homesteads from forced sale on execution "for any debt contracted after the adoption of this constitution" applies to executions on judgments in actions of tort.—Mertz v. Berry, 101 Mich. 32.

¶ 56. Defendant and his wife contracted to pay $2,550 for a home, and went into possession after having paid $577, most of which was furnished by the wife. Defendant, by fraud and deceit, sold certain secret processes to complainant for $2,500, for which wrong complainant recovered a judgment of $1,500 in an action at law for deceit. Part of the $2,500 went to pay for the homestead. The execution for the $1,500 judgment was returned unsatisfied. Complainant by this bill ask to have the homestead subjected to sale to satisfy the $1,500. Held, that the bill could not be maintained, as the homestead was exempt.—Allen v. Crane, 152 Mich. 380.

§ 24. Decree for alimony.

Rights of purchaser under decree, see post § 25.
Alimony in general, see Divorce, X.

¶ 57. The constitutional provision exempting the homestead from execution has no application to the divestment of a husband's homestead right by a chancery court in allotting alimony upon divorce.—Reeves v. Reeves, 117 Mich. 526.

§ 25. ——Rights of purchaser under decree.

¶ 58. A purchaser of a homestead at an execution sale under a decree for alimony in favor of the owner's wife succeeds to her right to attack a prior mortgage as invalid because she did not join therein.—Rogers v. Day, 115 Mich. 664.

§ 26. Equities and equitable liens.

¶ 59. Where a defendant claiming property under an alleged gift inter vivos, expends the same in good faith in buildings and land, under a bill brought by the administrator to impress a lien on the same, the lien will not extend to the homestead rights of the defendant therein.—Chamberlain v. Eddy, 154 Mich. 593.

§ 27. Vendor's contracts and mortgages.
Purchase mortgages, see post § 28.
Mortgages and incumbrances of homestead, see post, VI.

¶ 60. The vendor in a land contract agreed by supplemental later contract to advance to the vendee, to enable him to make improvements upon the land, 60 per cent of the estimated value of such improvements, as the work progressed. The money so advanced was used by the vendee and his wife for the sole purpose of establishing a homestead. Nothing was paid upon the contract. Held, that the wife had no claim in equity to homestead rights as against either of the contracts.—Converse v. Barnard, 114 Mich. 622.

§ 28. ——Purchase mortgages.
Mortgages given on exchange of homesteads, see also post ¶ 203.
Validity of purchase mortgages without joinder of wife, see Jud. Act, chap. XXIII, § 74; Comp. L. 1915, § 12889.

¶ 61. A mortgage for purchase money, though not signed by the wife, is a valid security even against a homestead.—Amphlett v. Hibbard, 29 Mich. 298.

¶ 62. Where one, his wife not joining, gave a purchase-money mortgage on certain property, in half of which he possessed a homestead right, and afterward, his wife joining, conveyed an undivided half of the property with warranty, it was held fair to presume that if it was intended to convey either half, as distinct from the other, it was the half least incumbered. The mortgage would then be void as to both husband and wife so far as the homestead half was concerned, and would not be made valid by the subsequent conveyance, even though the property should cease to be a homestead.—Amphlett v. Hibbard, 29 Mich. 298.

¶ 63. A wife has no equity to interpose her homestead right against a mortgage which she had not signed, where it is given for moneys advanced for the purpose of establishing the homestead.—Fournier v. Chisholm, 45 Mich. 417.

V. ACQUISITION, CLAIM AND LOSS OR BAR OF RIGHT.

§ 29. In general.
Necessity and sufficiency of occupancy, see post §§ 30-33.
Necessity and sufficiency of intention, see post § 34.
Right to claim, claim by wife, see post §§ 35, 36.
Mode of assertion of claim, see post §§ 37, 38.
Appraisal, see post § 39.
Abandonment, waiver or loss, see post §§ 40-45.
Separation of husband and wife, see post §§ 46, 47.
Estoppel to claim or death without surviving wife, see post §§ 48-50.

¶ 64. A deed from one having no relation to the title cannot give the grantee any standing or his wife any apparent right to claim homestead.—Scofield v. Scofield, 47 Mich. 245.

§ 30. Necessity and sufficiency of occupancy.
Occupancy after levy, see post § 31.
Occupancy in part for other purposes or by other persons, see post § 32.
Temporary absence, see post § 33.
Occupancy as sufficient mode of assertion, see post § 37.
Right where wife has not lived on premises, see also post ¶ 185.

¶ 65. To entitle a party to claim land exempt as a homestead, under the law of 1848, he must both own and occupy it.—Wisner v. Farnham, 2 Mich. 472.

¶ 66. Neither the constitution nor the statute exempts a contemplated future homestead; and therefore land on which no dwelling-house has ever been erected or commenced, and on which neither the owner nor his family had ever resided, is not exempt as a homestead.—Coolidge v. Wells, 20 Mich. 79.

¶ 67. There can be no homestead rights in premises which were never occupied by husband and wife and of which it does not appear that they ever intended to make a homestead.—Lake v. Nolan, 81 Mich. 112.

¶ 68. One who resides upon property owned by him cannot claim a homestead in unoccupied property upon which he is having a dwelling house erected.—Delray Lumber Co. v. Keohane, 132 Mich. 17.

¶ 69. A city lot, purchased by a single man in contemplation of his marriage, and with the intention of making it a homestead, will be exempt as such from execution, even before any dwelling is erected on it, if the man and his wife have inclosed, improved and used it with the constant purpose of making it their home as soon as their means would permit.—Reske v. Reske, 51 Mich. 541.

¶ 70. A city lot purchased with the intention of making it a homestead for the purchaser and his family will be exempt from levy and sale on execution from the time of purchase, even though unimproved and without a dwelling thereon, if the purchaser incloses it and uses and occupies it with the constant purpose of making it his home, and uses the proceeds thereof and such means as he can procure, within a reasonable time, to erect a home thereon for his family, provided it does not exceed in quantity and value the constitutional limit. What is a reasonable time depends on the circumstances of each particular case.—Deville v. Widoe, 64 Mich. 593.

¶ 71. From October, 1881, to August, 1884, is not an unreasonably long time to begin the erection of a dwelling on a city lot claimed and bought for a homestead, where the delay was due to inability to obtain a necessary loan sooner, and where the claimant's shop had been promptly established there and the lot occupied as part of a design to build living quarters and have the shop and dwelling under one roof.—Deville v. Widoe, 64 Mich. 593.

¶ 72. A married woman and her daughter owned a lot on which there were two houses, both of which were rented at the time of the levy of an execution issued on a judgment against the mother and her husband, both of whom resided elsewhere. Held, that the mother could not constitute the property a homestead by saying that she intended to occupy it at some future time as a home.—Evans v. Calman, 92 Mich. 427.

¶ 73. Occupation of a lot for homestead purposes is shown by corroborated testimony, though it is contradicted in some particulars, that a woman sold her mortgage homestead to relieve herself of the incumbrance, and with the intention of purchasing an adjoining unimproved lot, and building and occupying a house thereon. She purchased the lot, and, before the same was levied upon at the suit of a judgment creditor of herself and husband, the location of the house had been staked out, the stone drawn upon the lot for use in constructing a cellar, which a party had been engaged to excavate, and negotiations had been had with a builder in relation to the construction of the house.—Myers v. Weaver, 101 Mich. 477.

¶ 74. Homestead was established as against an execution creditor, where a debtor to whom a village property had been devised jointly with his sister, immediately upon the vesting of the title, removed some household goods into the house and slept there nights and took breakfast and supper therein, although his wife and family continued to reside on her farm, and where the levy in question was made within 10 days of the death of the testator, but after the debtor had taken possession.—Lawrence v. Morse, 122 Mich. 269.

§ 31. ——Occupancy after levy.

¶ 75. Land under attachment levy cannot be brought within the homestead exemption merely by occupying it before the levy of execution.—Avery v. Stephens, 48 Mich. 246.

¶ 76. To exempt as a homestead land not actually so occupied at time of levy, it must appear that the intention exists in good faith to occupy it as such, and such intention must have existed prior to and at the time of the levy. If the idea is conceived after the levy, and for the purpose of defeating the lien created thereby, it cannot be upheld, although a dwelling, after the levy and before sale, is erected or moved upon the premises and occupied by the owner and his family.—Bowles v. Hoard, 71 Mich. 150.

¶ 77. Evidence that the husband expressed an intent after a levy to build on the tract levied on and that he did live there in a house for three months before sale, that the house was furnished by his father-in-law, who held a mortgage on the land, that the wife soon thereafter sued for divorce on grounds antedating their residence there and eventually procured a lien to be declared on it for alimony, does not show satisfactorily that the intention existed in good faith to occupy it as such, prior to and at the time of the levy.—Bowles v. Hoard, 71 Mich. 150.

§ 32. ——Occupancy in part for other purposes or by other persons.

¶ 78. The premises must have been set apart as a home for the purposes of the owner and his family. Where the owner of a city lot built a double house upon it, in such a way as to show that he designed it for the use of two families, and not for one, and leased one part of it, occupying the other part himself, it was held that he could not claim the whole as exempt from execution as a homestead.—Dyson v. Sheley, 11 Mich. 527.

¶ 79. Where the owner of a city lot built a double house upon it, occupying one part and leasing the other, the fact that the yard of the part leased was used by the owner in common with the tenant did not entitle the owner to claim the whole as a homestead.—Dyson v. Sheley, 11 Mich. 527.

¶ 80. A building may be exempt as a homestead though it is not exclusively occupied as a dwelling, part being used for business purposes.—Orr v. Shraft, 22 Mich. 260.

¶ 81. A homestead may be had in a hotel and the land upon which it stands.—King v. Welborn, 83 Mich. 195; Lamont v. LeFevre, 96 Mich. 175.

¶ 82. The act of a husband as occupant of a homestead in making over an old barn on part of the premises into a dwelling house and letting it for a time at a small rental does not operate to divest the entire lot of its character as a homestead, unless the value thereof is in excess of $1,500, or unless the change or leasing of the property has been consented to by the wife of such occupant in writing.—Cope v. Merriam, 194 Mich. 55.

¶ 83. Where it did not appear that the wife of a deceased occupant of a homestead, she continuing to reside there, ever consented to the barn on the premises being changed over into a dwelling house or to the leasing of the same and that the value of the lot, including the leased portion, was less than $1,500, evidence held sufficient to show that the entire lot constituted the homestead. —Cope v. Merriam, 194 Mich. 55.

§ 33. ——Temporary absence.

Temporary absence on account of illness, see also post ¶ 117.

Loss of right by removal of family, see post § 41.

Effect of absence to validate sole mortgage, see post § 64.

¶ 84. A homestead is not lost by a temporary removal with intention of a speedy return.—Burkhardt v. James Walker & Son, 132 Mich. 93.

¶ 85. A homestead right is an artificial estate in land for the protection of the family in possession of it as a home, and its character as such depends upon both possession and the actual intention of the parties, and, while the owners may live elsewhere temporarily and, intending to return, retain their homestead rights, it is largely a matter of continuing intent, and is a fact to be proved like any other fact.—Stotts v. Stotts, 198 Mich. 605.

¶ 86. Unless one abandons his homestead right in a house, he does not lose it by living temporarily in a rented house, especially if he has left part of his furniture in it. So held where the owner was absent on business for two years and kept his family with him. —Bunker v. Paquette, 37 Mich. 79.

¶ 87. That a man rents a part of his homestead and is sometimes away from it are circumstances that do not affect his right so long as he retains a possession and claims the homestead privilege.—Pardo v. Bittorf, 48 Mich. 275.

¶ 88. A claim of homestead exemption was sustained, where, although at the time of the levy the owners were occupying other land not their own, it appeared that they had left some property in the house and had only gone elsewhere from poverty and necessity, and had always regarded it as their homestead.—Karn v. Hanson, 59 Mich. 380.

¶ 89. The temporary absence of the owner from his homestead, leaving it in a tenant's possession, but intending to return and continue it as such homestead, will not deprive the property of its exempt character.—Earll v. Earll, 60 Mich. 30.

¶ 90. The retention of homestead rights, though the party lives elsewhere temporarily, is largely a matter of continuing intent, and is a fact to be proved like any other fact.— Hoffman v. Buschman, 95 Mich. 538.

¶ 91. Absence from a homestead for six years will not deprive the owners of the protection of the statute, if during such absence they had a continuing intent to return to and occupy said homestead.—Kaeding v. Joachimsthal, 98 Mich. 78.

¶ 92. The question of good faith is one of fact where the owners of a homestead, seeking the benefit of the statute, have been absent from their homestead for six years, but claim during that period to have had a continuing intent to return to and occupy their homestead.—Kaeding v. Joachimsthal, 98 Mich. 78.

¶ 93. A woman 74 years of age who is unable to work a farm of 40 acres after the death of her husband, and has no other property, and rents the land from year to year, and works as a nurse and lives with relatives during a period of 4 or 5 years after leaving the premises, and has expressed her intention of returning to the farm cannot be deemed to have abandoned her homestead, even though she offered to sell or trade the premises so as to obtain a home near her relatives.—Steel v. Blanchette, 193 Mich. 167.

§ 34. Necessity and sufficiency of intention.

Intention to return after temporary absence, see also ante § 33, ¶¶ 84, 85, 89-93.

¶ 94. The mere ownership and occupancy of premises was not sufficient to constitute the same a homestead, under the act of March 25, 1848 (How. St. § 7721), unless there was an actual selection and choice of the premises as such by the owner and occupant.—People v. Plumsted, 2 Mich. 465.

¶ 95. Present intention of occupancy as a homestead, with present action to carry the intention into effect, constitutes a homestead in law.—Mills v. Hobbs, 76 Mich. 122.

¶ 96. Intention to erect a house without occupancy of the land in question other than to use it for the garden during the 3½ years of ownership and with no move to build, and no means to pay for the building, is not sufficient to establish a homestead.—Ware v. Hall, 138 Mich. 70.

¶ 97. On a bill to set aside a levy of land on execution on the ground that the land constituted complainant's homestead, where the only question was as to his intention to return to the property and occupy it; held, that he had no definite intention to return where it appeared that he had leased it and removed therefrom leaving a bed and some household furniture, and upon the tenant's leaving he had unsuccessfully attempted to sell the land whereupon he again leased it for five years, and again tried to sell it, and had finally occupied it when the latter tenant vacated it at the end of two years.— Ungers v. Chapman, 146 Mich. 643.

§ 35. Right to claim, claim by wife.

Claim by grantee, see post § 36.

Persons entitled to claim, see ante II.

Property claimable, see ante III.
Right of representative to invest funds of estate in homestead to injury of creditors, see Estates of Decedents ¶ 375.
Judgment or decree as bar to homestead claims of spouse not made a party, see Former Adjudication § 66.
Judgment as concluding homestead claims which might have been interposed by way of defense, see Former Adjudication § 50.

¶ 98. The object of the exemption is quite as much to protect the wife and family as the husband.—Beecher v. Baldy, 7 Mich. 488.

¶ 99. A wife can claim a homestead exemption in a farm owned by her, and upon which she lives with her husband, even though he is the head of the family, and manages the farm.—Kruger v. Le Blanc, 75 Mich. 424.

¶ 100. A wife can claim a homestead exemption in a farm on which she lives with her husband, he owning the buildings and she the land, as against her judgment creditors, to whom she has given notice of such claim, neither she nor her husband having made the statutory selection, and the husband making no claim different from or adverse to that of the wife.—Kruger v. Le Blanc, 75 Mich. 424.

§ 36. ——Claim by grantee.

¶ 101. A grantee cannot set up and rely upon a homestead right which his grantor had not made specific for his own benefit.—First Nat. Bank v. Jacobs, 50 Mich. 340.

§ 37. Mode of assertion of claim.

Selection, see post § 38.
Appraisal, see post § 39.
Setting out as incidental relief in other suits, see post § 80.
Validity of sole deed made before selection of homestead, see post § 61.
Necessity for assertion of claim, see also post ¶ 152.
Setting out homestead and subjection of excess, see post VIII.
Statutory mode for assertion and selection on levy or foreclosure sale, see Jud. Act, chap. XXIII, §§ 75-77; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 12890-12892.

¶ 102. Under said act of 1848, the homestead exemption is to be claimed after a levy and before sale. And when the land consists of a town lot, the value is to be estimated at that time.—Herschfeldt v. George, 6 Mich. 456.

¶ 103. The notification to the officer of a homestead claim was not required to be in writing under the law of 1848. It might be in any form which indicated to the officer, with reasonable certainty, the land claimed as a homestead, and might be made within a reasonable time after the debtor had notice of the levy.—Beecher v. Baldy, 7 Mich. 488.

§ 38. ——Selection.

Effect of conveyance prior to selection of homestead, see post § 61.

¶ 104. Selection is, under the constitution, only required where the tract out of which a homestead is claimed consists of a greater quantity, or is of greater value, than that instrument exempts. If the tract claimed by the debtor as exempt is all that he claims and occupies as a homestead, and is of the limited quantity and value, the whole is exempt without any other selection than is evinced by its ownership and occupation as a homestead.—Beecher v. Baldy, 7 Mich. 488.

¶ 105. A village lot and house, of less than $1,500 value, and not greater in size than the law requires for exemption, occupied by the owner with his family, does not require any action on the owner's part to exempt it from execution.—Thomas v. Dodge, 8 Mich. 51.

¶ 106. The homestead right of an execution defendant is not forfeited by his omission to select his homestead, if, being within reach, he is not actually notified of the levy or of the proceedings thereunder, and therefore does not know that any occasion has arisen to make a selection.—Griffin v. Nichols, 51 Mich. 575.

¶ 107. The selection of a homestead need not be in writing and recorded, nor need any particular formality be observed to fix the right. Occupancy of a parcel of land, within the $1,500 limit, by the placing of a dwelling-house thereon, and making the home there, is sufficient to declare it a homestead, and is notice to all of its selection.—Evans v. Grand Rapids, L. & D. R. Co., 68 Mich. 602.

§ 39. ——Appraisal.

See also post § 228.

¶ 108. Where a levy is made on land used as a homestead, the owner is not compelled to choose her homestead until the levying officer offers her an appraisal of the land.—Holley v. Horton, 164 Mich. 31.

§ 40. Abandonment, waiver or loss.

See also post ¶¶ 158, 251.
Removal of family, see post § 41.
By act of one spouse, see post § 42.
Conveyance by husband to wife, see post § 43.
Release, see post § 45.
Effect of separation of husband and wife, see post § 46.
Partial abandonment for residence purpose, see post § 44.
Loss of right by removal of house from premises, see ante ¶¶ 34, 35.

Effect on right of infant of abandonment of homestead by deceased parent, see also post ¶ 217.
Intention as affecting acquisition and claim of right, see ante § 34.
Effect on validity of sole deed of subsequent abandonment, see post § 60.
Adverse possession of homestead by one member of family against others, see Adverse Possession § 6.

¶ 109. The question of abandonment of a homestead is one of intention.—Steel v. Blanchette, 193 Mich. 167.

¶ 110. The duration of a man's absence from his own house does not of itself supply a conclusive presumption that he has abandoned it as a homestead.—Bunker v. Paquette, 37 Mich. 79.

¶ 111. In an action to establish a homestead, the question as to whether there was an intention to abandon the homestead is one of fact.—Gardner v. Gardner, 123 Mich. 673.

¶ 112. On a bill for partition of a former homestead, evidence held insufficient to show an abandonment of the homestead by the wife of the owner during the latter's lifetime.—Liebetreu v. Liebetreu, 197 Mich. 668.

¶ 113. Evidence held sufficient to show an abandonment by a husband and wife of their homestead rights in property occupied as a homestead.—Stotts v. Stotts, 198 Mich. 605.

¶ 114. A husband and wife are estopped by laches from asserting the right of a homestead in a life lease of land brought under contract, where they both abandon the property and remain away for 12 years and only make claim when the contract has been paid up by the daughter to whom the father had assigned the contract and by another daughter and her husband, and the father had been more than compensated by what his older daughters did in raising and educating one of his children.—Stotts v. Stotts, 198 Mich. 605.

¶ 115. A father's right of homestead in a farm is waived, where he has lived thereon with a son in whose favor a will was made in consideration of support, and, after the son's death has lived there and elsewhere with the son's widow in whose favor he made a new will to carry out the contract with her.—Lee v. Lee, 199 Mich. 507.

§ 41. ——Removal of family.

Effect of removal from homestead of minor children after death of parent, see also post § 75.
Loss by temporary absence, see ante § 33.

¶ 116. By removing with his family from his farm and living for five years thereafter in a city where he votes and claims his residence, one abandons the farm as his homestead even though he has left some of his household effects upon it, and has with another occupied it as a tenant.—Hoffman v. Buschman, 95 Mich. 538.

¶ 117. Complainant filed a bill to set aside an attachment levy upon property alleged to be his homestead. It appeared that he had vacated the premises a year and a half before the levy, and, with his family, had removed to a house occupied by his father, and had accepted from the latter a deed to the premises mentioned. Complainant claimed that the removal was necessary on account of his father's ill health, and was for a temporary purpose; that he never intended to abandon his homestead; that he had agreed to sell the property deeded to him by his father, and to pay the latter the surplus remaining after reimbursing himself for certain expenditures. Held, that the facts shown did not necessarily constitute an abandonment of the homestead so as to render it subject to attachment.—Hitchcock v. Misner, 111 Mich. 180.

¶ 118. A homestead is abandoned where the householder removes with his family to another building in the same city and after a year makes his home with his sister in one city and his wife and children remove to another, and where the householder never returned to the locality of the former homestead and voted elsewhere.—Smith v. Kidd, 123 Mich. 193.

¶ 119. On a bill to set aside a sale of land under execution on the ground that the land was a homestead where it appeared from the evidence that complainant had leased the land and moved with his family to the city where he had bought a house and lot taking the title in the name of his wife and they continued to live therein for five years at the expiration of which time, having separated from his wife he removed back to the farm, held that he had abandoned the homestead in the farm, and that no new homestead right had been established by his removal back to the farm because there was no fixed purpose of making the farm a homestead until complainant found occupancy necessary to save it from his creditors.—Swift v. Kleckner, 146 Mich. 91.

¶ 120. A man agreed to sell a piece of land on which he lived and which exceeded a statutory homestead. The family moved to another place and the purchaser made payments after the removal, which were accepted, the last being made after the vendor's death to his widow. Held, that the vendor's devisees could not contest the contract on the ground that it was for the sale of the homestead.—Lamore v. Frisbie, 42 Mich. 186.

§ 42. ——By act of one spouse.

¶ 121. Where a waiver of a homestead right is claimed it lies upon the party asserting it to show it by affirmative proof. But where the debtor is a married man he cannot, by any waiver, consent to a sale on execution, so as to render the sale valid, without the consent of the wife, any more than he could convey it by deed without the wife's signature.—Beecher v. Baldy, 7 Mich. 488.

¶ 122. Waiver of the homestead right by the husband does not affect the wife's interest therein, as a homestead once established cannot be waived except by abandonment or by alienation by deed.—Riggs v. Sterling, 60 Mich. 643.

¶ 123. The right of a wife to a homestead cannot be barred by desertion by the husband, or his surrender of a contract for the purchase of the land used as a homestead, nor by a conveyance of the land by the party to whom the contract was surrendered, made without the wife's consent.—Gardner v. Gardner, 123 Mich. 673.

¶ 124. Title acquired by a man and wife by adverse possession to land occupied by them as a homestead, is not divested by his sole act in subsequently contracting for the purchase of the premises from the owner of the record title.—Carlson v. Wisconsin Land & Lumber Co., 186 Mich. 212.

§ 43. ——Conveyance by husband to wife.

See also ante ¶¶ 121-123.
Alienation or incumbrance of homestead property, see post VI.
Conveyances from one spouse to other, see Husband and Wife, II, D.

¶ 125. A husband left his wife and children living upon their homestead, and bought land in another county and resided there nine years. Held, that a deed from him to his wife of his interest in the original homestead does not operate as an abandonment by her of such homestead so that she can claim homestead rights in the land upon which he now resides.—La Plant v. Lester, 150 Mich. 336.

§ 44. Partial abandonment for residence purpose.

¶ 126. Where the owner of two lots takes up his residence on one, and puts up a building which covers all the other lot and a small part of that on which he resides, his homestead right does not cover that portion of the residence lot used for the building.—Geney v. Maynard, 44 Mich. 578.

§ 45. Release.

Release of claim or right as sufficient consideration, see Contracts § 115.

¶ 127. The homestead interest can only be released to the owner of the fee.—Showers v. Robinson, 43 Mich. 502.

§ 46. Separation of husband and wife.

Desertion by wife or husband, see post § 47.

¶ 128. A wife driven from her home in this state by her husband's misconduct does not lose her homestead or other property right though she lives abroad.—Sherrid v. Southwick, 43 Mich. 515.

¶ 129. A wife driven from the homestead by her husband's cruelty loses none of her homestead rights.—Rogers v. Day, 115 Mich. 664.

¶ 130. A homestead is not abandoned by the mere absence of the owner from the state, where his wife continues to occupy the house, and it does not appear that the husband has acquired an independent homestead elsewhere.—Gadsby v. Monroe, 115 Mich. 282.

¶ 131. A letter written by a wife to her husband, who has driven her from home by his cruelty, in which she states that she will not go back to live with him, that he can use the place to help himself with, and that she will have what she took away, does not amount to a declaration of abandonment of her homestead interest.—Rogers v. Day, 115 Mich. 664.

§ 47. ——Desertion by wife or husband.

¶ 132. When a man has a homestead, if his wife leaves him without his consent to reside elsewhere, but he refuses to go with her and continues in the homestead, he is not by her leaving deprived of his exemption privilege.—Pardo v. Bittorf, 48 Mich. 275.

¶ 133. A man's homestead exemption is not necessarily destroyed by the act of his wife in abandoning him, or in beginning proceedings against him for a divorce, if he continues to treat the place as his home, working upon it from time to time, and sometimes eating or sleeping there, even though he parts with his furniture, and admits other occupants.—Griffin v. Nichols, 51 Mich. 575.

¶ 134. A homestead does not cease to be such because the homesteader's wife does not live with him.—Earll v. Earll, 60 Mich. 30.

¶ 135. Where after husband and wife had occupied certain property for three years they moved away and two years later she deserted him without cause, and subsequently wrote a letter urging him to sell the property to which he had returned, and where she afterwards conveyed it to a person who some days later reconveyed to her husband, held, that she had abandoned her homestead right.—Farwell Brick, Tile & Clay Shingle Co. v. McKenna, 86 Mich. 283. See also Martin v. Platt, 64 Mich. 629.

§ 48. Estoppel to claim.

See also ante ¶ 114.

To claim two homesteads, see post § 49.

Estoppel or laches of creditors barring their right to question, see post ¶ 239.

Estoppel of infant by acts of abandonment by parents, see also post ¶ 217.

General principles of estoppel, see Estoppel.

¶ 136. A widow is not estopped from claiming a homestead in lands by the fact that she desired its sale for the payment of debts, and requested a party to buy the land, and received from the proceeds the amount of a claim allowed in her favor.—Showers v. Robinson, 43 Mich. 502.

¶ 137. Where a man and wife acquired title by adverse possession to land occupied by them as a homestead, the act of the husband alone in subsequently contracting with the owner of the record title for the purchase of the premises does not estop the former's widow and heirs from asserting the title previously adversely acquired.—Carlson v. Wisconsin Land & Lumber Co., 186 Mich. 212.

¶ 138. A widow having no homestead in her own right, and where no children are left surviving, is not estopped to claim homestead, under Const. art. XVI, § 4, where she elects to take under a will which provides for a sale of the real estate and the payment to her of such a sum as dower as might be agreed on between the widow and the executor, or which the court might allow in case of disagreement; and where she petitioned the court to fix the amount and the property is sold under the will, the estate being solvent and the sale not having been made to pay debts.—Koster v. Gellen, 124 Mich. 149.

§ 49. ——Two homesteads.

¶ 139. A person is not entitled to claim a homestead right in two distinct places.—La Plant v. Lester, 150 Mich. 336.

¶ 140. Two homesteads cannot exist at once; and a wife who, with her husband, has abandoned one and taken up another cannot maintain ejectment against bona fide purchasers for the first, if the deed thereof to her husband was never recorded, and he, without her knowledge or consent, but without her subsequent protest, has allowed his grantor to retransfer the premises to a stranger.—Wheeler v. Smith, 62 Mich. 373.

¶ 141. One who, at the time when a contract was made with him for building a house upon his land, and when work was begun under such contract, owns and occupies a house elsewhere in the same city, cannot defeat the contractor's lien by claiming that the premises whereon the house was built were his homestead, and that his wife did not sign the contract.—McMonegal v. Wilson, 103 Mich. 264.

§ 50. Death without wife or issue surviving.

Rights of surviving spouse and children, see post VII.

¶ 142. A homestead exemption ceases on the death of a man without wife or minor children.—Brown v. Keiser, 182 Mich. 432.

VI. ALIENATION OR INCUMBRANCE OF HOMESTEAD PROPERTY.

§ 51. Antenuptial mortgages, contracts and conveyances.

Postnuptial mortgages and conveyances, see post §§ 52, 53.

Necessity and sufficiency of wife's joinder, see post §§ 54-56.

Necessity of husband's signature to wife's deed, see post § 57.

Rights under sole deed, see post §§ 58-62.

Rights under sole mortgage, see post §§ 63, 64.

Rights under sole contracts, assignments and leases, see post § 65.

Conveyances from one spouse to other, see post § 66.

Conveyances to wife through third person, see post § 67.

Exchanges of homesteads, see post § 68.

Repurchase and revival of right, see post § 69.

Antenuptial contracts and settlements in general, see Husband and Wife, I.

Sufficiency of antenuptial contract to cut off homestead rights, see also Husband and Wife ¶ 6.

¶ 143. The assignment by a husband, one day before his marriage, of his interest in a land contract to one of his daughters, does not constitute a fraud upon the rights of the intended wife so as to be void as to her, because depriving her of homestead rights, since there was no marital relation at such time, and especially where the purpose of the assignment was to relieve the assignor of what had become, because of his financial condition, an onerous obligation.—Stotts v. Stotts, 198 Mich. 605.

§ 52. Postnuptial mortgages and conveyances.

Formal requisites, see post § 53.

Conveyance by husband to wife as abandonment or waiver, see ante § 43.

Effect of mortgage by administrator of husband, see post ¶ 215.

Vendor's mortgages and purchase mortgages, see ante §§ 27, 28.

Power of husband to alien or transfer homestead of which wife is owner in fee, see also ante ¶ 10.

Right and capacity of husband to transfer interest as lessee without wife's consent, see ante ¶ 16.
Contract rights of married woman generally, see Husband and Wife, IV.
Contract for mechanics' lien, see Mechanics' Lien, IV.
Procedure to institute and perfect mechanics' liens, see Mechanics' Liens, V.
Invalidity of mortgage or conveyance executed by both spouses where one of them is minor, see Infants, III.
Transfer of homestead as fraud on creditors, see Fraudulent Conveyances § 16.
Transfer of homestead for inadequate consideration as fraud on creditors, see Fraudulent Conveyances § 40.
Right of representative to mortgage homestead to pay debts, see Estates of Decedents ¶ 793.
Reservation in assignments, see Assignments for Creditors § 10.
Proceedings in probate court for sale of property including homestead for payment of debts of estate, see Jud. Act, chap. LIX, §§ 45-48; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 14031-14034.

¶ 144. Where husband and wife join in a mortgage of their homestead it is a renunciation of their privilege, and on foreclosure the purchaser succeeds to all their rights as if no exemption ever existed; though as to third parties the exemption continues until foreclosure.—Chamberlain v. Lyell, 3 Mich. 448.

¶ 145. A wife joined in her husband's mortgage of certain lands including the homestead. On foreclosure she claimed that the home lot was her separate property, and that she had not known that the mortgage covered it; that she had not read the mortgage nor heard it read, and that if she had she would not have recognized the home lot by its description. It appeared that the mortgagee had acted in good faith and had done nothing to mislead her. Held, that the home lot was subject to the foreclosure decree.—Peake v. Thomas, 39 Mich. 584.

¶ 146. A lease of a homestead, the title to which is in the husband, suffices to bar her right (Const. art. XVI, § 2; How. St. § 7722) if signed by both husband and wife, although the husband only is named in the body of the instrument.—Barrett v. Cox, 112 Mich. 220.

§ 53. ——Formal requirements.

See also post ¶ 154.
Necessity for husband's signature to wife's deed, see post § 57.
Invalidity of homestead mortgage where acknowledgment taken in language not understood by mortgagor, see Execution of Instruments ¶ 80.
Validity of homestead mortgage where acknowledgment made by wife in presence of her husband, see Execution of Instruments ¶ 81.
Law as to execution of instruments in general, see Execution of Instruments.
Right to have conveyance set aside for mere defect in acknowledgment, see also Acknowledgments ¶ 80.

¶ 147. A woman may unite in her husband's deed of the homestead, but her act will be wholly inoperative as a release unless it conforms to the statutory requirements.—Fisher v. Meister, 24 Mich. 447; Showers v. Robinson, 43 Mich. 502.

¶ 148. A homestead mortgage, made at the joint solicitation and in the presence of the husband and one of the mortgagees, and acknowledged in their presence, if at all—the wife not understanding English, and the acknowledging officer making a merely formal inquiry of her in that language—was held invalid.—Fisher v. Meister, 24 Mich. 447.

¶ 149. Prior to Laws 1877, Act No. 62 of 1877 (How. St. § 5662) the husband's presence during the wife's acknowledgment of a mortgage, in which she joined to bar dower or homestead rights, raised a presumption of coercion, and defeated such acknowledgment.—Fisher v. Meister, 24 Mich. 447.

¶ 150. Misdescription does not invalidate a mortgage of a homestead where it would not invalidate a mortgage of any other property and where the premises can be identified by the aid of possession.—Beyschlag v. Van Wagoner, 46 Mich. 91.

¶ 151. A verbal promise to give security cannot create a mortgage lien upon the homestead.—King v. Wellborn, 83 Mich. 195.

§ 54. Necessity and sufficiency of wife's consent or joinder.

See also ante ¶ 29.
Nonjoinder of wife as defense in suit for specific performance, see post ¶ 255.
Sufficiency of subsequent separate deed of wife, see post § 62.
Effect of subsequent divorce, desertion or death, see post § 55.
Consent obtained by fraud, see post § 56.
Effect of nonjoinder by wife in dedication to public, see also Dedication ¶ 99.
Necessity for wife's joinder for alienation or incumbrance, see Const. art. XIV, § 2.
Statutory provision as to necessity for wife's joinder, see Jud. Act, chap. XXIII, § 74; Comp. L. 1915, § 12889.

¶ 152. Under the constitution, the homestead exemption is not a personal privilege, to be claimed by the debtor, but an absolute right, necessary to the welfare of the household, of which he cannot be deprived, if a married man, without the joint conveyance of himself and wife.—Dye v. Mann, 10 Mich. 291.

¶ 153. The husband cannot sell, mortgage or otherwise charge the homestead without the wife's consent.—Snyder v. People, 26 Mich. 102.

¶ 154. A homestead cannot be conveyed or mortgaged without the signature of the wife as a party to the conveyance.—Ring v. Burt, 17 Mich. 465; Fisher v. Meister, 24 Mich. 447.

¶ 155. It is necessary for a wife to join her husband in the execution of a deed of their homestead.—Agar v. Streeter, 183 Mich. 600.

¶ 156. A mortgage given by a married man of his homestead requires to its validity the signature of his wife, even though at the time she is not living with him, having been driven from her home by his misconduct. The signature of a woman, then passing as his wife, when she is not, is merely void.—Sherrid v. Southwick, 43 Mich. 515.

¶ 157. A contract made by a husband to convey the homestead in consideration of the support of himself and wife is void as to her, even though she orally assents to it.—Ring v. Burt, 17 Mich. 465.

¶ 158. A homestead once selected cannot be abandoned or alienated by the husband without the wife's consent.—Evans v. Grand Rapids, L. & D. R. Co., 68 Mich. 602.

¶ 159. A contract, by which a husband and wife agreed to convey an undivided half of land consisting of a homestead to a son of the wife in consideration of the son giving the crop to the parents and the survivor of them during life and paying taxes and making repairs, and providing that at the death of the survivor the son was to receive a deed in fee simple from the heirs, executors and administrators, was void by reason of the failure of the wife to sign; and the execution of a deed by both husband and wife to the other half of the land as part of the transaction, did not avoid the force of How. St. § 7722 and Const. art. XVI, § 2, relating to conveyances of a homestead.—Webster v. Warner, 119 Mich. 461.

¶ 160. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 10363, providing that the homestead right may be cut off by a mortgage or other alienation of the land, signed by the wife, a written authority signed by a contract purchaser and his wife directing the owners of the legal title to convey the same, is an effective and legal mode of alienating the homestead.—Stephens v. Leonard, 122 Mich. 125.

§ 55. ——Effect of subsequent divorce, desertion or death.

¶ 161. Whether the wife's desertion of her husband operates to bar the constitutional provision which declares that a mortgage given upon a homestead without her signature is void, quære.—Martin v. Platt, 64 Mich. 629.

¶ 162. A covenant of warranty of title in a mortgage of a homestead, which was originally void because the mortgagor's wife did not join therein, does not operate to cure the invalidity upon the subsequent granting of a divorce to the wife.—Rogers v. Day, 115 Mich. 664.

¶ 163. A wife driven from home by her husband's misconduct carries with her all her marital rights respecting alienation or incumbrance of homestead property.—Sherrid v. Southwick, 43 Mich. 515.

¶ 164. The wife's death does not validate a mortgage made by a married man covering his homestead and not signed by her.—Shoemaker v. Collins, 49 Mich. 595.

§ 56. ——Consent obtained by fraud.

General law of fraud, see Fraud.

Frauds in procuring alienation or release, see Fraud.

¶ 165. A husband sold his homestead, inducing his wife by false pretenses to join in the deed, and immediately the grantee conveyed to the husband's mother, within four days after which the husband abandoned his home and his wife. No consideration passed for either conveyance. Held, that both deeds should be set aside for fraud.—Spiegel v. Spiegel, 64 Mich. 345.

§ 57. Necessity of husband's signature to wife's deed.

¶ 166. A married woman may convey land owned by her in fee, but occupied by herself and husband as a homestead, without his joining in the instrument.—Buckingham v. Buckingham, 81 Mich. 89.

§ 58. Rights under sole deed.

Conveyances subject to life estate of wife, see post § 59.

Effect of subsequent abandonment, see post § 60.

Conveyance prior to selection of homestead, see post § 61.

Separate quit claim deed by wife, see post § 62.

Rights under sole mortgages, see post §§ 63, 64.

Rights under sole contracts, assignments and leases, see post § 65.

Right of wife to convey by her sole deed, see ante § 57.

¶ 167. A deed by the husband, not signed by his wife, of premises occupied by them as a homestead, is not merely voidable, but wholly void, even as against the husband.—Beecher v. Baldy, 7 Mich. 488; Phillips v. Stauch, 20 Mich. 369.

¶ 168. The attemped transfer of a homestead interest, the wife not having joined, was simply void, and the money put up by the intending purchaser could be recovered in an action for money had and received. —H. Stern, Jr. & Bros. Co. v. Wing, 135 Mich. 331.

¶ 169. A conveyance of the homestead by the husband without the signature of the wife is void.—Clement v. Buckley Mercantile Co., 172 Mich. 243.

¶ 170. A husband's sole deed of land that includes his homestead is not necessarily invalid except as to so much as lies in the homestead.—Wallace v. Harris, 32 Mich. 380.

¶ 171. A deed of a tract of land including a homestead, in which the wife does not join, is void as to the entire tract, if the homestead is incapable of severance.—Sammon v. Wood, 107 Mich. 506.

¶ 172. Neither a husband nor wife can alone convey or incumber a homestead, and such an instrument being void, no action for damages for its breach lies.—Way v. Root, 174 Mich. 418.

§ 59. ——Conveyances subject to life estate of wife.

¶ 173. An attempted conveyance of a homestead by a husband without the wife's signature is invalid, though expressly made subject to a life estate previously conveyed to the wife.—Gadsby v. Monroe, 115 Mich. 282.

¶ 174. A deed of a homestead, in trust for a wife and children, providing for the use of the premises by or for the benefit of the wife and children, and an ultimate division of the land and its proceeds among the survivors of them, is void without the signature of the wife, and does not operate to convey any title to the children. The question of the wife's acquiescence not being involved, to hold that title is in the children, would operate as a decision that husband may cut off the homestead rights of his wife by a deed without her signature.—Sirr v. Miller, 121 Mich. 598.

§ 60. ——Effect of subsequent abandonment.

¶ 175. A husband's attempted conveyance of the homestead without the wife's signature is not validated by the subsequent abandonment of the homestead by the wife.—Rogers v. Day, 115 Mich. 664.

§ 61. ——Conveyance prior to selection of homestead.

¶ 176. A conveyance of premises owned and occupied, but not previously selected as a homestead, was valid without the signature of the owner's wife.—People v. Plumsted, 2 Mich. 465.

¶ 177. Where a husband and wife live on a portion of a tract of land, a deed by the husband alone will not convey the wife's homestead interest despite the fact that the husband made no definite selection of a homestead.—Cooper v. Cooper, 162 Mich. 304.

§ 62. ——Separate quitclaim deed by wife.

¶ 178. Where a married man made an oral contract with his two sons giving them moities of his farm the fact that the wife afterwards executed a separate quitclaim deed pursuant to the oral contract was not enough to comply with Const. art. XVI, § 2, providing that a homestead cannot be alienated by a married man without the valid signature of his wife.—Hooker and Grant dissenting.—Lott v. Lott, 146 Mich. 580.

§ 63. Rights under sole mortgage.

Effect of secret marriage or absence from homestead, see post § 64.

General law of mortgages, see Mortgages.

¶ 179. A mortgage of a homestead is absolutely void as to the homestead if not signed by the wife. It is not merely void as against the wife.—Dye v. Mann, 10 Mich. 291; Amphlett v. Hibbard, 29 Mich. 298; Watertown Fire Ins. Co. v. Grover & B. S. M. Co., 41 Mich. 131; Sherrid v. Southwick, 43 Mich. 515; Shoemaker v. Collins, 49 Mich. 595.

¶ 180. A subsequent mortgagee, whose mortgage is executed by both husband and wife, may take advantage of the invalidity of a mortgage given by a married man upon his homestead without his wife's signature. —Dye v. Mann, 10 Mich. 291.

¶ 181. A homestead mortgage, which is void in its inception by reason of not being executed by the mortgagor's wife, is not made valid by a subsequent conveyance by the mortgagor and wife to a third person, though the property should cease to be a homestead.—Amphlett v. Hibbard, 29 Mich. 298.

¶ 182. A. made a mortgage, his wife not joining. Held, that her homestead rights in the land thus mortgaged were not affected, either by the mortgage or by the decree foreclosing the same, she not having been a party to the foreclosure suit.—Shoemaker v. Collins, 49 Mich. 595.

¶ 183. The invalidity of a mortgage of the family homestead by the husband without the wife's joining may be availed of by an heir-at-law of the mortgagor after the latter's death.—Sherrid v. Southwick, 43 Mich. 515.

¶ 184. A court of equity has power to revive a mortgage lien on a homestead which has been discharged by means of money equitably belonging to complainant, such revival not being a violation of the rule against creating a lien on a homestead without the consent of the wife.—Markillie v. Allen, 120 Mich. 360.

§ 64. ——Effect of secret marriage or absence from homestead.

Rights of absent or nonresident wife, see post § 72.

Effect of temporary absence, see ante § 33.

¶ 185. A wife, secretly married to a mortgagor and who does not join in the mortgage, is not entitled to homestead rights in the premises as against a mortgagor who was ignorant of the marriage, where she has not lived on the premises.—Hall v. Marshall, 139 Mich. 123.

§ 65. Rights under sole contracts, assignments and leases.

Rights under antenuptial contracts, see ante § 51.

¶ 186. The husband's contract not signed by the wife, and intended to have a present operation, to convey premises occupied as a homestead, is void, and cannot be enforced. —Phillips v. Stauch, 20 Mich. 369; Hall v. Loomis, 63 Mich. 709.

¶ 187. If a man conveys to his wife their homestead, and then agrees with a third person without her consent that this person, in consideration of supporting the married couple, shall have possession of the premises except the house thereon, the wife is not bound by such agreement, and is entitled to recover possession if she only gave it up on condition of support which she has not received.—Ganson v. Baldwin, 93 Mich. 217.

¶ 188. An oral contract by a married man with his two sons whereby he gave them moities in his farm, which was a homestead, is absolutely void both in equity and at law unless the wife has assented thereto in writing, being in violation of Const. art. XVI, § 2.—Lott v. Lott, 146 Mich. 580.

¶ 189. A vendee in possession under a contract of purchase cannot, where a homestead may be claimed, alienate his contract interest without his wife joining with him. —McKee v. Wilcox, 11 Mich. 358.

¶ 190. No lien is established on the homestead by a contract, signed by the husband and not by the wife, purporting to declare a lien thereon for a debt due for the construction of the dwelling house on the homestead.—Girzi v. Carey, 53 Mich. 447.

¶ 191. A patent that has been taken out by the assignee of a certificate of purchase of school land is void as between the patentee and the wife of the assignor, if she had homestead rights in the land and did not join in the assignment.—Allen v. Cadwell, 55 Mich. 8.

¶ 192. A contract giving a railroad company the right of way over land occupied as a homestead is void as against such homestead unless signed by the wife.— Evans v. Grand Rapids, L. & D. R. Co., 68 Mich. 602.

¶ 193. A contract whereby one party agrees to set out and cultivate for ten years on his homestead certain peach trees to be furnished by the other parties, who are to receive in payment a share of the peaches, the trees being planted upon a part only of the land, and the occupation and possession of buildings and land not being interfered with, need not be signed by the landowner's wife.—Dickey v. Waldo, 97 Mich. 255.

¶ 194. Const. art. XVI, § 2, providing that no mortgage or other alienation of a homestead by a married man shall be valid without the signature of the wife, includes a lease of the homestead which contemplates the exclusion of the wife from all enjoyment of the premises.—Mailhot v. Turner, 157 Mich. 167.

¶ 195. The lease of a part of a homestead by a husband without the signature of his wife is void.—Township of Jasper v. Martin, 161 Mich. 336.

¶ 196. The assignment of a life lease in a homestead, in which the wife does not join, does not deprive her of homestead rights.— Stotts v. Stotts, 198 Mich. 605.

¶ 197. Where a tenant at will erects a house on the leased land, and with his wife occupies the same as a home, an assignment of his leasehold interest, made with the assent of the lessor, is ineffectual to convey the homestead rights thus acquired, if not signed by the wife.—Maatta v. Kippola, 102 Mich. 116.

¶ 198. Under Const. art. XVI, § 2, a contract by a husband to sell a homestead, not joined in by the wife, is absolutely void, and no right of action for damages against the husband for refusal to convey pursuant to such contract can be based thereon. (By a divided court, per Blair, C. J., Ostrander, Hooker and Moore, JJ., concurring; McAlvay, Grant Montgomery and Brooke, JJ., dissenting.)—Lawrence v. Vinkemulder, 157 Mich. 294.

§ 66. Conveyance from one spouse to other.

Conveyance to wife through third person, see post § 67.

Award of homestead to one spouse on divorce, see Divorce § 140.

¶ 199. A husband's conveyance of the homestead to his wife is not void because she does not join therein.—Lynch v. Doran, 95 Mich. 395.

§ 67. Conveyance to wife through third person.

¶ 200. A deed from A. to B. of a homestead, for the mere purpose of transferring the title to A.'s wife, which is accomplished by B.'s conveying at once to her, is not void for want of her signature. The whole transaction should be treated as a conveyance from A. to his wife.—Stevens v. Castel, 63 Mich. 111.

¶ 201. A deed from the husband to a third person of a homestead for the mere purpose of transferring the title to the wife and the husband, which is accomplished by the grantee at once executing a deed to the husband and wife, is not void for want of the signature of the wife under the Constitution, art. XIV, § 2, requiring the signature of the wife to a conveyance of a homestead, as the object of such provision is to protect the interest of the wife, and such interest is not impaired by such conveyance. —Weaver v. Michello, 193 Mich. 572. (Ostrander, J., dissenting.)

¶ 202. A wife who joins her husband in a deed of the homestead to a third party who immediately reconveys to her, does not thereby abandon her homestead right in the property.—Burkhardt v. James Walker & Son, 132 Mich. 93.

§ 68. Exchange of homesteads.

¶ 203. Where land occupied as a homestead is to be exchanged for other land evidently contemplated to be used as a homestead in lieu thereof, and the wife relinquishes her rights in the former land, the husband cannot, without her consent and signature, mortgage the other land to secure a loan from a third party with which to pay the difference agreed to be paid on such exchange.—Dikeman v. Arnold, 71 Mich. 656.

¶ 203a. A deserted husband sued for divorce and, supposing he had got his decree, married a woman who joined with him in conveying his homestead in exchange for other land upon which he was preparing to build, and in a mortgage of which his new companion joined. Subsequently he obtained his divorce, the mortgage was foreclosed by advertisement and his first wife died. Held, that he could not defeat ejectment by claiming that the mortgage was void as upon his homestead without his first wife's signature; the only homestead, so far as the latter was concerned, was that occupied before the desertion.—Trout v. Rumble, 82 Mich. 202.

§ 69. Repurchase and revival of right.

Revival of mortgage lien by court of equity, see ante ¶ 184.

Right of wife to redeem from foreclosure lands occupied as homestead but mortgaged by husband before marriage, see Mortgage, IX.

¶ 204. Where a wife has joined with her husband in an absolute deed of property which her husband had already mortgaged, a subsequent purchase of the property by her cannot revive her original rights so as to enable her, in resisting foreclosure of the mortgage, to claim homestead in the lands. —Johnson v. Van Velsor, 43 Mich. 208.

VII. RIGHTS OF SURVIVING SPOUSE, CHILDREN OR HEIRS.

§ 70. Rights of widow.

See also ante ¶ 138.

Remarriage, see post § 71.

Rights of absent or nonresident wife, see post § 72.

Protection of wife and family as purpose of exemption, see ante ¶ 98.

Rights in dower, see Dower.

Nature of widow's tenancy where she continues to occupy jointly with children of decedent, see also Descent ¶ 53.

Homestead rights of widow, see Const. art. XIV, §§ 3, 4.

Statutory provisions as to rights of widow in exemption, see Jud. Act, chap. XXIII, § 73; Comp. L. 1915, § 12888.

Rights of widow after sale of real property by administrator, see Comp. L. 1915, § 11795.

¶ 205. The constitutional provisions exempting a homestead from forced sale for the payment of debts continue the exemption after the death of the owner during the minority of his children or during the widowhood of his surviving wife.—Showers v. Robinson, 43 Mich. 502.

¶ 206. The homestead right does not attach in favor of a widow and children unless the estate is insolvent and in debt; and if it is not, it goes to the heirs at once subject to the widow's right of dower.—Zoellner v. Zoellner, 53 Mich. 620.

¶ 207. The right of a widow surviving with no children to the homestead mentioned in Const. art. XVI, § 4, is not dependent on insolvency of the estate, and may be claimed out of an estate in addition to dower or a provision in lieu of dower.—Koster v. Gellen, 124 Mich. 149.

¶ 208. Where there are no minor children of a decedent and his widow the widow cannot acquire a homestead in land occupied by decedent as a homestead during his life free from decedent's debts.—Rasor v. Mott, 196 Mich. 445.

¶ 209. No provision is made by law for a widow and children where the estate of the deceased exceeds the homestead exemption in value, but is incapable of partition and the widow is the only creditor. In such a case, if the heirs are not in occupation and seek partition, the administrator may properly take possession and collect rents, and apply them to the payment of the widow's claim; and if she herself occupies the premises she must account for two-thirds of the rental value, which may also be applied on the debt to her. But she is entitled, as the administrator would be, to the amount of necessary expenditures made by her for repairs, taxes, etc. And in a suit to which she and the heirs are parties, if there are no other creditors, this may be ordered without impleading the administrator.—Zoellner v. Zoellner, 53 Mich. 620.

§ 71. ——Remarriage.

See also post ¶ 239.

¶ 210. A widow whose child dies after her husband, and who marries again, loses the homestead right acquired through her former husband.—Dei v. Habel, 41 Mich. 88.

§ 72. ——Rights of absent or nonresident wife.

See also ante ¶¶ 4, 185.

¶ 211. A man living with his wife and children in New York left them and came to this state, where he illegally married another woman, with whom he lived until his death. The legal wife never came to this state. Held, that the latter could claim no homestead rights in property occupied in Michigan as a homestead by the husband with the second wife.—Stanton v. Hitchcock, 64 Mich. 316.

§ 73. Homestead in addition to dower.

Dower rights in general, see Dower.

¶ 212. A widow's homestead right is not affected by the fact that dower has been set off to her in the lands.—Showers v. Robinson, 43 Mich. 502; Patterson v. Patterson, 49 Mich. 176.

§ 74. Rights of minor children.

Removal from homestead, see post § 75.
Sale subject to homestead, see post § 76.
Joinder of minor children as plaintiffs in ejectment for homestead, see post ¶ 258.
Homestead rights of minor children, see Const. art. XIV, § 2.
Statutory rights of minor children in exemption, see Jud. Act, chap. XXIII, § 73; Comp. L. 1915, § 12888.

¶ 213. Under Const. art. XVI, § 3, the homestead of a family, after the death of the owner thereof, is exempt from the payment of his debts during the minority of his children, and neither the probate nor chancery court has power to decree its sale to pay debts allowed against the estate of said owner.—Kraft v. Kraft, 102 Mich. 439.

¶ 214. A mo or convey awa minor children
terest to do so.
605.

¶ 215. Where the homestead o joins, no right minor heirs; an mains beyond t statutory homes
—Griffin v. Joh

§ 75. ——Remo
Removal from h donment of ¶ 216. The a away from the neglecting to c minor children

she neglects or it may be done
sentative.—Sho 502.

¶ 217. An inf homestead right bound by their a stead and adop
Wheeler v. Smi

¶ 218. Childr reserved by th on a sale by h husband's prope
long as they re occupy the lan adult children ing elsewhere w plain that thei
fee and alienate
109 Mich. 235.

§ 76. ——Sale s

¶ 219. A sale stance, when the is deemed to ha of homestead un
where.—Showers

§ 77. Rights of h

¶ 220. The ho prevent partitio their assignees.—
619; Patterson v

¶ 221. An adu
the homestead, possession while settlement, nor c
out her consent, partition is actu
terson, 49 Mich.

VIII. SETTING OUT HOMESTEAD, AND SUBJECTION OF EXCESS.

§ 78. Selection by claimant.

Suits or proceedings to set out or allot value, see post § 79.

Setting out as incidental relief in other suits, see post § 80.

Subjection of excess value, see post § 81.

Statutory mode for assertion and selection on levy or foreclosure sale, see Jud. Act, chap. XXIII, §§ 75-77; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 12890-12892.

¶ 222. After another's rights have attached to property they cannot be avoided by the capricious location of a homestead upon it in such manner as to injure the value of the adjacent premises included under these rights; as, by fixing the homestead in the center of a block of city lots.—Hanchett v. McQueen, 32 Mich. 22.

§ 79. Suits or proceedings to set out or allot value.

Sale in partition proceedings of premises indivisible in character and exceeding homestead allowance in value but not in area, see Partition.

Procedure for appraisal and setting out of homestead in course of administration of estate of decedent or guardian, see Jud. Act, chap. LIX, §§ 46-48; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 14032-14034.

¶ 223. Equity may assume jurisdiction of bill to have value of homestead ascertained and premises set off, no method having been provided by the statutes for that purpose.—Beecher v. Baldy, 7 Mich. 488; Ring v. Burt, 17 Mich. 465.

¶ 224. A wife may file a bill in equity to have a homestead right set off to her.—Comstock v. Comstock, 27 Mich. 97.

¶ 225. Where a widow is entitled to a homestead in forty acres of land worth more than $1,500 her proper remedy was by bill in equity to have a homestead of the proper value set off.—Ring v. Burt, 17 Mich. 465.

¶ 226. Comp. L. 1871, § 4594 (How. St. § 6074), the statute limiting the time for bringing suits for land held under probate sale to five years, has no application to a suit by a widow for the recovery of her homestead; since her title is such that the administrator's sale is immaterial to it.—Showers v. Robinson, 43 Mich. 502.

¶ 227. In the absence of any statutory mode of determining the value of premises claimed as a homestead, when the value is disputed, either party, after a levy has been made, may file a bill in equity asking that a selection may be made by the householder should the property be found divisible, and that the value may be ascertained whether divisible or not. The value may then be ascertained either by directing an issue to the jury or by reference to a commissioner to take proofs and report; and in this manner the rights of both parties may be secured according to the nature of the case.—Beecher v. Baldy, 7 Mich. 488.

¶ 228. In the settlement of an estate a widow was entitled as against the claims of creditors to a homestead interest of $1,500 in a certain lot, which if sold as a whole was worth $2,500, but which if divided so as to carve out a homestead interest would be worth only $1,800. Under a partition setting aside about one-third of the lot for creditors, the part so set aside would be worth only about three hundred dollars. Held, said lot was incapable of partition and the proper course was to sell the same as a whole and pay to the widow $1,500 of the proceeds.—Hamilton v. Wilcox, 167 Mich. 551.

¶ 229. Where a married woman files a bill to have a homestead right set off to her, it is no defense that her husband is, at the time of filing the bill, providing her with a comfortable home.—Comstock v. Comstock, 27 Mich. 97.

§ 80. Setting out as incidental relief in other suits.

See also ante ¶ 19.

Appraisal and setting out of homesteads on execution, see Executions §§ 47, 48.

Proper persons to be homestead appraisers on execution, see Executions § 48.

Presumption that in selling surplus interest proper allowance for incumbrances was made in appraisal, see Executions ¶ 243.

Setting out homestead as relief incidental to levy or foreclosure sale, see Jud. Act, chap. XXIII, §§ 75-77; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 12890-12892.

Proceedings in probate court for setting out homestead in administration of estate of decedent or guardian, see Jud. Act, chap. LIX, §§ 45-48; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 14031-14034.

¶ 230. Where a bill was filed in aid of an execution that was levied on a lot which had been conveyed in fraud of creditors and was occupied as a homestead, and the answer did not aver its value to be low enough to bring it within the constitutional exemption, the levy was held legal, and action should have been taken under it to ascertain the homestead right or secure such interest as might remain over in case the value of the property exceeded the amount of the levy.—Matson v. Melchor, 42 Mich. 477.

¶ 231. Where a married man gives a mortgage covering his homestead without his wife's signature, and the premises are of more than $1,500 value, the mortgage, though void as to a homestead of that value, is good as to the residue. On bill filed to foreclose such a mortgage the court ordered a reference to a commissioner to set off as a homestead so much of the premises, with the improvements, as was worth $1,500 at the date of the mortgage, including the dwelling-house and, as far as practicable, such of the out-buildings and other improvements as might be found most essential to the enjoyment of the homestead; to the end that, on the coming in and confirmation of the report, the mortgage might be declared void as to the homestead thus set off, and good as to the residue.—Dye v. Mann, 10 Mich. 291.

¶ 232. Where a conveyance of land which embraces an undefined homestead interest, and something besides, is assailed in equity as fraudulent as against creditors, the decree setting off so much as is not exempt as a homestead should provide for an admeasurement and setting off of the homestead according to the situation and value at the date of such conveyance.—Smith v. Rumsey, 33 Mich. 183.

§ 81. Subjection of excess value.

See also ante ¶¶ 23, 42.
Value of property claimable, see ante § 17.
Necessity on creditors' bill of proof of value above homestead, see also Creditors' Suits § 5.
Mechanics' liens against excess when insufficient to bind homestead, see Mechanics' Liens, III, VIII.
Liability of excess over $1,500 under mechanics' lien where agreement therefor not signed by wife, see Mechanics' Liens, III.
Statutory provisions for subjection of excess value, see Jud. Act, chap. XXIII, §§ 80, 81; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 12895, 12896.

¶ 233. A creditor has no right to take homestead property where the interest over the amount of an existing incumbrance is less than $1,500, even though he offers to pay $1,500 for the interest.—Palmer v. Bray, 136 Mich. 85.

¶ 234. Article XVI, § 2, of the Michigan Constitution, and Comp. Laws 1897, § 10362, provide for the exemption of not over forty acres of land as a homestead. A judgment creditor of the contractual vendor of a homestead farm of forty-one acres brought garnishment to have the vendee make the payments in the contract to him. Held, the exemption applied only to the forty acres and the vendor was entitled to an exemption on only forty forty-firsts of the purchase money.—Holley v. Horton, 164 Mich. 31.

¶ 235. In distributing the surplus received from a foreclosure sale of a homestead exceeding $1,500 in value and incapable of division, a mortgage of the homestead interest is entitled to be paid before anything is applied on antecedent levies.—Vermont Sav. Bank v. Elliott, 58 Mich. 256.

IX. PROTECTION AND ASSERTION OF RIGHT IN COLLATERAL ACTIONS.

§ 82. In general.

Suits in equity, see post § 83.
Suits for specific performance, see post § 84.
Ejectment and summary proceedings, see post § 85.
Action for damages, see post § 86.
Creditors' suits and suits in aid of execution, see post § 87.
Foreclosure suits, see post § 88.
Suits to set out or allot value, see ante § 79.
Setting out as incidental relief in other suits, see ante § 80.
Actions by and against husband or wife as affected by coverture generally, see Husband and Wife, VI.
Right of other spouse to move for dissolution of attachment, see Attachment § 105.
Modifying or amending judgment to exclude homestead, see Judgments, V.
Survivability of right to sue to protect, see Abatement § 17.

¶ 236. Adverse and paramount homestead rights claimed by an execution defendant, may be brought under consideration in ejectment brought by an execution purchaser; or the defendant can move to set aside the execution sale or file a bill in equity.—Riggs v. Sterling, 51 Mich. 157.

¶ 237. A wife's homestead rights will be protected in whatever form they come in question, whether at law or in chancery.—Dikeman v. Arnold, 71 Mich. 656.

¶ 238. In a suit to establish a lien on the homestead, the wife must be joined with the husband as a party, despite the fact that the wife did not sign the instrument purporting to declare the lien on the homestead.—Girzi v. Carey, 53 Mich. 447.

¶ 239. Where an intestate died leaving a homestead valued at less than $1,500 and his widow remarried before the settlement of the estate had been closed, an unexcused delay of six years by the creditors who all the time knew of their rights to subject the homestead to the payment of their debts is such laches as will prevent them from enforcing their rights.—In re Emmons' Estate, 142 Mich. 299.

§ 83. Suits in equity.

See also ante ¶ 236.
Suits for specific performance, see post § 84.
General principles of equity, see Equity.
Suits to quiet title against homestead right, see Jud. Act, chap. XII, §§ 20-27; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 12371-12378.

¶ 240. The wife is a proper party to a bill filed by the husband to protect the homestead against a mortgage not signed by her.—Shoemaker v. Gardner, 19 Mich. 96.

¶ 241. A wife may maintain a bill to set aside an execution levy and sale of the homestead though title thereto is in the husband.—Burkhardt v. James Walker & Son, 132 Mich. 93.

¶ 242. A husband is not a necessary party to his wife's suit to set aside a deed of their homestead for fraud practiced upon her in procuring it.—Sanborn v. Sanborn, 104 Mich. 180.

¶ 243. Where a married man, who was in possession of land not exceeding in quantity and value what is exempt from execution as a homestead, under a contract to purchase the same, surrendered and cancelled his contract of purchase without the assent of the wife, it was held that such surrender was invalid and that the wife might file a bill in equity in her own name and have a specific performance of the contract.—McKee v. Wilcox, 11 Mich. 358.

¶ 244. Where a bill is filed to protect a homestead right in land mortgaged by the husband alone, and against which a foreclosure decree has been rendered, he was properly made a party complainant although the decree is for the benefit of his family.—Shoemaker v. Collins, 49 Mich. 595.

¶ 245. A bill to protect a homestead must show all the facts necessary to a description of a homestead as defined by law, e. g., that the value of the premises does not exceed $1,500.—Shoemaker v. Gardner, 19 Mich. 96.

¶ 246. An allegation that complainants are owners in fee of certain described premises, that there is a building situated on the land, and they have their residence in it and occupy it as a homestead, sufficiently alleges that there is a "dwelling" on the premises.—Lozo v. Sutherland, 38 Mich. 168.

¶ 247. In a bill to protect a homestead against one who claims under a contract signed by the husband only, an averment that complainants live upon forty acres of land which is their homestead necessarily implies that the value of the land does not exceed the constitutional limit of $1,500, and it is therefore sufficient to support the claim of a homestead.—Evans v. Grand Rapids, L. & D. R. Co., 68 Mich. 602.

¶ 248. In a bill to set aside an execution as levied upon a homestead, an allegation "that the whole value of said premises over and above the amount of two mortgages prior in date to the date of the record of the levy of the execution * * * does not exceed the sum of $1,500," was considered sufficient on a general demurrer, though it would have been better to set forth the mortgages in detail.—Lozo v. Sutherland, 38 Mich. 168.

¶ 249. Where the homestead right is absolutely denied and its actual enjoyment seriously endangered by the foreclosure of what are claimed to be purchase-price mortgages, a bill filed by the wife to have a homestead right set off to her cannot be called premature because no execution had been levied on the premises and no sale advertised under any decree; the right properly calls for preventive remedies.—Comstock v. Comstock, 27 Mich. 97.

¶ 250. Upon a bill by a woman to set aside an assignment by her husband of a land contract, the evidence showed that the land in question was the homestead of complainant's husband and family, and that complainant did not join in the assignment, but that she did voluntarily abandon said homestead with her husband, and move to the farm taken in exchange for it, and that defendant had in good faith made valuable improvements upon the property and also incumbered it. Held, that although the assignment of the homestead without the wife's signature was void, still complainant's claim is inequitable, and the bill should be dismissed.—Bovine v. Selden, 155 Mich. 556.

¶ 251. A judgment creditor of the contractual vendor of a homestead farm brought garnishment to have the vendee make the payments on the contract to him. Complainant vendor immediately filed a bill claiming her homestead exemption and seeking an injunction of the garnishment suit. Held, she acted reasonably in claiming her exemption, and did not waive it.—Holley v. Horton, 164 Mich. 31.

¶ 252. In an action by an execution debtor to set aside an execution and levy, where it appears that he was the owner of three lots, all in one inclosure, in a village, which constituted his homestead, and which were occupied by him as such at the time of the levy, the three lots must be treated as one by the sheriff, and proceedings taken under Comp. L. 1897, §§ 10364-10366, and a levy and sale made of the two lots not occupied by his house is not authorized.—Averill v. Benzie County State Sav. Bank, 143 Mich. 306.

§ 84. Suits for specific performance.

General principles of specific performance, see Specific Performance.

¶ 253. Where the husband, without his wife's assent, cancelled his contract for the purchase of land, possessed by them as a homestead, in a suit for specific performance brought in the wife's name, the decree should be that the land be conveyed to the husband, but subject to a lien in favor of the wife for the amount she pays in fulfilling the contract.—McKee v. Wilcox, 11 Mich. 358.

¶ 254. Specific performance of a husband's contract of sale of eighty acres, including a homestead which had never been set off, decreed. The law cannot select a homestead if one has not been already chosen.—Stevenson v. Jackson, 40 Mich. 702.

¶ 255. Where a vendee in a land contract has gone into possession, and the other party and his wife have removed therefrom and established a homestead on land bought with the purchase-money, the wife's not joining in the contract as for the sale of a homestead is no defense in specific performance.—Walker v. Kelly, 91 Mich. 212.

¶ 256. Where one party to an oral contract for the transfer of a farm containing three forty-acre tracts and an adjoining parcel of sixty-nine acres, had by fulfilling the contract on his part entitled himself to a decree of specific performance, except that the contract was void as to a homestead, it was held, no dower rights being involved, that the infirmity did not affect the parcels capable of severance, and that the forty-acre tract upon which the vendor's dwelling was situated would be treated as the homestead, and the contract declared operative as to the rest.—Engle v. White, 104 Mich. 15.

§ 85. Ejectment and summary proceedings.

General law of ejectment, see Ejectment.

General law as to summary proceedings, see Forcible Entry.

Necessity of joining defendant's wife in ejectment for lands presumptively outside homestead, see Ejectment ¶ 101.

Disability to try right in forcible entry or summary proceedings, see Forcible Entry ¶ 129.

¶ 257. A wife can maintain ejectment to recover from her husband the possession of land owned by her in fee, while he continues in occupation of it as a homestead, after she has separated from him, removed from the land and taken up her residence elsewhere, and abandoned the homestead.—Buckingham v. Buckingham, 81 Mich. 89.

¶ 258. Minor children may be joined as plaintiffs, but are not necessary, in ejectment brought by their mother to recover a homestead.—Showers v. Robinson, 43 Mich. 502.

¶ 259. Where two brothers and their wives occupied a lot of land within the constitutional requirements necessary to constitute a homestead, all are necessary parties to an action of ejectment to recover said premises.—Stoinski v. Pulte, 77 Mich. 322.

¶ 260. In an ejectment where husband and wife both occupy premises as a homestead, both must be made parties defendant.—Carby v. Combs, 166 Mich. 347.

¶ 261. In ejectment for land occupied by man and wife as their homestead both are necessary party defendants.—Cleaver v. Bigelow, 61 Mich. 47; Davis Sewing Machine Co. v. Whitney, 61 Mich. 518.

¶ 262. In an action of ejectment to recover possession of premises occupied by man and wife as a homestead the wife is a necessary party.—Kalkes v. Storms, 93 Mich. 480.

¶ 263. Where husband and wife together occupy as a homestead lands claimed to belong to the wife, ejectment against the husband alone is not the proper proceeding to test the validity of a conveyance to the wife, whose rights can be affected by no judgment respecting the title when she is not a party; a judgment against the husband cannot be the basis for disturbing her possession or expelling him from her. Action should be against both.—Hodson v. Van Fossen, 26 Mich. 68.

¶ 264. Where the claim of homestead is set up in defense to an action of ejectment in which, but for the question of homestead, the right of recovery is clear, the burden of proving the facts necessary to establish the homestead right is upon the defendant.—Amphlett v. Hibbard, 29 Mich. 298.

¶ 265. Where a homestead right is set up in defense to a suit in ejectment brought on a title obtained under a mortgage foreclosure, evidence that the defendants had conveyed to a third person after the time at which they claimed that their homestead right had attached is admissible as bearing directly on the question of their homestead rights.—Amphlett v. Hibbard, 29 Mich. 298.

¶ 266. The burden of proving a homestead right is upon the defendant who asserts it as a defense in ejectment.—Hoffman v. Buschman, 95 Mich. 538.

¶ 267. A homestead right, though not strictly an estate, cannot be tried in summary proceedings for possession.—Riggs v. Sterling, 51 Mich. 157.

¶ 268. In ejectment to recover a parcel of land claimed to have been a homestead, and therefore unlawfully sold, the finding of the trial court neither found that a homestead existed nor found facts from which it could be identified. Held, that plaintiff could not recover.—Gardner v. Thayer, 50 Mich. 128.

¶ 269. A judgment for plaintiff in ejectment based on a finding that the land claimed was occupied as a homestead, and that the mortgage thereon—under which defendant got possession—was void as not signed by plaintiff's wife, cannot be sustained where there is no finding or evidence showing the value of the land.—Martin v. Platt, 64 Mich. 629.

¶ 270. In ejectment by a mortgagee, after the foreclosure of a purchase-money mortgage without making the wife of the mortgagor a party, to recover possession of the mortgaged premises, which are occupied by the mortgagor and his wife as a homestead, the wife is a necessary party.—Gibbs v. O'Neil, 85 Mich. 633.

¶¶ 271, 272. A mortgagor's heir at law may maintain ejectment against one who holds under a foreclosure of a mortgage of the homestead not signed by the mortgagor's wife.—Sherrid v. Southwick, 43 Mich. 515.

§ 86. Action for damages.

Measure of damages for condemnation of railroad right of way through homestead, see Eminent Domain ¶ 105.

Asserting homestead in condemnation suit to entitle to damages for lands contiguous to those taken, see Eminent Domain ¶ 246.

¶ 273. Whether a husband, when his wife owns the title to a homestead, has by virtue of the marital relation such an interest in it as entitles him to damages when she has by fraud been induced to part with it, quære.—Devereaux v. Hubbard, 117 Mich. 119.

¶ 274. Both husband and wife must join in a suit to recover damages, where the wife owns the title to a homestead and has been induced by fraud to part with it, if the husband by virtue of the marital relation has such an interest in it as entitles him to damages.—Devereaux v. Hubbard, 117 Mich. 119.

§ 87. Creditors' suits and suits in aid of execution.

Remedy to set aside representative's sale of homestead, see Estates of Decedents ¶ 746.

Proper decree on bill in aid of execution to protect and adjust homestead rights, see also Creditors' Suits § 35.

¶ 275. Where a defendant conveyed premises, after 1848, and before the new constitution, and the wife did not unite in the deed, and a judgment creditor levied upon them, and then filed bill in equity in aid of the execution, it was contended that, as the wife did not join in the conveyance, the deed was void, and she was entitled to be protected in the enjoyment of forty acres as a homestead. It was held that, if she had any equitable interest in a homestead to be selected from the premises, it could not be adjudicated in that suit, but she must join her husband in a cross-bill for the purpose.—Wisner v. Farnham, 2 Mich. 472.

¶ 276. Decree subjecting to complainants' judgments land conveyed by a father to his son in fraud of creditors, modified so as to exempt a homestead.—Walker v. Sauer, 97 Mich. 464.

¶ 277. In the settlement of an estate the widow claimed as against the creditor the entire interest in a certain lot, the latter contending that she obtained such interest by fraud upon them and was only entitled to her homestead, and a bill was filed to determine this question. The chancery court held with the creditors. Held, said court thereupon had jurisdiction to pass upon the question whether said lot should be partitioned or sold, and to determine the values involved, and this despite any provisions in Comp. Laws 1897, c. 287, §§ 10364, 10365, as amended by Pub. Acts 1899 or Comp. Laws 1897, §§ 9134, 9364 et seq.—Hamilton v. Wilcox, 167 Mich. 551.

§ 88. Forclosure suits.

See also ante ¶¶ 249, 270.

Repurchase by wife as defense to foreclosure of mortgage previously joined in with her husband, see ante ¶ 204.

General law as to foreclosure of mortgages, see Foreclosure.

Foreclosure of mechanics' liens, see Mechanics' Liens, VIII.

On foreclosure of mortgage covering homestead and other parcels, necessity of resort to homestead last, see Foreclosure ¶ 480.

¶ 278. The actual occupancy of a homestead by a wife entitles her to be made a party defendant to forclosure of a mortgage covering the homestead.—Haviland v. Chase, 116 Mich. 214.

¶ 279. Where a bill is filed to foreclose a mortgage on a homestead, a general demurrer on the ground that there is an adequate remedy at law and that it is an attempt to deprive the defendants of constitutional rights, is properly overruled as not stating an objection to the bill sufficiently specific to comply with requirements of chancery court rules.—People's Sav. Bank of Saginaw v. McKay, 173 Mich. 236.

¶ 280. The wife of a mortgagor is not a necessary party defendant to foreclosure suit despite the fact that she claims a homestead right in the premises, where mortgage was given as purchase-money mortgage by husband alone.—Amphlett v. Hibbard, 29 Mich. 298.

¶ 281. Suffering a decree foreclosing a mortgage made by a married man and covering his homestead to be taken pro confesso in a suit where no issue as to homestead rights was raised, and where the wife was not impleaded does not conclude her.—Shoemaker v. Collins, 49 Mich. 595.

HOMICIDE.

TREATS of the criminal killing of human beings and of assaults with homicidal intent or intent to do great bodily injury or with weapons or means endangering life. It excludes general law of crimes, indictments and prosecutions in matters not distinctively or peculiarly pertaining to homicide or homicidal assaults (see Crimes; Indictment).

Analysis.

I. The killing or corpus delicti.

§ 1. In general.

II. Murder.

§ 2. Nature and elements of the crime.
§ 3. Intent.
§ 4. Malice and premeditation.
§ 5. Degrees.
§ 6. Murder or manslaughter.
§ 7. Heat of passion and cooling time.
§ 8. Killing in perpetration of other crime.
§ 9. Killing in execution of process.

III. Manslaughter.

§ 10. Nature, elements and degrees of the crime.
§ 11. Killing incident to unlawful act.
§ 12. Negligent killing.
§ 13. Killing by misuse of weapons without homicidal intent.
§ 14. Killing in drunken assaults.

IV. Assault with intent to kill; attempt to kill.

§ 15. Nature and elements of homicidal assaults.
§ 16. ——To do great bodily harm less than murder.
§ 17. Intent and malice.
§ 18. Assault on several without specific person in mind.
§ 19. Assault on one intending another.

V. Justifiable and excusable homicide.

§ 20. In general.
§ 21. Resisting commission of crime.
§ 22. Self-defense.
§ 23. ——Menace and apprehension of danger.
§ 24. ——Duty to retreat or avoid encounter or seek help.
§ 25. ——Right as affected by malice, anger or intent.
§ 26. ——Degree of force which may be used.
§ 27. Defense of property or habitation.
§ 28. Defense of another.
§ 29. Resistance to unlawful arrest.
§ 30. Justification as agent or servant.
§ 31. Participation under duress or unwillingly.

VI. Indictment or information.

§ 32. In general; for murder.
§ 33. Averments as to manner and means.
§ 34. Averments as to other intended felonies.

§ 35. Averments as to grades and degrees.
§ 36. For statutory homicides.
§ 37. For manslaughter.
§ 38. For homicidal assaults.
§ 39. For assault with intent to do great bodily harm.
§ 40. Issues and variance.
§ 41. Sufficiency of murder indictment to support second degree or manslaughter.
§ 42. Sufficiency to charge included and lesser assaults.

VII. Evidence.

A. In General.

§ 43. Presumptions and burden of proof.
§ 44. ——As to intent and malice.
§ 45. ——To do great bodily harm less than murder.
§ 46. Admissibility in general.
§ 47. ——As to cause of death or corpus delicti.
§ 48. ——On motive, malice or premeditation.
§ 49. ——Personal feelings and relations as bearing on motive or malice.
§ 50. ——On intent.
§ 51. ——On negligence in manslaughter.
§ 52. ——On justification or excuse.
§ 53. ——On aggravation or mitigation of assault.

B. Dying Declarations.

§ 54. In general.
§ 55. Scope and subjects of the declaration.
§ 56. Imminence and expectation of death.
§ 57. Declarations by woman as to abortion on her.
§ 58. Admissibility on behalf of accused.
§ 59. Foundation proofs.
§ 60. Rebuttal or explanation of declarations.

C. Degree and Sufficiency of Proof.

§ 61. In general.
§ 62. Corpus delicti and cause of death.
§ 63. Murder.
§ 64. Manslaughter.
§ 65. Homicidal assaults.
§ 66. Assault with intent to do great bodily harm less than murder.
§ 67. Justification or excuse.
§ 68. Participation or implication in crime.

VIII. Trial, instructions, sentence, and punishment.

§ 69. In general.
§ 70. Questions for court and jury.
§ 71. Directing verdict.
§ 72. Instructions.
§ 73. ——As to corpus delicti and cause of death.
§ 74. ——As to malice, premeditation and intent.
§ 75. ——On grade or degree of crime.

§ 76. ——Restriction to specific grade or degree.
§ 77. ——As to negligent killing.
§ 78. ——On homicidal assault or intent to do great bodily harm.
§ 79. ——On justification or excuse.
§ 80. ——On degree and effect of proof.
§ 81. ——On included offenses.
§ 82. Verdict.
§ 83. Sentence and punishment.

General substantive law of crimes in matters not peculiar to homicides or to homicidal assaults, see Crimes, I.
Civil liability for killing, see Death by Wrongful Act.

I. THE KILLING OR CORPUS DELICTI.

§ 1. In general.
Admissibility of evidence, see post § 47.
Weight and sufficiency of proofs, see post § 62.
Instructions, see post § 73.

¶ 1. Where a fatal wound has been given it is no defense that death, when it took place, was precipitated by medical treatment. —People v. Cook, 39 Mich. 236.

¶ 2. There can be no conviction of manslaughter on evidence that the accused knocked the deceased down with his fist and a horse jumped on him or kicked him and thus killed him.—People v. Rockwell, 39 Mich. 503.

¶ 3. The doctrine of relation cannot be so applied as to make the crime of murder complete at a specified time if the death did not take place until later.—Chapman v. People, 39 Mich. 357.

II. MURDER.

§ 2. Nature and elements of the crime.
Corpus delicti and cause of death, see ante § 1.
Effect of statutory division of crime into degrees, see post § 5.
Assault with intent to murder, see post IV.
Justification or excuse for killing, see post V.
Sufficiency of the indictment or information, see post § 32 et seq.
Admissibility of evidence, see post § 46 et seq.
Admissibility of dying declaration, see post § 54 et seq.
Sufficiency of evidence, see post § 61 et seq.
Instructions, see post § 72 et seq.
Killing outside of conspirators' purpose, complicity of all, see also Crimes ¶ 56.
Murder defined, see Comp. L. 1915, § 15192.

¶ 4. Murder is where a person of sound memory and discretion unlawfully kills any reasonable creature in being, in the peace of the state, with malice prepense or aforethought, either express or implied.—People v. Potter, 5 Mich. 1.

§ 3. Intent.
Intent in homicidal assaults, see post §§ 16, 17.
Malice in the crime, see post § 4.
Presumptions and burden of proof, see post § 44.
Instructions, see post § 74.
Incapacity for specific intent from drink, see also Crimes § 14.

¶ 5. To constitute murder the intent need not be to take the life of the person killed, or even to inflict a personal injury upon him, but must be equivalent to a criminal purpose aimed against life, and generally there must be an intent to commit either a specific felony, or at least an act involving all the wickedness of a felony; if the intent be directly to produce a bodily injury it must be such an injury as may be expected to involve serious consequences, either perilling life or leading to great bodily harm.—Wellar v. People, 30 Mich. 16.

§ 4. Malice and premeditation.
Heat of passion and cooling time, see post § 7.
As to meaning of "deliberate," see post ¶ 10.
Absence of premeditation as reducing crime to manslaughter, see also post § 10.
Provocation as defense by justification, see post § 20.
Presumptions and burden of proof, see post § 44.
Instructions, see post § 74.

¶ 6. Malice aforethought does not signify deliberate and calculating malice, but only malice existing at any time before the act, so as to be its moving cause or concomitant.—Nye v. People, 35 Mich. 16.

¶ 7. Malice, as used in defining murder, includes not only anger, hatred and revenge, but every other unlawful and unjustifiable motive. It is not confined to particular ill-will to the deceased, but is intended to denote an action flowing from a wicked and corrupt motive; a thing done, as the books say, malo animo; where the fact has been attended with such circumstances as carry in them the plain indication of a heart regardless of social duty, and fatally bent upon mischief.—People v. Borgetto, 99 Mich. 336.

¶ 8. The rule of the common law in respect to malice is not changed by the statute dividing the offense of murder into degrees; the statute only relates to its application by the jury in determining the degree of guilt. —People v. Potter, 5 Mich. 1.

§ 5. Degrees.

In manslaughter, see post ¶ 24.
Facts warranting charge on second degree, see post ¶ 254.
Murder by poisoning, see also post ¶ 249.
Intended degree in homicidal assault, see post ¶ 42.
Specification of degree in verdict, see post § 82.

¶ 9. The statute has not altered the common-law definition of murder, but, recognizing it, has simply divided it into classes or degrees of enormity, for the purpose of apportioning the punishment.—People v. Doe, 1 Mich. 451; People v. Potter, 5 Mich. 1; People v. Scott, 6 Mich. 287.

¶ 10. In dividing murder into degrees its common-law qualities are not changed, but (except in special cases) the division is chiefly between cases where the malice aforethought is deliberate and where it is not; and the term "deliberate" is not applicable to any act done on a sudden impulse.—Nye v. People, 35 Mich. 16.

¶ 11. Facts which constitute murder at the common law do not necessarily make the act murder of the first degree under the statute.—People v. Potter, 5 Mich. 1.

§ 6. Murder or manslaughter.

See also post ¶ 37.
What constitutes heat of passion or cooling time, see post § 7.
Killing in commission of other crime, see post § 8.
Evidence as to malice and premeditation, see post § 48.
Weight and sufficiency of evidence, see post §§ 63, 64.
Questions for court or jury as to grade of the crime, see post § 70.
Instructions as to degree or character of killing, see post §§ 75, 76.
Killing of quickened unborn child as manslaughter, see Comp. L. 1915, §§ 15223, 15224.

¶ 12. The distinction between manslaughter and murder is vital, resting chiefly on the greater disregard for human life shown in murder. In determining whether an unintentional killing is murder or manslaughter, the nature and extent of the injury or wrong actually intended must usually be of controlling importance.—Wellar v. People, 30 Mich. 16.

¶ 13. Manslaughter may in some cases be intentional; and in such case it differs from murder because it is provoked. It is not justifiable to take life under provocation, and yet the provocation may be serious enough to deprive the intentional killing of its malicious character so that it is neither murder on the one hand nor justifiable or excusable on the other.—Nye v. People, 35 Mich. 16.

¶ 14. Voluntary homicide is no more than manslaughter if provoked by unlawful violence and by a display of deadly weapons, designed to compel submission to an unlawful arrest.—People v. Burt, 51 Mich. 199.

¶ 15. A homicide is murder and not manslaughter where there is evidence of actual malice, or if the provocation to it was resented in a brutal and ferocious manner evincing a malignant disposition, or if before it was committed there was time for the perpetrator's passion to subside and his blood to cool.—People v. Lilley, 43 Mich. 521.

¶ 16. If a homicide is committed under the influence of passion, or in heat of blood, produced by an adequate or reasonable provocation, and before a reasonable time has elapsed for the blood to cool and reason to resume its habitual control, and is the result of the temporary excitement by which the control of reason was disturbed, rather than any wickedness of heart or cruelty or recklessness of disposition, the offense is manslaughter only, and not murder.—Maher v. People, 10 Mich. 212.

¶ 17. To reduce the offense to manslaughter the reason must, at the time of the act, be disturbed or obscured by passion to an extent which might render an ordinary man of fair average disposition liable to act rashly, or without due deliberation or reflection, and from passion rather than judgment. —Maher v. People, 10 Mich. 212.

¶ 18. In order to reduce a crime from murder to manslaughter, the rule is that reason should, at the time of the act, be disturbed or obscured by passion to an extent which might render ordinary men, of fair, average disposition, liable to act rashly or without due deliberation or reflection, and from passion, rather than judgment.—People v. Poole, 159 Mich. 350.

§ 7. Heat of passion and cooling time.

See also ante ¶ 15.
Killing in heat of passion as manslaughter, see ante § 6.
Evidence of facts to excite passion, see post § 48.
Questions for jury, see post § 70.
Instructions, see post § 74.

¶ 19. Where the whole transaction from the first attack on accused out of doors to the final shooting in the house to which he went is in its nature a single transaction, occupying altogether less than fifteen minutes, it is not proper, for the purpose of raising the question of cooling time, to treat it as two distinct and separate transactions. —Hurd v. People, 25 Mich. 405.

§ 8. Killing in perpetration of other crime.

Killing incident to unlawful act as manslaughter, see post § 11.

¶ 20. A criminal assault resulting in death is either murder or manslaughter in Michigan.—People v. Adams, 52 Mich. 24.

§ 9. Killing in execution of process.

Justifiable killing of officer making unlawful arrest, see post § 29.

¶¶ 21, 22. One who kills an actual felon in trying to arrest him, without knowing or believing him to be guilty, commits murder, especially if he is not an officer, since an arrest cannot be made without a warrant on causeless suspicion, and in the absence of actual belief of guilt, based on actual facts that create probable cause.—People v. Burt, 51 Mich. 199.

III. MANSLAUGHTER.

§ 10. Nature, elements and degrees of the crime.

Corpus delicti and cause of death, see ante § 1.
Intent and malice, see post §§ 3, 4.
Degrees of crime and facts amounting to murder as distinguished from manslaughter, see post §§ 5, 6.
What constitutes heat of passion and cooling time, see post § 7.
Killing in commission of other crime, see post § 8.
Killing in execution of process, see post § 9.
Murder and manslaughter distinguished, see ante § 6.
Heat of passion as reducing killing to manslaughter, see ante § 6.
Intentional manslaughter, see ante ¶ 13.
Killing in repulsion of attack but not in fear of life, see post ¶ 59.
Homicidal assaults, see post IV.
Sufficiency of the indictment or information, see post §§ 37, 38.
Weight and sufficiency of proofs, see post § 64.
Instructions, see post § 72 et seq.
Defining manslaughter in charge, see post § 72.

¶ 23. Manslaughter is the unlawful killing of another without malice or premeditation, though it often involves a direct intent to kill; where voluntary it arises from the sudden heat of the passions and is the result of temporary excitement wherein the reason is so distu sion that an ordin disposition is liable due deliberation or sion rather than ju 43 Mich. 521.

¶ 24. There is slaughter fixed by recognize any gra People v. Rogulski, § 11. Killing incide

Killing to resist u § 9.
Evidence as to pre of accused abo
Abortion and foeti Comp. L. 1915,

¶ 25. A person tempting to do an human life, unde guilty of manslaug the act attempted common law. So a woman pregnan child, resulted fro a miscarriage by made punishable a St. § 9108.—People

¶ 26. One who, two persons, runs without provocatio him down, for the other to whip him, if the person so s placed in a helple the other a kick —People v. Carter

§ 12. Negligent ki
Reckless use of fi
Evidence as to ¶¶ 126, 127; p
Negligence as jur
Instructions, see

¶ 27. The term something more t as wantonness a quences which m to the rights of to a criminal inte Mich. 179.

¶ 28. That the was struck and ki ning in excess o law, was the resu negligence of th order to convict People v. Barnes,

¶ 29. In order manslaughter for struck by an aut of the speed fixed that the driver's conduct was wilful, and with reckless disregard for the safety of others, and that the unlawful speed was the proximate cause of the accident.—People v. Barnes, 182 Mich. 179.

¶ 30. That an automobile at the time it struck and killed a pedestrian was running slightly in excess of the speed fixed by statute is not sufficient to render the driver guilty of manslaughter, where the deceased, in her excitement and confusion, jumped in front of the car at a time when it was impossible to stop it.—People v. Barnes, 182 Mich. 179.

¶ 31. Notwithstanding that the contributory negligence of a person who was struck and killed by an automobile running in excess of the speed fixed by statute, is no defense to a charge of manslaughter, yet his conduct should be considered as bearing upon the claimed culpable negligence of the respondent.—People v. Barnes, 182 Mich. 179.

¶ 32. The law recognizes that under some circumstances the omission of a duty owed by one individual to another, where such omission results in the death of the one to whom the duty is owing, will make the other chargeable with manslaughter; but the duty neglected must be a legal duty, not a mere moral obligation, and the omission to perform such duty must be the immediate and direct cause of death.—People v. Beardsley, 150 Mich. 206.

¶ 33. Where a man and woman voluntarily drink and become intoxicated together in the man's room, and the woman commits suicide by taking an overdose of morphine, the man owes her no such legal duty of care and protection as will render him guilty of manslaughter through his failure to obtain medical assistance for her.—People v. Beardsley, 150 Mich. 206.

§ 13. Killing by misuse of weapons without homicidal intent.

¶ 34. If one knowingly draws a revolver which he is unlawfully carrying, and, pointing it at another for the purpose of scaring him, shoots and kills him, or if while in a state of voluntary intoxication he unknowingly shoots him, he is equally guilty of manslaughter.—People v. Slack, 90 Mich. 448.

¶ 35. One who kills another as the result of failure to use reasonable care in handling firearms at common law is guilty of manslaughter.—People v. Rogulski, 181 Mich. 481.

¶ 36. Where the respondent attempted, either by a ruse or violence, to take a gun from its owner with the intention of permanently depriving him of it, and while the respondent wrongfully but without malice was pointing the gun towards its owner it was discharged and he was killed, the respondent was guilty of manslaughter as the result of the careless use of firearms in violation of Comp. Laws 1897, § 11511, How. Ann. St., 2nd Ed., § 14560.—People v. Rogulski, 181 Mich. 481.

¶ 37. Upon the question whether, where one chases another with intent to catch him and slap his face, and draws a pistol with intent to fire in the air and scare the fugitive, and accidentally shoots and kills him, the offense is manslaughter, the court was equally divided.—People v. Stubenvoll, 62 Mich. 329.

§ 14. Killing in drunken assaults.

Death in drunken debauch for want of care, see ante ¶ 33.

¶ 38. One who, while in a state of voluntary intoxication, unknowingly shoots and kills another, is guilty of manslaughter.—People v. Slack, 90 Mich. 448.

IV. ASSAULT WITH INTENT TO KILL; ATTEMPT TO KILL.

§ 15. Nature and elements of homicidal assaults.

Assaults with intent to do great bodily harm, see post § 16.
Intent and malice, see post §§ 17, 19.
Conviction for assault under indictment for assault with intent to murder or to do great bodily harm, see post § 42.
Weight and sufficiency of proofs, see post § 65.
Instructions, see post § 78.
Simple assaults and specific statutory assaults below an assault with intent to do great bodily harm less than murder, see Assault, I.
Shooting as simple assault, see Assault § 1.

¶ 39. There is no such statutory offense in Michigan as an assault with "intent to kill," and as all killing is not unlawful, such an intent will not necessarily involve guilt or malice so as to make the killing murder. There is no such qualified assault at common law differing in any way from a simple assault.—Wilson v. People, 24 Mich. 410; Wright v. People, 33 Mich. 300.

¶ 40. There can be no specific intent without deliberation, and as an act done on sudden impulse, like manslaughter, cannot be deliberate, there can be no such offense as an assault with intent to commit manslaughter.—People v. Lilley, 43 Mich. 521.

¶ 41. Wherever an assault with intent to kill is committed, and the circumstances are such that, if death had ensued, the killing would have constituted murder at the common law, the offense of assault with intent to commit murder, under the statute, is complete.—People v. Scott, 6 Mich. 287.

¶ 42. On an indictment for assault with intent to murder it is immaterial whether the murder intended would, if consummated, have been murder of the first or second degree.—People v. Scott, 6 Mich. 287.

§ 16. ——To do great bodily harm less than murder.

Fear of great bodily harm as justifying killing in self-defense, see post §§ 22, 23.
Sufficiency of indictment to sustain conviction of lesser assault, see post § 42.
Presumptions and burden of proof, see post § 45.
Evidence as to the intent in the assault, see post § 50.
Evidence as to gravity of harm done, see post § 53.
Weight and sufficiency of proofs, see post § 66.
Instructions as to character of assault, see post § 75.
Assault with intent to do great bodily harm, see Comp. L. 1915, § 15227.
Lesser felonious assaults defined, see Comp. L. 1915, § 15228.

¶ 43. How. St. § 9122a, defining the crime of assault with intent to do great bodily harm less than the crime of murder, contemplates an intent to do a serious injury of an aggravated nature.—People v. Troy, 96 Mich. 530.

¶ 44. How. St. § 9122a, adopted in 1883, providing for the punishment of persons who commit assaults with intent to do great bodily harm, less than the crime of murder, was designed to prescribe a more severe punishment than could be imposed under pre-existing laws for assaults committed with intent to do serious injury of an aggravated nature; and it is not essential to a conviction under such statute that the assault should have been such that, if death had resulted, respondent would have been guilty of murder.—People v. Ochotski, 115 Mich. 601.

¶ 45. A respondent on trial for assault with intent to do great bodily harm should not be confined to the right of repelling an assault from the person struck by him, where it appears that there was a quarrel going on at the time; the character and extent of the provocation should not be omitted from the inquiry.—People v. Ross, 66 Mich. 94.

¶ 46. The fact that respondent indicted for assault with intent to do great bodily harm did not intend to fracture a rib or injure the kidneys when he kicked the person assaulted asserting an intent to kick his "liver out," will not avail to reduce the offense to assault and battery. If his intent was to injure the assaulted party seriously in one vital organ, and he missed it, and injured another, the intent to do great bodily harm existed, and could be inferred from the fact that resp it, but in a differe
the person assault
Mich. 639.

§ 17. Intent and m
Intent to do grea murder, see a Attack on crowd intent, see pos
Attack on one int
§ 19.
Admissibility of evi
Evidence as to th
Weight and suffici
§§ 65, 66.
Instructions, see p

¶ 47. In a pros intent to murder,
must be found, and which would mak
Maher v. People, 1

¶ 48. An indictn
intent to "murder"
proof of such an in the killing murder
Wilson v. People, 2

§ 18. Assault on se son in minc

¶ 49. A specific ticular person who sary to warrant c intent to do great where respondent the intention of w
—People v. Raher,

§ 19. Assault on o
See also ante ¶ 49.

¶ 50. Under info
fendant with assa with intent to kill where the evidence
not the one agains were actually direc
and the jury fou assault with intent
less than the crin had such person di fendant would hav
—People v. Hodge,

V. JUSTIFIABLE

§ 20. In general.

Resisting or preven
Self-defense, see po
Defense of propert
§ 27.
Defense of relative
§ 28.
Resistance to unlav
Killing or aiding § 31.

Justification as servant or by superior command, see post § 30.
Right to defend against provoked assault, see post ¶ 72.

¶ 51. There is no positive rule for the definition of justifiable homicide; it must depend upon the circumstances and surroundings of each case.—Patten v. People, 18 Mich. 314.

¶ 52. A mistake of law as to one's right to take life will not justify or excuse homicide.—People v. Cook, 39 Mich. 236.

¶ 53. Uncontrollable anger and excitement do not excuse the commission of desperate acts of violence, whatever the provocation, and render them less liable to punishment.—People v. Mortimer, 48 Mich. 37.

§ 21. Resisting commission of crime.
Protection of parent or relative from riot, see also post ¶¶ 79, 81.
Killing of suspected despoiler of master's wife, see post ¶ 83.

¶ 54. A dangerous felony may be forcibly prevented by any one who is not himself in the wrong directly or by complicity.—People v. Curtis, 52 Mich. 616.

¶ 55. Private persons may forcibly interfere to suppress a riot or resist rioters; and they may justify homicide in so doing, if they cannot otherwise suppress them or defend themselves, their families or property. —Pond v. People, 8 Mich. 150.

¶ 56. Threats will not excuse a homicide where the respondent could not reasonably have supposed that the killing was necessary to prevent forcible felony.—People v. Cook, 39 Mich. 236.

¶ 57. It is immaterial to the justification of homicide in resisting a forcible felony whether the act was a felony at the common law, or made such by statute.—Pond v. People, 8 Mich. 150.

§ 22. Self-defense.
See also post ¶ 66.
Apparent menace and apprehension as test, see post § 23.
Duty to retreat or avoid encounter, see post § 24.
Effect of malice, anger or intent on right of self-defense, see post § 25.
Allowable force to be used, see post § 26.
Defense of property, habitation or of other persons, see post §§ 27, 28.
Threats not menacing to life or portending felony, see ante ¶ 56.
Excessive force under provocation as raising killing to murder, see also ante ¶ 15.
Self-defense against mere assaults, see Assault § 7.
Burden of proof and shifting of burden on self-defense, see post § 43.
Sufficiency of evidence, see post § 67.
Questions for jury and instructions, see post §§ 70, 79.

¶ 58. It is the right and duty of one who is assailed and put in personal peril to protect himself without leaving it to others to protect him to their own risk.—People v. Lilly, 38 Mich. 270.

¶ 59. Where one who has just been assaulted and set upon by another is immediately followed up in a threatening manner by the person committing such assault with the intention of scaring or frightening him, into his own house, and through one of the rooms, in the presence of his family, and there shoots and kills such intruder, the killing, if done under the belief, with good reason, that it was necessary to shoot the assailant to save his own life, or to protect himself from danger of great bodily harm, is excusable homicide; and if done under a less degree of fear, and in the excitement and confusion caused by the threatened repetition of the attack, and if, but for this provocation, the shooting would not have occurred, the crime does not exceed manslaughter.—Hurd v. People, 25 Mich. 405.

§ 23. ——Menace and apprehension of danger.
See also ante ¶ 59.
Evidence to show menace and fear, see post § 52.
Instructions as to danger and fear or belief in danger, see post § 79.

¶ 60. Any serious bodily harm, like mayhem, apprehended from a felonious attack, justifies extreme resistance, and the assailed cannot be required to draw very fine distinctions as to the extent of the injuries likely to be inflicted.—Brownell v. People, 38 Mich. 732.

¶ 61. One who is threatened with immediate attack by an assailant is authorized to act, and his actions are to be judged, in the light of the circumstances as they appeared to him at the time; and if the assailant follows him up in a threatening manner, for the purpose of frightening him, and so as to make him believe that a violent attack is imminent, it is immaterial whether a forcible attack was actually intended or not. —Hurd v. People, 25 Mich. 405.

¶ 62. The necessity for taking human life need not be one arising out of actual and imminent danger, in order to excuse the slayer; but he may act upon a belief, arising from appearances which give him reasonable cause for it, that the danger is actual and imminent, although he may turn out to be mistaken. His guilt must depend upon the circumstances as they appeared to him. —Pond v. People, 8 Mich. 150; Patten v. People, 18 Mich. 314.

¶ 63. One cannot justify the killing of an assailant on the ground of self-defense, if it was done through mere cowardice, or under circumstances that, as they appeared to him at the time, were not sufficient to induce in him a reasonable belief that he was in danger of bodily harm.—People v. Coughlin, 67 Mich. 466.

§ 24. ——Duty to retreat or avoid encounter or seek help.

Dependence on others for self-protection, see ante ¶ 58.
Question for the jury, see post § 70.
Instructions, see post § 79.

¶ 64. It is not necessary for a person, if without fault, when suddenly assaulted upon the public highway or upon his own premises, and when an instant's delay may be at the expense of his own life, to retreat before using his weapon.—People v. Macard, 73 Mich. 15.

¶ 65. One who honestly believes that his life is in danger and that immediate shooting is the only way to get rid of his assailant is not guilty of murder if he shoots and kills before retreating into his house and locking the door.—People v. Keuhn, 93 Mich. 619.

¶ 66. Homicide in resisting an assault not made with felonious intent is excusable where the danger to be resisted is to life, or of serious bodily harm of a permanent character, and unavoidable by other means in the power of the slayer so far as he is able to judge at the time. But he is bound, if possible, to get out of his adversary's way, and has no right to stand up and resist if he can safely retreat or escape.—Pond v. People, 8 Mich. 150.

¶ 67. A man assaulted in his dwelling is not obliged to retreat, but may use such means as are absolutely necessary to repel the assailant from his house, or prevent his forcible entry, even to the taking of life.—Pond v. People, 8 Mich. 150.

¶ 68. When a forcible felony is attempted against person or property, the person resisting the attempt is not obliged to retreat, but may pursue his adversary, if necessary, till he finds himself out of danger. But he may not properly take life if the evil may be prevented by other means then within his power.—Pond v. People, 8 Mich. 150.

¶ 69. A man was attacked after dark upon his own premises, where his wife and family were, by a powerful and violent man who was in liquor, and in self-defense killed him. Held, that if he believed with reason that it was necessary to kill his assailant for the protection of his own life, or to save himself from great bodily harm, it was an excusable homicide, and that he was under no obligation to flee, or to call for the interference of by-standers.—People v. Lilly, 38 Mich. 270.

¶ 70. One who ened, and who danger of death not remain at h may arm himself and pursue his if, being assailed
pelled to take life use any weapon
the homicide is card, 73 Mich. 15.

§ 25. ——Right as intent.

Provocation as a
see also ante
Instruction on arn fray, see post

¶ 71. Where th was so sudden, fi
quire self-defense, without fault in terial what mali tained toward the card, 73 Mich. 15.

¶ 72. It is erro insulting languag gerous assault, y it precludes the resisting the assa
the right to inte
People v. Curtis,

§ 26. ——Degree

¶ 73. The degr be employed, in personal liberty stances. To justi life of another it required him to
Mich. 451.

§ 27. Defense of Attempted entry

use of force,
Boat as dwelling
Admissibility of Instructions, see

¶ 74. The owne passer upon it w remove therefron
sold to another,
is protecting the
has a reasonabl
from the intrude weapon is permi
Mich. 490.

¶ 75. A root-h properly treated house with refer defense.—People

¶ 76. A mere homicide.—People

¶ 77. And as regards the right of self-defense a building thirty-six feet distant from a man's dwelling-house, used for preserving the nets employed in the owner's ordinary occupation of a fisherman, and also as a permanent dormitory for his servants, is, in law, a part of his dwelling, though not inclosed with the house by a fence; a fence is not necessary to include buildings within the curtilage, if within a space no larger than that usually occupied for the purposes of the building and the customary outbuildings.—Pond v. People, 8 Mich. 150.

§ 28. Defense of another.

See also ante ¶ 69.

Justification of servant by cause pertaining to master, see post § 30.

¶ 78. The same circumstances which excuse or justify homicide in defense of one's self will excuse or justify it in defense of his servant.—Pond v. People, 8 Mich. 150.

¶ 79. A person whose mother resides with him, and who, from his knowledge of her weak and peculiar physical condition, has reason to believe that her life is endangered by riotous proceedings about his dwelling, is justified in the like steps to protect her against the consequences of the riotous proceeding that he would be in case of a direct attack upon her person, provided he has first informed the rioters of her condition, or used all reasonable or practical efforts to do so.—Patten v. People, 18 Mich. 314.

¶ 80. Homicide in defense of a woman's chastity is not justified by a belief that the deceased had been using fraudulent, but not forcible, means, as by administering drugs, to effect a seduction not accomplished at the time of the killing.—People v. Cook, 39 Mich. 236.

¶ 81. A man has a right, in a riotous affray, to interfere for the protection of a brother who is in personal danger, whether the brother was blameless or not. And the use of a deadly weapon in such interference does not of itself show malice where neither began the affray and there had been no space for cooling time nor opportunity to withdraw safely.—People v. Curtis, 52 Mich. 616.

§ 29. Resistance to unlawful arrest.

Killing officer unlawfully executing process as murder, see also ante § 9.

Admissibility of evidence, see post § 52.

Instructions, see post § 79.

Facts warranting officer in attempting arrest without warrant, see Arrest §§ 2, 3.

Crime of resisting officer, see Crimes § 113.

¶ 81a. Where an officer, attempting to make an arrest on reasonable suspicion of felony, is asked for his authority, and says he has a warrant, but refuses to produce it, and makes no explanation whatever, but makes the arrest with circumstances of violence, and the person arrested resists and kills the officer, he is not guilty of murder in so doing.—Drennan v. People, 10 Mich. 169.

¶ 82. A small river boat is not a dwelling so as to excuse an assault with intent to commit murder, committed upon an officer attempting to serve process by the owner who slept on one of the seats of the boat.—People v. Bernard, 125 Mich. 550. Writ of error dismissed, 184 U. S. 697, 46 L. ed. 764, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 940.

§ 30. Justification as agent or servant.

Defense of servant as justification, see ante § 27.

¶ 83. One who is the mere agent of the husband for the purpose of detecting his wife's adultery cannot justify or excuse the killing of the suspected adulterer by proof of his previous adultery with the employer's wife.—People v. Horton, 4 Mich. 67.

§ 31. Participation under duress or unwillingly.

Sufficiency of evidence, see post ¶ 223.

¶ 84. One is not excused for aiding and assisting in a murder by having been threatened three days before with the loss of his life if he does not aid in the commission of the offense.—People v. Repke, 103 Mich. 459.

VI. INDICTMENT OR INFORMATION.

[Note. Formal matters relating to indictments or informations and matters of substance or averment not peculiar to indictments for homicide are treated in Indictment, I.]

§ 32. In general; for murder.

Averments as to manner or means, see post § 33.

Averments as to other intended felonies, see post § 34.

Averments as to grades and degrees, see post § 35.

Indictments for manslaughter and statutory homicides, see post §§ 36, 37.

Indictments for homicidal assaults, see post § 38.

Indictments for assault with intent to do great bodily harm, see post § 39.

Variance as to time and place, see post § 40.

Charge of "murder" in manslaughter indictment as surplusage, see post ¶ 94.

Matters general to all indictments, see Indictment, I.

Necessity of essential matters of description in simplified forms of indictments, see Indictment, I, B.

Allegations as to aiding and abetting, see Indictment, I, B.

Different counts and joinder of counts in same indictment, see Indictment, I, C.

Statutory form, see Comp. L. 1915, § 15739.

¶ 85. An indictment for murder purporting to set out the crime specifically and substantially in the common-law method must be construed by common-law rules.—People v. Carr, 64 Mich. 702.

¶ 86. An information for murder cannot omit or misdescribe any fact which at common law was regarded as an essential element of the crime.—Chapman v. People, 39 Mich. 357.

§ 33. Averments as to manner and means.

Essentials of description, see also ante § 32.
Provision dispensing with allegations of manner and means, see Comp. L. 1915, § 15739.

¶ 87. A count in an information charging an attempt to murder by poison cannot be objected to on the ground that it does not set forth the special circumstances.—Templeton v. People, 27 Mich. 501.

¶ 88. An information charging that the accused, at a time and place stated, "feloniously, wilfully, and of her malice aforethought, did kill and murder," etc., without stating the means by which the murder was done, is sufficient.—People v. Bemis, 51 Mich. 422.

§ 34. Averments as to other intended felonies.

¶ 89. The words "ravish" and "rape," as used in alleging manner and means in an information charging respondent with murder committed in the perpetration or attempted perpetration of rape, imply force and violence in the man and want of consent in the woman, and are equivalent to the words "by force and against her will." Rape need not be technically charged.—People v. Willett, 105 Mich. 110.

¶ 90. An information for murder in the form of the statute, Comp. Laws 1915, § 15739, is sufficient, although it does not state that the murder was committed while a robbery was being perpetrated or attempted.—People v. Page, 198 Mich. 524.

§ 35. Averments as to grades and degrees.

Information for murder by poisoning without averment of degree, see also post ¶ 249.
Conviction of second degree under indictment for murder, see post § 41.

¶ 91. An information charging murder without specifying the degree is sufficient, under the statute, to support a conviction for murder in the first degree.—Sneed v. People, 38 Mich. 248; Cargen v. People, 39 Mich. 549.

§ 36. For statutory homicides.

Variance as to force in manslaughter by abortion, see post § 40.

¶ 92. Where, in a under Comp. L. 1871, which makes killin
slaughter, the inform felonious, wilful and to the statute in su vided, and did not i means or manner of refer specifically to t insufficient to suppo
said statute. The c statutory, and does common-law descrip and the allegations m ute.—People v. Olms

§ 37. For manslaught

Averments as to degr
see ante § 35.
For manslaughter i
see ante § 36.
Variance of proof fr
§ 40.
Conviction under in form for murder
Joinder of counts, se
Statutory form, see

¶ 93. A statutory ing essential to a de ter as distinguished
v. Olmstead, 30 Mich

¶ 94. On an indict a charge that the d murder" the deceased
as the more heinous be treated as surplu ron, 121 Mich. 1.

¶ 95. An indictm charging that the murder" the deceased
although How. St. § an indictment shall that the defendant
the deceased, as the nym of "kill."—Pe
Mich. 1.

§ 38. For homicidal a

For assault with int harm less than Sufficiency of avern accuse of murde
Averment of intent t
see post ¶ 96.
Assault with "intent
charge, see post
Sufficiency of indict intent to murde
for lesser assaul
General rules for a intent, see Indic

§ 39. For assault wi bodily harm.

¶ 96. An informati and adding "with in commit the crime of language of the statute, is sufficient to support a conviction of assault with the intent to do great bodily harm less than the crime of murder, although it fails to aver willfulness or malice aforethought.—People v. Wright, 144 Mich. 586.

¶ 97. An information for an assault with intent to do great bodily harm, less than the crime of murder, which charges the offense in the words of the statute (How. St. § 9122a) is sufficient, without setting out the weapon with which the assault was made.—People v. Ochotski, 115 Mich. 601.

§ 40. Issues and Variance.

Conviction of lesser degree or included assault, see post §§ 41, 42.

Issues and variance in indictments other than for homicide or in matters general to all indictments, see Indictment, I, E.

¶ 98. An information for murder, which sets forth the assault and death as concurrent in time and place is bad, where the evidence shows that the person assaulted died at a different place from that at which he was struck.—Chapman v. People, 39 Mich. 357.

¶ 99. An information for manslaughter, which clearly apprises the respondent that he is charged with causing the death of a pregnant woman through an unlawful attempt to procure a miscarriage, but alleges that the act was committed "with force and arms," will support a conviction under proof that the deceased consented to the attempt; the question of consent being immaterial.—People v. Abbott, 116 Mich. 263.

§ 41. Sufficiency of murder indictment to support second degree or manslaughter.

Instructions on included degrees, see post § 81.

Conviction of lesser assaults under indictment for murderous assault, see post § 42.

¶ 100. Under the statutory short form of information for murder, there may be a conviction of manslaughter.—People v. Roguiski, 181 Mich. 481.

¶ 101. Under an indictment in the common-law form the defendant may be found guilty of murder in the second degree.—People v. Doe, 1 Mich. 451.

§ 42. Sufficiency to charge included and lesser assaults.

Sufficiency of evidence of lesser assault, see post ¶ 222.

Instructions on included offenses, see post § 81.

General rules as to indictments covering lesser included crimes, see Indictment, I, E.

Conviction or acquittal of simple assault as bar to felonious assault, and vice versa, see Crimes § 21.

Verdict of manslaughter as bar to higher degrees, see Crimes § 21.

¶ 102. An information charging an assault with intent to murder sustains a conviction of the lesser offense of an assault with an intent to do great bodily harm less than the crime of murder.—People v. Prague, 72 Mich. 178.

¶ 103. An information charging assault with intent to kill and murder will sustain a conviction for assault with intent to do great bodily harm less than the crime of murder, where the evidence justifies such verdict.—People v. Townsend, 120 Mich. 661.

¶ 104. The offense of an assault with intent to do great bodily harm, less than the crime of murder is a statutory offense and does not include the lesser one of battery.—Turner v. Circuit Judge, 88 Mich. 359.

¶ 104a. A defendant cannot be convicted of assault and battery under an information charging him with the offense of assault with intent to do great bodily harm, less than the crime of murder, but not charging a battery.—People v. Andre, 194 Mich. 524.

¶ 104b. Defendant was indicted on a charge of assault with a pistol with intent to do serious bodily harm. The theory of the defense was that defendant did not use a pistol at all. Held, that under this charge and defense, the defendant might be convicted of a simple assault with a pistol without intent to do bodily harm, since the jury might not believe the evidence of either side in its entirety.—People v. Hoffman, 154 Mich. 145.

¶ 105. Two persons tried for assault with intent to do great bodily harm less than the crime of murder may be convicted of assault and battery if the lesser offense was properly alleged in the information.—People v. Ellsworth, 90 Mich. 442.

¶ 106. A respondent cannot be convicted of assault and battery under an information charging him with the statutory offense of "assault with intent to do great bodily harm less than the crime of murder," but not charging a battery; nor can the information be amended, after verdict and before judgment, so as to include such latter charge.—Turner v. Muskegon Circuit Judge, 88 Mich. 359.

VII. EVIDENCE.

A. IN GENERAL.

§ 43. Presumptions and burden of proof.

As to intent or malice, see post § 44.

As to intent to do great bodily harm, see post § 45.

Judicial notice, presumptions and burden of proof generally, see Indictment, VIII, A.

Statutory rule as to necessity of disproving that abortion was necessary to save life, see Comp. L. 1915, § 15226.

¶ 107. Where it is sought to have the jury convict of murder in the first degree, the burden of proof is upon the prosecution to show such facts, in addition to the act of killing, as will make the act murder in the first degree.—People v. Potter, 5 Mich. 1; People v. Scott, 6 Mich. 287.

¶ 108. Malice aforethought is as essential an ingredient of the offense of murder as the act of killing and the presumption of innocence applies equally to both ingredients. Hence the burden of proof as to each rests upon the prosecution.—Maher v. People, 10 Mich. 212.

¶ 109. Where there is evidence tending to show that defendant acted in self-defense, the burden of proof is upon the people to satisfy the jury that the homicide was not committed in self-defense, and that no reasonable belief existed in defendant's mind that he was in great bodily danger as the facts and circumstances appeared to him at the time.—People v. Coughlin, 65 Mich. 704, 67 Mich. 466.

¶ 110. It is not a presumption that the mere presence of by-standers will prevent an assailant from inflicting extreme injury. —Brownell v. People, 38 Mich. 732.

§ 44. ——As to intent and malice.

See also ante ¶ 108.

¶ 111. In general, where the assault is not committed with a deadly weapon, the intent must be clearly felonious to make the killing murder, and though the presumption arising from the character of the instrument of violence is not conclusive, yet where such weapons are used as do not usually kill, the deadly intent ought to be left in no doubt.—Wellar v. People, 30 Mich. 16.

¶ 112. In a prosecution for murder, an intent to take life justifying a verdict of murder in the first degree is, in the absence of explanatory evidence, presumable from proof that the mortal wounds were inflicted by respondent with a deadly weapon.—People v. Wolf, 95 Mich. 625.

¶ 113. The intent of one intervening in a fight, which resulted in a homicide, to assist the aggressor in vanquishing the person attacked need not be shown by his statements, but is inferable from his conduct.—People v. Carter, 96 Mich. 583.

§ 45. ——To do great bodily harm less than murder.

¶¶ 114, 115. The intent of a respondent to do great bodily harm less than the crime of murder may be inf —People v. Miller,

§ 46. Admissibility,
As to corpus delic
post § 47.
As to malice, pren
post §§ 48, 49.
As to intent, see p
As to negligence i § 51.
As to justification
see post § 52.
As to aggravation
see post § 53.
Dying declarations,
General law of cri
best and secon rule to vary w character, adn
and documents see Indictment Admissibility of re circumstances,
Admissibility of crimes or atten
B.
Admissibility of ac
of guilty cons
VIII, B.
Admissibility of e in possession articles, see In Evidence to show
dictment, VII
Admissibility of c
dictment, VII
Admissibility of c evidence, see
Irrelevancy of evi
ing out, see In Harmless errors i evidence or in nesses, see In Order of proof of evidence, see
Duty to call witne evidence, see I Cross-examination stances and a see Examinat

¶ 116. In a trial strength of the shown, not by evi
by general inquir leading, and shoul matter if it can b
ple, 30 Mich. 16.

¶ 117. Where, pistol shot, it had examination that the pistol respon was also necessar shot came from when it had been fired, it was im any claim that r to know who el Curtis, 52 Mich.

¶ 118. Evidence is admissible on a trial for murder, of a search of and the finding of firearms by the police on the premises of the accused.—People v. Cona, 180 Mich. 641.

¶ 119. In a prosecution for murder, where the killing was by shooting, since a case must be made up by piecemeal, it is not error to admit in evidence an automatic pistol owned by defendant, although the fact that he owned it, and that it might have been used does not prove that defendant used it, or any deadly weapon, to kill deceased.—People v. Lahnala, 193 Mich. 144.

¶ 120. In a prosecution for murder, where the killing was by shooting, since a case must be made up piecemeal, it is not error to admit evidence that an automatic pistol owned by defendant was designed to fire such cartridges as were apparently used by the murderer, and that such cartridges could not be used in an ordinary revolver. —People v. Lahnala, 193 Mich. 144.

¶ 121. Upon a prosecution for a murder committed with a gun, a witness with whom respondent was familiar, was shown the gun-case belonging to the gun used, and was asked if it was respondent's gun-case. He said he did not know; he had never seen it at respondent's house, or in his possession, but he had seen a case that looked like it lying around a good while at the place where he himself worked, and that he had not known what became of it or whose it was until a few weeks before, when a certain person turned up. The person referred to testified that he was familiar with that kind of gun, and was allowed to explain its workings to the jury. The respondent himself said on cross-examination that he had had the gun and case about two months, and that they had been handed to him, but he refused to tell by whom. Held, that it could not be said that these facts were clearly irrelevant to the charge of murder.—People v. Wilson, 55 Mich. 506.

¶ 122. In connection with evidence of the mutilated condition of a human body found in a lake, testimony by medical witnesses that a substance found upon a log near by was that called "testicles," though whether of a human being or not the witnesses could not tell, was admissible.—People v. Barker, 60 Mich. 277.

¶ 123. Testimony of a witness, in a prosecution for murder, that he had found a certain paper with certain blood stains upon it at the house where the offense was committed on a certain Sunday next after discovery of the body on Friday, held properly admitted, and its weight was for the jury.—People v. Winney, 196 Mich. 347.

¶ 124. Testimony of a witness, in a criminal prosecution for murder, that he had discovered certain tracks in some of the victim's blood remaining on the floor of the room where she was killed about two months after the murder which he identified as those of the accused, held properly admitted and not too remote, in view of other testimony as to such marks two or three days after discovery of the body, where the premises had not been disturbed since discovery of the body up to discovery of the marks by the witness testifying.—People v. Winney, 196 Mich. 347.

¶ 125. In a prosecution for homicide committed in a riotous affray among neighbors and apparently in defense of a brother, all facts leading thereto and connected with it should be admitted, including the conduct of other participants besides respondent, and especially of those who provoked the assault. The dangerous character of the deceased and his disposition when drunk are also material; and so would be the fact that the person in whose behalf respondent interposed was afraid deceased would cut him as he had others.—People v. Curtis, 52 Mich. 616.

¶ 126. It is prejudicial error, on a trial for manslaughter by running down a person with an automobile, to admit evidence as to the average rate of speed of the car from a point a mile or more distant until speed was slackened just before the deceased was struck.—People v. Barnes, 182 Mich. 179.

¶ 127. Evidence of the speed of an automobile several blocks from the place where a pedestrian was struck by it and killed is not admissible on the trial of the driver for manslaughter.—People v. Barnes, 182 Mich. 179.

¶ 128. In a criminal prosecution against a physician for causing death by abortion, it is proper to permit a witness to testify that she saw the deceased at respondent's office on the day of the alleged operation.—People v. Fritch, 170 Mich. 258.

§ 47. ——As to cause of death or corpus delicti.

Evidence of nature of ensuing ailments as showing gravity of bodily harm inflicted, see post § 53.

Evidence of character of animal tissue found near scene of crime, see also ante ¶ 122.

Weight and sufficiency of proofs, see post § 62.

Other abortions as disproving accidental death, see Indictment, VIII, B.

Medical opinions as to causes and conditions, see Indictment, VIII, B.

¶ 129. On a trial for the murder of one of twin infants who were put in one crib at night in good health, and were found dead in the morning with similar marks of violence on each, testimony showing the death of the other infant, and the appearance of its body, is properly admitted on the question whether the one for the killing of which the accused is held came to its death by violence; it being apparent, from the circumstances, that both came to their death from the same cause.—People v. Foley, 64 Mich. 148.

¶ 130. In the prosecution of a mother for the murder of her daughter by morphine it is competent to show that the stomach of the other child who died at the same time, also contained morphine, where the proofs indicated that the poisoning of both children was one transaction.—People v. Quimby, 134 Mich. 625.

¶ 131. Evidence of the character of the wounds upon the body of a person whose killing by respondent was a part of the same transaction which resulted in the death of another person, for whose murder he is tried, is admissible.—People v. Wright, 89 Mich. 70.

¶ 132. Under an information charging manslaughter by abortion it is proper to establish the corpus delicti not only by the post-mortem examination, but also by the medical history of her case consisting of the fact of the pregnancy of the deceased, her illness, her treatment, and by whom, and her condition generally up to the time of her death. —People v. Aikin, 66 Mich. 460.

¶ 133. In a prosecution for murder of a father who was killed at the same time and at the same place as the son, it is not error to admit evidence of the son's wounds.—People v. Sartori, 168 Mich. 308.

¶ 134. Where a respondent is charged with criminally assaulting his son in a barn, evidence as to the appearance of the barn, and of articles within it, and of the wounds on the son's head, is properly admitted to prove whether the respondent or a horse inflicted the injuries.—People v. Hennard, 162 Mich. 225.

¶ 135. In a proscution for murder where the theory of the people was that the accused took the body of the deceased in a buggy to a river and threw it in, to give the idea of a suicide, evidence of statements made at coroner's inquest, by the accused as to his lack of fear of dead bodies, and that as a student in a medical college he transported a dead body in a buggy so that people thought it was a living man, was relevant.—People v. Swartz, 118 Mich. 292.

¶ 136. A man was prosecuted for killing his wife by poison. Arsenic was found on a post-mortem examination. Held error to exclude evidence of transactions in the house, between the death and the burial, which bore on the use of antiseptics in embalming. —People v. Millard, 53 Mich. 63.

¶ 137. In a prose by arsenic poisoning she had been sick a ment, the circumsta of two extra physic are admissible.—Pe 63.

¶ 138. On a trial Comp. L. 1871, § which makes the at born child manslaug the child or its mo dence as to a pecu observed by a wi mother and changed fore she died was v. Olmstead, 30 Mi

§ 48. ——On motive
On intent, see post
Personal feelings a or deceased as malice, see post
Sufficiency of infe § 63.
Declarations and ad ing or motive,
Admissibility of threat to show braggadocio, see ¶ 139. Evidence sibly made in jest deceased, is admiss may be construed i of subsequent even question of malice. Mich. 364.

¶ 140. Evidence t person attacked w under such circums belief that adulter that he followed t on the way was committed adultery followed the person of excitement and proper evidence, as act was committed i sion excited by th state of mind whi the homicide, had acter of manslaugh ple, 10 Mich. 212.

¶ 141. In a prose a doctor, on a charg by means of arseni of deceased whom had died under si that the viscera sh to arsenic, was pro ing motive or inten the existence of a MacGregor, 178 Mi

§ 49. ——Personal bearing on
As bearing on int

Admissibility of dying declarations in proof of previous threats, see post ¶¶ 178, 182, 184.

Meretricious relations of accused husband or wife as bearing on motive, see also Indictment, VIII, B.

¶ 142. Evidence that a wife's general disposition was bitter and vindictive is inadmissible in the prosecution of her husband for her murder, either generally or for the purpose of affecting her dying declaration against him.—People v. Simpson, 48 Mich. 474.

¶ 143. Where deceased had been absent from the neighborhood of the prisoner some eight or ten months preceding the alleged offense, it was held competent for the prosecution to show the state of feeling between the prisoner and deceased immediately preceding such absence.—Dillin v. People, 8 Mich. 357.

¶ 144. Defendant being charged with the murder of his wife, evidence that before the alleged murder he had been arrested on charge of a crime committed upon her is competent as tending to show hostile relations existing between them, which would bear upon the question of motive, and tend to prove malice.—Washburn v. People, 10 Mich. 372.

¶ 145. In a trial for homicide the previous relations of the prisoner with the deceased may be shown in explanation of conduct and motives.—Wellar v. People, 30 Mich. 16.

¶ 146. In the prosecution of a husband for the murder of his wife it was proper to show that for some time previously they had not lived peaceably together and that respondent had threatened to shoot or kill the deceased. But testimony as to alleged relations between the wife and third persons of questionable reputation are inadmissible where there is no pretense that the latter were guilty of the offense and they are not on trial.—People v. Simpson, 48 Mich. 474.

¶ 147. It is not clearly error, in a murder case, to admit evidence of ill-feeling between the accused and the victim, extending back two years before his death, though such a showing would be certainly remote.—People v. Bemis, 51 Mich. 422.

¶ 148. In a prosecution for the murder of an unmarried woman, the fact that deceased was a witness for respondent in divorce proceedings against him on the ground of cruelty may be shown as bearing upon the relations which existed between them, and as tending to support the claim that respondent was the author of the pregnancy of the deceased, and that this furnished the motive for the crime.—People v. Parmelee, 112 Mich. 291.

¶ 149. Where in a criminal prosecution for an assault with intent to do bodily harm less than the crime of murder, the undisputed evidence indicates that the complaining witness was in full retreat at the time defendant shot him, and no question of self-defense is involved, it is proper to refuse respondent permission to introduce evidence as to previous trouble between himself and the complaining witness, of acts and threats of the latter, and as to the reason for the conduct of respondent's wife and daughter in bringing the guns to defendant during the dispute.—People v. Durham, 170 Mich. 598.

¶ 150. Where no element of self-defense is involved in a criminal charge, independent affirmative evidence by the defense as to the acts and conduct of the party assaulted, prior to the commission of the offense, is admissible.—People v. Durham, 170 Mich. 598.

¶ 151. In a prosecution for assault with intent to murder a wife, it is error to permit her to testify that she married defendant under a threat, where the nature of the threat is not made clear and there is no evidence that it was made at a time and under circumstances having a bearing on the issue being tried.—People v. Rohl, 166 Mich. 315.

¶ 152. Respondent and the deceased were chums, and on friendly terms with a certain girl. On the trial of respondent for killing the deceased, held, that to show motive, testimony was admissible by the girl that a month before the death respondent had told her she would never speak to the deceased again if she knew the things he said about her.—People v. Droste, 160 Mich. 66.

¶ 153. In a prosecution for the assault of a wife with intent to murder, it is error to permit the state to show that respondent, being repulsed in an attempt to embrace his wife, said, "Damn you, I wish I had shot that cur (referring to a third person) in New York when I had an opportunity," such statement being introduced in evidence to show that defendant had threatened his wife.—People v. Rohl, 166 Mich. 315.

¶ 154. The relation of the parties may properly be shown where the theory of the prosecution in a murder trial was that the murder was committed through a conspiracy between defendant and the mother of the deceased.—People v. MacGregor, 178 Mich. 486.

§ 50. ——On intent.

¶ 155. In a prosecution for assault with intent to do great bodily harm less than the crime of murder, the people may show that the prior relations of the parties were unfriendly, and specific threats and acts of violence on respondent's part may be given in evidence.—People v. Deitz, 86 Mich. 419.

¶ 156. In a prosecution for assault with intent to do great bodily harm less than the crime of murder, the people may show, as bearing upon the question of intent, the violence of the assault.—People v. Sutherland, 104 Mich. 468.

¶ 157. In a prosecution for assault with intent to commit murder upon an officer serving process, the fact that the process was void is immaterial where previous threats and present attempt to commit murder are shown without proof of any attack by the officer.—People v. Bernard, 125 Mich. 550. Writ of error dismissed in 184 U. S. 697, 46 L. ed. 764, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 940.

¶ 158. On an issue of whether a death was caused by a criminal abortion, testimony that the accused had in her possession the instruments for producing abortion, and reported conversations extending over a period of four years prior to the alleged crime, in which the accused held herself out for the performance of such service for hire, were admissible as tending to show knowledge and intent.—People v. Sessions, 58 Mich. 594.

§ 51. ——On negligence in manslaughter.

Evidence as to speed at other times or places, see ante ¶¶ 126, 127.

Other acts and neglects to show negligence, see generally Indictment, VIII, B.

¶ 159. Evidence of comparisons between the use of coal and oil as fuel under steam boilers was not admissible in a prosecution for criminal negligence in leaving steam boilers unattended whereby a high steam pressure generated and an explosion resulting in death occurred; coal not having been used under the boilers in question.—People v. Thompson, 122 Mich. 411.

¶ 160. In a prosecution for manslaughter as the result of negligence in leaving boilers unattended, testimony that the respondent had previously been warned that danger would follow his absence from the boiler room, was competent.—People v. Thompson, 122 Mich. 411.

§ 52. ——On justification or excuse.

Evidence of threats to show malice, see ante § 49.

Sufficiency of proofs, see post § 67.

General repute of deceased as admissible evidence bearing on belief in danger of attack, see also Indictment, VIII, B.

Former acts of violence as bearing on fear and menace of attack, see Indictment, VIII, B.

¶ 161. The quarrelsome character of deceased is inadmissible where there is no claim of self-defense.—People v. Garbutt, 17 Mich. 9.

¶ 162. In a prosecution for assault with intent to do great bodily harm, the quarrelsome disposition, and r the person assaulted, i shown to have been kn People v. Kirk, 151 Mi

¶ 163. One who has self-defense, and is tri may show by others th deceased at the time of so violent as to alarm also show the behavio the way to the commis —People v. Lilly, 38

¶ 164. In a trial for defense is the justifica show the relative streng parties, and such othe not capable of any d opinion, by witnesses w them and capable of j also that the accused of his assailant, and t powerful man of a da had threatened him.—I Mich. 732.

¶ 165. Facts which case of homicide did wards are not admissil ing; but they may be ad other evidence tending done in defense of life Cook, 39 Mich. 236.

¶ 166. In a trial for tent to show that th made a threatening at ant, was a man of hig some disposition, and ant to be so at the ti Hurd v. People, 25 Mi

¶ 167. A respondent under the plea of self- decedent's reputation and the violence of his but also instances o spondent's knowledge tion, as warranting a sion of danger.—Peopl 87.

¶ 168. In a prosecu husband by his wife self-defense was filed, witnesses in rebuttal cution that the dec them that his wife w seemed to have an a was not living right, her marriage vows, he it tended to show th since it proved noth People v. Cutler, 19

¶ 169. An executio a pistol to take poss debtor resisted him v thereupon prosecuted intent to murder. F titled to put in evidence the record of the proceedings in the case in which the execution issued for the purpose of showing that the sale was illegal; and to show also that before the levy the property had been sold to a third person for whom respondent was taking care of it.—People v. Dann, 53 Mich. 490.

¶ 170. Upon a trial for the murder of an officer attempting to arrest defendant, the warrant of arrest is admissible though held by the companion of the officer killed.—People v. Durfee, 62 Mich. 487.

¶ 171. A constable, acting outside of his county and company with a private citizen, sought to find out who had committed certain burglaries by stationing themselves at a certain point and stopping passersby. One man as to whom there was no probable cause for suspicion would not be stopped; and in escaping he fired on them, killing the private citizen. Held that, in trying him as for murder, proof of the burglaries was inadmissible.—People v. Burt, 51 Mich. 199.

¶ 172. On a prosecution for homicide committed in resisting an officer while making an arrest without warrant, evidence as to the details of the crime for which accused was being arrested, and of conversations between the officer and third persons prior to the attempted arrest, and leading up to such arrest, were admissible to show that a crime had been committed such as to justify an arrest without warrant.—People v. Blake, 157 Mich. 533.

§ 53. ——On aggravation or mitigation of assault.

See also ante ¶¶ 149, 150.

Ante mortem expressions of affection by victim as bearing on culpability of attack, see Indictment, VIII, B.

¶ 173. The party upon whom the assault was made, after detailing with great minuteness the assault and the result upon himself, was allowed to testify, against objection, that he had wounds upon his face, caused by being kicked by respondent; that they had been running ever since the assault; that, two or three weeks after the assault, an abscess formed, and the doctor lanced it, and quite a number of bones worked out. Held, that the testimony was competent as showing the aggravated character of the assault.—People v. Sutherland, 104 Mich. 468.

B. DYING DECLARATIONS.

§ 54. In general.

See also post ¶ 193.

Scope and subjects of the declaration, see post § 55.

Imminence and expectation of death, see post § 56.

Declarations of woman as to abortion on her, see post § 57.

Admissibility of declarations on behalf of accused, see post § 58.

Foundation proofs to let in dying declarations and evidence to rebut or explain declarations, see post §§ 59, 60.

[Note. Declarations not amounting to dying declarations may nevertheless be admissible as res gestæ, see Indictment, VIII. B.]

Order and time for proof of dying declarations, see Indictment, IX, B.

Erroneous exclusion as dying declaration cured by admission on other ground, see Indictment, XV.

¶ 174. The admissibility of a dying declaration is not dependent upon its having been taken immediately after the injury.—People v. Beverly, 108 Mich. 509.

¶ 175. It is not essential to the admissibility of a dying declaration that notice of an intention to take the same should have been given to the accused.—People v. Beverly, 108 Mich. 509.

¶ 176. It is no objection to the admission in evidence of a dying declaration that the "exigencies of the case" do not require it.—People v. Beverly, 108 Mich. 509.

§ 55. Scope and subjects of the declaration.

¶ 177. Dying declarations may properly include the entire circumstances attending the fatal occurrence. They may cover the facts to which the declarant could have testified as a witness. Their value depends on their intrinsic probability and the candor and truthfulness of the declarant as well as the fullness and fairness with which they are reported. When drawn out under suspicious circumstances or by doubtful means they will not be excluded, but will go to the jury for what they are worth. They are admitted from necessity only, the witness having passed away.—People v. Knapp, 26 Mich. 112.

¶ 178. The dying declarations of the deceased in a homicide trial are not admissible to show that defendant on previous occasions threatened to kill the deceased where such threats are not connected with the actual killing.—People v. Alexander, 161 Mich. 645.

¶ 179. In a trial for homicide, the dying declarations of the deceased are admissible to show the act of killing and anything connected with the res gestæ.—People v. Alexander, 161 Mich. 645.

¶ 180. On a trial for murder it is competent to show that while the deceased believed he was going to die he had an interview with the defendant, at which the shooting was talked over, and then and there acknowledged that he was to blame, and asked defendant to forgive him.—Hurd v. People, 25 Mich. 405.

¶ 181. Two women were walking together and one was fatally shot. In a prosecution for the murder the other testified that immediately after the shot was fired her companion exclaimed, "My God, Simpson, you have shot me," and then turned slowly and clasped the next to the top board in the fence close by. Another witness testified that he lived a block distant on the opposite side of the street, and was in the house when he heard the shot; that he ran to the place and found a woman leaning against the fence; that he went over as quick as he could and said to her, "Who shot you, madam?" and that she said it was John Simpson. Held, that these declarations of the injured person were admissible.—People v. Simpson, 48 Mich. 474.

¶ 182. Dying declarations may include statements as to the cause and circumstances of the homicide, to wit, previous threats by accused to shoot declarant if she left him, which she did, and of her refusal to return to him, whereupon he shot her.—People v. Beverly, 108 Mich. 509.

¶ 183. Dying declarations consisting of statements of mere opinions or conclusions of the deceased are not admissible in a homicide trial where such opinions or conclusions would not be admissible from the lips of a living witness.—People v. Alexander, 161 Mich. 645.

¶ 184. Dying declarations showing that the defendant husband assaulted the deceased wife on a previous occasion are not admissible in a homicide trial.—People v. Alexander, 161 Mich. 645.

¶ 185. Evidence that a wife, shot by her husband, in the interval of five days preceding her death made expressions of affection for her husband, was given by the attending physician. In the trial of the husband for homicide, held, the dying declarations of the wife as to trouble with her husband on previous occasions were inadmissible to rebut such evidence.—People v. Alexander, 161 Mich. 645.

§ 56. Imminence and expectation of death.

Sufficiency of foundation proofs, see post § 59.

¶ 186. A statement made by a person a few hours before he became aware that he was about to die, is not admissible as a dying declaration.—People v. Johnson, 186 Mich. 516.

¶ 187. To render a statement admissible as a dying declaration, the circumstances under which it was made must first be shown, from which it must appear that when made the declarant was under the conviction of approaching and inevitable death.—People v. Christmas, 181 Mich. 634.

¶ 188. A statement fore death when he entertained by the and he did not expe sible as a dying Christmas, 181 Mich.

¶ 189. On a trial ments of the deceased ing and while under belief of speedy dea important part of the with the shooting, ar Hurd v. People, 25 M

¶ 190. Dying decla even though others the person making th though death may some time.—People v.

§ 57. Declarations by her.

Declarations admissil admissions, see I

¶ 191. The reason larations is especiall abortion, where usu have knowledge of t ist and the person u is produced. So he manslaughter.—Peopl 388.

¶ 192. A statemen abortion case as a the deceased was vi hours before her dea that she was very ill ise her nothing as to all that medical skill cumstances, and wh ing her condition, st answer to his inqui produced the aborti strument.—People v.

¶ 193. Dying decla as evidence, must b ments as a witness the stand if living; "Ah, Aleck, what h die!" uttered by a v supposed to have b tion, was held not declaration of facts.— Mich. 431.

¶ 194. Upon a tri sulting from abortic ment by the decease ent had said or don related it, in regard etc., is inadmissible declaration, it is he 66 Mich. 460.

§ 58. Admissibility o See also ante ¶¶ 180,

¶ 195. A prisoner has the same right as the prosecution to rely upon the dying declarations of the person he is charged with killing.—People v. Knapp, 26 Mich. 112.

§ 59. Foundation proofs.
Necessity of first showing foundation, see also ante ¶ 187.
Necessity that death be imminent and apprehended by declarant, see ante § 56.

¶ 196. In a prosecution for murder the offer of dying declarations should be preceded by evidence that they were actually made in expectation of impending death; and this may be shown by the nature of the injury, by what the injured person said, or what physicians or attendants said in his hearing, by the evident state of his mind, etc. It is not essential that the injured person should have stated that they were made in that expectation, or that any person should have said in his presence that death must speedily follow.—People v. Simpson, 48 Mich. 474.

¶ 197. Evidence of the circumstances under which dying declarations are taken is admissible, in addition to the document, to show whether it was really taken when the declarant was under conviction of approaching and inevitable death, as evidence of this should usually be given in advance of proof of the declarations themselves.—People v. Knapp, 26 Mich. 112.

¶ 198. An antemortem statment taken down in writing by a justice of the peace in the forenoon about six hours after deceased was shot and after consulting with her physician is admissible as a dying declaration where in reply to the justice's question she said that she thought probably she must die but she hoped for the best; and where the statement contained a declaration of her belief that she would die from the wounds, basing such belief on her own feelings and the doctor's statement, and that in view of such belief the statement was made.—People v. Weaver, 108 Mich. 649.

¶ 199. Evidence that deceased, soon after being shot, told the doctor that she believed she could not live, and that he replied that her case was practically hopeless, though he had just said that while there was life there was hope, sustains the admission, as dying declarations, of her statements then made to the doctor relative to the shooting.—People v. Weaver, 108 Mich. 649.

¶ 200. The action of the trial court in admitting in evidence a dying declaration will not be reversed, on the ground that the deceased was under the influence of opiates at the time it was taken, and was not certain that she would die, where there was testimony fairly tending to show that the condition of the deceased was such as to render the statement admissible.—People v. Beverly, 108 Mich. 509.

¶ 201. Evidence of subsequent occurrences tending to show that a person was aware that he was in extremis when he made certain declarations, and containing a recital of a death-bed scene, held prejudicial to a person on trial for murder.—People v. Johnson, 186 Mich. 516.

§ 60. Rebuttal or explanation of declarations.
See also ante ¶ 185.
Bitterness of declarant's feelings as impairing weight of the declaration, see ante ¶ 142.

¶ 202. It cannot be shown for the purpose of affecting a wife's dying declaration that her disposition was bitter and vindictive.—People v. Simpson, 48 Mich. 474.

C. DEGREE AND SUFFICIENCY OF PROOF.

§ 61. In general.
Of the corpus delicti, see post § 62.
Of murder or manslaughter, see post §§ 63, 64.
Of assaults, see post §§ 65, 66.
Of justification or excuse, see post § 67.
Of participation, see post § 68.
Matters provable by dying declarations, see ante § 55.
Sufficiency of case for directed verdict, see post § 71.
General rules as to sufficiency of evidence of crimes, see Indictment, VIII, C.
Sufficiency on issue of insanity, see Indictment, VIII, C.
Commenting on evidence in argument to jury, see Indictment, IX, C.

¶ 203. On a trial for murder where there is no direct proof of the cause of death, if the death can be accounted for upon any reasonable theory other than that of the defendant's guilt, the jury should acquit.—People v. Stewart, 75 Mich. 21.

§ 62. Corpus delicti and cause of death.
Reasonable doubt as to cause of death, see ante § 61.
Necessity of proof connecting respondent's pistol with the wound, see also ante ¶ 117.
Admissibility to show whether wounds were caused by accused or other agent, see ante ¶ 134.

¶ 204. Corpus delicti of manslaughter by abortion may be established not only by postmortem examination, but by fact of decedent's pregnancy, illness, treatment, etc.—People v. Aikin, 66 Mich. 460.

¶ 205. On a trial for murder, it appeared that a young unmarried woman left her house to gather flowers in the woods. On her failure to return, her body was found in the woods; and a bottle of laudanum was discovered near at hand. There was no poison in the stomach, but the other viscera were not tested for it. About the time she entered the woods, respondent was seen to enter from the opposite side; a cry was heard shortly afterwards; marks of violence were discovered upon the face and throat of the deceased, and the ground was indented and twigs broken under her head. Hair was found upon the ground, which matched the respondent's and some on twigs like her hair. The vial containing the poison had been seen in respondent's house. Two physicians who made a post-mortem examination, testified that ruptured blood vessels were found in the throat, that the windpipe was crushed, the lungs collapsed, the membranes of the brain congested, and that the nose was pressed to one side; that the symptoms were those of stranguiation, and that the injuries could not have been inflicted by the deceased herself. Held, that there was ample proof of the corpus delicti.—People v. Parmelee, 112 Mich. 291.

¶ 206. Murder by poisoning cannot be shown in a case where symptoms constitute the evidence, unless every other cause of death but poison is negatived; and to do this it must be shown that the combined symptoms and the absolutely certain facts with which they are associated are inconsistent with any other disorder.—People v. Millard, 53 Mich. 63.

¶ 207. In a case of slow poisoning it is a circumstance against the prosecution that physicians who had attended the victim and who testified as experts for the state had not acted, while in attendance, as if they definitely suspected anything wrong.—People v. Millard, 53 Mich. 63.

§ 63. Murder.

Facts warranting submission of first and second degrees, see also post §§ 75, 76.
Facts warranting withdrawal of certain degrees from jury, see post § 76.
Of corpus delicti and cause of death, see ante § 62.

¶ 208. Deliberation and premeditation may be inferred from the character of the weapon used, the wounds inflicted on vital parts, and the circumstances, acts and conduct of accused before and after the killing, and the incredibility of an exculpatory account thereof by him ascribing it to a stranger who enforced silence and flight by threatening the life of accused.—People v. Wolf, 95 Mich. 625.

¶ 209. The fact that between the first attack and the final shooting the person who did the killing armed himself had no tendency to show malice, when taken in connection with the attack and the accompanying threats and the following of accused into his own house where the shooting was done.—Hurd v. People, 25 Mich. 405.

¶ 210. A convicti degree cannot be su
the accused, after c and while retreating him after warning would shoot, and w serious personal inj
Mich. 324.

¶ 211. A verdict girl in a woodland guilt there is circu rendered erroneous employed by her house a few days a not produced or ac
cution, where anot
M. was at work wi
ing the woods on t
der and where the
was in the woods a but two or three timacy with her, w post-mortem exami
she was pregnant,
claimed to be the
which fact was as her murder, and w
dence of a fabricat
cide.—People v. Pa

¶ 212. A convict degree is sustaine
dence that the resp versed with an ol
the road near the man, that he had said home and e robbing it, that he a sporting house,
mate that he woul
had left hurriedly about 2 o'clock i deceased was kille
a bullet of 32 calil caliber was found arrested, that he persons on the ro of the murder th had conversed wit
ance some days lat asked him to keep developments in r
that he had intin
the murderer was
Mich. 291.

¶ 213. On a pr
dence, which was sufficient to sustai
Page, 198 Mich. 5

¶ 213a. In a p killing a constable ent's premises to it is immaterial th introduced in evi
from the respond
such a writ existe that the constable

on the premises.—People v. Sauer, 143 Mich. 308.

§ 64. Manslaughter.

Facts warranting submission of manslaughter, see also post §§ 75, 76.

Facts warranting withdrawal of certain grades or degrees from jury, see post § 76.

Submission of manslaughter in affray as alternative to self-defense theory, see post ¶ 297.

¶ 214. Evidence reviewed and held sufficient to support a conviction of manslaughter in procuring an abortion, where there were circumstances of concealment and falsification, and proof of other abortions to show guilty knowledge and intent, as against a might have been an accidental abortion intheory educed from the circumstances that it duced from seasickness and its nausea and climatic changes.—People v. Seaman, 107 Mich. 348.

¶ 215. One who, after an assault on him, with several other persons, sought out his assailant who was killed in an ensuing encounter, is properly convicted of manslaughter, although it does not appear who struck the fatal blow, where the evidence shows that the respondent actively participated in all that occurred up to and including the fatal assault.—People v. Ponsford, 181 Mich. 659.

§ 65. Homicidal assaults.

¶ 216. A railway employee was sent with a party of men to repair a side track. A man, who claimed that they were coming upon his land, disputed the company's right to do what was proposed, threatened to undo whatever should be done, and in the course of an excited altercation drew a line on the ground where he said his boundary was, pushed the leader of the working party so that he staggered, and then struck him a single blow with a heavy stick and knocked him down. There was some testimony that the person assailed had raised a shovel as if to strike the assailant, but this was denied. The assailant acted in hot blood, but apparently supposed that in trying to prevent what was proposed he was defending his right. Held that, although the blow was unjustifiable, the evidence would not sustain a charge of assault with intent to kill and murder.—People v. Comstock, 49 Mich. 330.

¶ 217. In a prosecution for assault with intent to commit murder, a verdict of guilty is sustained by evidence that the defendant owner of a small river boat had threatened the life of officers attempting to serve process on the boat and that upon being informed of the officer's business he took up a revolver and shot the officer notwithstanding his testimony that the officer shot first and he shot in self-defense.—People v. Bernard, 125 Mich. 550. Writ of error dismissed in 184 U. S. 697, 46 L. ed. 764, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 940.

§ 66. Assault with intent to do great bodily harm less than murder.

¶ 218. In a prosecution for assault with intent to do great bodily harm less than the crime of murder, the testimony tended to show that respondent kicked the complaining witness, as he was falling from the effects of a blow administered by the respondent, fracturing one of his ribs and injuring his kidneys, and that the act of kicking was accompanied by the threat that respondent "would kick his G——d d——d liver out." Held sufficient, if believed, to warrant a conviction of the offense charged.—People v. Miller, 91 Mich. 639.

¶ 219. In a prosecution for an assault with intent to do great bodily harm less than the crime of murder, testimony tending to show that respondent entertained an ill-will towards the complaining witness, that on the occasion in question he struck her upon the head with a club, felling her to the ground, at the same time threatening to kill her, and that the blow produced a contused and lacerated wound, is sufficient to sustain a conviction of the offense charged.—People v. Conley, 106 Mich. 424.

¶ 220. Evidence that one struck another upon the head with an iron bar, with sufficient force to produce unconsciousness, justifies the finding of an intent to do great bodily harm less than the crime of murder, although the ulterior motive of the assault may have been robbery.—People v. Smith, 106 Mich. 431.

¶ 221. A conviction of assault with intent to do great bodily harm less than murder may be sustained where the accused, as a witness, admits that he drew a knife, knocked a person down, and kicked him several times on the head.—People v. Williams, 118 Mich. 692.

¶ 222. A conviction for assault with intent to do great bodily harm less than murder under an information for assault with intent to commit murder is sustained by proof of the requisite intent, where the assault was in respondent's house on one whom he supposed to be an intruder with whom he had had trouble and was made with an axe by striking in the face and cutting off part of the cheek and breaking the cheek bone, it appearing that all parties were Finns accustomed to enter each other's houses without knocking, and the claim being self-defense.—People v. Kalunki, 123 Mich. 110.

§ 67. Justification or excuse.

See also ante ¶ 81.

Shifting of burden on showing of self-defense, see ante § 43.

Facts warranting instructions, see post § 79.

¶ 223. Duress such as will excuse one for aiding and assisting in a murder is not made out by threats made three days before that his life will be taken unless he aids in committing the crime.—People v. Repke, 103 Mich. 459.

¶ 224. It seems the theory of self-defense is not supportable where respondent told deceased that, if he repeated an accusation of theft, he would kill him, and thereupon passed out of the room and procured a revolver, returning with the evident purpose of compelling deceased to withdraw the charge, and immediately afterwards shot him while he was stooping to recover a cigar which respondent had struck from his hand —even though respondent thought that deceased was making a movement to take a revolver from his pocket.—People v. Piper, 112 Mich. 644.

§ 68. Participation or implication in crime.

Inference as to intent of participator, see ante ¶ 113.

¶ 225. Testimony in a prosecution for murder that respondent heard his companions proposing to assault deceased, and went with them to see the fight in which the killing occurred, is insufficient to warrant a submission of the case to the jury.—People v. Fay, 70 Mich. 421.

VIII. TRIAL, INSTRUCTIONS, SENTENCE, AND PUNISHMENT.

§ 69. In general.

[Note. Nearly all of the questions of trial practice outside of the substance of the instructions are governed by rules and principles common to all crimes and not peculiar to homicide cases, see Indictment, IX.]

Time for prosecutions and limitations, see Indictment, II.

Jurisdiction and venue, see Indictment, III.

Arraignment and pleading to indictment, see Indictment, V.

Continuances and postponements of trials, see Indictment, VI.

Dismissal or nolle of indictment, see Indictment, VII.

Reception of proof, order in which to be offered, and practice on offers, see Indictment, IX, B.

¶ 226. Where two persons were implicated in a homicide, and one has been tried and found guilty of murder, it is error, upon the trial of the other, for the court and prosecuting attorney to repeatedly refer to the killing as "murder," since respondent has a right to the verdict of his jury upon the question of whether or not a murder had been committed, as well as whether he was the man who fired the fatal shot.—People v. Clark, 155 Mich. 647.

§ 70. Questions for court and jury.

See also post ¶ 257.

Directing verdict, see post § 71; and see also Indictment, IX, D.

Instructions, see post § 72 et seq.

Facts warranting charge to jury on grade or degree of crime, see post §§ 75, 76.

Facts warranting withdrawal of certain degrees from jury, see post § 76.

Facts warranting charge on justification or excuse, see post § 79.

Court and jury province in prosecutions in general, see Indictment, IX, D.

¶ 227. It is for the court to define the legal import of the term malice aforethought. —Maher v. People, 10 Mich. 212.

¶ 228. The question whether malice aforethought existed in a particular instance is one of fact for the jury.—Maher v. People, 10 Mich. 212.

¶ 229. The questions as to what is an adequate or reasonable provocation to reduce an offense from murder to manslaughter, and whether a reasonable time had elapsed for the passions to cool and reason to resume its control, are questions of fact for the jury. —Maher v. People, 10 Mich. 212.

¶ 230. Whether a homicide by shooting which the evidence tends to show was committed by the accused, a small man of nervous temperament, with a revolver which he procured from his room in his boarding house immediately after having been set upon and maltreated by the deceased, a fellow-boarder and a man of large size and great strength, was prompted by a wicked and malignant heart, and, if so, whether there was such deliberation as to constitute the offense murder in the first degree, or whether it was committed in the heat of passion caused by reasonable provocation, and before due time had elapsed for reason to resume control, so as to reduce the offense to manslaughter, are questions of fact for the jury.—People v. Holmes, 111 Mich. 364.

¶ 231. In a prosecution against an engineer for manslaughter through criminal negligence in leaving boilers unattended and causing explosion by an overpressure of steam, where experts for the prosecution testified that respondent's absence was not negligence and that he could have done nothing to avoid the catastrophe had he been in the engine room, and where witnesses for the prosecution testified that the explosion was caused by a very high pressure of steam, an issue of fact was raised for the jury.—People v. Thompson, 122 Mich. 411.

¶ 232. That an automobile was running in excess of the speed fixed by statute at the time a pedestrian was struck and killed, independent of other facts, is not sufficient to warrant a conviction for manslaughter; the question of the speed of the car, in connection with other facts, as bearing upon the question whether the driver was guilty of gross negligence in running it should be left to the jury.—People v. Barnes, 182 Mich. 179.

¶ 233. Whether the conduct of the driver of an automobile was the proximate cause of the death of a pedestrian who was struck by the car, and was characterized by such a degree of culpable negligence as to amount to gross negligence, is a question for the jury.—People v. Barnes, 182 Mich. 179.

¶ 234. There was no issue for the jury as to the necessity of retreating or the possibility of avoiding the assault, and the only question for them to determine was whether respondent in good faith believed that a homicidal assault on him was imminent; where respondent was without fault suddenly attacked in the public highway by deceased with a loaded gun, and deceased, who had twice threatened to shoot respondent, advanced within three rods of him, threatening to kill him, and was raising his gun when he was shot by respondent.—People v. Macard, 73 Mich. 15.

§ 71. Directing verdict.

Instruction to convict of certain degree or to acquit, see post § 76.

In prosecutions generally, see Indictment, IX, D.

¶ 235. A father tried for murdering his child testified that some hours before the killing he bought a revolver for the purpose of shooting, the first time he crossed his path, a boarder of whom he was jealous, and that he accidentally shot and killed the child while attempting to shoot the boarder; but he did not testify that he intended to kill the boarder, and there was evidence that before the shooting an altercation took place between the two men. Held, that the testimony was not equivalent to a plea of guilty of murder, upon which the court might, from the testimony, determine the degree, but that respondent had a right to the jury's verdict upon that subject.—People v. Gordon, 100 Mich. 518.

¶ 236. A verdict will not be directed for the respondent who, after an assault on him, with several other persons, sought out his assailant, who was killed in an ensuing encounter, although it does not appear who struck the fatal blow, where the evidence shows that the respondent actively participated in all that occurred up to and including the fatal assault.—People v. Ponsford, 181 Mich. 659.

§ 72. Instructions.

On various elements and aspects of the crime, degrees and grades, assaults, and justification or excuse, see post §§ 73-81.

Defining grades and degrees and distinguishing murder and manslaughter, see post §§ 75, 76.

Failure to define crime, see also post ¶ 252.

General law of criminal instructions, see Indictment, IX, E.

Construction of the charge as a whole, see Indictment, IX, E, XVI.

Unduly emphasizing single facts and features, see Indictment, IX, E.

Charging on weight of evidence and assuming facts in charge, see Indictment, IX, E.

General charges on circumstantial evidence, see Indictment, IX, E.

As to character as evidentiary fact or defense, see Indictment, IX, E.

As to insanity or responsibility for crime, see Indictment, IX, E.

On aiding and abetting, principalship and accessories, see Indictment, IX, E.

Errors in charging cured by outcome of case, see Indictment, XV.

¶ 237. In a murder trial the court charged as follows: "The crime which you are now considering * * * was committed in the broad light of day * * * in bold and wicked defiance of all human and divine law. * * * So far as we know, on this April morning life was as sweet and precious to this poor wife and mother as it was to the prisoner. A more horrible and brutal death can scarcely be conceived. * * * We cannot restore life to this stricken woman; but we may do our share towards the guarding and the protecting of human life hereafter." Held, the charge was erroneous as tending to excite the jury against the defendant.—People v. Poole, 159 Mich. 350.

¶ 238. On defining manslaughter in his charge, the court said: "The general rule is that reason should, at the time of the act, be disturbed or obscured by passion, or an excitement of any cause, to an extent which might render ordinary men of fair, average disposition, liable to act rashly or without due deliberation or reflection, and from passion and lack of reason rather than from judgment." Held, the charge was fair to defendant.—People v. Droste, 160 Mich. 66.

¶ 239. Where an information for an attempt to kill and murder alleged that it had been made with a revolver loaded with powder and ball, and it was not expressly proved that the pistol was loaded with ball, though the prisoner's own statement assumed that it was, and all evidence bearing on this tended to prove it, it was not error to instruct the jury that to convict they must find that it contained a leaden bullet as charged.—Gale v. People, 26 Mich. 157.

¶ 240. On the trial of a respondent for the murder of his wife by poisoning, the prosecution was permitted to introduce testimony tending to show, that at the same time he was claimed to have been poisoning his wife, he was also administering poison to her sister, who was an inmate of his household. Held, that, if there was evidence in the case that respondent had administered poison to his wife, said testimony was competent as bearing upon his motive or intent in doing so, but that it was error to instruct the jury that they might consider said testimony, for the purpose of establishing whether respondent in fact administered poison to his wife as charged.—People v. Thacker, 108 Mich. 652.

§ 73. ——As to corpus delicti and cause of death.

As to proof of defendant's being the assailant, see post § 80.

¶ 241. The refusal of an instruction that, if the jury believe that the deceased aborted from natural causes, or by reason of the ordinary sickness and vomiting, augmented by the sickness and vomiting of a sea voyage, together with nervous excitement, fatigue, lack of nourishment, and change of climate, respondent should be acquitted, is erroneous, where there is evidence in support of such theory.—People v. Seaman, 107 Mich. 348.

¶ 242. Where in a manslaughter case, the court in explaining the theories of the respective parties in the instructions, stated that the defense claimed that the injury resulting in death was caused by the deceased's head striking the uneven surface of a floor, while the people claimed that such injuries must have been inflicted by some instrument, it was competent to leave this question to the jury, although no witness testified to the manner in which the injuries were inflicted.—People v. Hossler, 135 Mich. 384.

§ 74. ——As to malice, premeditation and intent.

See also post ¶ 259.

Intent in assaults with intent to kill or to do great bodily harm, see post § 78.

As to heat of passion, see also ante ¶ 238.

Province of the court, see also ante ¶¶ 227, 228.

Defining malice in instructions, see Indictment, IX, E.

¶ 243. A definition given in a prosecution for murder of malice as including anger, hatred, revenge and any unlawful and unjustifiable motive, was held to be erroneous.—Nye v. People, 35 Mich. 16.

¶ 244. An instruction as to malice, being unnecessary to warrant a conviction for manslaughter, held to sufficiently cover a requested instruction on the same subject.—People v. McArron, 121 Mich. 1.

¶ 245. Where, without cooling time, one shoots a violent assailant, and there is nothing to show that his apparent fear of his assailant was a pretext to enable him to commit murder, it is error to mislead the jury with instructions as to cooling time not warranted by any facts in the case.—Brownell v. People, 38 Mich. 732.

¶ 246. It is error to leave a case of homicide to the jury on the theory that the accused had armed himself with the intention of killing the deceased on the first pretext or assault by him, and took advantage of an attack to do so, unless there is testimony legally bearing in that direction.—Brownell v. People, 38 Mich. 732.

¶ 247. In a prosecution for murder committed after a dispute between accused and his brother it was error to omit a requested instruction that the jury, in considering whether respondent or deceased was the aggressor, should consider the previous threats made by deceased, and the purchase and exhibition of a loaded revolver by him.—People v. Palmer, 96 Mich. 580.

¶ 248. In a manslaughter case, a charge that death resulting from an assault in the absence of any proof to the contrary, is presumed to be felonious, either murder or manslaughter, and that where the death is shown to have resulted from the use of a deadly weapon, in the absence of any proof to the contrary, the presumption is that the death was inflicted with malice aforethought, is a correct charge where the court has properly instructed the jury as to the burden upon the prosecution of proving beyond a reasonable doubt that the killing was not in self-defense.—People v. Collins, 166 Mich. 4.

§ 75. ——On grade or degree of crime.

As to included offenses, see post § 81.

Restriction to specific grade or degree and elimination of other grades or degrees, see post § 76.

¶ 249. Murder by poisoning is murder in the first degree, and a jury should be so charged where the information does not state its degree or the mode of its commission.—People v. Hall, 48 Mich. 482.

¶ 250. On a trial for murder, where the difficulty which resulted in the homicide originated from a quarrel between the deceased and a companion of the accused, it is error to charge that if the accused and his companion, or such companion alone, began the attack, the offense would be murder.—Nye v. People, 35 Mich. 16.

¶ 251. Where the injury, if inflicted by the defendant, was inflicted either by a blow from the fist or a kick, and the jury, if the question had been left to them, might properly have found from the evidence a verdict of manslaughter, it was held error to charge that if defendant committed the homicide it would be murder, and not manslaughter, unless it was committed under such extreme provocation as is recognized in the authorities as sufficient to reduce intentional and voluntary homicide committed with a deadly weapon to that degree of crime.—Wellar v. People, 30 Mich. 16.

¶ 252. The court's failure, in prosecution for murder, technically to define the crime of manslaughter, is not error where respondent's theory that he was guilty of the latter offense was clearly placed before the jury with an instruction that if it was found to be true respondent was guilty of manslaughter.—People v. Harper, 83 Mich. 273.

¶ 253. An instruction, that the accused would be guilty of murder in the first degree, if he had time after the assault to form a conscious design of killing, is erroneous, in that it eliminates from the consideration of the jury the question presented by the evidence whether the crime might not have been committed under the influence of passion for which there was a reasonable provocation, in which case, even though there was an intention to kill, the crime would be only manslaughter.—People v. Holmes, 111 Mich. 364.

¶ 254. Two persons had an altercation in front of an interurban station and a fight was narrowly averted. The defendant went into the station to remove his coat preparatory to a fight in the country, stated he was going to fight, came out and immediately struck deceased with his fist knocking him down, causing unconsciousness, from which he never recovered. The deceased had called defendant a vile name, but the evidence was conflicting whether he raised his hand as if to strike the defendant. After the blow the defendant went back into the station and at his request was led out by the back door. Physicians testified that in their opinion the wound could not have been caused by a blow with a naked fist or by falling backward upon a cement sidewalk. Held, it was proper to instruct the jury upon the law applicable to murder in the second degree. —People v. Sauerbier, 173 Mich. 521.

¶ 255. Refusal of the court, in a criminal prosecution for murder, to eliminate first and second degree murder from the consideration of the jury held proper, where there was evidence tending to show previous threats by the accused to shoot the deceased and that the shooting was not in the accused's house, as claimed by her, but in the public highway some distance away.—People v. Cutler, 197 Mich. 6.

¶ 256. In a murder trial the evidence indicated that the defendant and deceased were alone in a church shed at the time of the commissison of the act; that there had been some rivalry over a girl; that defendant was intoxicated; and that angry disputes had been heard by those at a distance. Held, there was ground for the court to leave the case to the jury on the theory of manslaughter as well as murder.—People v. Droste, 160 Mich. 66.

¶ 257. The testimony on the part of the people in a prosecution for murder tended to show that on the day of the shooting respondent and decedent had some words of dispute in a saloon; that respondent left the saloon, decedent remaining there, and, after arming himself with a shot gun, returned to the saloon; that the decedent had in the meantime armed himself with a revolver. The respondent claimed that he had no murderous intent at any time. The court instructed the jury that if, after respondent entered the saloon, he became aware that decedent was there, and he then formed the intent to take his life, taking into account whatever may have been in his mind as to their past relations, their quarrels, or anything that he may have heard about decedent's having a pistol, and if he became aware that decedent was in the back part of the saloon, surrounded by his friends, if he then, even though but a moment before he fired the fatal shot, formed in his mind the purpose of taking decedent's life, and pursuant to that purpose he shot and killed him, that would constitute murder. Objection was made that there was no evidence to support such a theory, and that neither the prosecution nor the defense conducted the trial with reference to it. Held, that this court cannot tell what the argument was to the jury; that, if there was any testimony upon which to base the charge, it must be sustained; that there was evidence that, when respondent entered the saloon, he appeared in his usual manner, and that, when he raised the gun, his countenance changed; that whether this was because he saw decedent, or saw the pistol pointed at him, and whether it was necessary for him then to shoot in self-defense, were all questions for the jury, and made competent the charge complained of, which was given in connection with instructions covering respondent's theories.—People v. Palmer, 105 Mich. 568.

¶ 258. In a prosecution for murder, the court, after defining the different degrees of murder, and also manslaughter, and after stating to the jury that, where a crime was divided into degrees, they might acquit of the principal charge and convict of the lesser offense, and that in such a case they should first consider the matter of the higher crime, and then go through the different degrees, withdrew from their consideration the subject of murder in the first degree, the respondent having been acquitted of that offense on a former trial. Held, that the charge was not misleading and prejudicial in that the court first defined murder in the first degree, and instructed the jury that they should commence with the higher crime. —People v. Palmer, 105 Mich. 568.

¶ 259. On the point as to the frame of mind of a defendant in a murder trial which would reduce the crime to manslaughter the court charged: "If you find that he was in a state of such excitement that his reason was dethroned, that he was driven along by an uncontrollable and irresistible impulse, so that he was no longer morally or legally accountable for his conduct, so that he did not realize his crime or what he was doing or where he was * * * then the defendant is guilty of no higher crime than manslaughter." Held, the instruction was erroneous.—People v. Poole, 159 Mich. 350.

¶ 260. In the case of a conviction for an assault to do great bodily harm less than murder, under an information charging assault with intent to commit murder, the refusal to charge that "there is no offense known as assault with intent to commit manslaughter" is not error, where the jury was instructed as to the essential elements constituting the crime for which the respondent was convicted.—People v. Kalunki, 123 Mich. 110.

¶ 261. In a manslaughter case, it is not error for the court to state in its charge what the claim of the prosecution is as to the conduct of the respondent in preparing and arming himself and in returning to kill the deceased, where the prosecution did put forth such claim and supported it with evidence.—People v. Collins, 166 Mich. 4.

§ 76. ——Restriction to specific grade or degree.

Refusal to restrict to manslaughter, see also ante ¶ 255.

¶ 262. Where, in a trial for murder, the testimony of the defendant and one of the witnesses for the prosecution tends to show that the crime may have been manslaughter, a charge that the verdict should be "guilty or not guilty of murder in the second degree" is erroneous.—People v. Hamilton, 76 Mich. 212.

¶ 263. An instruction to return a verdict of either murder in the first degree or not guilty is error where there is room to find that the killing, if any, was done in a sudden affray or in self-defense.—Baker v. People, 40 Mich. 411.

¶ 264. A request to instruct the jury that they could not convict respondent of murder in the first or second degree, but only of manslaughter, was properly refused where there was evidence tending to show murder.—People v. Wright, 89 Mich. 70.

¶ 265. Where there is no evidence upon which a verdict of murder in the second degree, or any lesser grade of the crime could rest, it is not error to charge that if defendants are guilty at all they are guilty of murder in the first degree.—People v. Fuhrmann, 103 Mich. 593.

¶ 266. Where, under the proofs, the killing is shown to have been committed by lying in wait, and by and deliberately to instruct the guilty at all, h
first degree.—Pe

¶ 267. Where tion for murde mitted, if any, v
for the court t subject of mans
108 Mich. 509.

¶ 268. Where fendant is guilty or not guilty, i instruct the jur
it must be of
People v. Nunn,

¶ 269. Where that the accuse and with a dea life, there is no court in his ch manslaughter, a might find the d instead of for murder.—People

¶ 270. In a p defendant was where there cherished ill-wil but where no e peared, it is no
that if defends guilty of murde
v. Lahnala, 193

¶ 271. Where claimed on the from sudden a duced by a ca killing from mu doubtful propri
the jury that th of murder, or n
165 Mich. 231.

§ 77. ——As to

¶ 272. In a
the respondent,
with criminal n steam boilers, i struct that a p good faith base shown to be sa gent.—People v

¶ 273. An in trial for manslau
when he struck automobile, was of speed than by statute, he v
as eliminating f
proximate cause or whether the lieved he was v

speed, and tends to make a mistake of judgment on his part amount to a crime.—People v. Barnes, 182 Mich. 179.

¶ 274. In a prosecution for murder in killing a constable who was acting under a writ of replevin, where the accused claimed that the gun was discharged accidentally, and while he not intentionally pointing the gun at the constable was engaged in the attempt to frighten the officer away, a charge that the pointing of a gun in the air is not an unlawful act, and respondent had the right to take the gun out in the field and point it in the air so long as he did not take it there for the purpose of obstructing or resisting the officer, and that the discharging of the gun in the air was not an unlawful act so long as he did not take the gun in the field to obstruct or resist the officer, and did not use it for that purpose, nor in a manner amounting to a reckless disregard of human life, sufficiently recognized the defendant's theory of his case.—People v. Sauer, 143 Mich. 308.

§ 78. ——On homicidal assault or intent to do great bodily harm.

On intent in actual killing, see ante § 74.
As to grade of the assault, see also ante § 75, ¶ 260.
On justification or excuse for the assault, see post § 79.

¶ 275. In a prosecution for an assault with intent to do great bodily harm less than the crime of murder, it is proper to refuse to charge that the jury must find a specific intent to assault a person who was injured; and an instruction that if respondent shot into a crowd with the intention of wounding any of them he might be convicted is proper.—People v. Raher, 92 Mich. 165.

¶ 276. A charge, it is not necessary for the prosecution to show the specific intent with which the act was done where a weapon was used such as would inflict great bodily harm, is not erroneous as dispensing with proof of intent to inflict great bodily harm; if the remainder of the charge shows that it was left to the jury to infer such intent from the character of weapon used.—People v. Jassino, 100 Mich. 536.

¶ 277. Where, in a prosecution for an assault with intent to do great bodily harm less than murder, it appears that the assault, which resulted in serious injury, was unprovoked and deliberate, an instruction that a man is presumed to intend the natural consequences of his own acts is proper.—People v. Resh, 107 Mich. 251.

¶ 278. An instruction in a prosecution under How. St. § 9122a, that the prosecution is bound to prove "not only the assault, but the intent as well; not only that the respondent struck the complaining witness, but that he so struck her and inflicted the injuries with intent to do great bodily harm, less than the crime of murder,"—is sufficiently specific on the question of intent, without indicating the distinction between the offense charged and assault with intent to murder.—People v. Ochotaki, 115 Mich. 601.

¶ 279. In an action for assault and battery with intent to do great bodily harm, the court sufficiently instructed the jury as to the intent necessary by charging, "It must be an intent to do a serious injury of an aggravated nature," and no error was committed in refusing the requested instructions as to the required intent.—People v. Mulvaney, 171 Mich. 272.

¶ 280. In a prosecution under an information charging assault with intent to kill and murder and assault with intent to do great bodily harm, an instruction taking from the jury the question of intent was held erroneous notwithstanding defendant testified that in shooting at the complaining witness he aimed to hit him, "and that shows what I intended to do."—People v. Howard, 179 Mich. 478.

¶ 281. In a prosecution for assault with intent to do great bodily harm less than murder a request to charge that although a pistol was intentionally fired by accused and that the presumption would be important it would not be conclusive, and that it should be supplemented by other evidence to avoid the reasonable doubt and prove the specific intent, was properly refused even where there was testimony that accused and all the others were drunk, where there was no request for a further specific charge on drunkenness to a degree destroying capacity of accused for the specific intent.—People v. Carter, 117 Mich. 576.

¶ 282. Where an alleged assault with intent to commit murder was committed with a revolver in a room containing eight or ten people, it is error, in defining express malice, for the court to use language open to the construction that discharging a gun amongst a multitude of people will afford the necessary implication of malice.—People v. Cismadija, 167 Mich. 210.

¶ 283. In a prosecution for an assault with intent to murder, an instruction stating that under the charge in the information if the person assaulted had died from the effects of the shots, and all the other ingredients of the crime were there, the death of the person would have been murder and not manslaughter, is erroneous where the assault occurred in a wordy dispute over a trivial matter, followed by a sudden affray in which respondent was violently assaulted by the complaining witness, and the greatest crime of which respondent could have been convicted under the circumstances would have been manslaughter.—People v. Cismadija, 167 Mich. 210.

¶ 284. In a prosecution for an assault with intent to commit murder, a definition of express malice should be pertinent to the facts involved.—People v. Cismadija, 167 Mich. 210.

¶ 285. Where an alleged assault with intent to kill occurred during a sudden affray following a dispute over a trivial matter, it is error to give a lengthy definition of express malice.—People v. Cismadija, 167 Mich. 210.

§ 79. ——On justification or excuse.

As to arming in preparation, see ante ¶ 246.
As to aggression in affray, see ante ¶ 247.

¶ 286. It is not error for the court in charging the jury as to the belief of respondent arising from his surroundings and circumstances at the time of the homicide which would justify it as self-defense in addition to the words "reasonable belief" and "honest belief" to use the expressions "reasonable cause to believe," "reasonable cause to apprehend," "reasonable cause to believe and did believe."—People v. Tubbs, 147 Mich. 1.

¶ 287. In a prosecution for assault with intent to kill, respondent requested an instruction that if respondent, under all the circumstances to which he testified, honestly believed he was in danger of his life or great bodily harm, and that his act was necessary, he was not guilty. Held, that the refusal was proper, as respondent did not have the right to act under the circumstances to which he testified, but under the facts as they appeared from all the testimony; and his belief as to whether he was in jeopardy must not only be honest, but must be reasonable.—People v. Meert, 157 Mich. 93.

¶ 288. In a prosecution for assault with intent to commit the crime of murder where the respondent claimed that the assaulted party took out a knife, opened it, and attempted to strike him with it, an instruction ignoring the rule that respondent had the right to act upon the circumstances as they reasonably appeared to him is erroneous, where it in effect withdrew from the consideration of the jury the defense of self-defense in case the jury should find that the person assaulted had no knife.—People v. Wright, 144 Mich. 586.

¶ 289. On a trial for murder a charge that, if defendant carelessly shot to frighten the victim away as he tried to enter a portion of the dwelling of defendant, when there was nothing to justify a fear of bodily harm, the shooting would not be justifiable as done in self-defense, is not error in connection with other charges limiting a conviction to manslaughter.—People v. Coughlin, 67 Mich. 466.

¶ 290. Where the defense to a charge of murder is that the act was committed in self-defense, the purpose to kill not being so much in issue as the necessity of killing for self-protection, an unqualified instruction to the jury that, if the defendant purposed to take life, the crime was murder, is erroneous.—Burden v. People, 26 Mich. 162.

¶ 291. In a prosecution for assault with intent to do great bodily harm, an instruction that if defendant's belief as to the necessity of force arose from want of courage and from cowardice unwarrantable under the circumstances, he would not be justified on the ground of self-defense, is erroneous. The inquiry is not as to respondent's courage or cowardice, but whether, under all the circumstances of the assault as it appeared to him, he honestly believed he was in danger of his life or great bodily harm, and that it was necessary to do what he did in order to save himself from such danger.—People v. Lennon, 71 Mich. 298.

¶ 292. In a prosecution for murder it appeared that respondent, when attacked, was talking in the highway with a neighbor, whose person and horse were the only objects behind which he could seek shelter, and that his house was near by. Held, that it was error to refuse to charge that if respondent, by attempting to reach his house, would be more endangered from his assailant's gun, he was not obliged to seek its shelter, and that he was not required to shield himself behind his neighbor's body or horse.—People v. Macard, 73 Mich. 15.

¶ 293. Where the question is whether the deceased or the accused was the aggressor, the jury should have been instructed that if deceased was quarrelsome, or had made threats against respondent, or entertained any vindictive feeling against him, or had a motive for assailing him, these facts were to be considered, and that, if respondent did not begin the affray, but stood in fear upon the defensive, and deceased, in an angry and violent manner attacked respondent, who, fearing an attack, took out his pocket-knife, and, backing away from deceased, endeavored to avoid a conflict and warning deceased, the deceased following and grappling with him in disregard of the warning, and respondent acting upon the belief—arising from all the circumstances as they appeared to him that he was in danger of his life or of great bodily harm, used the knife, then respondent should be acquitted.—People v. Harris, 95 Mich. 87.

¶ 294. A prosecution for murder should have gone to the jury on the theory of justifiable homicide, where accused, against whom no probable cause for arrest existed, had fired a gun in resisting arrest and killed a citizen who was endeavoring by stopping passers-by to detect the perpetrators of recent burglaries.—People v. Burt, 51 Mich. 199.

¶ 295. In a trial for assault with intent to do great bodily harm less than the crime of murder, where the court instructed in one paragraph that it was the duty of defendant to retreat if he could do so with safety, and in another paragraph that defendant had a right to act on the facts as they appeared to him, failure of the court to instruct that defendant's actions were to be judged in the light of the circumstances as they appeared to him, was not error.—People v. Robinson, 152 Mich. 41.

¶ 296. In a trial for assault with intent to do great bodily harm less than the crime of murder, where defendant's own testimony shows that he sought out his victim rather than that he was attempting to escape from him, failure to instruct that defendant's acts were to be judged in the light of the circumstances as they appeared to him, was not error.—People v. Robinson, 152 Mich. 41.

¶ 297. Two persons had an altercation in front of an interurban station, went down the street to fight and returned without fighting. The altercation continued and the defendant went into the waiting room to remove his coat preparatory to a fight in the country and stated that he intended to fight. On coming out of the station deceased called him a vile name and he struck deceased a blow resulting in death. Defendant testified that deceased appeared to be about to strike him and that he struck the blow on account of his fear, but such evidence was contradicted. Held, an instruction on self-defense stating the law as to the right of a person to resist an anticipated assault, detailing the facts and the evidence of the defendant, stating it was for the jury to determine whether the defendant honestly believed he was in danger of great bodily harm and that it was necessary to strike the blow, is not inappropriate as leaving the jury to infer that the defendant was at least guilty of manslaughter.—People v. Sauerbier, 173 Mich. 521.

¶ 298. Under a plea of self-defense in a prosecution for murder, and evidence in support of such plea, a charge that "if the person assailed honestly believes his or her life in danger or that he may suffer or that she may suffer serious bodily harm, he has a right to resist even to the taking of the life of his assailant. The person assailed is to be judged by the circumstances and conditions as they honestly appear to her at the time," and a charge that "if you find from the evidence that the defendant had reasonable cause to believe that the deceased was about to strike her with a knife in the vestibule of the house at the time and in the manner described by her, she was not bound to flee, but had a right to defend herself from such threatened attack," held to fairly safeguard the rights of the accused upon that phase of the case. —People v. Cutler, 197 Mich. 6.

§ 80. ——On degree and effect of proof.

See also ante ¶ 123.

General charges on burden of proof and reasonable doubt, see Indictment, IX, E.

Instructions on degree and effect of proof in general, see Indictment, IX, E.

¶ 299. An instruction in a trial for homicide that to warrant a conviction the circumstances should fully preclude all possibility that any other person could have committed the crime is properly refused.—People v. Foley, 64 Mich. 148.

¶ 300. If, in a prosecution for murder it has appeared that an axe with which the murder was committed was found in the snow with no tracks leading to it, that the person who committed the crime threw the axe, and that it could have been thrown from a path near where the murder was done; but there is evidence that the prisoner, a woman, could not have thrown it so far, it is error to refuse an instruction that if the axe was thrown so far as to satisfy the jury that respondent could not have thrown it, then the jury should be satisfied that she was not guilty, and to instruct the jury that the fact should be weighed and "would be a strong circumstance" against her being guilty.—People v. Peterson, 93 Mich. 27.

§ 81. ——On included offenses.

See also ante ¶ 260.

Charge as to included and lesser offenses in general, see Indictment, IX, E.

¶ 301. Where, in a prosecution for murder, there was evidence from which the jury might have found that respondent had no malice against deceased, but that he, after being attacked by deceased, fired the fatal shot in the heat of passion and in the excitement and confusion caused by the assault, an instruction should have been given defining the offense of manslaughter and instructing the jury that if warranted by the testimony it might convict of the lesser offense.—People v. Palmer, 96 Mich. 580.

¶ 302. In a prosecution under an information charging assault with intent to kill and murder and an assault with intent to do great bodily harm, refusal of a request to charge that the jury could convict on either of these counts and find defendant guilty of assault and battery or acquit, was held erroneous.—People v. Howard, 179 Mich. 478.

¶ 302a. Where an information for assault with intent to do great bodily harm less than the crime of murder, charges both an assault and an assault and battery, the crime of simple assault and battery is included, and it is reversible error for the trial court to charge the jury that defendant's acts could only be criminal on the highest charge, if at all.—People v. Durham, 170 Mich. 598.

§ 82. Verdict.

Directing verdict, see ante § 71.
Sufficiency of evidence to sustain verdict, see ante VII, C.
Criminal verdicts in general, see Indictment, IX, G.
Indictment for lesser degrees or offenses included within that charged, see ante §§ 41, 42.
Verdict for lesser crime as curing error pertaining to greater, see Indictment, XV.
Provisions as to ascertainment of degree, see Comp. L. 1915, § 15194.

¶ 303. A verdict of guilty of murder generally without specifying whether of the first or second degree, is erroneous.—Tully v. People, 6 Mich. 273.

¶ 304. A verdict of guilty of murder in the first degree is a compliance with How. St. § 9077, requiring that the jury ascertain the degree, though rendered pursuant to an instruction correct in law that if convicted at all accused must be found guilty in the first degree. Such a verdict is not equivalent to the court's having ascertained the degree.—People v. Repke, 103 Mich. 459.

¶ 305. Under section 11472, Comp. Laws 1897, the jury must, unless respondent is convicted by confession, ascertain in their verdict whether the murder was in the first or second degree; and the failure to fix the degree of the crime is fatal, although the charge was murder in the first degree, and the court instructed the jury that respondent was guilty of "murder in the first degree, or not guilty of the crime charged," and the verdict was "guilty as charged."—People v. Clark, 155 Mich. 647.

¶ 306. A verdict of guilty of an "assault with intent to kill" amounts to no more than a finding that respondent was guilty of a mere assault, which is a misdemeanor and not a felony.—Wilson v. People, 24 Mich. 410.

¶ 307. On an indictment for assault with intent to murder, a verdict of guilty of assault with intent to kill, that not being known as a crime, cannot be construed as a finding that respondent was guilty of anything more than an assault and battery.—Wright v. People, 33 Mich. 300.

§ 83. Sentence and punishment.

Verdicts and specification therein of the degree or grade of the crime, see ante § 82.
Sentence and judgment in criminal cases in general, see Indictment, XI.
Commitment for imprisonment, see Indictment, XII.
Errors cured by sentence and judgment, see Indictment, XV.
Sentences defective because insufficiently supported by indictment or information, see Indictment, XI, XVI.
Review of judgment and trial on writ of error or otherwise, see Indictment, XIV-XVII.
General law of punishment for crime, see Crimes, I, E.
Former acquittal or conviction as bar, see Crimes, I, D.
Certificate of commitment, description of crime or degree, see Arrest ¶ 110.
Statutory provisions as to punishments, see Comp. L. 1915, §§ 15192, 15193, 15201 et seq.
Punishment for attempt to murder by poisoning, drowning or strangling, see Comp. L. 1915, § 15204.
Punishment for assault with intent to murder, see Comp. L. 1915, § 15205.
Punishment for assault with weapons with intent to kill or maim in perpetration of robbery or attempted robbery, see Comp. L. 1915, §§ 15206, 15207.
Punishment for poisoning food, drink, medicine, or wells with intent to kill, see Comp. L. 1915, § 15218.
Punishment for assault with intent to do great bodily harm less than murder, see Comp. L. 1915, § 15227.

¶ 308. Where a jury does not find that a crime is in the first degree, it is error for the judge to punish it as if it were.—People v. Hall, 48 Mich. 482.

¶ 309. Entry of judgment in a murder case may properly be amended a month after it was made, to show that the verdict was for murder in the first degree, and to give the sentence correctly.—People v. Bemis, 51 Mich. 422.

¶ 310. Upon a conviction of murder in the second degree, the court may sentence accused to life imprisonment, and need not fix the maximum and minimum sentence.—People v. Blake, 157 Mich. 533.

HONESTY to HUNTING.

Cross-References.

Honesty—
Libel or slander of honest reputation, see Libel.
Character of person for trust, see Trusts, V; Receivers, II, A; Estates of Decedents, III; Guardianship, § 10.
Presumption as to honesty, see Evidence § 49.
Trades or exchanges, see Exchange of Property.
Sales and warranties of horses, see Sales.
Damages for breach of sale or warranty, see Damages.
Admissibility of lay and expert opinions concerning horses, see Evidence §§ 230, 268, 275; Indictment, VIII, B.

Horse Racing—
See Crimes, II; Indictment; Agriculture; Exhibitions; Gambling Contracts.
Horses—
Law of animals in general, see Animals.
Duty and negligence in driving, see Highways, XIII.
Duties and liabilities towards drivers respecting safety of way, see Highways, XII.
Liability of railroads for injuries to horses or drivers, see Railroads, VIII.
Liability of street railways, see Street Railways, IV.
Liability of master towards servant or towards third person respecting use of horses, see Master and Servant, III, IV.
Hospitals—
See Asylums and Hospitals.
Hospital as violation of building restriction, see Buildings § 17.
Hostile Claims—
See Adverse Possession; Easements § 11 et seq., § 35.
Interpleader of claimants, see Interpleader.
Intervention by claimant, see Parties; and see also specific topics, e. g., Attachment, XI; Executions, XI; Garnishment, XI.
Under or against levies or liens, see Attachment; Executions; Garnishment; Creditors' Suits; Fraudulent Conveyances; Chattel Mortgages; Mortgages; Liens; Taxes; Notice and Record of Title.
Priorities, see foregoing cross-references.
Hostile Witnesses—
Mode of examining, see Examination of Witnesses § 15.
Weight and credibility of witness, see Witnesses, VI; Evidence, X; Indictment, VIII, C.
Contradiction or impeachment of one's own witness, see Witnesses, VI, D.
Right to have prosecution call witnesses, see Indictment, IX, B.
Hotchpot—
Adjustment of shares on distribution, see Estates of Decedents § 365.
Hotels—
See Inns.
Hot Water—
Liability for injuries caused by persons falling or stepping into hot or scalding water, see Highways, XII, G; Master and Servant, III.
Hours of Labor—
Regulation as class legislation, see Constitutional Law § 218.
Under contracts of service, see Master and Servant, II.
Under public employment, see Officers.
House; Houses—
Of disorder or ill fame, see Crimes, II; Indictment.
Of prostitution or assignation, see Crimes, II; Indictment.
Of worship or public assemblage, crime of disturbing, see Crimes, II; Indictment.
Of Good Shepherd for detention of girls, see Incompetents and Delinquents; Habeas Corpus.
Killing in defense of house as justified, see Homicide §§ 24, 27.
Houses of Correction—
In general, see Reformatories; Prisons and Jails.
Proper place for imprisonment for crime, see Crimes § 29.
Housebreaking—
See Crimes, II; Indictment.
As trespass, see Trespass.
In service of process, see Process, II; Sheriffs, IV.
Household Goods and Effects—
Assets of estate and widow's allowance, see Estates of Decedents, V.
Exempt from execution, see Exemptions.
Separate property of wife, see Husband and Wife, II, C.
Construction of words of description in will, see Wills, VI.
Householders—
Persons entitled to exemptions or homesteads, see Exemptions; Homesteads.
House Moving—
Right to use streets and highways, see Highways §§ 174, 176.
House of Representatives—
See Constitutional Law; Elections; Officers; State of Michigan.
Hucksters—
Regulations and licensing, see Licenses; Commerce; Constitutional Law.
Hunting—
See Fish and Game; Trespass.

HUSBAND A

TREATS of the relationship of husband a abilities incident thereto, excluding the marri riage), the liability for Breach of Promise to of the marriage by divorce (see Divorce). The in the topic so named. Other matters which ha in the cross-references throughout the body of

Analy

I. Mutual rights and liabilities.

§ 1. In general.
§ 2. Antenuptial contracts,
§ 3. ——Evidence to establ
§ 4. Contracts and dealings

II. Property rights between them.

A. In General.

§ 5. In general.
§ 6. Title or interest in rea
§ 7. Ownership, possession
§ 8. ——Rights in wife's c
§ 9. ——Wife's rights in e
§ 10. ——Disposal of leaseh
§ 11. Rights in personalty j
§ 12. Gifts and transfers to § 13. Services and earnings
§ 14. ——Consent, assignm
§ 15. ——Husband's agreen
§ 16. Right of wife to condu
§ 17. Rights of husband as § 18. Burden of proof, pres
§ 19. ——Sufficiency of evi

B. Entireties and Cotenancies.

§ 20. In general; creation b
§ 21. ——Deed not designa
§ 22. ——Deed to self and § 23. Deed from one spouse
§ 24. Life estate as entiret
§ 25. Interest in purchase
§ 26. Nature and incidents
§ 27. Survivorship as incide
§ 28. ——Survivor's right i
§ 29. Right to rents, issues
§ 30. Alienation or incumb
§ 31. ——Release or transf
§ 32. ——Liability on cont
§ 33. Subjection for debts
§ 34. Effect of divorce on e
§ 35. Presumptions and evi
§ 36. Estoppel to deny or q

C. Separate Property of Wife.

§ 37. In general.
§ 38. What constitutes separate property.
§ 39. ——Damages for personal injuries.
§ 40. ——Debt due from her husband.
§ 41. ——Earnings and proceeds of her business or trade.
§ 42. ——Conveyances of real property to wife.
§ 43. ——Improvements by husband on wife's land.
§ 44. Right to hold mortgage against husband's lands.
§ 45. Rights of wife to deal with and dispose of her property.
§ 46. Commingling with husband's property; estoppel to assert.
§ 47. Right of husband to charge or incumber.
§ 48. ——Reimbursement for payment of her debt or loan.
§ 49. Occupancy of wife's lands by husband.
§ 50. Accounting between spouses respecting separate property.
§ 51. Estoppel or laches to deny separate property.
§ 52. Presumptions and evidence as to ownership.
§ 53. Questions of law and fact.

D. Conveyances to Each Other.

§ 54. In general.
§ 55. Necessity and sufficiency of consideration.
§ 56. ——Wife's services as housekeeper.
§ 57. Fraud, overreaching or illegality in transfers.
§ 58. ——Transfers on consideration of resuming cohabitation.
§ 59. Burden of proof, presumptions and evidence.
§ 60. ——Evidence of fraud or coercion.

III. Contract rights and liabilities of husband toward third persons.

§ 61. In general.
§ 62. Liability for wife's support and necessaries.
§ 63. ——Expenses of wife's last sickness and funeral.
§ 64. Agency of wife for husband.
§ 65. Liability on wife's contracts.
§ 66. ——Necessity for notice withdrawing his credit.
§ 67. Liability for money loaned wife without his knowledge.
§ 68. Liability for antenuptial debts of wife.
§ 69. Estoppel to hold husband for wife's debts.
§ 70. Right to furnish services of wife to third person.
§ 71. Presumptions and evidence.
§ 72. ——Evidence as to liability for necessaries.

IV. Contract rights and liabilities of wife toward third persons.

A. Legal Capacity and Disabilities; Statutory Changes.

§ 73. In general.
§ 74. Coverture as personal privilege.
§ 75. Power to contract.
§ 76. Necessity and sufficiency of consideration to wife.
§ 77. ——Conveyance or transfer of property as consideration.
§ 78. ——Future property of wife as consideration.
§ 79. ——Abstaining from litigation affecting wife's property.
§ 80. Relation of contract to wife's separate property.

§ 81. ——Incidental or indirect benefits to l terests.
§ 82. Liability to assignees and bona fide hol
§ 83. Capacity to receive and hold real prope
§ 84. Capacity to receive, hold and enforce s
§ 85. Capacity to act as agent or trustee.
§ 86. Authority to give bonds.
§ 87. Power to enter into arbitrations.
§ 88. Rights and status when husband aband
§ 89. Power to admit liability.
§ 90. Estoppel to assert disability.
§ 91. Equitable relief from default or failure
§ 92. Burden of proof and presumptions.
§ 93. ——As to consideration moving to wife
§ 94. Admissibility and sufficiency of evidenc
§ 95. Questions of law and fact and instructic

B. AGENCY OF HUSBAND FOR WIFE.

§ 96. In general; existence of agency and n ization.
§ 97. Limitations and scope of agency.
§ 98. Authority respecting particular acts or
§ 99. ——To carry on business.
§ 100. ——To execute negotiable instruments
ing to her business.
§ 101. ——To deal with wife's trust propertie
§ 102. Improvements and expenditures on wi
§ 103. Wife as undisclosed principal.
§ 104. Notice to or knowledge of husband to § 105. Adoption and ratification.
§ 106. Liability for husband's debts in course
§ 107. Liability for husband's unauthorized a
§ 108. Estoppel to deny or assert agency.
§ 109. Burden of proof and presumptions.
§ 110. Admissibility and sufficiency of eviden
§ 111. Questions of law and fact and instructi

C. PARTICULAR CONTRACTS AND DEALINGS.

§ 112. Contracts for family support and hous
§ 113. ——For attendance of physicians and r
§ 114. Debts for property or services furnish § 115. ——For attorney's services.
§ 116. Liability for husband's debts.
§ 117. Wife as joint debtor with her husban
§ 118. Liability as surety, indorser, or accom
§ 119. ——Illegality of principal's agreement § 120. Liability of wife for improvements on with husband.
§ 121. Right to carry on business in her own
§ 122. ——Membership in firm.
§ 123. ——Husband and wife as partners.
§ 124. Rights against husband's firm or busin
§ 125. Right to compensation for services furn
§ 126. ——Presumptions and evidence.
§ 127. Rights under joint lease.

§ 128. Effect of husband's fraud on wife's contract rights.
§ 129. Estoppel or bar of right.

D. Conveyances, Transfers and Charges on Separate Property.

§ 130. In general.
§ 131. Requisites, form and execution.
§ 132. ——Necessity for and effect of husband's joinder.
§ 133. ——Defects and objections, and estoppel to question validity.
§ 134. Sufficiency of consideration to wife.
§ 135. Assignment of insurance payable to wife.
§ 136. Married woman's conveyances as guardian, representative or trustee.
§ 137. Power and right to mortgage.
§ 138. ——Effect of husband's joinder.
§ 139. Effect of joinder in husband's deed.
§ 140. Effect of joinder in husband's mortgage.
§ 141. Liability on covenants for title.
§ 142. ——Where joinder was to bar dower or homestead and not to pass separate estate.
§ 143. ——Presumptions and evidence.
§ 144. Charges on separate estate.
§ 145. ——Improvements on separate property.
§ 146. ——Family necessaries and household expenses.
§ 147. ——Wife's last sickness and funeral expenses.
§ 148. ——Interests and estates which may be charged.

V. Torts by and against.

A. In General.

§ 149. Husband's liability for wife's torts.
§ 150. Husband's tort in use or control of wife's lands.
§ 151. Wife's liability for husband's tort.
§ 152. Torts against each other.
§ 153. Actionable torts to property.
§ 154. Fraud and deceit.
§ 155. Slander or libel.
§ 156. Actionable personal injury to wife.
§ 157. ——Cost of medical attendance and incidental expense.
§ 158. ——Injuries suable by husband.
§ 159. Presumptions and evidence.
§ 160. Questions of law and fact and instructions.

B. Criminal Conversation and Alienation.

§ 161. Criminal conversation.
§ 162. ——Pleadings and issues.
§ 163. ——Presumptions and evidence.
§ 164. ——Of condonation and connivance.
§ 165. ——Questions for jury and instructions.
§ 166. Alienation of affections.
§ 167. ——Defenses, justification or excuse.
§ 168. ——Pleadings and issues and variance.
§ 169. ——Burden of proof and presumptions.
§ 170. ——Admissibility of evidence.

§ 171. ——Admissibility on affection c
§ 172. ——Weight and sufficiency of e
§ 173. ——Questions of law and fact a

VI. Actions and procedure by and against.

§ 174. Capacity to sue and defend.
§ 175. Right of deserted wife to sue.
§ 176. Joinder of husband and wife as
§ 177. ——Actions concerning separat
§ 178. ——Actions for assertion or de rights.
§ 179. Joinder of husband and wife as
§ 180. Actions against each other.
§ 181. ——Contract actions against e
§ 182. ——Replevin against husband f
§ 183. Pleading, evidence and trial pra

VII. Separation and separate maintenance.

§ 184. In general.
§ 185. Separation agreements.
§ 186. ——Invalidity for fraud, mistak
§ 187. Avoidance or revocation by su
§ 188. Procedure to enforce separation
§ 189. Separate maintenance suits.
§ 190. ——Effect of existing agreemer
§ 191. ——Pleadings and evidence.
§ 192. ——Judgment and decree; amc
§ 193. ——Granting divorce on separ
§ 194. ——Liens on realty to secure e
§ 195. ——Modification of decree.
§ 196. Criminal liability and prosecut

Marriage and capacity of parties for marriage, see Marriage.
Divorce, see Divorce.
Annulment of marriage, see Marriage, IV.
Breach of promise to marry, see Breach of Promise to Marry.

I. MUTUAL RIGHTS AND LIABILITIES.

§ 1. In general.
Antenuptial contracts, conveyances and settlements see post §§ 2, 3.
Contracts and dealings with each other after marriage, see post § 4.
Property rights between husband and wife, see post II.
Torts against each other, see post § 152.
Actions against each other, see post §§ 180-182.
Separation and separate maintenance, see post VII.
Legitimacy as presumed from marriage relation, see Bastards § 1.
Husband's domicile as domicile of wife, see Domicile § 5.

§ 1. A wi her husband legal remed
Buckingham

§ 2. Antenu settl

Evidence to Liability of of wife,
Necessity fo wife to erty br
see post
Antenuptial
in stat edgmen Antenuptial between tracts §
Jointure o
Dower Breach of Promis

Fairness and adequacy of consideration for antenuptial release of dower, see also Dower § 17.
Antenuptial mortgages, contracts and conveyances respecting homesteads, see Homesteads § 51.
Effect on widow's allowance of antenuptial agreement releasing all rights to share in husband's estate, see Estates of Decedents ¶ 348.
Sufficiency of evidence to show delivery of antenuptial contract, see Execution of Instruments ¶ 275.
Validity of antenuptial contracts, see Comp. L. 1915, § 11488.

¶ 2. Where the parties entering into an antenuptial contract are of mature years and have a full understanding of the meaning of the instrument, the agreement, if based on a sufficient consideration, and in the absence of fraud is valid and enforceable and is not against public policy.—Hockenberry v. Donovan, 170 Mich. 370.

¶ 3. Marriage alone is a sufficient consideration to support a marriage settlement.—Hockenberry v. Donovan, 170 Mich. 370.

¶ 4. Where in an antenuptial contract there is a mutual agreement to waive all interest in the property of each other, a good consideration is afforded.—Hockenberry v. Donovan, 170 Mich. 370.

¶ 5. By a parol antenuptial contract, a husband agreed to make the wife beneficiary of a certain insurance policy, and the wife agreed to make a will in favor of the husband. The husband executed his part, and the wife offered to perform hers, but the husband declined to accept her offer on the ground of her alleged mental incompetency. The wife had not been adjudged insane, and the evidence tended to show that at the time of offering to make the will she was mentally competent. Held, the contract was binding on the husband, and the substitution of a beneficiary by him in the place of the wife was invalid.—Andrews v. Lavery, 159 Mich. 26.

¶ 6. In prenuptial contracts a wife barred herself from all participation in the estate of her prospective husband as his wife or widow, and from all interests which should or might be vested in her by virtue of the marriage, and further released all interest in his property, whether personal or real estate, statutory or dower. Held, the wife's contention could not be sustained that by these contracts only her dower and homestead rights were cut off.—Hockenberry v. Donovan, 170 Mich. 370.

¶ 7. An antenuptial agreement by which, in consideration of $5 and of love and affection, a prospective wife released all claims which she "as widow" might have in her husband's estate, "whether in right of dower, or as her distributive share in the personalty, or otherwise, under the laws of the state," was held insufficient to bar her from sharing in his personalty where, on the date of such agreement, he made a writing in which he stated that he intended to provide for her future consistent with his ability in a financial way, and where, though he afterwards conveyed to her a life-estate in his homestead, he made no provision for her support and left her nothing in his will.—In re Pulling's Estate, 93 Mich. 275.

§ 3. ——Evidence to establish.

¶ 8. In a bill by a widow to have determined the ownership of an insurance certificate taken out by her deceased husband in favor of his mother, the evidence is insufficient to establish an antenuptial agreement to transfer the certificate to the complainant, after the marriage, where the testimony of the witnesses is simply that the deceased made declarations of a purpose so to transfer it.—Franken v. Supreme Court Independent Order of Foresters, 152 Mich. 502.

¶ 9. Complainant prior to her marriage executed with her prospective husband two contracts releasing her dower and all interests in her husband's property. The first contract was drawn by a reputable attorney and was executed in the presence of a justice of the peace, who had no interest in the matter, one of them testifying that the husband told complainant that she must sign the contract or the marriage would not take place, and both of them testifying that the contract was read over and fully explained to complainant. The only evidence of fraud was that of complainant and her sister, whom complainant desired to inherit her property, and who was greatly interested in setting the contracts aside. Complainant and her sister were not examined in open court, but their depositions were taken at the hearing. The second contract was drawn and executed at the office of another reputable attorney who testified that complainant seemed to be fully aware of the effect of the same. Complainant was forty-five years old at the time of the marriage. Held, the trial court judge was justified by the evidence in finding that the contracts were not obtained from complainant by fraud.—Hockenberry v. Donovan, 170 Mich. 370.

¶ 10. In a bill brought to set aside a conveyance of land by a husband to his third wife two days before their wedding, and to nullify the substitution of her as beneficiary under his fraternal insurance certificates, made at the same time, held, that the testimony of a woman of doubtful character that defendant slowly poisoned the insured and "bossed" him about the house after their marriage, was not sufficient to establish undue influence as against the testimony of the scrivener and others that the husband knew what he was doing in making the transfers.—Lutz v. Rohn, 167 Mich. 318; Spanier v. Same, Id.

¶ 11. A widow's claim made as an offset against her husband for services alleged to have been rendered before their marriage is not supported by her testimony after his death giving exact days and amounts without having kept any memoranda, and otherwise rendered improbable by reason of her not having ever asked him for payment, though he was able and she was without means, and by reason of his having advanced money for or to her afterwards and her having failed to assert the claim in other litigation where it would have been a proper offset.—Moore v. Smith, 103 Mich. 387.

¶ 12. On a bill by the widow of a decedent for a decree allowing her permission to file her election under the statute instead of under the will, on the ground that she had been fraudulently induced not to file her election under the statute until the expiration of the time limit, and where the defense was an antenuptial agreement under which the husband and wife mutually agreed not to claim any portion of the estate of the other, after the death of either one, evidence held sufficient to show that such antenuptial agreement was made and was understandingly made.—Lamb v. Lamb, 192 Mich. 466.

§ 4. Contracts and dealings with each other after marriage.

Separation agreements, see post §§ 185, 186.
Contract actions against each other, see post § 181.
Husband's contracts with third persons, see post III.
Wife's contracts with third persons, see post IV.
General requisites and sufficiency of considerations, see Contracts, V.
Implied contract arising from relationship of parties, see Implied Contracts §§ 10, 11.
Effect of postnuptial release to husband of wife's expectancy in his estate "by or under laws of" specified state, where he has proprety in other states, see Descent ¶ 51.
Effect on widow's allowance of postnuptial agreement wherein widow released all rights to husband's estate, see Estates of Decedents ¶ 350.
Effect of separation agreement releasing rights to husband's estate on widow's allowance, see Estates of Decedents ¶ 349.
Contract between wife and guardian of husband, see Comp. L. 1915, § 11467.

¶ 13. A husband and wife can contract with each other when the contract is not precluded by public policy.—Randall v. Randall, 37 Mich. 563.

¶ 14. At common law the husband as well as the wife was disabled from entering into a mutual contract. The same rule held in equity, except in regard to separate estates, and it applied in a measure to them.—Jenne v. Marble, 37 Mich. 319.

¶ 15. It has never been held in Michigan that husband and wife may contract with each other generally or make contracts enforceable at law that could not formerly have been enforced in equity, concerning her separate estate.—Jenne v. Marble, 37 Mich. 319.

¶ 16. A man leased to his wife certain farms, including the family homestead, for a rent that could not be apportioned, and sold her certain animals that were used on the homestead without so distinguishing them as to take them out of the homestead exemption. The lease contained clauses of eviction. The wife's contract to pay was executory, and she bound herself by her personal covenant. Held, that it could not be enforced by an action at the common law.—Jenne v. Marble, 37 Mich. 319.

II. PROPERTY RIGHTS BETWEEN THEM.

A. IN GENERAL.

§ 5. In general.

Title or interests in realty adverse to that of other spouse, see post § 6.
Ownership, possession and disposal of personalty, see post §§ 7-10.
Rights in personalty jointly owned, see post § 11.
Gifts and transfers to each other, see post § 12.
Services and earnings of wife, see post §§ 13-15.
Right of wife to conduct business without husband's consent, see post § 16.
Right of husband as "head of family," see post § 17.
Burden of proof, presumptions and evidence, see post §§ 18, 19.
Entireties and cotenancies, see post II, B.
Separate property of wife, see post II, C.
Conveyances to each other, see post II, D.
Mutual rights other than property rights, see ante I.
Actions against each other, see post § 181.
Agency of husband for wife, see post IV, B.
Agency of wife for husband, see post § 64.
Legal capacity and disabilities of wife in contractual relations with third persons, see post IV, A.
Expectancies in marital estates as vested rights, see Constitutional Law § 246.
Right to dower, see Dower.
Beneficiaries in fraternal benefit policy, see Fraternal Associations, IV.
Preference of spouse as creditor, see Fraudulent Conveyances §§ 52, 53.
Application of exemption statutes as between husband and wife, see Exemptions § 9.
Denial of equity to husband because of part in wrongdoing, see also Equity ¶ 17.

Widow's right to allowance out of estate, see Estates of Decedents, V, D.
Priority between wife and execution purchasers against husband holding legal title to wife's property, see Executions § 34.
Property rights of married woman when abandoned by her husband, see Comp. L. 1915, §§ 11451-11453.
Disability of one spouse living in bigamous relations to inherit from the other lawful spouse, see Comp. L. 1915, §§ 14618, 14619.

¶ 17. The common-law disabilities of the wife are not removed, so far as relates to her interest in the husband's property, by the statutes giving her full powers of control in respect to her own property.—Ring v. Burt, 17 Mich. 465.

¶ 18. In the enforcement of a wife's contracts with her husband in regard to her separate estate, it is not necessary in Michigan that she be represented by a trustee.—Randall v. Randall, 37 Mich. 563.

¶ 19. With respect to the husband not separated from the wife the marital dwelling in which the wife resides is not "the house of another." Our statutes for the protection of the rights of married women do not operate upon the family relations, or affect the marital unity, or take from the husband his marital rights, except as they relate to property, nor do they relieve him from responsibilities, except as they relate to the wife's contracts and debts.—Snyder v. People, 26 Mich. 106, per Cooley, J.

§ 6. Title or interest in realty adverse to that of other spouse.

Lien on realty of husband to secure enforcement of payment to wife in separate maintenance suit, see post § 194.
Proof of adverse possession by husband's grantees against wife, see Adverse Possession § 50.
Right of married woman to sell, convey or lease her real property after desertion by her husband, see Comp. L. 1915, § 11451.

¶ 20. A husband cannot acquire a tax title to land held by his wife under contract to purchase; such acquisition will be held to be for the wife and not to defeat the right under a prior mortgage held by a third person.—Simons v. Rood, 129 Mich. 345.

¶ 21. A married woman who is in possession with her husband of land in which the latter has a life estate, cannot acquire a tax title which she can assert adversely to the life tenant or the remainder-man.—Myers v. Myers, 186 Mich. 215.

§ 7. Ownership, possession and disposal of personalty.

Rights in wife's choses in action, see post § 8.
Wife's rights in exempt property, see post § 9.
Disposal of leasehold, see post § 10.
Rights in personalty jointly owned, see post § 11.
Commingling separate property with husband's property, see post § 46.
Right to rents, profits and issues of estate held by the entireties, see post § 29.
Power to make testamentary disposition of personalty, see Wills, I.
What law governs marital rights in personalty, see Conflict of Laws § 24.
Wife's rights in separate property, see Comp. L. 1915, § 11475.
Right of wife to dispose of personalty when abandoned by her husband, see Comp. L. 1915, § 11451.

¶ 22. A transfer or gift of personal property by a husband during his lifetime is not void as to his widow under Comp. L. 1897, §§ 9300, 9301, unless done with fraudulent intent to prevent its passing into his estate after his death.—Trabbic v. Trabbic, 142 Mich. 387.

¶ 23. A wife's assent to the disposal by her husband of his unexempt personalty during his lifetime is not essential, she having no vested interest during his life.—Trabbic v. Trabbic, 142 Mich. 387.

¶ 24. A wife cannot in leaving home on account of the husband's misconduct and ill-treatment take household goods of the homestead without the husband's consent.—Johnson v. Johnson, 125 Mich. 671.

¶ 25. Where a husband, in the absence of his wife, and without her knowledge or consent, takes, in his own name, securities for the loan of her money, he cannot, on the ground that during her life-time she had suffered them to stand in his name, and that they thereby became his property, defend against a bill brought by her administrator to compel the assignment and delivery.—Leland v. Whitaker, 23 Mich. 324.

¶ 26. Wearing apparel, purchased by a married woman with her husband's money or on his credit, belongs to him, and is recoverable by him from third persons.—Smith v. Abair, 87 Mich. 62.

§ 8. ——Rights in wife's choses in action.

Damages for personal injuries to wife as her separate property, see post § 39.

¶ 27. At common law all the wife's choses in action, if reduced to possession during the coverture, belonged to the husband, though on his death before recovery by him they survived to her.—Berger v. Jacobs, 21 Mich. 215.

§ 9. ——Wife's rights in exempt property.

¶ 28. A wife has special statutory rights in such household goods as would be exempt from execution; and if her husband leaves her he cannot get possession of them by writ of replevin, even if they consist of books, a shotgun and a revolver.—Smith v. Smith, 52 Mich. 538.

¶ 29. If a pound-master shall unlawfully seize and convert an exempt animal belonging to the husband, the wife may sue in trover for the value.—Ingersoll v. Gage, 47 Mich. 121.

¶ 30. Where one who has sold to a husband goods that would be exempt as household property is subsequently garnished in respect thereof by the husband's creditors, and refuses to deliver them to the vendee, the vendee's wife may replevy them from him though the garnishment suit is still pending. —Hanselman v. Kegel, 60 Mich. 540.

§ 10. ——Disposal of leasehold.

¶ 31. A lessee can convey his interest as such without his wife's consent.—Tharp v. Allen, 46 Mich. 389.

§ 11. Rights in personalty jointly owned.

Fraud in securing joint bank account, see post ¶ 54.

Survivorship rights in bank joint account, see Banking § 6.

¶ 32. Where husband and wife have invested jointly, each paying half, and have taken securties in their joint names, the wife, on her husband's death, does not take the whole by right of survivorship; that right does not apply to personalty.—Wait v. Bovee, 35 Mich. 425.

§ 12. Gifts and transfers to each other.

Gifts of lands, see post II, D.

Conveyances to each other, see post II, D.

Statutory rights prevailing over gift by other spouse, see Gifts ¶ 95.

Transfers from one spouse to other with intent or effect to hinder or defraud creditors, see Fraudulent Conveyances §§ 47-49.

¶ 33. A wife may make a gift of her property to her husband.—Durfee v. McClurg, 6 Mich. 223; Penniman v. Perce, 9 Mich. 509; Jenne v. Marble, 37 Mich. 319.

¶ 34. The transfer of household goods by a husband to his wife is legal.—Goppelt v. Burgess, 132 Mich. 28.

¶ 35. Money advanced by a wife to her husband with the expectation that he should repay it, but without express agreement as to the time of repayment, will not be treated as a gift, unless under circumstances amounting to an estoppel.—Sykes v. City Sav. Bank, 115 Mich. 321.

¶ 36. A husband assigned to his wife a judgment recovered by him, but after her death he filed a claim against her estate for of claims wherein it appears that the claim has been filed by the husband.—Barnes v. Moore's Estate, 86 Mich. 585.

§ 14. ——Consent, assignment or relinquishment by husband.

Husband's agreement that wife's earning shall be her separate property, see post § 41, ¶ 125.

¶ 43. A married woman is entitled to the benefits of a contract by which she furnished board and care to another, where all of the supplies were provided by her, and the arrangement was entered into and carried out with the husband's consent.—Slack v. Norton, 111 Mich. 213.

¶ 44. A claim for board and room of a third person belongs to the husband, in the absence of an assignment to the wife, where he furnishes the provisions for the family, although he tells her she can have what she earns.—In re Burnham's Estate, 199 Mich. 326.

¶ 45. A married woman may make a binding contract with her parents to give her personal services in caring for them, and her husband may testify that he consented to the same, and it is not necessary that the parents know that the husband has consented.—Ashley v. Smith's Estate, 152 Mich. 197.

¶ 46. In an action by a husband as executor of his wife's estate on a claim of the wife against an estate for board, room, etc., furnished decedent, an instruction, that it was the claim of plaintiff that plaintiff's wife was the owner of the claim by reason of an arrangement made between them, that the only evidence thereof was the evidence of the husband that he said to his wife that "whatever she earned was hers," and that such words could not be extended beyond what she earned, which might include washing, ironing and mending, but not board and lodging if the evidence showed that the husband as head of the family supplied them, and as there was no evidence showing what the wife earned, she could not recover, held improperly refused.—In re Burnham's Estate, 199 Mich. 326.

¶ 47. Where a family engaged in the bill-posting business have formed a corporation for the conduct thereof, the husband is not entitled to relief on the ground that he is entitled to the earnings of the wife in such capacity, where he has for years recognized the wife's right to earn and disburse money, doing business with her himself as he would with a stranger.—Pearll v. Pearll Advertising Co., 162 Mich. 439; Pearll v. Pearll, Id.

§ 15. ——Husband's agreement to pay for services.

Public policy as to agreement to pay wife for services, see Contracts § 64, ¶ 262.

¶ 48. An agreement whereby a husband is to pay his wife annually a certain sum for her services as housekeeper is contrary to public policy and invalid as against creditors.—Michigan Trust Co. v. Chapin, 106 Mich. 384.

§ 16. Right of wife to conduct business without husband's consent.

¶ 49. Where a husband has the ability and stands ready to support his wife she has no legal right to conduct against his will a business of her own.—Root v. Root, 164 Mich. 638.

§ 17. Rights of husband as "head of family."

Rights of husband on occupancy of separate property as "head of family," see post ¶¶ 141, 144.

Rights and liabilities of husband toward third persons, see post IV.

Presumption as to foreign law regulating marital property rights, see Evidence § 59.

¶ 50. Where a family engaged in the bill-posting business have formed a corporation for the conduct thereof, the husband on being ousted from control of the corporation by his wife, cannot secure relief upon the ground that as head of the family he is entitled to control or at least share in the community property where the bill is not framed upon such theory.—Pearll v. Pearll Advertising Co., 162 Mich. 439; Pearll v. Pearll, Id.

¶ 51. In case of a joint lease to husband and wife, which does not come within the rules applicable to tenants in common, the husband's common-law rights as head of the household are important; the wife cannot stipulate to give any one a home in her husband's household.—Nolan v. Nolan, 78 Mich. 17.

§ 18. Burden of proof, presumptions and evidence.

Sufficiency of evidence as to gift, see post § 19.

Presumption that wife is employing her services for husband, see ante ¶ 40.

General law of evidence, see Evidence.

Pleading contract by one spouse and proving agreement with both as variance, see Contracts § 301.

Evidence as to ownership of stock in husband's name assigned to wife but remaining in his possession, see Corporations ¶ 1041.

Sufficiency of evidence as to debts owing by husband to wife or vice versa, see also Garnishment § 80.

Sufficiency in garnishment of evidence as to husband's or wife's ownership of debt owing, see Garnishment ¶ 238.

Ownership of debt or property as jury question in garnishment, see Garnishment § 82.

¶ 52. When a husband claims that a gift of personalty has been made to him by his wife, the burden of proof is upon him to establish that fact.—Durfee v. McClurg, 6 Mich. 223; Penniman v. Perce, 9 Mich. 509; Jenne v. Marble, 37 Mich. 319.

¶ 53. The rule that, if one gives another money at his request, the law will imply a promise to repay, applies, where there are no circumstances tending to show a different understanding, to a husband who receives money from his wife.—Sykes v. City Sav. Bank, 115 Mich. 321.

¶ 54. Evidence held insufficient to show fraud and undue influence on the part of a wife in inducing her husband to make his bank deposits payable to either or to the survivor.—Powell v. Pennock, 198 Mich. 573.

§ 19. ——Sufficiency of evidence as to gift.

¶ 55. The question of the sufficiency of evidence to establish a gift of personalty from a wife to her husband discussed by a divided court.—Penniman v. Perce, 9 Mich. 509.

¶ 56. Gift or purchase of personalty from wife to husband must be established by some other evidence than that of use and possession by him permitted by her. So held in a suit between the wife's administrator and the husband.—White v. Zane, 10 Mich. 333.

¶ 57. Open and visible change of possession can hardly be required to establish the fact of a gift of personalty from a husband to his wife when they are living together.—Davis v. Zimmerman, 40 Mich. 24.

¶ 58. Where the rights of creditors are involved, all the facts bearing on an alleged change of ownership of personalty from husband to wife should be admitted in evidence.—Judge v. Vogel, 38 Mich. 569; Carew v. Mathews, 49 Mich. 302.

¶ 59. Where a woman claims personal property as a gift from her husband, the only question is whether she establishes her right by a fair preponderance of evidence. But it is proper to consider the circumstances of the relation and the facility with which fraud may be perpetrated under its protection.—Davis v. Zimmerman, 40 Mich. 24.

¶ 60. A gift by a husband to his wife of his interest in a piano is not established, so as to subject it to levy on execution by a creditor of the wife, by evidence that, upon abandoning his home, he left the instrument in her possession, and that she took it with her when she changed her place of residence, where it appears that the piano was purchased for the use of a daughter, under a contract providing that the title should remain in the vendor until payment of the purchase price, and that it was not fully paid for.—Dawson v. Lindsay, 111 Mich. 200.

¶ 61. A man gave a chattel mortgage under which the mortgagee claimed certain articles which the mortgagor's wife testified that her husband had given her before its date. Held, that her testimony that her husband gave her specified articles could not be treated as stating a conclusion of law only, but that it averred the act of giving, and in the absence of qualifying testimony would justify a finding that a gift was made.—Davis v. Zimmerman, 40 Mich. 24.

B. ENTIRETIES AND COTENANCIES.

§ 20. In general; creation by joint deed.

See also post ¶¶ 80, 81.

Deed not designating grantees as husband and wife, see post § 21.

Deed to self and spouse as joint grantees, see post § 22.

Deed from one spouse to other of undivided half interest, see post § 23.

Life estate as entirety, see post § 24.

Interest in purchase contract, see post § 25.

Nature and incidents of estate by entirety, see post § 26.

Survivorship as incident of estate, see post §§ 27, 28.

Right to rents, issues and profits, see post § 29.

Alienation or incumbrance, see post §§ 30-32.

Subjection for debts of either spouse, see post § 33.

Effect of divorce on estate, see post § 34.

Presumptions and evidence as to estate, see post § 35.

Estoppel to deny or question estate, see post § 36.

Separate property of wife, see post II, C.

Estate held by entirety as property claimable as homestead, see Homesteads ¶ 27.

Creation and nature of tenancies in common and joint tenancies, see Tenants in Common, I.

Estates by the curtesy, see Curtesy.

Construction of deed to husband and wife with respect to estates passed, see Deeds § 44.

Statutory rule as to construction of estates granted to husband and wife, construction as estate by entirety, see Comp. L. 1915, §§ 11562, 11563.

Capacity of married woman to bind herself jointly with husband as to entirety or lands acquired as survivor and as to issues thereof, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 158.

¶ 62. To create an estate in entirety at common law, the unities of time, interest, and possession must be observed.—Pegg v. Pegg, 165 Mich. 228.

¶ 63. A husband and wife, under a joint deed to both, take as tenants by the entirety and not as joint-tenants.—In re Appeal of Lewis, 85 Mich. 340; Naylor v. Minock, 96 Mich. 182.

¶ 64. Under a deed of land to husband and wife they do not take by moieties, but each is seized of the entirety (arguendo).—Midgley v. Walker, 101 Mich. 583.

¶ 65. Husband and wife, to whom lands are conveyed by the same deed, are not tenants in common, or strictly joint tenants.—Fisher v. Provin, 25 Mich. 347; Aetna Ins. Co. v. Resh, 40 Mich. 241; Manwaring v. Powell, 40 Mich. 371; Roediger v. Wayne County Drain Com'r, 40 Mich. 745; Jacobs v. Miller, 50 Mich. 119; Vinton v. Beamer, 55 Mich. 559.

¶ 66. The married woman's act (How. St. § 6295) did not repeal by implication How. St. §§ 5560, 5561, as being inconsistent therewith so as to cause husband and wife to take as tenants in common under a deed to both.—Dowling v. Salliotte, 83 Mich. 131.

¶ 67. The dictum in Dowling v. Salliotte, 83 Mich. 131, that estates by entireties do not exist under our statutes, is overruled.—Auditor-General v. Fisher, 84 Mich. 128.

¶ 68. Where a husband and wife give a deed to land belonging to the husband with a contract back from the grantee that when certain payments are made the grantee, in order that the wife making payments should be protected from the dissolute habits of the husband, shall give them a deed and they then shall hold by the entireties on compliance with the contract the parties would take the title as agreed and the entire property would go to the survivor, and where the wife survived, the fact that she took a quit-claim deed form the grantee does not affect her rights.—Robson v. Townley, 176 Mich. 581.

§ 21. ——Deed not designating grantees as husband and wife.

Estate of wife in land deeded to her and her husband and their "assigns," see Deeds ¶ 70.

¶ 69. Where two persons hold land under a contract running to them jointly, they being in fact husband and wife, even though not designated as such, their interest is an entirety, and the husband's signature to a petition for a local improvement will not count in securing the signatures of a majority of resident property-holders unless his wife also signs.—Auditor-General v. Fisher, 84 Mich. 128.

¶ 70. A deed to a man and woman who are in fact husband and wife though not stated to be such in the deed creates an estate which one upon the other's death takes as survivor.—Dowling v. Salliotte, 83 Mich. 131.

§ 22. ——Deed to self and spouse as joint grantees.

¶ 71. A deed in which the grantor names himself and wife as joint grantees with the right of survivorship, creates an estate in common and not an estate by the entirety.—Wright v. Knapp, 188 Mich. 656. (Brooke and McAlvay, JJ., dissenting.)

¶ 72. A deed from a husband to himself and wife creates a tenancy in common, and not an estate by entirety.—Michigan State Bank of Eaton Rapids v. Kern, 189 Mich. 467.

§ 23. Deed from one spouse to other of undivided half interest.

Conveyances to each other in general, see post II, D.

¶ 73. Where a husband grants an undivided one-half interest in land to his wife, the wife is a tenant in common despite the insertion in the deed between the granting and habendum clauses of a clause stating that the purpose of the deed is to grant an estate in entirety by which the survivor shall have all the land.—Pegg v. Pegg, 165 Mich. 228.

§ 24. Life estate as entirety.

General law of life estates, see Life Estates.

¶ 74. A life-estate granted to a man and his wife is an entirety in which both take the same and inseparable interests; neither can affect the other's rights by a separate transfer, and whatever will defeat the interests of one will defeat the interests of the other.—Vinton v. Beamer, 55 Mich. 559.

§ 25. Interest in purchase contract.

Nature of purchase contracts in general, see Vendor and Purchaser.

¶ 75. The interest of a husband and a wife in a land contract in which their names appear as vendees, is an entirety and not a tenancy in common.—Zeigen v. Roiser, 200 Mich. 328.

¶ 76. Under Comp. L. 1915, § 10036, providing that every summer resort corporation formed under the act shall be capable in law of owning, holding or purchasing and disposing of, in such manner as a majority of the stockholders shall direct, any real or personal property whatever, and section 10047, providing that the stock of every such corporation shall be deemed personal property and may be transferred as shall be prescribed in the act and by the by-laws of the corporation, and section 10053, providing that whenever any such corporation shall cause any of its land to be platted, it may, by its by-laws "provide the manner in which the lot or lots may be assigned, allotted or confirmed to its several stockholders, and the terms and conditions upon which the same shall be held" and that "any such lot or lots so assigned, allotted or confirmed to such stockholders shall be deemed and considered as appurtenant and attached to a certain share or shares of stock of capital stock in such corporation, which shall be designated at the time of such assignment, allotment or confirmation, and any assignment, transfer or other disposition of such capital stock shall be held to carry with it the right to such lot or lots," and that it shall be unlawful for any stockholder to transfer his interest in any lot separate from the share or shares of capital stock to which it is attached, where a stockholder received a warranty deed to lot containing the condition that the lot was appurtenant and attached to certain shares of the capital stock and that the lot or interest therein should not be sold detached from such shares contrary to the rules of the corporation, and entered into a contract for the sale of the lot and shares of stock with a man and his wife jointly, subject to the condition prescribed by the corporation, an interest in an estate by the entirety in real property was acquired by the contract purchasers.—In re Berry, 247 Fed. 700.

§ 26. Nature and incidents of estate by entirety.

Survivorship as incident of estate, see post §§ 27, 28.

Right to rents, profits and issues, see post § 29.

Power to make testamentary disposition of estate held by entirety, see Wills, I.

Tenant by entireties as "freeholder" to sign application for drain, see Drains ¶¶ 60, 61.

Whether dower attaches to lands held by the entirety, see Dower § 9.

¶ 77. The estate of husband and wife by the entireties is but one estate, and it is impossible to carve anything out of it during the joint lives, without affecting the interest of the wife.—Michigan Beef & Provision Co. v. Coll, 116 Mich. 261.

¶ 78. Whatever would defeat a husband's title under a grant made to himself and his wife jointly would defeat hers also, as they take by entireties (Comp. L. 1871, § 4112, How. St., § 5561).—Manwaring v. Powell, 40 Mich. 371.

¶ 79. An estate held by the entirety is not affected by the statute of partition.—Jacobs v. Miller, 50 Mich. 119.

§ 27. Survivorship as incident of estate.

See also ante ¶ 70.

Death of one tenant by entirety, and suit by survivor, see Abatement ¶ 7.

¶ 80. Where real estate is conveyed to a husband and wife, an estate in entirety is created, and upon the death of either, the title in fee is in the survivor.—Doane v. Feather's Estate, 119 Mich. 691.

¶ 81. Where land is conveyed in fee to husband and wife they do not take as tenants in common, and if one of them dies the whole title inures to the survivor. Nothing in our constitution and statutes relating to the rights of married woman would convert such an estate into a tenancy in common.—Fisher v. Provin, 25 Mich. 347; Aetna Ins. Co. v. Resh, 40 Mich. 241; Jacobs v. Miller, 50 Mich. 119.

¶ 82. A will made by a husband is ineffectual to vest in a third person any title to land held by him and his wife jointly.—Hubert v. Traeder, 139 Mich. 69, § 28. ——Survivor's right in mortgages.

¶ 83. The doctrine of survivorship, whereby on the death of husband or wife the other is vested with the whole estate previously held by the entireties, does not apply to mortgage securities with such strictness as to conveyances.—McLeod v. Free, 96 Mich. 57.

§ 29. Right to rents, issues and profits.

Rights concerning rents, profits and issues, see Comp. L. 1915, § 11475.

¶ 84. A crop raised on land that is owned by husband and wife by the entireties is similarly owned, and is not subject to levy and sale on an execution against the husband.—Dickey v. Converse, 117 Mich. 449.

¶ 85. The married women's act, Comp. L. 1897, § 8690 has no application to estates by entirety; and under common law a wife living apart from her husband has no right to a share of the crops growing on land held by her husband and herself in entirety.—Morrill v. Morrill, 138 Mich. 112.

¶ 86. A wife cannot make a binding verbal agreement with her husband that she shall have an equal share in the profits arising from land held by them in entirety as this would permit the changing of the legal effect of the deed by parol agreement.—Morrill v. Morrill, 138 Mich. 112.

§ 30. Alienation or incumbrance.

See also ante ¶ 77.

Release or transfer to each other, see post § 31.

Liability on contract to convey or incumber, see post § 32.

Effect of joinder in husband's deed, see post § 139.

Conveyances by wife to third persons, see post IV, D.

Mortgage for purchase price of land held by entirety as incident to the land contract surviving therewith to the wife, see Descent § 8, ¶ 12.

Capacity of married woman to bind herself jointly with husband to alien or incumber, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 158.

¶ 87. Tenants by entirety, by acting jointly, may alienate the entire estate.—Demerse v. Mitchell, 187 Mich. 683.

¶ 88. An estate by the entirety can be alienated only by the joint act of both spouses.—Agar v. Streeter, 183 Mich. 600.

¶ 89. An estate by the entirety cannot be alienated by the independent act of the husband or wife.—Agar v. Streeter, 183 Mich. 600.

¶ 90. One tenant by the entirety has no interest separable from that of the other; he has nothing to convey or mortgage or to which he can attach a lien.—Bauer v. Long, 147 Mich. 351.

¶ 91. Where real estate is owned by the husband and wife as tenants by entirety, the wife's sole quit-claim deed conveys nothing.—Ernst v. Ernst, 178 Mich. 100.

¶ 92. Property held by husband and wife as tenants by the entireties cannot be conveyed, nor any interest therein, without the wife joining with the husband.—Zeigen v. Roiser, 200 Mich. 328.

¶ 93. A deed or mortgage of an estate by the entirety executed by one spouse only to a third person is a nullity, both before and after the death of the non-consenting spouse.—Agar v. Streeter, 183 Mich. 600.

¶ 94. A mortgage by husband and wife upon land held by them in entirety to secure a loan made the husband is valid.—Ehle v. Looker, 182 Mich. 248.

¶ 95. A deed by husband and wife of land held by the entirety as security for money loaned the husband alone is a mortgage as to both, and cannot be regarded as a mortgage as to one spouse and a deed as to the other.—Ehle v. Looker, 182 Mich. 248.

¶ 96. During their joint lives neither husband nor wife can so alien as to bind the other property as to which they are seized of the entirety.—Jacobs v. Miller, 50 Mich. 119.

¶ 97. A mortgage executed by the wife only, upon land which she and her husband own by the entirety, to secure her husband's debt, is void, although such debt was for necessaries furnished to the husband, an insane person.—Naylor v. Minock, 96 Mich. 182.

¶ 98. A mortgage by a wife of an estate by the entireties for her husband's debt, being inceptionally void, does not estop her or her heirs from asserting the interest afterwards acquired by her in the land on her husband's death.—Naylor v. Minock, 96 Mich. 182.

¶ 99. A mortgage executed by husband and wife upon land owned by them as tenants in the entirety, to secure a loan made to the husband alone, is valid; though she could not alone have bound it by her separate deed.—People's Building & Loan Ass'n v. Billings, 104 Mich. 186.

¶ 100. Wife's separate mortgage for husband's debt of land owned by both in the entirety is void and does not pass title afterwards acquired by her on husband's death.—Naylor v. Minock, 96 Mich. 182.

§ 31. ——Release or transfer to each other.

¶ 101. Husband and wife as tenants by entirety may release their interests to each other.—Demerse v. Mitchell, 187 Mich. 683.

§ 32. ——Liability on contract to convey or incumber.

¶ 102. A contract for the sale of a house and lot owned by a man and his wife jointly, and signed by the man alone, cannot be enforced against the wife.—Shipman v. Campbell, 79 Mich. 82.

¶ 103. Neither a husband nor wife can alone convey or incumber an estate vested in them by entirety, but such an instrument is not void to the extent that an action for damages for its breach does not lie.—Way v. Root, 174 Mich. 418.

¶ 104. A contract made by a husband is ineffectual to vest in a third person any title to land held by him and his wife jointly.—Hubert v. Traeder, 139 Mich. 69.

§ 33. Subjection for debts of either spouse.

Liability for lien for debt of one tenant only, see also ante ¶ 90.

Validity of mechanics' lien on land held by entirety where contract was not signed by husband, see Mechanics' Liens, IV.

Right of spouse to move for dissolution of attachment on homestead, see Attachment § 105.

Leviability of joint interests in lands, see Executions § 22.

¶ 105. Property held by husband and wife by entireties before or at the time the husband incurs a debt cannot be reached for the satisfaction of that debt.—Schliess v. Thayer, 170 Mich. 395.

¶ 106. Estates in entirety cannot be created at the expense of creditors and held in fraud of the latter's right.—Newlove v. Callaghan, 86 Mich. 297.

¶ 107. Where a husband and wife hold real estate by the entireties at the time of the making of a purchase and the incurring of indebtedness by the husband, a representation made to the seller by the wife, at the time of the purchase, to the effect that the husband is the owner of the property, is not necessarily binding upon the husband so as to subject the property to a levy made to satisfy a judgment for such indebtedness.—Schliess v. Thayer, 170 Mich. 395.

¶ 108. An undivided one-half interest in lands held by a husband and wife by entireties may be subjected to a judgment against the husband, where moneys were applied by him to the purchase of the lands after the debt had been incurred, notwithstanding the lands were contracted for prior to such indebtedness; and, in the absence of a contrary showing, it will be presumed that one-half of the payments so made upon the contract was made by the husband.—Michigan Beef & Provision Co. v. Coll, 116 Mich. 261.

¶ 109. March 7, 1906, defendant incurred an indebtedness for an automobile purchased of complainant. Defendant and his wife had on February 18, 1906, made the last but one of forty-eight payments on the contract of sale for a certain lot, which by the terms of the contract was to be conveyed to defendant and his wife as tenants by the entireties. On March 21, 1906, the wife with her own money, received from an endowment insurance policy, made the last payment on the contract, at which date the deed to the lot was made to defendant and his wife. Complainant on December 31, 1906, recovered a judgment for the purchase price of the automobile against defendant. Held, the lot in question could not be subjected to a levy based on said judgment.—Schliess v. Thayer, 170 Mich. 395.

§ 34. Effect of divorce on estate.

Effect of divorce to dissolve estate by the entireties, see Divorce § 100.

Division, restitution and allotment of property on divorcing parties, see Divorce, X, B.

Power in divorce to sever and allot estate by the entireties, see Divorce § 137.

¶ 110. An estate by entirety under a joint deed to both a husband and wife is not affected by a decree of divorce.—In re Appeal of Lewis, 85 Mich. 340.

§ 35. Presumptions and evidence as to estate in general.

General law of evidence, see Evidence.

Parol evidence to show tenancy in common or tenancy by entirety, see Evidence § 185.

¶ 111. Where husband and wife buy land taking a conveyance to both jointly, the husband is presumed, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, to have paid half of the purchase-price.—Newlove v. Callaghan, 86 Mich. 297.

¶ 112. A wife joined with her husband in attacking proceedings for laying out a ditch. Held, that it must be presumed that their interest was the common-law tenure of husband and wife, and that she could not stand in court in any better position than her husband.—People ex rel. Roediger v. Drain Com'r, 40 Mich. 745.

¶ 113. Where a bill is filed by a wife to set aside deeds creating a joint estate in her and her husband on the ground of fraud and undue influence and an agreement to reconvey, and there is evidence showing that she has a divorced husband and desired to make it impossible for him to ever come into any of her property and that she had great confidence in her husband, trusting his discretion in all dealings relative to the property, granting him broad powers of attorney with respect thereto and making him her executor, such facts are sufficient to refute the allegations of the complainant.—Steketee v. Newkirk, 173 Mich. 222.

§ 36. Estoppel to deny or question estate.

See also ante ¶ 98.

General principles of estoppel, see Estoppel.

¶ 114. A divorced woman who had children married a man who, as it afterward appeared, had another wife living from whom he was not divorced. They lived together as man and wife and were so regarded by the public. Property belonging to an infant was sold to them under an order of the court of chancery which named the man and recited that he and "his wife" had offered a certain sum for the property, and further directed that the infant's guardian execute a conveyance to him and "his wife." A deed was executed accordingly in which the grantees were named and the woman's name followed by the words "his wife." The woman died and the man conveyed away the entire property. Held, that the woman's children by her first husband could not contradict the legal operation of the guardian's deed, by parol evidence that their mother was not the lawful wife of her second husband, nor could they insist that the deed therefore conveyed an estate in common in which they had a right of inheritance rather than an entirety.—Jacobs v. Miller, 50 Mich. 119.

¶ 115. Whether a conveyance to a bona fide purchaser would not be good when received from the survivor of two persons, who, in the deed to themselves, had been named and described as husband and wife, and who had been publicly married and lived in that relation, and had accepted the deed in that character even though not such, quære.—Jacobs v. Miller, 50 Mich. 119.

C. SEPARATE PROPERTY OF WIFE.

§ 37. In general.

What constitutes separate property, see post §§ 38-43.

Right to hold mortgage against husband's lands, see post § 44.
Rights of wife to deal with and dispose of her property, see post § 45.
Commingling with husband's property and estoppel to assert, see post § 46.
Right of husband to charge or incumber, see post §§ 47, 48.
Occupancy of wife's lands by husband, see post § 49.
Accounting between spouses respecting separate property, see post § 50.
Estoppel or laches to deny or asset separate property, see post § 51.
Presumptions and evidence as to ownership, see post § 52.
Questions of law and fact, see post § 53.
Actions concerning separate property, see post § 177.
Replevin against husband for separate property, see post § 182.
Right of wife to sue husband for her separate property, see post ¶ 610.
Necessity that wife's contract relate to her separate property, see post §§ 80, 81.
Contract rights and liabilities of wife respecting third persons, see post IV.
Wife's separate property as property claimable as homestead, see Homesteads § 18.
Estates by the curtesy, see Curtesy.
Liability of separate property for wife's debt, see Comp. L. 1915, § 11475.
Liability of separate property for wife's antenuptial contracts, see Comp. L. 1915, § 11475.
Liability of separate property for husband's debts, see Comp. L. 1915, § 11475.
Constitutional provisions, see Const. art. XVI, § 8.
Right of married woman to possession of her real property on divorce or imprisonment of husband, see Comp. L. 1915, § 11409.

¶ 116. In Michigan a man has no control over his wife's property.—White v. Zane, 10 Mich. 333; Tong v. Marvin, 15 Mich. 60; Agricultural Ins. Co. of Watertown, N. Y. v. Montague, 38 Mich. 548.

¶ 117. A wife living apart from her husband can on due demand replevy from him her individual goods.—White v. White, 58 Mich. 546.

¶ 118. Under the statutes the wife's personalty is not simply to "be and remain" hers during her life-time, but the husband's common-law interest therein is altogether excluded, even after her death.—Tong v. Marvin, 15 Mich. 60.

¶ 119. A legacy left to a married woman is liable to an attachment issued against her husband; but the attaching creditor must take it subject to her equity, which is to have the whole, or so much as the court of chancery may see fit, set apart to her for her support. [This was prior to the acts of 1844 and 1855.]—Westbrook v. Comstock, W. 314.

§ 38. What constitutes separate property.

Damages for personal injuries, see post § 39.
Debt due from her husband, see post § 40.
Earnings and proceeds of her business or trade, see post § 41.
Conveyance of real property to wife, see post § 42.
Improvements by husband on wife's land, see post § 43.
Presumptions and evidence as to ownership, see post § 52.
Interests and estates which may be charged, see post § 148.
Legal capacity and disabilities of wife generally, see post IV, A.
Estates held by the entireties, see ante II, B.
Definition of separate property, see Const. art. XVI, § 8.
Statutory definition, see Comp. L. 1915, §§ 11475, 11485.

¶ 120. Under the statute as it stood in 1846 (R. S. 1846, p. 340, § 25), and before the Married Women's Act of 1855, the separate estate owned by a woman on her marriage was kept and preserved to her as her separate property after the marriage; and the statute of 1855 goes still farther in the same direction; so that the right of a woman, married in 1852, in means which she has from time to time invested jointly with her husband in personal securities, was by these statutes kept separate and distinguished from those of her husband, precisely as if the like investments had been made in a similar manner by any other persons not married.—Wait v. Bovee, 35 Mich. 425.

¶ 121. The wife is not entitled to compensation from the husband's estate for personal property which she brought to him upon marriage, unless there was an antenuptial contract respecting it, securing it to her after marriage.—Cranson v. Cranson, 4 Mich. 230.

¶ 122. A wife may acquire property redeemed by judgment creditors from execution sale against her husband, and he takes no interest therein.—Taylor v. Boardman, 24 Mich. 287.

§ 39. ——Damages for personal injuries.

Rights in wife's choses in action in general, see ante § 8.
Actionable personal injury to wife, see post §§ 156-158.

¶ 123. Damages recovered for the wife's personal injury and suffering from an assault and battery committed upon herself constitute a part of her individual property, as would choses in action, or pecuniary claims, or rights accruing to her during the coverture.—Berger v. Jacobs, 21 Mich. 215.

§ 40. ——Debt due from her husband.

¶ 124. A debt from a husband to his wife is her separate property which she can assign, sell, devise or transfer by gift.—Hunt v. Eaton, 55 Mich. 362.

§ 41. ——Earnings and proceeds of her business or trade.

Rights in wife's earnings generally, see ante §§ 13-15.

Right of wife to compensation for services furnished to third persons, see post § 125.

Right of married woman to her earnings, see Comp. L. 1915, § 11478.

¶ 125. A husband may agree that his wife's earnings shall be her separate property.—Dowling v. Dowling, 116 Mich. 346.

¶ 126. The Married Women's Acts of 1844 and 1855 do not empower a married woman to carry on, on credit, a general trade or business—like that of the purchase of wheat and the manufacture and sale of flour—so as to make the proceeds of the business her own.—Glover v. Alcott, 11 Mich. 470.

¶ 127. Where a lease is executed by a wife in the name of a husband who has abandoned her, crops raised under the lease are property of the wife and cannot be levied on by the husband's creditors.—Cody v. Phelps, 47 Mich. 431.

§ 42. ——Conveyances of real property to wife.

Warranty deed to wife as carrying subsequently acquired title to her, see Estoppel ¶ 38.

Right of trustee to convey to wife, see Comp. L. 1915, § 11486.

¶ 128. Where one who has refused to sell to the husband because he did not think it safe to trust him is willing to sell to the wife on credit, trusting to the property in her hands and to her honesty in making it available for his protection, and makes the sale to her in good faith, the title to the property will not pass, contrary to the intent of both parties, to the husband for the benefit of his creditors, who could neither be wronged by any sale to her, nor have any right to insist on a sale to the husband.—Rankin v. West, 25 Mich. 195.

¶ 129. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 8835, providing against resulting trusts in cases in which the consideration for the conveyance shall have been paid by a person other than the one to whom the conveyance is made, a husband is not entitled to relief where property purchased by him has been conveyed by his direction, to his wife.—Wipfler v. Wipfler, 153 Mich. 18.

¶ 130. Where a man and wife unite in conveying property, and the grantee gives back to each an individual mortgage thereon, the wife becomes absolute owner of her mortgage in her own right, and can dispose of it as she pleases and as if she were single.—Goodale v. Patterson, 51 Mich. 532.

¶ 131. A wife, without her husband's consent, had her name inserted as joint vendee with him in a land contract originally made to him alone, and thereafter she made payments on the same with money out of his business. Held, that the wife had no equities which she could enforce against the land.—Truski v. Streseveski, 60 Mich. 84.

§ 43. ——Improvements by husband on wife's land.

Agency of husband to make improvements on wife's lands, see post § 102.

Liability of wife for money borrowed for improvements on her land, see post ¶ 399.

Agency of husband for improvement on wife's realty, see post § 102.

Expenditures on real estate of other spouse, see Fraudulent Conveyances § 54.

¶ 132. A wife in seeking specific performance against a vendor of the land was allowed, in a particular case, the benefit of improvements made by her husband upon the land included in her purchase contract.—Murphy v. Stever, 47 Mich. 522.

§ 44. Right to hold mortgage against husband's lands.

Capacity of wife to receive, hold and enforce security generally, see post § 84.

¶ 133. A married woman can acquire a mortgage against her husband and on his land as freely as she can take any other existing security; and as it is not her obligation she can foreclose it, even though she joined in it to release her right of dower.—Youmans v. Loxley, 56 Mich. 197.

§ 45. Rights of wife to deal with and dispose of her property.

Conveyances and mortgages of separate property, see post IV, D.

Alienation and incumbrance of estates held by the entireties, see ante §§ 30-32.

Right to dispose of separate property, see Const. art. XVI, § 8.

Power of wife to dispose of her separate property, see Comp. L. 1915, § 11475.

Right to use or dispose of her earnings, see Comp. L. 1915, § 11478.

Right of wife to deal with and dispose of her separate property when abandoned by her husband, see Comp. L. 1915, §§ 11451-11453.

Right to deal with and dispose of separate property, see Comp. L. 1915, § 11485.

¶ 134. Business carried on by a wife in her own name for the purpose of keeping property purchased by her from the reach of her husband's creditors is neither in law nor in fact a fraud upon the creditors, if the property is hers.—Rankin v. West, 25 Mich. 195.

¶ 135. Persons obeying a wife's directions in removing her separate personal property from the possession of her husband are not liable to an action by the husband for so doing.—Starkweather v. Smith, 6 Mich. 377.

¶ 136. A married woman may file a bill to enjoin the sale of her lands upon an execution against her husband, though the husband occupy the lands jointly with her as a home.—Hill v. Bowman, 35 Mich. 191; Patterson v. Fish, 35 Mich. 209.

§ 46. Commingling with husband's property; estoppel to assert.

Estoppel to deny separate property, see post § 51.

General principles of estoppel, see Estoppel.

¶ 137. If a married woman willingly allows her separate personal property to be so mixed and mingled with that of her husband as not to be distinguishable, or acquiesces in its being so mingled, such property, as to the husband's creditors, is to be treated as relinquished to the husband.—Glover v. Alcott, 11 Mich. 470.

§ 47. Right of husband to charge or incumber.

Reimbursement for payment of her debt or loan, see post § 48.

Right of husband to bring actions concerning separate property, see post § 177.

Leviability of separate interests in lands, see Executions § 22.

Liability of separate property for husband's debts, see Const. art. XVI, § 8.

Liability of separate property for husband's debts, see Comp. L. 1915, § 11485.

Liability of separate property for husband's debts, see Comp. L. 1915, § 11475.

¶ 138. A husband cannot incumber his wife's separate estate without her consent.—Harvey v. Galloway, 48 Mich. 531.

§ 48. ——Reimbursement for payment of her debt or loan.

¶ 139. A husband can recover against his wife's estate money paid in discharge of a note executed by both, where the money was borrowed by her on her own account and for her own use and benefit.—Feather v. Feather's Estate, 116 Mich. 384.

§ 49. Occupancy of wife's lands by husband.

¶ 140. Though the wife has the exclusive title, the husband has a legal right to occupy jointly with her the family homestead.—Henry v. Gregory, 29 Mich. 68.

¶ 141. So long as husband and wife occupy together her lands he is not to be considered as there by sufferance merely, but by right, as head of the family.—Snyder v. People, 26 Mich. 106.

¶ 142. Where husband and wife occupy together the wife's lands, or lands colorably hers, the continuance of her right and possession includes the right that he may occupy with her.—Hudson v. Van Fossen, 26 Mich. 68.

¶ 143. Land owned by a wife, but occupied not only by herself but by her husband and family as a homestead, is in the husband's tenancy so long as it is so occupied, as distinctly as if leased to him.—Rowe v. Kellogg, 54 Mich. 206.

¶ 144. A husband in joint possession with his wife of land belonging to her, but used as the family homestead, has, as head of the family, such an interest in the land as entitles him to complain of any unlawful interference with it; and if he is defendant in a proceeding in which an attachment has been levied on such land as his own, his interest therein is sufficient to entitle him to move for a dissolution of the attachment.—Rowe v. Kellogg, 54 Mich. 206.

¶ 145. After separation from her husband a wife may bring ejectment against him to recover from him the possession of her separate lands occupied by him as his homestead.—Buckingham v. Buckingham, 81 Mich. 89.

§ 50. Accounting between spouses respecting separate property.

Replevin against husband for separate property, see post § 182.

Right of wife to sue husband for her separate property, see post ¶ 610.

Actions concerning separate property, see post § 177.

Ordering restitution of wife's property on granting divorce, see Divorce § 141.

Joining divorce bill and bill for accounting of marital rights, see also Equity § 73.

¶ 146. A supplemental bill filed in a divorce suit is not a proper proceeding to bring about an accounting between the husband and wife, as such, for the wife's separate property.—Peck v. Peck, 66 Mich. 586.

§ 51. Estoppel or laches to deny separate property.

Estoppel to assert, see ante § 46.

General principles of estoppel, see Estoppel.

Want of knowledge on wife's part as preventing estoppel to claim separate property, see Estoppel ¶ 78.

Estoppel of wife to claim separate rights, necessity of misleading acts and reliance thereon, see Estoppel ¶ 102.

¶ 147. After forty years' acquiescence by a husband and wife in a title to land conveyed by her father to her, equity will not interfere on the husband's claim that the father had contracted to deed to him, and that he should have the title; the husband's equities not being clear and certain.—Morgan v. Morgan, 58 Mich. 612.

¶ 148. Complainant in a bill to reform a deed, who claimed that his deceased wife had improperly taken title in her sole name to the property in question, for which he furnished the purchase money, instead of taking title in the joint names of herself and complainant, was denied relief, where it appeared that complainant lived happily with his wife for 11 years after the erection of a house upon the lot; that he had permitted his wife to deal with and mortgage the property as her own; that he had spoken of it as hers, and that he had denied the right of his creditors to take it in payment of his debts.—Lowry v. Lowry, 135 Mich. 305.

§ 52. Presumptions and evidence as to ownership.

Actions concerning separate property, see post § 177.

Replevin against husband for separate property, see post § 182.

General law of evidence, see Evidence.

Cross-examination of witness as to financial conditions and resources to rebut or explain claim of separate property, see Examination of Witnesses § 48.

¶ 149. There is no presumption that a wife has no separate property.—Ross v. Ross, 47 Mich. 185.

¶ 150. The mere fact that a husband has given a chattel mortgage on his wife's property does not tend to show that he owned it, if there is no evidence of his wife's consent or knowledge therein, or that it was given for her.—Gavigan v. Scott, 51 Mich. 373.

¶ 151. Any finding as to what portion of a bank account in the name of a wife belongs to a husband and what belongs to his wife would be based upon mere conjecture, where the wife prior to her marriage had been engaged in business on her own account and during her married life deposited her own money and that received by her as agent for her husband in such account.—McNamara v. Langguth, 198 Mich. 776.

¶ 152. The question of the ownership of farming products, stock and tools, on a farm owned by the wife and occupied by the family as a homestead, and carried on by the husband, is not to be determined by presumptions or inferences as to whether the husband occuped as tenant, and hence as principal, or as servant of his wife, but upon the facts.—Hill v. Chambers, 30 Mich. 422.

¶ 153. Plaintiff testified that she loaned money to defendant; that, her husband being ill, he deeded the farm to her, reserving a life estate; that she managed the same; that the bank account stood in her husband's name, but that she drew upon it from time to time; and that from this money she made the loan to the defendant. Held, there was evidence to go to the jury that the money loaned was the plaintiff's.—Leonard v. Piggott, 152 Mich. 436.

¶ 154. In an action involving the ownership of a certificate of deposit standing in a

D. CONVEYANCES TO EACH OTHER.

§ 54. In general.
Necessity and sufficiency of consideration, see post §§ 55, 56.
Fraud, overreaching or illegality in transfers, see post §§ 57, 58.
Burden of proof, presumptions and evidence, see post §§ 59, 60.
Deed from one spouse to other of undivided half interest, see ante § 23.
Alienation of estates by the entireties, see ante §§ 30-32.
Conveyance to wife pursuant to separation agreement, see post ¶ 625.
Gifts and transfers of personalty to each other, see ante § 12.
Capacity to receive real estate directly and without intervention of third person as trustee, see post § 83, ¶ 258.
Conveyances by husband to wife of homestead property, see Homesteads § 43.
Sufficiency of continuing occupancy of premises as notice of transfer in lieu of recordation, see Notice and Record of Title.
Release to or contract with husband to bar dower, see Dower §§ 16, 17.
Conditions in deed to wife that parties should dwell in harmony, see Deeds ¶¶ 323, 324.
Estate of wife under deed from husband on condition of life support by wife, see Deeds ¶ 114.
Laches barring complaint of fraud, see Fraud § 82.
Effect on validity of deed from wife to husband of intent that it be effective only after grantor's death, see Execution of Instruments ¶ 130.

¶ 161. Prior to the statute of 1855 (How. St. § 6295), a deed made directly from husband to wife was not a valid conveyance.—Ransom v. Ransom, 30 Mich. 328; Loomis v. Brush, 36 Mich. 40.

¶ 162. An ordinary quit-claim deed from husband to wife, executed and delivered prior to the Married Women's Act of 1855, is of no more validity as an actual conveyance in equity than at law; and a deed void in law when made is not validated as a conveyance by the subsequent laws enabling married women to take and enjoy property as if sole. Such a deed on its face is not only legally void but presumptively voluntary, and contains nothing to indicate that it was given for any meritorious purpose.—Loomis v. Brush, 36 Mich. 40.

¶ 163. While courts will under peculiar circumstances carry out a purpose which has failed in consequence of a wife's incapacity to accept a deed from her husband, the case must be plain and the equity manifest; there must be a clear right arising out of matters independent of the deed.—Loomis v. Brush, 36 Mich. 40.

¶ 164. A deed of lands may now be made by a husband directly to his wife without the intervention of any third person.—Jenne v. Marble, 37 Mich. 319; but see People v. Horton, 4 Mich. 67.

§ 55. Necessity and sufficiency of consideration.
Wife's services as housekeeper, see post § 56.
Resuming marital relation as consideration, see also post § 58.
Surrender or release of rights as consideration in general, see Contracts § 114.
Considerations for contracts and conveyances between spouses, see Contracts, V.
Transfers to other spouse with effect or intent to hinder or defraud creditors, see Fraudulent Conveyances, I, D.

¶ 165. A wife's release of her dower and homestead interests, and her undertaking to support herself, are a valid consideration for a deed from her husband to herself.—Randall v. Randall, 37 Mich. 563.

¶ 166. A purchaser of land was in debt to his wife to an amount exceeding the purchase money, and as she desired security he returned his deed to the grantor and had another executed directly to her. She afterward wished to buy the land outright, and gave up to her husband the evidences of his debt. Held that, as between them, the transaction could be upheld as a sale. The cancelling of the debt was a complete payment of consideration.—First Nat. Bank v. McAllister, 46 Mich. 397.

§ 56. ——Wife's services as housekeeper.
Husband's rights to wife's services, see ante §§ 13, 14.

¶ 167. An agreement whereby a husband is to pay to his wife annually a certain sum for her services as housekeeper cannot, as against creditors, support a conveyance to her.—Michigan Trust Co. v. Chapin, 106 Mich. 384.

§ 57. Fraud, overreaching or illegality in transfers.
Evidence of fraud and coercion, see post § 60.
Presumption of fraud, see post ¶ 175.
Transfers on consideration of resuming cohabitation, see post § 58.
Transfers from one spouse to other with intent or effect to hinder or defraud creditors, see Fraudulent Conveyances §§ 47-49.
Placing title in name of spouse to defraud creditors, see Fraudulent Conveyances § 55.

¶ 168. Where a husband, who was in poor health and was required to go to another climate, where he engaged in business, and was deceived by his wife, who stayed at his former home, into the belief that she would continue the marital relation with him at the time he made a conveyance to her of his interest in property owned jointly by them, and she intended to procure a divorce and did procure, one such conduct upon the part of the wife constituted a fraud on the husband from which relief may be granted in equity.—Judd v. Judd, 192 Mich. 198. (Stone, C. J., and Brooke and Ostrander, JJ., dissenting.)

¶ 169. On a bill by a husband for the cancellation of conveyances made by him to his wife of his interest in property owned jointly, before the granting of a divorce in favor of the wife, for an injunction restraining her from disposing of the property, and for an accounting, where fraud is alleged against her and no disposition of the property was made in the divorce suit, held that complainant was not guilty of laches in waiting and suing separately,—Judd v. Judd, 192 Mich. 198. (Stone, C. J., and Brooke and Ostrander, JJ., dissenting.)

§ 58. ——Transfers on consideration of resuming cohabitation.

Rescission and cancellation of transfers on repetition of offense and breach of agreement, see Rescission, II.

¶ 170. An agreement by which in consideration of the resumption of marital relations after they had separated because of the wife's adultery, she deeded realty to him through a trustee to be applied in a certain manner, and providing that if she should again be guilty of such misconduct he should be released from all obligations under it, cannot be said to be unconscionable, at least where the husband signifies his willingness to waive the provision for a forfeiture of the interest of the wife.—Duffy v. White, 115 Mich. 264.

¶ 171. An agreement between a husband and wife, who have separated because of the adultery of the latter, providing for a resumption of marital relations in consideration of a conveyance of land by the wife to the husband, to be held in trust for the wife and their minor child, with a provision that, if she is subsequently guilty of flagrant misbehavior or desertion, the husband shall be immediately released from all obligations and from all liability to her under the agreement, is not void as against public policy, where the circumstances under which it was made justify the restriction of the term "flagrant misbehavior or desertion" to such as would be ground for divorce.—Duffy v. White, 115 Mich. 264.

§ 59. Burden of proof, presumptions and evidence.

Evidence of fraud or coercion, see post § 60.

¶ 172. When a husband claims that a gift of lands has been made to him by his wife, the burden of proof is upon him to establish that fact.—Wales v. Newbould, 9 Mich. 45.

allow to stand to her prejudice.—Witbeck v. Witbeck, 25 Mich. 439.

¶ 180. Where a deed was obtained by a husband from his wife after he had shown a disposition to dominate her every act, when she was nervous following the death of her father and her former husband, and after many quarrels relating to the property, it must be set aside when the evidence as to his actions shows that it was obtained by coercion exercised as a result of the marital relationship and that it was not the free act of the wife.—Southwick v. Southwick, 175 Mich. 608.

¶ 181. On a bill by a husband for cancellation of conveyances made by him to his wife of his interest in property owned jointly before the granting of a divorce in favor of the wife, for an injunction restraining her from disposing of the property, and for an accounting, evidence held sufficient to show that complainant was deceived by defendant's statements made at the time of the conveyance into the belief that she intended to continue the marital relation, and that defendant did not intend to continue the marital relation any longer than was necessary to serve her purpose.—Judd v. Judd, 92 Mich. 198. (Stone, C. J., and Brooke and Ostrander, JJ., dissenting.)

¶ 182. Undue influence by wife in obtaining deed from her husband in pursuance of oral ante-nuptial agreement was held not made out by a showing that she merely induced him to do as he promised.—Manke v. Manke, 75 Mich. 435.

¶ 183. Fraud is not shown by the facts that a husband feeling financially embarrassed conveyed his entire estate to his wife, who thereafter wrongfully deprived him of any share in it and drove him from her house.—Benore v. Benore, 198 Mich. 113.

¶ 184. Undue influence by a wife on her aged husband to make the deed in question by which she obtained a fee, is not shown by evidence that he had previously (six years before) made will giving her only a life estate, where he thereafter suffered sickness through which the wife had carefully nursed him and his daughters by a former wife were all married and living apart from him, and there was proof of declarations by him that he had given them all he intended to give.—Hodges v. Cook, 93 Mich. 577.

III. CONTRACT RIGHTS AND LIABILITIES OF HUSBAND TOWARD THIRD PERSONS.

§ 61. In general.

Liability for wife's support and necessaries, see post §§ 62, 63.

Agency of wife for husband, see post § 64.

Liability on wife's contracts, see post §§ 65, 66.

Liability for money loaned wife without his knowledge, see post § 67.

Liability for antenuptial debts of wife, see post § 68.

Estoppel to hold husband for wife's debts, see post § 69.

Right to furnish services of wife to third person, see post § 70.

Presumptions and evidence, see post §§ 71, 72.

Rights of husband as "head of family," see ante § 17.

Right of husband to reimbursement for payment of wife's debt or loan, see ante § 48.

Right of husband to sue with reference to wife's separate property, see post § 177.

Right of husband to charge or incumber wife's separate property, see ante § 47.

Right of husband to occupy lands of wife, see ante § 49.

Rights of husband in occupancy of separate property as "head of family," see ante ¶¶ 141, 144.

Liability on assigned or transferred debt due his wife, see ante ¶ 124.

Subjection of estate held by entireties for husband's debt, see ante § 33.

Right to recover for loss of wife's baggage, see Carriers § 255.

Sufficiency of husband's sole conveyance to pass title free from dower right of nonresident wife, see Dower § 5.

Threats against husband or wife as duress on other, see Duress.

Estate passed by husband's security deed, wife joining, see also Deeds ¶ 96.

Right of husband to waive exemption without consent of wife, see Exemptions ¶ 33.

Contract between wife and guardian of husband, see Comp. L. 1915, § 11467.

§ 62. Liability for wife's support and necessaries.

Husband's duty to support wife, see also ante ¶ 39.

Husband's liability for necessaries furnished wife after divorce to whom alimony prescribed by court has been paid, see post ¶ 618.

Expenses of wife's last sickness and funeral, see post § 63.

Implied contracts by implication of law, see Implied Contracts, II.

¶ 185. The husband is still liable as at common law for the support of his wife.—Howe v. North, 69 Mich. 272.

¶ 186. The obligation rests on the husband to pay for the board of himself, his wife and imbecile son.—Howe v. North, 69 Mich. 272.

¶ 187. A husband who makes sufficient provision for the support of a wife who is separated from him without her fault, or who makes provision that she accepts, is not bound by her contracts for necessaries.—Crittenden v. Schermerhorn, 39 Mich. 661.

¶ 188. A creditor for necessaries furnished to the wife can only sue the husband in her right, and can be in no better position to complain of him than she is.—Crittenden v. Schermerhorn, 39 Mich. 661.

¶ 189. Where a husband has left his wife with her parents, with whom they had been boarding, and the father-in-law claims compensation for her board for the period after the son-in-law left, the husband is not liable therefor, where his leaving was caused by his wife's misconduct, of which the father-in-law had knowledge.—Middlebrook v. Slocum, 152 Mich. 286.

§ 63. ——Expenses of wife's last sickness and funeral.

¶ 190. A husband is primarily legally liable for the ordinary funeral expenses of his wife.—Stone v. Tyack, 164 Mich. 550.

¶ 191. Suit to recover the expenses of the burial of a wife may be instituted against the husband without making demand.—Stone v. Tyack, 164 Mich. 550.

¶ 192. A husband is presumptively liable for the expenses of his wife's last sickness and funeral, even though she leaves property.—Sears v. Giddey, 41 Mich. 590; Galloway v. McPherson's Estate, 67 Mich. 546.

¶ 193. The fact that there was an adult son of a woman recently deceased who accompanied the husband when the order was given to the undertaker for her funeral does not of itself change the liability of the husband.—Sears v. Giddey, 41 Mich. 590.

¶ 194. The liability of a husband for the funeral expenses of his wife who dies in an insane asylum is not altered by the fact that at the time of his wife's death they were living apart.—Stone v. Tyack, 164 Mich. 550.

¶ 195. Public necessity demands burial of a deceased wife, and when such burial is not furnished by those legally liable, it may be furnished by strangers, and the value thereof recovered from the person liable therefor.—Stone v. Tyack, 164 Mich. 550.

¶ 196. After defendant's wife was consigned to a public insane asylum, defendant never visited her and made no arrangement with the asylum authorities to be notified in case of her death. Plaintiff, her stepfather, being in ignorance of defendant's whereabouts, upon the death of the wife notified defendant's brother. Defendant did not learn of the death until a week after it occurred. Plaintiff paid the funeral expenses. Held, defendant was liable to plaintiff for said expenses in a suit in assumpsit.—Stone v. Tyack, 164 Mich. 550.

§ 64. Agency of wife for husband.

Agency of husband for wife, see post IV, B.

Agency of wife to make admissions binding husband, see Evidence §§ 424, 425.

¶ 197. A married woman may be an agent or attorney for her husband.—Showman v. Lee, 79 Mich. 653.

¶ 198. The wife is still presumptively her husband's agent to provide for the household.—Snyder v. People, 26 Mich. 106.

¶ 199. It seems that the wife, in the absence of the husband, is his agent for the purpose of exercising the usual and ordinary control over his property, unless it be expressly shown that he has constituted some other person his agent for that purpose. She has a right to enter and remain in her husband's house if she does so without breach of the peace.—People v. Horton, 4 Mich. 67.

¶ 200. A wife's statement in her husband's presence that her daughter, his stepdaughter, living in the family, shall be paid for her work, will not bind him as by acquiescence, unless he knows that the work is continued in reliance thereon.—Harris v. Smith, 79 Mich. 54.

¶ 201. Where the assignee of an invalid lease has abandoned his family, and a new lease is given to his wife, running in his name, but signed by the wife by attaching her mark to his name, he is not bound by her act and does not become a party to the lease.—Cody v. Phelps, 47 Mich. 431.

¶ 202. Plaintiff loaned money to a wife, and asked the wife to have her husband sign the note with her. The wife disappeared, and later returned with a signature represented by her to be that of her husband. Held, in a suit against the husband on the note, that no agency of the wife by estoppel could be made out against the husband, since plaintiff did not rely on the agency of the wife, but on the supposed genuineness of the husband's signature.—Jewett v. Bryant, 159 Mich. 345.

§ 65. Liability on wife's contracts.

Necessity for notice withdrawing his credit, see post § 66.

Liability on contracts for necessaries where husband makes suitable provision for his wife, see also ante ¶ 187.

Liability of husband's estate for wife's debt, see Estates of Decedents ¶¶ 447, 462.

Validity of parol promise of one spouse to pay the other's debt, see Frauds, Statute of § 26.

Liability of husband on wife's contracts, relating to her sole property, see Comp. L. 1915, § 11487.

¶ 203. The law does not authorize a wife acting as her husband's agent to bind him by her contracts except for necessaries.—Harris v. Smith, 79 Mich. 54.

¶ 204. A wife's sole contract to support her father in her family, while living with her husband, if valid at all, cannot, upon her death, bind her husband against his will.—Bourget v. Monroe, 58 Mich. 563.

¶ 205. Where a merchant enters into an express written contract with a married woman for the sale of goods in which she does not attempt to bind her husband, the merchant cannot afterwards say that the goods were sold upon the husband's credit.—H. Leonard & Sons v. Stowe, 166 Mich. 681.

¶ 206. A tradesman supplies goods to the wife at his peril when the husband is guilty of no neglect of duty in the premises, and when, consequently, there can be no necessity for her buying on his credit at all.—Clark v. Cox, 32 Mich. 204.

¶ 207. A husband who suitably supplies his wife with necessaries, or money to buy them with, is not liable on any presumption of authority in her for goods, even though they are of the quality of necessaries, that she buys on his credit, without his knowledge or consent, from one with whom he has had no previous dealings.—Clark v. Cox, 32 Mich. 204.

¶ 208. In determining what is a reasonable expenditure of money for one's family, the income, or the capacity to earn or produce one, is as important a subject of inquiry as the amount of property possessed.—Clark v. Cox, 32 Mich. 204.

§ 66. ——Necessity for notice withdrawing his credit.

¶ 209. Notice to the public not to give credit to a wife on her husband's account is only necessary where he has permitted her to trade upon his credit.—Smith v. Smith, 73 Mich. 445.

§ 67. Liability for money loaned wife without his knowledge.

¶ 210. A party who loans money to the wife, knowing it to be for her private use, and concealing the fact at her request from her husband, cannot recover the money loaned of the husband; a wife cannot borrow money on her husband's credit.—Franklin v. Foster, 20 Mich. 75.

§ 68. Liability for antenuptial debts of wife.

Rights and liabilities under antenuptial contracts, see ante § 2.

¶ 211. The common law rule that a husband is liable for the ante-nuptial contracts of his wife, has been abrogated by Const. 1850, art. XVI, § 5, providing that the separate property of married women shall be her own and not be liable for the husband's debts, and the Married Women's Act of 1855 (Comp. L. 1897, § 8693), providing that the husband cannot be sued upon any contract made by his wife in relation to her sole property.—Smith v. Martin, 124 Mich. 84.

§ 69. Estoppel to hold husband for wife's debts.

General principles of estoppel, see Estoppel.

¶ 212. The fact that a merchant charges goods upon his books to the wife will not in itself estop him from claiming that they were sold upon the credit of the husband.—H. Leonard & Sons v. Stowe, 166 Mich. 681.

§ 70. Right to furnish services of wife to third person.

Right to services of wife generally, see ante §§ 13-15.

Right of husband to sue in his own name for wife's services, see post ¶¶ 595, 596.

Right of wife to compensation for services furnished third persons, see post § 125.

¶ 213. A husband has a right to enter into a contract to furnish the labor and services of his wife to a third person.—Harrington v. Gies, 45 Mich. 374.

§ 71. Presumptions and evidence.

Evidence as to liability for necessaries, see post § 72.

¶ 214. Evidence held insufficient to show that the wife of a marine engineer absent on the Great Lakes 10 months of the year, who received various sums of money from him from his wages during his absence, acted as his agent in creating a bank account in her own name and in purchasing a home in her own name from the proceeds of such bank account.—McNamara v. Langguth, 198 Mich. 776.

¶ 215. The fact that a husband has on a number of occasions, to avoid trouble and scandal, paid notes to which his wife had signed his name, does not go to establish a general authority in the wife to sign notes as his agent, where, as in the case in question, there is no evidence that the husband received the money secured thereby.—Jewett v. Bryant, 159 Mich. 345.

¶ 216. In an action against a husband for support furnished his wife, it is error to allow cross-examination of the husband as to having sustained illicit relations with a woman many years before his marriage.—Travis v. Stevens, 127 Mich. 687.

¶ 217. In an action against the husband for clothing sold on credit to a wife, testimony that the husband had gone to the merchant and instructed him not to give his wife credit and that afterward he told the merchant "the matter had been fixed up" and that "it was all right" is sufficient to go to the jury on the question of the wife's authority to bind the husband.—Taylor-Woolfenden Co. v. Atkinson, 127 Mich. 633.

§ 72. ——Evidence as to liability for necessaries.

¶ 218. In a suit to recover of the husband for goods sold to his wife on his credit, evidence that the wife made other purchases in his name from other dealers at about the same time was held immaterial, though its admission could not have injured the plaintiff, where they could not have recovered anyway, on the evidence.—Clark v. Cox, 32 Mich. 204.

¶ 219. In an action involving a married woman's authority to bind her husband by purchases made in his name without his knowledge or express assent, evidence of the style of living and expenditure in the circles to which he introduces her, and where he expects her to find her intimates and associates, is pertinent.—Clark v. Cox, 32 Mich 204.

¶ 220. In an action to recover against a husband for a suit of clothes alleged to have been purchased by the wife, the only evidence as to the question whether said purchase was one for necessaries indicated that the goods in question were not such. Held, the verdict was properly directed against plaintiff.—Hickey v. Lundy, 168 Mich. 336.

¶ 221. In an action against a husband for clothing purchased by his wife, the defendant's wife had no power to bind him for purchases of similar goods as necessaries where the uncontroverted evidence is that the defendant gave her $1,180 for clothing for herself and children in the 18 months during which the purchase was made, that she had a weekly allowance which was often overpaid; that he had always had trouble about her running bills; and that his income did not exceed $5,000 per annum.—Taylor-Woolfenden Co. v. Atkinson, 127 Mich. 633.

¶ 222. In an action by an aunt against the former husband of her niece, from whom the niece had secured a divorce on the ground of extreme cruelty, to recover for necessaries furnished the niece pending the divorce proceedings, two letters were produced, written, as the evidence tended to show, by the plaintiff, one to her niece, concluding as follows: "This is from your aunt Jennie who clothed and fed you and your daughter, and did what your father and mother would not do, so you could put away your husband, and get an old man, because he had more money"; and the other to the defendant, urging him to sue the second husband for damages, the niece having remarried, and promising to furnish the necessary witnesses. Held, that said letters might well be interpreted as supporting defendant's contention, that the niece left defendant without justifica the divorce pro marry a wealthi ready determined edge and throu plaintiff, and jus jury so found th
not recover.—Co
363.

IV. CONTRACT
ITIES O
THI

A. LEGAL ABILITI

§ 73. In general.
Coverture as p
§ 74.
Power to contra Necessity and su wife, see pos
Relation of contr
erty, see pos
Incidental or in arate propert
Liability to assig of contracts,
Capacity to rece
see post §
Capacity to rec
curity, see p
Capacity to act
post § 85.
Authority to giv
Power to enter
§ 87.
Rights and statu
family, see p
Power to admit
Estoppel to asse
Equitable relief plead incap
Burden of proof
§§ 92, 93.
Admissibility an
post § 94.
Questions of la
Agency of husba
Particular contr
IV, C.
Conveyances and
erty, see pos
Capacity of mar fend, see p Assignment of
see post §
Liability of wif
post ¶ 376.
Estoppel to asse
Subjection of e wife's debt,
Capacity of ma
cumber as t
ante §§ 30-3
Removal of dis respecting
see ante §

Common law disability of spouses to contract with each other, see ante ¶¶ 14, 15.
Construction of constitutional provision relating to rights of married women, see Constitutional Law § 6, ¶ 21.
Law governing married woman's contracts, see Conflict of Laws § 37.
Power of wife of attorney to act as notary public in cause in which husband is professionally engaged, see Notary Public.
Possession under lease lacking wife's signature as basis for adverse possession against lessor, see Adverse Possession ¶ 107.
Statutory abrogation of disability of married woman to contract jointly with husband respecting lands held as entirety or as survivor, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 158.
Liability of wife on contracts relating to her sole property, see Comp. L. 1915, § 11487.
Powers of wife on divorce from bed and board, see Comp. L. 1915, § 11474.
Condemnation of property of wife for public use, see Comp. L. 1915, § 11468.
Power of wife to insure life of her husband, see Comp. L. 1915, §§ 11489, 11490.

¶ 223. Since the statute of 1855, a married woman has the same power, in all respects, over her property that she should have if unmarried.—Starkweather v. Smith, 6 Mich. 377.

¶ 224. A wife may now contract, buy and sell independently of her husband.—People v. Horton, 4 Mich. 67; Jenne v. Marble, 37 Mich. 319.

¶ 225. The Married Women's Act was intended to enlarge, not to contract, the rights of married women, and was not meant to deprive them of the right, either acting alone or jointly with others, of protecting their interests in property, either real or personal.—Gillespie v. Beecher, 94 Mich. 374.

¶ 226. The common-law disabilities resting upon married women are removed by Comp. L. 1857, p. 966, How. St., § 6295 only so far as they operate unjustly and oppressively. The design is to protect the wife in the enjoyment and disposal of her property for the benefit of herself and her family; and the statute, though it is to be liberally construed, cannot be extended by construction to cases not embraced by its language or within its design.—De Vries v. Conklin, 22 Mich. 255.

§ 74. Coverture as personal privilege.

Power to admit liability, see post § 89.
Estoppel to assert disability, see post § 90.
Equitable relief from default or failure to plead incapacity, see post § 91.

¶ 227. A married woman's contracts are only voidable at her election, and the defense of coverture is a personal privilege, which neither codefendants nor strangers can interpose for her.—Showman v. Lee, 79 Mich. 658.

§ 75. Power to contract.

Necessity and sufficiency of consideration, see post §§ 76-79.
Relation of contract to wife's separate property, see post §§ 80, 81.
Power of married woman to alien or incumber as tenant holding by the entireties, see ante §§ 30-32.
Cross-examination as to terms of contract with married woman, see Examination of Witnesses, II, and especially § 50.
Statutory abrogation of disability of married woman to contract jointly with husband respecting lands held as entirety or as survivor, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 158.
Power of married woman coming from another state or country without husband to contract, see Comp. L. 1915, § 11470.
Power to contract when husband sentenced to imprisonment, see Comp. L. 1915, §§ 11462, 11463.
Proceedings in probate court to authorize married woman to contract after desertion by her husband, see Comp. L. 1915, § 11454.

¶ 228. The general rule of the common law is that a married woman cannot, during her coverture, make a binding contract.—Palmer v. Oakley, 2 D. 433; Brown v. Fifield, 4 Mich. 322.

¶ 229. In Michigan married women have no general capacity to make contracts, their common law disabilities being only partially removed by the married woman's act.—Edwards v. McEnhill, 51 Mich. 160.

¶ 230. A married woman's power to contract is statutory, and cannot be extended beyond the constitutional and statutory limits.—Holmes v. Bronson, 43 Mich. 562.

¶ 231. A married woman, possessing property of her own, may enter into a contract with a third person for domestic services.—Fox v. Schumann, 191 Mich. 331.

¶ 232. Under our statutes, contracts of sale by a married woman are to be treated as if made by a feme sole.—Durfee v. McClurg, 6 Mich. 223.

§ 76. Necessity and sufficiency of consideration to wife.

Conveyance or transfer of property as consideration, see post § 77.
Future property of wife as consideration, see post § 78.
Abstaining from litigation affecting wife's property, see post § 79.
Burden of proof and presumptions as to consideration moving to wife, see post § 93.
Sufficiency of consideration to wife for conveyance, see post § 134.

Other notes as consideration for note of married woman, see Contracts ¶ 452.
Personal liability of wife of mortgagor who joined in note and mortgage solely to waive dower rights, see Foreclosure ¶ 701.

¶ 233. A wife is not liable on notes signed by her while married unless the consideration goes to her.—Pomeroy v. Everett, 195 Mich. 147.

¶ 234. Consideration must be shown to make out a cause of action against a married woman under coverture, when sued upon her promissory note, whether negotiable or not.—Buhler v. Jennings, 49 Mich. 538; Holmes v. Bronson, 43 Mich. 562.

¶ 235. A married woman cannot be held liable upon her note without connecting her with the consideration as she has no general power to make notes or other contracts. —Schlatterer v. Nickodemus, 51 Mich. 626.

¶ 236. A married woman is not liable on a promissory note which she signed with her husband, if no consideration passed to her from the party to whom the note was given. A consideration as between herself and her husband is not enough.—Reed v. Buys, 44 Mich. 80.

¶ 237. An extension of time on a husband's debt is not sufficient consideration to impose liability upon a married woman who joins with her husband in a note for the debt.—West v. Laraway, 28 Mich. 464.

¶ 238. Defendant, who wished to obtain a loan for carrying on her husband's business, made a promissory note for the amount required, due in one year, and secured the same by a chattel mortgage upon her separate property. Upon its appearing that the payee, plaintiff's agent, would be unable to discount the one-year note, defendant's husband gave his three-months' note, and the money was obtained on this note upon plaintiff's indorsement. Defendant's note and mortgage were delivered to plaintiff as security. Thereafter defendant gave her note in renewal of the one on which the loan had been secured, and the security in plaintiff's hands was canceled. Held, that defendant, by mortgaging her separate property to secure the indebtedness, became liable for the debt, and was therefore liable on the renewal note.—Marx v. Bellel, 114 Mich. 631.

§ 77. ——Conveyance or transfer of property as consideration.

¶ 239. A wife did not obtain such an interest in land deeded to herself and her husband, as to make her separate property liable upon a note signed by her with her husband in the acquiring of the property.—Doane v. Feather's Estate, 119 Mich. 691.

¶ 240. Where the plaintiff contracted to sell land to a man and his wife, and subsequently, on the she and her h tracted to sell wards securing interest in the the plaintiff joi to a third pers of purchase wa sideration, and r —Rogers v. Eat § 78. ——Future tion.

¶ 241. A ma pay must be bas tion and may r quired by or i tract.—Johnson ¶ 242. A cont wife and a thir is to set out a by the former, other, and is to for a term of ye wife, although s to the land.—E 235.

§ 79. ——Abstai wife's pr

¶ 243. An a prosecuting a de or property is a where it was n with a married one on her beh assurances to h signed a joint proceedings wo tate of her fat was held as su make out any separate prope Mich. 464.

¶ 244. A not woman for the same amount a prevent the pa to collect the s to her by her on the claim th tary and in fra by a sufficient binding on her Stoughton, 112

§ 80. Relation property
Incidental or i erty or inte
Separate prope ante II, C.
Charges on sep 148.
Relation of cont erty as que ¶ 299.

Competent evidence to show relation of contract to separate property, see also post ¶ 288.
Power to contract with reference to her earnings, see Comp. L. 1915, § 11478.
Liability of wife on contracts relating to her sole property, see Comp. L. 1915, § 11487.

¶ 245. A married woman has no general capacity to contract, and can only make such contracts as relate to her own property, and become personally liable only on account of her own matters.—West v. Laraway, 28 Mich. 464; Kitchell v. Mudgett, 37 Mich. 81; Jenne v. Marble, 37 Mich. 319; Edwards v. McEnhill, 51 Mich. 160; Schlatterer v. Nickodemus, 51 Mich. 626; Howe v. North, 69 Mich. 272.

¶ 246. A married woman cannot make a mere personal obligation not connected with nor charging her separate property.—De Vries v. Conklin, 22 Mich. 255; Jenne v. Marble, 37 Mich. 319.

¶ 247. The statute does not empower a married woman to make contracts generally, but only in respect to her own property.—Artman v. Ferguson, 73 Mich. 146; Case Threshing Machine Co. v. Mitchell, 74 Mich. 679.

¶ 248. A married woman can make no obligation except on account of her own property.—Detroit Lumber Co. v. Cleff, 164 Mich. 276.

¶ 249. A married woman's contract except with reference to separate property is void.—Judd v. Judd, 187 Mich. 612.

¶ 250. A feme covert may contract and bind herself in relation to her separate property and estate already possessed, or referring to it.—Menard v. Campbell, 180 Mich. 583.

¶ 251. A married woman cannot be personally liable on an executory promise unless it concerns her separate estate; and her note given for any other consideration is void.—Kenton Ins. Co. v. McClellan, 43 Mich. 564.

¶ 252. A married woman's promise to pay must be based on a property consideration and relate to property already possessed by her, or to be acquired by or in consideration of the contract.—Johnson v. Sutherland, 39 Mich. 579.

¶ 253. Whether a married woman's power to contract for property is limited to cases relating to her sole property, quære.—Tillman v. Shackleton, 15 Mich. 447.

¶ 254. Where the plaintiff contracted to sell land to a man and his wife, and subsequently, on the latter's representation that she and her husband had separated, contracted to sell the land to her, she afterwards securing a release of her husband's interest in the property, and later she and the plaintiff joined in a contract to convey to a third person, held, that her contract of purchase was based on a sufficient consideration, and related to her separate estate.—Rogers v. Eaton, 181 Mich. 620.

§ 81. ——Incidental or indirect benefits to her property or interests.

¶ 255. The subscription of a married woman to a fund for the purpose of securing the location of a business block in the vicinity of property owned by her is not within the power to contract conferred by the married woman's act (How. St., § 6295), although her property is incidentally benefited by the improvement.—Detroit Chamber of Commerce v. Goodman, 110 Mich. 498.

¶ 256. A married woman's power to make contracts depends, under Comp. L. 1871, § 4803, How. St. § 6295, upon whether the contract deals with her individual estate; it cannot be supported by possible incidental benefits such as she might receive as one of a corporation from a contract made in its behalf.—Russel v. People's Savings Bank, 39 Mich. 671.

§ 82. Liability to assignees and bona fide holders of contracts.

Estoppel to assert disability, see ante § 90.
Liability on negotiable note, see also ante ¶ 234.
Liability to bona fide holders of negotiable instruments generally, see Negotiable Instruments, XIII.

¶ 257. A married woman's contracts, whether negotiable or not, are no better in the hands of a bona fide holder than in those of the first holder.—Johnson v. Sutherland, 39 Mich. 579; Holmes v. Bronson, 43 Mich. 562; Waterbury v. Andrews, 67 Mich. 281.

§ 83. Capacity to receive and hold real property.

Right of wife to purchase at sale by husband's assignee, see Assignments for Creditors § 22.
Right of wife of mortgagor who was party to mortgage to release her dower to buy property from foreclosure purchaser, see Foreclosure ¶ 575.

¶ 258. A wife may now by statute hold property in her own name, and a deed of real estate may be made directly to her without the intervention of a third person as trustee.—People v. Horton, 4 Mich. 67.

§ 84. Capacity to receive, hold and enforce security.

Capacity to receive conveyance from husband, see ante § 54.
Right to hold mortgage against husband's land, see ante § 44.

¶ 259. A married woman who, being possessed of separate estate, indorses notes to get security for the maker's debt to her, and takes from him a mortgage securing both her debt and the indorsed notes, is open to objection from neither the mortgagor nor attaching creditors of his to her holding the mortgage as security for her indorsements. —Showman v. Lee, 79 Mich. 653.

§ 85. Capacity to act as agent or trustee.

General law of agency, see Agency.

Powers of trustees generally, see Trusts.

¶ 260. A married woman may be an agent for a stranger or a third person.—Showman v. Lee, 79 Mich. 653.

¶ 261. A married woman may be a trustee. —Showman v. Lee, 79 Mich. 653.

§ 86. Authority to give bonds.

¶ 262. At common law the bond of a feme covert is void.—Palmer v. Oakley, 2 D. 433.

¶ 263. A married woman may now give a bond as guardian if the appointment puts property under her control.—Goss v. Stone, 63 Mich. 319.

¶ 264. A married woman may be principal on her own bond as a liquor-dealer.—Amperse v. Kalamazoo Common Council, 59 Mich. 78.

¶ 265. A married woman filing a bond as a dealer in intoxicating liquors is entitled to same rights under the law as any other person filing such a bond.—Amperse v. Kalamazoo Common Council, 59 Mich. 78.

§ 87. Power to enter into arbitrations.

Law of arbitration in general, see Arbitration.

Award on submission by husband and wife as binding him though void as to her, see Arbitration ¶ 60.

¶ 266. Comp. L. 1897, § 10924, governing arbitrations and excepting married women from the persons who may enter into arbitrations thereunder, has no application to a common law arbitration.—Hoste v. Dalton, 137 Mich. 522.

¶ 267. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 8690, giving a married woman complete power to contract with relation to her own property, she may enter into a common law arbitration with reference thereto.—Hoste v. Dalton, 137 Mich. 522.

§ 88. Rights and status when husband abandons family.

Right to bring separate maintenance suit, see post VII.

Criminal liability of deserting husband, see post § 196.

Wife's rights in personalty on premises of husband after separation, see Comp. L. 1915, § 11475.

¶ 273. In an action against a married woman on a promissory note given by her, the defense that the money was not borrowed for the use of her separate estate is not available where the plaintiff loaned it to the defendant personally for use in building a house upon a lot bought with her money and in the belief that the lot was deeded to the defendant alone instead of to her and her husband.—June v. Labadie, 138 Mich. 52.

§ 91. Equitable relief from default or failure to plead incapacity.

¶ 274. When a married woman is sued upon a contract which in fact she had no capacity to make, if she raises no objection, but, though duly served, suffers the case to go to judgment against her, she cannot be relieved in equity.—Wilson v. Coolidge, 42 Mich. 112.

§ 92. Burden of proof and presumptions.

As to consideration moving to wife, see post § 93.

¶ 275. The common-law disabilities of a married woman being only partially removed by our statutes, one who relies upon a wife's contract must show affirmatively that it relates to her separate property.—Fechheimer v. Peirce, 70 Mich. 440; Speier v. Opfer, 73 Mich. 35.

¶ 276. A married woman cannot be held on her contract without affirmative proof that it is her own and within her powers.—West v. Laraway, 28 Mich. 464.

¶ 277. One who relies upon a contract made by a married woman must show the facts in order that it may appear whether she had capacity to make it. So held where the contract relied on was one of partnership between herself and her husband.—Edwards v. McEnhill, 51 Mich. 160.

¶ 278. An Indiana married woman cannot, by pleading disqualification to contract, evade payment of notes given by her for goods purchased in Michigan, without showing that the laws of Indiana do so disqualify her.—Wheeler v. Constantine, 39 Mich. 62.

§ 93. ——As to consideration moving to wife.

Necessity and sufficiency of consideration, see ante §§ 76-79.

¶ 279. In an action on promissory note given by a married woman, the burden of proof rests upon the plaintiff to show that the consideration passed to her.—Judd v. Judd, 187 Mich. 612.

¶ 280. Where, in a suit against one of the makers of a promissory note, it appears the defendant is a married woman, the burden is upon plaintiff to show that the consideraton for the note passed to her.—Fisk v. Mills, 104 Mich. 433.

¶ 281. There is no presumption of consideration from the signing of a note by a married woman; it must be proved.—Fechheimer v. Peirce, 70 Mich. 440.

¶ 282. It must be presumed that a wife is not liable on notes signed by her and her husband while she is married.—Pomeroy v. Everett, 195 Mich. 147.

¶ 283. A woman buying goods suitable for ordinary family use, at the store whose proprietor knows she is married and living with her husband, is presumed to be buying on her husband's account and for the use of the family, and is not individually liable.—Powers v. Russell, 26 Mich. 179.

¶ 284. A married woman may be personally liable upon her indorsement of paper due to herself, upon an affirmative showing that it was directly for the advantage of her own estate.—Russel v. People's Savings Bank, 39 Mich. 671.

¶ 285. Where a married woman has put her name below her husband's on a note which does not appear to concern her separate estate, and so that she may be either a codebtor or his surety, proof of the signature does not make out a prima facie liability aganst her, especially if it is an open question whether she did not sign as surety. So, also, with assignments signed by her for collateral in his behalf, without consideration moving to her, and without regard to her own estate.—Mutual Ben. Life Ins. Co. v. Wayne County Sav. Bank, 68 Mich. 116.

§ 94. Admissibility and sufficiency of evidence.

Res gestæ of possession or claim of right of wife, see Evidence ¶ 2368.

¶ 286. In an action against a married woman to charge her individually for goods purchased, it is competent for her to show any fact tending to prove that the goods were purchased for or on account of her husband.—Powers v. Russell, 26 Mich. 179.

¶ 287. On an issue as to whether a note for borrowed money signed by a wife, since deceased, and her husband was for a loan to him or for a loan to her on which he was only a surety, testimony of persons who had worked upon a farm owned by such married woman that she paid them their wages, is admissible as bearing upon the question whether the farm was conducted in her interests or her husband's and thus to show for whom the money was borrowed.—Feather v. Feather's Estate, 116 Mich. 384.

¶ 288. On the question whether notes were those pertaining to a wife's separate business and estate, it was proper to show the origin of the business and of an account with plaintiff bank and a change therein from the husband's name, accompanied by a transfer to her of his farm, the continuation of the business through his agency for her, her frequent response to notifications of overdrafts made on the account in connection with the business and her custom of referring the bank to her husband in such matters, the notes in suit being claimed to be notes given to cover overdrafts among other items.—First Commercial Bank v. Newton, 117 Mich. 433.

¶ 289. In an action against a husband and wife on a note signed by the wife and indorsed by her husband, the defense being that it was given for the husband's benefit, evidence as to their business relations and the amount and extent of business carried on by each, is admissible.—National Lumberman's Bank v. Miller, 131 Mich. 564.

¶ 290. Where, in an action against a married woman for the price of goods, it is material to show that credit was not extended to the husband but to the wife, plaintiff may be allowed to answer the questions whether, prior to the sale, he had tried to collect a long standing claim against defendant's husband, whether the claim which he had tried to collect of the husband was litigated and taken to the supreme court, and whether he would not have charged the goods to the husband if requested to do so by the wife.—Hirschfield v. Waldron, 83 Mich. 116.

¶ 291. A married woman sued on a note given for liquor sold to her may, if plaintiff claims that she owns a saloon and that he sold her the liquor on her credit, give evidence that the saloon was her husband's; for in such case she could not have bound herself to pay for the liquor, unless she led defendant to believe the business was hers, that the sale was to her, and on the strength of it credit was given to her.—Chamberlain v. Murrin, 92 Mich. 361.

¶ 292. A married woman can make no obligation except on account of her separate property, and any one seeking to hold her must make out an affirmative case.—Fechheimer v. Peirce, 70 Mich. 440.

¶ 293. Undisputed testimony that a married woman received the full amount of the face of notes signed by her sufficiently establishes the fact of consideration.—Crampton v. Newton's Estate, 132 Mich. 149.

¶ 294. The fact that goods were charged to a wife upon the books of a merchant is not conclusive evidence that they were sold on her credit alone.—Taylor-Woolfenden Co. v. Atkinson, 127 Mich. 633.

¶ 295. In a suit upon a promissory note signed by husband and wife, it appeared that part of the consideration for the note was money paid to the husband by the payee by request, as the payee claimed of the wife. The testimony failed to show that the wife stated to the payee at the time he advanced the money to her husband that it was for the benefit of her separate estate, and it conclusively appeared from the evidence that it was not. Held, that a judgment against the wife for the amount of the note cannot be sustained.—Fisk v. Mills, 104 Mich. 438.

¶ 296. Where a married woman, upon receiving a deed from her husband of his farm, told a laborer on the farm that she had a deed of the place and wished him to continue to work as formerly, and that she would pay him, to which he made no reply but continued to work, she giving directions about the farm and at one time making a payment to the laborer, held, that no formal termination of the contract between the laborer and the husband was necessary, and that a finding that a contract existed between the laborer and the wife in relation to the latter's separate estate was justified.—Mosher v. Kittle, 101 Mich. 345.

¶ 297. In an action against a married woman for work done, held, that the evidence entitled plaintiff to go to the jury upon his contention that defendant employed him to do the work upon articles which she owned or claimed to own.—Lempke v. Felcher, 115 Mich. 37.

¶ 298. In the matter of a claim against the estate of a wife, upon a note signed by her and her husband, testimony that the husband was told that claimant would let the wife have the money if she signed the note; that the husband was the general agent of the wife in all her business; that she handled all the money and paid the help upon the farm; that it was her farm upon which the husband and wife lived and that the business was transacted from there, all had a tendency to show what was done with the money borrowed, and that it was for the use of the wife.—Webb v. Feather's Estate, 119 Mich. 473.

§ 95. Questions of law and fact and instructions.

¶ 299. Whether a married woman's promissory note, which recited that it was given for value received by her since she became the sole owner of a stock of groceries formerly belonging to her deceased son, had reference to her separate estate, is a question for the jury, upon evidence that the note was in payment of rent for the store building leased to her husband by the name of the son, and that she had purchased the goods and was in possession when the note was given, and had owned the stock for a long time.—Sherrod v. Costigan, 111 Mich. 644.

¶ 300. In an action on a promissory note, wherein defendant, a married woman, introduced no evidence, plaintiff's testimony that he originally held the husband's note for the same amount; that the latter transferred to the defendant all of his property; that defendant learned of it and, charging both with the fraud, she thereupon promised, in consideration of plaintiff's forbearing to attack the transfer as fraudulent, to pay the debt; that a new note was then executed by the defendant and her husband; and that such note had been kept alive by renewals for nineteen years, was sufficient to go to the jury upon the question whether defendant's promise was in fact made upon such consideration, though the husband testified that there was some consideration for the transfer to his wife.—Whelpley v. Stoughton, 112 Mich. 594.

¶ 301. Where plaintiff in an action against a wife upon a note testified that the husband made statements in the presence of the wife that the money was desired to charge her separate property which was contradicted by both the husband and the wife, the question as to whether or not the statement was made, was for the jury.—Vosburg v. Brown, 119 Mich. 697.

¶ 302. In an action to hold a wife upon a note signed by her and her husband, testimony that a statement made by the husband in the presence of the wife, to the effect that if the latter took the money she could pay up her mortgage, raised the question for the jury as to whether the money was borrowed for the wife's separate estate.—Vosburg v. Brown, 119 Mich. 697.

¶ 303. Evidence that a wife applied for a loan on her own note without security, stating that she did not like to ask her husband for his indorsement, but that she secured his indorsement on being told that the loan would not likely be accepted without it, is sufficient to raise a question for the jury whether the loan was for her individual estate.—National Lumberman's Bank v. Miller, 131 Mich. 564.

¶ 304. Where a husband and wife jointly sue for a breach of warranty of sale and the evidence is conflicting whether the purchase was joint and whether the wife signing a note, given in payment, intended to sign as a surety or joint maker, and question as to whether the purchase was joint is for the jury.—Eaton v. Hope, 177 Mich. 411.

¶ 305. In an action by the administrator of an estate against a husband and wife on promissory notes given to decedent, and in which it was claimed that no consideration passed to the wife, where it appeared that the wife filed a claim against the deceased in the probate court setting forth that she furnished a home and certain services to decedent pursuant to an agreement whereby such note would be canceled and become the property of claimant for the furnishing of a home to deceased, and in the jurat to the claim she made oath that the deceased was indebted to her in the amount set forth over and above all legal set-offs, and it further appeared that the wife in a conversation with the administrator after the death of deceased spoke of the liability as though it it were a joint matter, held that it was question for the jury as to whether the wife received consideration for such notes herself.—Pomeroy v. Everett, 195 Mich. 147. (Ostrander, J., dissenting.)

¶ 306. Where a wife denies having any interest in a transaction, alleged to be a joint purchase of land, except the interest usually taken by a wife in her husband's affairs, and she is charged with having a pecuniary interest in an action for the price it may be error for the court to refuse to instruct the jury to give the marital relation due weight in considering the question.—Lazenby v. Omo, 50 Mich. 52.

¶ 307. A grocer sued a widow for an unpaid balance of an account for family groceries, the items of which were charged in a pass-book marked with the name of her husband. The plaintiff introduced testimony tending to show that defendant owned a separate estate; that the goods were procured and sold on her individual credit, and that she had repeatedly promised payment. Defendant disputed this, and the court instructed the jury that if it was so, plaintiff was entitled to recover; otherwise not. Held, that the question involved was a question of fact; that the evidence was relevant, and that defendant could not complain of the instruction.—Paul v. Roberts, 50 Mich. 611.

¶ 308. An instruction of the court on an issue as to the liability of the estate of a married woman, deceased, upon a joint and several bond issued by herself and her husband, that if the jury were satisfied that deceased borrowed the money, and that it was used for the benefit of her estate, then the plaintiff was entitled to recover, notwithstanding that deceased was a married woman, and that she and her husband signed the bond; but that, if she and her husband jointly borrowed the money, their verdict must be for the defendant, was correct and in harmony with earlier decisions of this court.—Wilson v. Estate of Wilson, 80 Mich. 472.

¶ 309. A request for an instruction that a married woman sued for the price of goods could not be held unless she told plaintiff to charge them to her individually is covered by an instruction that she would be bound if she told plaintiff to charge them to her.—Hirschfield v. Waldron, 83 Mich. 116.

¶ 310. In an action against a married woman on a note for goods a charge, that, if the store was sold to her and the plaintiff sold goods to her on her credit, "it makes no difference" whether her husband owned the store or they owned it together, is misleading; since if they owned it together she could not bind herself and if he owned it she could not bind herself, unless in either case she had so represented the facts that the plaintiff would have been warranted in supposing that she was owner and purchaser for such business as a sole trader. It is also misleading as indicating that it all depended on whom credit was extended to.—Chamberlain v. Murrin, 92 Mich. 361.

¶ 311. In an action against a wife to charge her separate estate upon a note, an instruction stating that if the jury found that the money was loaned to the wife on representations made by her husband in her presence that she desired the money to make a payment on a mortgage on her separate property and that plaintiff relied on this representation then it was immaterial whether the money was applied for the benefit of the wife's separate estate or not, was not error. —Vosburg v. Brown, 119 Mich. 697.

¶ 312. In an action against a married woman for the value of house furnishings, in which evidence of a proceeding against plaintiff's husband approximating the amount of the claim in question against the wife, was introduced, and where there was convincing evidence as in the nature of an admission that the husband was the original debtor, an instruction submitting to the jury the question whether the claim involved in the suit against the husband was the same as that involved in the suit against the wife, was reversible error.—Beard v. Hoffman, 133 Mich. 624.

¶ 313. Plaintiff furnished certain furniture and saloon fixtures to defendant's husband who had leased a building and taken out a saloon license in his own name. The goods were charged to him and several statements of the account were made out in his name. There was no testimony from which it could be fairly inferred that the credit was extended to defendant or that the work was done for her. The husband gave his wife a chattel mortgage on the property in the saloon and later a bill of sale. Both testified that these were given for money loaned the husband by his wife. It was shown that in a suit the year before the husband swore that his wife was owner and lessee of the premises. Held that verdict should have been directed for defendant.—Hoffman v. Goldsmith, 131 Mich. 293.

B. AGENCY OF HUSBAND FOR WIFE.

§ 96. In general; existence of agency and necessity for authorization.

Limitations and scope of agency, see post § 97.
Authority respecting particular acts and doings, see post §§ 98-101.
Improvements and expenditures on wife's realty, see post § 102.
Wife as undisclosed principal, see post § 103.
Notice to or knowledge of husband to affect wife, see post § 104.
Adoption and ratification, see post § 105.
Liability for husband's debts in course of his agency, see post § 106.
Liability for husl wrongful acts,
Estoppel to deny (§ 108.
Burden of proof a: § 109.
Admissibility and s post § 110.
Questions of law s see post § 111.
Agency of wife fo
General law of ag
Threats against hus other, see Dur
Agency for husba crime of embez

¶ 314. A woman her husband's cons he is interested, a edge of her claims a will not be bound for, made without her husband and t gan, 50 Mich. 77.

¶ 315. Where a a firm deals with h of it, for the excha bill held by her husband is in no agent; and her rigl cisely what those of be.—Moore v. Foot

§ 97. Limitations an

Nature of contract or for sale, see

¶ 316. A married agent any powers w herself. and her age as to her separate p with such agents powers.—Holmes v.

¶ 317. The fact wife's agent procur by himself and his ever, for his sole b right against the v to know the law as to the wife un rowed for the bene or she has made re her from setting u Spencer, 87 Mich.

¶ 318. Where, in a wife acts for h tion, what her hus as her agent becom Solomon, 97 Mich.

§ 98. Authority re doings.

To carry on busin
To execute negoti tracts relating § 100.

To deal with wife's trust property, see post § 101.
Power or authority of husband to convey lands held by the entirety, see ante II, B.
Disability of husband to contract for release of dower right without wife's consent, see Dower § 21.

¶ 319. A. received from his wife a power of attorney to sell and convey land, and, on the same day on which it was recorded, he conveyed the land to B., who immediately reconveyed to A. Subsequently A. conveyed to C. Held, that the transaction between A. and B. was void on its face, and that a grantee from A.'s wife could recover in ejectment against C.—McKay v. Williams, 67 Mich. 547.

§ 99. ——To carry on business.

Right of married woman to carry on business in general, see post §§ 121-123.

¶ 320. The husband may act as his wife's agent in her business.—Rankin v. West, 25 Mich. 195.

¶ 321. A married woman may constitute her husband her agent to carry on business for her in her name.—First Commercial Bank v. Newton, 117 Mich. 433.

¶ 322. A wife is bound by such statements of her husband as he has made in the course of a business conducted in her name but wholly by him.—Leland v. Collver, 34 Mich. 418.

§ 100. ——To execute negotiable instruments and contracts relating to her business.

Law of execution of instruments in general, see Execution of Instruments.

¶ 323. A married woman is liable on promissory notes executed by her husband in her name by her authority in a matter relating to her separate business which she is carrying on in her own name.—First Commercial Bank v. Newton, 117 Mich. 433.

§ 101 ——To deal with wife's trust properties.

¶ 324. The agreements of the husband of a cestui que trust with the trustees are not binding upon the wife.—Schwarz v. Wendell, W. 267.

§ 102. Improvements and expenditures on wife's realty.

Husband's improvement on wife's land as her separate property, see ante § 43.
Liability of wife for money borrowed for improvements on her land, see post ¶ 399.
Improvements on property owned jointly with husband after husband's death, see post ¶ 387.

¶ 325. A married woman is not personally responsible, and her land is not bound, for improvements and expenditures made on it by her husband, where no credit has been given to her and he has contracted on her behalf.—Morrison v. Berry, 42 Mich. 389; Detroit Lumber Co. v. Cleff, 164 Mich. 276.

¶ 326. A married woman is not liable for the cost of improvements put into her own house, where the work is done in reliance on the responsibility for her husband and by his directions.—Holmes v. Bronson, 43 Mich. 562.

¶ 327. Where a husband has contracted on his own responsibility for work to be done on his wife's house, and the other party to the contract, knowing it to be hers and that she has been consulted and has given directions as to the work, has dealt with the husband as sole contractor and not as her agent, such party cannot recover against the wife for the work.—Newcomb v. Andrews, 41 Mich. 518.

¶ 328. A wife who has taken from her husband a deed of land previously leased by him is liable for work done and materials furnished thereafter by the lessee at the request of her husband acting as her agent.—Luebe v. Thorpe, 94 Mich. 268.

§ 103. Wife as undisclosed principal.

General doctrine of undisclosed principal, see Agency, II, F.

¶ 329. Where the plaintiff sold goods to a hotel keeper, thinking he was the owner, when in fact he was acting as agent for his wife, the plaintiff may abandon his claim against the agent, and sue the undisclosed principal.—Schweyer v. Jones, 152 Mich. 241.

¶ 330. A wife is liable for building material furnished at the order of and at the credit of her husband to be used upon a building being erected upon her land with her full knowledge and consent and without a showing of an intended gift by the husband to her, it is like any other case of undisclosed principal.—Popp v. Connery, 138 Mich. 84.

§ 104. Notice to or knowledge of husband to affect wife.

¶ 331. Where notice of an assignment of a mortgage upon his wife's land is given to her husband who has transacted all of her business relating to the mortgage, such notice is notice to her.—Cox v. Cayan, 117 Mich. 599.

¶ 332. In the course of a business conducted in a wife's name but wholly by her husband, notice to him is notice to her.—Leland v. Collver, 34 Mich. 418.

¶ 333. Notice to the husband of a woman whose tenant is sued in ejectment is not notice to her.—Powers v. Scholtens, 79 Mich. 299.

¶ 334. Knowledge of a husband, if proved, that he was taking title in himself to his wife's land by reconveyance upon payment of a loan secured by deed to such land, in which both husband and wife joined, is not chargeable to his wife; where, in an action to reform such deed, it appears she was ignorant of such conveyance of title to him; since he was acting in his own interests, and adversely to her, and the doctrine that imputes knowledge of agent to his principal does not apply.—Huot v. Reeder Brothers Shoe Co., 140 Mich. 162.

§ 105. Adoption and ratification.

Adoption and ratification in general, see Agency, II, C.

Acquiescence of wife in husband's agreement with broker, see Brokers ¶ 201.

¶ 335. If a married woman freely and fully acknowledges as her free act and deed a mortgage to which her name was penned by her husband with her assent, she accepts the signature as her own and is bound by the mortgage.—Johnson v. Van Velsor, 43 Mich. 208.

¶ 336. Where a husband sues upon his contract to furnish his own services and those of his wife, the wife's evidence in support of his demand sufficiently ratifies such contract.—Harrington v. Gies, 45 Mich. 374.

¶ 337. A husband sold an undivided half of a steam-mill belonging to his wife, and by the contract of sale a partnership arrangement in regard to the use of the mill was made between the vendee and the husband. Held, that the wife could not affirm the sale without affirming the partnership agreement, and that such affirmance must be treated, as far as equities accrued to the vendee under the arrangement, as a previous assent to her husband's dealing as he did, and that she would be bound by his acts.—Widner v. Olmstead, 14 Mich. 124.

¶ 338. The pledging of her credit by a married woman for house furnishings of a house occupied by her and her husband, made when she was present in plaintiff's store, was only operative as to purchases made at that time and thereafter, and did not extend to a prior purchase made by the husband.—Beard v. Hoffman, 133 Mich. 624.

§ 106. Liability for husband's debts in course of his agency.

Liability for husband's debts in general, see post § 116.

Liability of husband's debts, see Const. art. XVI, § 8.

¶ 339. Where an insolvent debtor, as a means of supporting his family, devotes his time to carrying on a business owned by his wife, the accumulations, as against his creditors, belong to the wife, especially when she puts her private fortune and her own labor into the business; and she has the right to turn her interest over to her children, should she choose to do so.—Shelden v. Shattuck, 108 Mich. 344.

¶ 340. Where a married woman was owner of a flouring-mill, and her husband, assuming to be her agent, carried on in the mill the business of buying and manufacturing wheat, and selling flour, mill feed, etc., as well as doing custom grinding—the business amounting to from $50,000 to $100,000 a year, and being done mostly on capital borrowed on the credit of the business—it was held that the property acquired in the business was not protected by this statute from being liable to the debts and obligations of her husband.—Glover v. Alcott, 11 Mich. 470.

¶ 341. Where a note was executed by a husband in his wife's name by her authority and in his own for a debt upon which she was personally liable it is not necessary under the statutes (How. St. §§ 6298, 7352) to sue him before suing her.—First Commercial Bank v. Newton, 117 Mich. 433.

§ 107. Liability for husband's unauthorized and wrongful acts.

¶ 342. Where a mortgagee of household goods has wrongfully sold them, his wife is not rendered jointly liable with him by his taking in part payment a note held against her and by his consulting her as to which of the goods he shall let the payee have.—Iler v. Baker, 82 Mich. 226.

§ 108. Estoppel to deny or assert agency.

Estoppel or bar of contract rights in general, see post § 129.

Estoppel to assert disability, see ante § 90.

General principles of estoppel, see Estoppel.

Title of wife in succession to husband as title affected by his earlier grant in which she joined, see Estoppel ¶ 61.

Estoppel by silence and nonclaim to assert right in property sold by husband as his own, see also Estoppel ¶ 134.

¶ 343. A married woman may be estopped by the acts of her husband in dealing with her property as his own with her knowledge and acquiescence.—Case v. Erwin, 18 Mich. 434.

¶ 344. Where a wife, as a holder of stock in a limited partnership, presented to her by her husband, permits him for a period of years to manage the business, she is estopped to set up in a bill for accounting that he acted without her authority.—Mack v. Engel, 165 Mich. 540.

¶ 345. Where a man and wife acquired title by adverse possession to land occupied by them as a homestead, the fact that the husband only subsequently contracted for the purchase of the premises from the owner of the record title, does not, after the former's death, estop his widow and heirs from asserting the title previously adversely acquired.—Carlson v. Wisconsin Land & Lumber Co., 186 Mich. 212.

§ 109. Burden of proof and presumptions.

Presumption of agency of husband for wife, see also Agency ¶ 37.

Presumption as to husband's authority to assent to condition under which dedication by wife was accepted, see Dedication ¶ 97.

¶ 346. A wife is not liable for bills contracted by the husband for the repair of her automobile where it is not affirmatively shown that she authorized the husband to contract on her account.—Armstrong v. Backus, 196 Mich. 735.

¶ 347. There can be no presumption of a husband's authority to act for his wife.—Fechheimer v. Peirce, 70 Mich. 440.

¶ 348. There can be no presumption of a husband's authority to act for his wife, and a person seeking to hold her for acts done by another must show affirmatively full authority to bind her.—Detroit Lumber Co. v. Cleff, 164 Mich. 276.

¶ 349. A presumption that a husband who ordered a fixture for realty owned by his wife, made the purchase not for himself but for her, and that she ratified the transaction, arises from the fact that on the note given for the purchase money his name followed by the word "surety" was written below his wife's signature.—Ensign v. Dunn, 181 Mich. 456.

¶ 350. A husband's authority to borrow money for his wife upon their joint note cannot be presumed from his having acted for her in other matters of business.—Three Rivers National Bank v. Gilchrist, 83 Mich. 253.

¶ 351. A wife, by allowing her husband to pay a part of his indebtedness with her money, does not thereby raise such a presumption of authority as to make herself liable to pay the rest of the debt.—O'Donnell v. Bray, 99 Mich. 534.

¶ 352. Where negotiations for the sale of land owned by husband and wife are carried on by the husband, and the wife, in consummation thereof, joins with her husband in a deed of the land to the proposed purchaser, which he refuses to accept, and they file a bill to enforce the specific performance of the contract, the necessary authority on the part of the husband to carry on the negotiations in behalf of his wife will be presumed, in the absence of proof to the contrary.—Newberry v. Slafter, 98 Mich. 468.

§ 110. Admissibility and sufficiency of evidence.

Agency of husband to make admissions binding wife, see Evidence §§ 424, 425.

¶ 353. A husband's authority to borrow money for his wife upon their joint note cannot be shown by his declarations.—Three Rivers National Bank v. Gilchrist, 83 Mich. 253.

¶ 354. Evidence that a husband buying an automobile told the seller he intended to give it to his wife, does not establish that the husband was acting as agent for his wife, although the receipted statement of sale treated the price as due from her, and she, to the seller's knowledge, knew of the transaction, where payment was to be made in shares of stock by the husband.—Gero v. Abbott, 157 Mich. 573. (McAlvay, Moore and Brooke, JJ., dissenting.)

¶ 355. In a suit for goods sold there was evidence that the goods were charged to defendant and payments on account were made by her. Defendant herself testified that she selected and received the goods, and made statements tending to show that she purchased them. On examination by her attorney she contradicted her direct testimony, stating that she never knew the goods were not charged to her husband. Held, the court was in error in directing a verdict for defendant upon the ground that the evidence showed the goods were bought by the husband and that there was no evidence that they were purchased by defendant.—W. A. Sturgeon & Co. v. Van Studdiford, 165 Mich. 309.

¶ 356. A wife, to whom her husband had assigned a non-negotiable note, at his request, and without consideration, guaranteed the payment of the note to bearer, and delivered it to her husband, to be used by him in the payment of his own debts. The husband discounted the note at a bank, upon the representation that his wife was pecuniarily responsible and that he desired to use the proceeds of the note for his own purposes. He paid a draft and an account which the bank held against him for collection, and used the remainder of the money, except $100, which he deposited with the bank to his wife's credit, in the payment of his debts. Held, in a suit by the bank upon the guaranty of payment, that if any inference of agency could be drawn from the possession of the note by the husband, it was repelled by his proposed application of the proceeds, made known to the bank officers before the discount; and that the bank cannot say that the note was discounted for the wife's benefit.—First Nat. Bank v. Hanscom, 104 Mich. 67.

¶ 357. In a proceeding to foreclose a mortgage where the defendants allege, supported by the evidence, that they turned over to the complainant's husband the promissory note of the third party in payment of the mortgage and it is shown that the husband acted for the complainant in acquiring the mortgage it may be assumed that the payment to the husband was effective notwithstanding adverse testimony to the effect that the husband purchased the note for cash and that he had no authority to act for his wife.—Korf v. Korf, 125 Mich. 259.

¶ 358. Testimony tending to show that a husband purchased certain chairs for use on a boat owned by his wife, and that the latter, after the purchase, promised to either return or pay for the chairs, was sufficient to sustain a judgment against the wife.—Foster Charles & Ewen Co. v. Fletcher, 119 Mich. 353.

¶ 359. Where a married woman made an unconditional assignment of a mortgage to a third person and delivered it to her husband, who delivered it over to such third party, and took from the latter a receipt stating that it was received of the husband as collateral security for a debt owing by the husband to the assignee, the court refused to hold from these facts that the assignment was intended by the wife as security only.—Durfee v. McClurg, 6 Mich. 223.

¶ 360. Evidence that the husband was given unlimited authority to act for his wife in all transactions of a partnership in which she was a partner is held sufficient to show that he acted for her in trading certain materials belonging to the partnership for other materials furnished by the defendant so as to show payment and defeat an action by the partnership for the materials furnished the defendant.—People, for Use of Roberts v. Lappin, 129 Mich. 172.

¶ 361. Complainant's husband having made an arrangement of the debt secured by the assignment, and agreed with defendant that the latter should have and retain an absolute title to the mortgage, it was held that this arrangement was binding upon complainant, and that she could not require defendant to re-assign to her the mortgage.—Durfee v. McClurg, 6 Mich. 223.

¶ 362. Where the findings of fact in a suit on a note showed that defendant, a married woman, was engaged in business for herself; that her husband had bought a safe on credit and had not paid for it and offered to return it to the vendors, with a proposition that his wife would, if they chose to sell it to her, give her note for an amount and at a time specified, which was the note in suit; that the vendors accepted this proposition, and the note was sent accordingly; and that the husband acted in the matter only as agent for his wife, and with her authority,—and it being further found, though nominally as findings of law, that the vendors owned the safe and sold it to defendant in her own right and on her sole credit, and accepted this note in payment, the objection that the facts found do not support the judgment for plaintiffs is held not well taken.—Gillam v. Boynton, 36 Mich. 236.

¶ 368. Plaintiff lumber company for several years had dealings with defendant's husband in selling lumber to him. Plaintiff sold the lumber in question to the husband, relied on his credit, and filed a claim therefor in bankruptcy against him. The husband used the lumber to erect buildings on the defendant's land, with her knowledge, but she paid no attention to the details of the matter. Held, the court was in error in directing a verdict for plaintiff for the price of the lumber, since it was a question for the jury whether the husband was acting as defendant's agent.—Detroit Lumber Co. v. Cleff, 164 Mich. 276.

¶ 369. Where there is evidence that the plaintiff sold goods to a hotel keeper, thinking he was the owner, when in fact he was acting as agent for his wife, it is a question for the jury whether the wife was an undisclosed principal of whom plaintiff may recover, and a request to direct a verdict for defendant is properly denied.—Schweyer v. Jones, 152 Mich. 241.

¶ 370. Whether both husband and wife agreed to be liable, or whether the husband was acting as agent for his wife, was a question for the jury, in assumpsit against both husband and wife, for lumber sold, where plaintiff claimed that although the lumber was originally sold to the husband, after the first car load was shipped, and when he was in a condition to recover it back, a new arrangement was made, which authorized him to extend the credit to both husband and wife, and that he in fact so extended it; and where such new arrangement was denied by defendants.—Reelman v. Grosfend, 140 Mich. 681.

¶ 371. An instruction that the jury may find a married woman liable for goods ordered by her husband, upon the ground of ratification, and upon the ground that she remained silent knowing that the goods were being furnished upon her credit, is proper, although there is no positive testimony of such knowledge, where the inference that defendant had such knowledge might properly be drawn from the testimony.—Lindsley v. Smith, 150 Mich. 543.

¶ 372. A statement made by a husband in the presence of the wife that the money in question was desired to make a payment on a mortgage on her separate estate, was equivalent to her making a like statement and therefore an instruction in which the court was uncertain as to which made the statement, but left it to the jury to say, was not error.—Vosburg v. Brown, 119 Mich. 697.

¶ 373. In an action for the price of lumber sold and delivered to a married woman, defended on the ground that her husband, who ordered the lumber as her agent and had it charged to her account, was not her agent, and was not authorized to act for her, a verdict is properly directed for plaintiff where the evidence shows that defendant had previously stated to plaintiff that she intended to purchase lumber from him if she decided to build a new house, that she did build such new house, that her husband ordered the lumber for her, that it was sold on her credit, and that she herself made a payment on account of such lumber.—Lindsley v. Smith, 150 Mich. 543.

¶ 374. It was error for the court, in assumpsit against both husband and wife, for the price of building material, where it appeared that the plaintiff first extended credit to the husband, and where it was claimed by plaintiff and denied by defendants, that by a new arrangement subsequently made, credit was extended to both husband and wife, to charge that if the wife was the owner of the real estate on which the building was to be erected out of such material, and that the husband owned no real estate, except one lot of small value, and that he conducted the business in relation to all the property owned by his wife, with her knowledge and consent, and that they planned together to put such building on her property, and that her husband contracted with plaintiffs for the material for such building, with her knowledge and consent, that then she would be liable for the unpaid balance due on such material, and that it was immaterial whether the bill was charged to her husband, and the correspondence connected therewith was directed to him.—Reelman v. Grosfend, 140 Mich. 681.

C. PARTICULAR CONTRACTS AND DEALINGS.

§ 112. Contracts for family support and household expenses.

For attendance of physicians and nurses, see post § 113.

Contract for domestic services, see also ante ¶ 231.

Liability of husband on wife's contracts, see ante § 65.

Family necessaries and household expenses as charges on separate property, see post § 146.

Husband and wife as partners, see post § 123.

Implied contracts arising from family relationship, see Implied Contracts.

Implied contract from duty imposed by law, see Implied Contracts, II.

¶ 375. A married woman's contract during coverture to pay for the board of herself, husband and imbecile son is not binding upon her.—Howe v. North, 69 Mich. 272.

¶ 376. A married woman who is the actual head of the family for business purposes is liable for clothing bought by her for a minor son, if she is the only person to whom credit was given in the transaction.—Fafeyta v. McGoldrick, 79 Mich. 360.

¶ 377. A married woman is liable on a promissory note given by her in payment of clothing purchased by her for a minor son and charged to her by her direction.—First Commercial Bank v. Newton, 117 Mich. 433.

¶ 378. A married woman is liable for the price of clothing bought by her for her minor son and charged to her by her direction, she agreeing to pay for the same.—Hirschfield v. Waldron, 83 Mich. 116.

¶ 379. A married woman has no power to make a contract to pay for the board of her adult sister and her children, since such contract does not relate to her separate estate, nor benefit it, and she is under no legal obligation to thus care for her sister.—June v. Labadie, 132 Mich. 135.

¶ 380. A married woman cannot be held liable to a domestic servant for services rendered in a house and about a farm the title to which is in the husband, although she, having the management and control of the property, herself employed the servant.—Kirt v. Kropp, 110 Mich. 51.

§ 113. ——For attendance of physicians and nurses.

Wife's last sickness as charge on her separate property, see post § 147.

¶ 381. A married woman is liable for medical services rendered at her request for herself and for her minor daughter by a former marriage, who is living with her, which services have been charged to her, and for which she has agreed to pay.—Goodman v. Shipley, 105 Mich. 439.

¶ 382. A married woman whose husband has deserted her may make a binding contract for medical services.—Carstens v. Hanselman, 61 Mich. 426.

¶ 383. The promise of a married woman to pay for medical services rendered to her husband is not binding, it not being a contract relating to or benefiting her separate estate. Buck v. Haynes' Estate, 75 Mich. 397.

¶ 384. A husband deeded to his wife the house and lot where they lived and made to her a bill of sale of the personal property about the premises and agreed to pay her $100 a year during her life. At the same time she released all her dower rights and all claim to the property he had or might thereafter acquire. In a claim against the wife's estate for services as nurse. Held that she was competent to make a valid contract for such services though her husband lived with her.—Barber v. Eberle's Estate, 131 Mich. 317.

§ 114. Debts for property or services furnished.

For attorney's services, see post § 115.

¶ 385. A married woman is liable for goods purchased and for services performed where the con half and upon to pay.—Mead

¶ 386. A de a married wom her.—Gillam v.

¶ 387. Thou make a valid c which she and is liable for l quest after he Crowe, 74 Mic

§ 115. ——For Validity of n services of see Attorn

¶ 388. A ma self chargeabl rendered by a ment to secure and the husba ices.—Wolcott

¶ 389. An a woman liable her in securing Wolcott v. Pat

§ 116. Liability
Wife as joint § 117.
Liability as hu
post §§ 1
Liability for owned wit Effect of joinc gage, see Liability for his agency Right of mar separate debt, see Liability of property
ante ¶ 2
Criminality of Crime, II
Indictments
ment.
Liability of sessed ag of spouse Wife as bailo ments ¶ Husband's cr wife's ba Liability of w see Estat Inapplicabilit
after acc invalid n see Estop Pledge of not for husb Resort last mortgage Foreclos

Validity of parol promise of one spouse to pay the other's debt, see Frauds, Statute of § 26.
Liability of separate property for husband's debts, see Const. art. XVI, § 8; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 11475, 11485.

¶ 390. A note given by a feme covert for the debt of her husband is void.—Ensign v. Dunn, 181 Mich. 456.

¶ 391. Plaintiff made a loan to defendant's husband and refused to take his note indorsed by defendant, but took her note with the husband as surety, knowing that the loan was for the husband's sole use. Held, that he could not recover against her. —Fechheimer v. Peirce, 70 Mich. 440.

¶ 392. Where a married woman, in consideration of a conveyance of land to her mother by her husband's creditor, agrees to pay her husband's debt, the agreement is binding and valid.—Hamilton v. Parent, 152 Mich. 587.

¶ 393. The fact that a wife has put money or goods into her husband's business will not prevent a levy of execution thereon against her husband.—Carew v. Mathews, 49 Mich. 302.

§ 117. Wife as joint debtor with her husband.

See also ante ¶¶ 236, 237.
Liability as his surety or indorser, see post §§ 118, 119.
Liability of husband for improvements on land owned jointly with husband, see post § 120.
Necessity of joinder in action on contracts in joint names, see also Contracts § 278.
Construction of contracts of husband and wife with others as joint or several, see also Contracts § 169.
Sufficiency of evidence as to joint undertaking by spouses, see also Contracts § 324.

¶ 394. A married woman is not personally liable on a promissory note signed by herself and husband where the sole consideration is his debt.—De Vries v. Conklin, 22 Mich. 255; Ross v. Walker, 31 Mich. 120; Barnes v. Brown, 32 Mich. 146; Johnson v. Johnson's Estate, 66 Mich. 525; Holland v. Maus, 69 Mich. 180.

¶ 395. A note given by a husband and wife for a loan made for the husband's sole benefit is void as against her in the absence of representations by her that it was for her benefit.—Schmidt v. Spencer, 87 Mich. 121; Fechheimer v. Peirce, 70 Mich. 440; Johnson v. Johnson's Estate, 66 Mich. 525; Holland v. Maus, 69 Mich. 180.

¶ 396. The mere fact that a wife is the legal owner of a farm, upon which she resides with her husband and family, and which she allows him to use as a means of obtaining a livelihood for himself and family, will not make her liable upon their promissory note given to an employee, who hired to the husband, and worked upon said farm, and upon another piece of land owned by another party but worked by the husband, for the balance due the employee for such labor. —O'Donnell v. Bray, 99 Mich. 534.

¶ 397. A married woman may become a joint debtor with her husband upon a proper consideration.—Post v. Shafer, 63 Mich. 85.

¶ 398. A wife is liable on a note given by herself and her husband to the extent that the consideration was for the benefit of her individual estate.—National Lumbermen's Bank v. Miller, 131 Mich. 564.

¶ 399. Recovery may be had against a married woman upon a joint and several bond executed by herself and husband for money borrowed by her and used in building a house upon her land.—Wilson v. Wilson's Estate, 80 Mich. 472.

¶ 400. Recovery of money paid upon an invalid contract for the sale of land belonging to a husband and wife jointly, signed by the husband alone, cannot be had against him and his wife jointly, though the payments were made by notes payable to the wife's order and indorsed by her; but it must be had against the husband alone.—Shipman v Campbell, 79 Mich. 82.

§ 118. Liability as surety, indorser, or accommodation party.

See also ante ¶¶ 270, 284.
Illegality of principal's agreement as defense, see post § 119.
Recovery of money paid under void contract for sale of land where payment notes were made to wife's order and indorsed by her, see ante ¶ 400.
Burden of proof as to liability as surety, see also ante ¶ 285.
Evidence admissible to show liability as surety, see ante ¶¶ 287, 289.
General law of suretyship, see Suretyship.
Indorsers and transferor's liability on negotiable instruments in general, see Negotiable Instruments, VII.
Accommodation signatures and liability thereon generally, see Negotiable Instruments, XI.
Release of married woman who cannot be held as affecting right to judgment against others on joint obligation, see Release.

¶ 401. A married woman cannot bind herself by a mere personal promise jointly with her husband or as his surety.—De Vries v. Conklin, 22 Mich. 255; Jenne v. Marble, 37 Mich. 319.

¶ 402. A married woman is not liable upon a note which she signed as surety merely.—Henriques v. Ypsilanti Sav. Bank, 84 Mich. 168.

¶ 403. A married woman's contract of suretyship will not bind her unless made on behalf of her sole property, and should appear to have been so made, and upon a sufficient consideration for that purpose.—West v. Laraway, 28 Mich. 464; Kitchell v. Mudgett, 37 Mich. 81; Russel v. People's Sav. Bank, 39 Mich. 671; Howe v. North, 69 Mich. 272.

¶ 404. Where a wife signs a note with her husband to obtain money to put into his business, wherein she has no interest save as his creditor, she is only a surety, and the note is void as to her.—Littlefield v. Dingwall, 71 Mich. 223.

¶ 405. A married woman is not bound by a promissory note which she signs jointly with her husband for the amount of a judgment that has been rendered against them both, if it only appears that she signed it because he asked her to, and without knowing the use to be made of it. This only makes her a surety for her husband, and does not connect her with the consideration in such a way as to reach her sole property.—Schlatterer v. Nickodemus, 51 Mich. 626.

¶ 406. An objection to the validity of a judgment rendered against a husband and wife upon a promissory note signed by both, that the wife joined in the execution of the note as surety merely, is untenable, where it appears that the consideration for the note passed to the wife.—Shaw v. Fortine, 98 Mich. 254.

¶ 407. While a wife as incident to her power to contract may borrow money on her own account, she cannot bind herself by borrowing nominally for herself but in fact for her husband so that she stands as surety for him.—Feather v. Feather's Estate, 116 Mich. 384.

¶ 408. A married woman is not liable upon a note given by her and her husband for the price of a horse bought by them jointly, as it would make her surety for him at least to the extent of one-half of the amount.—Caldwell v. Jones, 115 Mich. 129.

¶ 409. A married woman is not liable upon her promissory note given simply to secure a debt of her husband.—Emery v. Lord, 26 Mich. 431; Waterbury v. Andrews, 67 Mich. 281.

¶ 410. A married woman is not personally liable upon her indorsement of a note due to her when the indorsement is given to secure the debt of a corporation in which she holds stock.—Russel v. People's Savings Bank, 39 Mich. 671.

¶ 411. A wife must be regarded as surety for a corporation of which she was a stockholder, and not her husband's surety, all being residents of Alabama, and she having given her note secure corporation at the sug and having put the since it was lawful f a surety under § 449 bama, providing that capacity to contract s cept as otherwise p § 4497, providing th wife may contract w contracts into which ject to the rules of l and between persons tial relations, but h rectly or indirectly, her husband."—City Atwood, 197 Mich. 1

§ 119. ——Illegality o as defense.

¶ 412. The right of from liability upon he bargain upon which i her knowledge, contai legalities and fraud i paired by the fact th one of the principals of that relation, may the relief granted he less than they would arated from her husba —Denison v. Gibson,

§ 120. Liability of wif land owned j

Wife as joint debtor ante § 117.

Improvements on prop husband after hu ¶ 387.

¶ 413. A married w the joint contract of l pay for improvement them jointly.—Speier

¶ 414. A married w her contract for impro owned by herself a Crowe, 74 Mich. 99.

§ 121. Right to carry name.

Membership in firm, IIusband and wife as Right of wife to give in husband's ho

Authority of husband behalf of his wi

Liability of bank as wife deposited in see Garnishment

¶ 415. A married business in her own make herself liable erty on credit.—Ra 195.

¶ 416. A married woman can, with her husband's consent, personally conduct any lawful business, including that of selling whisky, and can keep the profits.—Amperse v. Kalamazoo Common Council, 59 Mich. 78.

§ 122. ——Membership in firm.

¶ 417. A married woman may become a member of a firm in which her husband is not interested and can thus bind her separate property to the same extent that any other party can.—Vail v. Winterstein, 94 Mich. 230.

§ 123. ——Husband and wife as partners.

General law of partnership, see Partnership.
Dissolution of partnership by marriage of persons composing partnership, see Partnership, VII.

¶ 418. A husband and wife cannot enter into a contract of partnership between themselves, and thus render themselves jointly liable for the contracts of the firm sought to be established.—Artman v. Ferguson, 73 Mich. 146.

¶ 419. Husband and wife are not necessarily constituted partners by an agreement whereby they lease certain hotel property and buy certain furniture and fixtures.—Wineman v. Phillips, 93 Mich. 223.

¶ 420. The husband and wife cannot become by contract between themselves, copartners in trade, in such a sense that the wife can be made responsible for the firm debts; but where husband and wife are partners, it is entirely competent for the wife to pledge her separate property for the payment of a debt of the firm for which the husband alone is responsible.—Hackley Nat. Bank v. Jeannot, 143 Mich. 454.

¶ 421. A married woman who has engaged in trade as her husband's partner may bind her interest in the property of the two by joining with the husband in a chattel mortgage on the firm property to secure a firm debt.—Hackley Nat. Bank v. Jeannot, 143 Mich. 454.

§ 124. Rights against husband's firm or business associates.

Action of wife against husband's firm, see post ¶ 611.

¶ 422. The fact that the member of a partnership who makes part payments upon a note is the husband of the owner and holder of the note will not prevent the operation of such part payment to show the recognition or assumption of the note by the firm.—Osborn v. Osborn, 36 Mich. 48.

§ 125. Right to compensation for services furnished third persons.

Presumptions and evidence, see post § 126.
Right of husband to furnish services of wife to third persons, see ante § 70.
Earnings for her services as her separate property, see ante § 41.

¶ 423. A wife can hire out, with her husband's consent, and can sue for, recover and keep her earnings.—Benson v. Morgan, 50 Mich. 77.

¶ 424. Where a married woman keeps a boarding-house with the consent of her husband, and controls the entire business, contracts of purchase made by her in reference to such business must be considered as contracts in relation to her sole property, and therefore binding upon her.—Tillman v. Shackleton, 15 Mich. 447.

¶ 425. A wife can recover compensation for services in taking care of her father-in-law, living in the family, if he understands and assents to the arrangement, and if her husband gives up to her his own right to her time and services.—Mason v. Dunbar, 43 Mich. 407.

¶ 426. Where a wife is working with her husband, in order for her to be entitled to recover for her wages, it is not enough that the husband has given the wife her services, but the one dealing with her must know of the relation between them.—Heral v. McCabe, 171 Mich. 530.

¶ 427. The fact that a wife assists her husband in making out his claim against an estate for board, room, repair of clothing, etc., which is not presented to the commissioners, does not estop her from presenting a claim for her own personal services and earnings.—In re Burnham's Estate, 199 Mich. 326.

§ 126. ——Presumptions and evidence.

General principles of evidence, see Evidence.

¶ 428. Where a married woman sued an estate on a claim whereby it was alleged she was to receive pay for having nursed, cared for, furnished groceries to, and kept house for the decedent, and there was testimony to support the finding of an arrangement to pay for the services, understood and assented to by decedent, claimant, and her husband, evidence to show that there was an arrangement with her husband that the compensation was to be her sole property was admissible as against the objection that such an arrangement must be shown to have been brought home to the decedent and to have been assented to.—In re Barclay's Estate, 146 Mich. 650.

¶ 429. Where it appears, in an action against a priest of a Catholic Church for services in washing the linens of the church, that he asked the plaintiff's husband whether plaintiff would do the washing, to which the husband answered that she would, the priest having had no conversation with the plaintiff and no price being named, the priest having no personal interest in the matter, it being his practice to report the amount as incident to the expenses of the church, which the plaintiff and her husband knew, there is no evidence that the priest understood that he was dealing with the plaintiff or was to pay her for her services, and he is not liable.—Heral v. McCabe, 171 Mich. 580.

¶ 430. Evidence of a husband that he has no claim whatever to his wife's services and makes no claim whatever is insufficient, in an action by the wife against the estate of her father to recover for services rendered to her parent, to show that at the time the services were rendered the husband had relinquished all right to his wife's services.—In re Scully's Estate, 199 Mich. 181.

§ 127. Rights under joint lease.

¶ 431. One who has made a joint lease of land to husband and wife and has put them jointly in possession is estopped from denying the wife's separate right to join in a suit against him for damages sustained by his unlawfully disturbing them in their possession.—Gillespie v. Beecher, 94 Mich. 374.

§ 128. Effect of husband's fraud on wife's contract rights.

¶ 432. A wife holding a lawful and just claim against a firm of which her husband is a member is not precluded from recovering upon it because of any incidental wrong that may result to one of the other members of the firm in consequence of an alleged fraud of her husband to which she was in nowise a party; there is no rule of law compelling a wife to assume the consequences of her husband's frauds or to guarantee his good conduct.—Moore v. Foote, 34 Mich. 448.

§ 129. Estoppel or bar of right.

Estoppel to deny agency of husband, see ante § 108.

General principles of estoppel, see Estoppel.

Estoppel to assert husband's or wife's title as superior to levy against other, see Executions § 121.

¶ 433. A judgment in favor of a husband on a non-negotiable due bill belonging to his wife is no bar to her action; nor would she be estopped by the mere fact that she was called as a witness for him in his suit.—Blackwood v. Brown, 32 Mich. 104.

D. CONVEYANCES, TRANSFERS, AND CHARGES ON SEPARATE PROPERTY.

§ 130. In general.

Requisites for and execution, see post §§ 131-133.

Sufficiency of consideration to wife, see post § 134.

Assignment of insurance payable to wife, see post § 135.

Married woman's representative
Power and right to 138.
Effect of joinder i
§ 139.
Effect of joinder i
post § 140.
Liability on cove
§§ 141-143.
Charges on separat
148.
Alienation of esta
see ante §§
Conveyances to ea
Conveyances to w
tion, see ante §
Invalidity of sole terest, see Ho
Rights of widow
steads, VII.
Alienation of hon
on wife, see Necessity and suffi alienation of h
§§ 54-56.
Alienation or incum
erty, see Hom
Right of wife to see Comp. L.
Power of married separate prop
§ 11475.
Power of divorced property, see Joinder of wife in of her husba
§§ 11464-11466.
Power to convey
erty when husb
ment, see Com
Right of married property after
see Comp. L.

¶ 434. Const. art aided by statute, e to sell and disp band's consent, p before or after m
4 Mich. 322.

¶ 435. A marri lands by any meth
ute.—Chandler v.

§ 131. Requisites,

Necessity for an
see post § 1
Defects and objec tion validity,
Requisites for de entireties, see Delivery of inst
other, see Ex
Acknowledgments
Acknowledgm
Execution of inst ecution of I

¶ 436. A deed executed by husband and wife of land owned by her need not designate the extent of her interest.—Heinmiller v. Hatheway, 60 Mich. 391.

¶ 437. A wife does not convey her dower rights by a deed which she had signed and acknowledged in blank several months before the present transaction where it was used after she had refused to sign a deed properly filled in with the description of the land in question.—Maynard v. Davis, 127 Mich. 571.

§ 132. ——Necessity for and effect of husband's joinder.

Construction of deeds joined in by husband and wife, see Deeds § 42.

Necessity for joinder of husband in deed of married woman coming from another state or country without him, see Comp. L. 1915, §§ 11471-11472.

Deed by married woman after desertion of her husband, see Comp. L. 1915, § 11455.

¶ 438. At common law, and until the statute of 1855, a deed executed by a married woman without her husband joining with her was void.—Goff v. Thompson, H. 60; Palmer v. Oakley, 2 D. 433.

¶ 439. In case of a conveyance by a married woman under the Act of 1855 it is not essential that the husband join in or assent to the deed, notwithstanding she was owner of the land at the time the statute was passed.—Farr v. Sherman, 11 Mich. 33.

¶ 440. The husband's joining in his wife's deed of land which she owns in fee but which both occupy as a homestead is not necessary.—Buckingham v. Buckingham, 81 Mich. 89.

¶ 441. Where a wife joins her husband in a deed of the fee of land of which she is, in whole or part, the sole owner, she conveys all of her interest therein.—Clow v. Plummer, 85 Mich. 550.

§ 133. ——Defects and objections, and estoppel to question validity.

¶ 442. The defenses of undue influence and coercion, set up by a married woman against a mortgage given on her own property to secure her husband's debt, were held not sustained where it appeared that she gave it with reluctance and after much persuasion by her husband, and at first declined to acknowledge it, but finally made an acknowledgment in the usual form and afterwards admitted the validity of the security. —Watson v. Thurber, 11 Mich. 457.

¶ 443. A married woman can be estopped by her deliberate conduct as well as any one else to deny the validity of a mortgage because of formal defects in its acknowledgment.—Norton v. Nichols, 35 Mich. 148.

¶ 444. Where a husband, after obtaining his wife's consent to mortgage her property to secure the purchase price of goods bought by him, presented to her and obtained the execution of a mortgage covering, in addition to such purchase-price, an old indebtedness of his of which she was not informed, though he made no false representations, the mortgage was held void as to the prior indebtedness, but valid as to the residue.—Smith v. Osborn, 33 Mich. 410.

§ 134. Sufficiency of consideration to wife.

Sufficiency of consideration to wife generally, see ante §§ 76-79.

Necessity of wife's consent on alienation or transfer of exempt property, see Exemptions § 45.

¶ 445. A woman's conveyance of her property in payment of her husband's debt is based on a sufficient consideration.—Lewis v. Doyle, 182 Mich. 141.

¶ 446. A woman's conveyance of her property in payment of or as security for her husband's debts is supported by a sufficient consideration and is binding on her.—Ehle v. Looker, 182 Mich. 248.

¶ 447. A conveyance by a married woman in payment of her husband's debt is supported by a sufficient consideration, and is valid.—Le May v. Wickert, 98 Mich. 628; Kieldsen v. Blodgett, 113 Mich. 655.

¶ 448. Defendant Miller and his wife owned, separately, each four lots. Mrs. Miller was in jail for failure to pay a fine of two hundred dollars. She told her husband that if he would raise two hundred dollars to pay her fine she would deed him absolutely her four lots. Miller went to one Cronks and borrowed $270, deeding him his four lots, and out of the money paid the said fine. In order to save expense, Miller had his wife deed her four lots directly to Cronks. He paid her nothing for this conveyance. Cronks gave back a land contract to defendant Miller on all eight of the lots, which called for a conveyance of the lots upon payment by defendant of the $270. Complainant purchased of Mrs. Miller two of the four lots belonging to her, and brought a bill to redeem. Held, that, although at the time of making her deed to Cronks, Mrs. Miller supposed she was entirely devested of ownership of her four lots, her oral contract with her husband was void under Comp. Laws 1897, § 9509, and the legal title remained in her.—Ferry v. Miller, 164 Mich. 429.

§ 135. Assignment of insurance payable to wife.

Statutory provision relative to insurance on life of husband for benefit of wife, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 256, §§ 24, 25, amending Comp. L. 1915, §§ 11489, 11490.

¶ 449. A wife's assignment of her interest in an insurance policy upon her husband's life does not bind her if procured without her intelligent assent for purposes which have nothing to do with her separate estate.—Mutual Ben. Life Ins. Co. v. Wayne County Sav. Bank, 68 Mich. 116.

§ 136. Married woman's conveyances as guardian, representative or trustee.

Sales of trust property generally, see Trusts, VI, D.

Conveyances by representatives in general, see Estates of Decedents, VII.

General law of guardianship, see Guardianship.

Power of married woman to make conveyance in capacity of guardian without husband joining in deed, see Guardianship ¶ 170.

¶ 450. Husband need not join in wife's conveyance of ward's land sold by her as guardian.—Palmer v. Oakley, 2 D. 433.

§ 137. Power and right to mortgage.

Effect of husband's joinder, see post § 138.

Effect of joinder in husband's mortgage, see post § 140.

Mortgages of estates held by the entireties, see ante II, B.

Power and right of married woman to alien or incumber estate held by the entireties, see ante §§ 30-32.

Power of married woman to mortgage entirety to secure husband's debt or for his benefit, see also ante ¶¶ 99, 100.

Mortgage invalid as to wife but valid as to husband's nonexempt chattels, see Chattel Mortgages § 9.

Mortgage by husband of wife's chattels, estoppel of wife, see Chattel Mortgages § 52, ¶ 224.

Necessity for joinder of wife in execution of chattel mortgage, see Jud. Act, chap. XXIII, § 43, subd. 9; Comp. L. 1915, § 12858, subd. 9.

¶ 451. A married woman is at liberty to create express liens on her property for any lawful purpose; she can mortgage it to secure another person's debt, even if her note therefor be not binding.—Damon v. Deeves, 57 Mich. 247.

¶ 452. A married woman may mortgage her property to secure her husband's or another person's debt.—Watson v. Thurber, 11 Mich. 457; Damon v. Deeves, 57 Mich. 247.

¶ 453. A mortgage given by a wife upon her real estate to secure the unpaid purchase-price of personalty, title to which is vested in herself and husband jointly, is valid.—Wineman v. Phillips, 93 Mich. 223.

¶ 454. A married woman may now mortgage her lands for the debt of her husband.—Watson v. Thurber, 11 Mich. 457.

¶ 455. A mortgag
erty of a married secure an old debt
brother, is invalid,
duced to execute th
sentation of the hu used to obtain addi his business.—Citize
110 Mich. 227.

¶ 456. A wife's de not be enforced as where the arrangem
the husband's debt
by her.—Harvey v.

¶ 457. Where a band in a deed of t to which is in the
of securing a loan,
band the matter o
bond for a reconvey
lowed to avail her and at the same ti thereof so usual as interest on the loan.
67.

¶ 458. A mortga
feme covert to secu
absolutely void.—Cl
Mich. 217.

§ 138. ——Effect of ¶ 459. A mortgage her sole property is husband's joining i any irregularity of or acknowledgment

Donner, 35 Mich. 15
Mich. 537.

§ 139. Effect of joind

Necessity of joinde by husband to b see Dower § 15.

¶ 460. No purpos to affect her indepen be implied from he
band in the executi
able instrument for or homestead right
Agar v. Streeter, 1

§ 140. Effect of join

Effect of joinder
mortgagors, se
§ 24.

¶ 461. The perso gagors to pay the gage has no force
the mortgage of Kitchell v. Mudget

¶ 462. A wife c her husband's cred
her husband's bon
Gantz v. Toles, 40

¶ 468. A wife who, to bar her dower, joins in the execution of a mortgage securing her husband's debt, is not liable for the debt or upon any covenant in the mortgage.—J. I. Case Threshing Machine Co. v. Mitchell, 74 Mich. 679.

¶ 464. A man and his wife conveyed certain lands in consideration of the payment, by the grantees, of the husband's debts. The grantees gave back a written agreement to the wife that the lands should be reconveyed to her alone on repayment of their advances. This agreement purported to make the wife covenant to pay the advances, but she did not sign it. The transaction was conceded to be a mortgage. Held, that under Comp. L. 1871, § 4208, How. St. § 5656, declaring that no mortgage shall be construed as implying a covenant for the payment of the sum secured thereby, the wife could not be held personally liable for any deficiency on foreclosure sale.—Howe v. Lemon, 37 Mich. 164.

¶ 465. A wife who has a mortgage on her husband's property does not, by joining in a subsequent mortgage thereon, subject her own mortgage interest to the lien of the later mortgage.—Kitchell v. Mudgett, 37 Mich. 81.

§ 141. Liability on covenants for title.

Where joinder was to bar dower or homestead and not to pass separate estate, see post § 142.

Presumptions and evidence, see post § 143.

Wife as unnecessary defendant in action on husband's covenant for title, see Covenants for Title § 23.

¶ 466. When the wife joins with her husband in conveying the fee of land of which she is, in whole or in part, the sole owner, she conveys all of her interest therein, though she can only be held liable upon her covenants in such deed to the extent of her sole property conveyed.—Heinmiller v. Hatheway, 60 Mich. 391.

¶ 467. A wife who joins with her husband in a warranty deed of his land, the sole consideration for which is the conveyance to her of other land, is jointly liable with him for a breach of the covenants in said deed.—Arthur v. Caverly, 98 Mich. 82.

¶ 468. A married woman joining with her husband in the execution of a warranty deed conveying the latter's property, is liable on the covenants where she obtains all the consideration.—Menard v. Campbell, 180 Mich. 583.

¶ 469. If it appears that the sole consideration for a deed executed by husband and wife was to be and was actually received by the latter, the covenants of the deed will be treated as joint.—Agar v. Streeter, 183 Mich. 600.

§ 142. ——Where joinder was to bar dower or homestead and not to pass separate estate.

Nonliability of wife on covenants in deed signed to bar dower or marital rights, see Covenants for Title § 12.

¶ 470. Any covenant on the wife's part in a deed for the conveyance of land that is not her individual property, and in which deed she joins only to release her contingent rights of dower, etc., is void as to her, leaving it the husband's sole covenant; and she is not personally liable on a covenant in her husband's deed.—Hovey v. Smith, 22 Mich. 170; Kitchell v. Mudgett, 37 Mich. 81; Carley v. Fox, 38 Mich. 387.

¶ 471. Covenants in a married woman's deed which have no connection with any separate property owned by her are not binding upon her.—Langdon v. Clayson, 75 Mich. 204.

¶ 472. Where a married woman joins in the execution with her husband of a conveyance of his land, the covenants although joint in form, are not binding upon her.—Agar v. Streeter, 183 Mich. 600.

¶ 473. A wife, though she joins in her husband's deed, is not liable on a covenant of warranty therein, and need not be joined as defendant in an action for breach thereof.—Webb v. Holt, 113 Mich. 338.

¶ 474. A widow, who by will of the husband has an estate in fee in real property, is not liable on a covenant of warranty in a deed executed during the lifetime of the husband, and which she signed only for the purpose of barring her dower.—White v. Grand Rapids & I. Ry. Co., 190 Mich. 1.

§ 143. ——Presumptions and evidence.

General law of evidence, see Evidence.

¶ 475. In order to bind a married woman jointly with her husband on the covenants of a deed executed by them, it may be shown aliunde that it was intended that she should and that she actually did receive the consideration.—Agar v. Streeter, 183 Mich. 600.

¶ 476. That a married woman receives the consideration for a conveyance of her husband's property, in which she joins, must be clearly shown by one seeking to hold her upon the covenants thereof.—Menard v. Campbell, 180 Mich. 583.

§ 144. Charges on separate estate.

See also ante ¶ 238.

Improvements on separate property, see post § 145.

Family necessaries and household expenses, see post § 146.

Wife's last sickness and funeral expenses, see post § 147.

Interests and estates which may be charged, see post § 148.

Separate property in general, see ante II, C.
Relation of contract to wife's separate property, see ante § 80.
Presumption of knowledge of law relating to charges on separate estate, see Evidence § 47, ¶ 254.

¶ 477. The old doctrine of enforcing in equity the contracts of a married woman as charges upon her equitable interests in property held to her separate use rested upon her disability to bind herself in personam, or to transfer or charge a legal estate by her sole act or agreement, and it is not applicable to cases at law arising under our statutes, which have removed the very disabilities on which the doctrine was originally founded.—West v. Laraway, 28 Mich. 464.

§ 145. ——Improvements on separate property.
Improvements by husband on wife's separate lands, see ante § 43.

¶ 478. Where a married woman has given her note to secure her husband's indebtedness for materials which went, with her knowledge and consent, to improve her own separate estate, although originally furnished on the credit of her husband, an action may still be maintained against her upon such note, if the indebtedness for which it was given was equitably due from her, as if the materials were so used without her having paid or become bound to pay her husband, or any one else, for them, or if the husband, as between himself and his wife, was only acting as her agent. This would substantially be a debt incurred on account of her own separate property, and she would be bound, as there would be a good and valuable consideration for the note.—Emery v. Lord, 26 Mich. 431.

§ 146. ——Family necessaries and household expenses.
Wife's contracts for family support and household expenses, see ante § 112.

¶ 479. It is competent for a wife, residing with her husband, to become personally liable, so as to charge her separate estate, for family necessaries purchased for and actually used in the husband's family and homestead.—Campbell v. White, 22 Mich. 178.

§ 147. ——Wife's last sickness and funeral expenses.
Wife's contracts for physicians and nurses, see ante § 113.

¶ 480. A wife's estate not liable for her funeral expenses if husband is able to pay them.—Galloway v. McPherson's Estate, 67 Mich. 546.

¶ 481. Recovery cannot be had against a wife's estate for care and nursing to her and her husband, rendered to the husband, in the absence of an express contract on her part to pay for the same out of her individual estate.—
Mich. 154; Dudec

§ 148. ——Interest charged.
What constitutes
§§ 88-43.

¶ 482. An estat to a feme coveri estate in relation as a feme sole.— 456.

¶ 483. In contr
of a fixture on lar
terest as remaine dealing with her agreement is base tion.—Ensign v. I

¶ 484. A marri
after-acquired esta
ing to a third per
Mich. 182.

¶ 485. A marr coverture bind he not then in exist compensate a per and husband by withstanding that bound by such ag party to the contr
der, 181 Mich. 15

¶ 486. A marrie
bind herself in re to be acquired by sideration thereof.
Mich. 583.

V. TORTS

A. I

§ 149. Husband's Husband's tort in lands, see po
Wife's liability fo
§ 151.
Torts against eac
Presumptions tha
cion over wi crime, see In Liability for wif
see also Dra

¶ 487. At com liable personally
v. Weber, 47 Mic

¶ 488. A man person or prope
Burt v. McBair
Mueller, 41 Mic
Mich. 569.

¶ 489. No act injury done by h

by his wife's careless driving, if it is not shown that she acted under his direction or with his knowledge or consent.—Ricci v. Mueller, 41 Mich. 214.

¶ 490. A man was sued for overflowing plaintiff's land by obstructing a ditch. His wife and child were the persons who filled it up, but when the plaintiff cut trenches to let off the water, defendant himself filled them up again, threatened those who were sent to reopen them, and asserted his purpose not to let the main ditch be cleared for less than $1,500; there was some evidence also that he knew where his wife was when she was at work. Held, that the jury were justified in finding him responsible for the mischief.—Enright v. Hartsig, 46 Mich. 469.

§ 150. Husband's tort in use or control of wife's lands.

¶ 491. A husband may be sued in tort for destroying the lateral support to plaintiff's land by removing earth from premises belonging to defendant's wife.—Wykes v. Ringleberg, 49 Mich. 567.

¶ 492. A wife owning land on which a building is being erected by servants employed by her husband is not liable for an injury to one of them merely because of her ownership of the land.—Hoar v. Merritt, 62 Mich. 386.

§ 151. Wife's liability for husband's tort.

Wife's liability for injury by dog owned or kept by husband, see Animals ¶ 81.

Responsibility of married woman for crime committed with her husband present, see Crimes § 12.

Liability of wife sued jointly with husband for personal injury caused by defective premises, see also Buildings ¶ 50.

¶ 493. A woman owned a store and an adjacent stairway in which her neighbor had a perpetual easement for himself and his lessees, who put up professional signs therein. Her husband, who occupied her store by virtue only of the marital relation, tore down one of the signs. Held, that his lawless conduct in so doing does not affect her rights and make her subject to legal process.—Bennett v. Seligman, 32 Mich. 500.

¶ 494. In proceedings by a husband's creditors to attack certain property of his wife alleged to have been obtained by fraud, the wife stands in the litigation like any third person. Husband and wife are not mutually responsible for each other's conduct.—Scott v. Chambers, 62 Mich. 532.

§ 152. Torts against each other.

Actions against each other, see post §§ 180-182.

Criminal conversation and alienation, see post V, B.

Criminal liability of husband for nonsupport or desertion, see post § 196.

Wrongs amounting to crimes by husband or wife against each other or against third persons, and responsibility for wife's crimes, see Crimes; Indictment; Homicide.

¶ 495. Under the statute giving a married woman control of her own property and enabling her to sue in relation thereto as if she were unmarried, a divorced wife cannot maintain suit against her former husband for a personal tort committed while they were living together as husband and wife.—Bandfield v. Bandfield, 117 Mich. 80.

¶ 496. Whether a married woman can maintain an action of libel against her husband, quære.—Smith v. Smith, 73 Mich. 445.

§ 153. Actionable torts to property.

Wife's right to sue for conversion of exempt property of husband, see also ante ¶ 29.

Wife as "occupant" entitled to distrain animals, see Animals ¶ 19.

Burning own house as burning house of "another," see Crimes ¶ 198.

Right of wife to damages for injury to property, person or means of support through intoxication, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 338, § 47.

¶ 497. The possession by the wife of personal property belonging to the husband, during his temporary absence (a crop of potatoes in which he had a share with a right in her to supply the family table), is the possession of the husband, and the wife cannot sue in her own name for a conversion of such property.—Janauschek v. Eddy, 108 Mich. 190.

¶ 498. A wife cannot maintain an action for trespass upon land in possession of her husband and herself under a deed running to both of them since such trespass would be against the entire estate and to recover therefor the husband and wife must both join.—Fowles v. Hayden, 130 Mich. 47.

§ 154. Fraud and deceit.

Effect of husband's fraud on wife's contract rights, see ante § 128.

Necessity for joinder of wife who knowingly acts as husband's agent in a fraud, see post ¶ 605.

Proper parties in bill by married woman to set aside fraudulent deed, see post ¶ 601.

Right of surety to be released from liability on contract which is without her knowledge illegal and fraudulent, where she is wife of guilty principal, see ante ¶ 412.

General fraud, see Fraud.

Actionable right of husband in injury to wife caused by fraud which induced her to part with her homestead which she owned as her separate property, see Homesteads ¶ 273.

¶ 499. The consideration given by a wife for a conveyance to her need not pertain to her sole property to enable her to sue for damages if defrauded in the transaction.—Bissell v. Taylor, 41 Mich. 702.

¶ 500. A husband cannot recover damages for being, through his "impaired mental condition," "induced and persuaded to cause and procure his wife to trade and sell her lands for certain other lands."—Devereaux v. Hubbard, 117 Mich. 119.

§ 155. Slander or libel.

Action of libel against husband by wife, see ante ¶ 496.

General law of slander and libel, see Libel and Slander.

¶ 501. A married woman may bring a sole action for slander.—Leonard v. Pope, 27 Mich. 145.

¶ 502. A husband is not to be joined with his wife as plaintiff in an action for slander to a business solely owned by her.—Child v. Emerson, 102 Mich. 38.

§ 156. Actionable personal injury to wife.

Cost of medical attendance and incidental expense, see post § 157.

Injuries suable by husband, see post § 158.

Damages recovered for personal injury to wife as her separate property, see ante § 39.

Necessity for joinder of husband in suit by wife for personal injuries, see post ¶¶ 580, 581.

Necessity for joinder of husband in action by wife for assault committed upon her, see post ¶ 588.

Right to waive tort for injury to wife, see Assumpsit ¶ 23.

Measure of damages to husband for injury to wife or of wife for injury to herself, see Damages §§ 154, 155.

Common law right to recover for loss of services from injury followed by death, see Death by Wrongful Act § 1.

Measure and elements of damages for loss of services of wife or of support by husband, see Death by Wrongful Act § 33 et seq.

Right of action for death of either spouse or issue of marriage where marriage illegal, see Comp. L. 1915, § 14579.

¶ 503. A married woman carrying on a separate business may recover for the loss of time occasioned by a negligent injury.—Gregory v. Oakland Motor Car Co., 181 Mich. 101.

¶ 504. A married woman may recover damages for the medical expenses incurred because of an injury, where shown to have been keeping a boarding house and doing business in her own name.—Green v. Muskegon Traction & Lighting Co., 17[illegible] Mich. 18.

¶ 505. In a s appeared that p from her husba during that tim of her daughter,
husband lived in ing to do with tl
cians who treat
that plaintiff em it was error in she could not re
—Winnett v. De 629.

¶ 506. A marr damages, in an a loss of her abilit
ices in the hon
Goods Co., 184 M

¶ 507. A marri
injury received b negligence cannot because of the in money by painti being presumptive
—Tunnicliffe v. B
Mich. 624.

¶ 508. A marrie ages in a person services, where th
tween her and he collected for her e
—Boyle v. City o

§ 157. ——Cost of cidental e

¶ 509. In an ac a married woman
titling her to rec physician's service extended to her al
54 Mich. 73; Luca
92 Mich. 412; Verg
Mich. 499.

¶ 510. A marrie personal injuries h
titling recovery fo attendance, unless and not her husba
—Pearll v. City of

¶ 511. A marrie personal injury
penses where cre was given to her
Boyle v. City of

¶ 512. A marri is a nonresident her for six or time she had pro
in an action for medical attendan
the physician's b ing suit.—Lammi
R. Co., 112 Mich

¶ 513. In an action by a married woman for personal injuries a recovery cannot be had for the services of a physician where there is not testimony that she has paid or has promised to pay him therefor.—Rogers v. Orion, 116 Mich. 324.

§ 158. ——Injuries suable by husband.

Recovery by husband for injuries to his wife from defective sidewalk, see Highways § 265.

¶ 514. Where his wife is injured by another's unlawful act or negligence, a husband may sue at common law for the loss of service accruing between the injury and the death, and such action is not barred by the death.—Hyatt v. Adams, 16 Mich. 180.

¶ 515. A husband cannot in an action for injuries negligently inflicted on his wife recover for the loss of her consortium.—Blair v. Seitner Dry Goods Co., 184 Mich. 304.

¶ 516. In a suit for personal injuries plaintiff wife cannot recover for the loss of her business services as chief clerk in her husband's store which the husband sustained on account of the accident.—McCauley v. Detroit United Ry., 167 Mich. 297.

§ 159. Presumptions and evidence.

¶ 517. In an action against a husband and wife for the tortious act of the wife a husband cannot be held guilty because of the marital relation nor because he did not prevent the wife from doing the act where the evidence shows that he merely knew that she got a spade and tortiously dug a hole in the highway, and did not get the spade for her, and that he told her she had better not block the road, and did not know what she had done until two weeks later.—Sweezy v. Fisher, 142 Mich. 258.

§ 160. Questions of law and fact and instructions.

¶ 518. Where a husband and wife are shown to have been engaged in an assault and battery, for which the husband alone is sued, if he wish to rebut the presumption that the wife was acting under his control, he may have the question submitted to the jury as a part of his defense.—Miller v. Sweitzer, 22 Mich. 391.

¶ 519. An instruction in an action against husband and wife for injuries sustained by plaintiff in an elevator, which was equivalent to saying that the wife could not be bound by his admissions unless the husband was her agent, but if he was her agent she would be bound by them if the jury were able to find from such admissions and other testimony that he was negligent, for the reason that being her agent, his negligence was her negligence, was erroneous; since it invited a finding that he admitted himself to be negligent and therefore liable, and then made her liable because he was.—Hall v. Murdock, 119 Mich. 389.

B. CRIMINAL CONVERSATION AND ALIENATION.

§ 161. Criminal conversation.

Pleadings and issue, see post § 162.
Presumptions and evidence, see post § 163.
Of condonation and connivance, see post § 164.
Questions for jury and instructions, see post § 165.
Action for assault and rape, see post ¶ 526.
Damages for crim. con., see Damages.
Measure of damages for criminal conversation, see Damages § 131.
Admissibility of evidence as to damages for criminal conversation, see Damages § 317.
Crime of bigamy, see Crimes § 48.
Adultery, see Crimes § 41.
Rape as crime, see Rape.
Divorce, see Divorce.
General principles of pleading, see Pleading.

¶ 520. The action for criminal conversation with plaintiff's wife is distinguished from that for simply enticing her away, thus depriving him of her affection, society and assistance.—Perry v. Lovejoy, 49 Mich. 529.

¶ 521. The action crim. con. lies although the intercourse with plaintiff's wife was obtained by force.—Egbert v. Greenwalt, 44 Mich. 245.

¶ 522. A husband is not precluded from maintaining an action for the debauching of his wife because the intercourse was procured under circumstances which would render the defendant guilty of rape.—Hirdes v. Ottawa Circuit Judge, 180 Mich. 321.

§ 162. ——Pleadings and issues.

Averments for capias for crim. con., see Civil Arrest §§ 7, 10, 11.
Pleading damages for crim. con., see Damages § 255.

¶ 523. In an action for crim. con. the criminal intercourse must be substantially averred.—Perry v. Lovejoy, 49 Mich. 529.

¶ 524. In an action for criminal conversation where it is alleged that on a certain day "and on diverse other days" the defendant had illicit carnal intercourse with plaintiff's husband, the circuit court may in its discretion require plaintiff to furnish a bill of particulars as to time, place and date of each act relied upon.—Gary v. Eaton Circuit Judge, 132 Mich. 105.

¶ 525. Where, in an action for criminal conversation, only one act is charged, the plaintiff is not confined to a specific date, but may show that it was committed at any time within the period of the statute of limitations; and this, too, whether the defendant does or does not rely on an alibi.—Johnston v. Disbrow, 47 Mich. 59.

¶ 526. An action by a husband to recover for the debauching of his wife by defendant who was charged with having given her intoxicants and taking advantage of her while in an intoxicated condition, is for assault and rape and not for adulterous criminal conversation.—Hirdes v. Ottawa Circuit Judge, 180 Mich. 321.

§ 163. ——Presumptions and evidence.

Of condonation and connivance, see post § 164.

Admissibility of evidence as to damages for criminal conversation, see Damages § 317.

General law of evidence, see Evidence.

Disqualification through privileged relationship of husband and wife, see Witnesses, V, D.

Admissions and declarations as evidence in crim. con. suits, see Evidence, VII.

¶ 527. An actual marriage between plaintiff and the alleged wife must be proved in an action for criminal conversation; and such evidence of cohabitation and reputation as suffices in other civil cases is not enough here.—Hutchins v. Kimmel, 31 Mich. 126; Perry v. Lovejoy, 49 Mich. 529.

¶ 528. In an action of criminal conversation evidence of prior acts of intercourse with other men and that the wife associated with women of bad repute is competent and admissible.—Smith v. Hockenberry, 146 Mich. 7.

¶ 529. In an action of criminal conversation the previous reputation of the wife and distinct acts of immorality may be given in evidence.—Smith v. Hockenberry, 146 Mich. 7.

¶ 530. In criminal conversation, testimony of the wife's criminal intimacy with others after the offense in question should be excluded.—Smith v. Hockenberry, 138 Mich. 129.

¶ 531. In an action for criminal conversation evidence that the wife interviewed the attorney employed by the plaintiff before he did, and a letter written by plaintiff's counsel to defendant are properly admitted in evidence where defendant disclaimed any purpose of showing connivance or conspiracy but claimed that the object thereof was to show the wife's depravity and that the alleged acts of intercourse were brought about by her, and under circumstances indicating that discovery was expected. Such evidence having a bearing on the question of the wife's character, and affecting the question of damages.—Smith v. Hockenberry, 146 Mich. 7.

¶ 532. Testimony of a neighbor of plaintiff's wife, in an action of criminal conversation, that during plaintiff's frequent absences from home defendant spent much time there in company with such wife, that he went in without knocking to conceal his fa

mony of plaintiff

a girl of 13, tend came to their hou

and then on bus

with the inferen

the innocence of

v. Ruell, 140 Mi

§ 164. ——Of con

Invalidity of co

of adultery, s

Public policy as cases, see Co

¶ 533. In crimi

that the plaintiff'

intimate with sev

rant an inference where there is no

of her former mis

berry, 138 Mich.

¶ 534. In crim

that the husband

misdeeds "did n

reply" and contin

after is not suffic

Smith v. Hockenb

¶ 535. In crimi

that one of the pl

tified to improper

tiff's wife and th

vited by the plai warrant the infer and consented to

Smith v. Hockenb

§ 165. ——Questio

General principles

structions.

Instruction as to criminal con

¶ 28.

¶ 536. It was defendant in an sation, where th

with either guilt

ferent inferences

same facts, it w

to draw such ini

140 Mich. 256.

¶ 537. Upon t an action for cri

is correctly stat

"Mere opportun not sufficient to must be evidenc

stances, times

together as wou

ordinary care a that such parti intercourse. It sexual intercou

that the parties

ing a portion of one night would be sufficient."—Brown v. Evans, 149 Mich. 429.

¶ 538. In an action for alienation of affections containing a count for criminal conversation, an instruction, requiring the plaintiff to prove adulterous disposition of the defendant, and of the plaintiff's wife and opportunity, is argumentative and unnecessary in the face of stronger testimony which came near being direct evidence on the subject.—Knickerbocker v. Worthing, 138 Mich. 224, Moore, C. J., dissenting.

¶ 539. In an action for alienation of affections containing a count for criminal conversation, the refusal of an instruction that adultery must be proved specifically as charged is held not error in the light of a general charge covering the subject.—Knickerbocker v. Worthing, 138 Mich. 224. Moore, C. J., dissents on the ground that it is not covered in the general charge.

§ 166. Alienation of affections.

Defenses, justification or excuse, see post § 167.
Pleadings and issues and variance, see post § 168.
Burden of proof and presumptions, see post § 169.
Admissibility of evidence, see post § 170.
Admissibility on affection or estrangement, see post § 171.
Weight and sufficiency of evidence, see post § 172.
Questions of law and fact and instructions, see post § 173.
Damages for alienation, see Damages.
Measure of damages for alienation, see Damages § 131.
Admissibility of evidence as to damages for alienation, see Damages § 317.
Public policy as to settlement of alienation suits, see Contracts § 63.
Divorce, see Divorce.

¶ 540. A wife may sue for damages for alienation of her husband's affections and consequent loss of his society, assistance and support.—Warren v. Warren, 89 Mich. 123. See Mitchell v. Mitchell, 49 Mich. 68.

§ 167. ——Defenses, justification or excuse.

Failure to interpose defense in divorce suit as bar to action for alienation of crim. con., see Former Adjudication ¶¶ 269, 270.

¶ 541. Death of the wife whose affections were alienated does not bar or abate the husband's action.—Philpott v. Kirkpatrick, 171 Mich. 495.

¶ 542. The fact that the plaintiff secured a divorce from his wife on the ground of extreme cruelty, testifying in that case that they had been estranged since 1906, is not a defense to an action against the defendant for alienation of his wife's affections, in which the intimacy complained of was alleged to have begun in 1908, there being no inconsistency in the two cases, the question in the divorce case being whether there was enough cruelty to justify a divorce, and in the second whether the defendant invaded the home of the plaintiff.—Philpott v. Kirkpatrick, 171 Mich. 495.

¶ 543. The mere fact that a husband and wife are not for a period on friendly terms does not furnish an excuse for the interference into the domestic relation of an outsider, although the real injury he may do may be less than when a tranquil, happy family life is destroyed.—Hendrickson v. Harry, 200 Mich. 41.

¶ 544. The fact that there is an estrangement between a husband and his wife does not give a third party the right to invade the home and justify the action on the ground that there was no affection to alienate, since either party's chance of reconciliation cannot be interfered with.—Philpott v. Kirkpatrick, 171 Mich. 495.

§ 168. ——Pleadings and issues and variance.

Pleading damages for alienation, see Damages § 255.
Amendments of pleadings, see Pleadings, VI.
General principles of pleading, see Pleading.

¶ 545. Where a declaration for alienating the affections of plaintiff's husband alleges that by defendant's acts plaintiff has been deprived of her husband's "society, comfort, assistance and support" which she should and otherwise "might and would have had," and of the happiness, reputation, and honor theretofore enjoyed by her as his wife, and of his affections towards her, and that by such acts her husband was caused to desert her, and that the defendants knowing the husband's whereabouts conceal the fact, it is sufficient, certainly unless demurred to, without expressly averring that she possessed her husband's affections.—Bowersox v. Bowersox, 115 Mich. 24.

¶ 546. In an action for enticing away his wife, plaintiff cannot show defendant's acts of adultery with her, not having complained of such in his declaration.—Perry v. Lovejoy, 49 Mich. 529.

¶ 547. Testimony tending to prove adultery of the wife are inadmissible in an action by her husband for alienation of her affections by other means than adultery, since such testimony does not tend to establish the pleaded cause of action.—Merrill v. Leisenring, 149 Mich. 423.

§ 169. ——Burden of proof and presumptions.

Order of proof, see Trial, V, B.

¶ 548. While interference by a stranger with the affections of a husband or wife is presumed to be malicious, it is otherwise in the case of parents and near relatives, whose malice must be affirmatively shown. —Smith v. Smith, 192 Mich. 566.

§ 170. ——Admissibility of evidence.

See also ante ¶ 547.

Admissibility on affection or estrangement, see post § 171.

Admissibility of evidence to reduce or mitigate damages for alienation, see Damages § 340.

Admissibility of evidence as to damages for alienation, see Damages § 317.

Disqualification through privileged relationship of husband and wife, see Witnesses, V, D.

Admissions and declarations as evidence in alienation suits, see Evidence, VII.

Admissions and declarations by husband or wife against each other, see Evidence § 425.

Declarations evincing affection or the lack of it, see Evidence § 332.

Evidence in alienation suit as to times other than pleaded, see also Evidence § 94.

General rules of evidence, see Evidence.

¶ 549. Testimony is admissible in an action for alienating the affection of the plaintiff's wife, showing the conduct of the defendant after the bringing of the action and after the plaintiff's wife left the defendant. —Sweikhart v. Hanrahan, 184 Mich. 201.

¶ 550. In an action for alienating the affections of her husband, it is proper to ask the plaintiff at what time she began a divorce suit and a slander suit against the defendant, such questions throwing a possible light on the reasons for her leaving her husband as well as on the question of damages.—Derham v. Derham, 125 Mich. 109.

¶ 551. In a wife's action against her father-in-law for alienating her husband's affections, the testimony of defendant's wife as to her objections to the marriage has no bearing upon the issue and is properly excluded.—Rice v. Rice, 104 Mich. 371.

¶ 552. Where one is sued by his daughter-in-law for alienating her husband's affections, questions put to his wife on cross-examination as to whether the extent of plaintiff's sinning at a certain time against defendant's household was by attending again a certain church, and whether witness does not think a person in this country should be allowed, under reasonable restrictions, to embrace whatever religion seems to him or her proper, are immaterial and irrelevant.—Rice v. Rice, 104 Mich. 371.

¶ 553. In an action by a husband for alienation of his wife's affections, the defendant put in evidence to show that shortly before the separation of defendant and his wife, defendant insisted that his daughter go to school rather than work in a cigar factory, and that a quarrel ensued, after which are admissible in evidence for the purpose of showing that on account of plaintiff's conduct she had already ceased to care for him.—Merrill v. Leisenring, 149 Mich. 423.

¶ 561. One man sued another for enticing his wife away. He showed that he and his wife had been living close by defendant and on the latter's lands, and that he had left his wife there while he went west to seek a location; that he was gone about three months, during which time he had letters from his wife, one of which indicated affection for him; as a later one did not, he returned at once, and, after living with his family about a week, his wife left him and went home to her father, with whom she stayed some time and then went to work at defendant's; that she afterwards refused to live with her husband and sued for a divorce. Held, that, having shown all this, plaintiff was properly allowed to introduce the letter from his wife to show that at one time since he went away she was affectionately disposed.—Perry v. Lovejoy, 49 Mich. 529.

¶ 562. In an action by a husband for alienation of his wife's affections, it is error to exclude a statement by the husband that the wife's feelings cooled toward him shortly after defendant began to pay marked attention to her.—Barnes v. Tibbitts, 164 Mich. 217.

¶ 563. In an action by a husband for alienation of his wife's affections, the defendant may not show that thirty years previous the husband and wife quarreled, where there was a subsequent reconciliation.—Barnes v. Tibbitts, 164 Mich. 217.

¶ 564. In an action by a husband for alienation of his wife's affections, the defendant may, under the general issue, show how plaintiff treated the wife and also the wife's attitude to the plaintiff.—Barnes v. Tibbitts, 164 Mich. 217.

¶ 565. In an action for alienating the affections of her husband, the husband may testify as to whether he would have continued to live with the plaintiff if she had not left him.—Derham v. Derham, 125 Mich. 109.

¶ 566. In an action to recover for alienation of the affections of plaintiff's husband, where there is evidence of malice on the part of defendants, declarations of the husband are competent as tending to prove his state of mind towards plaintiff.—Smith v. Smith, 192 Mich. 566.

¶ 567. In an action for alienating the affections of her husband, testimony by the divorced husband in response to his wife's testimony, that he had not procured a doctor for his wife because he had not thought it necessary was admissible in rebuttal, as tending to show that it was not because of want of affection.—Derham v. Derham, 125 Mich. 109.

¶ 568. In an action for alienating the affections of her husband, testimony that the husband had said to witness that his folks did not like his wife and that he wished he had married another girl might be admissible to show the husband's feelings, under proper instructions to disregard it as hearsay in regard to his father, the defendant.—Derham v. Derham, 125 Mich. 109.

¶ 569. In an action for alienating the affections of her husband evidence that the plaintiff had said she was ashamed of her husband is admissible on the question of damages and also as explaining loss of his affections.—Derham v. Derham, 125 Mich. 109.

¶ 570. In an action for alienating the affections of her husband evidence of gifts of provisions and other things by the defendant to the husband, in which the plaintiff shared, is admissible to show the feeling of the defendant.—Derham v. Derham, 125 Mich. 109.

§ 172. ——Weight and sufficiency of evidence.

Divorce bill as evidence in alienation suit, see Evidence ¶ 2769.
General law of evidence, see Evidence.

¶ 571. Circumstantial evidence reviewed, and held to be sufficient to justify a finding by the jury that defendant was guilty of the alienation of the affections of plaintiff's husband.—Metcalf v. Tiffany, 106 Mich. 504.

¶ 572. In an action to recover for alienation of the affections of a husband or wife, malice is shown when it appears that parents have interfered with the domestic relations of a child simply to gratify their dislike or hatred of the other party to the marriage.—Smith v. Smith, 192 Mich. 566.

¶ 573. In an action to recover for alienation of the affections of plaintiff's husband, where defendants were the mother and sister of the husband, the fact that the husband was induced to leave plaintiff by the conduct or solicitations of defendants purposely directed toward that end held sufficient to prove malice where there was no evidence of a motive on the part of defendants other than hatred and ill-will towards plaintiff.—Smith v. Smith, 192 Mich. 566.

¶ 574. In a suit by a wife against her mother-in-law for the alienation of her husband's affections, evidence that defendant was opposed to the marriage of her son to plaintiff and that after the marriage she persuaded him to desert his wife held sufficient upon which to base a verdict against defendant.—Deidrich v. Swift, 178 Mich. 593.

¶ 575. In an action to recover for alienation of the affections of plaintiff's husband, where defendants were the mother and sister of the husband, and where the evidence was conflicting as to whether defendants were instrumental and effective in depriving plaintiff of her husband's affections, evidence examined and held to sustain a verdict for plaintiff.—Smith v. Smith, 192 Mich. 566.

§ 173. ——Questions of law and fact and instructions.

General principles as to instructions, see Instructions.

¶ 576. In a suit for alienation of a wife's affections, the first count of the declaration charged adultery and the second enticement. Plaintiff abandoned the first count, and went to trial on the second. The evidence showed many acts from which the inference of an alienation might be drawn, and while collectively they perhaps justified an inference of adultery, such inference did not necessarily follow. Held, that the case presented a question for the jury on the count charging enticement, and it was error to direct a verdict for the defendant.—Merrill v. Leisenring, 157 Mich. 188.

¶ 577. In an action against parents-in-law for enticing their daughter from plaintiff and alienating her affections, the evidence was reviewed and held to warrant an instruction to the jury that there was no case for their consideration.—White v. Ross, 47 Mich. 172.

¶ 578. A charge, in a suit by a wife against the parents of her husband for alienation of affections, that it was the duty of defendants to urge their son to live with plaintiff, is erroneous.—Walter v. Walter, 172 Mich. 351.

¶ 579. In a suit for alienation of affections brought by a wife, it is not error to refuse the requested instruction of defendant that the parents are not liable if the husband had determined to live apart from his wife before consulting with his parents, where the point is covered fully in the court's general charge.—Gornetzky v. Gornetzky, 174 Mich. 492.

¶ 580. In an action by a husband against his wife's mother for the alienation of his wife's affection, it is not prejudicial error for the court to instruct that the jury must be satisfied by a preponderance of the evidence that the defendant wrongfully, wilfully, and maliciously alienated the affections of her daughter and that she is entitled to a verdict unless the jury can say that she was actuated by malice or had motives toward the plaintiff, where from the oral charge of the court it is apparent that the jury could not have been misled as to the meaning of malice in law and they were fully informed as to what conduct of the part of the defendant would entitle the plaintiff to a verdict.—Zimmerman v. Whiteley, 134 Mich. 39.

¶ 581. In a v
father-in-law for affections, it is no
the jury that de have been the so it is enough if h and that his wif same direction w
the consequences
Rice, 104 Mich. 3

¶ 582. In a v
father-in-law for affections, it is p that it was not his son not to se
if the son had n plaintiff if she rej
ing that she had her, and defenda doing, advised hi best for him to d
dren, there was must find that pl
from her becaus affections; that h
to his son's mar that he had the r it would be unw plaintiff if she ag that any advice
son after the sep
a cause of action.
371.

VI. ACTIONS AN
A

§ 174. Capacity to Right of deserted
Joinder of husban
§§ 176-178.
Joinder of husbar fendant, see p
Actions against e 182.
Pleading, evidence
§ 183.
Separate mainten
195.
Capacity of wife
also ante ¶ 4
Actions for prot
or assertion IX.
Disqualification ship of husb
V, D.
Measure of dama alone, see D Proper person t for loss of
Act, see Dea
Collateral attack ability of pa
Judgments, Judgments as b or wife, see

Capacity of married woman to sue or defend on cause of action accruing to or against her, see Comp. L. 1915 § 12357.
Capacity of married woman to sue or defend in relation to her separate property or property which husband cannot alien or incumber without her joinder, see Comp. L. 1915, § 12356.
Capacity of wife after divorce to sue and be sued, see Comp. L. 1915, § 11474.
Capacity of married woman coming from another state or country without husband to sue or defend, see Comp. L. 1915, §§ 11470-11472.

¶ 583. A married woman is now fully competent to assert and maintain her rights either as plaintiff or defendant.—Wilson v. Coolidge, 42 Mich. 112.

¶ 584. The right of a married woman to sue in her own name for a homestead right is placed by Comp. L. 1871, § 4805, How. St. § 6297, on the same basis as her right to prosecute in relation to her sole property.—Comstock v. Comstock, 27 Mich. 97.

¶ 585. The statute which empowers a married woman to maintain suit in her own name for property of her husband which he cannot incumber without her consent, or which is exempt by law from sale on execution or other final process of a court, does not limit her right to cases in which the husband has incumbered the property, or in which it is taken on final process of a court.—Ingersoll v. Gage, 47 Mich. 121.

¶ 586. For the purpose of enforcing a homestead right she may file a bill for specific performance of a land contract relinquished by her husband.—McKee v. Wilcox, 11 Mich. 358.

§ 175. Right of deserted wife to sue.

Statutory provision entitling abandoned wife to sue, see Comp. L. 1915, § 11454.

¶ 587. Where a husband, in order to avoid arrest for a confessed crime, abandons his family and leaves the country, his wife, for the purpose of suing and being sued, will be regarded by the court as a feme sole.—Sanborn v. Sanborn, 104 Mich. 180.

§ 176. Joinder of husband and wife as parties plaintiff.

Actions concerning separate property, see post § 177.
Actions for assertion or defense of exempt property rights, see post § 178.
Joinder of husband and wife as parties defendant, see post § 179.
Joinder of husband and wife as parties plaintiff in suit for slander or libel, see ante ¶ 502.
Joinder of husband and wife in suit for trespass on land in possession of both under deed running to both, see ante ¶ 498.
General principles as to parties, see Parties.
Proper parties in ejectment for homestead, see Homesteads § 85.
Necessity for joinder of other spouse with one complaining in suit for trust accounting, see Trusts, XI.
Right of husband alone to sue as plaintiff for protection of homestead where decree is to benefit his family, see Homesteads ¶ 244.
Joinder of wife with husband in suit to establish lien on homestead, though wife did not sign instrument purporting to declare lien, see Homesteads ¶ 238.
Necessity of joinder of husband in suit by wife to set aside deed of homestead procured from her through fraud, see Homesteads ¶ 242.
Necessity for joinder of husband in suit by wife for fraud which induced her to part with homestead which was her sole property, see Homesteads ¶ 274.
Joinder of wife with husband in crossbill to assert homestead in creditors' suit or suit in aid of execution, see Homesteads ¶ 275.
Parties in bills for partnership accounting, see Partnership, VII, E.
Joinder of wife with guardian of husband in partition proceedings, see Comp. L. 1915, § 11473.

¶ 588. Under Comp. L. 1857, § 3292, How. St. § 6297, a wife can maintain an action in her individual name without joining her husband for an assault committed upon her.—Berger v. Jacobs, 21 Mich. 215.

¶ 589. Under Comp. L. 1871, § 4804, How. St. § 6297, an action for the personal sufferings of a married woman from an injury received in a railroad accident should be brought by the wife alone, and not by the husband and wife jointly; the statute supersedes the common law in this respect. Whether, where they have sued jointly, the error may be cured by amendment, quære.—Michigan Cent. R. Co. v. Coleman, 28 Mich. 440.

¶ 590. A wife may recover for personal injuries in an action for negligence, without joining her husband as plaintiff.—Blair v. Seitner Dry Goods Co., 184 Mich. 304.

¶ 591. No joinder of husband is necessary where the wife sues in tort for a personal grievance or cause of action.—Berger v. Jacobs, 21 Mich. 215; Leonard v. Pope, 27 Mich. 145.

¶ 592. A husband may maintain an action in his own name for loss of his wife's services caused by injury from an assault upon her.—Berger v. Jacobs, 21 Mich. 215.

¶ 593. A wife may sue alone or husband and wife may join in replevin suit for exempt property.—Shepard v. Cross, 33 Mich. 96; Hanselman v. Kegel, 60 Mich. 540.

¶ 594. A husband need not join his wife as plaintiff but may sue alone for the price of personalty whereof he has made sale with his wife's knowledge and consent, though some of such personalty was his, some was hers, and some belonged to them both jointly. —Gillett v. Knowles, 97 Mich. 77.

¶ 595. A husband can sue in his own name for the services of his wife without his wife joining as plaintiff.—Harrington v. Gies, 45 Mich. 374.

¶ 596. One who has engaged in his own name to furnish his own services and those of his wife can sue on the contract in his own name; as his wife is not a party thereto, and her earnings under it belong to her husband, she need not be joined as plaintiff. —Sines v. Superintendents of Poor of Wayne County, 58 Mich. 503.

¶ 597. Where plaintiff's declaration and evidence in trespass ground his right to recover solely upon fifteen years' adverse possession, the fact that the record title of the land adjoining the strip trespassed upon is in plaintiff and his wife does not require her to be joined as plaintiff.—Hockmoth v. Des Grand Champs, 71 Mich. 520.

§ 177. ——Actions concerning separate property.

Replevin against husband for wife's separate property, see post § 182.

What constitutes separate property of wife, see ante §§ 38-43.

Separate property in general, see ante II, C.

Right of wife to join as plaintiff in suit for disturbance of possession under joint lease running to her and her husband, see ante § 127, ¶ 431.

Injunction by wife against sale of her separate property on execution against her husband, see ante ¶ 136.

¶ 598. In a suit brought in 1854, by the husband alone for personal property acquired by the wife before her marriage, held, that the wife should have been joined.—Brown v. Fifield, 4 Mich. 322.

¶ 599. A husband cannot sue in his own name on a non-negotiable due-bill belonging to his wife.—Blackwood v. Brown, 32 Mich. 104.

¶ 600. Husband may sue alone for price of personalty belonging partly to him, partly to his wife, and partly to both jointly, and of which he made a sale with her consent.—Gillett v. Knowles, 97 Mich. 77.

¶ 601. A woman who has bargained with her husband for his title is the proper party to file a bill to cancel a fraudulent deed made by them to defendants and procured by the fraud of one of the defendants in making them believe they were executing a proper instrument to convey the title to complainant from her husband join.—Bellair v. W

¶ 601a. A husb and general mana her, and who sha a means of deter having no proper should not join for slander of su erson, 102 Mich.

§ 178. ——Actions exempt p

Actions for asse steads, see H

Right of wife to her husband tions ¶¶ 80, 8

¶ 602. A wife for exempt good whom they wer subsequent garni against the husb selman v. Kegel, ¶ 602a. A wife and wife may jo empt property.— 96.

¶ 603. How. St. ried woman to su empt property t her husband, app erty is taken by him.—Singer Mfg 639.

§ 179. Joinder of defendan

Joinder of husb plaintiff, see

Necessity for joi as parties d homestead, se

Joinder of wife w close mortga Homestead ¶¶

Costs to wife or or needless

Wife as party d bond by her see Appeal ¶

Wife as improp as "heir" o husband def also Equity

Necessity of joini band in ejec

Wife as defend ment, see Es

Necessity for ma in suit to se tory foreclo

Non-joinder of ing the con as res adjud tion ¶ 37.

Joinder of husband with wife in suit for wife's tort, see Comp. L. 1915, § 12358.
Necessity for joinder of husband in suit against wife on liability created during absence of husband who has deserted wife, see Comp. L. 1915, §§ 11459, 11460.
Condemnation of property of married woman, see Comp. L. 1915, § 11468.

¶ 604. As a wife is now solely responsible for her own torts there is no need of joining the husband in a suit against her unless both are to be sued as wrong-doers.—Weber v. Weber, 47 Mich. 569.

¶ 605. A wife who has knowingly perpetrated a fraud in her husband's behalf, and as his agent, need not be joined with him in an action of tort therefor.—Weber v. Weber, 47 Mich. 569.

¶ 606. Under Comp. L. 1871, §§ 6129, 7382, How. St. §§ 7714, 8959, the husband is no longer responsible, in person or property, for the torts of his wife, so that there seems to be no reason for joining him as a defendant in action for slander; yet it is assumed, in these very statutes, that he is still a proper party, and whether necessary or not, he is not an improper party.—Burt v. McBain, 29 Mich. 260.

¶ 607. Where a house built on land under contract of purchase is by the vendee wrongfully removed, no homestead right attaches so as to require the vendor to make the vendee's wife a defendant in replevin.—Michigan Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Cronk, 93 Mich. 49.

¶ 608. A husband who as his wife's agent has made notes in her name for her debt, and has also signed them with her, apparently as an accommodation indorser, though the notes in form are joint and several, need not be joined with her as defendant in an action upon such notes.—First Commercial Bank v. Newton, 117 Mich. 433.

¶ 609. In an action upon an appeal bond jointly executed by husband and wife as principals the wife must be joined as a defendant.—Post v. Shafer, 63 Mich. 85.

¶ 609a. A wife in actual occupancy of a homestead is entitled to be made a party defendant to a bill foreclosing a mortgage thereupon.—Haviland v. Chase, 116 Mich. 214.

¶ 609b. The wife of the defendant must be joined in ejectment to recover from her husband land occupied by them as a homestead.—Sessions v. Sherwood, 78 Mich. 234; Kalkes v. Storms, 93 Mich. 480.

§ 180. Actions against each other.
Contract actions against each other, see post § 181.
Replevin against husband for separate property, see post § 182.
Torts against each other, see ante § 152.
Right of wife to foreclose mortgage against her husband, see ante ¶ 133.
Effect on right of wife to foreclose mortgage of fact that she signed it to release dower on its execution to her assignor, see ante ¶ 133.
Right of one spouse to sue other for property left to plaintiff by divorce, see Divorce § 144.
Cross-bill for divorce to bill by husband to restrain wife from engaging in competing business, see Equity ¶ 495.
Necessity for appointment of next friend to represent wife in suit against her husband, see Guardian ad Litem ¶ 2.
Right or authority of husband to select guardian ad litem for his insane wife in suit against her for divorce, see Guardian ad Litem ¶ 18.

¶ 610. A wife may sue her husband at law or in equity in respect to her separate property.—Markham v. Markham, 4 Mich. 305.

¶ 611. A married woman, in suing a firm in which her husband is a partner, must implead him as defendant, if the partners are not severally liable, in order to maintain her action.—Benson v. Morgan, 50 Mich. 77.

¶ 612. A woman assigned a claim she held against her husband, and the assignee, as trustee for her, recovered judgment for it. Meanwhile the husband abandoned the wife and sought, with others, to embarrass the enforcement of the judgment by clouding the title to their homestead property, on which it had been levied. Held, that the wife, as equitable owner of the claim and also as having a homestead right, could properly join with the assignee in filing a bill against the husband and the others to clear the title.—Eaton v. Eaton, 68 Mich. 158.

§ 181. ——Contract actions against each other.
Contracts and dealing after marriage, see ante § 4.

¶ 613. A husband cannot sue his wife at law or in equity to enforce a purely executory contract.—Jenne v. Marble, 37 Mich. 319.

¶ 614. Where a wife delivered a note held by her against her husband to him, with the understanding that it was paid, and that he was to use the money due upon it in his business until she called for it, her action should be, not upon the note, but for such money, which will be considered as loaned to the husband at time of receiving the note.—Letts v. Letts, 73 Mich. 138.

§ 182. ——Replevin against husband for separate property.
See also ante ¶ 159.
Actions concerning wife's separate property in general, see ante § 177.
What constitutes wife's separate property, see ante §§ 38-43.

Separate property of wife in general, see ante II, C.
Wife's right to trover against husband for carrying off personalty belonging to her under separation contract, see post ¶ 632.

¶ 615. A wife living apart from her husband can bring replevin against him for her individual property after making due demand therefor.—White v. White, 58 Mich. 546.

§ 183. Pleading, evidence and trial practice.

Burden of proof, presumptions and evidence as to property rights between husband and wife, see ante §§ 18, 19.
Presumptions and evidence as to estate held by the entireties, see ante § 35.
Presumptions and evidence as to ownership of wife's separate property, see ante § 52.
Burden of proof, presumptions and evidence as to conveyances to each other, see ante §§ 59, 60.
Burden of proof and presumptions as to agency of husband for wife, see ante § 109.
Presumptions and evidence as to contract rights and liabilities of husband toward third persons, see ante §§ 71, 72.
Burden of proof and presumptions as to legal capacity and disabilities in contract dealing of wife with third persons, see ante §§ 92, 93.
Presumptions and evidence as to compensation for services furnished by wife to third persons, see ante § 126.
Presumptions and evidence as to liability of wife on covenants for title, see ante § 143.
Presumptions and evidence as to torts by and against either spouse, see ante § 159.
Presumptions and evidence as to criminal conversation, see ante §§ 163, 164.
Burden of proof and presumptions in suit for alienation of affections, see ante § 169.
Evidence of fraud or coercion respecting conveyances to each other, see ante § 60.
Evidence as to liability of husband for necessaries, see ante § 72.
Sufficiency of evidence as to gifts between spouses, see ante § 19.
Admissibility and sufficiency of evidence as to disabilities and capacity of wife in contract dealings with third persons, see ante § 94.
Admissibility and sufficiency of evidence of agency of husband for wife, see ante § 110.
Admissibility of evidence in alienation suit, see ante §§ 170, 171.
Weight and sufficiency of evidence in alienation suit, see ante § 172.
Questions of law and fact as to wife's separate property, see ante § 53.
Questions of law and fact and instructions as to capacity and disabilities of wife in dealings and contracts with third persons, see ante § 95.
Questions of la
as to agenc
ante § 111.
Questions of la
as to torts or both, see Questions for j criminal cor
Questions of la in alienatio
Pleadings and tion, see an Pleadings, issue of affections
Pleadings and
nance suit,
Judgment and arate maint
195.
Granting divor suit, see po
General law of Suing husband tion against judication ¶
Presumption aga
ing to call
dence § 65.
Right of wife t cree against Equity ¶ 96
Admissibility to contract, se Evidence to est conveyance
§ 3.
Right of wife against her ¶ 356.

VII. SEPAR
M

§ 184. In gener

Separation agre
Avoidance or re
ciliation, s Procedure to en to property
Separate maint
195.
Criminal liabili
§ 196.
Right of desert Husband's dut
ante ¶ 39.
Power of wife
¶ 1.
Criminal liabil support, se
Loss of right secure mai Mutual rights
general, se
Mutual propert
ante II.
Alimony, see D Separation of homestead
47.

Separation amounting to desertion, see Divorce §§ 9-11.
Separation of wife's domicile from husbands, see Domicile ¶ 13.

¶ 616. A husband's obligation to support his wife apart from him can only arise from his turning her out of doors, or being guilty of such misconduct as would justify her in leaving him.—Randall v. Randall, 37 Mich. 563.

¶ 617. Where a wife seeking divorce is justified, by her husband's conduct, in living apart from him, he is bound to provide support for her elsewhere.—Page v. Page, 51 Mich. 88.

¶ 618. Where alimony, fixed in a divorce suit brought by the wife, has been duly paid, and no application has been made for a greater amount, the husband is not liable for necessaries afterwards furnished to her.—Crittenden v. Schermerhorn, 39 Mich. 661.

§ 185. Separation agreements.

Invalidity for fraud, mistake or inequitable division, see post § 186.
Avoidance or recovation by subsequent reconciliation, see post § 187.
Procedure to enforce separation agreement as to property, see post § 188.
Contracts after marriage in general, see ante § 4.
Validity of contract for care of minor children on separation, see Parent and Child, I.
Public policy as to separation agreements and agreements to resume relations, see Contracts § 64.
Agreements for alimony or property adjustments on divorce, see Divorce § 135.
Parol evidence to show that separation agreement did not effect complete division, see Evidence ¶ 1100.

¶ 619. A contract between them will not be sustained when likely to favor a separation that has not yet taken place.—Randall v. Randall, 37 Mich. 563.

¶ 620. When a husband and wife have fully decided to separate, a contract between them that does not spring from fraud or coercion, and contemplates a suitable provision for the wife and children by an equitable division of the property, is sustainable.—Randall v. Randall, 37 Mich. 563.

¶ 621. A contract between a husband and wife for the maintenance of the wife, entered into after separation, is enforceable if fair and not the result of fraud or coercion.—Mesler v. Jackson Circuit Judge, 188 Mich. 195.

¶ 622. An agreement between husband and wife providing for the latter in contemplation of their judicial separation, is valid.—Owen v. Yale, 75 Mich. 256.

¶ 623. A husband and wife upon separating signed an agreement as to the division of property, in which the wife agreed in consideration of land and personalty received by her to relinquish all right to support, and to release all claim to property then owned or afterwards acquired by the husband. Held, that thereafter the property owned in her own right remained her own; that personal property of the husband not mentioned in the agreement remained his own; and that household chattels originally the husband's, or accumulated after their marriage by joint efforts, and not divided, belonged to the husband.—Carpenter v. Carpenter, 154 Mich. 100.

¶ 624. Subdivisions 7, 9, §§ 8612, 10322, Comp. L. 1897, relating to the exemption of household property from sale on mortgage without the consent of the wife, do not relate to marriage agreements, and do not prevent a wife from releasing her interest in the property by a separation contract.—Carpenter v. Carpenter, 154 Mich. 100.

¶ 625. A deed of land, containing no reservation as to crops, made by a husband in pursuance of a separation contract, conveys the title to the growing crops to the wife.—Carpenter v. Carpenter, 154 Mich. 100.

¶ 626. Where a husband in a separation agreement conveyed to his wife certain realty reserving a life interest in certain events, and there was a mortgage signed by both on the premises; which he agreed to pay within two years, but if in the meantime she should make any payments of principal or interest she should be subrogated to the rights of the mortgagee or have a lien corresponding to the amount paid as security and to assure the final payment, such contract created a personal liability to pay within two years, but did not create a personal liability to reimburse the wife for payments made by her more than ten years after the mortgage had become due.—Clinton v. Clinton's Estate, 148 Mich. 496.

§ 186. ——Invalidity for fraud, mistake or inequitable division.

¶ 627. As a wife has not a present subsisting interest in her husband's personalty, but only a contingent interest, she cannot bring an action against him for damages because he has misrepresented to her the value of such personalty, and thus has induced her to agree to a separation upon terms to which she would not have agreed but for such misrepresentation.—Schmoltz v. Schmoltz, 116 Mich. 692.

¶ 628. A settlement between husband and wife on their separation whereby he gave her in lieu of all marital property rights $100 and non-negotiable, noninterest-bearing notes for $3,900 falling due successively through four years was held inequitable and unconscionable, where he was worth $20,000 to

$25,000 at the time and afterward refused to pay the notes, assigning as a reason that he had designedly drawn them that way and that she "would never get a cent," and where he afterwards gave her land worth $1,200 or less for all of the remaining notes ($3,500) and she only realized $1,000 for it.—Bechtel v. Barton, 147 Mich. 318.

¶ 629. A husband was worth some $28,000 and had a net annual income of some $1,200. Under an agreement for separate maintenance he was to pay his wife $7 a week, with an additional amount for the support of the son until he was fourteen years of age, bringing the sum total up to about one-half of said net income. The wife was no longer young. Held, said provision was not a fair one and should be set aside.—Nichols v. Nichols, 169 Mich. 540.

§ 187. Avoidance or revocation by subsequent reconciliation.

Abrogation of separation agreement by resuming marital relations, see also Divorce ¶ 495.

¶ 630. A wife's relinquishment to her husband in contemplation of a separation of all her rights expectant on her surviving him is avoided by their subsequent reconciliation and resumption of marital relations.—Knapp v. Knapp, 95 Mich. 474.

§ 188. Procedure to enforce separation agreement as to property.

¶ 631. In an action between a husband and wife on a separation contract between them, equity will, whenever needful, give effect to provisions in behalf of the wife by adjudging the husband to be her trustee and requiring him to account accordingly.—Randall v. Randall, 37 Mich. 563.

¶ 632. When, after an agreement for separation and division of property, a husband carries off personalty belonging to the wife, she is entitled to recover in trover its market value.—Carpenter v. Carpenter, 154 Mich. 100.

§ 189. Separate maintenance suits.

Effect of existing agreement for support, see post § 190.
Pleading and evidence, see post § 191.
Judgment and decree; amount and relief, see post § 192.
Granting divorce on separate maintenance suit, see post § 193.
Liens on realty to secure enforcement, see post § 194.
Modification of decree, see post § 195.
Right of deserted wife to sue in general, see ante § 175.
Actions affected by coverture in general, see ante VI.
Amendment of separation bill to pray divorce, see Divorce § 51.
Nature of bill as one for divorce or one for separation, see Divorce § 40.
Annulment suits, see Marriage, IV.
Statutory provision as to care and custody of minor children on separation suit, see Comp. L. 1915, § 11484.
Statutory provisions for separate maintenance suit, see Comp. L. 1915, §§ 11479-11483.

¶ 633. A woman's petition under How. St. § 6291 for support out of the property of her alleged husband cannot be sustained unless there has been a valid marriage between the parties.—Clancy v. Clancy, 66 Mich. 202.

¶ 634. A valid marriage and the relation of husband and wife are prerequisites to a proceeding under Comp. L. 1897, § 8686, conferring upon chancery courts jurisdiction to compel husbands to support their wives under certain circumstances.—Judson v. Judson, 171 Mich. 185.

¶ 635. Complainant and defendant were married in Minnesota and lived together for a year, when defendant abandoned complainant and came to Michigan. Complainant secured a divorce in Minnesota and now seeks support for herself and minor child. Held, that this bill for support is an independent suit in this state, and, in the absence of appropriate legislation, alimony cannot be allowed, independent of divorce proceedings and existence of the marriage relation in courts of equity.—Judson v. Judson, 171 Mich. 185.

¶ 636. Exclusive of any statutory provision equity has no jurisdiction of a case where the bill is filed for alimony alone.—Peltier v. Peltier, H. 19.

¶ 637. A husband who makes to his wife indecent and criminal proposals, is filthy in his habits about the house, inconsiderate of her tastes and enjoyment, neglectful of her in sickness, vile in his insinuations as to her relatives and friends, of ungovernable temper, penurious, and unreasonable, and who finally, upon her leaving home by agreement for a temporary visit to her son, sends out printed notices that she has left his bed and board, and forbidding all persons to extend credit to her on his account, is guilty of extreme cruelty, entitling her to a decree for separate maintenance upon petition filed under Pub. Acts 1889, No. 243, which provides that such a decree shall not be made unless, on the hearing, such a state of facts shall appear as would entitle the wife to a decree of divorce upon the grounds specified in the petition.—Wolcott v. Wolcott, 114 Mich. 528.

¶ 638. Eighteen years' delay in suing a husband for support where the wife is living apart from him is fatal to the suit, even if the wife originally left him for cause.—Reed v. Reed, 52 Mich. 117.

¶ 639. While demurrer properly lies to a petition filed by a wife for separate maintenance, on ground of laches, she cannot be said to be guilty of laches merely because she has refrained for nearly ten years after desertion from bringing such proceedings.—Parkinson v. Parkinson, 177 Mich. 336.

§ 190. ——Effect of existing agreement for support.

¶ 640. Comp. Laws 1897, § 8686, providing that the circuit court in chancery shall set apart and decree to the wife a part of the husband's real estate and personal property under certain conditions justifying separate maintenance, gives the chancery court jurisdiction notwithstanding an allegation of an adequate remedy at law on a contract for separate maintenance.—Meyerl v. Meyerl, 125 Mich. 607.

¶ 641. Under Comp. Laws 1897, § 8686, providing that the circuit court in chancery shall set apart and decree to the wife a part of the husband's real estate and personal property under certain conditions justifying separate maintenance, a suit will lie by wife against the husband notwithstanding the parties have entered into a contract upon the subject, where the husband fails and refuses to continue payments agreed upon.—Meyerl v. Meyerl, 125 Mich. 607.

§ 191. ——Pleadings and evidence.

General law of evidence, see Evidence.
Evidence of conspiracy to cause separation, see also Conspiracy ¶¶ 24, 27.

¶ 642. Where a bill conforms with all the statutory requirements for a bill of divorce, asks for separate maintenance for life, and makes no allusion to another statute, it is a bill of divorce and not a proceeding under Act No. 243, Pub. Acts 1889, to "provide wives with property and maintenance."—Horning v. Horning, 162 Mich. 130.

§ 192. ——Judgment and decree; amount and relief.

Judgments in general, see Judgments.
Award of separate maintenance on denying divorce, see Divorce § 126.

¶ 643. A bill for the support of the wife separate from the husband will only be sustained when the reasons for it are imperative. If from the evidence the court is satisfied the difficulties between the parties are not serious, the bill will be dismissed, especially where there are young children for whom they ought to provide a home.—Davidson v. Davidson, 47 Mich. 151.

¶ 644. An allowance of $2 per week may be a sufficient allowance for a deserted wife's maintenance in a case where the husband has had nothing but his monthly earnings as a member of the fire department, and a few hundred dollars saved from such earnings since the separation of the parties.—Russell v. Russell, 75 Mich. 572.

¶ 645. Where the defendant in a petition filed by his wife for separate maintenance was shown to be possessed of a farm of 170 acres, worth $35 per acre, of a house and two lots in a village, and of personalty amounting to several thousand dollars, he was ordered to pay the petitioner for her separate support $200 within sixty days, and the sum of $200 per annum payable quarterly, during her lifetime or until the further order of the court, the same to be made a lien upon the realty.—Wolcott v. Wolcott, 114 Mich. 528.

§ 193. ——Granting divorce on separate maintenance suit.

Suits for limited divorce, see Divorce.
Adjustment of property rights in divorce, see Divorce, X.
Absolute divorce on bill for separation under the statute, see Divorce § 95.

¶ 646. Act No. 324, Pub. Acts 1907, provides that a divorce shall not be granted unless the court hearing the evidence shall deem best. Held, this act does not preclude the supreme court, in an appeal from a decree granting separate maintenance, from ordering an absolute divorce.—Horning v. Horning, 162 Mich. 130.

¶ 647. On grounds of public policy the supreme court will in a proper case reverse a decree granting separate maintenance and enter a decree for absolute divorce.—Horning v. Horning, 162 Mich. 130.

¶ 648. A decree for separate maintenance on the ground of cruelty gave the wife title to the home, but reserved to the husband the right to use a barn standing on the premises. The supreme court modified the decree so as to give the wife an absolute divorce. Held, that the wife's right to the home would be relieved from all claim of the husband to the use of the barn.—Utley v. Utley, 155 Mich. 258.

§ 194. ——Liens on realty to secure enforcement.

¶ 649. How. St., § 6293, providing that the sum fixed by the court may be secured upon the husband's real estate, is not repealed by Laws 1889, Act No. 243, providing deserted wives with separate maintenance, empowering the court to restrain the sale of husband's property, and authorizing the filing of notice and levy of execution; but they are construed together.—Tobey v. Tobey, 100 Mich. 54.

¶ 650. A husband induced his wife to join with him in a conveyance to his father of eighty acres of land, after which a deed to forty acres of other land, valued at $2,000, subject to a mortgage of $600, was taken in the son's name, and the forty acres were occupied by the son and his wife until their separation, when the father, who had agreed to pay the $600 mortgage, secured a mortgage for $1,000 on the forty acres. He then sold the eighty acres, and, having secured an assignment of the $600 mortgage, began to foreclose both mortgages. Upon the wife's bill for separate maintenance it appeared that the eighty acres were conveyed without consideration, and were not intended as a gift to the father, and that the forty acres were bought with the understanding that they were to be paid for by the father in consideration of the conveyance to him of the eighty acres; and the sum awarded for the wife's support was made a lien upon the forty acres, and given priority over both mortgages.—Tobey v. Tobey, 100 Mich. 54.

§ 195. ——Modification of decree.

¶ 651. The application of the husband for the modification of a decree of separate maintenance for the payment of $5 weekly to the wife was denied where the husband was earning $65 per month at the time of the rendition of the decree, and, at the time of the application for modification thereof, was earning $14 per week.—Dreijer v. Dreijer, 200 Mich. 619.

§ 196. Criminal liability and prosecutions.

Criminal prosecution for wife abandonment, see Indictment.

Crime of abandonment and neglect, see Crimes § 38.

Criminal responsibility of infant for nonsupport of wife, see Crimes § 63.

Nonsupporting husband as disorderly person, see Crimes § 63.

Indictment or information for wife abandonment, see Indictment, I.

Jurisdiction and place for criminal prosecution for wife abandonment, see Indictment, III.

Evidence in criminal prosecutions for wife abandonment, see Indictment, VIII.

Degree of evidence required in criminal wife abandonment, see Indictment, VIII, C.

Trial practice in criminal prosecutions for wife abandonment, see Indictment, IX.

Suspension of sentence in prosecution for wife abandonment on giving of bond for wife's support, see Indictment, XI.

Application of desertion act of 1907 to case of desertion in 1905 although the nonsupport continued to 1909, see Statutes, III.

HUSH MONEY to IMPLICATIONS.

Cross-References.

Hush Money—
- Crimes of bribery and extortion, see Crimes, II; Indictment.
- Compounding crimes, see Crimes, II; Indictment.
- Invalidity of contracts on consideration of corrupt suppression of facts, see Contracts, IV, B.
- Duress by threat of arrest to extort money, see Duress § 2.

Hydrants—
- General law of water supply, see Waters, VI.
- Liability betwe negligence see Landlo

Hydraulic Rights— See Waters.

Hypothecation— See Pledges; gages.

Hypotheses—
- In evidence, se dictment,
- Form of questi § 299 et s
- Cross-examina ses, see E § 72 et se

Hypothetical instr II; Indict

Pleading hypo see Plead Equity § 7

Ice—
- Rights of ripa ice forme IV, D; Waters, II
- Cutting and h ing" busin
- Prescriptive ri IV, D.
- Judicial notice ing busine
- Measure of d forming i
- Liability for i streets or especially
- Liability of c sengers fr Carriers

Idem Sonans— See Names.

Identification; Ide
- The variety these wor to allow collection ally the which th identifica pecially t
- Sufficiency of ject, see Boundari ing, I; I
- Presumptions dence § 4
- Parol eviden jects and Evidence VIII, B.
- Exhibition of on identi dictment,
- Opinions as § 222; I
- Sufficiency of dence § 5
- Identification VIII.

Identification of exhibits in evidence or attached to pleadings or in bill of exceptions or case on appeal, see Trial, V, A; Indictment, IX, B; Pleading, VIII; Appeal § 178.
Identities of persons and actions as affecting abatement or bar of second action, see Abatement § 10 et seq. (other action pending); Former Adjudication, III.
Identities of crimes as affecting second jeopardy or bar, see Crimes § 19.
Identities for purpose of set-off, see Set-off, II.
Idiots—
See Insane Persons.
Idlers—
Disorderly persons and vagrants, see Crimes, II; Indictment.
Delinquent or truant children, see Incompetents and Delinquents § 5.
Ignorance—
As element in mistake, see Mistake.
Taking advantage of ignorance as fraud, see Fraud.
Element in matters requiring knowledge or notice, see Election and Waiver; Estoppel, III; Agency § 58 et seq. (ratification).
Element in bona fides, see Negotiable Instruments, XIII; Notice and Record of Title, I.
Ignorance of Law—
Presumptions of knowledge, see Evidence § 47.
Illegal; Illegality—
See topics and cross-reference headings treating of the thing or subject questioned for illegality.
Presumptions and implications as to legality or illegality, see Evidence, II; Indictment, VIII, A; Implied Contracts, II.
Construction of writings in favor of legality, see Contracts § 148; Deeds § 10; Wills, VI; Statutes, V; Constitutional Law § 25.
Illegality in contracts, see Contracts, IV.
Illegitimates—
See Bastards.
Ill Fame—
Houses of ill fame, crimes relating to, see Crimes, II; Indictment.
Illiteracy—
As factor in fraud, mistake or undue influence, see Fraud; Mistake; Gifts, IV; Wills, III.
Signature and execution of instruments by illiterates, see Execution of Instruments, I.
Assistance to illiterate electors, see Elections, V, VII.
Illness—
See cross-references under Sickness; Health.
Illuminants—
Keeping of combustible oils, see Explosives and Combustibles.
Insurance restrictions and warranties, see Insurance.
General law of gas and electricity, see Gas; Electricity.
Ill Will—
See cross-references under Malice; and see Homicide; Malicious Prosecution; Libel.
Undue influence by stirring up ill feeling, see Fraud, II; Gifts § 29; Wills, III.
Imbeciles—
See Insane Persons.
Imitations—
In foods, including imitation butter, see Food; Constitutional Law § 101.
Infringement of trade-marks or trade names, see Trade-marks, III.
Fabrication of writings or signatures, see Crimes, II (forgery and counterfeiting); Alteration of Instruments, I.
Immateriality—
Of errors, see Harmless Error; Indictment, XV.
Of variance, see Pleading, X; Indictment, I, E.
Taking objections, see Trial, V, C; Indictment, IX, B; XIV; Saving Questions.
Imminence of Death—
Factor in gift causa mortis, see Gifts § 4.
Factor in dying declarations, see Homicide § 56.
Immorality—
Of consideration for contract, see Contracts § 129.
Of motive for gift, see Gifts § 28.
Meretricious influences to procure gift or will, see Gifts §§ 28, 29; Wills, III.
Immunity—
See generally topic treating of the officer or person to whom immunity is attributed, e. g., Judges; Justices of the Peace; Witnesses; Parties; Officers, VI; Sheriffs, IV.
From arrest or service of process, see Arrest § 5; Civil Arrest § 2; Process, II.
Privileges and immunities under the constitution, see Constitutional Law, X.
Local and special legislation affecting immunities, see Statutes, II.
Inadmissibility of confession on promise of immunity, see Indictment, VIII, B.
Privilege against answering self-criminating question, see Examination of Witnesses, IV.
Impaired Mind—
Amounting to insanity or incompetency, see Insane Persons, I; Incompetents.
Factor in undue influence, see Gifts, IV; Wills, III.
Impairment of Capital—
Insolvency of corporations, see Corporations, XXIII; Banking § 72 et seq.; Insurance, II.
Impairment of Obligation of Contracts—
See Constitutional Law, VI.
Impairment of Security—
As discharging guarantor or surety, see Guaranty § 17 et seq.; Suretyship, II.

Analysis and Index to Sections.

Impaneling—
Of jury or grand jury, see Jury, V; Grand Jury.
Impeachment—
Of witnesses, see Witnesses, VI.
Of decrees or judgments, see Judgments, VII; Foreign Judgments, II; Former Adjudication.
Of awards, see Arbitration §§ 17, 19.
Of acknowledgments, see Acknowledgments § 20.
Estoppel to impeach one's own title, deed or contract, see Estoppel, §§ 39, 40.
Verity of records, see Former Adjudication; Records.
Power of legislature to authorize removals from office on grounds additional to those warranting impeachment, see Constitutional Law § 46.
Impending Death—
Factor in gifts, see Gifts § 4.
Factor in dying declaration, see Homicide § 56.
Imperative Powers—
In trusts, see Trusts, VI, B; Wills, VI.
Obligatory powers of appointment, see Powers; Wills, VI.
Imperative or Permissive Words—
See Wills, VI; Contracts, VI; Statutes, V.
Imperfect Incorporation—
See generally Corporations, V.
Impertinence and Scandal—
In bills, see Equity § 80.
Implements of Trade—
Exemption from levy, see Exemptions.
Implications—
In construction of writings or agreements, see topics treating of the writing or agreement construed, e. g., Constitutional Law, I; Contracts, VI; Statutes, V; Wills, VI.
Of contract in law or in fact, see Implied Contracts.
Parol evidence to raise implication under written contract, see Evidence § 179.
Resort to implication in construing record on appeal, error or certiorari, see Appeal, XII, C; Certiorari, § 56 et seq.; Indictment, XVI, D.
Implied admissions, see Evidence, VII, C, 2; Indictment, VIII, B (criminal evidence); Pleading, IX; Equity § 154 et seq.
Implied assignments, see Assignments, II.
Implied conditions and warranties, see Sales, VI; Contracts, VI, C; Deeds, III, E; Covenants for Title; Wills, VI; Negotiable Instruments, VI, VII.
Implied covenants, see Deeds, III, E; Covenants for Title; Landlord and Tenant, IV.
Implied dedication or easement, see Dedication, II; Easements, I.
Implied fraud, see Fraud, II.
Implied findings, see Verdicts and Findings, IV; Reference, IV.
Implied guaranty or indemnity, see Guaranty; Indemnity, II.
Implied legacies, devises and charges, see Wills, VI.
Implied license, see License to Enter.
Implied malice, see Homicide §§ 4, 44, 45; Malicious Prosecution, IV, VI; Libel, V, VIII.
Implied powers or authority, see Agency, II; Partnership, IV; Corporations, XI-XIII, XVII; Husband and Wife, IV; Parent and Child, II (necessaries); Trusts, VI, B; Estates of Decedents, IV; Guardianship, III; Municipal Corporations, III et seq.; Counties; Townships; Officers, VI, A.
Implied repeal or amendment, see Statutes, IV, V, VII.
Implied tenancy, see Landlord and Tenant, I.
Implied trusts, see Trusts, III.

IMPLIED CONTRACTS.

TREATS of obligations sounding in contract implied by rule of law or by inference from facts. It excludes actual contracts and promises both written and oral (see Contracts) and also the procedural law of assumpsit (see Assumpsit). Several species of implied contract are specifically treated elsewhere for convenience, e. g., the implied obligation to repay money paid by mistake or illegality (see Payment, VI). Further exclusions are pointed out by cross-references in the body of the topic.

Analysis.

I. Implication of promise from conduct or facts.

§ 1. In general.
§ 2. Negation by express contract.
§ 3. ——By contrary intent or gratuitous service.
§ 4. From prior contracts, payments or gratuities.
§ 5. Service or goods furnished at request.

§ 6. Acceptance or acquiescence by person benefited.
§ 7. ——Benefits under broken, rescinded or abandoned contracts.
§ 8. Voluntary services and unsought benefits.
§ 9. Acknowledgment or recognition of benefit or performance.
§ 10. Relationship of parties as basis of implication or rebuttal.
§ 11. ——Parent and child, implication from services rendered.

II. Implication by rule of law.

§ 12. In general; test of equity and good conscience.
§ 13. Money had and received to use.
§ 14. ——Secret profits and receipts of agents and persons in fiduciary relation.
§ 15. ——Failure or want of consideration for money received.
§ 16. Money paid to use or benefit.
§ 17. Services or thing of value furnished to defendant's use.
§ 18. Payments made by mistake or fraud.
§ 19. Obligation arising from use or disposal of another's property.
§ 20. Obligation imposed by law.
§ 21. Performance or benefits under void or unenforceable contracts.
§ 22. Measure of value or quantum meruit.
§ 23. ——Equitable deductions and adjustments.
§ 24. ——Extra work or expense required by other party under contract.

III. Actions and procedure.

§ 25. In general; cross-references.
§ 26. Presumptions and evidence to raise or rebut implication.

I. IMPLICATION OF PROMISE FROM CONDUCT OR FACTS.

§ 1. In general.

Negation by express contract, see post §§ 2, 3.
From prior contracts, payments or gratuities, see post § 4.
Service or goods furnished at request, see post § 5.
Acceptance or acquiescence by person benefited, see post §§ 6, 7.
Voluntary services and unsought benefits, see post § 8.
Acknowledgment or recognition of benefit or performance, see post § 9.
Relationship of parties as basis of implication or rebuttal, see post §§ 10, 11.
Implication by rule of law, see post II.
Actions and procedure, see post III.
Measure of value or quantum meruit, see post §§ 22-24.
Capacity of municipalities to be bound by implied contract, see Municipal Corporations, XI; Public Contracts, V.
Compensation of officers and public employees, see Officers, VIII.
Account stated, see Account Stated.
Implied obligations based on ultra vires or illegal corporate acts, see Corporations § 92.
Rule against implication of contract with corporation which would be ultra vires, see Corporations § 76.
Recovery of tax money paid under mistake, compulsion or where illegally levied, see Taxes, VIII.
Implied trusts, see Trusts, III.
Disability of courts to imply contracts against parties' own failure to assent mutually, see Contracts, § 19.
Implication against county, limitation by ultra vires doctrine, see Counties § 29.
"Privity" or mutuality essential to implication, see also Contracts § 2.
Implied promise as consideration for other's promise, see Contracts § 105 et seq.

¶ 1. When negotiations for a contract are pending, the law will not conclude them by any presumption of an implied contract.—White v. United States Gypsum Co., 168 Mich. 238.

¶ 2. The law does not make a contract when the parties entered none, nor does it regard an arrangement as completed which the parties thereto regard as incomplete.—Central Bitulithic Paving Co. v. Village of Highland Park, 164 Mich. 223.

¶ 3. Where an express agreement would be null and void because it is to do what the statute prohibits, an implied contract to do the thing forbidden is void.—Affeld v. City of Detroit, 112 Mich. 560.

§ 2. Negation by express contract.

By contrary intent or gratuitous service, see post § 3.

Performance or benefits under void or unenforceable contracts, see post § 21.

Implication of contract by acceptance of benefits under broken, rescinded or abandoned contracts, see post § 7.

Breach of express contract as sustaining implied contract, see post ¶ 42.

Accord and satisfaction as bar to recovery on implied contract, see Accord and Satisfaction § 10 et seq.

Express agreement for services as excluding implied promise to pay, see also Attorneys ¶ 134.

¶ 4. Where there is an express agreement between parties covering the subject-matter, the law will not imply one.—Cashin v. Pliter, 168 Mich. 386.

¶ 5. While an express contract is in force none can be implied covering the same subject.—Galloway v. Holmes, 1 D. 330; Wilson v. Wager, 26 Mich. 452; Hunt v. Sackett, 31 Mich. 18; Keystone Lumber Co. v. Dole, 43 Mich. 370.

¶ 6. No contract can be implied where the express contract in substance covers the entire matter.—Boughton v. Boughton's Estate, 111 Mich. 26.

¶ 7. Where the contract between the parties is express, covering the entire matter, there can be no implied agreement or understanding.—Schurr v. Savigny, 85 Mich. 144.

¶ 8. One cannot recover as upon an implied contract where the facts show an express contract.—Van Fleet v. Van Fleet, 50 Mich. 1.

¶ 9. There can be no implied contract in relation to a particular matter where the parties have made an express contract on the same subject.—In re De Haan's Estate, 169 Mich. 146.

¶ 10. Where there is undisputed evidence that a deaf mute understandingly entered into a contract to serve his brother-in-law during his natural life, in consideration of an agreement for support by the brother-in-law, the deaf mute cannot recover in assumpsit for work and labor.—Alexier v. Matzke, 151 Mich. 36.

¶ 11. That plaintiff boarded defendant, and did his washing and mending, for an agreed price per week, will by her upon an im services as a nurse, show that they were express contract.—P Mich. 614.

¶ 12. Under a co party to cut and to timber" upon certain upon the quantum the lake, logs which woods by a scaler to saw, but which should be put afloa v. Martin, 103 Mich

¶ 13. There may quantum meruit for where the testimon press contract unde cut logs and put the and that after a c cut and skidded th to cut no more, an tions that such log Creek.—Boyce v. M

¶ 14. Where suit labor performed u and the parties di agreed to be paid, the contract and re reasonably worth.- Mich. 311.

¶ 15. Where a cl ceived against an e agreement between pay over proceeds ductions for specifi entitled to any dec of items not speci the ground that manifestly just, a posed that the pa tract to provide f Estate, 42 Mich. 2

¶ 16. One contr the labor of a spec be selected by the work and labor ir alleged convict wl oned, since the ex implied one.—Tho 455.

¶ 17. Where pl fendant, on maki ment, that he cla performed at a le by plaintiff, and plaintiff cannot g of the work on t contract, and that reasonable worth Mich. 311.

¶ 18. One hav mason work in t may recover on implied contract for services rendered in superintending the work of other contractors which in no way concerned the mason work or the matters covered in the express contract.—Friedland v. McNeil, 33 Mich. 40.

¶ 19. Plaintiff automobile company sold an automobile to defendant, who paid part cash for the same with the agreement that he should pay the balance out of the dividends of stock sold to him at the same time. The stock proved worthless. Held, the plaintiff could not pass over the fact of the express contract, and recover of defendant on an implied contract for money and benefits conferred upon defendant.—Hathaway v. Vaughan, 162 Mich. 269.

¶ 20. In an action to recover a balance on a contract for filling an ice house with ice, defendant having claimed that the ice was not packed in a satisfactory manner but having agreed to pay a certain sum on a certain date and the balance sued for at a certain later date if the ice was in good condition, held that it was error to admit evidence to prove the value of the work done by the plaintiff.—Stevens v. Lakewood Utilities Co., 189 Mich. 203.

§ 3. ——By contrary intent or gratuitous service.

See also post ¶ 57.

¶ 21. Where a litigant has not employed counsel for her solicitor, and has not authorized the latter to employ counsel, and where she has told the counsel she will not pay for any services he may render, there cannot be implied from subsequent acceptance of services a promise on her part to pay for them.—Fraser v. Haggerty, 86 Mich. 521.

¶ 22. Where the owner of logs has not only not requested that his logs be moved, but has protested against such moving, there is no room for the inference of a promise to pay therefor.—Crane Lumber Co. v. Bellows, 117 Mich. 482.

¶ 23. The owner of land on which a canal was dug, and who appeared to have incurred the major part of the expense of making it, gave notice to other individuals who had contributed to its repair that they must compensate him for its use at a rate which he specified in his notice; and on their refusal, and continuing its use under a claim of right to do so, he brought action in assumpsit to recover compensation for the use. Held, that the law would not imply a promise to make compensation for the use of the canal before the notice was given and while it was permitted by the plaintiff without objection and without demand of compensation.—Ward v. Warner, 8 Mich. 508.

¶ 24. As to one who made a drain and gave notice that users must contribute to cost, the law would not imply a promise after the notice, since any implication of a promise was precluded by the denial by defendants of all right to compensation, and the assertion of an adverse right in themselves. The adverse entry, if the claim of right was unfounded, was a naked trespass, upon which no duty to compensate would arise which could be converted into a contract.—Ward v. Warner, 8 Mich. 508.

¶ 25. An employee of a widow is debarred from claiming compensation from the trustees of the estate of her deceased husband for services in watching property belonging in part to the widow and in part to the estate, where it is apparent that the joint agent of the widow and of the estate, who directed him to watch the property, supposed that such duty came within his employment, and the employee did nothing to indicate that he expected extra compensation therefor, at the only time a contract is alleged to have been made, and for two years gave monthly receipts importing payment by the widow "in full" for services to date.—Forster v. Green, 111 Mich. 264.

¶ 26. The existence of an implied agreement to pay for services rendered is negatived by evidence that the plaintiff was a member of the defendant incorporated association for many years, that he knew that no officer had ever been paid by the association, that its revenue would not justify the payment of any salaries, and that he served as curator for years without making any demand for remuneration.—Whittemore v. Kent Scientific Institute, 128 Mich. 518.

§ 4. From prior contracts, payments or gratuities.

Subscription to stock as implying promise to pay for it, see Corporations § 48.

Inefficacy of custom of paying voluntary recompense to establish implied contract to pay in particular instance, see Customs ¶ 60.

¶ 27. Previous payment by the defendant for like services may be proved as a circumstance bearing on the question whether one who has performed services for the defendant is entitled to recover payment therefor.—Strong v. Saunders, 15 Mich. 339.

¶ 28. On the issue of gratuitousness of extra-official services rendered to a religious corporation by an attorney, who was one of its trustees and who claimed that they were to be paid for, it is proper to show what had been the custom in the past as to paying trustees for such services rendered by them to the corporation, it being presumable that plaintiff's services were rendered in accordance with the custom in that regard.—Cicotte v. St. Anne's Catholic Church, 60 Mich. 552.

¶ 29. Action against a vessel-owner to recover for services in keeping up signal lights in a dangerous channel. No direct promise to pay was proved. Held competent to prove that defendant had paid for the like services the preceding year, as a circumstance tending, in connection with other evidence, to show that defendant was fully informed of the nature of plaintiff's services, acknowledged their value and willingness to pay for them. —Strong v. Saunders, 15 Mich. 339.

§ 5. Service or goods furnished at request.

Acceptance or acquiescence of person benefitted, see post §§ 6, 7.
Voluntary services, see post § 8.
Acknowledgment or recognition of benefit of services or goods furnished, see post § 9.
Services rendered against protest of person to be benefited, see ante ¶ 22.
Implication by law to pay for services or thing of value furnished to defendant's use, see post § 17.
Measure of value or quantum meruit, see post §§ 22-24.
Compensation of officers and public employees, see Officers, VIII.
Expectation of payment for services as element necessary to establish implied contract for services, see Estates of Decedents ¶ 653.
Architects' custom as implying agreement to pay for sketches, see also Customs ¶ 10.
To pay for value of broker's services, see also Brokers § 16.
To pay reasonable worth of attorney's services, see Attorneys §§ 37-39.
For attorney's services which were unsuccessful or not beneficial, see also Attorneys § 38.
Implication that services rendered decedent in last illness by stranger are to be paid for, see Estates of Decedents ¶ 608.
Medical attendance to injured servant with sanction of superintendent, implication as to personal liability, see also Contracts ¶ 103.
To pay corporate officer for services rendered to corporation, see Corporations §§ 152, 153.

¶ 30. If the plaintiff's intestate, a clerk employed at the county's expense in the office of the register of deeds, was hired by the register to perform certain special services out of office hours, and was promised extra compensation therefor, recovery may still be had upon the quantum meruit though plaintiff fails to establish a contract for a specific sum. —Lewis v. Roulo, 93 Mich. 475.

¶ 31. Where deceased made an oral contract to convey a farm to claimant as compensation for caring for his sister during her life, and deceased died before his sister, whereby performance of the contract became impossible, an agreement would be implied to pay the fair value of the services rendered. —Buell v. Adams, 157 Mich. 248.

¶ 32. In an action for services as a surgeon, where defendant's physician had advised that defendant go to a hospital, and thereupon at defendant's request telephoned to the hospital and made a contract for $15 per week for a private ward, which was to include room and board, nursing and medical attendance, and where defendant upon going to the hospital was attended by plaintiff, who was called in by the house physician, and operated on, and was thereafter cared for by plaintiff at defendant's request, plaintiff was entitled to recover for the reasonable value of his services, aside from the contract with the hospital.—Crumrine v. Austin, 133 Mich. 283.

¶ 33. Where the law imposes a liability on the husband to pay for the funeral expenses of his wife the mere presence of another person assisting the husband in making the funeral arrangements will not make the third person liable without his express promise to pay.—Sears v. Giddey, 41 Mich. 590.

§ 6. Acceptance or acquiescence by person benefited.

See also post ¶¶ 148, 155.
Benefits under broken, rescinded or abandoned contracts, see post § 7.
Voluntary services, see post § 8.
Acknowledgment or recognition of benefit or performance, see post § 9.
Implication of promise from prior contracts, payment, or gratuities, see ante § 4.

¶ 34. Acceptance of beneficial services raises an implied assumpsit.—Hosmer v. Wilson, 7 Mich. 294; Donovan v. Halsey Fire Engine Co., 58 Mich. 38.

¶ 35. A contract by a decedent to pay for services rendered by a cousin may be presumed where the services are accepted.—In re Wigent's Estate, 189 Mich. 507.

¶ 36. The appropriation by one person the benefits of another's services, for wh a third person has agreed, by a contract is void under the statute of frauds, to does not raise an implied promise o third person's part to pay therefor.— v. Sutton, 115 Mich. 365.

¶ 37. Where one party has perfor ices from which another has receiv efit, he is entitled to recover pay f from the circumstances a promise be implied.—Strong v. Saunder 339.

¶ 38. Under the postal laws States, each railroad compar carry to and from the postof terminal points of its road, ment lets special contracts to and from the stations al city which was a termin of defendant's road, and main line, plaintiff had fendant for the carria of its divisions, and government for the line mail. Supposing his contract with the government to carry the mail of the other division, plaintiff continued to do so without charge, until he learned of defendant's duty in the premises, when he declined further carriage of such mail. Held, that defendant having permitted the performance of such services, and having had the benefit thereof, the law will presume that they were to be paid for, there being nothing in the relation of the parties that would repel the idea that payment was intended.—McClary v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 102 Mich. 312.

§ 7. ——Benefits under broken, rescinded or abandoned contracts.

See also post ¶¶ 153, 157.
Right to repayment of money advanced upon abandoned contract, see post ¶ 122.
Benefits under void or unenforceable contracts, see post § 21.
Negation of implication by express contract, see ante § 2.

¶ 39. From the acceptance and appropriation of beneficial services, work done, materials furnished, goods sold, etc., in part performance of an entire contract, the law generally implies a promise to make compensation.—Clark v. Moore, 3 Mich. 55; Allen v. McKibbin, 5 Mich. 449; Wildey v. Paw Paw & Antwerp Fractional School Dist. No. 1, 25 Mich. 419; Wilson v. Wagar, 26 Mich. 452; Begole v. McKenzie, 26 Mich. 470; Chapman v. Dease, 34 Mich. 375; Howell v. Medler, 41 Mich. 641; Gage v. Meyers, 59 Mich. 300.

¶ 40. One who has not entirely or strictly performed his contract may recover upon the appropriate common counts for anything done under such contract from which the other party has derived substantial benefit and which such party has accepted or appropriated.—Allen v. McKibbin, 5 Mich. 449; Wildey v. Paw Paw & Antwerp Fractional School Dist. No. 1, 25 Mich. 419; Wilson v. Wagar, 26 Mich. 452; Begole v. McKenzie, 26 Mich. 470; Chapman v. Dease, 34 Mich. 375; Howell v. Medler, 41 Mich. 641; Gage v. Meyers, 59 Mich. 300.

¶ 41. Recovery may be had quantum meruit for work performed under a written contract, though the work did not conform to the contract, where defendant accepts and makes use of the work done.—Gross v. Creyts, 130 Mich. 672.

¶ 42. The breach of an express contract will not sustain an action on an implied assumpsit for benefits received.—Thorp v. Bateman, 37 Mich. 68.

¶ 43. If a party defrauded by an express contract rescinds it he cannot set up an implied contract and sue the other party thereon for benefits accepted.—Galloway v. Holmes, 1 D. 330.

¶ 44. Where a party fails to comply substantially with a non-apportionable agreement, he cannot sue or recover upon it at all. But when anything has been done from which the other party has received substantial benefit, a recovery may be had on the quantum meruit.—Hanley v. Walker, 79 Mich. 607.

¶ 45. One who, by his contract, has agreed to receive payment in something else than money, cannot, where he has broken the contract, recover on the quantum meruit the value of his labor performed under the contract.—Roberts v. Wilkinson, 34 Mich. 129.

§ 8. Voluntary services and unsought benefits.

Implication of promise from prior contracts, see ante § 4.

¶ 46. No implied contract or promise arises from a spontaneous service done as an act of kindness and without being asked, or where it is accounted for on more likely grounds than a promise of payment.—Woods v. Ayres, 39 Mich. 345; Cicotte v. St. Anne's Catholic Church, 60 Mich. 552.

¶ 47. Voluntary services rendered under circumstances not fairly indicating an expectation of reward need not be paid for.—Covel v. Turner, 74 Mich. 408.

¶ 48. One cannot recover for his labor performed by mistake upon another's property without the owner's consent; e. g., for cutting another's trees and hauling and piling the wood.—Isle Royale Min. Co. v. Hertin, 37 Mich. 332.

¶ 49. An agreement to compensate cannot be implied from the mere fact that services were rendered.—Godfrey v. White, 43 Mich. 171.

¶ 50. A woman repaired certain buildings that were the joint property of her husband and his brother, the decedent, but no express authority was shown from decedent to the husband to repair or to authorize the wife to repair. Held, that she could not recover from the estate for the repairs.—Stackable v. Stackable's Estate, 65 Mich. 515.

¶ 51. The mere fact that valuable services are rendered for the benefit of a party does not make him liable upon an implied promise to pay for them.—Notley v. State Bank of Vicksburg, 154 Mich. 676.

¶ 52. Where one has employed another to manufacture articles at an agreed price out of materials to be furnished by the former, the fact that he himself, without request, assists in the manufacture, will not raise an implied promise on the part of the other party to pay for such services.—Lange v. Kaiser, 34 Mich. 317.

¶ 53. A merchant who for his own purposes sends his customers to another dealer does not thereby acquire any claim on him.—Godfrey v. White, 43 Mich. 171.

¶ 54. A contractor agreed to haul logs at his own expense of teams, etc. Held, that in an action by him on the quantum meruit defendants could not recover for outlays in repairing roads and sleighs, where it was not shown that plaintiff had requested it.—Spence v. Bowen, 41 Mich. 149.

¶ 55. A contractor cannot consistently be superintendent of construction so far as his own work is concerned, and claim payment for services as superintendent thereof, unless there is a clear understanding that he is to be paid for them.—Friedland v. McNeil, 33 Mich. 40.

¶ 56. Where a monument was ordered to be erected on a foundation to be built by defendant and the contract was renounced before the monument was erected, the plaintiff cannot proceed to construct a foundation and erect the monument and then recover therefor under the common counts, since the contract was not performed before the renunciation and plaintiff was never requested to construct the foundation.—Wigent v. Marrs, 130 Mich. 609.

¶ 57. No promise to pay for services will be implied where the circumstances not only fail to indicate that they were rendered or received for compensation, but clearly repel the idea that payment was to be made or asked for; it was error to allow a claim for services as sexton to one who at the time was a vestryman, and some of the time a senior warden and treasurer of the society, where the evidence clearly showed that the performance of the duty was voluntary, and that it was supposed on both sides that his service was something he was spontaneously giving from a desire to promote a cause he had at heart, and not in any intent to get money.—St. Jude's Church of Fentonville v. Van Denberg, 31 Mich. 287.

§ 9. Acknowledgment or recognition of benefit or performance.

Acceptance or acquiescence by person benefited, see ante §§ 6, 7.

¶ 58. After discharge in bankruptcy a new promise to pay must be express, and an acknowledgment of debt must be unqualified, but such promise or acknowledgment need not be written.—Craig v. Seitz, 63 Mich. 727.

§ 10. Relationship of parties as basis of implication or rebuttal.

See also post ¶ 117.

Parent and child, implication from services rendered, see post § 11.

Implication by rule of law as to money had and received by agents and persons in fiduciary relation, see post § 14.

Relation between the parties as basis of rebuttal, see also post ¶ 164.

Liability on implied contract of husband for money loaned his wife without his knowledge, see Husband and Wife § 67.

General law of Agency, see Agency.

Implied agencies, see Agency § 18.

Implied contract for services rendered one spouse by the other, see also Estates of Decedents ¶ 654.

¶ 59. Though the presumption may be overcome by the circumstances, no promise is implied to pay for services rendered one in loco parentis.—Harris v. Smith, 79 Mich. 54.

¶ 60. A man is not entitled as of course to charge his sister for board while living in his house.—Martin v. Sheridan, 46 Mich. 93.

¶ 61. The presumption is that services rendered by a relative by marriage are gratuitous, in absence of an express contract.—Vandecar v. Nowland's Estate, 188 Mich. 429.

¶ 62. A man lived much of his time in his sister's family, where his washing and ironing were done, and he was taken care of when sick. He never paid anything, but repeatedly said he would pay for all that was done for him, and there was no showing that compensation was not expected. Held, that his estate was liable on an implied assumpsit for the services done him.—O'Connor v. Beckwith, 41 Mich. 657.

¶ 63. A step-mother is not impliedly liable to her adult step-daughter, from whose father she has been divorced, for services rendered by such daughter living in defendant's family, working as a dressmaker, giving some of her earnings to defendant, and doing some of the household work.—Feiertag v. Feiertag, 73 Mich. 297.

¶ 64. There is no promise implied to pay for services rendered a man by his adult step-daughter, who had lived in his family from the time she was nine years old, and wh after coming of age lived as a member of t family, performing the same duties and ceiving board, clothing and money, from t to time, the same as before her majori Harris v. Smith, 79 Mich. 54.

¶ 65. A woman cannot recover fr father-in-law for services rendered member of his family, in the absen express agreement to pay for such s Harris v. Harris, 106 Mich. 246.

¶ 66. No one is bound to pay teered services rendered under c which do not fairly indicate ar of reward. So held where a ma father-in-law's family without sued for work which he did farm.—Coe v. Wager, 42 Mic

¶ 67. Where services ha by a husband to his wife's ber of the family, with recompense therefor, an capable of making a c can be implied to pay Heller Aller Co. v. Ri ¶ 68. An emancipated son who, at the special request of his uncle, and on promise of payment, renders services and spends money in taking care of his own mother and the other minor children, has a valid claim against the uncle's estate.—Grimm v. Estate of Taylor, 96 Mich. 5.

¶ 69. No promise can be implied to repay moneys voluntarily paid by a son to his sister-in-law, without her request, as contributions toward his mother's support.—Hough v. Comstock, 97 Mich. 11.

¶ 70. No promise on a father's part to pay the mother for anything she may do in the discharge of her moral duties to their offspring can be implied.—Lapworth v. Leach, 79 Mich. 16.

¶ 71. In the absence of an express contract that plaintiff and his wife should be paid for work done on the farm and in the house of plaintiff's uncle, where both lived, no contract could be implied from a conversation in which plaintiff stated to defendant that he was going to get married and defendant replied that if he was going to get a "smartish" woman he might fetch her to defendant's house, and both husband and wife could work for defendant, to which plaintiff replied that defendant ought to know how smart she was. —Alderton v. Wright, 81 Mich. 294.

¶ 72. The presumption that washing, rooms, lights, fuel, and attendance, furnished to a decedent by one claiming compensation therefor against his estate, were gratuities, arising from the fact that the claimant was the daughter-in-law of decedent, and that he lived with her and her husband as a member of the family, is not overcome by evidence that there was an express agreement by him to pay for board.—Boughton v. Boughton's Estate, 111 Mich. 26.

§ 11. ——Parent and child, implication from services rendered.

Services rendered father-in-law or step-parent, see ante § 10.

Implication of promise to pay for services rendered one in loco parentis, see also ante ¶ 59.

Contract for repayment of money expended by child for parent's use and at his request, see also post ¶ 120.

Services and earnings of child, see Parent and Child, III.

Property and contract rights between parent and child, see Parent and Child, IV.

To pay for services of adopted child, see also Adoption ¶ 12.

¶ 73. From the discharge of a purely filial duty—such as the care by a daughter of her aged father—no obligation to pay can be implied.—Wright v. Estate of Senn, 85 Mich. 191.

¶ 74. No promise is implied to pay for services rendered by an adult daughter to her father while living as a member of his family.—Ionia County Savings Bank v. McLean, 84 Mich. 625.

¶ 75. The presumption is that services rendered by a son to his father in boarding and taking care of him in his old age are gratuitous.—In re De Haan's Estate, 169 Mich. 146.

¶ 76. Services performed by a child for the parent are presumptively performed gratuitously and in the line of filial duty, and compensation cannot be recovered by proof alone of the services and of their value.—In re Teller's Estate, 200 Mich. 181.

¶ 77. An express contract is essential to overcome the presumption that a son who continues to live with his parent is not entitled to compensation for his services, since the law will not imply a contract from the mere rendition of the services.—Hialey v. Hialey's Estate, 157 Mich. 45.

¶ 78. Where a son continues to live with his father and renders services for him, it is presumed that they are members of one family contributing to the common support. —Hialey v. Hialey's Estate, 157 Mich. 45.

¶ 79. Where the facts and circumstances attending the performance of work by a child for its parent and in the acceptance are sufficient to rebut the presumption that the services were gratuitous and to authorize the inference that both parties acted upon the understanding that they were to be paid for, the parent is liable for such services.—Maynard v. Schrumpf's Estate, 192 Mich. 494; In re Scully's Estate, 199 Mich. 181.

¶ 80. In order that a son living with his parents shall be entitled to compensation for services rendered them, there must be an express agreement.—In re Colburn's Estate, 153 Mich. 206; More v. Luther, Id.

¶ 81. Where a man and his wife live with the man's father, on the father's farm, it is presumed that they are not living together under any contract relation, but as a family and that there can be no claim for services, or for supplying the ordinary conveniences of life.—Mason v. Dunbar, 43 Mich. 407.

¶ 82. A widower, the owner of a farm, asked his son to move upon the same and till it. The parties expressly agreed that the son should have two-thirds of the crops and the old gentleman one-third, and that the son should have the use of a cow and a horse as compensation for the father's board. The father reserved two rooms of the house and lived in same, taking his meals with the son's family. He required no special care and there was no evidence as to the care involved during his last sickness. Nothing was said between the parties as to further compensation for the son except a general expression by the father that he was being well treated and intended to remember the son in his will. The father left forty acres of land to the son. In a suit on an implied contract against the father's estate for care extended and services rendered, held, no recovery could be had.—In re De Haan's Estate, 169 Mich. 146.

¶ 83. It is unnecessary that a child, in an action on a claim for services against the parent's estate, establish that at a given time before the services were performed a formal contract was made, for the payment on the one hand and for performance of the services on the other hand, it being sufficient if the evidence shows that both parent and child acted upon the understanding that the services were to be paid for.—In re Teller's Estate, 200 Mich. 181.

¶ 84. Under an agreement whereby a son is to have a farm upon condition that he resides thereon and renders services for his father and mother until their death, his estate is not entitled to compensation for his services in the event of his death before that of his parents.—In re Colburn's Estate, 153 Mich. 206; More v. Luther, Id.

¶ 85. Where a son lives with his parents and renders services to them with the understanding that he is to have a certain farm upon their death, his estate, in event of his death before that of his parents, cannot recover on a quantum meruit, since under the circumstances there is no implied contract to pay for his services.—In re Colburn's Estate, 153 Mich. 206; More v. Luther, Id.

¶¶ 86, 87. Where, in a suit by a daughter to enforce a claim against her father's estate for services, there is evidence that the services were valuable, that, during the period of their performance, the father frequently stated in the presence of the claimant that he intended to convey his farm to her in consideration of such services, that he did make such conveyance, but that the same was inoperative, the question is for the jury whether the services were rendered and accepted with the understanding that they were to be paid for.—Sammon v. Wood, 107 Mich. 506.

¶ 88. It was held to raise an implied contract between foster father and adopted son that latter is to have former's estate at father's death in return for work done for and care taken of foster parents, such having been the agreement, and part performance taking case out of statute of frauds. (Per McGrath, C. J., Long, J., concurring, and Grant, J., concurring on another ground.)—Wright v. Wright, 99 Mich. 170.

¶¶ 89, 90. A daughter lived with her father as a member of his family for some eleven years after attaining her majority, but without any contract for hire, and with no other relation than that of father and daughter, and a n do som provisic had no force ei County

625.

¶ 91. a child contrac but if the pe ceptanc tion th authori upon tl paid f Schrun
Scully' enraad
Mich.

¶ 92. dered tuitous that th hold, y and it other contra 464.

¶ 93. pay f shown son w that h
to pay settle Estate

¶ 94. go to der t there of the
of the jury tuitou
v. Sm

¶ 95 there either the li lation showr
60 M

¶ 9 plain three to hi work After and r was the death of his father and his mother being 216 months. Held, in the absence of evidence of a contract made with the father for compensation, complainant could not recover for services rendered after the death of his father against the estate, and such contract could not be inferred from the facts above set forth.—In re Myron's Estate, 165 Mich. 63.

II. IMPLICATION BY RULE OF LAW.

§ 12. In general; test of equity and good conscience.

Money had and received to use, see post §§ 13-15.
Money paid to use or benefit, see post § 16.
Services or thing of value furnished to defendant's use, see post § 17.
Payments made by mistake or fraud, see post § 18.
Obligations imposed by use or disposal of another's property, see post § 19.
Obligations imposed by law, see post § 20.
Performance or benefits under void or unenforceable contracts, see post § 21.
Measure of value or quantum meruit, see post §§ 22-24.
Implication of promise from conduct or facts, see ante I.
Actions and procedure, see post III.
Right to recover mistaken or illegal payments, see Payment, VI.
Capacity of municipalities to be bound by implied contract, see Municipal Corporations, XI; Contracts, V.
Implication of covenants for title, see Covenants for Title §§ 2, 3.
Recovery of tax money paid under mistake, compulsion or where illegally levied, see Taxes, VIII.
Implied promise of mortgagee to pay mortgagor for goods purchased at unfair foreclosure sale, see Chattel Mortgages § 138.
Nonliability of bank to payee of check on implied contract theory, see Banking § 13.

¶ 97. A vendor who agrees to accept in part payment shares of stock at the price paid for them by the purchaser, and who, in reliance on the latter's false representations that he paid a certain amount accepts them at such valuation, may maintain assumpsit for the difference between such valuation and the price actually paid by the purchaser, though the shares were actually worth more than they cost.—Hidey v. Swan, 111 Mich. 161.

¶ 98. Land was conveyed in consideration of a certain sum in cash and "all of the notes" given to the grantee. The vendor did not know their amount and had no memorandum of them. Without the knowledge of the grantor the grantee had transferred and failed to turn over one of such notes. Held, the grantor, upon being compelled to pay the note, can maintain an action of assumpsit against the grantee to recover the amount so paid.—Reed v. Reed, 108 Mich. 498.

§ 13. Money had and received to use.

See also post ¶ 152.
Secret profits and receipts of agents and persons in fiduciary relation, see post § 14.
Failure or want of consideration for money received, see post § 15.
Money paid to use or benefit, see post § 16.
Recovery of mistaken or illegal payments, see Payments, VI.
Recovery of tax money paid under mistake, compulsion or where illegally levied, see Taxes, VIII.
Against attorney by other party to repay money received wrongfully for client, see also Attorneys ¶ 105.
Estoppel to deny receipt by enabling third person to collect, see Estoppel ¶ 142.
Liability of owner for money paid to auctioneer, see Auctions ¶ 7.
Rebuttal of implication based on money had and received, where receiver was corporation which innocently transmitted money for a purpose beyond its power, see Corporations ¶ 327.

¶ 99. A merchant who has a claim for an amount due him for goods furnished servants of another on presentation of orders from him, under an arrangement by which these orders were to be honored by the master and the amount deducted from the servants' wages, may properly sue as for money had and received by the defendant to the plaintiff's use.—Ball v. Brockway, 48 Mich. 523.

¶ 100. One who has been adjudged owner of premises cannot, under a count for money had and received, recover rent paid thereon by a tenant to one who had leased the premises in good faith under a belief that he had title, there being no contractual relation and no express or implied promise to pay to plaintiff.—Sherman v. Spalding, 132 Mich. 249.

¶ 101. In an action to recover money paid on a contract with defendant for the purchase of a share in a boat, he having failed to pass title, it is immaterial whether the money was all paid to defendant or that a part was paid to another if the payments were induced by defendant's promises.—Hayes v. Stortz, 131 Mich. 63.

¶ 102. An undisclosed agent may be sued for money paid to him without consideration, though he has paid it over to his principal.—Smith v. Kelly, 43 Mich. 390.

¶ 103. One who has left money for safekeeping with another who has put it in a bank can bring assumpsit on the common counts against one who has drawn and appropriated it on pretense of being the guardian of the person to whom it was left.—Martin v. Sheridan, 46 Mich. 93.

¶ 104. In assumpsit by the state against a commissioner intrusted to prepare an exhibit to the New Orleans Exposition for money not applied thereto amounting to $750, it is immaterial whether a total sum of $1000 received by defendant was derived from a direct appropriation by the state in reimbursement of money raised on bonds of the commission or from a sum given by the managers of the exposition to the state in aid thereof; since both sums were the property of the state designed for purposes of an exhibit.—People v. Swineford, 77 Mich. 573.

¶ 105. The owner of standing timber, who contracts for the sale and delivery of the logs to be by him cut therefrom, is not limited to a recovery of the contract price in an action of assumpsit brought to recover the proceeds of logs unlawfully cut from said timber by the vendee, against the protests of plaintiff. —Sixma v. Montgomery, 98 Mich. 193.

¶ 106. Where plaintiff and defendant had sold their joint rights in a patent, and each was given back an individual license, and afterwards to extinguish the licenses and vest the entire ownership in the purchaser of the patent a sale to it of such licenses is made, the plaintiff being fully informed that his former partner negotiating the transaction is receiving a higher price than he, it is plaintiff's duty to complain before consummating the deal, and having permitted the sale to go through, with knowledge of all the facts, he is estopped from claiming any other part of the purchase price.—Gordon v. O'Neill, 174 Mich. 575.

¶ 107. In a contract for clearing land one party was to chop all the timber suitable for rail cuts into rails, and all the other timber and brush, except some trees to be left for shade, he was to cut and burn. He cut a portion of this last timber into fire-wood and sold it—no objection thereto appearing to have been made by the other party. Held, that the law would not imply a promise to account for the amount received for the wood so cut and sold.—Daniels v. Mosher, 2 Mich. 183.

§ 14. ——Secret profits and receipts of agents and persons in fiduciary relation.

Money had and received by agent for another, see Agency § 83.

Obligation of attorney to repay to client amount paid for costs which attorney assumed, see Attorneys ¶¶ 116, 117.

Profit made by agent as money had and received for principal, see Agency ¶ 503.

¶ 108. A defendant real estate agent who had agreed to sell plaintiff's property for him, later secured an option of plaintiff on the property for four hundred dollars and then sold the same to a third person for four hundred dollars cash and an interest bearing note for one hundred dollars secured by a mortgage on the property. Held, that plaintiff after affirming the transaction might recover in assumpsit the one hundred dollars

¶ 112. If after the sale of land the consideration fails totally, the law raises an implied promise that the grantee will pay the amount of the consideration actually agreed upon.—Child v. Pierce, 37 Mich. 155.

¶ 113. The guardian of an incompetent person gave a lease for years, receiving rent in advance. He died before the time was up, and the heirs declined to affirm the lease. Held, that the lessee might recover of the estate the rent paid for the balance of the term, as paid without consideration.—Campau v. Shaw, 15 Mich. 226.

¶ 114. When unexpected difficulties occur in the transportation of property by a carrier, and the consignor agrees, in view of them, to pay a sum for the carriage, in addition to what had been previously fixed upon, and pays the same, he cannot recover it back as paid without consideration.—Detroit & B. C. R. Co. v. McKenzie, 43 Mich. 609.

¶ 115. An action lies for money had and received to recover money paid for a worthless railroad bond sold on the representation that it was the bond of Michigan Central Railroad where name on bond was similar to Michigan Central.—Ripley v. Case, 78 Mich. 126.

§ 16. Money paid to use or benefit.

Sum paid to buy in title as money paid to use of covenantor, see also Covenants for Title ¶ 65.

Implied contract for repayment of money paid under garnishment, see Garnishment § 113.

Rights in case of accession or confusion of goods or improvements on land, see generally Accession and Confusion.

¶ 116. Payment by a grantee, for his own protection, of incumbrances which the grantor had bound himself to pay, is compulsory, and supports an action for money paid to the grantor's use on an implied promise to repay it.—Norton v. Colgrove, 41 Mich. 544.

¶ 117. An action will lie at law as for moneys paid out to defendant's use where plaintiff and defendant were partners and plaintiff had made payments which, under the partnership agreement, defendant should have made.—Bates v. Lane, 62 Mich. 132.

¶ 118. Where an order for merchandise was largely exceeded, and the consignee received the excess to be sold or held subject to the consignor's order, and advanced the freight in good faith and for the consignor's benefit, he could recover the amount so advanced in assumpsit against the consignor as for money paid to his use.—Larkin v. Mitchell & Rowland Lumber Co., 42 Mich. 296.

¶ 119. Where unlawful proceedings are taken to enforce an alleged liability, a third person who knows their character, but on pretense of befriending the party held liable binds himself to pay money for the latter's release, pays it in his own wrong, and establishes no legitimate claim for reimbursement.—Storrs v. Scougale, 48 Mich. 387.

¶ 120. Where a son living in his father's family expends money at his father's request and with his knowledge and assent, in building a house for his father, the father is liable to the son for the amount so expended unless there has been a different understanding between them; and it is for a jury to decide whether there was or not, in view of all the circumstances.—Hillebrands v. Nibbelink, 44 Mich. 413.

¶ 121. Money paid out for the decedent's use and benefit with her knowledge and assent, but without her directions, is recoverable as if she had directed it so paid.—Wilson v. Estate of Hotchkiss, 81 Mich. 172.

¶ 122. Where money was advanced upon a contract which was mutually abandoned, the law implies a promise to repay the money advanced and a declaration upon the common counts in assumpsit is sufficient for its recovery.—Murphy v. Dalton, 139 Mich. 79.

¶ 123. There is no implied liability to reimburse the salvor for the entire cost of litigation necessary to permit the attempt to raise a sunken vessel, where the salvage contract was to raise her for 70% of the salvage, defendant owner to bear no share of the expense, the litigation having been begun with the owner as a cocomplainant with its consent, and there having been no warranty of title or right by the owner.—Murphy v. Northern Steamship Co., 131 Mich. 120.

¶ 124. A landowner, who during the period for redemption, paid drain taxes and did not redeem cannot recover their amount from the mortgagee, who bought in; since it was the duty of a mortgagor to pay such taxes, even though eventually it inured to the mortgagee's benefit.—Roff v. McCreery, 199 Mich. 391.

¶ 125. A. entered land in his own name, agreeing in writing to sell it to B. for a certain price within a specified time. It appeared that A. took the land in his own name by way of security. Held, that, he having refused to convey it to B., except upon payment of a tax-bill that A. had been obliged to pay, and B. having paid the amount of the tax-bill under protest, B. could not maintain an action to recover back the amount.—Congdon v. Preston, 49 Mich. 204.

¶ 126. Where the agent of a bucket shop firm paid a customer the balance due him from the firm, by means of a check on a partnership of which the agent was a member, and the firm sent him a check in repayment which was protested, failure of the partnership to seasonably notify the customer of the protest and that they would hold him responsible for the unauthorized payment out of partnership funds, will prevent a recovery from him.—Clippinger v. Starr, 130 Mich. 463.

¶ 127. Where defendant, to whom plaintiff is delivering sand, pays a certain sum to an employee of plaintiff to secure earlier deliveries, no legal obligation rests upon plaintiff to reimburse defendant where it was a voluntary payment without plaintiff's knowledge for defendant's own interest and plaintiff does not agree to pay it when informed of it.—Detroit River Transit Co. v. Aldrich, 176 Mich. 357.

¶ 128. Claimant took a deed on certain Canadian land from Cook, the deceased, to secure payment of services rendered. Later one Farwell, a prior mortgagee of Cook, brought a bill to reform his mortgage so as to include the land held by claimant as security. Claimant and Cook were made parties defendant. Claimant's lien was not disputed, and the mortgage was reformed to include the land in question subject to claimant's lien. Later the lien was paid, and the Canadian counsel employed by Cook and claimant in the reformation proceedings subtracted their fees from the lien money. Claimant filed a claim with the probate commissioners for a balance due from Cook's estate, and included the sum paid to satisfy the aforesaid counsel fees. Held, that the claimant was entitled to charge against the estate the sum so paid for said counsel fees without proving any express agreement with Cook to that effect, since Cook was the real defendant in the reformation suit and as such liable for the fees.—Warren v. Sheehan, 156 Mich. 432.

§ 17. Services or thing of value furnished to defendant's use.

See also ante ¶¶ 48-51.

Services or goods furnished at request, see ante § 5.

Voluntary services and unsought benefits, see ante § 8.

Retention of benefits under partial or defective performance as raising implication of fact, see ante § 7.

Measure of value or quantum meruit, see post §§ 22-24.

Repairs furnished by vendor while property was in his possession to put in condition after damage by fire, see Sales.

Liability for extra work on building contract, see Building Contracts, V.

Implied contract of husband to pay for necessaries furnished wife, see Husband and Wife, III.

¶ 129. Where a deed is set aside on the ground of the grantor's incompetency and of undue influence, the grantee may yet recover against the estate of the grantor for care, support, and bur by the grantee, grantee on the deed.—Cuenat v.

¶ 130. The st for betterments only in action c has lawfully repc erty is not liable of trees planted Flint & P. M. R.

¶ 131. One Mi drug business an worked in the d the estate of Re Reidy's administ property to Mrs legatee, until th was no evidence claimant and M could not recov Mrs. Reidy's est 164 Mich. 167; S

¶ 132. Where a contract for fe by the title to furnish should as delivered and and then sublets agreement that til the work tractor can reco by him and hel he had never original contra the contractor Sherwood v. S Mich. 317.

¶ 133. In a the services of one of its wate tion by defend tunnel under th jected to payi ground that ar of men was so ness for the cit of incompetenc that the reaso number of men sible appalling of conflagratio terial to show Board Water ler Bros. Const

¶ 134. Wher agreement wit keep up the pr surance writte that he be rei vanced, a clai the wife for m tained as a cl meruit.—In re

§ 18. Payments made by mistake or fraud.

Labor performed by mistake on another's property without his consent, see ante ¶ 48.
Recovery of illegal or mistaken payments, see Payment, VI.
General principles of mistake, see Mistake.
Recovery of tax money paid under mistake, compulsion or where illegally levied, see Taxes, VIII.
Of officer to repay overpaid compensation, see Officers, VIII.
Implied contract for money paid defendant by intestate when mentally incompetent and under undue influence, see Estates of Decedents ¶ 268.
Right to sue in assumpsit for implied contract arising out of fraud, see Fraud § 88.

¶ 135. A. borrowed $1,000 from B. on a forged mortgage. Subsequently he borrowed $3,000 from C. on another forged mortgage upon the same land, C., in order to get a first mortgage, paying out of his loan the former loan and taking up B.'s note and mortgage. Neither B. nor C. knew at the time that the securities were forged. Held, that C. could not recover from B. the amount paid to take up B.'s note and mortgage.—Walker v. Conant, 69 Mich. 321.

¶ 136. The American Trotting Association, a corporation under Pub. Acts 1887, No. 18, and having as members various local societies, cannot recover as money had and received the purses obtained by defendant wrongfully from local associations by racing a horse under a false name and class, where one of the articles makes it the duty of the member to pay all premiums won unless the same are properly withheld under the by-laws and rules of the Association, and it was so paid and no assignment from the member to the plaintiff of the right to recover was ever made; though the rules of the Association, which the articles make obligatory on the members, provide that every entry shall constitute an agreement that the person making it and the horse shall be subject to the rules, that a person obtaining a purse through fraud or error shall on demand pay the same to the secretary of the Association, and that a horse entered in a class to which he does not belong shall forfeit entrance money and be ruled out.—American Trotting Ass'n v. Reynolds, 141 Mich. 340.

§ 19. Obligation arising from use or disposal of another's property.

See also ante ¶ 107.
Assertion of adverse claim or right as trespass and not basis for implication, see ante ¶ 24.
Use of drain under claim of right, see ante ¶ 24.
Implications from use of canal where use is under claim of right, see ante ¶ 23.
Obligation arising from use and occupation of real property, see Landlord and Tenant, IV.
Based on delivery by bailee to third person, see Bailments § 16, ¶ 57.

¶ 137. Trover or case rather than assumpsit is the proper remedy against a gratuitous bailee of bonds who delivers them without receiving anything therefor to a third party claiming title.—Barnum v. Stone, 27 Mich. 332.

¶ 138. Where the president of a private industry constructs a belt line railroad for transfer purposes which is intended for the use of such industry and others that may be located and organizes a corporation to take over such railroad and holds all the stock therein, except as to qualifying shares, and cars are transferred to and from such plant only by engines of connecting railroads, there is no implied contract by such railroads to pay for the use of such line, where demands for payment meet with refusal or with conduct tantamount thereto.—Grand Rapids Terminal Belt Ry. Co. v. Waters, 198 Mich. 285.

¶ 139. Where a son resides upon a farm owned by his parents, and at his decease there is personal property upon the farm belonging to him, his estate may recover therefor as against the estate of another child who has converted such property. In re Colburn's Estate, 153 Mich. 206; More v. Luther, Id.

§ 20. Obligation imposed by law.

Implied contract against husband for support and necessaries furnished wife, see Husband and Wife, III.
Statutory right to compensation for driving logs or breaking jams, see Forestry § 10.
Liability for necessary expense of driving out another's logs and of breaking jams, see Forestry §§ 5, 10.
Statutory liability of bank stockholder as contract with depositor, see Banking § 79.
Assumpsit to enforce judgment, see Judgments, XII.
Assumpsit for taxes, see Taxes.

§ 21. Performance or benefits under void or unenforceable contracts.

See also ante ¶ 36.
Negation of implication from express contract, see ante §§ 2, 3.
Want of implied contract to cover matters as to which law makes an express contract illegal and void, see ante ¶ 3.
Benefits under broken, rescinded or abandoned contracts, see ante § 7.
Acceptance of benefits not conforming to written contract, see also ante ¶ 41.
Liability of attorney for money received and kept under void contract for share of alimony, see also ante ¶ 111.
Recovery for money paid or services rendered under contract void under statute of frauds, see Frauds, Statute of, §§ 125, 126.

Implied contract rights arising out of invalid agreement or part performance thereunder, see Contracts § 96.
Implication based on void Sunday contract, see also Contracts ¶ 1144.

¶ 140. Money advanced on an oral agreement to purchase lands, to be held as stipulated damages on default in the purchaser, and otherwise to be applied as part of the purchase money, may be recovered back.—Scott v. Bush, 26 Mich. 418; Scott v. Bush, 29 Mich. 523.

¶ 141. Money advanced upon a contract void under the statute of frauds cannot be retained on the claim that there was sufficient consideration for the payment, growing out of collateral matter, which was in effect but part of the void contract itself.—Scott v. Bush, 29 Mich. 523.

¶ 142. A. conveyed to B. land in part payment for which it had been orally agreed that B. should convey a house and lot, which, however, B. refused to do, and afterwards B. sold to another. Held, that as B.'s agreement was void under the statute of frauds, his refusal to convey rescinded the contract and raised an implied promise to pay for the land which he had received on the contract, and that the value of such land could be recovered on the indebitatus count for real property sold.—Nugent v. Teachout, 67 Mich. 571.

¶ 143. Where a contract, void under the statute of frauds, has been substantially performed by one party while the other has received the benefits expected therefrom, the former may recover the actual value of his services as ascertained by the jury.—Cadman v. Markle, 76 Mich. 448.

¶ 144. The equitable owner of land, title to which was in a third party, caused it to be conveyed, to secure a debt, by deed absolute in form, to a person to whom he subsequently agreed, orally, to sell the land, and to whom he then surrendered possession, receiving from him part of the purchase money. Held, that the common counts would lie for the balance due.—Miner v. O'Harrow, 60 Mich. 91.

¶ 145. A void Sunday contract cannot itself be the basis of an implied contract.—Searles v. Reed, 63 Mich. 485.

¶ 146. The equitable owner of land, title to which was in a third party, caused it to be conveyed, to secure a debt, by deed absolute in form, to a person to whom he subsequently agreed, orally, to sell the land, and to whom he then surrendered possession, receiving from him part of the purchase money. Held, that the common counts would lie for the balance due.—Miner v. O'Harrow, 60 Mich. 91.

to recover more than his actual loss.—Havens v. Church, 104 Mich. 135.

¶ 153. Where an action lies upon the quantum meruit for work and labor done under an unapportionable contract whereof defendant has prevented completion or which he has broken, the measure of damages is the value of the services, not the price named in the contract.—Hosmer v. Wilson, 7 Mich. 294; Kearney v. Doyle, 22 Mich. 294.

¶ 154. Where action is brought on a quantum meruit for labor done under a special and entire contract, which has not been substantially performed by the plaintiff on his part, the plaintiff can in no case recover more than the contract price; and cannot recover that if his work is not reasonably worth it, or if, by paying it, the rest of the work will cost the defendant more than if the whole had been completed under the contract.—Allen v. McKibbin, 5 Mich. 449; Wilson v. Wagar, 26 Mich. 452.

¶ 155. The right of a contractor, who failed to complete his contract, to recover upon a quantum meruit because of the other party's acceptance of his part performance, is limited to a sum not exceeding the contract price, less the cost of completing the work, and less any damages and added expenses caused by his breach of the contract.—Sheldon v. Leahy, 111 Mich. 29.

¶ 156. A plaintiff contractor failed to furnish a building up to specifications. In a suit to recover the contract price, held, his recovery must be on a quantum meruit and the measure of recovery should be the reasonable value of the building, less what it would cost to complete it.—Germain v. Union School Dist. City of Stanton, 158 Mich. 214.

¶ 157. Where a party to a contract that has been broken by the other party sues on the quantum meruit for work done, his measure of damages is not necessarily the contract price, but he may recover the reasonable value of his services, although in excess of the rate fixed by the contract.—Hemminger v. Western Assurance Co., 95 Mich. 355.

¶ 158. The proper amount recoverable on an implied promise of repayment of the grantor who conveyed land in consideration of the discharge of a mortgage mistakenly supposed to be in force is the supposed amount of the indebtedness intended to be thus discharged; since that was the amount of consideration intended and which failed.—Child v. Pierce, 37 Mich. 155.

¶ 159. In an accounting between a city and a waterworks company, after the rescission of a contract for the use of city owned hydrants for fire purposes, an allowance based on the amount of interest and depreciation saved by the city during a certain period, and thereafter on the amount of water actually furnished, was sustained in the absence of better data, although the compensation might not have been adequate.—City of Grand Haven v. Grand Haven Waterworks, 119 Mich. 652.

§ 23. ——Equitable deductions and adjustments.

¶ 160. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 10054, How. St., 2nd Ed., § 12704, providing that the assignee of a non-negotiable chose takes, subject to every defense which existed before notice of assignment, the assignor of a non-negotiable contract for the erection of a boat is liable when sued by the purchaser, upon the common counts, in assumpsit, for the instalment paid on the purchase price, after the purchaser was himself in default on the contract, only for the excess of the benefit received over the damage sustained by plaintiff's nonfulfillment of the contract.—Michigan Yacht & Power Co. v. Busch, 143 Fed. 929.

§ 24. ——Extra work or expense required by other party under contract.

¶ 161. Where defendant's fraud in the making or carrying out of the contract for labor and materials between the parties has led to the performance of extra work by plaintiff, a subcontractor, the latter may recover the reasonable value of such work, and is not limited to the contract prices, the action being assumpsit based on waiver of the fraud.—Bush v. Brooks, 70 Mich. 446.

III. ACTIONS AND PROCEDURE.

§ 25. In general; cross-references.

[Note. Beyond the distinctions of common assumpsit from special assumpsit, and their equivalents under the Judicature Act, there is no procedure peculiar to implied contracts. The procedural law is therefore treated in Assumpsit, which deals with the common counts and the waiver of tort, and in Contracts, X.]

Presumptions and evidence to raise or rebut implication, see post § 26.

Existence of contract for repayment of money expended by child at parent's request as jury question, see ante ¶ 120.

Implication of promise from conduct or facts, see ante I.

Implication by rule of law, see ante II.

Assumpsit and procedure therein, see Assumpsit.

Waiver of tort, when allowable, see Assumpsit, I.

For numerous holdings that assumpsit is proper remedy, see generally Assumpsit. In many instances these holdings imply that there was an implied contract.

Procedure for recovery of mistaken or illegal payments, see Payment, VI.

Alleging both implied and express contract in declaration, see Pleading, II.

Assignability of accrued right to recover money, see Assignments § 5.
Necessary parties defendant, see Contracts § 281.
Gratuitousness of payments as jury question, see Contracts § 335.
Parties to implied contract as jury question, see Contracts § 337.
Existence of express contract or implied one as jury question, see Contracts § 336.
Instruction as to intention to pay, see Contracts ¶ 1524.
Actions for recovery of stakes or winnings paid over, see Gambling Contracts § 4.
Right to attachment in action on implied contracts, see Attachment § 7.
Liability on implied contract as subject of garnishment, see Garnishment § 20 et seq.

§ 26. Presumptions and evidence to raise or rebut implication.

[Note. It is not intended to include in this section the implications or reasoning from the facts or conduct to the obligation but only the presumptions and evidence by which the primary facts are established on which the implication is based. In a sense all implied contracts are presumable contracts, but to give the word "presumption" so extensive a meaning would submerge the matters which are separated into the foregoing sections. See those sections and also the cross-references which follow.]

Presumption of implied contract from negotiations for express one, see ante ¶ 1.
Admissibility of evidence to prove value of work done where same is covered by express contract, see also ante ¶ 20.
Implication as to payment for services rendered by child to parent as jury question, see ante ¶ 87.
Presumption as to implication of promise to pay for services rendered one in loco parentis, see ante ¶ 59.
Evidence as to intention to pay, see also Contracts ¶¶ 1355, 1386.
Admissibility of evidence of custom to support implication, see Contracts § 313.
Evidence as to reasonable values, see Values.
Evidence as to reasonable value of attorney's services, see Attorneys § 43.
Payment or loan presumable from delivery of money or possession of cancelled check, see Payment, V.
Expert and opinion evidence as to value of services and labor, see Evidence, VI.
Evidence of overpayment in action to rebut money had and received, see also Evidence ¶ 381.
Irrelevancy to action for money paid by mistake of character of payee, see Evidence ¶ 1950.
Nonassertion of claim as admission of gratuitousness of services, see also Evidence ¶ 2075.

¶ 162. It is presumed that a person legally liable for goods or services understands that he is to be charged Giddey, 41 Mich. 590.

¶ 163. In an acti claimed to have been tract it will be presu that services rendere dered in performan Hapke v. Davidson, 1

¶ 164. The presun sumpsit may be rep special agreement or the relations betwee rounding circumsta gher, 37 Mich. 407.

¶ 165. In an acti testimony by the pla with the defendant worked continuously and that her service understanding that ficient to support a tiff.—Snyder v. Nea ¶ 166. In assump recover a balance d under a plea of th of faulty work of know, is admissibl plaintiff's work bot ance of the contrac nature and extent the plaintiff to hav into between the p 129 Mich. 448.

¶ 167. On the were gratuitous or tion of payment f material whether cedent's having d to claimant and h son's Estate, 160 Wetherbee, Id.

¶ 168. Oral evi show a promise t represented that sum and that if would be made u a written agreem as alleged, this since if there was ing does not re since under the contract would baker, 107 Mich.

¶ 169. Plaintiff B., who was sta Plaintiff while v out some money that he turn sa did, treating the fused to return t defendant's brot to show that de had the money o vantage therefrom, and none tending to prove any arrangement or effort on his part to bring about the marriage of Kate and his brother, or to interfere with plaintiff and Kate. In a suit to recover said money, held, a verdict should have been directed for defendant.—Hilliard v. Hilliard, 169 Mich. 447.

¶ 170. Evidence of general usage may repel the presumption of an implied assumpsit.—Peters v. Gallagher, 37 Mich. 407.

IMPOSITION to INCOMPETENCY.

Cross-References.

Imposition—
- As constructive or implied fraud, see Fraud, II; Wills, III; Gifts, IV.
- As fraud in personal relationship, see also Husband and Wife §§ 4, 54 et seq.; Parent and Child, IV; Trusts, VIII; Estates of Decedents, X, A.

Imposition of Terms—
- See topics treating of relief grantable in discretion or on conditions, e. g., Continuances § 11; Pleading, VI (amendments); Defaults § 33 (opening); New Trial, I, II; Motions and Orders.
- Affirmance or reversal on conditions, see Appeal, XIII.

Impossibility—
- As excuse for default in contract, see Contracts § 234.
- Effect on legality of contract, see Contracts, IV.
- Construction to effectuate and avoid impossibility, see Contracts, VI, A; Deeds, III, A; Wills, VI, A; Statutes, V.
- Impossible conditions, see Contracts, VI, C, VII; Wills, VI; Deeds, III, E.
- Of proving exact damages, measure applicable, see Damages § 2.
- Of execution of decree as reason against specific performance, see Specific Performance, II.
- Inefficacy of injunction as reason against allowance, see Injunctions, I, II.
- Inability to make restitution as bar to rescission, see Rescission, III.

Imposters—
- Crime of false personation, see Crimes § 76; Indictment.

Impotency—
- Ground for divorce or annulment of marriage, see Divorce § 8; Marriage, IV.

Imprisonment for Contempt—
- See Contempt §§ 39, 41.

Imprisonment for Crime—
- See Arrest; Prisons; Crimes, I, E (punishments); Indictment, XI (sentence); Pardons and Paroles.
- Wrongful arrest as tort, see False Imprisonment.
- Wrongful prosecution, see Malicious Prosecution.

Imprisonment for Debt—
- See generally Civil Arrest; Constitutional Law § 193.
- For nonpayment of alimony, see Contempt; Divorce § 183.

Improbability—
- As factor in weighing evidence, see Evidence § 610; Indictment, VIII, C; Witnesses, VI, A.

Improvements—
- As fixtures or movables, see Fixtures.
- Doctrine of accession as applied to improvements of another's property, see Accession.
- Allowance for value in ejectment or in partition or dower proceedings, see Ejectment, VI; Partition, IV; Dower, VI, C.
- Relative rights and duties of tenants and others, see Landlord and Tenant, IV, C; Life Estates, II; Tenants in Common, II; Vendors and Purchasers, IX, X.
- Agreements required to be in writing, see Frauds, Statute of, § 56.
- Making improvements as evidence on question of adverse possession or boundary, see Adverse Possession § 46 et seq.; Boundaries § 28.
- Making improvements as performance of oral contract so as to be specifically enforceable, see Specific Performance, III.
- Mechanics' liens for building improvements, see Mechanics' Liens.
- Local public improvements, see Local Improvements.
- Works of internal improvement, constitutional powers, see Constitutional Law § 281 et seq.
- Highway or waterway improvements, see Highways, IV; Navigable Waters, III.

Improvident Judgments or Orders—
- Relief from, see Defaults, VI; Judgments, V, VI; Motions and Orders.

Imputation of Crime—
- As defamation, see Libel.

Imputed Negligence—
- See Negligence, IV.

Imputed Notice or Knowledge—
- See Agency, II, E; Corporations, XVII, E; Master and Servant, IV.

Inability—
- To obey or perform as excuse, see Contempt § 14 et seq.; Divorce §§ 167, 178 (alimony decrees); Contracts § 234 et seq.

Inadequacy of Consideration—
- See Contracts § 128 et seq.
- As implied fraud in the bargain, see Fraud § 70.

Inadequacy of Price—
- Ground for setting aside executor's or other judicial or execution sale, see Estates of Decedents § 242; Judicial Sales, II; Executions § 92; Foreclosure §§ 40 et seq., 150.

Inadequate Damages—
See Damages, IX; Death by Wrongful Act §§ 39, 40.
In eminent domain proceedings, see Eminent Domain § 37 et seq.
Inadequate Legal Remedy—
See Equity, III, B.
Inadvertent Acts—
As negligence, see Negligence.
Relief from default of judgment entered inadvertently, see Default, VI; Judgment, V, VI.
Relief from discontinuance taken inadvertently, see Discontinuance § 8.
Inapplicable Instructions—
See Instructions, IV; Indictment, IX, E.
In Blank—
Indorsements of bills and notes, see Negotiable Instruments, VII.
Indorsements of stock certificates, see Corporations § 276.
Incapacity—
Of natural persons, see Infants; Insane Persons; Husband and Wife; Incompetents; Bastards; Aliens.
Of corporations, ultra vires doctrine, see Corporations, XI-XIV; Municipal Corporations, III.
For marriage, see Marriage, II.
To make will, see Wills, II.
To inherit or transmit inheritance, see Aliens; Bastards.
Effect of incapacity on bequest or devise, see Wills, VI.
See also cross-references under Disability.
Incest—
See Crimes, II; Indictment.
Inchoate Dower
See Dower
Inclosures—
Entering a Inclosing a see Ad
Inclosing h
Highwa Income—Distinguish see Li Trusts, Relative ri
see Ter Disposal o
Perpetu
Wills,
Constructio
see Wil
Incoming and Officers an ficers;
Incompatibility-
Of offices, other o
Fraud impl with d
Of temper
vorce Divorce,
Incompetency—
Of persons,
petents;
Of evidence
dictmer dence).
Objections
see Tri Effect of e less Er

INCOMPETENTS AND DELIN(

TREATS of persons legally incompetent or non sui juris It excludes to specific topics the commonly known classes those who are non sui juris. See Insane Persons; Infants; abilities of coverture). The guardianship of incompetent pe ship. Criminal responsibility of mental defectives is treate

Analysis.

§ 1. In general.
§ 2. Drunkards and drug addicts.
§ 3. Spendthrifts.
§ 4. Homeless, destitute or abandoned c
§ 5. Delinquent children.
§ 6. Proceedings against juvenile delin
§ 7. ——Procedure for discharge.

§ 1. In general.

Drunkards and drug addicts, see post § 2.
Spendthrifts, see post § 3.
Homeless, de
see post
Delinquent ch

Procedure against juvenile delinquents, see post §§ 6, 7.
Insane persons, see Insane Persons.
Disabilities of coverture, see Husband and Wife, IV.
Illegitimate children, see generally Bastards.
Duress destructive of free agency, see Duress.
Capacity of deaf mute to contract, see Deaf and Dumb Persons ¶ 1.
Incompetents—
Mental capacity of insured to change beneficiary, see Fraternal Associations § 43.

§ 2. Drunkards and drug addicts.

Ratification of contract and waiver of defense of incompetency by drunkenness, see Contracts § 95.
Right of drunken grantor to have relief against person causing drunkenness to obtain conveyance, see also Equity ¶ 53.
Law as to intoxicating liquor generally, see Intoxicating Liquors.
Guardianship for habitual drunkard or drug addict, see Jud. Act. chap. LVIII, § 1, ¶ 6; Comp. L. 1915, § 13950, ¶ 6.

¶ 1. A drunkard is not incompetent, like an idiot or one generally insane. He is simply incompetent upon proof that at the time of the act his understanding was clouded or his reason dethroned by actual intoxication.—Wright v. Fisher, 65 Mich. 275.

¶ 2. An instrument executed by one addicted to the constant and excessive use of intoxicating liquor is valid if made by him during a sober interval when he is competent to transact business understandingly.—Somers v. Ferris, 182 Mich. 392.

¶ 3. Equity will relieve one from a contract made by him in drunkenness, though his reason may not have been wholly overthrown where fraudulent advantage has been taken or where the drunkenness has been brought about by the other party.—Scanlan v. Connor, 168 Mich. 133.

¶ 4. A note signed by a person who though intoxicated was yet aware of what he was doing, and not deceived as to the identity of the paper signed, is not void, and any defense to it must rest on the ground of fraud and not of absolute incapacity.—Miller v. Finley, 26 Mich. 249.

¶ 5. A delay of twenty years will defeat a suit to set aside for fraud a conveyance made by an habitual drunkard who has had frequent lucid intervals, during which he was possessed of sufficient mind to understand his rights and to move for their enforcement, and where his grantee has conveyed to a third party who has made valuable improvements.—Wright v. Fisher, 65 Mich. 275.

¶ 6. A wife obtained two divorces, one of them contested, from the deceased, on the ground of excessive use of liquor. She also got an order appointing her guardian of the property of her husband, on the same ground, but failed to qualify as such. There was no dispute in the testimony as to the excessive habit of the deceased, but there was a sharp dispute as to his incompetency. Held, sufficient to warrant a decree in favor of the children as complainants in a bill to set aside a conveyance by the deceased, on said grounds.—Troub v. Thorp, 152 Mich. 363.

§ 3. Spendthrifts.

Guardianship for spendthrifts, see Jud. Act. chap. LVIII, § 1, ¶ 3, Comp. L. 1915. § 13950, ¶ 3.

§ 4. Homeless, destitute or abandoned children.

Rights of children in general, see Infants.
Authority of asylum or hospital in custody to consent to adoption, see Adoption § 1.

§ 7. In an action by its grandmother to have a child declared a dependent under Act No. 310, Pub. Acts 1909, which defines a dependent child as one who is homeless, destitute or abandoned, or dependent on the public for support, and asking that she be awarded the custody of it, where it appears from the undisputed testimony that the child has lived with the petitioner with the tacit consent of the father since the death of its mother, that it has been amply cared for, and that the child's aunt is anxious to have the custody of it, and is capable of properly rearing it, the court properly held that the child was not "dependent" within the meaning of the act.—In re Gould, 171 Mich. 540.

¶ 8. The probate court exercised jurisdiction of the case where it entertained a petition under Act No. 310, Pub. Acts 1909, to have a child declared destitute, heard the evidence, decided the question on its merits and dismissed the petition because the case did not come within the act under the undisputed evidence.—In re Gould, 171 Mich. 540.

§ 5. Delinquent children.

Rights of minors in general, see Infants.
Act for custody and protection of truant and delinquent children, see Comp. L. 1915. § 15576 et seq.

¶ 9. A child fourteen years committing a felony is a delinquent child. In re Mould. 162 Mich. 1.

§ 6. Proceedings against juvenile delinquents.

Procedure for discharge, see post § 7.
Constitutional jurisdiction of courts, see Constitutional Law, II, B; Courts, V.
Statutory provisions for custody, regulation and control of juvenile delinquents, see Comp. L, 1915, § 2011 et seq.

¶ 10. Under Pub. Acts 1903, No. 221, relating to disorderly juvenile offenders, a justice obtains no jurisdiction over a child within the act, where its requirements relative to notice to and report of the county agent are not complied with.—People v. Turja, 157 Mich. 530.

¶ 11. A charge that respondent is "a disorderly juvenile offender, in that she neglected and refused to go to school, and was a truant and is an unmanageable child," is insufficient to sustain a conviction under the provisions of Act No. 200, Pub. Acts 1905, and Comp. L. 1897, § 11765, inasmuch as it contains no allegation as to the age of respondent, nor that she was not excused from attending school, nor that she was under parental charge, and against the command of the parent had wilfully absented herself from school.—People v. Turja, 157 Mich. 530.

¶ 12. Under the Constitution of 1908, § 13, art. 7, and Act No. 6 of the Extra Session of 1907, as amended by Act No. 310 of the Pub. Acts of 1909, conferring jurisdiction upon the probate court to deal with delinquent children, no appeal lies to the circuit court from an order of the probate judge committing a delinquent child to a state institution, since neither of the said acts provides for any such appeal and since the right of appeal does not lie by virtue of section 669, Comp. L. 1897, which confers the right of appeal from the probate judge only in matters of usual probate jurisdiction.—Van Leuven v. Ingham Circuit Judge, 166 Mich. 115. (Blair and McAlvay, JJ., dissenting.)

¶ 13. A child under fourteen years residing with her guardian in Livingston county was summoned to appear as a witness in Wayne county. At the trial she committed perjury and was committed to the custody of a probation officer by the probate court of Wayne county. Upon habeas corpus, held, that under Act No. 6, Pub. Acts 1907, the Wayne county court had no jurisdiction over said delinquent child, as she was a resident of another county.—In re Mould, 162 Mich. 1.

¶ 14. The proceedings under Pub. Acts 1907, Extra Session, No. 6, §§ 1-6, as amended, How. 2nd Ed., §§ 11644-11649, as amended, before a probate judge to determine the delinquency of a child are not criminal proceedings, and the rules governing criminal trials do not apply.—In re Broughton, 192 Mich. 418.

¶ 15. The probate judge alone has jurisdiction to determine whether a delinquent child shall be returned to its parents or guardians, or committed to one of the several institutions provided by law, under Pub. Acts 1907, Extra Session, No. 6, §§ 1-6, as amended, How. 2nd Ed., §§ 11644-11649, as amended.—In re Broughton, 192 Mich. 418.

¶ 16. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 684, How. 2nd Ed., § 12132, and Pub. Acts 1913, No. 363, a probate judg journ the proceedin of the delinquency time in his discretio Mich. 418.

¶ 17. Pub. Acts a probate judge in the delinquency of pose of the case o produced, on return or as soon thereaf complied with in rela of testimony where of the county agen child confessed to a decision of the court investigation of the and the child adjud In re Broughton, 19

¶ 18. In proceed 1907, Extra Session, How. 2nd Ed., §§ 1 to determine the de is discretionary wi whether or not he p tion.—In re Brought ¶ 19. The order of mitting a delinquen held under Pub. Ac No. 6, §§ 1-6, as a §§ 11644-11649, as and final.—In re Br

§ 7. ——Procedure f

Power of judge at c corpus for child court, see Court

Habeas corpus to be ment as juvenil Corpus § 1.

¶ 20. Under Com person may make charge of a child a detained by a prob other than that of t —In re Mould, 162

INCONSISTENCY

Cross-

Inconsistency—
- Basis for estop
- Election betwee
  - Election a
  - Dower, V.
- In charges to j dictment,
- In findings, s IV; Refer
- In pleading, s
- Construction inconsister
  - Contracts, Wills, VI,

Inconsistent Statements—
Admissibility to impeach or contradict witness, see Witnesses, VI, D.
Examination respecting, see Examination of Witnesses §§ 66, 67.
As admissions against interest, see Evidence, VII, C; Indictment, VIII, B.
Incorporation—
See Corporations; Municipal Corporations.
Incorporeal Estates—
See Easements.
Incorporeal Hereditaments—
See Easements; Real Property.
Incorrect Reason for Decision—
As harmless error, see Harmless Error § 12; Indictment, XV.
Increase of Animals—
Ownership or lien on, see Animals § 1; Accession § 1; Chattel Mortgages § 18.
Increase of Capital—
See Corporations § 271.
Increased Costs—
See Costs.
Increasing Salaries of Officers—
See Constitutional Law § 268; Officers, VIII.
Incrimination of Self—
Constitutional provisions, see Constitutional Law § 201.
Privilege to refuse to answer, see Examination of Witnesses, IV.
Immunity from prosecution on own testimony, see Witnesses, I.
Incumbrances—
See Mortgages; Liens (and cross-references under that topic); Easements.
Marketability of title or compliance with sale contract as affected by incumbrances, see Vendors and Purchasers, III.
Covenants against, see Covenants for Title.
Placing or suffering incumbrance as avoiding insurance, see Insurance, VIII, XII.
Notice and record of mortgages and incumbrances and rights of bona fide purchasers and takers, see Notice and Record of Title.
In Custodia Legis—
See references under Custody of Law.
Indebtedness—
See references under Debt; Debtor and Creditor.
Indecency; Indecent Exposure—
As crime, see Crimes, II; Indictment.
Indefiniteness—
See specific topics treating of the writing questioned for indefiniteness, e. g., Contracts; Deeds; Wills; Pleading; Indictment, I; Statutes, V.

INDEMNITY AND CONTRIBUTION.

TREATS of express or implied promises to indemnify one against loss or liability from some specified action or cause, also of liability at law or in equity of one or more of several persons to contribute his share to the discharge of a joint or common liability or to reimburse or exonerate others who are not primarily liable. It excludes guaranty of the principal debt or obligation of a primary debtor (see Guaranty), suretyship as a copromisor to pay another's debt or obligation (see Suretyship), and the liability of indorsers and drawers on default of the makers or acceptors of commercial paper (see Negotiable Instruments). Contracts of insurance against a general kind or class of risk or casualty are treated in Insurance.

Analysis.

I. Bonds and other express agreements.

§ 1. Nature and requisites.
§ 2. Construction and operation.
§ 3. ——Fidelity bonds against defalcations and misappropriations.
§ 4. ——Necessity of loss or liability incurred.
§ 5. ——Liability incurred but not yet paid.
§ 6. ——Liability paid conditionally.
§ 7. ——Conditions on liability; notice and claim.
§ 8. Waiver of rights and conditions by indemnitor.
§ 9. Performance and discharge or breach of obligation to indemnify.
§ 10. Amount and elements recoverable.

§ 11. Lien or other right in property hyp for indemnity.
§ 12. Agreement for contribution.

II. Implied or equitable liability.

A. In General.

§ 13. Contribution.
§ 14. ——Between joint obligors or debtor
§ 15. ——Amounts and proportions.
§ 16. Exoneration.

B. Between Persons Liable for Wrongdoing.

§ 17. In general.
§ 18. Between parties to illegal contract.
§ 19. Amount and measure of recovery.

III. Actions to enforce.

A. At Law.

§ 20. In general.
§ 21. Issues and variance.
§ 22. Burden of proof, presumptions and ev
§ 23. Questions of law and fact and instruc

B. In Equity.

§ 24. In general.

I. BONDS AND OTHER EXPRESS AGREEMENTS.

[Note. Contracts and bonds which partake of the character of agreements for indemnity or contribution are numerous and varied. Generally speaking, those which are distinctive in nature or object have been treated in specific topics appropriately named. Thus insurance contracts, injunction bonds, replevin bonds, bonds for supersedeas, and attachment bonds are in a sense indemnity contracts. (See Insurance; Injunctions; Replevin; Stay, II; Attachment.).]

General law of contracts, see Contracts.
General law as to bonds, see Bonds.
By agent against loss on loans or contracts made by him, see also Agency § 94.
Appeal bonds, see Appeal, XVI; Stay, II.
Attachment bonds, see Attachment, IV, B.
Of attorney by client, see Attorneys § 40.
Authority of bank president to give indemnity bond, see Banking § 158.
Authority of bank cashier to make contract of indemnity, see Banking § 56.
Bonds to secure repayment of public moneys deposited in bank, see Banking § 25.
Indemnity for payment of savings deposit without production of pass book, see Banking § 28.
Bonds of building Contracts, VII
Bonds of public co tracts, VII.
Guardian's bonds,
Injunction bonds,
Right of sheriff t executing writ IV, A.
Replevin bonds, se
Exaction of indem ways in condi service plant,
Requiring indemni for violation tempt § 42.
Indemnity contrac ful or other Death by Wr Indemnification failure of co ¶ 571.

§ 1. Nature and Contribution base see post II.
Proceedings to en
Insurance contr sense contr against loss, they underta to indemnify against loss on a specified subject against specified perils or risks, and in that the undertaking is by an insurer engaged in the business of insurance and a stranger to the subject and the risk. See Insurance.

Nature and requisites of contracts generally, see Contracts, I.

Nature and requisites of bonds generally, see Bonds § 1.

Nature of guaranty contract, see Guaranty.

Nature of suretyship contract, see Suretyship.

Necessity that agreement to answer for another be in writing, see Frauds, Statute of, I, B, and particularly §§ 11, 12.

Indemnity on lost note as provision of foreclosure decree on mortgage securing note, see Foreclosure ¶¶ 396-398.

Necessity of filing contract of indemnity which amounts to chattel mortgage, see Chattel Mortgages § 44, ¶ 189.

¶ 1. A bond of principals, for the payment of notes, to their sureties, within thirty days from maturity, is not a bond of indemnity, but the sureties have an immediate right of action upon breach thereof, with the design to collect enough from the principal to discharge the obligation.—Hall v. Nash, 10 Mich. 303.

¶ 2. One member of a firm covenanted with the other to pay the debts of the firm and save the other harmless therefrom. Such a covenant is not one of indemnity merely, but an omission to pay the creditors as their demands fell due would constitute a breach of it.—Dye v. Mann, 10 Mich. 291.

¶ 3. The lessee of land agreed to raise and deliver to a sugar factory 40 acres of sugar beets and the lessor furnished the money therefor, also taking a mortgage upon the crop. The contract contained no guarantee against loss and provided that no agent of the company should have authority to change its terms and conditions. It appearing that the crop would not be profitable, the lessor refused to furnish more money unless the company would give the same guaranty against loss as it had given to other parties. The manager denied such guaranty to others, but agreed to give him the same guaranty as had been given to certain other parties named, which was in fact a guaranty against loss. The lessor thereupon furnished the necessary money and the parties completed the growing of the crop. Held that the company was liable as on a guaranty against loss.—Constantine v. Kalamazoo Beet Sugar Co., 132 Mich. 480.

¶ 4. Plaintiff applied to the defendant road commissioner to work out highway tax. The defendant set him to work plowing a road upon which a neighbor had sowed grain. Plaintiff told the defendant that the neighbor would make trouble over the plowing. Defendant told him to go ahead and he would stand by him. The neighbor recovered damages against the plaintiff in trespass. Held, plaintiff could recover against defendant on an implied contract of indemnity.—Hoek v. Township of Allendale, 161 Mich. 571.

§ 2. Construction and operation.

General law as to construction and operation of contracts, see Contracts, VI.

Interpretation of bonds generally, see Bonds § 2.

Implication in aid of indemnity contract where part of single transaction involving other contracts, see also Contracts ¶ 735.

Validity of agreement to indemnify officer against action to be taken under disputed law, see Contracts § 53, ¶ 225.

Bond of indemnity to liquor surety as evasion of law disabling wholesaler to be surety for retailer, see Contracts § 50, ¶ 218.

Liability of bailee on contract of indemnity, see Bailments ¶ 22.

Individual or official nature of indemnity contract made by bank officer, see Banking § 60.

Indemnity bond as contract of cashier of his bank, see Banking § 56, ¶ 162.

Contract or obligation secured as part of the bond, see Bonds § 2.

Construction of indemnity mortgage given to bail, see Chattel Mortgages ¶ 272.

Indemnity bond by brewing corporation to sureties on saloonkeeper's bond as ultra vires, see Corporations § 77.

Agreement to make good deficiency as affecting nature of contract as one of factorage, see Brokers and Factors ¶ 8.

Estoppel of person indemnifying mortgagee against tax title to set up such tax title against title of mortgagee as foreclosure purchaser, see Foreclosure ¶ 587.

Check as liquidated indemnity for failure to exercise granted franchise, see Franchises ¶ 17.

Construction of indemnity mortgage to secure bail, see Chattel Mortgages ¶ 272.

Indemnity contract with assignment to person indemnified as chattel mortgage, see Chattel Mortgages ¶ 3.

¶ 5. Where parties indemnified become liable jointly and severally, and one pays the whole debt, the indemnity may properly be regarded as corresponding to the debt, and to be to the parties severally as well as jointly.—Potter v. Brown, 35 Mich. 274.

¶ 6. A guaranty by the organizers of a corporation, who have issued the entire capital stock to themselves as fully paid, that stock purchased from them shall be "non-assessable" until the full par value of all of the stock shall have been expended in the enterprise, operates to indemnify subsequent purchasers against liability under a statute declaring that stockholders shall be individually liable to the creditors of the corporation in an amount equal to their stock, such liability to be enforced by an action against all of the stockholders, in which the amount payable by each upon the total corporate indebtedness shall be found and determined.—Omo v. Bernart, 108 Mich. 43.

¶ 7. A defendant and sureties are liable on the defendant's bond as a plumber given to save a city harmless from excavations made by him in the streets in the performance of his services for the city, although the testimony shows that in the particular case of injury an excavation made by the defendant had been properly filled except at the point where it was crossed by an excavation made by another contractor where it was left open at the latter's request and not properly guarded by him, even though the latter contractor had also given an indemnity bond to the city.—City of Grand Rapids v. Van Rossum, 126 Mich. 310.

¶ 8. A highway tax levied by the authority of the city is included within the meaning of "any city or school tax" in a contract between a city and a waterworks company by which the city agreed to hold the company harmless from any such taxes.—Alpena City Water Co. v. City of Alpena, 130 Mich. 518.

¶ 9. A stipulation in a contract between a city and a water company that the city will "save and keep harmless the waterworks aforesaid from any city or school tax" applies to all works necessary for the company to erect in the proper conduct of its business and not to existing works only.—Alpena City Water Co. v. City of Alpena, 130 Mich. 518.

¶ 10. A bond to indemnify an owner against any pecuniary loss resulting from the breach of "any of the terms, covenants and conditions" of a building contract covers loss due to the perfecting of materialman's liens for materials which the contractor did not pay for.—Stoddard v. Hibbler, 156 Mich. 335.

¶ 11. Where an indemnity bond contains a renewal provision that the bond may be continued for subsequent years at the option of the company, by issuing a continuation certificate duly signed and attested by its authorized officers and with its corporate seal attached and a new consideration is paid for such continuation the original bond and its renewal constitute two different contracts.—Ladies of Modern Maccabees v. Illinois Surety Co., 196 Mich. 27.

¶ 12. In an action by an indemnitee against whom judgment had been recovered against the indemnitor, the latter may set up any defense which, from the nature of the action or the pleadings, he could not have set up in the former action, had he been a party to it.—Grant v. Maslen, 151 Mich. 466.

from loss or damage on account of any claim for possession set up by plaintiff, and the rent was paid thereon. Title to the premises was adjudged to be in plaintiff, who took an assignment of all the rights and interest of F to the rent paid under the lease. Suit was then brought to recover the rent paid. Held that no recovery could be had on the guaranty to hold the tenant harmless since no recovery had been had against him, and he had suffered no damage.—Sherman v. Spalding, 132 Mich. 249.

¶ 18. A party to a contract cannot sue upon a note deposited by the other party with a third person merely as security for fulfilling the contract, where the damages for nonfulfillment have not been determined in a suit upon the contract.—Rumney v. Coville, 51 Mich. 186.

§ 5. ——Liability incurred but not yet paid.

¶ 19. A contract of indemnity against liability for personal injury or death caused by the operation of street cars, providing that the indemnity should not be payable until settlement by the company and that the latter should have control of the defense of legal proceedings against the assured, constituted an indemnity against liability for damages and not merely indemnity for damages, and therefore payment of a judgment against assured, was not essential to recovery against the company upon a judgment against the assured.—Stephens v. Pennsylvania Casualty Co., 135 Mich. 189.

§ 6. ——Liability paid conditionally.

¶ 20. A bond was given by garnishment plaintiffs to a garnishee pending judgment in the principal suit to indemnify him against harm and damage resulting from the immediate payment to the obligors of a part of a fund which, according to his disclosure in the case, he holds as trustee for the principal defendant. The obligors failed to establish their claim against the principal defendant, and the latter obtained a judgment against the trustee for the amount paid over. The bond was thereupon assigned to the principal defendant under an agreement that the sum realized thereon should be applied upon the judgment. Held, that the defense in a suit on the bond that there was "no harm and damage" since the judgment was not paid is untenable since the assignment constituted a conditional payment of the judgment.—Klock v. Pack, 112 Mich. 670.

§ 7. ——Conditions on liability; notice and claim.

Waiver of provision against retention of employee after knowledge of his default, see post § 8.

¶ 21. Provisions of an indemnity bond limiting liability thereon to losses which shall be discovered within six months after the officers whose defalcations are insured against, cease to occupy their positions and within six months after the expiration of the bond, and requiring suit to be brought within one year after the termination of the bond, are valid and not against public policy.—Ladies of Modern Maccabees v. Illinois Security Co., 196 Mich. 27.

¶ 22. Where a surety company has actual notice from a plaintiff employer of a default by the employee, it cannot escape liability on the ground that the plaintiff did not, as required by the contract, notify it by registered letter.—Crystal Ice Co. v. United Surety Co., 159 Mich. 102.

¶ 23. Where the obligee of an indemnity bond gives notice of the principal's default to the general agent of the surety, who signed the bond for the surety and was actively engaged with the obligee in all that concerned the principal's default, the notice is sufficient to comply with a requirement in the bond for notice.—McPharlin v. Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Maryland, 162 Mich. 141, 146.

¶ 24. Plaintiff surety company bonded the employees of a railway company. A station agent on entering the employment was obliged to give an indemnity bond to the surety company. The railway company's bond provided that shortages must be reported to the surety as soon as discovered. The first shortage that occurred was supposed to be an error and was not reported. Subsequently a substantial shortage was discovered, reported and paid. On a suit on the indemnity bond, held, that the sureties were liable for the whole amount, the railway company being only bound to report shortages which were the evident result of dishonest acts.—Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Maryland v. Maile, 177 Mich. 231.

§ 8. Waiver of rights and conditions by indemnitor.

Notice, claim and other conditions on liability of indemnitor, see ante § 7.

¶ 25. A surety company giving bond to protect an employer against the default of a certain employee is like an insurer, with reference to the binding nature of the acts of its general agents, and, where such agent with knowledge urged retention of the employee, is to be treated like fire insurance and life insurance companies waiving conditions.—Crystal Ice Co. v. United Surety Co., 159 Mich. 102.

¶ 26. The plaintiff employer notified the defendant surety company of the default of the employee as soon as plaintiff learned thereof. Upon the advice of the defendant's general agent, and with the knowledge of the defendant, the plaintiff retained the employee in its service. Held, the company was liable on its bond despite a clause therein prohibiting such retention of the employee after default.—Crystal Ice Co. v. United Surety Co., 159 Mich. 102.

§ 9. Performance and discharge or breach of obligation to indemnify.

Revocation of contribution agreement between taxpayers, see post § 12.

General law as to performance, discharge or breach of contracts, see Contracts.

Sufficiency of performance of agreement to "secure" against loss in firm, see also Contracts ¶ 897.

¶ 27. A bond conditioned on paying any decree that may be obtained in a foreclosure proceeding is not discharged by a sale of the mortgaged premises for less than the amount of the decree.—Rynearson v. Fredenburg, 42 Mich. 412.

¶ 28. Where one partner sold his interest in the copartnership, and took a bond from the purchaser conditioned for the payment of the debts and liabilities of the firm and for his indemnification therefrom, it was held that in an action on the bond proof that such payment to the amount of the penalty of the bond was made either by the purchaser alone, or in connection with the other partner, would prevent a recovery.—Perry v. Spencer, 23 Mich. 89.

¶ 29. The payment in full of the claim of a paving contractor who had agreed to keep the city harmless from loss in consequence of negligence, did not operate as a satisfaction of his liability under his contract so as to preclude the city from recovering the amount of a judgment rendered against it in an action for personal injuries sustained through the negligence of such contractor.—City of Detroit v. Grant, 135 Mich. 626.

§ 10. Amount and elements recoverable.

Loss or liability to indemnitee as condition to recovery against indemnitor, see ante § 4.

Extent and measure of recovery by way of contribution, see post §§ 15, 19.

Limitation of damages on penal bond to damages suffered, see Bonds § 8.

Remote and nonproximate damages from breach of indemnity contract, see also Damages ¶ 60.

¶ 30. Where, on A.'s written agreement to indemnify him, B. signs a replevin bond for C., A. is liable for any proper expense incurred by B. in defending suit on the bond.—Knickerbocker v. Wilcox, 83 Mich. 200.

¶ 31. The measure of damages on an indemnity bond given by A. to a sheriff for levying execution upon goods he has previously attached for B. contrary to a mortgagee's rights, is, in an action by the mortgagee after the goods have been sold under B.'s execution in the attachment suit and also under A.'s execution, the value of the goods on the latter execution.—Lee v. Maxwell, 98 Mich. 496.

¶ 32. In an action against his landlord by a tenant evicted under a prior lease, where such tenant ap eviction relying pay the costs, e appeal, the tens sequences of th costs, and not on the appeal rent and costs
the landlord is of the suit on Paulus, 66 Mich

¶ 33. Under against liability which either pa in an action ag appellant must where one desi not.—Stephens
135 Mich. 189.

¶ 34. Where plainly shows parties that the
the indemnitee nection with the who in good f have judgment
Fidelity & Depo
bler, 177 Mich.

§ 11. Lien or oth cated as

Maturity of righ secure perfo
¶ 18.

Validity against for indemn
§ 56.

Validity of cha surety on ad
tel Mortgag

Property held b as subject o
ment ¶ 80.

Mortgages to se
nity contra Mortgages.

Pledges for ind

¶ 35. If a pr as security for dition that the harmless from only as a coven can be so const such debts wo equitable lien ment thereof.—
ings, 1 D. 225.

§ 12. Agreemen

Implied or equ
exoneratio

Absolute engag see also B

Marshalling as see Marsh

¶ 36. A bill
one taxpayer

expenses incurred in prosecuting a suit in behalf of all to enjoin the issuance of waterworks bonds will be dismissed as to a defendant who, before any expense was incurred, notified the complainant that he withdrew his name from the contribution agreement, and would have nothing more to do with it, such contracts being revocable until acted upon.—Solomon v. Penoyer, 89 Mich. 11.

¶ 37. In a suit for contribution by one taxpayer against others on account of expenses incurred in prosecuting a suit in behalf of all to enjoin the issuance of waterworks bonds, the evidence tended strongly to show an understanding between the parties that they should pay said expenses according to their assessments. Such an arrangement held to be equitable; and as defendants made no objection on that ground when presented with bills upon that basis, the court declined to disturb a decree based thereon.—Solomon v. Penoyer, 89 Mich. 11.

II. IMPLIED OR EQUITABLE LIABILITY.

A. IN GENERAL.

[Note. All of the joint or fiduciary relationships carrying the right to an accounting or reimbursement involve an implied or equitable liability to contribute or to exonerate, but since the right is an incident to the accountability the cases are treated in the specific topics treating of the relationships. (See Agency; Brokers; Estates of Decedents; Guardianship; Receivers; Trusts; Partnership; Joint Adventures; Tenants in Common; etc.)]

For references to statutes giving or regulating contribution among specific classes of persons, see specific topics mentioned in last preceding reference.

General law as to implied agreements, see Implied Contracts.

Contribution and exoneration of guarantor, see Guaranty.

Contribution and exoneration between sureties, see Suretyship.

Right of broker to sell to indemnify self, see Brokers § 13.

Right of county or municipality paying health and quarantine charges to have action over against other governmental division, see Health § 13.

Abutting owners' liability over to the public for injuries from defective highways, see Highways § 263.

Responsibility of township to indemnify officer for damages incurred in committing trespass, see Townships, V.

§ 13. Contribution.

Contribution based on agreement, see ante § 12.

Contribution between wrongdoers, see post § 17.

Maxim that equality is equity, see Equity § 2.

Between principal and surety, see Suretyship.

Right of party to contract to recover from other for expenses advanced or incurred, see also Contracts ¶ 1026.

Contribution among stockholders liable for corporate debts, see Corporations § 350.

Among corporate officers or between officer and corporation, see also Corporations § 155.

Outlay for expenses as damages on breach of contract, see Damages, I, C.

Right of surety paying judgment to enforce contribution by creditors' suit without suing to new judgment, see Creditors' Suits § 11, ¶ 34.

Indemnity and contribution for corepresentatives, see Estates of Decedents § 301.

Contribution as claim against estate, see Estates of Decedents § 145.

Between partners and joint adventurers in adjusting their rights see Partnership, VII, E; Joint Adventures.

Contribution between paving contractor and board of water commissioners, see Municipal Corporations XII.

Recourse of secondary or accommodation parties to negotiable paper on primary parties, see Negotiable Instruments.

¶ 38. The doctrine of contribution rests upon the maxim, equality is equity.—Comstock v. Potter, 191 Mich. 629.

Provisions of Workmen's Compensation Act as to recovery of indemnity by employer from third person causing injury, see note, 5 N. C. C. A. 803-806.

Reimbursement of master by servant for damages paid one injured by servant's negligence, see note, 2 N. C. C. A. 484-493, 509.

§ 14. ——Between joint obligors or debtors.

Contribution between joint tort feasors, see post § 17.

Between joint adventurers, see Joint Adventurers.

Contribution between partners, see Partnership.

Between persons liable on negotiable instruments, see Negotiable Instruments.

Contribution between tenants in common, see Tenants in Common.

¶ 39. The right to contribution extends to joint contractors, and one who has paid more than his share of the joint obligation may recover contribution from his cocontractors.—Comstock v. Potter, 191 Mich. 629.

¶ 40. One joint obligor may not sue another joint obligor upon their common obligation until he has paid the debt, or a larger portion thereof than, as between himself and his co-obligor, he would be liable to pay; and his action should then be for contribution.—Kalamazoo Trust Co. v. Merrill, 159 Mich. 649.

¶ 41. An agreement in which the seven directors of a building and loan association finding the assets less than the liabilities agree among themselves that two of them shall deposit with the association their individual notes covering the deficit without recourse against the assets of the corporation and providing that the other directors shall hold the makers of the notes harmless, gives the makers a general authority to pay the notes and exact contribution without resort to the corporate profits.—Crane v. Bayley, 126 Mich. 323.

§ 15. ——Amounts and proportions.

Extent of recovery upon indemnity bonds or agreements, see ante § 10.

As between wrongdoers, see post § 19.

¶ 42. Where one of several indorsers has been held for the full amount of the note, he is entitled to contribution from the rest; and if any of the others have become insolvent or are beyond the reach of process, he is entitled, in equity, to recover from the remainder the proportion they would have to pay of the whole amount if insolvents and nonresidents were excluded.—Stewart v. Goulden, 52 Mich. 143.

¶ 43. A joint debtor cannot be compelled wholly to reimburse another who has paid the joint debt, unless as between themselves the latter is surety.—In re Stewart v. Bruen's Estate, 39 Mich. 619.

¶ 44. One of several defendants in execution who pays the full amount may recover from each of his codefendants the proportionate share and no more.—Thornton v. Damm, 120 Mich. 510.

§ 16. Exoneration.

Agreements for contribution, see ante § 12.

Equitable or implied right to contribution, see ante § 13 et seq.

Right of agent to reimbursement, see Agency § 102.

Exoneration of representatives and distributees of decedents' estates, see Estates of Decedents § 301.

Subrogation to work out exoneration, see Subrogation.

¶ 45. Exoneration is the right of a person secondarily liable to call upon the party, primarily liable, to discharge the debt, or to reimburse him, if he has paid it.—Comstock v. Corbin, 191 Mich. 639.

¶ 46. Where the stockholders of a corporation were indorsers of notes of the corporation and subsequently the property of the corporation was transferred to one stockholder as trustee for the benefit of all the stockholders, and a trust agreement executed which recited that the trustee had borrowed certain sums of money as trustee and that the money had been used to purchase the equity of the corporation in certain real estate, and provided that complainant should handle the real estate and that if the prop-his own wrong.—Upham v. Dickinson, 38 Mich. 338.

¶ 51. Where a duty rests upon parties jointly, and is neglected by both, neither can sue the other for damages resulting from their mutual faults.—Underwood v. Waldron, 33 Mich. 232.

¶ 52. The exception to the general rule as to nonliability for contribution between joint tort feasors that whenever the wrongful act of one person results in liability being imposed upon another, the latter may have indemnity from the person actually guilty of the wrong is inapplicable where one of such tort feasors seeking indemnity, was, in an action commenced against it, found to be actively negligent.—Detroit, G. H. & M. Ry. Co. v. Boomer, 194 Mich. 52.

¶ 53. There are cases where parties are technically wrongdoers in which the claim of one who has satisfied their liability to contribution from the others is not only equitable but contravenes no rule of public policy.—Upham v. Dickinson, 38 Mich. 338.

¶ 54. As a general rule whenever the wrongful act of one person results in liability being imposed upon another, the latter may have indemnity from the person actually guilty of the wrong.—Township of Hart v. Noret, 191 Mich. 427.

¶ 55. The rule that contribution cannot be enforced as between joint wrongdoers does not apply to partners against some of whom damages have been recovered for the firm's unintentional violation of a patent.—Smith v. Ayrault, 71 Mich. 475.

¶ 56. While there is no right of contribution between joint tort feasors, there may be a right to indemnity under a contract where the plaintiff is liable to a third party, but is not in pari delicto with his co-wrongdoer.—Hoek v. Township of Allendale, 161 Mich. 571.

§ 18. Between parties to illegal contract.

General law as to effect of illegal contracts, see Contracts, IV, D.

¶ 57. Parties to an illegal pooling agreement in interstate commerce, though it is fully executed, are not liable to contribute to payment of a compromise judgment against one of their number for injury suffered from a defect in a dock used by all; since it is the rule that a recovery based on an illegal executed contract must be based on benefits received by the contributory parties.—White Star Line v. Star Line of Steamers, 141 Mich. 604.

¶ 57a. Parties to a pooling agreement of steamers are not bound to contribute to a compromise judgment paid by one of them sued for injury suffered by a defect in a dock patronized by all, where after being notified of a suit brought upon their denying liability under the claim, the one sued with the dock owner and cast in judgment appealed and later settled on payment of half of a less sum than the amount of the judgment appealed from, which compromise included a sum paid to the husband of the plaintiff in that suit, and where they were not consulted about the settlement and had no knowledge of it.—White Star Line v. Star Line of Steamers, 141 Mich. 604.

§ 19. Amount and measure of recovery.

Amount and elements of recovery in indemnity, see ante § 10.

Measure of contribution in general, see ante § 15.

Admeasurement of damages as between several persons or for distinct torts, see Damages § 96.

¶ 58. A deputy sheriff was deceived by certain persons into converting property for their benefit. Judgment was recovered against him for the conversion, and he, in turn, suing them in tort for the damage caused him by their fraud, recovered the amount of the judgment obtained against himself. This was held a proper measure of damages.—Kenyon v. Woodruff, 33 Mich. 310.

III. ACTIONS TO ENFORCE.

A. AT LAW.

§ 20. In general.

Defenses available to indemnitor in action by indemnitee, see ante § 2.

Validity of provisions in bond limiting time within which suit may be brought, see ante ¶ 21.

Loss or damage to indemnitee as condition to suit against indemnitor see ante § 4.

Necessity of default or loss as conditions to enforcement of indemnity, see ante § 7.

Enforcement in equity, see post § 24.

Parties to actions upon indemnity or for contribution, see Parties.

Amendments of pleadings, see Pleading, VI.

Reference in argument to indemnity as error, see Argument of Counsel § 25.

When assumpsit is proper, see Assumpsit, II.

Actions for contribution between parties to negotiable instruments, see Negotiable Instruments, XIV.

Enforcing contribution between partners, see Partnership.

Bringing in joint tort feasors in libel for purpose of enforcing contribution, see Jud. Act, chap. XX, § 25; Comp. L. 1915, § 12761.

¶ 59. An action on a bond providing for indemnity against injury from negligence, joining the surety and principal as defendants, is not subject to the objection that an action of contract against the surety is joined with an action of tort against the principal.

—Cox v. Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Maryland, 157 Mich. 59.

¶ 60. A general count for money paid is sufficient in an action by a bondsman to recover back money paid for the benefit of his principal; and if the action is brought on both general and special counts, any objections based on the latter are immaterial.—Mitchell v. Chambers, 43 Mich. 150.

¶ 61. The plea of non damnificatus is not the proper plea to a declaration upon a covenant to indemnify, etc.—Wheelock v. Rice, 1 D. 267.

§ 21. Issues and variance.

General law as to issues and variance, see Pleading IX, X.

Variance in suit on bond as to debt secured, see also Bonds § 6.

Variance in actions for contribution between comakers of notes, see Negotiable Instruments, XIV.

¶ 62. Evidence of an agreement by a loan agent to pay any deficiency that might result on a foreclosure by the principal on loans made by the agent by reason of insufficient security or defect of title is not admissible in an action against the agent unless specially counted upon.—Perkins v. Hershey, 77 Mich. 504.

¶ 63. There was no error in receiving in evidence over an objection for variance the identical contract of agency set forth in the declaration, in assumpsit, on an agent's fidelity bond, though other evidence showed that the contract was antedated.

§ 22. Burden of proof, presumptions and evidence.

Proof of compliance with condition of bond to pay debts and liabilities of firm, see ante ¶ 28.

General law as to proof, presumptions and evidence, see Evidence.

Parol evidence to show that several independent mortgages were dependently and contributively liable, see Evidence ¶ 1125.

Files in other action as evidence of nature of indemnity agreement, see Evidence ¶ 2775.

Admissibility of judgment in action on contract of indemnity against it, see also Former Adjudication § 3.

Conclusiveness of judgment against indemnitee on indemnitor, see Former Adjudication §§ 60, 61.

Judgment against principal as evidence against surety, see Suretyship, IV.

Sufficiency of proof on foreclosure of mortgage to indemnify accommodation party, see Foreclosure ¶ 358.

Cross-examination as to existence and terms of contract to reimburse, see Examination of Witnesses § 49.

¶ 64. A. and B., two sons-in-law, jointly agreed to support C., their mother-in-law, during her natural life, and after B.'s death A. brought a claim a excess alleged to hav half toward the supp offered by the estate C. had spent at B.'s more than half the rebut plaintiff's cla Estate, 63 Mich. 79.

¶ 65. Where the bond was fully mad and it was shown t cuted between the p sufficiently establish on an indemnity bo Wisner, 38 Mich. 82

¶ 66. There is su surety on an agent' failing to account a in proof that applic the agent to his su his indebtedness to —Colby Wringer Co

¶ 67. Where a su ing on an employee' of the employer's fa amination of the e the fact that the m dence is inadequat fense.—Crystal Ice 159 Mich. 102.

¶ 68. In an actio his subcontractor, c nify plaintiff for da negligence of the s ting up guards and cavations, proof th the excavation, did by guards or light son was injured on a case against defe 151 Mich. 466.

¶ 69. A judgme against the person i facie evidence agai to him so far as e rendition of the ju the cause of action and therefore of th fered.—Grant v. Mi

¶ 70. It is imm demnity from the p he had notice of th was cast in judgm is not offered as c mary wrongdoer bu dence of the recov its amount, and w on the stand as a amined by defends suit.—Grant v. Mas

§ 23. Questions of tions.

General law as to see Trial, VI.

Instructions as to status and rights of principals and sureties, see Suretyship, IV.

¶ 71. Where, in an action against an agent upon a bond given to secure the performance of his contract with his principal, there is evidence tending to show that the agent received some items, at least, under the original contract, for which the bond would stand as security, the court cannot properly deny plaintiff the right to a verdict upon the ground that the amount so received is in dispute, it being the province of the jury to say how many and what items are shown to have been due to plaintiff.—Union Cent. Life Ins. Co. v. Howell, 101 Mich. 332.

B. IN EQUITY.

§ 24. In general.

Equitable right to contribution or exoneration, see ante II.
Actions at law to enforce, see ante § 20.
Propriety of supplemental bill to enforce contribution, see Equity § 237.
Suit for share due from decedent on mutual contract for support of mother of contracting parties, see Estates of Decedents ¶ 586.
Equity jurisdiction in suit for contribution from representative of surety involving cosureties' solvency, see Estates of Decedents ¶ 590.
Enforcing contribution between persons liable on negotiable instruments, see Negotiable Instruments, XIV.
Enforcing contribution between partners, see Partnership, VII.
Enforcing contribution between sureties, see Suretyship, IV.
Contribution between beneficiaries under a trust mortgage and purchasers of the property, see Trusts, XI.

¶ 72. Courts of law have concurrent jurisdiction with courts of equity to compel contribution, but where the remedy at law is inadequate or doubtful, a bill in equity is the proper remedy.—Comstock v. Potter, 191 Mich. 629.

¶ 73. Equity has jurisdiction on the ground of avoidance of multiplicity of suits, of an action to compel stockholders who are indorsers of and are jointly liable on notes given for corporate indebtedness, each of which respectively represents the interest of a particular stockholder, and is respectively signed by him as maker and by the others as indorsers, to make contribution to another stockholder and indorser who has paid the indebtedness.—Comstock v. Potter, 191 Mich. 629.

¶ 74. Cosureties who have paid the whole of a judgment rendered against all the sureties may jointly file a bill in equity to effect the removal of obstacles fraudulently interposed to prevent their obtaining contribution from the other sureties.—Smith v. Rumsey, 33 Mich. 183.

¶ 75. An administrator filed a bill for indemnity from the estate, or from the widow and heirs, alleging that by the advice of the judge of probate he had turned the property over to the widow and heirs, believing that they would take care of debts remaining unpaid; that he had received his discharge, but was afterwards cited to show why a particular claim had not been paid; that the judge of probate decided that the estate could not be reopened and he must resort to equity; and that he had himself paid the claim. Held, that the administrator had disregarded the statutory provisions governing the management of estates, and that the case was not within any head of equity; and the bill was dismissed.—Breining v. Schneider, 46 Mich. 385.

INDENTURES TO INDEPENDENT CANDIDATES.

Cross-References.

Indentures—
Of apprenticeship, see Apprentices.
In the sense of deeds, see Deeds; Execution of Instruments.
Independent Candidates—
See Elections § 27.

INDEPENDENT CONTRACTS.

TREATS of the status and liabilities and duties toward third persons of one employing an independent contractor in work which proves injurious.

Analysis.

I. Who are; distinction from agents and servants.

§ 1. In general.
§ 2. Persons under supervision or control.
§ 3. Servants of third person engaged for work.

II. Liability for injuries done by contractor.

§ 4. In general.
§ 5. Acts dangerous or injurious in ther
§ 6. Acts under control or supervision.
§ 7. Estoppel to plead independent cont
§ 8. Presumptions and evidence.

General law of negligence, see Negligence.
Contract rights and liabilites of parties to the contract, see Contracts; and see also specific topics, e. g., Building Contracts; Public Contracts; Mechanics' Liens.
Contracts, express and implied, for indemnity against loss or liability by act of independent contractor, see Indemnity.
Person regarded as principal of servant engaged on work involving independent contract, see Master and Servant.
Right of independent logging contractor to statutory lien for services, see Forestry ¶ 64.

I. WHO ARE; DISTINCTION FROM AGENTS AND SERVANTS.

§ 1. In general.

See also post ¶¶ 10, 11.
Persons under supervision or control, see post § 2.
Servants of third persons, see post § 3.
Presumptions and evidence as to nature of relation, see post § 8.
Proof of relation of independent contractor as variance in action for injuries to servant, see Master and Servant, III.
Nonliability for personal injuries to independent contractor, see Master and Servant, III.
Contract as best evidence of relation of builder to owner, see Evidence § 127.
Labor claims and contract claims against corporate stockholders, distinguished, see Corporations § 332.

¶ 1. The defendant gave one Crawford and one Smith a license to go in upon and clear certain wild land at so much per acre. They had full liberty to decide with reference to the manner, place and amount of clearing. Fires set by Crawford spread on the plaintiff's land. Held, that as Crawford was an independent contractor, defendant was not liable.—Rogers v. Parker, 159 Mich. 278.

¶ 2. Where persons under contract to dig a shaft in defendant's mine have entire charge and supervision of the work, the defendant is not liable for any injury to one of his employees caused by a defect in the contractors' apparatus of which defect contractors had notice and which it was their duty to remedy.—Lendberg v. Brotherton Iron Mining Co., 75 Mich. 84.

¶ 3. A manufacturer, through whose yards railroad switch tracks were built, was not responsible for was struck by in such yards that it was the pany; since it
trol of the railr company being Breeze v. MacK

Moving and tra truckmen contractors,
351-355.

When relation employee a contractor sation act
1076-1097;
C. C. A. 48

§ 2. Persons u

¶ 4. A villa sewer work wh to employ an was to see tha manner after liable to an en sustained inju
v. Village of R

¶ 5. The me veyed instructi
ing to a third p not within the
the owner wa
does not creat
servant betwee tor.—Bacon v.

¶ 6. One en materials for a dependent con his employer only control th
was to determ
the plans a
Candler, 181 M

¶ 7. Workm construction o superintendenc servants of th contractors.—F

¶ 8. Plaintif phone company for personal in terms of a written contract between defendants, the construction company agreed to construct a telephone plant and system for the telephone company, and to assume all risks connected therewith; to provide at its own expense all labor and material, and deliver the plant to the telephone company when completed; to install 10,000 telephones and procure 7,500 subscribers' contracts; to procure all necessary real estate, permits, and rights of way, and transfer same to the telephone company; to endeavor to secure and transfer to the telephone company property and franchises belonging to another telephone company; to employ a chief engineer, who should be selected by it and who should be under its control, and subject to removal by said construction company; to protect the telephone company against infringements of patent by its selection of tools, appliances, etc., furnished by it to the telephone company; and in order to facilitate the management of the plant upon completion, to obtain and train operators, linemen and workmen, and engage them for use of the telephone company after the termination of the contract. The plant and system were outlined in plans and specifications already prepared and identified, and such other plans and specifications as should thereafter, in the judgment of the telephone company's consulting engineer, be necessary or proper. The telephone company's consulting engineer was to approve all materials for the plant before they were put in, and the construction company was to carry out all his directions, explanations, and instructions. Said consulting engineer was to make all changes in the extent and character of the work. Held, the finding of the jury that the construction company was the servant of the telephone company, and not an independent contractor, should be sustained.—Larson v. Home Tel. Co., 164 Mich. 295. (Hooker, J. dissenting.)

§ 3. Servants of third person engaged for work.

See also ante ¶ 3, post ¶ 17.

¶ 9. One who has been struck and injured by a barrel of sugar suddenly and without notice rolled from defendant's warehouse upon the sidewalk by a truckman in the employ and entirely under the control of a cartage company that is under contract with defendant to do its cartage, cannot hold such defendant liable.—Riedel v. Moran, Fitzsimons Co., 103 Mich. 262.

II. LIABILITY FOR INJURIES DONE BY CONTRACTOR.

§ 4. In general.

Acts intrinsically dangerous, see post § 5.
Setting fires, see also ante ¶ 1.
Digging mine shaft, see ante ¶ 2.
Controlled or supervised acts, see post § 6.
Estoppel to claim contract independent, see post § 7.
Evidence of control and responsibility, see post § 8.
Liability for servant's torts, see Master and Servant, III.
For cases on the liability of the independent contractor to third persons injured by his acts or negligence or by the acts or negligence of his servants, see Negligence; Master and Servant, IV; and especially topics treating of negligence respecting particular things and places, e. g., Highways, XII, G, XIII, B.
Nonliability for acts of independent contractor injuring bridge in log drive, see Bridges ¶ 79.
Liability of owner or occupier of premises for injury to servant of independent contractor, see also Buildings § 6.
Liability of carrier for defects in cars and equipment furnished by others, see Carriers § 160.
Nonliability of county to contractor's servant injured in county building where working, see Counties § 36.
Liability of city for injuries to employee of contractor from defective streets, see Highways § 239.
Liability of public for injuries in highways due to acts or neglect by independent public contractors, see Highways § 254.
Liability of abutting owner for injury from sign erected by independent contractor, see Highways ¶ 1008.

¶ 10. Where an employee is exercising a distinct and independent employment, and is not under the immediate control, direction or supervision of the employer, the latter is not responsible for the negligence or carelessness of the employee.—De Forrest v. Wright, 2 Mich. 368.

¶ 11. Where a public licensed drayman was employed to draw merchandise from a warehouse and deliver at the store of his employer, and through his carelessness a barrel of the merchandise rolled against and injured the plaintiff, the employer was held not liable.—De Forrest v. Wright, 2 Mich. 368.

¶ 12. Where a boom company which has built a series of dams in a river lets to contractors the work of driving and delivering to itself at the mouth of the river a large quantity of its logs, it is liable for the damages caused to a third person by floods which the condition of the contract rendered necessary in the contractors' operations.—McDonald v. Rifle Boom Co., 71 Mich. 61.

¶ 13. A landlord is liable to the tenant for damages resulting from the negligence of an independent contractor whom he has employed to put in an automatic sprinkler system, such negligence consisting in the placing of a low fusing sprinkler head underneath a skylight, where solar heat opened it.—Peerless Mfg. Co. v. Bagley, 126 Mich. 225.

¶ 14. Where a spectator at a university athletic game is injured by the fall of an inadequate bleacher, the athletic association is not relieved of liability by the fact that the bleacher was put up by a competent builder, was inspected by competent engineers, and pronounced safe, since the spectator, having paid for admission, had a contract right to be protected against all defects except those not discoverable by reasonable care.—Scott v. University of Michigan Athletic Ass'n, 152 Mich. 684.

¶ 15. A street railway company owning a park used as a pleasure resort and to which its track extends is not, by advertising as among the attractions of the park a roller-coaster that is owned and operated by a third person, made liable for the carelessness of such operator; the coaster being itself notice of its character and purpose.—Knottnerus v. North Park St. R. Co., 93 Mich. 348.

¶ 16. A. leased his mine to B., B. agreeing to become responsible for any injuries to workmen, etc. A. retained no control over the mine, which was in an ordinarily safe condition. One of B.'s workmen was injured by a fall of rock in the mine. Held, that A. could not be made liable for damages.—Samuelson v. Cleveland Iron Min. Co., 49 Mich. 164.

¶ 17. Defendant contractors contracted to erect a water tower for a county. They sublet the contract to a bridge company, which furnished the material and constructed the tower according to plans furnished by it, and satisfactory to the county. Held, the defendant contractors were not liable for an injury to plaintiff, employed in building the tower, due to defective beams used in the construction, as the bridge company was an independent contractor.—Kilts v. Board of Sup'rs Kent Co., 162 Mich. 646.

¶ 18. The owner of a plant for manufacturing sash and doors, is not liable to a brakeman who was injured by being struck and thrown from a freight car, by lumber standing near the siding on premises owned or occupied by such owner, where the latter, who owned the lumber, had contracted with another to take it from the cars, pile it and put it in the kiln and take it from the mill and manufacture as much of it into doors as he wanted and load it upon cars at an agreed price, the rest being used by the owner for other purposes; such other party being an independent contractor.—Wright v. Big Rapids Door & Blind Mfg. Co., 124 Mich. 91.

Liability of master for acts of independent contractor in violation of law, see note, 7 N. C. C. A. 724-736.

Duty and liability of independent contractor to employees of common employer, see note, 3 N. C. C. A. 553-555.

§ 6. Acts under control or supervision.

¶ 23. Where a mining corporation contracting for the removal of ore reserves to itself such arrangements as are necessary for the protection of workmen, it is liable for such injuries as happen to employees of the contractors without the fault of the employees.—Lake Superior Iron Co. v. Erickson, 39 Mich. 492.

¶ 24. The owner of premises is not relieved from liability for the negligence of a contractor in excavating caisson pits on his land for a foundation where under the contract the architect may dictate the manner and order of putting down the pits and may partially control the work of erecting the building.—Bissell v. Ford, 176 Mich. 64.

§ 7. Estoppel to plead independent contract.

¶ 25. Defendants, composing an unincorporated driving association, employed an independent contractor to clear certain lands. Plaintiff, owning adjoining land, warned defendants of the danger of the fires they were setting. The defendants gave no indication to plaintiff that an independent contractor was in charge, stated that they would present the matter to the stockholders, and later told plaintiff to mind his own business. Held, defendants were equitably estopped in a suit for injuries arising from the spread of the fire from setting up the plea that the work was in charge of an independent contractor.—Inglis v. Millersburg Driving Ass'n, 169 Mich. 311.

§ 8. Presumptions and evidence.

¶ 26. In an action against the owner of a reinforced concrete building, the contractor, and a materialman furnishing material and plans for the concrete work, for the death of a carpenter due to the collapse of a portion of the second floor of the building which deceased, with other employees, was endeavoring to shore up to keep from falling, an instruction that if the jury believed from the evidence that the owner let the contract to different contractors and during the progress of the work reserved to himself certain control over the manner of executing the work and assumed control, in whole or in part, of the work, and by reason of such control the death of deceased was caused without any fault upon his part, the owner was liable, held improper, where the only evidence as to assumption of control related to another portion of the building.—Bayne v. Everham, 197 Mich. 181.

INDEPENDENT CONTRACTS to INDEX.

Cross-References.

Independent Contracts and Promises—
Entirety and severableness of contracts, see Contracts § 167; Sales, II.
Separate and independent covenants and conditions, see Contracts § 176.
Original promises and promises collateral to debt of another within statutes of frauds, see Frauds, Statute of, § 130.
Guaranty contracts, see Guaranty.

Indeterminate Sentences—
See generally Crimes § 32; Indictment, XI.
Constitutionality of law, see Constitutional Law, II.

Index; Indexing—
See Records; Notice and Record of Title, II.
Indexing record on appeal or error, see Appeal § 174.

INDIANS.

TREATS of the tribal and individual status and rights of Indians.

Analysis.

§ 1. In general; status and tribal relations.
§ 2. Indian treaties.
§ 3. Land titles and reservations.
§ 4. Individual rights, titles and allotments.

---

§ 1. In general; status and tribal relations.

Indian treaties see post § 2.
Land titles and allotment rights, see post §§ 3, 4.
Power of state to punish sale of liquor to Indians, see Constitutional Law ¶ 538.

¶ 1. The validity of polygamous marriages among Indians, and the right of the offspring of such marriages to inherit, considered.—Compo v. Jackson Iron Co., 50 Mich. 578.

¶ 2. As Indians in tribal relations are not subject to state laws, polygamous marriages between such Indians must be regarded as valid by our courts if they were valid by Indian laws; there being no law or treaty of the United States on the subject.—Kobogum v. Jackson Iron Co., 76 Mich. 498.

§ 2. Indian treaties.

¶ 3. In construing an Indian treaty courts should be guided by the obvious intention of the parties as expressed by the instruments, and should give effect to such intention.—Stockton v. Williams, 1 D. 546.

¶ 4. Enlarged rules of construction are adopted in reference to Indian treaties and they are not construed to the prejudice of the Indians.—Auditor-General v. Williams, 94 Mich. 180.

¶ 5. A treaty between the United States and an Indian tribe should be construed, not according to the technical meaning of the words to lawyers, but in the sense in which it would be naturally understood by the parties to the treaty.—Francis v. Francis, 136 Mich. 288, affirmed in 203 U. S. 233, 51 L. ed. 165, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 129.

¶ 6. The court cannot, from a construction of the treaty of Saginaw of Sept. 24, 1819, interpret the words "Indians by descent," as used therein, to mean persons of mixed white and Indian blood only, and not full-blooded Indians.—Campau v. Dewey, 9 Mich. 381.

¶ 7. The court cannot say from the language of the Saginaw treaty, the policy of the government as indicated by the Indian treaties, public records and dispatches, and the habits and modes of life of the Chippewa nation, that a presumption arises that all the reservees in said treaty were persons of mixed white and Indian blood.—Campau v. Dewey, 9 Mich. 381.

§ 3. Land titles and reservations.

¶ 8. By a treaty made in 1807 between the United States and the Chippewa, Ottawa, Pottawattomie and Wyandotte tribes of Indians certain lands near Detroit, among others, were reserved to these tribes. The treaty did not show on its face what tribe was in the occupancy of these lands. By another treaty with the Pottawattomies in 1827 these lands therein stated to have been before "reserved to the use of said tribe" were ceded to the United States. Held that, this treaty having recognized the right to their reserve to have been in the Pottawattomies, the courts are bound so to regard it, and must consider the treaty of 1827 as extinguishing the reserve.—Maiden v. Ingersoll, 6 Mich. 373.

§ 4. Individual rights, titles and allotments.

Presumption as to race of reservee, see also ante § 2.

Best evidence of selection of lands under treaty, see Evidence § 131, ¶ 659.

Parol proof of identity of Indian land reservee to whom patent issued under treaty, see Evidence ¶ 1095.

Certified copies of l dian grants, see Sufficiency of certifi edgment, see A Qualifications of Ind
art. III, § 1.
Capacity of Indian
Jud. Act, chap.
§ 12368.
Exemption of pers
tion, see Comp.

¶¶ 9, 10. The Inc
September 24, 1819
simple upon the which title attache
as these were locat
W. 120; Dewey v.

¶ 11. Under the put on the Indian the government, t
the competency of operative together official authority, ambulatory.—Rayr
Mich. 142.

¶ 12. The quest reservee named i of fact for the j
Mich. 381.

¶ 13. Where a for deciding quest
they must be dec ton v. Williams,
liams, 1 D. 546.

¶ 14. Land pa restraint on alie
the Secretary of being of a class treaty as "not c own affairs, are rect or indirect n
a right to use, o
Auditor General

¶ 15. Article 3
Sept. 24, 1819 (7
ing a section of
and their heirs,
nothing to be do tract, and upon s
to the reservee, a President in iss conveyance with sion of the Pre restrain alienati remain in the that title by a be acquired as grantees named
Francis, 136 Mi
233, 51 L. ed. 16

¶ 16. A treat reciting that the for aid render breeds, and that wishing to testify their gratitude they had assigned certain locations of land to such individuals, and had united in a strong appeal for the allowance of the same in the treaty, but that no such reservations could be permitted in carrying out the instructions of the President, it was agreed that, in addition to the general fund set apart for half-breeds in another article, the sum of $48,148 should be paid for the relinquishment of this class of claims, to be divided in the following manner: "To John A. Drew, for a tract of one section and three-quarters to his Indian family at Sheboygan Rapids, at $4 an acre," etc. Held, that the money was given to Drew absolutely and not in trust for his Indian family.—Cook v. Biddle, 2 Mich. 269.

¶ 17. An Indian's equitable interest held under an agreement with the lessee in a war department lease of mining land that had been recognized by congress passed by descent to the heir of said Indian.—Compo v. Jackson Iron Co., 49 Mich. 39. And see Compo v. Jackson Iron Co., 50 Mich. 578.

¶ 18. No disposition by an Indian of land in expectancy under the treaty of October 18, 1864, is valid.—Raymond v. Shawboose, 34 Mich. 142.

INDICIA OF TITLE OR RIGHT to INDICTABILITY.

Cross-References.

Indicia of Title—
See Deeds; Mortgages; Sales; Chattel Mortgages; Wills; Frauds, Statute of.
Records of title, see Notice and Record of Title, II; Chattel Mortgages, I; Sales, XII.
Estoppel or fraud by false or misleading indicia of title, see Estoppel § 33; Fraudulent Conveyances; Chattel Mortgages, I, D.
Evidence of title, see specific topics treating of the title or estate or of actions pertaining thereto, e. g., Ejectment.
Indictability—
Criminality of acts, see Crimes.

INDICTMENT AND PROSECUTION.

TREATS of the general law of criminal procedure, including the indictment or information, evidence and trial practice, sentence and review. The substantive law of crimes is treated in Crimes and Punishments and the law of arrest and preliminary examination and bail in Arrest, Commitment and Bail. For reasons of convenience several of the crimes have been given a separate treatment in specific topics, to wit, Assault and Battery; Combinations and Monopolies; Fish and Game; Food; Health; Homicide; Intoxicating Liquors; Larceny; Libel; Nuisances; Rape; Seduction. In the foregoing topics matters peculiar to them only are treated, while matters of general applicability are to be found in this topic. For matters peculiar to crimes other than those just mentioned see specific sections throughout this topic.

Analysis.

I. IN GENERAL; INDICTMENTS AND INFORMATIONS (§§ 1-81).
II. TIME FOR PROSECUTION; LIMITATIONS (§§ 82-84).
III. JURISDICTION AND PLACE FOR PROSECUTION; VENUE AND CHANGE (§§ 85-100).
IV. PREPARATORY AND PRELIMINARY MATTERS (§§ 101-103).
V. ARRAIGNMENT AND PLEAS (§§ 104-120).
VI. POSTPONEMENTS OR CONTINUANCES (§§ 121-126).
VII. DISMISSAL OR NOLLE PROSEQUI (§ 127).
VIII. EVIDENCE (§§ 128-324w).
IX. TRIAL AND TRIAL PRACTICE (§§ 325-474).
X. NEW TRIAL AND MOTION IN ARREST (§§ 475-483).
XI. SENTENCE AND JUDGMENT, AND EXECUTION THEREOF (§§ 484-499).
XII. RECORD OR MINUTES AND COMMITMENT (§§ 500-506).
XIII. COSTS AND FEES (§§ 507-509).
XIV. SAVING QUESTIONS FOR REVIEW; EXCEPTIONS (§§ 510-532).
XV. HARMLESS ERROR AND GROUND FOR REVERSAL (§§ 533-567).
XVI. REVIEW (§§ 568-640).
XVII. PROCEEDINGS AFTER REVIEW (§§ 641-644).
XVIII. TRIALS BEFORE JUSTICES AND MINOR COURTS (§§ 645-669).

I. In general; indictments and informations.

A. Nature of Prosecution, Finding, Filing, and Formal Requisites of Charge.

§ 1. Nature and propriety of criminal prosecution.
§ 2. Parties to prosecution.
§ 3. Proper mode and form of accusation; indictment or information.
§ 4. Preliminary accusation, arrest, examination, and commitment.
§ 5. ——As basis for information.
§ 6. Information based on lost commitment.
§ 7. Grand jury and proceedings before it.
§ 8. Proper persons to make complaint.
§ 9. ——Adultery.
§ 10. Signing and verifying informations.
§ 11. ——Sufficiency of verification.
§ 12. ——Jurat and signature to same.
§ 13. Time and term for filing.
§ 14. Conformity of information to examination and commitment.
§ 15. ——Variance in particulars of crime.
§ 16. ——Addition of counts for included or varying aspects of offense.
§ 17. Averments or recitals as to preliminary proceedings.
§ 18. Joint and separate indictments or informations.
§ 19. Duplicates and copies of information or indictment.
§ 20. Indorsement of names of witnesses.
§ 21. ——Adding or striking off names.

B. Substance and Requisites of Accusing Part.

§ 22. In general; matters presumed or judicially known.
§ 23. Requisites and sufficiency of averments.
§ 24. Averments of venue or place.
§ 25. Averments as to time.
§ 26. Averment as to feloniousness or unlawfulness, knowledge, and intent.
§ 27. Describing persons and corporations.
§ 28. Describing and laying title to property.
§ 29. Describing papers and documents.
§ 30. Averments as to foreign or technical words.
§ 31. Description of crime collateral to that charged.
§ 32. Negativing exceptions.
§ 33. Averments as to aiding and abetting.
§ 34. Crimes by convicts in prison.
§ 35. Averments as to previous convictions.
§ 36. Concluding words.
§ 37. Particularity and details.
§ 38. Bills of particulars.
§ 39. Statutory offenses.
§ 40. Averments in words of statute.
§ 41. Sufficiency and completeness of statutory averments.
§ 42. ——Crimes not fully described in statutes.
§ 43. For specific statutory and common-law crimes.
§ 43a. Abandonment and desertion.
§ 43a. Adultery.

§ 43a. Arson and statutory burnings, attempts and solicitations.
§ 43a. Assault and battery.
§ 43b. Banking crimes.
§ 43b. Bigamy and polygamy.
§ 43b. Bribery, embracery and corruption of agents.
§ 43b. Burglary, breakings and attempts.
§ 43b. ——Possession of burglars' tools.
§ 43c. Conspiracies.
§ 43c. Cruelty.
§ 43d. Disorderly conduct and persons.
§ 43d. Disorderly houses.
§ 43e. Election crimes.
§ 43e. Embezzlements.
§ 43e. Escape, prison breach, and aiding escapes.
§ 43f. False personations and disguises.
§ 43f. False pretenses and cheats.
§ 43f. Forgery and counterfeiting and uttering.
§ 43f. Criminal frauds and obtaining signatures.
§ 43g. Gaming and betting.
§ 43h. Homicides and assaults to murder or do great bodily harm.
§ 43i. Incest.
§ 43i. Indecency and obscenity.
§ 43 l. Larceny and statutory stealings.
§ 43 l. Lewd and lascivious cohabitation.
§ 43m. Malicious mischief or injury to property.
§ 43o. Obstructing justice and contempts.
§ 43o. Official malfeasance or misconduct.
§ 43p. Perjury and subornation.
§ 43p. Prize fighting.
§ 43r. Rape and assaults and attempts thereat.
§ 43r. Receiving stolen goods.
§ 43r. Removal or spoliation of records.
§ 43r. Resisting or obstructing officers.
§ 43r. Robbery and assaults with intent to rob.
§ 43s. Seduction.
§ 43t. Threats.
§ 43u. Unlawful practice of profession or unlicensed business.

C. JOINDER AND SEPARATION; COUNTS AND ELECTION.

§ 44. Joint indictment of several persons.
§ 45. Propriety of joinder of counts and charges.
§ 46. Necessity and occasion for election.
§ 47. Time for election.
§ 48. Manner and indicia of election.

D. DEFECTS, OBJECTIONS AND AMENDMENTS.

§ 49. Grounds and materiality of objections.
§ 50. ——Defects and irregularities in preliminary proceedings.
§ 51. ——Misnomer or misdescription.
§ 52. ——Grammatical and verbal defects.
§ 53. ——Clerical errors of time and impossible dates.
§ 54. Surplusage, what constitutes.

§ 55. Good and bad counts in same indictment.
§ 56. Intendments and presumptions in aid of indictment or information.
§ 57. ——As to preliminary proceedings.
§ 58. ——Conclusiveness of magistrate's return.
§ 59. Mode of objecting and time for objection.
§ 60. ——Defects in grand jury or proceedings before it.
§ 61. ——Defects and irregularities in preliminary examination and commitment.
§ 62. Specification and particularity in objections.
§ 63. Grounds and office of motion to quash.
§ 64. Motion to quash after plea to merits.
§ 65. Waiver and cure of defects and objections.
§ 66. Discretion to quash or put to election.
§ 67. Effect of quashal; discharge or repleader.
§ 68. Power to ask and make amendments.
§ 69. Proper and permissible amendments.
§ 70. ——As to time, place or venue.
§ 71. ——Amendments to meet or conform to proofs.
§ 72. ——Formal amendments after verdict.

E. Issues, Proof and Variance; Lesser Degrees and Included Offenses.

§ 73. Material issues and necessary proofs.
§ 74. Construction and intendment of averments.
§ 75. ——Of common-law forms of accusation.
§ 76. ——As to duplicity.
§ 77. Variance of averments and proofs.
§ 78. ——As to time.
§ 79. ——As to principalship or accessary part.
§ 80. ——Proof of lesser or included crime.
§ 81. ——Proof of greater crime than charged.

II. Time for prosecution; limitations.

§ 82. In general.
§ 83. Commencement of prosecution and computation of time.
§ 84. Suspension of limitations.

III. Jurisdiction and place for prosecution; venue and change.

§ 85. Jurisdiction in general.
§ 86. ——Transitory and continuing crimes.
§ 87. ——Federal crimes and offenses on international waters
§ 88. ——Acts amounting to both federal and state crimes.
§ 89. Jurisdiction between circuit and minor courts.
§ 90. ——Between police and recorder's courts.
§ 91. Extent and subjects of magistrates' jurisdiction.
§ 92. ——Approval of prosecution by public prosecutor
§ 93. ——Security for costs by complainant.
§ 94. Venue of crime and prosecution.
§ 95. ——Offenses committed on or near boundary l
§ 96. ——Offenses not begun and completed in same
§ 97. ——Offenses committed on Great Lakes.
§ 98. Change of venue.

§ 99. ——Application, showing and procedure thereon.
§ 100. Transfer and certification to other court for trial.

IV. Preparatory and preliminary matters.

§ 101. In general.
§ 102. Appointment of counsel and objections for disqualification.
§ 103. Production and inspection of documents.

V. Arraignment and pleas.

§ 104. In general; necessity of arraignment and plea.
§ 105. Effect of failure to plead or absence of plea.
§ 106. ——Entry of plea by order of court.
§ 107. ——Plea implied from going to merits.
§ 108. Time for pleas.
§ 109. Pleas in abatement.
§ 110. Pleas of former jeopardy or bar.
§ 111. Demurrer and replication to pleas.
§ 112. Pleas of guilty.
§ 113. ——Voluntariness and coercion or inducement.
§ 114. ——Examination as to voluntariness of plea.
§ 115. Matters in issue under plea in bar.
§ 116. ——Under plea in abatement.
§ 117. Matters waived by plea or trial to merits.
§ 118. ——Matters of abatement by pleading over.
§ 119. Scope of and matters admitted by plea of guilty.
§ 120. Withdrawal of pleas and pleading anew.

VI. Postponements or continuances.

§ 121. In general; grounds and discretion.
§ 122. Application and showing.
§ 123. Showing as to necessity for further time.
§ 124. Showing as to expected proofs.
§ 125. Admission of facts to avoid continuance.
§ 126. Time of postponement and conditions and terms imposable.

VII. Dismissal or nolle prosequi.

§ 127. In general.

VIII. Evidence.

A. JUDICIAL NOTICE, PRESUMPTIONS AND BURDEN OF PROOF.

§ 128. Judicial notice in general.
§ 129. ——As to laws and ordinances.
§ 130. Presumptions.
§ 131. ——As to innocence or guilt.
§ 132. ——As to complicity of parties in transaction.
§ 133. ——As to knowledge of law or facts.
§ 134. ——As to intent or malice.
§ 135. ——As to foreign laws.
§ 136. ——As to regularity, verity, normality, and performance of duty.
§ 137. ——As to names and identities.

§ 138. Inferences on inferences or presumptic
§ 139. Inference from failure to testify or add
§ 140. ——From failure of accused to testify
§ 141. Inference from incriminating possessio
§ 142. Burden of proof and shifting of burden.
§ 143. ——As to sanity or insanity of accused
§ 144. ——As to intent.
§ 145. ——As to justification, excuse or othe

B. RELEVANCY AND COMPETENCY.

1. In general.

§ 146. Relevancy and materiality in general.
§ 147. Facts relevant to facts in evidence.
§ 148. Details of entire transaction.
§ 149. Complementary parts of entire comm
§ 150. Things seen on view as evidence.
§ 151. Competency in general and privileged
§ 152. Testimony by accused.
§ 153. ——Compulsory self-crimination.
§ 154. Official knowledge or state secrets.
§ 155. Evidence obtained or discovered by i
§ 156. Testimony of witnesses not named ir dictment or information.
§ 157. Testimony of witnesses who violated
§ 158. Negative testimony.
§ 159. Admissibility for limited or specific p
§ 160. Res inter alios acta.
§ 161. Similar but unrelated or disconnecte § 162. Antecedent and subsequent facts and § 163. ——Financial condition and resource § 164. ——Experiments and comparisons a
§ 165. Other offenses or criminal acts by a
§ 166. ——As showing system, plan, knowl
§ 167. ——Other killings, attempts and ass
§ 168. Other relations and acts of parties i § 169. ——Sexual relations of accused wit of crime.
§ 170. ——Sexual relations of subject with
§ 171. Other crimes by accomplices.
§ 172. Incriminating facts and appearances.
§ 173. ——Foot prints, blood stains, and th
§ 174. ——Possession of fruits of crime mission.
§ 175. Evidence to prove particular facts licti or causes.
§ 176. ——Marriage or relationship.
§ 177. ——Identity and qualities of thing
§ 178. ——Identity of accused or other p
§ 179. ——Sanity or insanity.
§ 180. ——Alibi or whereabouts of person
§ 181. ——Knowledge, intent and motive,
§ 182. Rebutting and explaining facts.
§ 183. ——Of defendant's unsworn statem

2. Best and secondary evidence.

§ 184. In general; what constitutes best and secondary.
§ 185. Statutes and ordinances.
§ 186. Judicial proceedings and writings.
§ 187. Private writings and documents.
§ 188. Admissibility of and occasions for secondary evidence.
§ 189. ——Public records and writings beyond jurisdiction.
§ 190. ——Lost or destroyed records and writings.
§ 191. Necessity and sufficiency of notice to produce.
§ 192. Foundation proof of loss, destruction or inaccessibility.
§ 193. Competency and sufficiency of secondary proofs.
§ 194. Degrees in secondary evidence.

3. Parol or extrinsic evidence to vary or show terms of writings.

§ 195. In general.

4. Conclusions and nonexpert opinions.

§ 196. In general; what constitute conclusions and facts.
§ 197. Relevancy and materiality of opinion or belief.
§ 198. Questions or subjects for nonexpert conclusions.
§ 199. ——One's own age, thoughts and intents.
§ 200. ——Ultimate issues in case.
§ 201. Knowledge or observation as basis for opinion.
§ 202. ——Experiments made after the fact.

5. Expert opinions.

§ 203. In general; proper subjects and scope.
§ 204. Relevancy and materiality of opinion.
§ 205. Opinion on ultimate facts of case.
§ 206. Cause of death and pathological and physiological questions.
§ 207. Persons competent as experts.
§ 208. ——On bodily conditions, causes and effects.
§ 209. ——On agricultural, horticultural and veterinary questions.
§ 210. ——On foreign laws.
§ 211. ——Preliminary proofs of competency.
§ 212. ——Competency as question for court.
§ 213. Proper basis for expert opinions.
§ 214. Form and propriety of questions.
§ 215. ——Of hypothetical question.
§ 216. Form, responsiveness and construction of opinion.

6. Hearsay and declarations out of court and res gestæ.

§ 217. In general; what is hearsay.
§ 218. Admissibility to show mental state of declarant.
§ 219. ——To show knowledge, intent or motive.
§ 220. ——Threats and ill feeling.
§ 221. ——To show guilty consciousness.
§ 222. Former testimony or proceedings by accused.
§ 223. Letters or other writings as declarations.
§ 224. Association and conduct with accomplices.
§ 225. Self-serving acts and declarations.
§ 226. Declarations, acts and conversations of third persons.

§ 227. ——To show knowledge of or mental eff
§ 228. ——To show information or reason for a § 229. ——Accusing defendant of crime.
§ 230. Declarations of coconspirators, accompl ants.
§ 231. ——Flight or resistance to arrest by ac
§ 232. Complaints and statements by victim or § 233. ——In rape cases and indecent assaults
§ 234. ——Belated complaints and reasons for
§ 235. ——Detailed statements by victim.
§ 236. Former testimony by witnesses.
§ 237. ——Testimony of accomplices and cod
§ 238. Foundation proofs.
§ 239. Circumstances, time or place of declara
§ 240. Explanation and rebuttal of declaratior
§ 241. Res gestæ acts and declarations.
§ 242. ——Of possession or receipt of stolen
§ 243. ——Acts and statements of third pers
§ 244. ——Acts and statements of accomplic
§ 245. ——Acts and statements of victims or § 246. ——Acts and statements of woman kil

7. Admissions and confessions.

§ 247. In general; nature and form of confes
§ 248. Writings, prints or records as admissic
§ 249. Admission by testimony or pleas in ot
§ 250. Implied or tacit admissions.
§ 251. ——False or fabricated exculpations.
§ 252. ——Pleas of guilty to minor offenses.
§ 253. ——Falsification or suppression of evi
§ 254. ——Flight, concealment or resistance
§ 255. ——Surrender or abstention from flig
§ 256. Relevancy of admission to issues.
§ 257. Voluntariness; inducement or coercic
§ 258. ——Statements made to officers.
§ 259. ——Statements by mistake or not m
§ 260. ——Statements obtained by trick or
§ 261. ——As court or jury question.
§ 262. Admissions by accomplices or privies.
§ 263. Admissions by prosecuting witness.
§ 264. Rebuttal and explanation of admissic
§ 265. Foundation proofs.
§ 266. ——Proof of corpus delicti.

8. Character and reputation.

§ 267. In general; character of accused.
§ 268. Relevancy to issues.
§ 269. General reputation or personal knov
§ 270. Rumor and common talk.
§ 271. Single and specific instances.
§ 272. Customs and habits of persons.
§ 273. Character of associates, victims and § 274. Reputation as to status, incorporati cial character.
§ 275. Reputation of place or thing.
§ 276. Rebuttal of character evidence.

9. Evidence addressed to the senses; real evidence.

§ 277. In general; articles subject of or connected with crime.
§ 278. Incriminating articles; burglars' tools.
§ 279. Comparisons of handwriting or documents by jury.
§ 280. Exhibition of person or of corporal injuries.
§ 281. Demonstrations and tests by accused or witness.

10. Documents as evidence.

§ 282. In general; relevancy and materiality.
§ 283. Documents subject of or connected with the crime.
§ 284. Admissibility of whole or parts of document.
§ 285. Documents for comparison of writing.
§ 286. Public records.
§ 287. ——Judicial records and transcripts.
§ 288. ——Deed and title records.
§ 289. Records of preliminary examination.
§ 290. Transcripts of depositions given on preliminary hearing.
§ 291. ——Reading, signatures and certification.
§ 292. Coroner's minutes and verdicts.
§ 293. Certificates of search and contents of records.
§ 294. Certificates of marriage, birth or death.
§ 295. Statute books and law reports to prove laws.
§ 296. Private books and writings.
§ 297. Medical and other scientific books.
§ 298. Maps and diagrams.
§ 299. Pictures and portraits.
§ 300. Authentication and foundation proofs.

C. QUANTITY, DEGREE AND SUFFICIENCY OF PROOF.

§ 301. In general; overcoming reasonable doubt.
§ 302. Number of witnesses required.
§ 303. Weight and credibility.
§ 304. Conclusiveness of proofs.
§ 305. Circumstantial proofs.
§ 306. Corpus delicti.
§ 307. Venue or place.
§ 308. Responsibility or complicity of accused.
§ 309. Specific intent or knowledge and other qualifying elements
§ 310. Defensive proofs; particular defenses.
§ 311. Conclusiveness and effect of presumptions.
§ 312. Expert and opinion evidence.
§ 313. Confessions and admissions.
§ 314. ——Necessity for and sufficiency of corroboration.
§ 315. Unsworn statements on trial.
§ 316. Character evidence and reputation.
§ 317. Accomplice testimony; corroboration.
§ 318. Conflicting and contradictory testimony.
§ 319. Sufficiency of proofs of particular facts; identity, title, incorporation, etc.
§ 320. ——Alibi or whereabouts.
§ 321. ——Sanity, insanity or mental incapacity.
§ 322. ——Possession of incriminating articles.
§ 323. Proof of lesser and included offenses.

§ 324. Particular offenses; necessar
§ 324a. Abandonment and c
§ 324a. Abduction and enti
§ 324a. Adultery.
§ 324a. Arson and burnings
§ 324a. Assault and battery
§ 324b. Bigamy and polyga
§ 324b. Bribery, embracery
§ 324b. Burglary, breaking § 324b. ——Unlawful poss
§ 324c. Conspiracy.
§ 324d. Disorderly houses
§ 324e. Embezzlement.
§ 324e. Extortion.
§ 324f. False pretenses an § 324f. Forgery, counterfe
§ 324f. Criminal frauds.
§ 324h. Homicide and hon
§ 324i. Indecency and ob
§ 324i. Insurance, unlawfi
§ 324 l. Larceny.
§ 324m. Malicious obstruct
§ 324m. Medicine, unlawfu
§ 324p. Perjury, subornati
§ 324p. Poor law offenses.
§ 324r. Rape and assaults
§ 324r. Receiving or conc
§ 324r. Robbery and assa
§ 324s. Seduction.
§ 324w. Weapons, carryin

IX. Trial and trial practice.

A. NATURE, TIME, MODE AND CONDUCT.

§ 325. General nature and modes
§ 326. Separate and joint trials.
§ 327. Publicity of trial.
§ 328. Presence of accused, cour
§ 329. Terms and time for trial.
§ 330. Attendance and function officers.
§ 331. Presence of improper pe
§ 332. Suspension or adjournme
§ 333. Interruptions and distrac
§ 334. Stipulations and admissi
§ 335. View of locus by court o
§ 336. Statement or testimony b

B. RECEPTION AND EXCLUSION OF EVID

§ 337. In general; regulating a § 338. Separation and exclusio
§ 339. Confrontation of witnes
§ 340. ——Documentary and d
§ 341. Offers and introduction
§ 342. Offer of incompetent wi

§ 343. Questions tending to disparage or suggest improprieties.
§ 344. Evidence capable of improper use.
§ 345. Evidence not offered on preliminary hearing.
§ 346. Evidence admissible for restricted purposes.
§ 347. ——Reception with caution or limitations on purpose.
§ 348. Repeating offers and questions after ruling.
§ 349. Duty of state to call witness or adduce proofs.
§ 350. ——Accomplices and witnesses under indictment for same crime.
§ 351. ——Production of witnesses without swearing or examining.
§ 352. Calling witnesses not named on information.
§ 353. Objections and rulings on offers or questions.
§ 354. ——Specification of grounds.
§ 355. Objections to witnesses.
§ 356. Scope and subjects of defendant's evidence.
§ 357. Scope and subjects of rebuttal.
§ 358. Order and sequence of proofs.
§ 359. Reception of evidence out of order.
§ 360. ——Testimony of witness before proofs of qualification.
§ 361. ——Evidence as to guilt before proof of corpus delicti.
§ 362. ——Matters in chief, in defense and in rebuttal.
§ 363. ——Impeaching or corroborating proofs.
§ 364. Reception on promise to supply connecting evidence.
§ 365. Exclusion of evidence offered out of time.
§ 366. Striking out evidence.
§ 367. Recalling witnesses for further examination.
§ 368. Opening case for further proofs.
§ 369. Taking testimony by depositions.

C. ARGUMENTS, REMARKS AND CONDUCT OF COUNSEL, JUDGE AND OTHERS.

§ 370. In general; regulation and control.
§ 371. Time allowable to counsel.
§ 372. Opening statements.
§ 373. Law arguments and colloquies in presence of jury.
§ 374. Final arguments to jury.
§ 375. ——Appeals to jurors' knowledge or prejudice.
§ 376. ——Abusive and inflammatory language.
§ 377. ——Abuse and disparagement of witness.
§ 378. ——Assertions of personal knowledge, belief or experience.
§ 379. ——Comment on extraneous matters.
§ 380. ——Allusion to other offenses and prosecutions.
§ 381. ——Assumption of facts not in proof.
§ 382. ——Treating facts as admitted.
§ 383. ——Comment on evidence.
§ 384. ——Comment on inferences.
§ 385. ——Commenting on failure to testify or to adduce proofs.
§ 386. ——Comment on witnesses and credibility.
§ 387. ——Misstatement of law or evidence.
§ 388. ——Reading statutes and decisions.
§ 389. ——Reading from depositions and documents.
§ 390. Answering and closing arguments.
§ 391. ——Provoked or invited arguments.
§ 392. Making argument after waiving same.
§ 393. Insulting and intimidating witnesses.

§ 394. Interruptions of counsel.
§ 395. Remarks and conduct by judge.

D. Province of Court and Jury; Questions of Fa Issue from Jury.

§ 396. In general; duty of jury to follow inst
§ 397. Considering and weighing evidence.
§ 398. Particular questions and crimes.
§ 399. Directing verdict.
§ 400. ——Practice and procedure on directio § 401. Demurrer or objection to reception of

E. Instructions and Submission Thereof.

§ 402. In general; duty to instruct and necess
§ 403. Instructions on court's own motion.
§ 404. General requisites and scope of charg § 405. ——On presumption of innocence and
§ 406. ——On reasonable doubt.
§ 407. ——On burden and sufficiency of pr
§ 408. ——On alibi.
§ 409. ——On insanity or intoxication.
§ 410. ——On participation, aiding and abe
§ 411. Form, phrasing and manner of charg
§ 412. ——Use of emphatic words.
§ 413. ——Narrative recitals and quotations
§ 414. ——Argumentative and hypothetical
§ 415. Construction and propriety of charge
§ 416. ——Effect to cure erroneous part or § 417. Manner, sufficiency and time of requ
§ 418. ——Numerous and frivolous reques
§ 419. Propriety of grant, denial or modific
§ 420. ——Deviation from exact words or § 421. ——Marking as "given," "refused,"
§ 422. Applicability and conformity to issu
§ 423. ——Divergent theories of case.
§ 424. ——On lesser degrees and included
§ 425. ——Charging on matters not in ev
§ 426. ——Ignoring parts of case or of evi
§ 427. Assumptions and misstatements of § 428. ——Allusion to statement as "conf
§ 429. Encroaching on jury province.
§ 430. Charging on drawing inferences an § 431. ——On inferences from flight, conc incriminating possessions.
§ 432. ——On failure or refusal to testify
§ 433. Charging on weighing and testing
§ 434. ——On circumstantial evidence.
§ 435. ——Uncontradicted evidence or co
§ 436. ——On expert and opinion evidenc
§ 437. ——Interest, bias, or knowledge a § 438. ——Testimony of policemen and § 439. ——Accomplice's testimony.
§ 440. ——Testimony of accused.
§ 441. ——Impeached or falsified testimo
§ 442. Emphasizing or singling out part

§ 443. ——Charging on testimony of particular witnesses.
§ 444. Charges on confessions and admissions.
§ 445. Charges on character and effect of character evidence.
§ 446. Cautions and admonitions to jury.
§ 447. ——As to agreement and unanimity.
§ 448. ——As to personal feelings or judgment of jurors.
§ 449. ——Against misuse of evidence for improper purpose.
§ 450. ——Against consideration of evidence ruled out or conditionally admitted.
§ 451. ——Against improper argument or remarks.
§ 452. Additional or repeated instructions after retirement.
§ 453. ——Further charge as to reaching agreement.
§ 454. ——Presence of accused or counsel.
§ 455. Instructions on particular offenses.
§ 455a. Abandonment.
§ 455a. Abduction and enticement.
§ 455a. Adultery.
§ 455a. Arson and burnings.
§ 455b. Bribery and corruption.
§ 455b. Burglary.
§ 455d. Disorderly houses and persons.
§ 455e. Embezzlement.
§ 455f. False pretenses and cheats.
§ 455f. Forgery, counterfeiting and uttering.
§ 455h. Health law violations.
§ 455h. Homicide and homicidal assaults.
§ 455i. Indecency and obscenity.
§ 455 l. Larceny.
§ 455m. Medicine, unlawful practice or acts.
§ 455m. Mutilating or maiming animals.
§ 455o. Obstructing justice; resisting officers.
§ 455p. Perjury, subornation and false swearing.
§ 455r. Rape and assaults and attempts thereat.
§ 455s. Seduction.
§ 455t. Threats and blackmail.
§ 455w. Weapons, possession or misuse.

F. CUSTODY OF JURY, CONDUCT AND DELIBERATIONS.

§ 456. In general; privacy and seclusion.
§ 457. Custody and conduct during taking of view.
§ 458. Competency and disqualification of bailiff or sheriff.
§ 459. Intruding on or communicating with jury.
§ 460. Books, papers and exhibits in jury room.
§ 461. Tasting or testing substances in evidence.
§ 462. Communications with court after retirement.
§ 463. Return of jury into court.
§ 464. ——Rereading testimony.
§ 465. ——Presence of accused or counsel.
§ 466. Urging or coercing verdict.
§ 467. Discharging jury.

G. VERDICT AND RENDITION AND RECEPTION.

§ 468. In general.
§ 469. Announcement and polling of jury.

§ 470. Specifications and findings.
§ 471. Recommendations to mercy.
§ 472. Several counts and included offenses.
§ 473. Construction and effect of verdict.
§ 474. Amendment and correction of verdict.

X. New trial and motion in arrest.

§ 475. New trial in general.
§ 476. Grounds and propriety of new trial.
§ 477. ——Verdict against evidence or unsuppc
§ 478. ——Newly-discovered evidence.
§ 479. ——Discretion to allow or deny.
§ 480. Time for motion and action thereon.
§ 481. Motion and amendments.
§ 482. Affidavits and showing for new trial.
§ 483. Arrest of judgment.

XI. Sentence and judgment, and execution thereof.

§ 484. In general; power to sentence and limi
§ 485. Time and stage of trial for sentence.
§ 486. Examination of accused before sentenc
§ 487. Showing to ascertain proper measure c
§ 488. Motion for and judgment of discharge.
§ 489. Requisites and validity of sentence.
§ 490. ——Conformity to indictment and ver
§ 491. ——On plea of guilty.
§ 492. ——Conviction under two or more cot
§ 493. ——Indeterminate sentences.
§ 494. Suspension of sentence or parts there
§ 495. Cumulative, concurrent and successiv
§ 496. Construction and effect of sentence.
§ 497. ——Indeterminate terms and sentenc
§ 498. Correction, amendment and resentenc
§ 499. Execution of sentence and stay.

XII. Record or minutes and commitment.

§ 500. Requisites and sufficiency in general.
§ 501. For sentences to houses of correction
§ 502. For augmented punishment of habitu
§ 503. For sentence after breach of parole.
§ 504. Showing as to examination on plea
§ 505. Record of dismissal or nolle.
§ 506. Warrant of commitment; mittimus.

XIII. Costs and fees.

§ 507. In general; who liable.
§ 508. Fees and amounts allowable.
§ 509. Taxation and retaxation.

XIV. Saving questions for review; exceptions.

§ 510. In general; necessity of objection or § 511. Defects in indictment or informati ceedings.

§ 512. Disqualification of judge, counsel or assistant to prosecuting attorney.
§ 513. Time of trial or denial of continuance.
§ 514. Admission or exclusion of evidence.
§ 515. Volunteered answers.
§ 516. Defects in proof.
§ 517. Errors in examination of witnesses.
§ 518. Errors in order of proof or reception of evidence.
§ 519. Failure to call state's witnesses.
§ 520. Erroneous argument or conduct of counsel.
§ 521. Failure to charge or error in charge.
§ 522. Questions on custody and conduct of jury.
§ 523. Sufficiency of objections; specificness.
§ 524. Necessity and sufficiency of ruling on question.
§ 525. Necessity of renewing objection.
§ 526. Necessity and office of exceptions.
§ 527. ——Errors affecting fairness of trial; manifest injustice.
§ 528. Sufficiency of exception.
§ 529. Construction and meaning of exceptions.
§ 530. Questions preservable by new trial motion.
§ 531. Waiver of errors.
§ 532. Waiver and abandonment of objections or exceptions.

XV. Harmless error and ground for reversal.

§ 533. In general; technical or unsubstantial errors.
§ 534. Aggravation or mitigation of error by other matters or strength of case.
§ 535. Wrong reasons for correct decision or ruling.
§ 536. Errors favoring accused.
§ 537. Self committed or invited error.
§ 538. Particular errors and defects in procedure.
§ 539. ——In formation of jury and rulings on challenges.
§ 540. ——Admission of improper evidence or witnesses.
§ 541. ——Improper evidence favorable to accused.
§ 542. ——Improper exclusion of evidence.
§ 543. ——Volunteered testimony.
§ 544. ——Improper examination and cross-examination or offers of proof.
§ 545. ——Omission of or defect in proofs.
§ 546. ——Improper order of proofs.
§ 547. ——Erroneous restrictions on argument.
§ 548. ——Improper arguments, remarks and misconduct in trial.
§ 549. ——Instructions and refusals or omissions to instruct.
§ 550. ——Erroneous practice in giving charge.
§ 551. Curing errors.
§ 552. ——Admission of improper evidence by other proofs.
§ 553. ——Admission of secondary evidence by reception of primary.
§ 554. ——Adduction of similar proofs by respondent.
§ 555. ——Admissions or concessions curing improper evidence.
§ 556. ——Improper questioning of accused by suggestion of privilege.
§ 557. ——Harmless answer to improper question.
§ 558. ——Improper rejection of proofs by other proofs.
§ 559. ——Exclusion of evidence cured by reception or offer to receive later.

§ 560. ——Refusal to call witnesses by defendant'
§ 561. ——Errors in evidence by striking out.
§ 562. ——Errors in evidence by corrective inst
§ 563. ——Opening statement or want of it cure charge.
§ 564. ——Improper remarks and arguments cur
§ 565. ——Improper comment on failure to testify by charge to disregard.
§ 566. ——Instructions or refusal to charge cure or other charge.
§ 567. Cure of errors by verdict rendering them

XVI. Review.

A. Mode and Right of Review.

§ 568. In general.
§ 569. Error or exceptions.
§ 570. Error or mandamus or habeas corpus.
§ 571. Certiorari.
§ 572. ——Necessity for final judgment.
§ 573. Reservation or certification of question.
§ 574. Reviewable decisions and judgments.
§ 575. Cases and questions reservable.
§ 576. Who entitled; review at public instance.
§ 577. Jurisdiction and power to review.
§ 578. Bail and recognizance pending review.
§ 579. Waiver of objection to mode of review.

B. Procedure for Error and Matters Pending Revie

§ 580. In general; application, leave and issua
§ 581. Procedure for review on exceptions.
§ 582. Authority and functions of attorneys.
§ 583. Calendaring and setting for hearing.
§ 584. Dismissal or abatement of cause.
§ 585. Supersedeas and stay, transfer of jur pending review.
§ 586. Assigning errors.
§ 587. ——Specifications, grounds and reason
§ 588. ——Citation of error by page in record
§ 589. Briefs and arguments.

C. Record and Bill of Exceptions.

§ 590. In general.
§ 591. Contents and sufficiency of record pro
§ 592. ——Of bill of exceptions.
§ 593. Preparation of bills.
§ 594. Settling and certification of record an § 595. Showing as to matters of error.
§ 596. Showing of requests, objections and e
§ 597. Showing of new trial motion and orde
§ 598. Printing, form and typographical styl
§ 599. Record on exceptions before sentence
§ 600. Return to certiorari.
§ 601. Additions, amendments and certiorari

D. REVIEW AND JUDGMENT ON ERROR.

§ 602. In general; scope of review.
§ 603. ——On exceptions.
§ 604. Restriction to record and points regularly saved.
§ 605. ——Extraneous papers or affidavits attached to record.
§ 606. Doubtful errors.
§ 607. Unnecessary or immaterial questions.
§ 608. Points already settled.
§ 609. Points not briefed or argued.
§ 610. Points made but not insisted on.
§ 611. Construction and effect of record.
§ 612. ——Of information, indictment, verdict or sentence.
§ 613. ——Of charge as set out.
§ 614. ——Conclusiveness and contradiction of record.
§ 615. ——Consideration of record as a whole.
§ 616. Conclusiveness and effect of return to certiorari.
§ 617. Presumptions on the record.
§ 618. ——As to preliminary proceedings and information or indictment.
§ 619. ——As to admissibility or impropriety of evidence.
§ 620. ——As to sufficiency of proofs.
§ 621. ——As to argument and conduct of counsel and court.
§ 622. ——As to propriety of charge.
§ 623. ——As to conduct of jury.
§ 624. ——As to verdict.
§ 625. ——As to formalities of imposing sentence.
§ 626. ——As to examination on plea of guilty.
§ 627. ——As to harmlessness or prejudice from error.
§ 628. Discretionary rulings and findings.
§ 629. ——On motion for change of venue.
§ 630. ——Amount and kind of punishment.
§ 631. ——Discharge of jury.
§ 632. ——Rulings on new trial motions.
§ 633. Verdicts and findings on evidence.
§ 634. ——On exceptions before judgment.
§ 635. Sufficiency of evidence.
§ 636. Grounds and propriety of remand for new trial.
§ 637. Correction of judgment without new trial.
§ 638. Reversal and remand for resentence.
§ 639. Reversal and discharge of accused.
§ 640. Decision and judgment on review by exceptions.

XVII. Proceedings after review.

§ 641. In general.
§ 642. Return of mandate and files.
§ 643. Subsequent review or writ of error.
§ 644. Discharge or recommitment of accused.

XVIII. Trials before justices and minor courts.

§ 645. In general; instituting prosecution.
§ 646. Complaint or accusation.
§ 647. ——Descriptions and allegations of the crime.
§ 648. ——Defects and objections.
§ 649. Appearance by and functions of prosecuting attorney.

§ 650. Arraignment and pleas and § 651. Continuances and postpone
§ 652. Jury trials and procedure
§ 653. Trials and evidence.
§ 654. Statements and arguments
§ 655. Verdicts.
§ 656. Sentence, judgment and e
§ 657. ——Binding out or appren
§ 658. Sentence to reformatory.
§ 659. Warrant of commitment.
§ 660. Proceedings to require se
§ 661. Costs and fees.
§ 662. Appeals.
§ 663. ——Bonds or recognizanc
§ 664. ——Questions reviewable
§ 665. ——Retrial on the facts.
§ 666. ——Judgment or relief on § 667. Retrial or sentence after r
§ 668. Certiorari.
§ 669. ——Review and judgmen

[Note. In this digest the topical arrangement of criminal matters is designed to embrace all criminal matters in a few topics, to wit, the general and substantive law of crimes in Crimes and Punishments, Prisons and Jails, Reformatories, Pardons and Paroles, and the procedural law in Arrest, Commitment and Bail, in Extradition, in Search and Seizure, and in Indictment and Prosecution. To this plan of treatment certain exceptions have been made because the crime and the tort were so similar as to make it advisable to combine them in one topic or because the crime was incident to regulation or because the volume of matter peculiar to the crime was great enough to require a separate topic. The crimes so excepted are treated in the following topics: Assault and Battery; Combinations and Monopolies; Fish and Game; Food; Health; Homicide; Intoxicating Liquors; Larceny; Libel and Slander; Nuisances; Rape; Seduction. Even in respect to these crimes the decisions that are general to criminal law and not peculiar have been treated in Crimes, I, or in Indictment and Prosecution.]

Search warrants and seizures, see Searches and Seizures.

Validity of laws questioned as infringing constitutional rights of persons accused of crime, see Constitutional Law, IX.

Right to jury trial, see Jury, I.

Privilege against self-crimination and immunity from prosecution on self-given testimony, see Examination of Witnesses, IV; Witnesses, I.

Admissibility of self-given criminating testimony, see post §§ 152, 153.

Form
Time
Proc
Qua
Civi
Prev
Indi
I.
A.
I)
§ 1.
Cri
Wh
Na

Actions of debt for penalties, see Penalties.
Debt for penalty for liquor law violations, see also Intoxicating Liquors, VI, B; Penalties.
Nature of bastardy proceedings, see Bastards § 4.
What regarded as criminal prosecutions within the law of malicious prosecution, see Malicious Prosecution, II.
What regarded as prosecutions triable by jury, see Jury, I.
Nature of proceedings for violations of municipal ordinances, see Municipal Corporations, XVI, B.
Right to jury trial dependent on nature of proceeding, see also Jury, I.
Indictment or information as improper mode of prosecuting for penalty for highway obstruction, see Highways § 193.
Enforcement by indictment and information of duty to keep highways in repair, see also Highways ¶ 1027.

¶ 1. A proceeding to punish an officer as for contempt in omitting to perform his duty is a summary criminal, and not a civil, proceeding.—Schwab v. Coots, 44 Mich. 463.

¶ 2. Proceedings under the Fraudulent Debtor Act are not criminal.—Bromley v. People, 7 Mich. 472, affirming decision below by equal division of the court; Johnson v. Maxon, 23 Mich. 129.

§ 2. Parties to prosecution.

Admission by prosecuting witness as incompetent statements by one not party to prosecutions, see post ¶¶ 1266, 1267.

¶ 3. The fact that a criminal proceeding for adultery must be commenced by the husband or wife of one of the guilty parties does not make the complainant a party to the case; the people and the defendant are the only parties.—Parsons v. People, 21 Mich. 509.

§ 3. Proper mode and form of accusation; indictment or information.

Institution of prosecutions before minor courts and justices, see post § 645.
Complaints for prosecution before justices and minor courts, see post § 646.
Sameness of rules controlling sufficiency of the charging part in both informations and indictments, see post § 23.
Necessity and occasion for bill of particulars, see ante § 38.
Applicability to informations of statutes regulating trials on indictments, see Comp. L. 1915, § 15763.
Provisions for accusation by information, see Comp. L. 1915, § 15760 et seq.

¶ 4. Where a statute creates a new offense, by prohibiting and making unlawful anything which was lawful before and appoints a particular remedy against such new offense by a sanctioned method of proceeding, such method must be pursued and no other.—People v. Smith, 118 Mich. 73.

¶ 5. Keeping a house of ill-fame was a criminal offense within the meaning of the clause in Const. 1835 requiring presentment of a grand jury.—Slaughter v. People, 2 D. 334.

¶ 6. Indictment is the appropriate remedy for keeping disorderly houses, both at the common law and under the statute, for the suppression of houses of ill-fame.—Welch v. Stowell, 2 D. 332.

¶ 7. A penalty of $100 for selling liquor without license was, under R. S. 1846, chap. 41, § 1, How. St., § 8437, recoverable by indictment; the fact that the statute confers power on justices to entertain civil proceedings did not exclude the criminal remedy.—People v. Hart, 1 Mich. 467.

¶ 8. No indictment lies to recover a penalty or forfeiture not amounting to $100 or more (Comp. L. 1857, § 5120, How. St., § 8437).—Pettinger v. People, 20 Mich. 336.

¶ 9. Indictment is the proper method of procedure for a violation of the state liquor law (How St., § 2283e; Pub. Acts, 1887, No. 313), as that law does not appoint a particular remedy or provide a particular method of procedure and either method is left open.—People v. Smith, 118 Mich. 73.

§ 4. Preliminary accusation, arrest, examination, and commitment.

Averments and recitals in information as to examination or waiver, see post § 17.
Time for objections and waiver by delay, see post § 61.
Waiver of preliminary examination by plea to merits, see post § 117.
Admissibility of record of preliminary examination on trial, see post § 289.
Best evidence of preliminary proceedings, see post § 186.
Offer of evidence on defense not touched in preliminary hearing, see post § 345.
Objections to complaint for trial before justice that warrant or other preliminaries were defective, see post ¶ 2958.
Arraignment of accused to plead to indictment, see post § 104 et seq.
Authority and grounds for arrest without or with warrant, see Arrest, I.
Immunity and privilege from arrest for crime, see Arrest, II.
The warrant for arrest, see Arrest, IV.
Nature of the preliminary examination, its purpose and scope and conduct, and the commitment thereon, see Arrest, VII.
Waiver of preliminary examination before magistrate, see Arrest § 29.
Necessity of reducing examination to writing, see Arrest § 36.
Findings on examination, and commitment, see Arrest § 37.
Certificate of commitment and return, see Arrest § 38.

Description and specification of crime in commitment for trial, see Arrest § 38.
Who is "fugitive from justice" indictable without preliminary examination, see Arrest ¶ 79.
Description of the offense in recognizance or bond, see Arrest § 45.

¶ 10. Where the testimony of a witness without whose testimony respondent could not have been held was not signed by him, the examination was fatally defective and did not warrant filing of information.—People v. Brock, 64 Mich. 691.

¶ 11. The point that the trial court in a murder case, in proceeding with the trial without previous examination of the respondent or waiver of examination by him, committed error, comes too late when it is not urged until the motion for a new trial.—People v. Sartori, 168 Mich. 308.

¶ 12. A complaint for maliciously threatening to accuse of crime, contrary to How. St., § 9093, shows sufficiently that the threats were verbal where it charges that respondent did "wilfully and maliciously, verbally threaten to accuse," etc.—People v. Whittemore, 102 Mich. 519.

¶ 13. The omission in a complaint for threats to accuse of crime state to whom the threats were made is not fatal.—People v. Whittemore, 102 Mich. 519.

¶ 14. Where a complaint for threatening to accuse of crime charges that the threat was made with the intent and purpose of procuring the signature of the person threatened against his will to a deed of land, it sufficiently sets out the intent.—People v. Whittemore, 102 Mich. 519.

¶ 15. An information for murder should be quashed where, on preliminary examination, the magistrate refused a request to determine whether the evidence showed probable cause to believe the offense committed was murder or only manslaughter, and his return affirmatively showed such request and refusal.—Yaner v. People, 34 Mich. 286.

§ 5. ——As basis for information.

Necessity that information be in conformity to commitment, see post § 14.
Information where commitment is lost, see post § 6.
Sufficiency of preliminary proceedings, see ante § 4.
Presumptions as to preliminary proceedings on motion to quash or other objection, see post § 56 et seq.
Waiver of examination or defect in it by going to trial, see post § 65.
Want of preliminary examination cured by withdrawing portion of charge, see post ¶ 318.
Verdict for lesser offense under preliminary hearing and commitment for greater, see post § 472.

Dismissal for want has been comm
probably guilty,
Making new inform
post § 67.
Statutory provision
liminary exami
Comp. L. 1915,
Duty of prosecutin formation on p commitment, se

¶ 16. An informa examination and
People, 37 Mich. 51

¶ 17. No inform a respondent not a less a preliminary or waived.—People
54; Washburn v. P
v. People, 13 Mich.
Mich. 497; Turner
Yaner v. People,
People, 37 Mich.
Mich. 248; O'Hara
Stuart v. People,
Kimball, 43 Mich.

¶ 18. One who ment for one crim mitted another fo tried, escaped and extradited on the mation for which imprisonment. H § 9555 he was a "
could be informed offense without h examination.—Peo

¶ 19. Where an before a magistrat
the accused is d cannot afterwards
him for the same
ple, 11 Mich. 327.

¶ 20. Until the determined that a a justice of the
and that there is the respondent g
certified to the ci
attorney has no
mation; and a re
made after such fi jurisdiction to pro
People v. Evans,

¶ 21. The pros court in order to ination was had for the purpose can have recours returned, and file
the evidence file
People, 33 Mich.

§ 6. Information

¶ 22. An infor
proof of the con

would show a preliminary examination, if the loss of such papers is sufficiently proved.—People v. Coffman, 59 Mich. 1.

§ 7. Grand jury and proceedings before it.

Time for objections or challenges and waiver by delay, see post § 60.
Immaterial defects in grand jury, see also post ¶ 314.
Pleas in abatement for defect in grand jury proceedings, see post § 109.
Calling and composition of the grand jury, see Grand Jury § 1.
Number composing grand jury, see Grand Jury § 1.
Effect of attorney at law sitting as grand juror, see Grand Jury ¶ 5.
Discharge and resummoning of grand jury, see Grand Jury § 3.
Invalidity of stipulation involving disclosure of grand jury proceedings, see Contracts § 53, ¶ 223.
Provisions as to proceedings before grand jury, see Comp. L. 1915, chap. 268.

¶ 23. An indictment cannot be found in a court where no grand jury can be summoned.—People v. Hart, 1 Mich. 467.

¶ 24. The action of a grand jury does not place the accused in jeopardy in any legal sense, and is merely preliminary to the trial upon the facts, and it is not in the interest of the justice that this proceeding should be treated in any captious or technical manner.—People v. Lay, 193 Mich. 476.

¶ 25. The mere fact that incompetent, improper, and irrelevant testimony was received and considered by the grand jury is not fatal to the indictment, unless such testimony is considered by them.—People v. Lay, 193 Mich. 17.

¶ 26. One who is not upon trial, but who is merely subpoenaed to appear before the grand jury, cannot take exception to his not having the assistance of counsel when interrogated.—People v. Lauder, 82 Mich. 109.

§ 8. Proper persons to make complaint.

For adultery, see post § 9.
Complaints for arrest, see also Arrest.
Competency of wife as complaining or ordinary witness against husband, or of husband against wife, see Witnesses, II, III.

¶ 27. Under the wife abandonment criminal statute, Act No. 144, Pub. Acts 1907, the provision that a superintendent of the poor or a county agent may make the complaint does not give them the exclusive power to do so, and a wife is competent to make the complaint.—People v. Stickle, 156 Mich. 557.

§ 9. ——Adultery.

Status of complainant in the prosecution, see also ante ¶ 3.
Averment as to person complaining, see post ¶ 145.
Dismissal for want of qualified informant, see post § 127.
Sufficiency of proof of relation of complaining witness to defendant in adultery, see post ¶ 1439.
Arrest for adultery on complaint by other than injured spouse or without such complaint as false arrest, see False Imprisonment ¶ 13.

¶ 28. Comp. L. 1871, § 7693 (How. St. § 9279), which forbids any prosecution for adultery except on complaint of the husband or wife, contemplates that the wife may proceed without her husband's consent.—People v. Knapp, 42 Mich. 267.

¶ 29. A complaint for adultery between a married woman and an unmarried man may be made by the woman's husband.—Bayliss v. People, 46 Mich. 221; People v. Davis, 52 Mich. 569.

¶ 30. Under How. St., § 9279, which provides that no prosecution for adultery shall be commenced but on the complaint of the husband or wife, a married man is subject to prosecution upon the complaint of the husband of the woman with whom he commits adultery.—Wilson v. Gratiot Circuit Judge, 104 Mich. 155.

§ 10. Signing and verifying informations.

Time for objections and waiver by delay, see post § 59.
Verification of informations, statutory requirements, see Comp. L. 1915, § 15762.

¶ 31. Whether, an information not signed by the prosecuting attorney, though verified by the affidavit signed by him, is valid, quære.—Mentor v. People, 30 Mich. 91.

¶ 32. In the absence of the prosecuting attorney in Wayne county the assistant prosecuting attorney may sign, verify and file criminal informations; since by Laws 1885, Act No. 109, p. 111, he is enabled to discharge all functions and perform all duties of his superior.—People v. Trombley, 62 Mich. 278.

¶ 33. An information filed by the prosecuting attorney in the recorder's court of the city of Detroit need not be verified (Charter & Laws of Detroit, 1886, p. 145).—People v. Graney, 91 Mich. 646.

§ 11. ——Sufficiency of verification.

Verification by deputy, see also ante ¶ 32.

¶ 34. The purpose of a verification of an information is merely to secure good faith and guard against groundless and vindictive prosecutions, and a verification by the affidavit of the prosecuting attorney that he knows its contents and "believes the same to be true as therein set forth" is sufficient.—Mentor v. People, 30 Mich. 91.

¶ 35. The prosecuting attorney's verification by oath that he "knows the contents of the foregoing information, and that he has good reason to believe and does believe the same to be true as therein set forth," suffices.—Washburn v. People, 10 Mich. 372.

¶ 36. An affidavit attached to an information, and stating that affiant has good reasons to believe and does believe the contents of the information to be true, is not such verification as will warrant an arrest, especially where there has been no preliminary examination and a prima facie case made out. —Swart v. Kimball, 43 Mich. 443.

§ 12. ——Jurat and signature to same.

Amendment after verdict, see post § 72.

¶ 37. The officer administering the oath on the verification of an information need not sign his full Christian name. The initials are sufficient.—Rice v. People, 15 Mich. 9.

§ 13. Time and term for filing.

Limitations on prosecution, see post II.

Time for trial relatively to time of accusation, see post § 329.

Time for filing informations, see Comp. L. 1915, § 15761.

¶ 38. The statutes do not forbid the filing of an information at the same term in which complaint is made, and there is nothing to prevent filing it as soon as convenient, unless, perhaps, where respondent has given bail, there may be some question as to the time when his sureties must produce him.—People v. Haley, 48 Mich. 495.

§ 14. Conformity of information to examination and commitment.

Necessity of preliminary examination and commitment to support information, see ante §§ 4-6.

Variance in particulars of description or name of crime, see post § 15.

Addition of counts to meet different aspects and theories on the proofs, see post § 16.

Joint information against persons separately committed, see post § 18.

Separate informations against persons jointly bound over, see post § 18.

Presumptions on motion or objection to information, see post § 56 et seq.

¶ 39. An examination under a complaint cannot justify the filing of an information charging an offense distinct from and not included in the one charged in the complaint. —People v. Jones, 24 Mich. 215.

¶ 40. So long as the prosecuting officer does not undertake to proceed against a person for a different transaction than that to which the examination relates, it is competent for him to put the information in such form as, in his opinion, will enable him to try the offense upon the merits in the way most effectually to advance the ends of justice.—Annis v. People, 13 Mich. 511.

¶ 41. The information need not conform to the complaint so long as it does not charge a different transa the preliminary e man v. Allegan C

¶ 42. The objec
a criminal action
filed, that the pro
guage in the warr since, in the circ
attorney may file respondent which an objection, und the information is action, it need no named in the o
plaint.—People v.

¶ 43. That an i complaint and wa
ing the offense is proceed against transaction than inary examinatio
80 Mich. 623.

¶ 44. An infor
because the offen set out in the co
which the warran
cutor has a right it is disclosed by preliminary exan
132 Mich. 455.

¶ 45. A compla
ed on the exami
port a count for complainant alle money by false
fendant did obta
and the testimon
—People v. Bird,

¶ 46. Where a a preliminary e may bind him o charged in the c
the prosecuting a tion charging hi
by the warrant dence on which
People, 42 Mich.

§ 15. ——Varian

¶ 47. A motio in an embezzlem leged variance b and warrant, in that the offense
tain date, while allege that it w said date, is Flock, 100 Mich.

¶ 48. In a pr
the local-option
rant charged th
mitted on, to wit
while in the ini have been comm

day of July, 1894. There was some evidence on the examination showing the offense to have been committed on the last named date. Held, that the prosecution was not bound by the date charged in the complaint and warrant, but had the right to inform against the respondents for the offense committed on the date shown by the examination.—People v. Whitney, 105 Mich. 622.

¶ 49. The information under a continuando for keeping a disorderly house is not invalidated by the fact that the complaint before the justice charged the offense as having been committed upon the particular day only.—People v. Russell, 110 Mich. 46.

¶ 50. Where a warrant of arrest for forging, Nov. 18, 1890, a note signed "F. & Co.," contains a copy of the note so dated, and was issued on a complaint sworn to May 23, 1890, which described the note as signed by "F," and which alleged that the offense was committed Nov. 18, 1889, an information describing the note and giving the date as in the complaint could not be objected to as not following the warrant, if no objection has been made to the discrepancies between the complaint and the warrant, the date Nov. 18, 1890 being obviously impossible and a mere clerical error.—People v. Foote, 93 Mich. 38.

¶ 51. A plea in abatement for want of proof on the preliminary complaint which alleged a breaking and entering of the M. bank, whereas the evidence was given on the preliminary examination that the bank was a private one belonging to S., was properly overruled.—People v. Courtney, 178 Mich. 137.

¶ 52. A complaint for obtaining money under false pretenses alleged, in substance, that respondent represented that there was a house of the value of $1,200 upon certain lots which respondent mortgaged to secure a loan of money, whereas there was in fact no house on the lots. Held, on motion to quash the information for variance such that no preliminary examination was had of the crime charged, that the complaint set forth an offense of which the statement alleged to have been made by respondent respecting value, which might be regarded as a mere opinion, was not an essential element.—People v. Oscar, 105 Mich. 704.

¶ 53. On the preliminary examination, additional matter to that complained of as a false pretense, namely, "that the said lots were of the value of $1,200, and that there was then and there and at that time a new house of the value of $1,200 on said lots, and that said house was new, and that it cost more than $1,200 to build the same," was brought out. Held, that such new matter was a part of the same transaction, and properly set forth in the information.—People v. Oscar, 105 Mich. 704.

¶ 54. Where, on a complaint and information for perjury in certain pleadings, the complaint alleges all the facts necessary to show the respondent guilty of said crime, and the information follows the complaint verbatim, with the exception that it alleges in addition that the false oath of respondent was made "with intent to use the same on the hearing of said motion," there is no variance sufficient to support a motion to quash the information.—Hoffman v. Allegan Circuit Judge, 150 Mich. 58.

¶ 54a. Evidence adduced upon the preliminary examination of one charged with a violation of the local-option law, tending to show that respondent kept an ordinary saloon for the sale of intoxicating liquors, is prima facie sufficient to authorize the filing of an information containing the statutory exceptions in relation to druggists and registered pharmacists.—People v. Berry, 107 Mich. 256.

§ 16. ——Addition of counts for included or varying aspects of offense.

Counts properly joinable, see post § 45.

¶ 55. An information does not put the accused on trial for a different offense from that covered by the preliminary examination where it merely states the crime in varying aspects.—Brown v. People, 39 Mich. 37.

¶ 56. An examination on a complaint and warrant charging larceny is enough, if the accused is held for trial, to authorize the prosecuting attorney, under Comp. L. 1871, § 7935, How. St., § 9546, to add a count for receiving stolen goods. A separate examination on that charge is not necessary.—Brown v. People, 39 Mich. 37.

¶ 57. An information may be filed for an offense of a lower grade than that for which an examination was had if it is included within the higher offense.—Turner v. People, 33 Mich. 363.

¶ 58. An information cannot be filed for a crime of higher grade than that for which the preliminary examination was had.—Yaner v. People, 34 Mich. 286.

§ 17. Averments or recitals as to preliminary proceedings.

¶ 59. It is not necessary that the information should show on its face that a preliminary examination had been had or waived. If the defendant intends to insist upon the want of such examination he should take the objection by plea in abatement, or by motion to quash based upon affidavit.—Washburn v. People, 10 Mich. 372; Hicks v. People, 10 Mich. 395.

§ 18. Joint and separate indictments or informations.

Propriety of separate trials for crimes requiring two participators, see post § 326.

¶ 60. Where two or more are jointly complained of and bound over, separate informations may be filed against them in the circuit court.—Annis v. People, 13 Mich. 511.

¶ 61. Where persons held for trial for a joint offense were arrested on separate complaints and warrants, they may still be joined in the information and jointly tried unless they claim separate trials under Comp. L. 1871, § 7960 (How. St. § 9573).—Stuart v. People, 42 Mich. 255.

¶ 62. An information as for a joint offense may be filed even though it does not appear from the return of the examining magistrate that it was committed jointly.—Stuart v. People, 42 Mich. 255.

§ 19. Duplicates and copies of information or indictment.

Right to copy of indictment, see Comp. L. 1915, § 15723.

¶ 63. There cannot be two informations on file in the case, and, where copies are filed as a precaution but the record contains the defective one, the conviction is invalid.—Rice v. People, 15 Mich. 9.

§ 20. Indorsement of names of witnesses.

Adding or striking off names, see post § 21.
Competency of testimony of witnesses not named in indorsements, see post § 156.
Duty of state to call witnesses and calling of witnesses not named on information or indictment, see post §§ 349-352.
Postponement to procure witnesses, see post § 121.
Mode of objection to testimony of witness whose name is not indorsed, see post § 355.
Objection for first time on review that name of witness was not indorsed, see post § 511.
Statutory provisions as to indorsements, see Comp. L. 1915, § 15761.

¶ 64. The names of all witnesses for the prosecution in a criminal case must be indorsed on the information before the trial or as soon as discovered after it begins; the respondent is entitled to a chance to canvass their character, whether they are examined in the main case or on rebuttal.—People v. Quick, 58 Mich. 321.

¶ 65. The names of such witnesses as are known to the prosecutor when the information is filed must, under How. St., § 9549, be indorsed at that time, and failure to do so is not excused by his not knowing where they are or whether their attendance can be secured.—People v. Price, 74 Mich. 37.

¶ 66. In placing on the information the names of known witnesses there should be no needless delay, but the requirement is not absolute in cases where the witnesses are beyond the jurisdiction so that the prosecution cannot compel attendance.—People v. Perriman, 72 Mich. 184.

¶ 67. It was not incumbent upon the people in a prosecution for homicide to indorse upon the information the names of witnesses at the inquest whose only relation to the crime was that they claimed to have seen a man taller than respondent enter a store a mile from the scene of the affray, which they did not see, although the assaulter was traced by his tracks in the snow directly to the store.—People v. Savant, 112 Mich. 297.

¶ 68. A dying declaration is not within the provision of the statute requiring the names of witnesses to be indorsed upon the information.—People v. Beverly, 108 Mich. 509.

¶ 69. How. St. § 9549, providing that the prosecuting attorney shall indorse the names of witnesses on all informations at the time of filing, and at such times as the court may require, is not violated where names are indorsed seven days before a trial, the attorney for the accused being advised of the action and making no objection thereto.—People v. Williams, 118 Mich. 692.

¶ 70. In criminal prosecution, it is within the court's discretion to permit names to be indorsed on the information at the trial shortly before the jury is sworn.—People v. Luders, 126 Mich. 440.

¶ 71. Under section 11934, Comp. Laws, 1897, the prosecution is not permitted to indorse the name of a witness on the information during the trial unless a showing is made excusing the delay.—People v. Karamol, 173 Mich. 354.

¶ 72. In the absence of specific objection, an unsworn statement by the attorney for the people in a prosecution for seduction that he had only lately learned that a certain witness was material was held to justify permission to indorse the name of such witness on the information after the jury had been sworn and the complaining witness had partially given her testimony.—People v. Bollman, 178 Mich. 159.

¶ 73. Where the prosecution showed in the preliminary examination the nature of the evidence to be produced against defendant, it was held that the latter could not claim surprise because the court permitted the prosecution to indorse on the information the names of the witnesses to prove such facts.—People v. Segal, 180 Mich. 316.

¶ 74. An accused is not prejudiced by the prosecution's failure to indorse the name of a witness on the information, where it appears that such witness merely saw the accused strike a person, and then ran away.—People v. Williams, 118 Mich. 692.

¶ 75. Where, after making the complaint that the Sunday closing law has been violated, the complaining witness absconded, and the officers were unable, after making diligent search, to find him, or any trace of him, sufficient reason is shown for not producing him at the trial, and for leaving his name off the information.—People v. Boyd, 151 Mich. 577.

§ 21. ——Adding or striking off names.

Reception of testimony as tantamount to addition of omitted name, see post ¶ 702.

Tardy indorsement as harmless error, see post § 588.

¶ 76. In a criminal prosecution the names of witnesses cannot, against objection, be added to the information without a showing that they were not known earlier and in time to give defendant notice in season to anticipate their presence before trial.—People v. Hall, 48 Mich. 482.

¶ 77. A respondent's right under How St., § 9549, to have the names of witnesses known to the prosecuting attorney indorsed on the information before the trial, is a substantial one which courts cannot ignore; nor will the carelessness or neglect of the prosecuting officer warrant the court in permitting such indorsement on the trial.—People v. Howes, 81 Mich. 396.

¶ 78. The prosecuting attorney may be allowed, on a proper showing, to indorse the name of a witness on an information after the commencement of the trial.—People v. Baker, 112 Mich. 211.

¶ 79. It is not error, during a trial for larceny, to permit the prosecuting attorney to indorse upon the information the name of a witness whom he testified he has just learned to be a material witness.—People v. Machen, 101 Mich. 400.

¶ 80. Where it appears that the prosecuting attorney knew nothing about the testimony to be given by a witness, or in fact did not know that he was to be a witness until the day of trial, it was proper for the court to grant the prosecuting attorney leave to indorse his name upon the information, especially where the court offered to allow counsel for defendant time to investigate the testimony of the proposed witness.—People v. Moore, 155 Mich. 107.

¶ 81. Where the prosecuting attorney in a trial for assault, states that he knows nothing about a certain alleged witness, and no showing is made that the person was a witness of the transaction, the court properly refused a motion made during the progress of the trial to require the prosecution to indorse the person's name on the information.—People v. Hoffman, 154 Mich. 145.

¶ 82. The court may properly permit the prosecuting attorney to indorse the name of the complaining witness, whose testimony was taken on the preliminary examination, upon the information after the jury is sworn, he having failed to make such indorsement through inadvertence; but if the respondent makes a reasonable claim that he is not prepared to meet the testimony expected to be given by said witness, he should be allowed a reasonable time to prepare his defense.—People v. Evans, 72 Mich. 367.

¶ 83. The indorsement upon an information, after going to trial, of the names of additional witnesses, is ground for a new trial if done without leave of court.—People v. Moran, 48 Mich. 639.

¶ 84. Where the name of a well-known police officer conspicuously present during the trial had been frequently mentioned in the testimony, but was omitted by inadvertence from the information, it was proper to allow it to be indorsed, and to permit the officer to be examined as a witness.—People v. Mills, 94 Mich. 630.

¶ 85. It is within the discretion of the circuit judge to permit the indorsement on an information of the name of a material witness for the people, and to receive his testimony at the trial, where the affidavit of the prosecuting attorney, filed 13 days before the trial, shows a sufficient reason why the indorsement was not made before, and states that notice was immediately given to respondent's attorney.—People v. Isham, 109 Mich. 72.

¶ 86. Where in a criminal case 3 days before the trial the court entered an order for the subpoenaing of 13 witnesses for the defense at the expense of the state and in the same order without objection gave leave to the prosecuting attorney to add 3 names to the information, held that under the circumstances the leave to add such names was proper.—People v. Ecarius, 124 Mich. 616.

¶ 87. It is not error to permit the prosecuting attorney to indorse the names of two witnesses upon the information on the day of the trial but before the jury was sworn, where the prosecuting attorney gave notice to one of defendant's attorneys immediately upon learning that the witnesses were essential, which was eight days before the trial.—People v. Gregory, 130 Mich. 522.

¶ 88. The refusal of an application to require the prosecution to indorse upon the information the name of the defendant's wife as a witness for the people, was not error although it had been stated by counsel that defendant expressly waived his right to object to the calling of his wife as a witness against him.—People v. Hossler, 135 Mich. 384.

¶ 89. In a prosecution for rape, it is not error before filing information to cross out the name of a witness indorsed on it, where the only testimony the witness could give would be cumulative as to the physical and mental condition of the prosecutrix.—People v. Marrs, 125 Mich. 376.

¶ 90. Where, after the commencement of the trial of a criminal case, the prosecuting attorney stated to the court that he had just learned of two material witnesses whose names were not indorsed on the information, and the respondent's counsel thereupon waived any further showing, the indorsement of such names is not error.—People v. Howes, 81 Mich. 396.

¶ 91. Where a prosecuting attorney in open court states his reasons for leaving the name of the complaining witness off the information, and for not producing him at the trial, counsel for defendant, by asking the trial court to dismiss the case on the ground that the showing was insufficient generally, waives the formality that his showing be made under oath.—People v. Boyd, 151 Mich. 577.

B. SUBSTANCE AND REQUISITES OF ACCUSING PART.

§ 22. In general; matters presumed or judicially known.

What matters are judicially known, see post §§ 128, 129.
Plea of former acquittal in same court, see also post ¶ 568.

¶ 92. An information cannot be made better or worse for inserting or omitting a matter judicially noticed.—Keator v. People, 32 Mich. 484.

§ 23. Requisites and sufficiency of averments.

As to venue, place, time, feloniousness, unlawfulness, knowledge, or intent, see post §§ 24-26.
Descriptive averments, see post §§ 27-31.
Negative averments, see post § 32.
As to aiding and abetting, see post § 33.
As to crimes in prison, see post § 34.
As to previous convictions of accused, see post § 35.
Concluding words, see post § 36.
Particularity and details and bills of particulars, see post §§ 37, 38.
As to statutory offenses and statutory forms, see post §§ 39-42.
Averring elements of particular crimes, see post §§ 43-43u.
As to the preliminary proceedings, see ante § 17.
Variances from commitment, see ante §§ 14-16.
Description of crime in the record, see post § 500.
What is regarded as surplusage, see post § 54.
When regarded as double, see post § 76.
Construction of common-law averments by common-law rules, see post § 75.
Construction of averments questioned for duplicity, see post § 76.
Averment of conclusion of law as to crime committed, see post ¶ 124.
Proper and permissible amendments, see post § 69 et seq.
Averments requisite to specific crimes, see post §§ 43a-43u.
As to manner and means of arson, see also post ¶ 147.
Manner or means
§ 168 et seq.
Requisites and suffi
§ 109 et seq.
Complaints before ju
see post § 647.
Constitutional right sation, see Cons
Validity of laws affe of accusation,
§ 198.
Sufficiency of averm warrant, see Ar
Sufficiency of accus
Extradition § 3.
Sufficiency of the i
by conviction o
§ 18 et seq.
Sufficiency of accus
against action
see False Impr
Right to have made of accusation, se

¶ 93. Every man rant of what is to except as he is infor
People v. Marion, 2

¶ 94. The sufficie far as regards the description of the setting out the cri
tested by the same to an indictment, an not bring the case
any statute dispen
particularity or pr respect at common l determined by the indictments for the
People, 26 Mich. 29

¶ 95. The statute information, etc., pr essential to a descr setting forth the r
e. g., in cases of m is no assault, and tary.—People v. Ol

¶ 96. The sufficie does not depend u is or is not upon tion.—People v. W

§ 24. Averments of

In charging bigamy
Amendable matters
Necessity of statin arrest, see Arr
Provision for layin done near bou
1915, § 15606.
Venue in margin a
Comp. L. 1915,

¶ 97. An informa court of Detroit, a and in the county

Detroit, charging the respondent with fraudulently removing, embezzling and concealing certain chattel-mortgaged property generally, without stating that such offense was committed in the city of Detroit, confers jurisdiction upon said court, under How. St. § 9533, which provides that the county, city, or other jurisdiction named in the margin of any indictment (information) shall be taken to be the venue for all of the facts stated in the body thereof.—People v. Schultz, 85 Mich. 114.

¶ 98. An indictment charging the commission of an offense "at to-wit said township, county and state" where the parties charged had been described as late of a named township, county and state, sufficiently describes an offense to have been committed within the jurisdiction of such county.—People v. Turney, 124 Mich. 542.

¶ 99. An information alleging that "on the 5th day of February, A. D. 1904, at the city of Detroit, in the county of Wayne" accused "then and there" obtained money by false pretenses, sufficiently shows that the Recorder's Court of Detroit has jurisdiction of the crime.—People v. Hoffman, 142 Mich. 531.

§ 25. Averments as to time.

Specifications requisite to particular crimes, see post §§ 43a-43u.
Materiality of errors in date, see post § 53.
Amendable matters, see post § 70.
Variance of information from commitment, see ante § 15.

¶ 100. For the requirements as to the statement of time in indictments and informations, see People ex rel. Benoit v. Miller, 15 Mich. 354.

¶ 101. Some specific date must be fixed by the people in a prosecution for adultery since the respondents have a right to know the date relied on to enable them to meet the charge.—People v. Davis, 175 Mich. 594.

§ 26. Averment as to feloniousness or unlawfulness, knowledge, and intent.

Averments of specific intent or knowledge requisite to particular crimes, see post §§ 43a-43u.
Averments as to intent in complaints for trials before justices and minor courts, see post § 647.

¶ 102. Comp. L. 1857, § 6043, How. St., § 9523, dispenses with the necessity of employing the words "feloniously" or "with force and arms," or "any words of similar import," which last phrase means words employed for similar technical reasons, as the words mentioned and which are not necessary to a clear understanding of the charge.—Rice v. People, 15 Mich. 9.

¶ 103. Because of the statute dispensing with use of the word "feloniously" an information charging defendants with an assault "with intent to kill and murder," omitting the words "feloniously, wilfully and of malice aforethought," was held sufficient.—Rice v. People, 15 Mich. 9.

¶ 104. Under Comp. L. 1897, §§ 11604, 11605, an information for unlawfully interfering with the registration of a city water meter was held sufficient although it was not alleged that the act was wilful and fraudulent.—People v. Driessen, 178 Mich. 118.

¶ 105. Where scienter is made an ingredient of an offense it is necessary to charge and prove it.—People v. Frederighi, 192 Mich. 165.

§ 27. Describing persons and corporations.

In charging conspiracy, see post § 43c.
In charging embezzlement and agency of accused, see post § 43e.
In charging relation of parties in incest, see post § 431.
Variances of information from commitment, see ante § 15.
Materiality of misnomer, see post § 51.
Amendment to meet proofs, see post § 71.

¶ 106. An averment in the indictment that the bank whose bills are counterfeited is an incorporated company, in a place and state mentioned, is equivalent to an averment that it is established in such state.—People v. Stewart, 4 Mich. 655.

¶ 107. In an indictment under How. St. § 9140, it is not necessary to set out the act of incorporation of the bank by which the bills purport to have been issued, or that they were issued by a corporation having power to issue them.—People v. Kent, 1 D. 42.

§ 28. Describing and laying title to property.

In charging conspiracy, see post § 43c.
Describing money or property embezzled, see post § 43e.
Averments requisite to arson, larceny and other specific crimes, see post §§ 43a-43u: Larceny, II.
Amendment to meet proofs, see post § 71.
Mode of describing money or instruments for payment of money, see Comp. L. 1915, § 15753.

¶ 108. Where the owner of land enlisted 1861 and was reported to have died in the army, leaving a wife and one child, who never saw him or heard from him during the twenty-three years thereafter, the ownership of the land was properly alleged to be in the wife and child in an information for arson.—People v. Eaton, 59 Mich. 559.

¶ 109. How. St. § 9347, making it a misdemeanor to wrongfully remove books, papers or records from certain public offices, makes such books, papers and records the property of the state, and an allegation of such ownership in an information filed under said section, which describes the papers alleged to have been removed, is unnecessary but not objectionable.—People v. Bussey, 82 Mich. 49.

§ 29. Describing papers and documents.

See also post ¶ 151.

In charging forgery and uttering, see post § 43f.

Immateriality of misdescription, see post § 51.

Amendments to meet proofs, see post § 71.

Variance of information from commitment, see ante § 15.

Mode of pleading records and official papers and process, see Comp. L. 1915, § 15748.

Mode of pleading judgments, see Comp. L. 1915, § 15755.

¶ 110. A contract is complete as such without subscribing witnesses, and in setting out its purport in an information the names of witnesses need not be given.—People v. Sharp, 53 Mich. 523.

§ 30. Averments as to foreign or technical words.

¶ 111. An information setting forth an alleged forged note to which one of the signatures was shown to have been written in German, should have set forth that the name was written in that language and have given its English equivalent.—People v. Bennett, 122 Mich. 281.

¶ 112. An innuendo in an indictment is bad when there is nothing previous to which it can refer.—People v. Collier, 1 Mich. 137.

§ 31. Description of crime collateral to that charged.

Description of crime which is the object of conspiracy, see post § 43c (conspiracy).

In charging escapes, see post § 43e.

Sufficiency of indictment and conviction thereon to show a crime in subsequent prosecution for escape, see Crimes ¶ 309.

Averments as to collateral intended crimes in indictments for murder in attempted felonies, see Homicide § 34.

¶ 113. An information for resisting an officer while attempting to preserve the peace charges no offense if it fails to state the acts or facts constituting the offense or of the officer's acts which respondent obstructed.—People v. Hamilton, 71 Mich. 340.

§ 32. Negativing exceptions.

In charging bigamy, see post ¶ 154.

In charging crimes under liquor law, see Intoxicating Liquors, VI, D.

Negativing exceptions in complaints before justices for trial of misdemeanors, see post § 647.

Under intoxicating liquor laws, see Intoxicating Liquors, VI, B.

¶ 114. Where an information for unlawfully disinterring a human body alleges, besides the essential elements of the statutory offense, that "the body was taken for the purpose of dissection, and with intent to sell and dispose of the same for that purpose for gain and profit," it need not negative the possibility of leave authorizing health render the dead are required to be under certain circ dissection.—McNa

¶ 115. A compl No. 167, charging and held himself and did practice qualified by law t respondent is not dentistry is not i medicine. Nor ne that respondent v under the instru qualified, or that mit from the cour statement with Phippin, 70 Mich.

¶ 116. A comp No. 63, § 1, maki son to practice cate, and provid apply to any per fully in actual p required to neg v. Allen, 122 Mic

¶ 117. In a pr without a city l illegal interest i Pub. Acts of 1 that respondent, loan company, c the offense charg the complaint as did not allege t spondent was ac agent of the loa clude the possib some person wh objection was no ing requires ar directly charge statute with a s ing in some cas lawful.—People

¶ 118. In a p Laws 1887, Act prohibiting the ons by any perso and nightwatch tive the except proof on the tri People v. Pendl

§ 33. Averments

Accusation of cipals, see

¶ 119. By Co § 9545, it is pro tween an acce principal, and t and second deg rogated; and commission of a felony, whether they directly commit the act constituting the offense, or aid and abet in its commission, though not present, may be indicted, tried and punished as principals, as in case of misdemeanor. Held, that in all cases where only persons of a certain class, or standing in a certain relation, are competent to commit the offense, the indictment against aiders and abettors, not belonging to such class, or standing in such relations, must set out the aiding and abetting, in which alone the crime consists, and which, in such case, is the only principal offense within the meaning of this statute.—Shannon v. People, 5 Mich. 71.

¶ 120. Where an offense can be committed only by a specified class, aiders and abettors cannot be charged as principals if they are outside the statute designation.—People v. Meisner, 178 Mich. 115.

§ 34. Crimes by convicts in prison.

¶ 121. Under Pub. Acts 1893, No. 118, § 64, making convicts in prison for any term other than life, who commit any crime, subject to the same punishment as if the crime had been committed elsewhere, and section 65, providing that the warrant issued in such case shall be made in the ordinary form, and be directed to the warden of such prison, and that it shall set forth that the accused is imprisoned by authority of the laws of the state, an information against a convict for assault with intent to kill, which contains all the averments required by the statute to be set forth in the warrant, is sufficient; it being unnecessary to allege in detail the prior conviction and sentence of respondent, and the lawfulness of his detention.—People v. Huntley, 112 Mich. 569.

§ 35. Averments as to previous convictions.

¶ 122. An information for a third offense under the act in relation to disorderly persons (How. St. § 1997a et seq.) must allege that convictions were had for such previous offenses, and, properly, it should also state the date and occasion of such convictions.—People v. Buck, 109 Mich. 687.

¶ 123. An information, for refusal and neglect to support an accused's family which charges that the accused was "heretofore duly convicted of the same offense," stating two dates, and charging a third offense, sufficiently states the former convictions to warrant the third conviction. Pub. Acts 1895, No. 190, § 1, requiring punishment by imprisonment in the Detroit House of Correction, for a third and subsequent conviction, does not require, in the prosecution for a third offense, that the complaints and warrants in the former conviction shall have stated that they were for first and second offenses, but simply that the offense shall be "charged as a third or subsequent conviction," etc.—People v. Booth, 121 Mich. 131.

§ 36. Concluding words.

Omission of formal conclusion as immaterial defect, see also post ¶ 311.

¶ 124. Under Comp. L. 1857, § 6047, How. St. § 9534, relative to indictments, if an indictment or information contains direct unequivocal averments of such facts—not being mere evidence—as lead immediately and of necessity to a single and inevitable conclusion, the omission to draw that conclusion will not vitiate the pleading.—Evans v. People, 12 Mich. 27.

¶ 125. The conclusion "against the form of the statute in such case made and provided" is mere surplusage, and does not determine that the information is for felony rather than a misdemeanor.—People v. Arnold, 46 Mich. 268.

¶ 126. An indictment for violating the laws of this state against counterfeiting properly charges the offense to have been committed against the sovereignty of the people of this state, instead of charging it to have been committed against the sovereignty of the people of the United States.—Harlan v. People, 1 D. 207.

§ 37. Particularity and details.

Specifications requisite to particular crimes, see post §§ 43a-43u.

Bills of particulars, see post § 38.

Necessity of proof of particulars as pleaded needlessly, see post § 73.

¶ 127. In charging a criminal offense, a detailed recital of the evidence by which it will be established is not required; such facts must be averred that, if admitted, would constitute the offense and establish the guilt of the accused. The elements of the offense must be so stated that he can know what he is to meet and prepare for his defense, and the particular transaction must be so identified that his acquittal or conviction will be a bar to a subsequent prosecution for the same offense.—People v. Quider, 172 Mich. 280.

§ 38. Bills of particulars.

Waiver of right to particulars, see post ¶ 368.

Reviewableness of discretionary ruling on motion for bill of particulars, see post § 628.

¶ 128. It is not erroneous for the court to refuse to order the prosecution to furnish a bill of particulars under the general charge contained in an information for embezzlement by the state treasurer, where it appears that a preliminary examination has been had, and the prosecuting officer states that he shall confine himself to the same charges as on such examination.—People v. McKinney, 10 Mich. 54.

¶ 129. An order for a bill of particulars ought never to be refused where the court can see any reason to believe the particulars necessary to inform the defendant of the particular transactions intended to be proved against him, so as to enable him to meet them.—People v. McKinney, 10 Mich. 54.

¶ 130. Where one is charged with the statutory offense of keeping a place where intoxicating liquors are sold as a beverage, the prosecutor is not obliged to furnish a bill of particulars of the testimony upon which he will rely to prove the charge.—People v. Congdon, 137 Mich. 133. Writ of error dismissed in 200 U. S. 612, 50 L. ed. 619, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 753.

§ 39. Statutory offenses.

Averments of substance or description peculiar to given statutory crimes, see post §§ 43a-43u.

Negativing exceptions, see ante § 32.

Averments in words of statutes, see post §§ 40-42.

Reference to incorrect section in pleading statute as surplusage, see post ¶ 329.

Addition of matter beyond statute as surplusage, see post ¶ 328.

Use of common-law phrases as implying common-law accusation, see post § 75.

¶ 131. In statutory offenses every essential element of the crime as defined by the statute must be averred in the information, either in the words of the statute or in language substantially equivalent.—People v. McLean, 68 Mich. 480.

¶ 132. Where an information is filed under section 11488, Comp. Laws 1897, relative to written threats of injury for the purpose of extorting money, it need not be in the exact language of the statute as under section 11908, Comp. Laws 1897, a substantial compliance with the statute as to form is sufficient.—People v. Campbell, 173 Mich. 381.

¶ 133. Whenever an ordinance or statute fixes a classification and creates an offense which can be committed only by persons within the class, it is necessary not only to allege but to prove that the accused person belongs to the class described.—People v. Meisner, 178 Mich. 115.

§ 40. Averments in words of statute.

Sufficiency and completeness of statutory description of crime, see post §§ 41, 42.

¶ 134. A statutory offense is sufficiently described by charging it in the words of the statute.—People v. Kent, 1 D. 42; Rice v. People, 15 Mich. 9.

¶ 135. As a general rule an information for an offense created by statute is sufficient if it charges the offense in the words of the statute.—People v. Taylor, 96 Mich. 576.

¶ 136. When a statute creates an offense and sets out the facts which constitute it, the offense may b indictment in the Ford v. Kalamaz
337.

§ 41. Sufficiency a averments

Under statutes nc
tive of the c
Crimes under lic
Liquors, VI,

¶ 137. An info
fense must ident
every other, an statutory compo
Mich. 417.

¶ 138. Where elements as com crime cannot pr including all tho
ple, 8 Mich. 431;
352.

¶ 139. In sta
tial element of statute must be either in the wo
guage substanti
McLean, 68 Mic

§ 42. ——Crime statutes.

See also ante ¶
Crimes committ
see also an

¶ 140. Comp.
§ 9539, which
fense charged b ute, or the pun been created by shall, after ver rant the punish ute if it descrit
the statute," d aver any fact e an offense; an judgment shou reversed on err
233.

¶ 141. Wher respondent of t an averment i is not sufficient tion must be m occur where th
their generalit falling within t in its meaning
96 Mich. 576.

§ 43. For spec crimes.

[Note. Preced stance of t in alphab which follow numbered 43a to 43u inclusive. The alphabetical order follows the usual and common names of the crimes. It will be observed that the names of some of the crimes are missing from this list. This does not mean that there are no precedents of indictments on such crimes, but merely that none have been found which were distinctive to the specific crime rather than general to all crimes. For precedents on the general law of criminal pleading, see the sections preceding this.]

Body stealing and disturbance of sepulture, see ante ¶ 114.
Information for disinterring corpse, see also post ¶ 414.
Interfering with water meters, see ante ¶ 104.
Sufficiency of informations in prosecutions under pure food laws, see Food § 5.
Violations of liquor laws, see Intoxicating Liquors, VI, B.
Carrying weapons, see also ante ¶ 118.
General requisites and averments not pertaining to any one crime, see ante §§ 22-36.
General rules as to statutory averments and forms, see ante §§ 39-42.
Joinder of counts for several offenses in same indictment or information, see post § 45.
Construction and intendment of averments to ascertain issues presented, see post § 74 et seq.
When regarded as double, see post § 76.
Sufficiency of charge to accuse of lessor included degrees and offenses, see post § 80.

§ 43a. Abandonment and desertion.

Who may make complaint for abandonment, see ante § 8.
Averment as to previous conviction for abandonment, see ante § 35.
Cruelty to children, see post ¶ 187.

¶ 142. Whether the omission to name a bastard child eight months old is a valid objection to a count in an indictment, under Comp. L. 1857, § 5741, for exposing such child with intent to abandon it, quære.—Shannon v. People, 5 Mich. 71.

¶ 143. An indictment under Comp. L. 1857, § 5741, which provided that "If the father or mother of any child, or any other person to whom any such child shall have been confided, shall expose such child," etc., must allege either that the defendant was the father or mother of the child, or that it has been confided to him or her; and this allegation must be sustained by the proof.—Shannon v. People, 5 Mich. 71.

§ 43a. Adultery.

Lewd and lascivious cohabitation, see post ¶¶ 237, 238.

¶ 144. The respondent in a prosecution for adultery is entitled to a specification of the times and places of the acts relied on for conviction in any case in which he might otherwise be misled in preparing for defense.—People v. Davis, 52 Mich. 569.

¶ 145. A complaint against a woman for adultery need not show that it is made by her husband; nor is it necessary that the information should contain such an averment.—People v. Payment, 109 Mich. 553.

§ 43a. Arson and statutory burnings, attempts and solicitations.

¶ 146. An information for arson is sufficiently exact if it describes the dwelling-house as that of the occupant.—People v. Fairchild, 48 Mich. 31.

¶ 147. An information for burning a dwelling-house by setting fire to another building, whereby the dwelling is burned, should set forth the firing of the one building, and that by means of the burning of such building the particular dwelling-house was burned.—People v. Fairchild, 48 Mich. 31.

¶ 148. Comp. L. 1871, § 7552 (How. St. § 9123), describes two distinct offenses, one of which is the burning of another dwelling, and the other the setting fire to some building whereby another's dwelling has been burned. An information under this statute must set forth the facts with such particularity that it shall judicially appear which offense has been committed.—People v. Fairchild, 48 Mich. 31.

¶ 149. An information for procuring another person to set fire to a building, held to be sufficiently specific.—People v. Thompson, 37 Mich. 118.

¶ 150. An information charging the respondent with hiring a certain person named to burn a certain building is supported by evidence that he had hired the person named, and another person, jointly.—People v. Thompson, 37 Mich. 118.

§ 43a. Assault and battery.

For precedents on the substantive averments in indictments or informations for simple assaults, see Assault § 8.
Assault with specific felonious intent, see post § 43r (robbery); Homicide §§ 38, 39; Rape.
Prize fighting, see post § 43p.

§ 43b. Banking crimes.

Embezzlement from banks, see post § 43e.

¶ 151. Where an information against a bank clerk for drawing a draft with intent to injure or defraud the bank follows the language of the statute and includes a copy of the draft, it describes the offense with sufficient particularity.—People v. Comstock, 115 Mich. 305.

§ 43b. Bigamy and polygamy.

Issues under allegations in bigamy, see post ¶ 405.

¶ 152. Cohabitation within the state with the second spouse must be alleged in an information for bigamy.—People v. Devine, 185 Mich. 50.

¶ 153. Failure to allege cohabitation with second wife within the state of Michigan is a fatal defect in an information for bigamy committed by marrying in a foreign state while having a living wife in this state.—People v. Devine, 185 Mich. 50.

¶ 154. An information for bigamy is not bad for merely omitting to allege the exceptions to the statute and negative their existence, if it avers both marriages and sets forth that the first wife was living when the second marriage took place.—Kopke v. People, 43 Mich. 41.

§ 43b. Bribery, embracery and corruption of agents.

See also post ¶¶ 309, 310.

¶ 155. In a prosecution under Comp. L. 1897, sec. 11311, for attempting to corrupt a prosecuting attorney the people must charge and prove a corrupt intent in offering the bribe and defendant is entitled to an instruction to that effect.—People v. Bilitzke, 174 Mich. 329.

§ 43b. Burglary, breakings and attempts.

Possession of burglars' tools, see post ¶¶ 166, 167.

¶ 156. The various breakings resembling burglary and made criminal by our statutes are distinguishable from the common-law offense of burglary, and informations therefor must set forth in substance all their statutory elements.—Harris v. People, 44 Mich. 305.

¶ 157. Burglary is a common-law offense, and not a statutory crime; but our statutes distinguish between the degrees of punishment for simple and for aggravated burglary, and if all the incidents warranting the severer penalties are not alleged in the information, but the offense is stated as at the common law, the smaller punishment only can be inflicted.—Harris v. People, 44 Mich. 305.

¶ 158. How. St. §§ 9132, 9133, merely prescribe different degrees of punishment for burglary, and do not create new offenses. An information for burglary, therefore, may still be laid as at the common law.—People v. Shaver, 107 Mich. 562.

¶ 159. Under the statute which punishes "every person who shall break and enter, in the night-time, any office, shop, railroad depot or warehouse, not adjoining to or occupied with a dwe commit a felony, to describe the t joining to or occ is fatally defec Mich. 431; Byrn Bickford v. Peo

¶ 160. An info and entry of a dwelling, but not either in the ni does not allege laws.—Hall v. P

¶ 161. No offe out in an inforn ing and enterin dwelling-house v tels therein four 417.

¶ 162. An in glary is defecti intent with whi was done.—Peo

¶ 163. An inf ing and enterin night-time, with is a good comm glary, larceny b —People v. Sh

¶ 164. A com glary is not t spondent was Harris v. Peop ¶ 165. An 1871, § 7561 (tempt to comn armed, must a lawfully in th tempted to en spondent was conviction can law offense o 44 Mich. 305.

§ 43b. ——Pos

¶ 166. Conv burglars' tool may be had u alleging or p intended to t thereof.—Peo

¶ 167. In 1897, § 11589, glar's tools, t to charge and a fixed intent were found i the purpose o in the county tuted.—Peopl

§ 43c. Conspi

Effect of unn see post

Describing bank whose bills are counterfeited or forged, see ante ¶¶ 106, 107.

¶ 168. In the indictment the agreement or combination must be set out, but the means to be used in executing the conspiracy need not be set forth unless they are a component part of the offense; as where the combination and the object to be attained are not in themselves unlawful, but the means to be used to effect the object are unlawful.—People v. Richards, 1 Mich. 216; People v. Arnold, 46 Mich. 268.

¶ 169. If a conspiracy be to commit an offense known as such at the common law, so that by describing it by the term by which it is generally known the nature of the offense is clearly indicated, then it will only be necessary to use such term in describing the object of the conspiracy.—Alderman v. People, 4 Mich. 414.

¶ 170. If there be a combination to do an act not in itself unlawful, but which it is agreed to accomplish by criminal or unlawful means, those means must be particularly set forth, and be such as constitute an offense, either at common law or by statute.—Alderman v. People, 4 Mich. 414.

¶ 171. In a case of conspiracy if the combination be to do an unlawful act the indictment must set forth the unlawful thing agreed upon, but need not specify the means to be resorted to for the purpose.—People v. Clark, 10 Mich. 310; People v. Petheram, 64 Mich. 252.

¶ 172. An indictment for conspiracy to cheat an individual of his lands and goods need not state the means by which it is to be accomplished.—People v. Richards, 1 Mich. 216.

¶ 173. Cheating and defrauding are punishable only when effected by false tokens and pretenses, and the words of themselves do not import an offense. An indictment for conspiracy to cheat and defraud must, therefore, set out the false tokens to be used in effecting the contemplated fraud.—Alderman v. People, 4 Mich. 414.

¶ 174. An information for a conspiracy to obtain money by false pretenses need not set forth the pretenses by which it was accomplished.—People v. Winslow, 39 Mich. 505.

¶ 175. An information for cheating and defrauding by false pretenses must specify the pretenses used; but an information for conspiracy thereto need not allege the means, and the offense may be complete even though the pretenses or the victims are not agreed on.—People v. Arnold, 46 Mich. 268.

¶ 176. An information charged a conspiracy to cheat and defraud certain persons by false pretenses and by certain other means, not in themselves necessarily criminal, but it did not show which of the victims of the fraud, if either, was to be defrauded by false pretenses. Held bad, because of the ambiguity, and because, when means are alleged that may create a crime, though in themselves they fall outside of any legal definition of one, the information must show just what they are, so that the court may ascertain what crime they create.—People v. Barkelow, 37 Mich. 455.

¶ 177. An information for conspiracy need not allege an overt act in pursuance of it; and such an allegation, if made, does not aid a defective allegation of the conspiracy itself.—People v. Arnold, 46 Mich. 268.

¶ 178. Where a conspiracy to obtain property by false pretenses has been carried into effect, an information therefor should state against whom the conspiracy was directed.—People v. Arnold, 46 Mich. 268.

¶ 179. An information for conspiracy to obtain property by false pretenses should aver that the property belonged to some other person or persons than the conspirators.—People v. Arnold, 46 Mich. 268.

¶ 180. An allegation that the parties conspired, "by divers false pretenses, subtle means and devices, to obtain and acquire to themselves, of and from one W., a sum of money, to wit, ten dollars of the moneys of said W., and to cheat and defraud him, the said W., thereof," is sufficient.—People v. Clark, 10 Mich. 310.

¶ 181. An information charging the defendants with conspiring to falsely charge a person with arson or larceny sufficiently states an offense.—People v. Dyer, 79 Mich. 480.

¶ 182. An information under How. St. § 9275, for conspiring to obstruct the business of a corporation, need not allege specific acts done in furtherance of the conspiracy.—People v. Petheram, 64 Mich. 252.

¶ 183. An information alleging that respondents fraudulently conspired together, by false pretenses, to acquire from a given county a certain sum of money, and to cheat and defraud the said county thereof, sufficiently charges a conspiracy to cheat and defraud.—People v. Butler, 111 Mich. 483.

¶ 184. An information charging a conspiracy to obtain a note by false pretenses need not set out the means by which the end was to be accomplished; the end itself being unlawful.—People v. Summers, 115 Mich. 537.

¶ 185. An information charging a conspiracy to commit extortion, is not invalidated by the failure to use the words "the offense of" or "the crime of" immediately preceding the word "extortion."—People v. Lamb, 153 Mich. 675. (Hooker, Moore and Carpenter, JJ., dissenting.)

¶ 186. A conspiracy to defraud on the part of a materializing medium, who gives a "seance," where a collection of one dollar is taken up before the proceedings begin, is sufficiently charged although a named person is alleged as being defrauded, instead of the general public, because although no particular person was intended as a victim, if the conspiracy has been carried out and the money obtained from some person in consequence of it, the overt act is shown and the person whom it was the conspirators' intention to defraud, is made certain.—People v. Gilman, 121 Mich. 187.

§ 43c. Cruelty.

¶ 187. An information under Act No. 213, Pub. Acts 1897, providing a penalty for cruelty to children charged in the words of the statute that the defendant "did cruelly and unlawfully punish" the child in question. Held, the charge was sufficiently specific.—People v. Loomis, 161 Mich. 651.

§ 43d. Disorderly conduct and persons.

Complaint against husband for nonsupport as disorderly person, allegation as to family becoming public burden, see also Crimes ¶ 255.

Averments as to previous convictions for disorderly conduct, see ante § 35.

Complaint for trial before justice on charge of keeping disorderly house, see post ¶ 2953.

Keeping gaming houses, see post § 43g.

Indecency and obscenity, see post § 43i.

Abandonment of wife or child, see ante § 43a.

Drunkenness as a crime, see Intoxicating Liquors, VIII.

§ 43d. Disorderly houses.

¶ 188. An information for letting a house meant to be used for prostitution and lewdness need not describe the locality with more precision than would be required in a case of arson or burglary.—People v. Saunders, 29 Mich. 269.

¶ 189. In an information for keeping a house of ill fame, the offense may be charged as having been committed on a day certain, and on divers other days and times between that day and a previous day specified, it being a continuing offense.—People v. Russell, 110 Mich. 46.

§ 43e. Election crimes.

Official malfeasance in refusing vote or oath to voter, see post ¶¶ 241-243.

§ 43e. Embezzlements.

Statutory requisites and particularity in charge of embezzlement, see Comp. L. 1915, § 15609 et seq.

¶ 190. A general allegation of embezzlement is sufficient under Comp. L. 1871, § 7811, How. St. § 9421.—People v. Bringard, 39 Mich. 22.

¶ 191. An ini
ment or statutor fective for not s embezzled consis of deposit. But ment.—People v.

¶ 192. In an i treasurer, under
St. § 9149, it i the particular to identify the
from which th
McKinney, 10 M

¶ 193. It is s tion for embez urer that the embezzled was the state and i cial custody o without showin
McKinney, 10 M

¶ 194. An in for collecting of an attorney
the prosecutor same to him distinctly aver torney and cl fendant and th
People v. Tryo

¶ 195. An i must allege th possession of office or empl §§ 11565, 1159
erally.—People

¶ 196. An that the accu at the time h own use amou was "in his tody and cont
much as if th
press terms, defining bank
ser, 148 Mich.

¶ 197. An following the that defenda treasurer did feloniously a Chelsea Savi
der the laws large sum of ment was suf objection the and did not appropriation zier, 159 Mic

§ 43e. Escape cape

¶ 198. An oner to esca offense in st

statute (How. St. § 9246), with a statement of the facts out of which the offense arose; any other fact needed to convict is necessarily implied.—People v. Murray, 57 Mich. 396.

¶ 199. An information under How. St. § 9245, for aiding escape from prison of any prisoner "there lawfully committed or detained," must set forth some offense known to the law for which such prisoner was so committed or detained.—People v. Hamaker, 92 Mich. 11.

¶ 200. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 11315, an information is sufficient which recites in substance the confinement of prisoners under due process, charged with a felony, which is fully described, and charges the defendant with feloniously conveying into the jail two steel files and two steel saws, the same being adapted and useful to aid any prisoner in making his escape, with intent to facilitate the escape, and to aid in the escape, of said prisoners.—People v. Webb, 127 Mich. 29.

¶ 201. The use of the word "unto," instead of the word "into," in an information for a violation of How. St. § 9245, which provides that "every person who shall convey into any jail, prison, or other like place of confinement, any disguise, or any instrument, tool, weapon, or other thing, adapted or useful to aid any prisoner in making his escape, with intent to facilitate the escape of any prisoner there lawfully committed or detained, * * * shall be punished," etc., is a fatal defect, and may be taken advantage of by a motion in arrest of judgment.—People v. Rathbun, 105 Mich. 699.

§ 43f. False personations and disguises.

¶ 202. An information which charges respondent with assuming to be, without also alleging that he took upon himself to act as, a member of the metropolitan police force of Detroit, is fatally defective under How. St. § 9252.—People v. Cronin, 80 Mich. 646.

§ 43f. False pretenses and cheats.

Conspiracy to cheat and defraud, description of purposed fraud, see ante ¶ 173 et seq.
Obtaining signature to obligation or instrument by trick or fraud, see post ¶ 231 et seq.
Statutory form for false pretenses, see Comp. L. 1915, § 15740.

¶ 203. An information for obtaining money under false pretenses is fatally defective if it fails to allege that respondent knew that the representations charged to have been made by him were false.—People v. Behee, 90 Mich. 356; People v. Fitzgerald, 92 Mich. 328.

¶ 204. An information for obtaining goods by false pretenses must aver that the pretenses were false in fact, and an allegation that respondent knew them to be false is insufficient.—People v. Reynolds, 71 Mich. 343.

¶ 205. An information for obtaining property by false pretenses set forth that defendant did designedly and falsely represent and pretend that he was collecting money for a woman whose son, her only means of support, had been killed on a specified day on a certain railroad. Held, that falsity of the representations was not sufficiently alleged by an averment that respondent was not authorized to collect the money, and that no such accident as that described by him had occurred.—People v. Behee, 90 Mich. 356.

¶ 206. The falsity of respondent's pretense that he was authorized by a certain society to collect money for a charity is sufficiently averred where the information states that he was not at any time authorized by such society to collect any money, etc.—People v. Fitzgerald, 92 Mich. 328.

¶ 207. An information for obtaining goods by false pretenses may properly allege that the representations were made to an agent, if he had authority to transfer the goods; and this is so though the principal acted through the agent only.—People v. Wakely, 62 Mich. 297.

¶ 208. The averment in an information for obtaining money under false pretenses, that certain representations as to the quantity and value of the land which the accused was about to sell to the party to whom the representations were made were false, "by means of which said false pretenses" the money was obtained, is essentially defective if no facts are averred showing a connection between the representations and the alleged result.—Enders v. People, 20 Mich. 233.

¶ 209. In an information for obtaining money by false pretenses it is not necessary to allege in express words that the person defrauded relied on the representations made, but this is a necessary implication from the allegation that he was induced by the representations to part with his money.—People v. Jacobs, 35 Mich. 36.

¶ 210. An information for obtaining property by false pretenses concerning a mortgage assigned to the defrauded party is sufficient if it alleges in effect that the mortgage was assigned to him directly, that the false representations were made to induce him to purchase it, and that, in reliance upon the statements and representations made, he did purchase it and parted with his property thereafter.—People v. Cline, 44 Mich. 290.

¶ 211. Where the representations set forth in an information for obtaining money by false pretenses are of such a nature as to negative any possible hypothesis of respondent's ignorance of their falsity, an averment that respondent knew them to be false is not necessary. An information, therefore, alleging that respondent designedly falsely represented and pretended that he had received from a certain person a subscription for a specified amount, with payment in full thereon, whereas such person had subscribed and paid only a specified smaller amount, is sufficient.—People v. Lennox, 106 Mich. 625.

¶ 212. An information for obtaining money belonging to a certain corporation by means of false pretenses made to a third person is fatally defective if it fails to aver that the third person was the agent of the corporation, or was authorized to pay out its money, or was so related to it as to warrant the inference that he was so authorized.—People v. Behee, 90 Mich. 356.

¶ 213. An information charging respondent with obtaining a person's signature to two promissory notes on false and fraudulent representations as to a certain corporation of which respondent claimed to be agent did not state the consideration of the notes, or to whom they were payable, or whether they were negotiable or not, nor did it in any way connect the notes with the corporation, or the corporation with the signer or with respondent. Held, that no offense was charged.—People v. Brown, 71 Mich. 296.

¶ 214. An information for obtaining from a certain firm, under false pretenses, money for a charity, sufficiently shows the authority of the person who gave the money where it avers him to be a partner.—People v. Fitzgerald, 92 Mich. 328.

¶ 215. An information for obtaining money by false pretenses showed a natural connection between the false pretenses and the obtaining of the money, where it was alleged that the respondent, a justice of the peace and member of a township board, made use of the orders for the payment of certain claims, to fraudulently obtain money of the township for greater amounts than the correct amounts of such orders.—People v. Luttermoser, 122 Mich. 562.

¶ 216. An information for obtaining money under false pretenses under Comp. L. 1897, § 11575, How. 2nd Ed., § 14624, alleging that accused and another person claimed to be agents of a certain corporation; that they designedly and falsely represented and pretended to have accurate information as to the financial condition of the company; that they prepared and presented to a certain bank for the purpose of obtaining credit a false financial statement of the assets and liabilities of the company, and that such bank relied upon such false statement and received from accused a certain promissory note and thereupon paid to the company and to accused a certain sum for such note, held sufficient.—People v. Johnson, 190 Mich. 170. (Stone, C. J., Bird and Kuhn, JJ., dissenting.)

§ 43f. Forgery and counterfeiting and uttering.

Describing forged papers, see also ante §§ 29, 30.

Obtaining genuin post § 43f.
Statutory form
1915, § 15740.

¶ 217. Laws 18
obviates the neces indictment a copy or counterfeit b
Mich. 655.

¶ 218. It is not for counterfeiting
genuine bills of th
bills are assimila
Mich. 655.

¶ 219. It is not sides a forged ack also forged; since for forgery becau quired to make t proving.—People

¶ 220. As an in many different uttering and publ
at least one coun
what the forgery
absolutely necessa
Mich. 255.

¶ 221. An inf
forged power of a forgery only of t edgment, and the thentication anne good; the appende regarded as so fa
as to be included
nate it.—People v

¶ 222. An infor
set forth whose t
what the forgery
crime is intent to 9226).—People v.

¶ 223. An info
a deed need not parent grantor t therein, so long located and the d
—People v. Van

¶ 224. Under E makes it a crime a bill of excha
an information f
ment is sufficien instrument "an out such instrum
ments thereon.—
410.

¶ 225. An inst
nudum pactum,
and publishing forged, in order offense, must, by show that the instrument published was one which, if genuine, would be binding.—People v. Parker, 114 Mich. 442.

¶ 226. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 11631, making it a crime to sell or offer to sell or have in possession any false, forged or counterfeit railroad passenger ticket, an information which alleges that the respondent had in his possession a certain false, forged and counterfeit ticket with intent to injure and defraud is in strict compliance with the statute in regard to charging intent to injure and defraud in connection with the alleged forgery.—People v. Smith, 125 Mich. 556.

¶ 227. In a prosecution under Comp. L. 1897, § 11631, making it a crime to sell or offer to sell or have in possession any false, forged or counterfeit railroad passenger tickets, an information charging that the ticket sold was false, forged and counterfeit and that the respondent knowingly, willingly and feloniously had it in his possession with intent to injure and defraud, need not allege the necessity of taking the ticket to the railroad office for signing and stamping for return passage although such requirement does not appear on the face of the ticket.—People v. Smith, 125 Mich. 566.

¶ 228. The words "as true," as used in Comp. L. 1857, § 5809, How. St. § 9220, in defining certain counterfeiting offenses, refer both to "the intent to pass" and to "render the same current"; and an indictment charging the possession of such bills "with intent to utter and pass the same," omitting the words "as true," is insufficient.—People v. Stewart, 4 Mich. 655.

¶ 229. An indictment for knowingly having in possession instruments adapted and designed for making counterfeit coin, to wit, Mexican dollars, with intent to use the same, need not allege that the defendant was not employed in the mint of the United States.—Harlan v. People, 1 D. 207.

§ 43f. Criminal frauds and obtaining signatures.

Obtaining signatures, see also ante ¶ 213.
Threats and false accusations to extort money, see post § 43t.

¶ 230. On a prosecution under Pub. Acts 1913, No. 276, for inserting fraudulent advertisements in a newspaper, an information setting out the newspaper advertisement and charging defendant with making therein "certain assertions, representations, and statements of facts which were untrue, deceptive, and misleading," and setting out in detail the statements, etc., relied upon, held sufficient.—Jasnowski v. Detroit Recorder's Court Judge, 192 Mich. 139.

¶ 231. An information for fraudulently obtaining a signature to a promissory note (How. St. § 9353) is not defective in failing to allege that the note was delivered to respondent.—People v. Kinney, 110 Mich. 97.

¶ 232. An information under How. St. § 9353, for fraudulently obtaining the signature of another to a promissory note, which sets up facts necessarily leading to the single and inevitable conclusion that the note was signed in consideration of the alleged false representations, is not invalid because it does not expressly aver such to have been the fact.—People v. Kinney, 110 Mich. 97.

§ 43g. Gaming and betting.

¶ 233. An information under How. St. § 2029, which charges that the respondent did knowingly suffer a gaming room and gaming table to be kept and maintained and played on premises occupied and controlled by him (describing them), contrary to the form of the statute in such case made and provided, is fatally defective, in that it fails to charge that the gaming room and gaming table suffered to be kept were maintained for hire, gain, or reward.—People v. Wiethoff, 100 Mich. 393.

§ 43h. Homicides and assaults to murder or do great bodily harm.

Matters wherein homicide accusations are subject to same general rules as other indictments, see ante I, B, post I, C-E.
Averments of substance in indictments for homicide, see Homicide, VI.
Averments of substance in indictments for homicidal assaults and assaults with intent to do great bodily harm, see Homicide, VI.
Averments as to degree in indictment for murder, see Homicide § 35.

§ 43i. Incest.

¶ 234. An information for incest, which charges the crime to have been committed with one H., "she, the said H., being then and there the daughter" of the accused, is sufficient without also averring, in the words of the statute, that the parties were "within the degrees of consanguinity within which marriages are prohibited," etc.—Hicks v. People, 10 Mich. 395.

¶ 235. An information for incest under How. St. § 9291, which charges respondent, a married man, with having had sexual intercourse with his daughter, need not allege that he committed the crime of adultery; nor is it defective because he is charged with having committed the crime of fornication in so doing.—People v. Cease, 80 Mich. 576.

§ 43i. Indecency and obscenity.

Lewd and lascivious cohabitation, see post § 431.

¶ 236. In an indictment for publishing a lawdy and obscene paper, it is not necessary to set forth the obscene matter on which the people rely for a conviction.—People v. Girardin, 1 Mich. 90.

§ 43l. Larceny and statutory stealings.

General requisites wherein larceny indictments are same as others, see ante I, B, post I, C-E.

Substantial requisites and sufficiency of averments, see Larceny, II.

Receiving stolen goods, see post § 43r.

§ 43l. Lewd and lascivious cohabitation.

Keeping disorderly houses, see ante § 43d.

¶ 237. Both parties must be joined as defendants in the same information or indictment for lewd and lascivious cohabitation unless one of the parties be unknown or since dead.—Delany v. People, 10 Mich. 241.

¶ 238. An information which charged that one T. "did lewdly and lasciviously associate and cohabit with one M., he, the said T., being then and there a man, and she, the said M., being then and there a woman, and they, the said T. and M., not being then and there married to each other," does not charge the parties with a joint offense, but is a charge against the man alone and therefore bad.—Delany v. People, 10 Mich. 241.

§ 43m. Malicious mischief or injury to property.

¶ 239. An information charging that the defendant, on a day and at a place named, in the county, "a certain harness, of the value of fifty dollars, of the personal property of one Edwin R. Wilson, then and there being found, feloniously, wilfully and maliciously did then and there injure and destroy, by then and there cutting the lines and martingales of said harness, and taking the rings from said martingales, contrary to the statute," etc., is held a good information for the malicious destruction of personal property of the value of $50.—McKinney v. People, 32 Mich. 284.

§ 43o. Obstructing justice and contempts.

Escapes, prison breach, and aiding escapes, see ante § 43e.

Resisting officers and obstructing them in performance of duty, see post ¶ 263 et seq.

¶ 240. In a prosecution for the obstruction of justice, and information which charges that respondent "well knowing the premises" and "with intent to obstruct and hinder the due course of justice" unlawfully dissuaded and carried away a certain witness for the purpose of preventing him from appearing to testify, sufficiently charges a substantive offense and not an attempt.—People v. Boyd, 174 Mich. 321.

§ 43o. Official malfeasance or misconduct.

¶ 241. An indictment for non-performance of an official act, to wit, refusal to register a voter, must set f as under the law i duty to perform t
13 Mich. 446.

¶ 242. Since the registration of vot inspectors of an e minister to a pers
the oaths prescri
pp. 107, 108, § 25,
defective if it fail
of the person offer
tered.—Wattles v.

¶ 243. In inforn ance in refusing to tion that the pers
take an oath "ther was a qualified el an allegation of t
tion nor of his pre
People, 13 Mich. 44

§ 43p. Perjury and Statutory form fo

see Comp. L.

¶ 244. An infor
not show the dat taken; it is enoug which it was tak
Mich. 484.

¶ 245. Defendan
falsely made oath t steal, take and ca
value of $15, of th
It was objected t matters set forth sions of law, but t
well taken.—Hoch

¶ 246. Where a in making an affid
a suit in which the
of a motion made riality of the affi
does not allege th
to be, or was in fa
in connection ther
or was material fo cause, the affidav
nected with any ju perjury either a
How. St. § 9236, r show that the oa law.—People v. F

¶ 247. An infor
the offense was c
tion of a person n
justice of the pe
on a day specifi charged before s complaint on beh offense of forgery came on to be he was then and the
the respondent th

witness on behalf of the people, and was sworn touching the matter in controversy, etc., is held sufficient to identify the court and the occasion as constituting such a tribunal and hearing as would render false swearing perjury within Comp. L. 1871, § 7918, How. St., § 9539.—Flint v. People, 35 Mich. 491.

¶ 248. Where an information for perjury alleges that the respondent appeared as a witness "on his own behalf," no other statement that he had been allowed to testify "at his own request" (How. St., § 7544) is necessary.—People v. Brown, 54 Mich. 15.

¶ 249. The indictment for perjury must aver that the false allegation was material to the matter in question, or it must clearly appear by the indictment to have been so from the statement alleged to be false.—People v. Collier, 1 Mich. 137.

¶ 250. Where the indictment for perjury stated that "it became and was material to ascertain the truth of the matters hereinafter alleged to have been sworn to"—stating what the defendant swore to—the averment was held insufficient.—People v. Collier, 1 Mich. 137.

¶ 251. A general allegation of the materiality of testimony mentioned in the indictment for perjury is sufficient, and it is not necessary to set forth so much of the proceedings as will show it to be material.—Hoch v. People, 3 Mich. 552; Flint v. People, 35 Mich. 491.

¶ 252. In an information for perjury committed in an examination before a justice, an allegation "that it then and there, upon said examination, became a material question whether" certain matters of fact set forth were true when taken, with the averment that the respondent swore to them as being true, and that they were false, and with the necessary averments which render false swearing perjury, is held a sufficient averment of materiality to the issue, and not to be ambiguous.—Flint v. People, 35 Mich. 491.

¶ 253. Where an information alleging perjury in swearing to a bill in equity does not show that the bill is of a character required by law to be verified by oath, it is insufficient, both at common law and under Comp. L. 1857, § 5821; a general allegation that the defendant was "lawfully required to declare and depose," etc., the oath not being taken upon a trial of the cause, is not sufficient; the information should set forth the facts, or show enough of the nature of the proceedings, and of the purposes for which the oath was taken, or to be used, to show that it was authorized by law. Where the bill is not one whose allegations can be treated as evidence on the trial, an allegation in the information that "it then and there became a material question in said bill of complaint and in said judicial proceeding whether the claim referred to existed, etc., is wholly insufficient and variant from the truth; such an oath could become material only on some motion based upon it, and then its materiality to such motion must be alleged. Such a defect in the information cannot be cured by the proofs introduced.—People v. Gaige, 26 Mich. 30.

¶ 254. An information for perjury, alleging that it became material, on a trial for larceny, to know whether or not certain moneys were paid to the accused therein by the respondent on September 11, 1894, and that the respondent testified upon such trial that he "paid it on the 11th of September," at the accused's place, and obtained a receipt, may properly set forth, by innuendo, that by such testimony the respondent meant that he paid a specified amount of money on September 11, 1894, it being for the jury to say whether such was in fact the meaning intended to be conveyed.—People v. German, 110 Mich. 244.

¶ 255. The information for perjury, committed on a prosecution for larceny, need not allege that the person accused of larceny owned or had a place, to support proof that the statement that the money was paid by respondent at the former's "place" was false.—People v. German, 110 Mich. 244.

¶ 256. An information under Comp. L. § 11308, making it a felony to endeavor to incite or procure perjury though no perjury be committed need not aver that the testimony would be false and that the witness knew it to be false.—People v. Clement, 127 Mich. 130.

¶ 257. Defendant was convicted of perjury in giving testimony in a divorce suit in which he was complainant. The complaint alleged only in general terms that the question on which defendant testified falsely was material and that defendant swore falsely. It averred that defendant in reply to a question as to how long he had lived in Detroit answered "about two years and a couple of months"; and that in fact the defendant had not lived in Michigan for as much as two years prior to the time of filing the divorce bill. Held, the complaint was bad: (1) Because it did not set out facts showing the materiality of the alleged false testimony; (2) because, by failing to name the date of filing of the divorce suit, it did not set out facts showing defendant's statement to be false nor did it expressly negative his statement.—People v. Vogt, 156 Mich. 594.

§ 43p. Prize fighting.

¶ 258. Since How. St., § 9306, which provides that any person who shall be a party to or engage in a prize-fight, "or any other fight in the nature of a prize-fight," shall be punished, etc., defines but one offense, a count charging that respondent engaged in a fight in the nature of a prize-fight charges no offense additional to one charging a "prize-fight."—People v. Taylor, 96 Mich. 576.

¶ 259. Under How St., § 9306, defining as a crime the being a party to or engaging in a "prize-fight, or any other fight in the nature of a prize-fight," an information charging that respondent did "unlawfully engage in a prize-fight with one B., and did then and there fight a prize-fight with said B. contrary to the statutes," and not setting out the particular acts constituting the offense charged, is sufficient.—People v. Taylor, 96 Mich. 576.

§ 43r. Rape and assaults and attempts thereat.

Matters and requisites common to all indictments, see ante I, B, post I, C-E.

Substantial averments in rape and assaults of carnal nature included therein, see Rape.

§ 43r. Receiving stolen goods.

¶ 260. An information for receiving stolen goods need not allege the time and place of the theft.—People v. Goldberg, 39 Mich. 545; People v. Smith, 94 Mich. 644.

¶ 261. An information for receiving stolen property, knowing, etc., need not allege that the prosecution is for a first offense, or that the act of stealing was not a simple larceny, or that respondent has made no restitution or satisfaction.—People v. Caulkins, 67 Mich. 488.

§43r. Removal or spoliation of records.

Laying title to public record books, see ante ¶ 109.

¶ 262. An information under How. St., § 9347, charging the respondent with carrying away "an enrolled decree, containing the bill of complaint, pleadings and other papers" filed in and belonging to a designated chancery case, need not describe "the other papers" more specifically, it appearing that they were a part of the enrolled decree.—People v. Bussey, 82 Mich. 49.

§ 43r. Resisting or obstructing officers.

Description of crime for which arrest was being made, see also ante ¶ 113.

¶ 263. An information charging respondent with obstructing an officer in his effort to maintain the peace is bad if it fails to show the acts of the officer in the performance of which he was obstructed, and the acts of respondent constituting the obstruction.—People v. Hamilton, 71 Mich. 340.

¶ 264. An information for resisting an officer in attempting to serve a warrant issued by a justice of the peace must set out all the facts which gave the justice jurisdiction to issue the warrant.—People v. McLean, 68 Mich. 480.

¶ 265. An i
§ 9257, for resi respondent "did the officer "in office in attemp being then and the peace." A not a crime, i against it. H drunk" were su
information wa
67 Mich. 482.

¶ 266. An i cused with "k saulting a pers taxes, alleging t a village treas
guage of the sta is not defective defendant knev was an officer,
severe penalty,
critical, the in ingly" in the knowledge that officer, and the ful unless mad knowingly.—Pe
431.

¶ 267. An in
Comp L. 1897, of "knowingly sisting, * * wounding an of
and keep the pe
then and there attempts and e
and keep the pe facts wherefron out such parti
People v. Hubbs

¶ 268. On a officer who was held that it wa
the indictment under which th nature of the scribed in the defendant wha answer.—Peopl

§ 43r. Robbery

Averments as t ments for see Homici

¶ 269. A co
bery is not pe laid under the dients of one the offense is 9091).—People

¶ 270. An i offense of an (Comp. L. 187 not to be held sion of descri

the offense in the words of the statute; nor for the omission of the word "feloniously."—Durand v. People, 47 Mich. 332.

§ 43s. Seduction.

Matters and requisites common to all crimes, see ante I, B, post I, C-E.
Substantial averments of the crime, see Seduction, II.

§ 43t. Threats.

Averment in words of statute of crime of threats to extort money, see also ante ¶ 132.
Conspiracy to extort by threats, see ante § 43c.

¶ 271. In an information under How. St., § 9093, relating to threats and threatening letters, the character of the threat should be set out so that it may be seen whether a substantial threat was made.—People v. Jones, 62 Mich. 304.

¶ 272. An information in the language of the statute (How. St., § 9093), that respondent maliciously threatened to "accuse" a designated person of a specified crime, with intent to extort money, sufficiently shows a threat to prefer charges against such person in some court.—People v. Frey, 112 Mich. 251.

¶ 273. An information charging the offense of obtaining a note by means of a false accusation that a certain person was the father of an unborn child of a certain woman, the respondent knowing the accusation to be false, and that it was represented that such note would operate as a full satisfaction of all claims of said woman, and that such representation was relied on, was sufficient as against the objection that the information failed to allege respondent was or claimed to be authorized to act as agent of said woman. —People v. Stockwell, 135 Mich. 341.

§ 43u. Unlawful practice of profession or unlicensed business.

Negativing exceptions, see also ante § 32.

¶ 274. A complaint under Laws 1883, Act No. 167, for practicing medicine without statutory license and qualifications, need not allege by what means or on whom accused so practiced.—People v. Phippin, 70 Mich. 6.

¶ 275. A complaint for unlawfully practicing medicine under Pub. Acts 1899, Act 237, was sufficient which was stated in the language of the statute, without specifying the particular acts or means by which the defendant practiced medicine.—White v. Lapeer Circuit Judge, 133 Mich. 93.

¶ 276. On a prosecution of a physician for having unlawfully procured himself to be registered as a physician under Pub. Acts 1899, Act No. 237, How. 2nd Ed., § 5108 et seq., as amended by Pub. Acts 1913, Act No. 368, an information charging the offense in the language of the statute, held sufficient.—People v. Maczulski, 194 Mich. 193.

¶ 277. Information charging the respondent "unlawfully did engage in the business of practice of medicine and did practice medicine within the meaning of Act 237 of the Public Acts of the state of Michigan for the year 1899 and the amendments thereto without before so doing having complied with the provisions of said Act and its amendments, that is to say, without being then and there the lawful possessor of a certificate of registration or license issued by a board of registration in medicine," etc., held bad under Pub. Acts 1899, No. 237, How. 2nd Ed. § 5108 et seq., as amended by Pub. Acts 1913. No. 368, because the general words employed do not fully set forth all of the assignments necessary to constitute the offense, and as the subject-matter is defined by the statute by descriptive words not employed in the information, and as a person may innocently do things embraced in the definition given in the statute.—People v. Watson, 196 Mich. 36.

¶ 278. In a criminal prosecution brought under Comp. Laws 1897, § 5324, for traveling from place to place and selling goods by sample without having obtained a peddler's license, it is not necessary to negative in the complaint the exceptions set out in a separate section of the statute.—People v. Stewart, 167 Mich. 417. Reversed in 232 U. S. 665, 58 L. ed. 786, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 476.

¶ 279. A complaint charged defendant with loaning twenty-five dollars to a specified person in a given city at a named date, at a rate of interest exceeding seven per cent per annum without having obtained a license as required by statute. Held, there being sufficient identification to bar any subsequent prosecution for the same offense, and the charge being sufficiently plain and definite that defendant, without professional aid, was informed as to the nature and cause of the accusation against him, the complaint was sufficient even though not ideal in form. —People v. Quider, 172 Mich. 280.

C. JOINDER AND SEPARATION; COUNTS AND ELECTION.

§ 44. Joint indictment of several persons.

Joint information on separate preliminary hearings and commitments, and separate information on joint commitment, see ante § 18.
Joinder of counts in same indictment or information, see post § 45.
Separate or joint trials, see post § 326.
Sufficiency of proofs against each of defendants, see post § 308.
Necessity of joint charge for lewd and lascivious cohabitation, see ante ¶¶ 237, 238, post ¶ 1515.
Indictment of accessaries without indictment or joinder of principal, see Comp. L. 1915. § 15743.

¶ 280. One or more respondents may be informed against for an assault upon two persons with intent to do great bodily harm, less than the crime of murder, if the assault complained of was made by the same act or acts.—People v. Ellsworth, 90 Mich. 442.

§ 45. Propriety of joinder of counts and charges.

Indictment of two or more persons jointly, see ante § 44.
Adding counts to cover commitment in varying aspects, see ante § 16.
Objections for improper joinder and effect of misjoinder, see post I, D.
Mode of objection for misjoinder, see post § 59.
Construction respecting duplicity, see post § 76.
Charging on different counts according to diverse theories of case, see post § 423.
Verdict on the several counts, see post § 472.
Validity of law for joining counts, see Constitutional Law, § 198, ¶ 846.
Offenses and degrees joinable in information, see Comp. L. 1915, § 15762.
Proper counts to be joined with larceny counts, see Comp. L. 1915, § 15758.

¶ 281. Counts may be joined if they relate to one and the same transaction, so that on the trial one of them will suffice to meet the proof; but if the object is to prosecute separate felonies under one information they cannot be joined.—People v. Aikin, 66 Mich. 460.

¶ 282. Defendant state treasurer was indicted under Comp. Laws 1897, § 11614, for embezzlement for depositing funds in a bank for his own personal profit. The indictment contained twenty-eight counts, alleging various deposits made during the course of two years. Held, these counts were not improperly joined in view of the fact that defendant's general plan and purpose made all these offenses a part of the same transaction.—People v. Glazier, 159 Mich. 528.

¶ 283. An information may charge, in different counts, the obtaining of a note by false pretenses, and a conspiracy to commit that crime, founded on the same transaction.—People v. Summers, 115 Mich. 537.

¶ 284. The forgery and uttering of a bond or note, and of the mortgage which secures it, are connected transactions, and can be joined in the same information.—People v. Sharp, 53 Mich. 523.

¶ 285. An information contained four counts. The first, based on the complaint and warrant, charged manslaughter in the usual statutory terms; the second and third charged statutory manslaughter resulting from an abortion, the second alleging the administration of drugs, the third the use of an instrument; and the fourth count charged manslaughter resulting from the respondent's neglect while acting as a physician after the deceased had g that the second erly made und lated to the san action as in t fourth should scribing a whol
Aikin, 66 Mich.

¶ 286. A cou assault with in may be joined offense of assau
der, though the both are felonie includes the oth to the greater
Sweeney, 55 Mi

¶ 287. Whetl statutory mans the same infor procurement of liminary exam
volved all the c quære (How. St
58 Mich. 594.

¶ 288. An in larceny in a sh longing to two different values place at the sa distinct offens
Mich. 573.

¶ 289. Counts commit rape ar ties with a fem
sault and batte information.—P
632.

§ 46. Necessity
Time and ma
§§ 47, 48.
Discretion to quashing, s
Cure of errors
post § 65.

¶ 290. Electi required on the are charged w
the same acts
testimony mus
People v. Swe
McDowell, 63

¶ 291. As a when it clearl or otherwise felonies are proved, the co
quash, or com which count course is som
--People v. M

¶ 292. Whe
in an indictm

law, spring out of substantially the same transaction, or are so connected in their facts as to make substantially parts of the same transaction or connected series of facts, the defendant cannot be prejudiced in his defense by the joinder, and the court will neither quash nor compel an election.—People v. McKinney, 10 Mich. 54.

¶ 293. The joinder, as separate counts in one information, of several offenses which, though distinct in point of law, spring from substantially the same transaction, as the forgery of a mortgage, its certificate of acknowledgment and the accompanying bond, and the uttering of each, cannot operate to the legal prejudice of the accused, and he is not entitled, as a matter of right, to compel an election between them.—Van Sickle v. People, 29 Mich. 61.

¶ 294. On information in several counts for manslaughter, manslaughter by abortion with drugs, manslaughter by abortion with instruments, and manslaughter by negligence as attending physician, the prosecution is put to an election.—People v. Aikin, 66 Mich. 460.

¶ 295. Election should be compelled where some counts charge sale of intoxicating liquors, while others charge keeping of saloon where such liquors are sold, those being distinct offenses.—People v. Keefer, 97 Mich. 15.

¶ 296. The prosecutor should not be required to elect upon which count he would claim a conviction, where all the counts were for the forging and for uttering the same indorsement upon a check, and the same check and indorsements were set out in each count of the information.—People v. Kemp, 76 Mich. 410.

¶ 297. Where one count in an information charged respondents with conspiring to falsely accuse a person of arson, and the second count of larceny, and the whole case was originally charged as a single conspiring to make both charges, and the testimony all related to one transaction, or set of connected transactions, an election of counts is not required.—People v. Dyer, 79 Mich. 480.

¶ 298. A respondent informed against in one count for keeping his saloon open on Sunday, and in a second count for keeping the windows of his saloon curtained during the same day, is entitled to an election of counts. —People v. Rohrer, 100 Mich. 126.

¶ 299. Where an information charges the forgery of an order for the payment of money, and also the uttering of the forged order, the prosecution cannot be required to elect upon which count it will rely for conviction. (The syllabus in the official report states that each count set forth the order.)—People v. Warner, 104 Mich. 337.

¶ 300. Where a respondent is charged with pretending to tell fortunes as a continuing offense, and several instances of such disorderly conduct are shown upon the trial, the prosecution cannot be compelled to elect upon which of these specific acts conviction is asked, all being admissible under the general charge.—People v. Elmer, 109 Mich. 493.

¶ 301. Where an information based on Pub. Acts 1911, Act No. 62, How. 2nd Ed., § 5299, prohibiting certain classes of immoral advertising, contains a count charging the advertising of the treatment of venereal diseases and sexual ailments and a second count charges that defendant advertised that he was a specialist in diseases of the sexual organs, etc., an election between the counts will not be compelled.—People v. Kennedy, 176 Mich. 384.

§ 47. Time for election.

¶ 302. Where an information for manslaughter in procuring an abortion contains three counts, charging, respectively, the use of drugs, the use of an instrument, and the employment of means unknown, an election by the prosecution of the count relied upon for a conviction, made upon the submission of the case to the jury, sufficiently protects the rights of the respondent.—People v. Seaman, 107 Mich. 348.

¶ 303. Where, in a criminal trial, the defendant asks at the beginning that the prosecution be compelled to elect between two counts, it is not error for the court not to compel this election until the end of the case, where the trial proceeded in the same manner as if the election had been directed at the first.—People v. Burman, 154 Mich. 150.

§ 48. Manner and indicia of election.

¶ 304. On trial of an information for incest the prosecutor may, before the evidence is introduced, select any one act of criminal intercourse which occurred within the jurisdiction of the court, and within the period of the statute of limitations applicable to the offense, as the one upon which a conviction will be sought. But when evidence has been introduced tending directly to the proof of one act, and for the purpose of procuring a conviction upon it, the prosecutor is deemed to have made his election, and that act must thereafter be considered the one charged against the defendant, and for which alone he can be found guilty.—People v. Jenness, 5 Mich. 305.

¶ 305. The introduction of evidence upon any one count in an information for seduction is a sufficient election of that count as the one on which the prosecutrix relies, and evidence of subsequent acts is not admissible for the purpose of securing a conviction on them.—People v. Clark, 33 Mich. 112.

¶ 306. In an indictment for rape the information alleged the date of the crime under a videlicet as July 18th. In his opening statement to the jury the prosecutor stated that the act was committed about a week before July 18th. Held, the prosecutor did not thereby elect to fix the crime as of July 11th, and might prove it as of a date two weeks before July 18th.—People v. Nichols, 159 Mich. 355.

¶ 307. In an indictment for rape the information alleged the date of the crime as July 18th. In his opening statement to the jury the prosecutor stated that the act relied on was committed about a week prior to July 18th. He then proceeded to prove an act of intercourse in June, but immediately disclaimed that he relied on such act. Held, he did not thereby elect to rely on the act in June, and the proof was for the purpose offered admissible.—People v. Nichols, 159 Mich. 355.

D. DEFECTS, OBJECTIONS AND AMENDMENTS.

§ 49. Grounds and materiality of objections.

[Note. The requisites and sufficiency of indictments are treated, ante I, B, that is to say, if the precedent arose on a question whether the indictment was good or defective, it has been there treated; but where the question is as to the materiality or importance of what is concededly a defect, the matter is treated here.]

Defects in preliminary proceedings, see post § 50.

Misnomer or misdescription, see post § 51.

Grammatical or verbal defects, see post § 52.

Impossible dates and clerical errors of time, see post § 53.

Good and bad counts in same indictment, see post § 55.

Surplusage, see post § 54.

Construction and intendment of averments on objection to them, see post §§ 56-58.

Materiality of variance of information from commitment, see ante § 14.

Materiality of variances of proofs from averments, see post § 77 et seq.

Abatement of prosecution by pardon, see also post ¶ 2724.

Destruction of indictment, effect to discharge bail, see Arrest ¶ 147.

Defects in prosecution affecting liability for malicious prosecution, see Malicious Prosecution, II.

Person entitled to object that he was denied counsel before grand jury, see ante ¶ 26.

Proper modes of making objections, see post § 59.

Amendments to meet objections, see post § 69 et seq.

Sufficiency of indictment or information as law question for court alone, see post § 396, ¶ 1820.

Effect of omissions, misdescriptions and imperfections in indictments, matters made immaterial by statute, see Comp. L. 1915, § 15735.

Imperfections enumerated as immaterial by statute, see Comp. L. 1915, § 15746.

Sufficiency after of statute f
L. 1915, §

¶ 308. Whe
counts not char and counts cha that on which court should under them ove
Hamilton v. P

¶ 309. An in by a member o
to the objecti though it does to words used,
a specified amo
a specified pu vote, opinion, d pending bill.—I 422.

¶ 310. The f fined as a judi indictment for § 11312, where if erroneous, b and acts, the t judicial or adm
—People v. Sa

¶ 311. The
of the prope
"against the fo
made and pro and dignity o
Michigan," is c
How. St. § 9
Mich. 760.

¶ 312. It ca include allegat offense charge tion more defi damnified by den on him, a only calls for tion.—McName

¶ 313. It is proper allegat file a bond wa for illegal liq
there was nei
nor receipt iss that accused not in the liqu
Mich. 89.

§ 50. ——Defe
limina

Irregularities
before it,

Dismissal of ing in c
see post

Matters of p tions to
post § 60

¶ 314. The indictments of a grand jury which held over to the term succeeding the one to which it was summoned and thus was a de facto jury, being valid, they could not be set aside on a motion to quash, or by challenge to the array.—People v. Morgan, 133 Mich. 550.

¶ 315. How. St. §§ 9496, 9497, specifying as the only challenge to a grand jury that a member is prosecutor or complainant, expressly precludes other grounds; and such being then excluded are also excluded if made on trial of the indictment.—People v. Smith, 118 Mich. 73.

¶ 316. In a prosecution for rape, where respondent objected to any witnesses being sworn, on the ground that the complaint before the justice was made upon information and belief, and that a warrant issued thereon was invalid, it was not error to receive such testimony, where the objection was not made in the justice court where an examination was had, and where it appeared at the trial in the circuit court, that before the warrant was issued, the girl was examined orally.—People v. Row, 135 Mich. 505.

¶ 317. On prosecution of an extradited prisoner the question of the authority of the clerk to issue a warrant of arrest was immaterial, where the warrant of the governor empowering the sheriff to receive respondent from the proper authorities of a sister state and convey him to this state to be dealt with according to law, contained authority to authorize the sheriff to produce respondent before the court in which the information was filed.—People v. Stockwell, 135 Mich. 341.

¶ 318. An objection that accused has had no preliminary examination on a criminal charge is immaterial where the charge upon which he is alleged to have had no examination is withdrawn and the jury was limited to the consideration of the charge upon which he had had an examination.—People v. Harris, 144 Mich. 12.

§ 51. ——Misnomer or misdescription.

Omission of name of abandoned child, see also ante ¶ 142.

Sufficiency of name or description, see ante § 27 et seq.

¶ 319. The omission in a complaint and warrant for larceny of the Christian name of the owner of the stolen property is an irregularity which respondent might waive, and which could be cured by amendment under How. St. § 9537.—People v. Pline, 61 Mich. 247.

¶ 320. A conviction in a forgery case will not be set aside because the instrument in question was improperly described in the information as a promissory note, where such instrument was a note which is the subject of forgery at common law.—People v. Bennett, 122 Mich. 281.

¶ 321. Although an instrument promising to pay a sum at a time stated with interest, and agreeing to the inclusion of attorneys' fees in any judgment in the case, and waiving relief from valuation and appraisement laws, is not a negotiable promissory note, the designation of such instrument as a promissory note in an information for uttering a forged note did not render the information invalid; the instrument as set out being one which is the subject of forgery at common law.—People v. Bennett, 122 Mich. 281.

¶ 322. The omission of the word "liquors" from an information charging the respondent with failing to keep his saloon, where spirituous, brewed, fermented, and intoxicating [omitted word] were sold at retail, closed on Sunday, said word appearing in the complaint, warrant, and recognizance certified to the circuit court by the examining magistrate, should be disregarded as a clerical error, which the record furnishes the means of correcting.—People v. Case, 105 Mich. 92.

§ 52. ——Grammatical and verbal defects.

¶ 323. The substitution, in an information for arson, of the word "was" for "did" in the phrase "did wilfully, etc., set fire to," should be regarded as a clerical mistake which did not mislead nor prejudice respondent, especially as the complaint contained the charge correctly stated; and the defect should have been objected to by demurrer or on motion to quash, not on motion in arrest of judgment.—People v. Duford, 66 Mich. 90.

§ 53. ——Clerical errors of time and impossible dates.

¶ 324. An information filed September 26, 1876, alleged an offense of breaking and entering a store as committed December 25, 1876. Held, that the defect was cured by the statute of amendments (Comp. L. 1871, §§ 7923, 7940, How. St. §§ 9534, 9551).—Cole v. People, 37 Mich. 544.

¶ 325. How. St., § 9421, provides that, in a prosecution for embezzlement, proof of any embezzlement committed within six months next after the time stated in the indictment shall be sufficient to maintain the charge. An information charged embezzlement between two dates not more than six months apart. Held, that the defect, if any, in failing to allege a day certain, would be disregarded, under How. St., §§ 9534, 9535, where the objection was not raised until after the jury had been sworn.—People v. Hawkins, 106 Mich. 479.

¶ 326. An information charging larceny as a third offense in the language of Comp. L. 1897, § 11786, which provides in such cases for imprisonment for life or for not less than seven years in addition to the term prescribed for the last offense, even if defective for failing to state the times and places of the prior convictions, was good after verdict, under Comp. L. 1897, § 11924, making the words of the statute sufficient, after verdict.—People v. Butler, 122 Mich. 35.

§ 54. Surplusage, what constitutes.

Immateriality of needless allegations, see also ante ¶ 312.

Continuando as surplusage, see also post ¶ 408.

In information for burglary with arms, see also ante ¶ 165.

¶ 327. The fact that a portion of the matters of fact set forth in an information as falsely sworn to appears not to have been material will not vitiate the information as to the remainder, even if it could be assumed, where all the facts are not spread out, that that which appeared to be immaterial was so in fact.—Flint v. People, 35 Mich. 491.

¶ 328. If an information founded upon a statute contains allegations covering all the terms of the statute and making a complete offense, and then adds something by way of making the offense appear greater, such latter matter may be disregarded as mere surplusage, and does not vitiate, nor need it be proved.—People v. Aldrich, 104 Mich. 455.

¶ 329. A general reference to an offense as "contrary to the statutes in such case made and provided" is sufficient in an information and the reference to a wrong section of the statute is mere surplusage.—People v. Lane, 124 Mich. 271.

§ 55. Good and bad counts in same indictment.

Necessity of objection and exception to evidence on bad count, see post § 511.

¶ 330. Where an indictment contains two counts, each for the same offense, one of which is bad, the other being good is sufficient to warrant a general verdict of guilty and judgment thereon.—Shannon v. People, 5 Mich. 71; People v. McKinney, 10 Mich. 54.

¶ 331. A good count will sustain a conviction even though the information contains another that is defective.—People v. Haley, 48 Mich. 495.

¶ 332. In a criminal prosecution, one good count is sufficient to support a general verdict.—People v. Bird, 126 Mich. 631.

¶ 333. An information for murder was in the full common-law form of indictments, except that in the conclusion, where it was averred that the respondent "did kill and murder," the name of the person killed was omitted. The respondent was convicted of manslaughter; and it was held that, under How. St. § 9534, the information was sufficient to sustain the conviction, regardless whether or not it would have been technically sufficient to sustain a conviction for murder.—Evans v. People, 12 Mich. 27.

§ 56. Intendments and presumptions in aid of indictment or information.

As to preliminary proceedings, see post § 57.

Conclusiveness of matters returned by magistrate, see post § 58.

Sufficiency of one good count to sustain conviction, see ante § 55.

Permissible assumption as to materiality, see also ante ¶ 327.

¶ 334. An uncertain or ambiguous criminal charge cannot be supported by intendments.—People v. Arnold, 46 Mich. 268.

¶ 335. An information charging bribery in procuring a village clerk to issue "false sparrow certificates" under a statute providing bounties for English sparrows, is not fatally defective because of the omission of the word "English" before the sparrow, where it shows upon its face by reference to the statute that the certificates contemplated were such as could refer only to English sparrows and there was no possibility of a mistake as to its meaning.—People v. Gorsline, 132 Mich. 549.

¶ 336. On a trial for unlawfully rejecting a vote, whether a distinct allegation that the person offering to take an oath under Comp. L. 1857, pp. 107, 108, § 25, How. St. § 161, was, at the time, a duly qualified elector, could be held, after verdict, to include the fact of registry, so that the verdict could cure the defective allegation of registry, or whether such defective allegations would be amendable under How. St., § 9535, quære.—Wattles v. People, 13 Mich. 446.

§ 57. ——As to preliminary proceedings.

Presumption on the record as to conformity to preliminary hearing and commitment, see post § 618.

In actions for malicious prosecution, see Malicious Prosecution, VI.

¶ 337. On a motion to quash, a complaint for murder is sufficient if its allegations are positive and there is nothing in the record to show that there was no examination of witnesses under oath before the warrant issued.—People v. Hare, 57 Mich. 505.

¶ 338. A complaint and warrant charged both rape and incest, but the evidence adduced upon the preliminary examination tended to establish the former crime only. The magistrate returned that it appeared that "the offense charged" had been committed, and that there was probable cause to believe respondent guilty thereof. An information was filed which followed the complaint and warrant, but the prosecution elected to proceed to trial upon the count for rape. Held, that a motion to quash the information on the ground that no preliminary examination had been had upon such charge was properly overruled.—People v. Burwell, 106 Mich. 27.

¶ 339. The court will presume that the police justice examined the complainant and his witnesses orally, where such fact is recited in the warrant purporting to have issued upon such complaint and examination. —People v. Bechtel, 80 Mich. 623.

¶ 340. The complaint and examination preliminary to the issue of a warrant of arrest for an offense not cognizable by a justice of the peace need not be reduced to writing, and, therefore, in the absence of a contrary showing, it will be presumed that the magistrate had sufficient proof before him to confer jurisdiction to issue the warrant.—People v. Berry, 107 Mich. 256; People v. Caldwell, 107 Mich. 374; People v. Bennett, 107 Mich. 430; People v. Rush, 113 Mich. 539.

¶ 341. Sufficiency of proof to issue a warrant is presumed in a prosecution under the Local Option Law, where it is contended that the return of the justice failed to disclose that, at the time of issuing his warrant, there was any competent evidence before him tending to establish the fact that the law was in force within the county.—People v. Berry, 107 Mich. 256.

¶ 342. The presumption of sufficient evidence to issue the warrant, where the record does not show it, is not affected by the fact that a written complaint was taken, the averments of which were insufficient to authorize the issuing of a warrant, where it does not appear that no other evidence was adduced.—People v. Caldwell, 107 Mich. 374.

¶ 343. The mere fact that a written complaint was taken, which was insufficient to authorize the issuing of the warrant, does not preclude the inference that a valid oral complaint was made.—People v. Bennett, 107 Mich. 430.

¶ 344. Where the warrant issued in a case beyond the magistrate's jurisdiction recites the examination of the complaining witness on oath, but does not show to what he testified, it will be presumed that the evidence was sufficient to authorize the issue of the warrant, although the written complaint purports to have been made on information and belief.—People v. Whipple, 108 Mich. 587; People v. Rush, 113 Mich. 539.

¶ 345. Whether it is competent for the circuit court, in any case, to review the evidence taken by a justice, to ascertain whether it was legally sufficient to establish the commission of the offense for which the warrant issued, quære.—People v. Bennett, 107 Mich. 430.

§ 58. ——Conclusiveness of magistrate's return.

¶ 346. A justice's jurisdiction to issue a warrant upon a written complaint that is sufficient on its face cannot afterward be destroyed by the justice's affidavit that the oral examination of the complaining witness did not agree with or support his complaint, or by the testimony of such witness on the trial that he did not have personal knowledge of all the facts stated in the complaint.—People v. Haas, 79 Mich. 449.

¶ 347. Parol evidence to show that no other testimony was taken than that contained in the complaint is inadmissible—at least upon motion to quash the information, made after the jury has been impaneled to try the cause.—People v. Whipple, 108 Mich. 587.

¶ 348. Where a complaint and warrant for an offense not cognizable by a justice of the peace are valid in form, the question whether the evidence taken before him justified his conclusion to issue the warrant is not triable at the circuit.—People v. Payment, 109 Mich. 553.

§ 59. Mode of objecting and time for objection.

To defects in grand jury proceedings or in preliminary hearing and commitment, see post §§ 60, 61.
Office and scope of motion to quash, see post § 63.
Office and scope of pleas in abatement and demurrers, see post §§ 109, 111.
Pleas in abatement or bar, see post §§ 109, 110.
Demurrer or replication to pleas, see post § 111.
Demurrer to reception of any evidence, see post § 401.
Necessity of objection below to raise question on review, see post § 511.
Defect in information available on motion in arrest, see also ante ¶ 201.
Exclusion of objections first made on review to defects in preliminary proceedings, see post § 511.
Necessity of demurrer or motion to quash, see also post § 511.
Necessity of exceptions for defect appearing extraneously to the record, see post ¶ 2472.
Demurrer or motion to quash as mode of objection for defects of form, see Comp. L. 1915, § 15747.

¶ 348a. A complaint for the violation of the Local Option Law, which upon its face purports to be made upon the knowledge of affiant, sufficiently complies with Comp. Laws 1897, §§ 11839, 11840, and is not subject to impeachment by the respondent on arraignment by showing lack of requisite knowledge on the part of the complaining witness.—Potter v. Barry Circuit Judge, 156 Mich. 183.

¶ 349. A misjoinder of counts is not ground of demurrer, but may be of a motion to quash. Such a motion should be granted when otherwise the defense would be subjected to serious danger of surprise or perplexity in preparing for trial. But in cases where all the counts may refer to one transaction, the respondent can be sufficiently protected by confining the proof on the tria to such matters as relate to that, and whic he may be expected to be prepared to meet —Hamilton v. People, 29 Mich. 173.

¶ 350. By express provisions of How St.. § 9535, objections to an information for any formal defects apparent on its face must be taken advantage of by demurrer or motion to quash before the jury are sworn and no afterwards.—People v. Schultz, 85 Mich. 114.

¶ 351. It is too late to object to the verification of an information after the jury is sworn.—Lambert v. People, 29 Mich. 71; People v. Gardner, 62 Mich. 307.

§ 60. ——Defects in grand jury or proceedings before it.

Defects open for objection on trial, see ante § 50.

Challenging grand jurors or array, see Grand Jury § 2.

¶ 352. An objection to the drawing of the grand jury which is prohibited by the statute when the grand jury is impaneled cannot be valid when the party indicted is put upon trial; and How. St. §§ 9496, 9497, restricting the challenge to the sole ground that a juror was prosecutor or complainant, excludes objections to irregularities in the drawing of the jury.—People v. Smith, 118 Mich. 73.

¶ 353. Only such objections to the composition of the grand jury are available in support of a motion to quash an indictment, as are available to sustain a challenge of a grand juror, to wit, that a juror is prosecutor or complainant; How. St. §§ 9496, 9497.—People v. Reigel, 120 Mich. 78.

¶ 354. There must be legal and competent evidence before the grand jury to sustain an indictment, but the mere reception of incompetent testimony does not require the indictment to be quashed.—People v. Lauder, 82 Mich. 109.

¶ 355. An indictment found against one who had been subpoenaed to appear before the grand jury, and who had testified in answer to interrogatories not knowing that an indictment was pending against himself, was sustained where there was competent testimony against him from other witnesses. —People v. Lauder, 82 Mich. 109.

¶ 356. The constitution of the grand jury cannot be inquired into by a court like the Recorder's Court of Detroit, which must take the indictments sent to it by the circuit court as valid, if on their face they appear to be valid.—People ex rel. Robison v. Swift, 59 Mich. 529.

¶ 357. A plea in abatement to an indictment for embezzlement containing averments that a member of been excused, a c called as a talesm was not in the gran then acted as a gr outside of Comp. I How. 2nd Ed., § 982 considered as a rea ment..—People v. La

§ 61. ——Defects an liminary exa

Time for objection, s

Impropriety of comm on failure to cal preliminary hea

¶ 358. Objections or warrant cannot be when the respondent to an information f therein, if he was ex contained in them v being bound over.—P 488.

¶ 359. The sufficie before a justice to cannot be challenged the examination is r sion of the offense v in the complaint.—P 505.

¶ 360. The objecti and warrant against in the business of liq ing tax do not negati etc., cannot be raise the information conts ment, but should b quash the informat People v. Drennan, 8

¶ 361. The trial c properly refuses to d a motion to quash o testimony before where the justice w out his attention be and where on the sworn before the p Brott, 163 Mich. 150

¶ 362. The quest a justice of the pe cause of a defecti raised in the circ held for trial, aft defendant, the ent by the court, and ing of the jury, a raised before the Curran, 191 Mich.

§ 62. Specification tions.

¶ 363. A motio mation for want tion as to a part granted. It should be confined to counts plainly specified.—Hamilton v. People, 29 Mich. 173.

§ 63. Grounds and office of motion to quash.

See also ante ¶ 314.
Proper matter for motion, see also ante ¶ 59.
Specification of grounds, see ante § 62.
Materiality of objections in general, see ante § 49 et seq.
Presumptions and intendments on motion or other objection, see also ante § 56 et seq.
Available objections to grand jury or proceedings before it or to preliminary examination and commitment, see ante §§ 60, 61.
Discretion to require election instead of quashing, see post § 66.
Effect of quashal, see post § 67.
Motion made after plea, see post § 64.
Reviewableness of discretionary rulings on motions to quash, see post § 628.

¶ 364. Whether objections to the formation of the grand jury can be made by motion to quash and on affidavits, quære; it is not usual to quash indictments on motion of defendant, in cases of importance, for defects reviewable on error.—People ex rel. Robison v. Swift, 59 Mich. 529.

§ 64. Motion to quash after plea to merits.

Withdrawal of plea to move to quash, see post § 120.
Variance of information from commitment, see ante § 14 et seq.

¶ 365. One who has pleaded not guilty to an information cannot afterwards regularly move to quash it; the court, however, might in its discretion permit such motion, and the effect of it would be a withdrawal of the plea with a right to renew it in case the motion were denied; where such motion prevails, whether rightly or not, the defendant cannot be said to have been in jeopardy upon the information.—Mentor v. People, 30 Mich. 91.

§ 65. Waiver and cure of defects and objections.

Waiver and cure of errors in general, see post XIV, XV.
Waiver of objections by plea or trial to merits, see post § 117.
Waiver of matters of abatement by pleading over, see post § 118.
Withdrawal of portion of information as curing want of preliminary hearing thereon, see ante ¶ 318.
Misdescription neutralized by other description, see also ante ¶ 310.

¶ 366. No error in a murder case is committed in proceeding with the trial without previous examination of the respondent, where respondent in open court waives such examination.—People v. Sartori, 168 Mich. 308.

¶ 367. The omission of the words "knowingly and wilfully" in a complaint before a justice for the offense of resisting an officer was held not material where the complaint distinctly charged unlawful resistance to an officer in his attempt to keep the peace, and defendant, without objecting to its form, waived examination and treated it as an offense not triable before the justice, but gave bail to the higher court.—People v. Haley, 48 Mich. 495.

¶ 368. In a criminal prosecution against an officer of a corporation for the alleged embezzlement of money of the corporation by receiving an excessive salary where it appeared that there were two indictments, one of which alleged embezzlement during the period when the accused received a certain salary and the other when he received an alleged salary of over twice such amount received during the previous year, and accused was tried under the one which alleged embezzlement of the company's money during the period when he was receiving a larger salary, held that the accused waived all right to rely upon a bill of particulars which alleged only the embezzlement of the smaller salary where he did not call such error to the attention of the court until after the arguments were completed.—People v. Lay, 193 Mich. 476.

¶ 369. Where an election is made between two counts, though it was not compellable, and the court charges restricting the issue to that count chosen by the prosecutor, the accused cannot complain.—People v. Kennedy, 176 Mich. 384.

¶ 370. An objection, in a prosecution for violating the Local Option Law, raised for the first time as the case is about to be submitted to the jury, that the information charges two distinct offenses, has no force where the prosecuting attorney is required to claim a conviction for but one of such offenses and so elects.—People v. Rice, 103 Mich. 350.

¶ 371. In a prosecution for an illegal sale of intoxicating liquor in violation of Comp. L. 1897, § 8391, How. 2nd Ed., § 9387, under two counts, the facts that the justice did not specify in his return to the circuit court upon which count the accused was bound over is harmless, where the prosecution elected between the counts in the circuit court.—People v. Smith, 177 Mich. 358.

¶ 372. Respondent was informed against under How. St. § 9122a, which provides that any person who shall assault another with intent to do great bodily harm less than the crime of murder shall be punished, etc. The words "the crime of" were omitted from the complaint, warrant, and information. No objection was made during the trial to their omission. Held, that had the attention of the court been called to the defect, it would have been amended under How. St. § 9535, and that it must, after verdict, be disregarded.—People v. Sutherland, 104 Mich. 468.

¶ 373. Error in allowing a count of an information to be amended is of no consequence where the court subsequently charges against conviction under that count.—People v. Goulette, 82 Mich. 36.

¶ 374. The respondent cannot be said to have been prejudiced by the addition to an information of a count under which he was not convicted.—People v. Goulette, 82 Mich. 36.

§ 66. Discretion to quash or put to election.

See also ante ¶ 291 et seq.

Necessity and occasion for election, see ante § 46.

Propriety of certiorari to review decision on motion to quash, see post § 571, ¶ 2700, § 572, ¶ 2701.

Mandamus to compel vacation of order refusing to quash, see Mandamus, II.

¶ 375. Where an information charges two separate and distinct offenses in one count the court has the discretionary power either to quash or to compel the prosecuting attorney to elect upon which offense he will proceed to trial.—Chase v. Van Buren Circuit Judge, 148 Mich. 149.

§ 67. Effect of quashal; discharge or repleader.

Propriety of leave to amend, see post § 69 et seq.

Proceedings on motion to quash as proper part of bill of exceptions, see post ¶ 2748.

Quashal as bar to further prosecution, see Crimes § 24.

¶ 376. On quashing an information, upon the defendant's motion, as no information, the court does not lose jurisdiction of the prisoner, but the case stands in all respects as if no information had been filed, and the complaint before the justice and the latter's warrant, commitment and return would still remain of the same force as before as the basis for an information.—Mentor v. People, 30 Mich. 91.

§ 68. Power to ask and make amendments.

¶ 377. An assistant prosecuting attorney has power, in the necessary absence of his superior and with permission of the court, to make such amendments to an information as are authorized by statute.—People v. Henssler, 48 Mich. 49.

§ 69. Proper and permissible amendments.

As to time, place or venue, see post § 70.

To meet or conform to proofs, see post § 71.

Amending after verdict, see post § 72.

Amendment after verdict to describe crime, see also post ¶ 401.

Additional return by committing magistrate to afford basis for information where he has previou
ante ¶ 20.

Provision as to form, see C

Amendment to
Comp. L. 19

¶ 378. Where facts constitutin to amendment.—
594.

¶ 379. Wheth formation for w
by a signed affid
may not be allo
attaching his s
People, 30 Mich.

¶ 380. A defe material to the mere omission o
from the text, ment, nor can t
word be overlool
Mich. 699.

¶ 381. An in under How. St. money embezzle ant, and that i
the respondent
as agent or col
inserting an ave
received "for th
People v. Hana

¶ 382. Under
Comp. L. 1897, §
upon uttering a one of the sign fact was signed to show that th
man and givin
People v. Benne

¶ 383. Where charging rape o teen years of a victim was of t amendment ins properly allow
Mich. 36.

¶ 384. Where is bound over a ing a dwelling-information ca charge him wi punishable crim ing other than § 9127).—Peop

¶ 385. An a charging the l by adding "on and one a spo
does not creat different crime scription of t

to have been stolen.—People v. Price, 74 Mich. 37.

¶ 386. In a prosecution for breaking and entering a named bank, an amendment was properly permitted alleging the nature of the institution to be a private bank doing business in that name.—People v. Courtney, 178 Mich. 137.

¶ 386a. Where a respondent charged with keeping intoxicating liquors for sale waives examination and goes to trial, the information cannot be amended after the evidence is all in by substituting the word "fermented" in place of intoxicating.—People v. Hickman, 164 Mich. 672.

§ 70. ——As to time, place or venue.

¶ 387. It is proper but not necessary to allow amendment of an indictment for larceny in a township, so as to lay it in another township in the same county.—People v. Waller, 70 Mich. 237.

¶ 388. Amendment of an information for bigamy as to the county where the first marriage is alleged to have taken place may be allowed on calling the case for trial, it not necessitating a continuance to enable respondent to go to trial safely.—People v. Perriman, 72 Mich. 184.

¶ 389. The fact that on the day alleged the crime of false pretenses charged might have been made out in another county does not make time of the essence, so as to prevent an amendment of the information stating a day later when the crime was made out in the county where the prosecution was had; and since it is not of the essence and material the amendment may be allowed under Comp. L. 1897, §§ 11919, 11922.—People v. Hoffmann, 142 Mich. 531.

¶ 390. An information alleged the commission of the crime of rape under a videlicet clause on August 18th. Held, under Comp. L. 1897, §§ 11919, 11936, the date might be amended so as to read July 18th.—People v. Nichols, 159 Mich. 355.

§ 71. ——Amendments to meet or conform to proofs.

Permissible amendments to meet variance, see Comp. L. 1915, §§ 15749, 15750.
Amendment after verdict to include lesser assault, see also Homicide ¶ 106.

¶ 391. An information alleging no offense of which the court has jurisdiction cannot be so amended after the proofs are in as to charge a cognizable offense.—Byrnes v. People, 37 Mich. 515; Bickford v. People, 39 Mich. 209.

¶ 392. An information for fraudulently obtaining a signature may be amended to meet the objection, for instance, that the paper described in it varies from the original, as offered in evidence, in omitting the name of the place prefixed to the date. But whether amendment is necessary, quære.—People v. Mott, 34 Mich. 81.

¶ 393. While an information for keeping a saloon open contrary to the statute need not state that the place kept open was not a drug store and the accused a druggist, it was not error for the court at the trial to permit an amendment to that effect.—People v. Sullivan, 83 Mich. 355.

¶ 394. Under How. St. § 9537, providing that any court of record in which the trial of an indictment is had may forthwith allow an amendment in case of variance, an information charging respondent with fraudulently removing, etc., chattel-mortgaged property may, when objected to on the trial, be amended so as to state that the person therein named as intended to be defrauded is the mortgagee.—People v. Schultz, 85 Mich. 114.

¶ 395. Where an information charged the uttering of a forged check payable to G. W. B., and the check introduced upon the trial was payable to G. M. B., held, that it was proper, under How. St. § 9537, to permit an amendment of the information to conform to the proof.—People v. Brown, 110 Mich. 168.

¶ 396. In a prosecution for breaking and entering a bank, after the people had put in their case, it was not erroneous to permit an amendment showing the ownership of the building.—People v. Courtney, 178 Mich. 137.

¶ 397. Where an information charged respondent with murder in the short, statutory form, and on the trial it appeared that the time of the killing was stated as of a date three days prior to the death of the injured party, it further appearing that the information followed the complaint and warrant as to such allegation, and that the variance appeared on the preliminary examination, which disclosed the fact that death was the result of a series of whippings administered to the deceased, an amendment of the information was properly allowed showing the true date of the death.—People v. Hamilton, 76 Mich. 212.

¶ 398. An information charging that respondent did, at a certain time and place, with force and arms, feloniously kill and slay the deceased, charges a felonious killing, and may at the trial be amended so as to charge an assault upon, and the beating, bruising and wounding with force and arms of deceased by respondent; since the original information charges a felonious killing, under which evidence could be introduced showing that death resulted from an assault or wound inflicted.—People v. McCullough, 81 Mich. 25.

¶ 399. Where respondent was convicted of conveying a weapon adapted to aid a prisoner to escape in violation of Comp. L. 1897, § 11315, and the information charged that the prisoner named was confined in the jail upon the charge of burglary, while as a matter of fact he was awaiting trial for feloniously breaking and entering, there is only a technical variance which may be avoided by an amendment of the information under Comp. L. 1897, § 11922.—People v. Fox, 142 Mich. 528.

§ 72. ——Formal amendments after verdict.

¶ 400. It is competent, upon motion to set aside the verdict, to permit the information to be amended by allowing the clerk to sign the jurat which had been left unsigned by a clerical omission.—People v. Roat, 117 Mich. 578.

¶ 401. An information charging the statutory offense of "assault with intent to do great bodily harm less than the crime of murder" cannot be amended after verdict so as to include a battery.—Turner v. Muskegon Circuit Judge, 88 Mich. 359.

E. ISSUES, PROOF AND VARIANCE; LESSER DEGREES AND INCLUDED OFFENSES.

§ 73. Material issues and necessary proofs.

Relevancy of facts and conditions before or after times averred, see post §§ 162-164.

Matters put in issue by pleas in bar or abatement, see post §§ 115, 116.

Issues and variance in indictments for homicide, see Homicide § 40 et seq.

Admissibility of matters preliminary to false pretense alleged, see also post ¶¶ 858, 859.

In prosecution for abandoning child, see also ante ¶ 143.

On charge of having burglars' tools, see also ante ¶¶ 166, 167.

Scope of issues on retrial after reversal, see post § 641.

Particularity required in averments, see ante § 37.

Sufficiency of the proofs, see post VIII, C.

Necessary items of proof, see also post §§ 324a-324u.

Construction as to issues presented, see post § 74 et seq.

Variances of proofs from issues presented, see post § 77 et seq.

Election between inconsistent counts, see ante § 46.

Admissibility of alibi on date unnecessarily averred, see post ¶ 844.

¶ 402. As a general rule, any allegation necessary to bring an offense or an offender within a statute must be substantially proved as alleged.—Shannon v. People, 5 Mich. 71.

¶ 403. Although it is not technically allowable to charge an offense as a continuous one, the continuando may properly be rejected as surplusage, and the case tried upon such particular charge as the prosecutor may elect.—People v. Loomis, 161 Mich. 651.

¶ 404. A prosecution for adultery is not like a case of seduction, in which the previous chastity of th issue.—People v. K

¶ 405. In an inf averment of the firs intend a lawful ma tion must prove; a second marriage w without also chargi ful.—Kopke v. Peo

¶ 406. Where a an information to consists he must s mislead the defend —People v. Marion, ¶ 407. An allega attesting officers a ment of an instru scriptive of the pa obliged to prove i that one or both Marion, 28 Mich.

¶ 408. In a pro crime of assault with a dangerous or maim if resiste tained where the evidence, though value.—People v.

¶ 409. Respond formation for ars buildings. Held, prove that respon but proof that she was sufficient.— Mich. 1.

¶ 410. A sing enough to suppor goods by false pr are alleged in t Wakely, 62 Mich.

¶ 411. In a p 1897, § 5865, proh to take fish with named, an averm ing in "the water not require the more than the sta were waters of t the excepted wat prove that the river.—People v.

¶ 412. An inf 1911, Art. 62, Ho ing certain clas charging an of pamphlet the tr and sexual ailme ute, and annexin the information, of the matters in the offense char plusage.—People ¶ 413. In a prosecution where defendant is charged with obstructing justice, the guilt or innocence of the respondent in the main case, the sufficiency of the information or the jurisdiction of the court are not considered in the case on trial.—People v. Boyd, 174 Mich. 321.

§ 74. Construction and intendment of averments.

Of common-law forms of averment, see post § 75.
As to duplicity, see post § 76.
What regarded as averment of fact or conclusion, see also ante ¶ 245.
Pleas to issues tendered, see post V.

¶ 414. As the statutory offense of unlawfully disinterring a human body embraces every unlawful invasion of the rights of burial, including those acts done for purposes of dissection, as well as for any other unlawful purpose, the clause in the information as to the purpose of the taking does not make the offense charged a common-law misdemeanor, not punishable as a felony under the statute.—McNamee v. People, 31 Mich. 473.

¶ 415. Where an information charges respondents with conspiring to commit a certain crime, and unnecessarily mentions overt acts committed in furtherance of the conspiracy, it is not to be treated as charging the commission of such acts, but if so treated the error cannot prejudice respondents. The acts, whether enumerated or not, are admissible to show the existence of the conspiracy.—People v. Petheram, 64 Mich. 252.

§ 75. ——Of common-law forms of accusation.

¶ 416. When an information contains common-law phrases and references it may be assumed that a description contained in it is meant to have its common-law interpretation.—Chapman v. People, 39 Mich. 357.

¶ 417. An indictment purporting to set out the crimes specifically and substantially in the common-law method must be construed by common-law rules.—People v. Carr, 64 Mich. 702.

§ 76. ——As to duplicity.

Duplicity in plea of abatement, see post ¶¶ 557, 560.
Doubleness in informations for liquor offenses, see also Intoxicating Liquors, VI, B.

¶ 418. An information is not bad for duplicity in charging a felonious assault on two persons at the same time, and is supported by proof of assault on one only.—People v. Durham, 170 Mich. 598.

¶ 419. Where the accused obtained money from the prosecuting witness for the purpose of purchasing state tax lands and sent the money to the auditor general by whom it was returned to the accused in the form of a treasurer's draft payable to the order of the accused and he thereupon converted the draft into money and converted it to his own use, two counts, one charging embezzlement of the money and another charging the embezzlement of the draft, charged the same offense, both counts being based upon Comp. L. 1897, § 11570.—People v. Peck, 147 Mich. 84.

¶ 420. Where the facts showed that the respondent obtained money from the prosecuting witness to purchase state tax lands and this money was sent to the auditor general, but was returned by him to respondent in the form of a draft of the state treasurer payable to respondent, and this draft was cashed and the money converted to his own use, two counts, one charging the embezzlement of the money and another the embezzlement of the draft, charge the same offense under Comp. L. 1897, § 11570, defining larceny.—People v. Peck, 147 Mich. 84.

¶ 421. There is duplicity in charging forgery and the utterance thereof in the same count, but not in charging joint respondents with forging a deed, and one of them with causing it to be recorded; the act of recording bears upon the intent and is not of itself an utterance.—People v. Van Alstine, 57 Mich. 69.

¶ 422. A count in an information under the Local Option Law is bad for duplicity if it alleges that respondent "did then and there run a saloon and bar" and "at said bar did then and there sell and furnish" intoxicating liquors to a named person, and also that respondent knowingly kept a saloon where such liquors were sold.—People v. Keefer, 97 Mich. 15.

¶ 423. In a count charging a supervisor with wilfully neglecting to procure statements from tax-payers, as required by Pub. Acts 1891, No. 200, § 12, a further charge that he neglected to deliver such statement to the township clerk does not render the information bad for duplicity, but must be regarded as surplusage where the information alleges that respondent never received the statement.—Turner v. Muskegon Circuit Judge, 95 Mich. 1.

¶ 424. How. St. § 9347, punishing the wrongful removal of books, papers or records from certain public offices, creates three offenses: (a) Wilful carrying away; (b) refusing to deliver on demand; (c) destroying or mutilating; and an information which alleges a wilful carrying away without alleging a demand sufficiently charges the first offense.—People v. Bussey, 82 Mich. 49.

¶ 425. An information under How. St. § 9367, which provides that "if any officer on whom any duty is enjoined by law relative to general, special, township, or charter elections, or the canvassing or return of votes given at any election, shall be guilty of any wilful neglect of such duty, or of any corrupt conduct in the execution of the same, he shall, on conviction thereof, be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor," etc., alleging that respondent, while a member of the board of county canvassers, was guilty of wilful neglect of duty "and" of corrupt conduct in the execution of his duty enjoined by law upon him as a member of said board, is not bad for duplicity in using a conjunctive, the reference being to a single transaction.—People v. Clarke, 105 Mich. 169.

¶ 426. An indictment was not bad for duplicity where, the gist of the offense charged being the obtaining of money by the presentation of false or invalid orders, several distinct petty offenses consisting of obtaining these several orders were alleged, but the averment as to obtaining the money was single.—People v. Luttermoser, 122 Mich. 562.

¶ 427. An indictment under the Local Option Law (Pub. Acts 1899, No. 183) which charges the keeping of a place where liquors are "stored, sold, given away and furnished" is not bad as charging more than one offense since the offense charged is "keeping a place."—Anderson v. Van Buren Circuit Judge, 130 Mich. 697.

¶ 428. An information for obtaining money by false pretenses, consisting in rendering a false statement of facts in a claim for fees and expenses of an inquest, charges only one false pretense, where it alleges that accused, intending to cheat and defraud the state, did designedly by means of a false pretense or by means of false pretenses, obtain from the state a sum of money, though it then sets out the means to have been the presentation to the state of a false statement, which under the law is the basis of action by several officers in sequence according to official methods.—People v. Hoffmann, 142 Mich. 531.

¶ 429. An information in one count against a druggist who sold liquor in a local option territory, alleging that he did not make any record or report "in any blank book (that being an offense under Comp. L. 1897, § 5381) of the name of the said" purchaser, and that he did not make and swear to a report of said sale and mail the same to the prosecuting attorney (that being a crime under Pub. Acts 1899, No. 183, § 25), is double and may be quashed as such.—Chase v. Van Buren Circuit Judge, 148 Mich. 149.

§ 77. Variance of averments and proofs.

[Note. The question of variance often turns on an investigation of the essential elements of the crime. For precedents on such a question, see Crimes, II; Assault, I; Homicide; Larceny; Rape; Seduction.]

As to time, see post § 78.

As to participation and principalship, see post § 79.

Proof of lesser or included offense as part of that charged, see post § 80.

Proof of great
post § 81.
Laying title to deceased, s
Proof of felor meanor, se
Sufficiency of p barn under dwelling to see post ¶ Indictment for proof of e
see also Cr
Information for proof of i ¶ 1513.
Variance in in separately Assault §
II; Rape;
Variance in liq
toxicating
Proof of seduc
post ¶ 465.
Amending to m
ante § 71.
Conformity to from exam ante § 14 e
Applicability o proofs, see Validity of la variance, s ¶ 845.
Statutory rules of proof of 1915, § 156

¶ 430. Variar formation as t land described rial if it appea known by bo
Alstine, 57 Mich

¶ 431. How dictment for la false pretenses, or concealing
the jury to con
allow a convi charged.—Peop

¶ 432. An in as committed i viction of the other township amendment is allowed.—Peop

¶ 433. In a building to de under Comp. L may be describ
it was intende
a residence, ev actually have burning, and information w
"the dwelling
People v. Mix,

¶ 434. Where an information for polygamy alleges that the first marriage took place at Brooklyn, N. Y., evidence that it took place in New York city is not objectionable for variance where it does not appear that the defendant was misled.—People v. Calder, 30 Mich. 85.

¶ 435. It is not necessary that a sum of money laid under a videlicet in an indictment for bribery, be adhered to in the proof.—People v. Salsbury, 134 Mich. 537.

¶ 436. Where one is charged with the statutory burglary of breaking and entering a store not adjoining to or occupied with a dwelling-house, with felonious intent, if it turns out that the store does adjoin or is occupied with a dwelling-house there can be no conviction.—Moore v. People, 47 Mich. 639; People v. Calderwood, 66 Mich. 92.

¶ 437. The evidence on a charge of statutory burglary showed that the store entered was the first story of a building; that the proprietors were a copartnership, composed of two persons who leased the building; that one of the partners occupied the upper part of the building as a dwelling-house and the other partner lodged with him. Held, that the evidence did not support the information.—Moore v. People, 47 Mich. 639.

¶ 438. Inasmuch as the term dwelling-house includes the adjoining outbuildings, an information charging that respondent feloniously and burglariously, in the nighttime, entered a dwelling-house and stole certain wool, is sustained by proof that he entered the barn of complainant, etc., which was a part of the outbuildings used by the family for domestic purposes.—Pitcher v. People, 16 Mich. 142.

¶ 439. How St. § 9421, which provides that under an information charging embezzlement of money only, conviction may be had for embezzling any check, draft, etc., does not violate respondent's constitutional right to be informed of the nature of the accusation against him, since in such case he may have the charge made certain by examination or by bill of particulars.—People v. Hanaw, 107 Mich. 337.

¶ 440. An information for obtaining goods under false pretenses was not sustained where the pretense charged was that respondent owned a house and lot in a certain locality, and was building an addition to the house, and wished to buy the articles for use in the building, while the proofs did not show how the pretense operated as a fraud, or what good the fact would have done the complaining witness, or that respondent had been given to understand that the question asked him about his building was put for the purpose of learning whether it was safe to trust him.—People v. McAllister, 49 Mich. 12.

¶ 441. In a prosecution for false pretenses it appeared that respondent referred the complaining witness to a bank, where he had filed a financial statement. The bank informed the latter that according to the statement respondent was worth $18,000, whereas in fact the statement was that he was worth $18,900. Held, that respondent's liability was not affected by this variance.—People v. Andre, 157 Mich. 362.

¶ 442. On an allegation in an indictment that the names of the attesting officers attached to the acknowledgment of a power of attorney were forged, proof of the forgery of other names will not support a conviction.—People v. Marion, 28 Mich. 255.

¶ 443. Proof that the names forged were fictitious is sufficient proof of the forgery to sustain a charge of uttering a forged instrument.—People v. Marion, 29 Mich. 31.

¶ 444. Forgery and uttering a forgery are two distinct offenses; and a person cannot be convicted under an information for forgery when the complaint on which he was examined only charged him with uttering the forgery.—People v. McMillan, 52 Mich. 627.

¶ 445. When, in an indictment for forging a mortgage, it is charged that the sum mentioned as the consideration is altered, the prosecution may also show that the sum set forth in the condition has also been altered, since the sums usually correspond.—Perkins v. People, 27 Mich. 386.

¶ 446. In a prosecution under Comp. L. 1897, § 11631, making it a crime to sell or offer to sell or have in possession any false, forged or counterfeit railroad passenger ticket, that the information charges the sale of a forged ticket purporting to have been issued by a railroad company while proof shows that the respondent himself caused the return part of a round trip ticket to be stamped and a signature forged after it was sold by the railroad company does not disclose a variance.—People v. Smith, 125 Mich. 566.

¶ 447. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 5861 et seq., where a complaint charges the locus to be the waters of Grand river in the township of Grand Haven, county of Ottawa, a conviction for illegal fishing is sustained by evidence that the act was done in the county of Ottawa.—People v. Van Maren, 126 Mich. 103.

¶ 448. The word "from" used in an information charging larceny under Comp. L. 1897, § 11551, which provides for the punishment of larceny "in" any building that is on fire, is not such variance as to affect the validity of the information.—People v. Klammer, 137 Mich. 399.

¶ 449. An information in a prosecution for maliciously injuring a fence, was not fatally defective for variance in omitting the word "society" in designating the owner, as How. St. § 9534, provides that no indictment shall be insufficient for designating any person mentioned therein by a name of office or other descriptive appellation, instead of his proper name, and How. St. § 2, subd. 12, provides that the word "person" may be applied to corporations.—People v. Ferguson, 119 Mich. 373.

§ 78. ——As to time.

Offer of evidence relating to one date as election against counts laying other dates, see ante § 48.

Variance as to time in rape and especially statutory rape on girls below age, see also Rape.

¶ 450. Time is not an ingredient of a criminal offense in any such sense as to make it necessary to charge it precisely according to the truth; but the information or indictment may state one time and the proof show another, without involving an objectionable variance.—Turner v. People, 33 Mich. 363.

¶ 451. Where a date in an information is not given as matter of description, pratica has allowed the time to be alleged without reference to the truth; a date unreasonably remote from the truth should not be given, however, although the variance might not support a reversal for receiving the proof.—People v. Saunders, 29 Mich. 269.

¶ 452. An information in a criminal case is presumed to have been framed with reference to the facts disclosed on the preliminary examination; and the date of the offense as given therein is supposed to correspond fairly with the facts then stated.—People v. Davis, 52 Mich. 569.

¶ 453. If a crime is charged of which time is not of the essence under a videlicit as occurring "heretofore to wit" and a date is specified, one time may be stated in the information and the proof may show another. —People v. Swift, 172 Mich. 473.

¶ 454. Where a misdemeanor charged in a complaint and warrant is alleged with a videlicit, the prosecution is not confined to proving that the offense was committed on the exact date alleged, especially where the defendant does not ask at the trial that the prosecutor be compelled to elect as to the date upon which he relies.—People v. Stewart, 167 Mich. 417. Reversed in 232 U. S. 665, 58 L. ed. 786, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 476.

¶ 455. On trial of an information for incest the prosecutor may, before the evidence is introduced, select any one act of criminal intercourse which occurred within the jurisdiction of the court and within the period of the statute of limitations applicable to the offense as the one upon which a conviction will be sought. But when evidence has been introduced tending one act, and for th conviction upon it, to have made his el thereafter be cons against the defend alone can be found 5 Mich. 305.

¶ 456. While the statutory rape is in fixing the time should not be comp before the transac to select a partic once done so the fall by such electi Mich. 241.

¶ 457. Where a No. 213, Pub. Acts fendant on a certa fully punished a c acts of punishmer minating in the pu cified, cannot be 161 Mich. 651.

¶ 458. On a pr 1897, § 5865 for ta fish with nets the the commission of fense alleged upor but where the ent occurrences on ce to justify a convi be proved on the c 143 Mich. 271.

¶ 459. On a pr tempting to take f L. 1897, § 5865, th made out where t stand that he v "about" the date People v. Neal, 14

¶¶ 460, 461. Co St. § 9421, provid embezzlement evi such embezzleme months next afte dictment." Held, information for e tained by evidenc the time stated.— 491.

¶ 462. On a p the statutory cr his bank under prosecution need act to which the section 11782, a ments committe the time stated such a crime and embezzlements b People v. Messer

¶ 463. Evidence of other acts of embezzlement, committed within six months next after the time stated in the indictment for a "bank" embezzlement, may be properly admitted under Comp. L. 1897, § 11782, which includes a bank cashier in the terms, a clerk, agent or servant.—People v. Messer, 148 Mich. 168.

¶ 464. Since the rendition by the coroner of a statement showing necessary facts in order to be paid by the state for expenses of an inquest is essential in addition to a certificate of the court showing an audit by the circuit judge, and since the issuance of a warrant by the auditor general upon the state treasurer is based not wholly on the judicial audit but also on the statement and the facts therein shown, it cannot be contended that, by receiving and cashing a check issued pursuant to a regular warrant in the known and customary manner of the office, a false pretense in the statement of facts in the coroner's bill was one by which a warrant and not money was procured, and that the pretense was imposed on the circuit judge who audited the bill rather than on the auditor general as alleged.—People v. Hoffmann, 142 Mich. 531.

¶ 465. Where the information charges the offense of seduction to have been committed on a certain date and evidence is introduced to show the commission of the offense on that date, the jury cannot be permitted to convict on testimony of an offense committed on an earlier date.—People v. Bressler, 131 Mich. 390.

§ 79. ——As to principalship or accessary part.

Averment of procuring one to commit crime and proof that he and another were procured to do it, see also ante ¶ 150.

Conviction of sole crime feasor on indictment as joint criminal, see Comp. L. 1915, § 15744.

¶ 466. Where a new felony is created by statute, it depends somewhat on the terms of the statute whether it reaches accessaries or not. Unless by virtue of some statutory provision, no one who is indicted as principal can be convicted as accessary, or vice versa.—Meister v. People, 31 Mich. 99.

¶ 467. Under an information charging a defendant respondent with keeping a house of ill-fame, proof that she aided or assisted others in the commission of the offense is admissible.—People v. Wright, 90 Mich. 362.

§ 80. Proof of lessor or included crime.

Adding count to charge lower grade than described in commitment, see ante ¶ 57.

Sufficiency of proofs to support conviction of the lesser offense, see post § 323.

Sufficiency of proof of the lesser offenses, see post § 323; Homicide § 64 et seq.

Verdicts on the several counts and on included offenses, see post § 472.

Proof of greater crime, see post § 81.

Sufficiency of indictment for homicide or for homicidal assault to support conviction for lesser crime or degree, see Homicide §§ 41, 42.

Sufficiency to support conviction for lesser assaults and crimes, included in rape, see also Rape.

Provision for conviction of lesser degrees, see Comp. L. 1915, § 15616.

¶ 468. There can be no conviction of a lighter offense than is charged in the information unless it is one that is included in that which is charged; thus a statutory information for murder will not sustain a conviction for a mere assault, especially if it does not set out a murder by assault.—People v. Adams, 52 Mich. 24.

¶ 469. A common-law information for robbery sustains a conviction for larceny from the person.—People v. Calvin, 60 Mich. 113.

¶ 470. An attempt to commit a crime is necessarily charged in every information reciting the commission of a crime and there is nothing in Comp. L. 1897, § 11784, providing for punishment for an attempt to commit an offense prohibited by law, which will prevent a conviction for attempt on a complaint charging the completed offense when the proofs fail to show the crime but to show an act toward the commission thereof.—People v. Webb, 127 Mich. 29.

¶ 471. A person charged under Comp. L. 1897, § 11484 with assault with intent to rob "with intent if resisted to kill" may be convicted of assault with intent to rob under § 11486.—People v. Powler, 142 Mich. 225.

¶ 472. An assault and battery is necessarily involved in the crime of taking indecent and improper liberties with a female child under the age of 14 years, as provided in Comp. L. 1898, § 11719, and a conviction of such assault and battery may properly be had on an information charging the other offense.—People v. Sanford, 149 Mich. 266.

§ 81. ——Proof of greater crime than charged.

Impropriety of adding count for higher degree than commitment describes, see ante ¶ 58.

¶ 473. Evidence of the details of a completed act of sexual intercourse, although there was but slight penetration, cannot sustain a conviction on the charge of taking indecent liberties with the person of a female child under the age of 14 without the intent to commit the crime of rape.—People v. Rivers, 147 Mich. 643.

II. TIME FOR PROSECUTION; LIMITATIONS.

§ 82. In general.

Commencement and computation of period, see post § 83.

Suspension because of absence or flight, see post § 84.

Timeliness of commencement as jury question, see post § 398, ¶ 1834.
Time and term for filing informations, see ante § 13.
Time for trial with respect to time of indictment returned or information filed, see post § 329.
Time for procedure for review, see post § 580 et seq.
Postponements and continuances of trials, see post VI.
Indictments for larceny, see Larceny, II.
Constitutional provision for speedy trial, see Constitutional Law § 199.
Time after crime within which indictments may be found, see Comp. L. 1915, § 15719.

¶ 474. Where a woman was seduced on a promise of marriage, and the intercourse was afterwards broken off, but was renewed again on the promise of marriage being renewed, and only in consequence of such promise, it was held that a prosecution might be commenced for the seduction at any time within one year from such last intercourse.—People v. Millspaugh, 11 Mich. 278.

¶ 475. Comp. Laws 1897, § 5331b, providing that no prosecution for the recovery of any penalty imposed for a violation of the statute relating to hawkers and peddlers shall be maintained unless brought within sixty days after the commission of the offense, applies only to prosecutions for the recovery of the penalty specified in section 5331 of said act, and does not apply to the prosecution for misdemeanor specified in section 5329 of said act.—People v. Stewart, 167 Mich. 417. Reversed in 232 U. S. 665, 58 L. ed. 786, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 476.

§ 83. Commencement of prosecution and computation of time.

¶ 476. The issue of a warrant in good faith, and delivery to an officer to deliver, where defendant was afterwards arrested upon that warrant and bound over for trial, is a sufficient commencement of the prosecution to satisfy the statute of limitations.—People v. Clark, 33 Mich. 112.

¶ 477. Making a complaint before a justice of the peace in a criminal case is not such a commencement of prosecution as prevents the running of the statute of limitations; there must not only be a sworn complaint, but a warrant must be issued and delivered to an officer for service; and whether a warrant was so issued and delivered within the time in which the prosecution could be commenced is for the jury if in dispute.—People v. Clement, 72 Mich. 116.

§ 84. Suspension of limitations.

¶ 478. The absence which is to be deducted from the six years' limitation of criminal prosecution (How. St. § 9507) is not mere absence from the state, but such absence as destroys residence.—People v. McCausey, 65 Mich. 72.

¶ 479. How. St. "any period during was not usually an in this state shall the six years" duri to be commenced, tions for seduction for the prosecuti fugitives from just beginning a prosec the statutory yea from justice.—Peo 116.

III. JURISDICT PROSECUTION;

§ 85. Jurisdiction i
General law of j
Relative jurisdicti minor courts 90.
Extent and subje trates' jurisdi
Venue or place fo
Transfer from on trial, see post
As dependent on p pletion of the Courts in which see ante § 7.
Amount of penalt or propriety
Territorial jurisd istrates, see
Effect of quasha ante ¶ 376.
Abatement of cas ¶ 2724.
Jurisdictional av § 24.
Jurisdictional tim see post § 48
Propriety of cer jurisdiction,
Jurisdiction of p dinances, se XVI, B.
Sufficiency of th viction or ac ecution, see Power of courts prisons, see
Power to admit indictment, s

¶ 480. In crin confer jurisdictio 351.

¶ 481. Jurisdi of a criminal offe cannot be confer of another coun Mich. 536.

¶ 482. As a g laws of no natio ritorial limits; the right to puni a crime it must have occurred within those limits.—People v. Tyler, 7 Mich. 161.

¶ 483. The courts of this state have jurisdiction to punish only such offenses as are committed therein.—People v. Devine, 185 Mich. 50.

¶ 484. Bastardy proceedings are not regarded as dealing with a crime or misdemeanor, and they do not fall within a statute giving a court jurisdiction over "crimes, misdemeanors and offenses."—People v. Harty, 49 Mich. 490.

§ 86. ——Transitory and continuing crimes.

Venue of crime begun in one county and completed in other, see post § 96.

Venue where offense was not wholly within one county, see post § 96.

Bigamous residence within state to sustain jurisdiction of crime, see also Crimes ¶ 209.

Power of state to punish crime begun or consummated within state but otherwise outside of it, see Constitutional Law § 114.

Giving jurisdiction of transitory crime as denial of jury of vicinage, see Constitutional Law § 210.

Validity of law making act criminal when done partly outside of state, see Constitutional Law § 195.

§ 87. ——Federal crimes and offenses on international waters.

Venue for prosecution of crimes on Great Lakes, see post § 97.

Acts amounting to both federal and state crimes, see post § 88.

Jurisdiction between circuit courts and municipal courts, see post ¶ 497.

¶ 485. State courts have no jurisdiction of a criminal prosecution against a clerk or agent of a national bank for the embezzlement of its funds, such offense being exclusively punishable in the United States courts under U. S. Rev. Stat. §§ 5209, defining the crime, and § 711, conferring jurisdiction.—People v. Fonda, 62 Mich. 401.

¶ 486. The open, uninclosed waters of the Great Lakes, between which the Detroit river is a connecting stream, are "high seas" within the meaning of U. S. Rev. Stat. § 5346.—United States v. Rodgers, 150 U. S. 249, 37 L. ed. 1071, 14 Sup. Ct. 109.

¶ 487. Under the U. S. Rev. Stat. § 5346, the federal court has jurisdiction of an assault committed with dangerous weapons by a person on an American vessel in the Detroit river out of the jurisdiction of any particular state and within the territorial limits of the Dominion of Canada.—United States v. Rodgers, 150 U. S. 249, 37 L. ed. 1071, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 109, disapproving, contra, People v. Tyler, 7 Mich. 161; Ex parte Byers, 32 Fed. 404.

¶ 488. In the absence of a treaty with England allowing execution of process of United States admiralty courts the federal courts in Michigan have no jurisdiction over a prosecution for manslaughter committed by a mortal blow given on the St. Clair river (though on an American vessel), in Canadian waters, from which blow death resulted on land.—People v. Tyler, 7 Mich. 161; Tyler v. People, 8 Mich. 320. (Disapproved, see preceding paragraph.)

¶ 489. Upon the high seas, every vessel, public or private, is, for jurisdictional purposes, a part of the territory of the nation where it belongs; and an offense committed on board of it is an offense committed against the sovereignty of that nation.—People v. Tyler, 7 Mich. 161.

¶ 490. Where a private ship enters a foreign jurisdiction it becomes, with all on board, in the absence of treaty stipulations to the contrary, subject to the municipal laws and control of the country it visits.—People v. Tyler, 7 Mich. 161.

¶ 491. Manslaughter, committed by a mortal blow given on the River St. Clair, beyond the boundary line between the United States and Canada, and within a county of that province, from which blow death ensues in Michigan, is, under Comp. L. 1857, § 5944, How. St. § 9420, punishable in the courts of this state.—People v. Tyler, 7 Mich. 161; Tyler v. People, 8 Mich. 320.

§ 88. ——Acts amounting to both federal and state crimes.

Bank embezzlement from national bank, see also ante ¶ 485.

¶ 492. The jurisdiction of the federal courts over offenses against the laws of congress, providing for the punishment of counterfeiting the current coin of the United States, is not exclusive of the jurisdiction of the state courts over offenses against state laws making it punishable to counterfeit such coin.—Harlan v. People, 1 D. 207.

¶ 493. Defendant was tried on information under Comp. L. 1897, § 11547, for the breaking and entering of a building used as a post office. Section 5478 of the Revised Statutes of the United States provides for the punishment of persons forcibly breaking into any post office or any building used as a post office. Held, the federal courts did not have exclusive jurisdiction to try defendant, but he might be tried in the state court.—People v. Burke, 161 Mich. 397.

§ 89. Jurisdiction between circuit and minor courts.

Disability of superior or recorder's court to question indictment or information transferred to it for trial, see ante § 60.

Limit of punishment in circuit court for offenses within justice's jurisdiction, see post § 484.

Recorder's Court of Detroit as inferior court, see Courts ¶ 307.
Jurisdiction of Recorder's Court of Detroit and other city courts, see also Municipal Courts, II.
Power of legislature to give jurisdiction to municipal or inferior courts, see Constitutional Law § 56.
Provisions fixing jurisdiction of recorder's court in Detroit, see Comp. L. 1915, § 14643 et seq.
Provisions respecting jurisdiction of Superior Court of Grand Rapids, see Comp. L. 1915, § 14694.

¶ 494. Where articles belonging to two different owners and having different values are stolen from the same place at the same time, and an information charges the larceny in a single count, the circuit court has jurisdiction if the aggregate value exceeds $25.—People v. Johnson, 81 Mich. 573.

¶ 495. Jurisdiction in a criminal case is measured by the offense charged in the information, and is not lost by a verdict for a minor offense included therein.—People v. Schoenth, 44 Mich. 489.

¶ 496. The only statutory methods whereby one may be prosecuted in the Recorder's Court of the city of Detroit are upon an indictment returned by a grand jury sitting in the Circuit Court for the county of Wayne and duly certified and transmitted by the clerk of the circuit court to the recorder's court, and upon an information signed by the prosecuting attorney of the county of Wayne, upon which shall be indorsed the names of the witnesses known to him, and which may be filed during the term in the recorder's court.—Jasnowski v. Connolly, 197 Mich. 257.

¶ 497. The courts of Charlevoix county have, under Comp. L. 1897, § 2448, concurrent jurisdiction with other counties upon the eastern shore of Lake Michigan of all offenses committed on that part of Lake Michigan which lies within the limits of this state, and they are not ousted of such jurisdiction by Act No. 277, Local Acts 1885, giving to the village of Manistique jurisdiction of offenses committed on that part of the lake south of and adjacent to the village for a distance of one mile from the shore line.—People v. Coffey, 155 Mich. 103.

§ 90. ——Between police and recorder's courts.

¶ 498. The police court of Detroit has, and the recorder's court has not, jurisdiction to try offenders against the game laws, they being punishable only by fine of $50, which How. St. § 2203 imposes.—Robison v. Recorder's Court Judge, 69 Mich. 608.

§ 91. Extent and subjects of magistrates' jurisdiction.

Necessity of approval of prosecution by prosecuting attorney, see post § 92.
Necessity of security for costs, see post § 93.
Jurisdiction on appeal from justice, see post § 662.
Defects in warrant or preliminaries affecting jurisdiction of justice, see post § 648.
Nature and origin of police court of Detroit, see Municipal Courts, I.
Statutory provisions as to criminal jurisdiction of justices of the peace, see Comp. L. 1915, § 15769.
Provisions respecting jurisdiction and powers of police justices and magistrates, see Comp. L. 1915, §§ 14715, 14737.

¶ 499. A justice who lives in a village that lies in two townships can be authorized by statute to hold court in criminal cases in that part of the village that lies in the township he does not live in.—Faulks v. People. 39 Mich. 200.

¶ 500. Justices of the peace in Detroit have power under the general laws of the state to dispose of all criminal business arising in Wayne county outside of the city.—Allor v. Wayne County Auditors, 43 Mich. 76.

¶ 501. Assault with intent to commit rape is a felony, and not triable by a justice of the peace.—People v. Lynch, 29 Mich. 274.

¶ 502. A justice has no jurisdiction in cases of assault and battery except when the offense was committed in his county.—People v. Gregory, 30 Mich. 371.

¶ 503. The embezzlement of county funds by a city collector is cognizable by the police justice of Detroit as an offense within his general criminal jurisdiction.—Attorney General ex rel. Crosby v. Detroit Police Justice, 40 Mich. 631.

¶ 504. The Act of April 16, 1887, § 161, revising and amending the charter of Bay City, and conferring on the police court jurisdiction of crime is prospective, and does not give the police court jurisdiction of offenses committed before the act took effect, but leaves them to be tried by justices of the peace.—People v. Pond, 67 Mich. 98.

¶ 505. Under Pub. Acts 1887, No. 28, § 2, authorizing the game and fish warden to enforce all laws for the protection of fish "now in force or hereafter enacted," and to bring suit for the violation of such laws, the warden may institute prosecutions before a justice of the peace under Pub. Acts 1897, No. 151, § 4, which regulates the taking of fish with nets, and makes infractions of the statute misdemeanors.—Osborn v. Charlevoix Circuit Judge, 114 Mich. 655.

¶ 506. Justices of the peace, under the statute giving them jurisdiction of criminal offenses where the punishment does not exceed a fine of $100 or three months' imprisonment, have no jurisdiction of cases where the maximum punishment allowed by law exceeds that sum.—In re Berry, 7 Mich. 467.

¶ 507. A justice has jurisdiction to punish by fine to the amount of $100 and to impose costs in addition thereto.—Faulks v. People, 39 Mich. 200.

¶ 508. The authority of a justice of the peace, under Comp. L. 1871, § 5525, subd. 8, to hear and determine charges for offenses punishable by $100 fine or three months' imprisonment, or both, did not include the offense prohibited in Comp. L. 1871, § 1988, of keeping billiard-tables, cards and dice for gaming.—Pardee v. Smith, 27 Mich. 33.

¶ 509. The police court of Detroit has no jurisdiction of a criminal case where the maximum punishment allowed by law exceeds a fine of $100 or three months' imprisonment, or both such fine and imprisonment. —In re Berry, 7 Mich. 467.

¶ 510. The police court of Grand Rapids cannot try a party for misdemeanor that is punishable by fine and imprisonment beyond a justice's jurisdiction.—People v. Mangold, 71 Mich. 335.

¶ 511. Violations of Laws 1887, Act No. 129, against carrying concealed weapons, being punishable by fine not exceeding $100 or imprisonment not exceeding ninety days, or both, are under the jurisdiction of the police justices of Detroit.—Robison v. Recorder's Court Judge, 69 Mich. 607.

¶ 512. How. St. § 2203 provides that violators of the game laws "shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall likewise be liable to a penalty of $50," etc. Section 9261 prescribes a punishment for persons convicted of misdemeanors for which punishment is not provided by any statute. Held, that section 2203 does not contemplate a double punishlaws can only be punished by a fine of $50. ment, and that offenders against the game Therefore the police court of Detroit has jurisdiction of prosecutions.—Robison v. Recorder's Court Judge, 69 Mich. 608.

¶ 513. The statutory provision as to the general criminal jurisdiction of justices did not operate as a limit to their jurisdiction as expressly given under the prohibitory liquor law; the jurisdiction conferred is sustained as within the constitutional limits.—In re Buddington, 29 Mich. 472.

¶ 514. Justices of the peace have jurisdiction of the offense of selling drink to minors, although the sum of the penalty and costs exceeds $100.—Faulks v. People, 39 Mich. 200.

§ 92. ——Approval of prosecution by public prosecutor.

Powers and functions of prosecuting attorney, see also post § 649.

Provisions as to approval by prosecuting attorney or security by complainant before justice, see Comp. L. 1915, § 15811.

¶ 515. A justice's omission to secure an order from the prosecuting attorney before issuing process in a criminal case does not deprive him of jurisdiction, though it might subject him to censure and official embarrassment. The appearance of the prosecuting attorney and his prosecution of the case are sufficient approval.—People v. Griswold, 64 Mich. 722.

§ 93. ——Security for costs by complainant.

¶ 516. Whether the complaining party has given to the people security for costs, as required by How. St. § 7135a, does not concern the respondent, and the omission to do so does not deprive the justice of jurisdiction.—People v. Griswold, 64 Mich. 722.

§ 94. Venue of crime and prosecution.

Where offense was committed near to boundary line, see post § 95.

Where offense was partly in two or more counties, see post § 96.

Where offense was committed on Great Lakes, see post § 97.

Territorial jurisdiction of justices, see ante § 91.

Change of venue, see post §§ 98, 99.

Averments of place or venue, see ante § 24.

Amendable averments of venue or place, see ante § 70.

Sufficiency of proof of place of crime, see post § 307.

Showing of venue in record, see post § 500.

Venue of bastardy proceedings, see Bastards § 4.

¶ 517. Persons charged with crime must be prosecuted in the county where the crime was either actually or in contemplation of law perpetrated.—Swart v. Kimball, 43 Mich. 443; Hill v. Taylor, 50 Mich. 549.

§ 95. ——Offenses committed on or near boundary lines.

Provisions for laying venue in either county where offense was committed near line, see Comp. L. 1915, § 15606.

¶ 518. Offenses committed at or within a point one hundred rods from the boundary between two counties may be prosecuted and punished in either county under Comp. L. § 7808.—Bayliss v. People, 46 Mich. 221.

¶ 519. Where a larceny is committed in one county and the stolen property is delivered to a receiver in an adjoining county within 100 rods of the line between the two counties, the receiver may be prosecuted in the county where the larceny was committed. —People v. Hubbard, 86 Mich. 440.

§ 96. ——Offenses not begun and completed in same county.

Bringing stolen property into state as larceny therein, see also Larceny, II.

Provisions for laying venue for killing where blow in one county is followed by death in other, or blow on Great Lakes by death on land, see Comp. L. 1915, §§ 15607, 15608.

Indictment in any county where stolen property was taken or had in possession, see Comp. L. 1915, §§ 15732, 15733.

¶ 520. The misdemeanor of conspiring to obtain property by false pretenses may be tried wherever an overt act in pursuance of the conspiracy has been committed.—People v. Arnold, 46 Mich. 268.

¶ 521. The venue of a crime of obtaining the money of the state by a false pretense of presenting a false statement of claim to the state is rightly laid in Wayne county, where the money was obtained by presenting a check on a Detroit bank issued by the state treasurer on a warrant from the state auditor to whom the false statement had been sent by mail from Detroit.—People v. Hoffmann, 142 Mich. 531.

¶ 522. The county where the application for the license to practice as a physician is filled out and filed and issued and not the county where the examination is held has jurisdiction of a prosecution for the unlawful procurement of registration as a physician under Pub. Acts 1899, No. 237, How. 2nd Ed., § 5108 et seq., as amended by Pub. Acts 1913, No. 368.—People v. Maczulski, 194 Mich. 193.

¶ 523. Defendant was convicted of wife abandonment under an information charging the period of abandonment to be from April 2, 1911, to July 3, 1911. The information was filed and the trial had in the county of the wife's residence, where she had gone in September, 1910. Defendant never became a resident of said county and married his wife in another county. Held, under Act No. 144, Pub. Acts of 1907, § 4, complaint was filed and the trial had in the proper county so as to give the court jurisdiction.—In re Price, 168 Mich. 527.

§ 97. ——Offenses committed on Great Lakes.

Extent of justices' jurisdiction over offenses on Great Lakes, see ante ¶¶ 497, 505.

¶ 524. Comp. L. 1897, § 2450, How. 2nd Ed., § 917, giving to organized or subsequently organized counties bordering on Lake Huron concurrent jurisdiction of all offenses committed on that part of the lake lying within the limits of the state, and providing that such offenses may be tried in the county in which process against the offender shall first be issued, applies not only to transitory but also to local offenses.—Andrews v. Ellsworth, 190 Mich. 157.

§ 98. Change of venue.

Application and procedure for change, see post § 99.

Transfer of cases to other courts for trial, see post § 100.

Denial of change as harmless error where fair jury was obtained without peremptory challenges, see post § 538.

Sufficiency of record to show error and harm in denying change, see post § 595.

Irreviewableness of discretionary rulings on motions for change, see post § 629.

¶ 525. Though criminal cases must generally be tried in the county where the crime is charged to have been committed the court may change the venue where justice demands it or statutes so provide.—People v. Swift, 172 Mich. 473.

¶ 526. Defendant in a criminal case has no absolute right to a change of venue.—Glazier v. Ingham Circuit Judge, 153 Mich. 481.

¶ 527. Act 157 of the Laws of 1851 is construed as giving the circuit courts right to change venue on applications of the people as well as on application of the defendant.—Glinnan v. Detroit Recorder's Court Judge, 173 Mich. 674.

¶ 528. Jurisdiction of the subject-matter of a criminal offense committed in one county cannot be conferred by consent on the courts of another county.—People v. Meloche, 186 Mich. 536.

¶ 529. The granting of a change of venue is discretionary with the trial court.—People v. Gage, 188 Mich. 635.

¶ 530. The discretion lodged in a trial court relative to granting or refusing a change of venue is not a private, arbitrary, or personal, but a legal, discretion, to be exercised according to well-known principles of law.—People v. Gage, 188 Mich. 635.

¶ 531. The power of the circuit court to order a change of venue under Act 157 of the Laws of 1851 should be exercised with great care and deliberation.—Glinnan v. Detroit Recorder's Court Judge, 173 Mich. 674.

¶ 532. A change of venue may be ordered on the application of the people on the ground of local prejudice where two trials have resulted in a disagreement.—People v. Peterson, 93 Mich. 27.

¶ 533. Change of venue may be ordered in criminal case for cause shown on application by prosecution.—People v. Fuhrmann, 103 Mich. 593.

¶ 534. It is proper for the court acting on his own knowledge of conditions, to refuse to pass on a motion for change of venue until after the examination of the jurors, where the ground of the motion is that prejudicial newspaper reports were circulated and that at a former trial there was prejudicial conduct by officers of the court.—People v. Swift, 172 Mich. 473.

¶ 535. The trial court abuses its discretion in refusing to grant a change of venue in a criminal case in which the defendant was charged with defrauding the depositors of a large bank nine months after the doors of the bank were closed, where the bank failure was somewhat sensational, and stirred up ill feeling and bitter discussion to such an extent as to become one of the issues of the political campaign up to within two months of the time the motion for change of venue was made.—People v. Gage, 188 Mich. 635.

§ 99. ——Application, showing and procedure thereon.

Grounds for change, see ante § 98.

Mandamus to compel action on motion for change, see Mandamus, II.

¶ 536. Change of venue may be ordered on application of prosecution.—People v. Peterson, 93 Mich. 27; People v. Fuhrmann, 103 Mich. 593.

¶ 537. Affidavits in support of a motion by the prosecution for a change of venue in a criminal cause from the Recorder's Court of Detroit must, under Circuit Court Rule 19, subdiv. b, be served on the attorney of the opposite party.—Glinnan v. Detroit Recorder's Court Judge, 181 Mich. 192.

¶ 538. Under Circuit Court Rule 37 affidavits in support of a motion for the change of venue of a criminal cause from the Recorder's Court of Detroit must be entitled in the court and cause.—Glinnan v. Detroit Recorder's Court Judge, 181 Mich. 192.

¶ 539. A motion for a change of venue in a criminal case was properly denied when supported by two affidavits only, and the respondent at the trial announced himself satisfied with the jury, without exhausting his peremptory challenges.—People v. Fitzsimmons, 183 Mich. 284.

§ 100. Transfer and certification to other court for trial.

Transfer of preliminary examination to another magistrate or association of another in the hearing, see Arrest § 31.

Provisions for transfer of indictment from Kent Circuit to Grand Rapids Superior Court, see Comp. L. 1915, § 14694.

¶ 540. Both civil and criminal cases can be transferred from courts of original to courts of concurrent jurisdiction unless so far advanced as to involve conflict.—People v. Hurst, 41 Mich. 328.

¶ 541. The provision of the Detroit charter that indictments shall be "forthwith" certified to the recorder's court, which court is given full power to take all further proceedings thereon, must be construed as only authorizing proceedings under indictments that have been legally presented; and when defendant desires to plead in abatement to an indictment so certified, which he cannot do in the recorder's court, the circuit court may by summary order or by certiorari recall the record that the pleas may be passed upon.—Lauder v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 79 Mich. 602.

¶ 542. In proceedings for a writ of certiorari for the recall of an indictment from the Recorder's Court of Detroit, the proper practice is to have the parties arraigned and issue joined on the merits before the record is certified down.—Lauder v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 79 Mich. 602.

IV. PREPARATORY AND PRELIMINARY MATTER.

§ 101. In general.

Finding, filing and formal requisites of the accusation, see ante I, A.

Indorsement of names of witnesses on information, see ante §§ 20, 21.

In prosecutions before justices or minor courts, see post § 645.

[Note. The preliminaries of arrest, examination and commitment, and extradition of fugitives are treated in separate topics. See Arrest; Extradition.

The calling and formation of the grand jury and the preparation and service of the venire list are treated in Grand Jury and Jury respectively.]

Bail pending arrest and trial, see Arrest, Commitment and Bail.

Relaxation of technical rules and practice on preliminary examination, see Arrest § 27.

Proceedings to determine sanity of accused person, see Insane Person, I.

Order to prosecuting attorney holding public records for evidence to surrender them to proper custody subject to call, see Records.

Statutory proceedings for examination of persons in order to discover crime, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 196.

§ 102. Appointment of counsel and objections for disqualification.

Power of assistant prosecutor to make amendments, see ante § 68.

Fixing amount of fee, see post § 509.

Objecting to qualifications for first time on review, see post § 512.

Withdrawal of prosecutor as curing objection to qualifications, see post ¶ 2600.

Attendance and functions of attorneys, see post §§ 330, 649.

Counsel on preliminary examination, see Arrest § 32.

Appointment of assistants to and substitutes for prosecuting attorney, see Attorney § 65.

¶ 543. A court cannot act upon unsworn allegations of impartiality of counsel retained to assist in a criminal prosecution, if any question is made as to the fact and the defense objects.—People v. Hurst, 41 Mich. 328.

¶ 544. It is error to exclude evidence that counsel assisting in a prosecution were employed by the complaining witness or by private parties, even though the prosecuting attorney consented or requested that they should act.—Meister v. People, 31 Mich. 99; Sneed v. People, 38 Mich. 248.

§ 103. Production and inspection of documents.

¶ 545. The refusal of the trial court on a prosecution for embezzlement from a bank, to require the prosecuting attorney to deliver to the respondent and his attorneys memoranda prepared by an accountant of the bank, was not an abuse of discretion, where the respondent and his attorneys had been previously given the fullest access to the papers and books of the bank.—People v. Fitzsimmons, 183 Mich. 284.

V. ARRAIGNMENT AND PLEAS.

§ 104. In general; necessity of arraignment and plea.

Effect of failure to plead, see post §§ 105-107.
Time for plea or entry of plea, see post § 108.
Subjects and grounds for various pleas and scope of issues under them, see post §§ 109-119.
Withdrawal of plea and pleading anew, see post § 120.
Plea on trial as admission receivable in later trial, see post § 249.
Record showing as to pleas, see post § 500 et seq.
Arraignment and pleas before justice on trial for misdemeanor, see post § 650.

¶ 546. On the trial of a felony an arraignment upon the information and a plea are necessary to a valid conviction, and the record must show them; if the return to a writ of error in such case does not show that they were taken, the omission cannot be supplied by a presumption of regularity.—Grigg v. People, 31 Mich. 471.

§ 105. Effect of failure to plead or absence of plea.

Entry of plea of not guilty by court, see post § 106.
Plea of not guilty implied from going to trial, see post § 107.

¶ 547. A party who had pleaded not guilty to an information was allowed to withdraw his plea for the purpose of making a motion to quash. The motion was overruled, and, without having again pleaded, respondent was convicted after a trial on the merits. Conviction held valid.—Hensche v. People, 16 Mich. 46.

¶ 548. Where the merits without any defect is matter of the statute will not viction.—Hensche v.

¶ 549. After a tr criminal case, a wan a conviction invalid Mich. 362.

¶ 550. Defendant a felony. He filed charge under oath a a meritorious defen delay caused by a j and when tried he the jury that he h the charge. He was a trial of the cau represented by his c attention to the om and plea. Held, ground for invalida ment.—People v. W

§ 106. ——Entry of

Nunc pro tunc entr Record showing a prisoner stood ¶ 2384.
Provision for entry
court on refus
Comp. L. 1915,

¶ 551. A plea o entered without re on his arraignmen information, and made no attempt t plea in bar (Comp § 9518).—People v

§ 107. ——Plea im

¶ 552. By anno trial a defendant People v. Weeks,

§ 108. Time for pl

¶ 553. A plea of by the court to b any time.—Hensch

§ 109. Pleas in ab

Proper mode of § 59.
Defects in prelimi of abatement ¶ 59.
Matters in issue
Waiver of object
by pleading
see post §§
Matters abating Amendment and misnomer, se
Verification of di evidence, see

¶ 554. Whether a plea in abatement to an indictment is the proper method rather than a motion to quash or raising the objections that incompetent testimony was admitted by the grand jury, and that defendant's constitutional privilege was violated in compelling him to testify against himself, quære.—People v. Lauder, 82 Mich. 109.

¶ 555. A plea in abatement to an indictment should be certain to every intent and consistent, and conclude by praying judgment of the indictment and that it may be quashed; and it must be verified by affidavit. —Findley v. People, 1 Mich. 234.

¶ 556. A party interposing a dilatory plea of abatement to an indictment in a criminal prosecution invites the most rigid scrutiny of its sufficiency under the established rules of pleading.—People v. Lay, 193 Mich. 476.

¶ 557. A plea in abatement is bad for duplicity if it states several distinct facts having no relation to or dependence upon each other.—Findley v. People, 1 Mich. 234; People v. Lay, 193 Mich. 17.

¶ 558. A plea in abatement to an indictment based upon the fact that defendant was subpoenaed and testified in answer to interrogatories before the grand jury was held bad for uncertainty, because not showing whether it was based upon the reception of incompetent testimony, or upon the violation of defendant's constitutional privilege against self-crimination.—People v. Lauder, 82 Mich. 109.

¶ 559. A plea in abatement to an indictment based upon the fact that defendant was subpoenaed and testified in answer to interrogatories before the grand jury is insufficient where it does not show that some material fact without which an indictment could not have been found, was testified to by the defendant only and not by independent testimony.—People v. Lauder, 82 Mich. 109.

¶ 560. In a prosecution for embezzlement, averment in a plea in abatement that minutes of testimony taken before one who served as stenographer in bankruptcy proceedings were used and read before the grand jury as evidence against accused by such stenographer, who was also a member of the grand jury which afterwards indicted accused, does not properly charge that such stenographer and grand juror was a "prosecutor" within the meaning of Comp. L. 1897, § 11881, How. St. 2nd Ed. § 15052, and if it was intended by such averment to charge that the indictment was founded upon incompetent testimony, such plea becomes bad for duplicity, it appearing that in another portion of the same plea it was charged that such grand juror was a prosecutor.—People v. Lay, 193 Mich. 17.

¶ 561. In a criminal prosecution of an officer of a corporation for the alleged embezzlement of money of the corporation by the receipt of an excessive salary, a plea in abatement to the indictment which alleged that the trial judge who called the jury, before he ordered such jury convened and before his appointment had been employed as attorney by certain creditors of the corporation to procure the allowance of their claims against such corporation held not to show that such trial judge had a pecuniary interest in the indictment or conviction of the accused so as to disqualify him to act.—People v. Lay, 193 Mich. 476.

¶ 562. In a criminal prosecution of an officer of a corporation for the alleged embezzlement of the money of the corporation by the receipt of an excessive salary a plea in abatement to the indictment which alleged that when the trial judge ordered the convening of the grand jury he was a stockholder in various corporations to which such corporation was debtor held not to show that such trial judge had a pecuniary interest in the indictment or conviction of the defendant so as to disqualify him.—People v. Lay, 193 Mich. 476.

¶ 563. A plea in abatement to an indictment for embezzlement that the accused was required to give testimony before the grand jury and that without testimony so obtained, no indictment would have been obtained against him, but which did not allege that accused declined to so testify on grounds of personal privilege, or that there was not sufficient legal and competent testimony without his own to support the indictment, held not sufficient.—People v. Lay, 193 Mich. 17.

¶ 564. In a criminal prosecution of an officer of a corporation for the alleged embezzlement of money of the corporation by receiving an excessive salary, a plea to the indictment which charged that several of the grand jurors were stockholders in banks which were creditors of the corporation and held commercial papers guaranteed by defendant, held insufficient to show that such grand jurors had a pecuniary interest in the indictment or conviction of the defendant so as to render them incompetent to serve in such body.—People v. Lay, 193 Mich. 476.

¶ 565. Where a civil and a criminal action both lie, neither can be pleaded in abatement of the other.—Elliott v. Van Buren, 33 Mich. 49.

§ 110. Pleas of former jeopardy or bar.

What constitutes former jeopardy or bar, see Crimes, I, D.

Right to plead former acquittal had on defective indictment, see Comp. L. 1915, § 15625.

¶ 566. A plea of former acquittal is prima facie sufficient if it shows that a jury had been impaneled, and that the prosecution went into proofs by witnesses until they rested their case. This would entitle defendant to a verdict for or against him, and a discharge of the jury without a verdict would discharge the respondent unless there was some overruling necessity, and, if there had been, it should be set up by replication to the plea.—People v. Jones, 48 Mich. 554.

¶ 567. A plea of former jeopardy is bad upon its face if it shows that the cause was dismissed and the jury discharged by the court upon respondent's motion.—People v. White, 68 Mich. 648.

¶ 568. The defense of a former acquittal in the same court need not be raised by plea, as what occurred is before the court upon its own record.—People v. Taylor, 117 Mich. 583.

§ 111. Demurrer and replication to pleas.

Proper mode of objection for defects in general, see ante § 59.

¶ 569. The prosecution may reply to the merits of a plea in abatement after demurrer thereto is overruled.—People v. O'Neill, 107 Mich. 556.

§ 112. Pleas of guilty.

Matters in issue, proof of former acquittal, see post ¶ 582.

Necessary averments or recitals in judgment on plea of guilty, see post § 491.

Power to vacate plea of guilty and order plea of not guilty when former plea appears to have been of doubtful truth, see Comp. L. 1915, § 15830.

¶ 570. Where a respondent was informed against for the embezzlement of money alleged to have been received by him in the course of his employment as agent of the owners, and pleaded that as an attorney at law he was guilty of embezzlement of a less sum collected and received by him, less his reasonable fees as such attorney for making the collection, such plea amounts to a plea of guilty as charged.—People v. Converse, 74 Mich. 478.

¶ 571. Where the defendant was charged under Comp. L. 1897, § 11484, with assault and robbery "with intent if resisted to kill," etc., and upon arraignment pleaded guilty but in his examination by the court denied that he had an intent to kill if resisted, he cannot be sentenced under the offense charged, and the court must supplant his plea of guilty by one of not guilty, and put him on trial for the crime charged.—People v. Scofield, 142 Mich. 221.

§ 113. ——Voluntariness and coercion or inducement.

Examination to ascertain voluntariness and propriety of plea, see post § 114.

Duty of judge to investigate facts on plea of guilty, see Comp. L. 1915, § 15830.

¶ 572. When a court gives a prisoner the alternative of either submitting to a severe sentence or withdrawing a plea of not guilty, pleading guilty, paying a heavy fine and estopping himself from bringing error, a plea of guilty so extorted will not sustain a conviction.—O'Hara v. People, 41 Mich. 623.

¶ 573. A prisoner who lets his plea of guilty stand after a full examination by the judge as to whether it was voluntary, and a frank assurance from him that he must inflict some punishment by way of example, cannot complain that his plea was obtained by raising false hopes of leniency.—People v. Brown, 54 Mich. 15.

¶ 574. Judgment on a plea of guilty should be set aside if the plea was made in consequence of any intimation from the judge that the sentence would be more severe in case of conviction upon a trial. And it should be set aside even if the intimation was not by way of threat, but the punishment was severe. It need not be, however, if the judge, in answer to importunities, has only shown a disposition to inflict a milder punishment on confession of guilt, and has done so. But no such intimation, however guarded, is proper.—People v. Brown, 54 Mich. 15.

§ 114. ——Examination as to voluntariness of plea.

Examination as to voluntariness of plea of guilty before sentence, see post § 486.

Duty to set aside plea of guilty and enter plea of not guilty on facts elicited by examination, see ante ¶ 571.

Record of examination and findings on plea of guilty, see post § 504.

¶ 575. How. St. § 9558, requiring it to be ascertained whether a plea of guilty is voluntary or not, applies to appealed cases begun on a warrant, as well as to cases on information or indictment.—People v. Richmond, 57 Mich. 399.

¶ 576. An examination by a judge to ascertain whether a plea of guilty is voluntary or not involves a search into the depositions or similar evidence, and a personal and private examination of the accused outside of the routine business of the court, and apart from the prosecuting attorney; and the record should show the performance of this duty, or at least show such an interval between plea and sentence as will justify the presumption that it has been performed.—Edwards v. People, 39 Mich. 760.

¶ 577. The statute does not require a private examination of a prisoner to ascertain whether his plea of guilty is a voluntary one, and an investigation made by the trial judge in open court in the presence of the prosecuting attorney and an officer of the court is not a fatal defect. There may be cases where a private examination should be had, yet such cannot be held to be absolutely necessary.—Bayliss v. People, 46 Mich. 221.

¶ 578. On examination of accused for the purpose of passing sentence after he had pleaded guilty, it suffices to ask him if he has any reason to urge why judgment should not be passed against him, and for him to answer "None," without making other examination to ascertain whether his plea was voluntary, the judge being satisfied that it was so, and making return of that fact.—People v. Lewis, 51 Mich. 172.

¶ 579. Where a prisoner has changed his plea from not guilty to guilty, the statutory judicial duty of examining him to see that the change was not procured by undue influence is sufficiently performed if the judge makes full inquiry by interviews with the prisoner's counsel and friends, satisfies himself in advance that the plea may be properly received, and is satisfied that it is voluntary, free from undue influence, and made with every circumstance of fairness and deliberation.—Henning v. People, 40 Mich. 733.

¶ 580. Judgment on a plea of guilty was reversed and the prisoner discharged, where the record showed that the information was sworn to and the accused was arraigned, pleaded guilty, and was sentenced on the same day, and did not show anything from which it could be inferred that he was examined under L. 1875, Act No. 99 (How. St. § 9558), as to whether his plea of guilty was voluntary.—Clark v. People, 44 Mich. 308.

¶ 581. A person accused of grand larceny pleaded guilty on arraignment. The judge told him that if his plea was entered he could have no trial and must be sentenced. The prisoner said he understood that. He was then remanded to the sheriff's custody for two days before sentence. Meanwhile the judge inquired of the under-sheriff, in whose charge the prisoner had been, as to what statement he had made to him, and he also talked with the sheriff and with the prisoner's wife, and was satisfied that the plea was voluntary. When the prisoner was brought into court to be sentenced the judge asked him if he had any reason to urge why judgment should not be passed upon him, and the prisoner said he knew of none. He was accordingly sentenced. Held, that the statutory requirement that the judge satisfy himself that a plea of guilty is voluntary was substantially fulfilled (Pub. L. 1875, p. 140).—People v. Lepper, 51 Mich. 196.

§ 115. Matters in issue under plea in bar.

See also post ¶ 595.

Matters admitted by plea of guilty, see post § 119.

¶ 582. If an information is filed for the same offense, after examination and discharge, the defendant may prove those facts in bar of the prosecution under the plea of not guilty.—Morissey v. People, 11 Mich. 327.

§ 116. ——Under plea in abatement.

Modes of presenting particular objections and defects, see ante § 59 et seq.

¶ 583. Under a plea in abatement to an indictment, no other objections to a grand jury can be made than those a person under accusation at the time that it was impaneled might have interposed, viz., that a juror is the prosecutor or complainant in a charge against such accused person. (How. St. §§ 9496, 9497.)—People v. Thompson, 122 Mich. 411.

§ 117. Matters waived by plea or trial to merits.

Admissions and waivers by plea in prosecution before justice, see post § 650.

Moving to quash after plea, see ante § 64.

¶ 584. Plea of not guilty is a waiver of examination.—People v. Jones, 24 Mich. 215.

¶ 585. Pleading to an information is a waiver of any objection that might otherwise be made to its containing a charge of an offense not specified in the warrant for arrest.—People v. Clark, 33 Mich. 112.

¶ 586. By waiving a preliminary examination, and pleading not guilty to the information filed upon the return of the magistrate showing such waiver, a respondent waives the objection that no witnesses having knowledge of the facts were examined prior to the issuing of the warrant.—People v. Harris, 103 Mich. 473.

¶ 587. By pleading not guilty to an information for bigamy respondent waives objection that her husband made the complaint on which information was based, and the circuit court acquires jurisdiction to try the case.—People v. Turner, 116 Mich. 390.

¶ 588. By pleading to an information the objection that an accused has had no preliminary examination is waived.—People v. Harris, 144 Mich. 12.

¶ 589. Assignments of error based on the court's refusal to charge the jury, at the request of respondent, that it does not appear that the arrest was made on a legal warrant, or that respondent was arraigned upon any legal process, involve questions which should have been raised before pleading to the information, and will not be considered.—People v. Hanifan, 98 Mich. 32.

¶ 590. An accused in a criminal case waives a hearing upon a plea in abatement to the indictment where, although he contends that the order made by the judge in overruling the pleas is void because such judge was incapacitated by interest from sitting in the case, after disposal of the plea and the filing of the petition for change of venue such application is denied, but a trial judge from another circuit is called in to preside at the trial of the case upon merits, he goes to a trial upon the merits before such substituted judge without insisting that the order overruling the pleas is void.—People v. Lay, 193 Mich. 476.

§ 118. ——Matters of abatement by pleading over.

¶ 591. Plea of not guilty is a waiver of examination.—People v. Jones, 24 Mich. 215.

¶ 592. The rule that the points raised by a plea in abatement are waived by a failure to stand upon the plea, extends to criminal cases (dictum).—Steel v. Clinton Circuit Judge, 133 Mich. 695.

¶ 593. If a person arrested upon a complaint and warrant charging an assault with intent to do great bodily harm, waives examination, is bound over for trial, and is informed against in the circuit court under two counts—one for assault with intent to do great bodily harm, the second for assault and battery, by pleading and going to trial he waives an examination on the second count.—People v. Williams, 93 Mich. 623.

§ 119. Scope of and matters admitted by plea of guilty.

Plea of guilty or confession of robbery overcome by proofs showing necessary element of crime lacking, see also post ¶¶ 1510, 1511.

¶ 594. A plea of guilty to a charge of the larceny of several articles as one act, and for a use to which all were to be put, is an admission of the larceny of all of them.—People v. Town, 53 Mich. 488.

¶ 595. Where a respondent upon being taken before the magistrate pleads guilty of drunkenness, he cannot thereafter complain that the manner of his arrest was illegal in order to contest jurisdiction.—People v. Lowerie, 163 Mich. 514.

§ 120. Withdrawal of pleas and pleading anew.

See also ante ¶ 547.

Allowance of motion to quash as withdrawal of plea, see ante ¶ 365.

¶ 596. It is within the discretion of the trial court according to the circumstances to allow a plea of not guilty to be withdrawn for the purpose of moving for quashal of the information on the ground that no preliminary hearing was had before issuing the warrant of arrest.—People v. Harris, 103 Mich. 473.

¶ 597. It was a wise exercise of discretion to refuse to permit respondent to withdraw his plea for the purpose of making a motion to quash, based upon the objection that no witnessses having knowledge of the facts were examined prior to the issuing of the warrant; it appearing that before the first trial, upon which the jury disagreed, a motion to quash was denied; that respondent's request, made during the same term of court, for leave to withdraw his plea for the purpose of renewing his motion to quash, was refused by the court; and that the second like request, the refusal of which is complained of, was made at the succeeding term of court, and after the people had prepared the case for trial.—People v. Harris, 103 Mich. 473.

VI. POSTPONEMENTS OR CONTINUANCES.

§ 121. In general; grounds and discretion.

Additional indorsements of names of witnesses as ground for time to prepare, see also ante § 21.

Tardy indorsement of names of witnesses as surprise, see also ante ¶ 73.

Application and showing for continuance, see post §§ 122-124.

Admission to avoid continuance, see post § 125.

Time of postponement, terms and conditions, see post § 126.

Power of attorney general or prosecuting attorney general to consent to continuance, see post ¶ 1528.

Binding force of agreement with attorney general for continuance on review, see post ¶ 2721.

Temporary recess or adjournment of trial after same is begun, see post § 332.

Record of adjournment and reconvenement, see post § 500.

Sufficiency of record to show error and harm from denial, see post § 595.

Objection for first time on review to denial of continuance, see post § 513.

Reviewableness of discretionary rulings on motions, see post § 628.

Continuances and postponements of misdemeanor trials before justices, see post § 651.

Continuing case on discharging jury, see post § 467.

Necessity of renewing recognizance on postponement of trial, see Arrest § 48, ¶ 140.

¶ 598. The court in a criminal case has discretion to refuse a delay asked by the defendant for the purpose of procuring witnesses.—People v. Foote, 93 Mich. 38.

¶ 599. Where the names of witnesses known to the prosecution when the information was filed are allowed to be indorsed at the trial, a refusal to grant a continuance is ground for reversal.—People v. Price, 74 Mich. 37.

¶ 600. Where, on the trial, respondent is represented by counsel who insists that the attorney originally employed in the case is better prepared to try it, and where, on the hearing of a motion for continuance on the ground of said attorney's absence there is question whether he will postpone the case or another in which he is at the time engaged, refusal of a continuance is not an abuse of discretion.—People v. Considine, 105 Mich. 149.

¶ 601. The absence of an eyewitness of a murder is not ground for a continuance, at defendant's request, since the state is bound to produce such witness, and a failure to do so at the trial gives a ground for continuance. —In re McHugh, 152 Mich. 505.

¶ 602. The matter of a continuance rests in the discretion of the trial court, and there is no abuse of discretion in refusing a continuance asked by the accused because one of the jurors for that term of court was a res gestæ witness for the prosecution, his name being indorsed on the information, where the jurors called upon the panel were each shown to be qualified to sit.—People v. Williams, 118 Mich. 692.

¶ 603. Respondent in a criminal case is not to be forced to speedy trial without preparation to suit the convenience of the prosecuting witness.—People v. Anderson, 53 Mich. 60.

§ 122. Application and showing.

As to need for further time, see post § 123.
As to expected proofs, see post § 124.
Necessity of request for postponement to procure witnesses as foundation for motion for new trial for absence of such witnesses, see post ¶ 2294.

¶ 604. In a criminal prosecution the question of a continuance is addressed to the sound discretion of the court and the reviewing court will not interfere where the respondent was not arraigned until the day of trial agreed upon by counsel, the sole grounds for continuance being that there were names on the information not anticipated by counsel, no affidavit for continuance having been presented and no prejudice disclosed by the record.—People v. Marrs, 125 Mich. 376.

§ 123. Showing as to necessity for further time.

¶ 605. While respondent is entitled to a reasonable time to prepare for trial, a mere statement of counsel that respondent is not prepared for trial is not sufficient ground for continuance.—People v. Mason, 63 Mich. 510.

¶ 606. A mere assertion of a right to further time is not sufficient to constitute a motion for a continuance.—People v. Ranney, 153 Mich. 293.

§ 124. Showing as to expected proofs.

False affidavit as to expected testimony as admission of guilty consciousness, see post ¶ 1217.

¶ 607. Where respondent applies for a continuance on account of the absence of a witness, it is not necessarily error to require an affidavit as to what he expects to prove by such witness (Cir. Ct. Rule 55), unless he gives some good reason why he should not be compelled to disclose his defense.—People v. Anderson, 53 Mich. 60.

¶ 608. An affidavit for a continuance, containing statements by accused as to what a witness would testify, and that the witness would testify that she made certain statements to accused, and that she so testified at a coroner's inquest held by accused, which inquest was involved in the issues of the prosecution, is admissible against accused, though he did not take the stand; since the affidavit is in effect a statement of facts within the knowledge of the accused and not merely of his expectations; his guilty knowledge of the untruth of such statements being an issue, and she having given testimony on the trial contradicting the affidavit and tending to show that the affidavit was knowingly false.—People v. Hoffmann, 142 Mich. 531.

§ 125. Admission of facts to avoid continuance.

¶ 609. Where the witness whose absence is the basis of an application for a continuance on respondent's behalf in a criminal case is beyond the jurisdiction of the court, it is sufficient, to avoid a continuance, that the prosecution admit that the witness would, if present, testify as stated in the application; it not being required that the people admit the truth of the proposed testimony.—People v. Savant, 112 Mich. 297.

§ 126. Time of postponement and conditions or terms imposable.

¶ 610. Where, on the trial of a father for an alleged rape upon his daughter, the name of the daughter is indorsed upon the information as a witness after the jury is sworn, the request of the respondent for a continuance over the term should be granted, he claiming to be unprepared to meet her testimony; and it is error to continue the case for a number of weeks, and allow the jury to separate and return and try the case, the respondent not consenting to such continuance, and objecting to said trial.—People v. Evans, 72 Mich. 367.

VII. DISMISSAL OR NOLLE PROSEQUI.

§ 127. In general.

Direction by supreme court on exceptions for entry of nolle, see post § 640.
Discharge of jury for inability to agree, see post § 467.
Right to discharge on lapse of time for sentence, see post ¶ 2325.
Record of dismissal or nolle, see post § 505.
Quashal or nolle as bar to further prosecution, see Crimes § 24.
Necessity of leave to nolle or discontinue, see Comp. L. 1915, § 15724.

¶ 611. A prosecution for adultery should be discontinued where the only person competent to make complaint asks leave to withdraw it (How. St., § 9279).—People v. Dalrymple, 55 Mich. 519.

¶ 612. A prosecution for adultery on complaint of the husband should be dismissed upon his filing a paper so requesting.—Hosford v. Gratiot Circuit Judge, 129 Mich. 302.

¶ 613. One who was guilty of manslaughter, but convicted of murder, should be discharged, on vacating the judgment against him, if the right to prosecute him for manslaughter was outlawed when the proceedings for murder were taken.—People v. Burt, 51 Mich. 199.

¶ 614. Where, on preliminary examination before a police magistrate, a person charged with crime is bound over to the superior court for trial, a motion may be made in such court, before the jury is sworn, to dismiss the proceedings on the ground that the examination fails to show that a crime has been committed or that there is probable cause to believe that the respondent is guilty, and upon such a motion the court will consider the evidence adduced before the magistrate and pass upon the propriety of his determination.—Barnard v. Grand Rapids Superior Court Judge, 199 Mich. 227.

VIII. EVIDENCE.

A. JUDICIAL NOTICE, PRESUMPTIONS, AND BURDEN OF PROOF.

§ 128. Judicial notice in general.

As to character and acts of officers of court, see also post ¶ 886.

Former acquittal in same court, see also ante ¶ 568.

Judicial knowledge as matter not to be pleaded, see ante § 62.

Judicial cognizance taken in civil cases, see Evidence, J.

[Note. The separation of judicial notice into civil and criminal cases is not based on any supposed distinction, but solely on the advisability of separating civil evidence from criminal evidence. Judicial notice was separated as an incident of such treatment.]

¶ 615. Courts usually take notice of matters of which every one takes notice.—People v. Plummer, 189 Mich. 415.

¶ 616. Judicial notice will not be taken of a fact, such as the operation and applicability of a law in a given place, where the law itself has prescribed the evidence to prove that it is in force.—People v. Murphy, 93 Mich. 41.

¶ 617. Courts will take judicial notice of the ordinary meaning of English words, but not of uncommon or extraordinary meanings applied in isolated cases or in particular localities.—People v. Gastro, 75 Mich. 127.

¶ 618. The courts will take judicial notice of proclamations by the governor or president setting apart certain days for fasting and prayer or thanksgiving.—People v. Ackerman, 80 Mich. 588.

¶ 619. Courts take judicial notice of municipalities within their jurisdiction.—People v. Telford, 56 Mich. 541.

¶ 620. Judicial notice is taken of political divisions of a county into townships.—People v. Maynard, 15 Mich. 463; People v. Waller, 70 Mich. 237.

¶ 621. It will be judicially noticed that a named township is within a certain county.—People v. Grimm, 182 Mich. 643.

¶ 622. The Recorder's Court of Detroit and the supreme court can take judicial notice that the city of Detroit is within the county of Wayne.—People v. Curley, 99 Mich. 238.

¶ 623. A court must have judicial knowledge of the position and character of one who acts as its officer.—Keator v. People, 32 Mich. 484.

¶ 624. Our courts are presumed to have judicial knowledge what courts in other states are of such a character that their clerks can lawfully certify under our laws.—People v. Marion, 29 Mich. 31.

¶ 625. The court may take judicial notice that fish are an important food product and that the state as a whole is interested in having the supply increase instead of decrease, and that large sums of money raised by taxation are expended by the state in the propagation and distribution of fish.—People v. Horling, 137 Mich. 406.

¶ 626. Judicial notice of the existence of Lake St. Clair will be taken as of a geographical feature.—People v. Brooks, 101 Mich. 98.

¶ 627. In a prosecution against a physician under a statute requiring a report of specified diseases "or any other dangerous diseases," for failure to report a disease not specifically mentioned, judicial notice is not taken as to the varying degrees of infectiousness of different diseases.—People v. Shurly, 124 Mich. 645.

§ 129. ——As to laws and ordinances.

Presumption as to foreign laws, see post § 135.

¶ 628. Courts will take judicial notice of public acts, both general and local, passed by the state legislature, but not of private laws or ordinances passed by the common council of a city or the board of trustees of a village.—People v. Quider, 172 Mich. 280.

¶ 629. Judicial notice cannot be taken that a county has adopted local option.—People v. Edwards, 174 Mich. 445.

¶ 630. In a prosecution in the Recorder's Court of the city of Detroit for loaning money in Detroit and charging interest thereon in excess of seven per cent per annum without having first obtained a license from the city, the court in exercising general jurisdiction is governed by the same rules as the circuit court and cannot take judicial notice of municipal ordinances, and a failure on the part of the prosecution to prove the ordinance relied upon is fatal to a conviction.—People v. Quider, 172 Mich. 280.

§ 130. Presumptions.

As to various facts and issues, see post §§ 131-137.
Rule against inference on inference, see post § 138.
Inference from failure to adduce proofs or to testify, see post §§ 139, 140.
Inference from incriminating possessions, see post § 141.
As to voluntariness of confession, see post § 265.
Presumptions pertaining to law of specific crimes, see Homicide, VII; Larceny, II; Rape; Seduction; Intoxicating Liquors.
Presumption as to previous chastity, see also Seduction, II.
Presumption as to reformation of woman after seduction, see Seduction, II.
Presumptions on review drawn from face of the record, see post § 617 et seq.
Conclusiveness and effect of presumptions as proofs in the case, see post § 311.
Falsehood, fabrication, flight, or resistance to arrest as acts impliedly admissive of guilt, see post § 250 et seq.
Presumptions in civil cases, see Evidence, II.
Burden of proof, see post § 142 et seq.
Charging on inferences and presumptions, see post § 430 et seq.

¶ 631. Presumptions are never allowable where better evidence is required by law to be preserved.—People v. Treadway, 17 Mich. 480.

¶ 632. All girls under sixteen, and not leading depraved lives, are presumptively in the legal charge of some one.—People v. Carrier, 46 Mich. 442.

¶ 633. Evidence of the larceny of money in another state, together with proof that the accused came immediately after into this state, and here undertook to negotiate for the return of the money, affords a strong presumption of the possession of the money in this state.—People v. Williams, 24 Mich. 156.

¶ 634. There is no legal presumption, for the purposes of a criminal prosecution, that bank-notes, checks, bills of exchange and other securities for money are worth the sums which they represent, or any sum.—People v. Donald, 48 Mich. 491.

§ 131. ——As to innocence or guilt.

In receiving stolen goods, see also post ¶ 661.
Instructions on presumption of innocence, see post § 405.
Presumption of innocence in civil cases involving acts of criminal nature, see Evidence § 49.

¶ 635. One accused of crime is presumed innocent until he is proved guilty.—Maher v. People, 10 Mich. 212; People v. Garbutt, 17 Mich. 9; Stephens v. People, 38 Mich. 739; People v. Bussey, 82 Mich. 49.

¶ 636. The presumption of innocence is present in every criminal case; it stands good until overcome by evidence convincing the jury beyond a reasonable doubt of respondent's guilt.—People v. De Fore, 64 Mich. 693.

¶ 637. The presumption of innocence follows the defendant in a criminal prosecution until overcome by testimony establishing his guilt beyond a reasonable doubt.—People v. Rogulski, 181 Mich. 481.

¶ 638. The presumption of innocence of an accused exists and remains until overcome by evidence which convinces the jury beyond a reasonable doubt that the accused is guilty.—People v. McClintic, 193 Mich. 589.

¶ 639. After a man has been convicted, the presumption of innocence attends him no longer.—People v. Fritch, 161 Mich. 111.

§ 132. ——As to complicity of parties in transaction.

Burden of proof of complicity, see post ¶ 664.

¶ 640. Where one has received stolen property with guilty knowledge and afterwards sold it, the presumption will arise that the whole transaction was on joint account; and the declarations of either of the parties made before the sale, concerning the terms and incidents of the common enterprise, are admissible on the same principle which allows the statements of coconspirators to be proved.—People v. Pitcher, 15 Mich. 397.

§ 133. ——As to knowledge of law or facts.

In civil cases, see Evidence § 47.

¶ 641. Though the law presumes a ministerial officer to know the law, it makes no such presumption, in ordinary cases, as to matters of fact of which the law gives no information, and which are not disclosed by the process or order which he is commanded to obey.—People v. Rix, 6 Mich. 144.

§ 134. ——As to intent or malice.

Inference of intent from nature of act or character of weapon or means used, see also Homicide §§ 44, 45.
Implied malice in mutilating animals, see Crimes ¶ 395.
In civil cases, see Evidence § 46 et seq.

¶ 642. It is a general rule governing the law of malice that when one commits an act, unaccompanied by any circumstances justifying its commission, the law presumes that he has acted advisedly and with an intent to produce the consequences he has committed.—People v. Petheram, 64 Mich. 252.

¶ 643. Where an act is knowingly committed which naturally and usually leads to certain consequences, the inference is proper that such results are intended.—People v. Scott, 6 Mich. 287.

¶ 644. The law presumes every person to intend the usual consequences that attend the use of the means employed in the manner employed; e. g., a criminal intent is presumed from the use of a deadly weapon.—People v. Potter, 5 Mich. 1; People v. Hodges, 196 Mich. 546.

¶ 645. A respondent's intent to do great bodily harm less than the crime of murder may be inferred from the act itself.—People v. Miller, 91 Mich. 639.

§ 135. ——As to foreign laws.

Proof of foreign laws by statutes and published reports, see post § 295.

¶ 646. In the absence of proof to the contrary the common law as it exists among us will be presumed to prevail in a foreign country.—People v. Loomis, 106 Mich. 250.

¶ 647. It cannot be presumed that the statute law of New York on the subject of marriage is like our own.—People v. Lambert, 5 Mich. 349.

§ 136. ——As to regularity, verity, normality, and performance of duty.

Presumptions on review in favor of regularity of trial, see post § 617 et seq.

Sanity as normal condition to be overcome by proof, see post ¶ 665.

In civil cases, see Evidence § 34 et seq.

Presumption as to regularity of foreign criminal judgments, see Foreign Judgments ¶ 55.

¶ 648. Employees of a telegraph company are presumed to perform the duties intrusted to them in transmitting and receiving messages.—People v. Hammond, 132 Mich. 422.

¶ 649. In a prosecution for obtaining goods by false pretenses the representations made by respondent must be taken to be true unless shown to be otherwise.—People v. Wakely, 62 Mich. 297.

¶ 650. In a trial for forgery of a note, a presumption exists that the date on the note was the true date of its execution.—People v. Campbell, 160 Mich. 108.

§ 137. ——As to names and identities.

¶ 651. Identity of name is presumptive evidence of identity.—People v. Robinson, 135 Mich. 511.

§ 138. Inferences on inferences or presumptions.

¶ 652. A conviction may be based on circumstantial evidence; but circumstances cannot be presumed.—People v. Foley, 64 Mich. 148.

§ 139. Inference from failure to testify or adduce proofs.

Charging on inference, see post § 432.

Comment in argument on inferences from nonproduction of proof, see post § 385.

Existence and availability of additional evidence not produced as creating reasonable doubt, see post ¶ 1363.

¶ 653. No inference can be drawn against a respondent from the refusal of a witness to answer questions for fear of criminating himself.—People v. Hall, 48 Mich. 482.

¶ 654. A witness has no power to produce corroborating testimony, and his failure to do so cannot be used against the party for whom he testifies.—People v. Lyons, 49 Mich. 78.

¶ 655. Although the defendant in a criminal case has a right to call his wife as a witness, no presumption of his guilt will arise from his failure to do so, and it is not to be commented upon by the prosecution to the jury, notwithstanding the case is such that if he is innocent she must know it.—Knowles v. People, 15 Mich. 408; Carne v. Litchfield, 2 Mich. 340.

§ 140. ——From failure of accused to testify.

Charging against inference, see post § 432.

¶ 656. Where one avails himself of his privilege to decline to testify on the ground that his answers might tend to criminate him, no unfavorable inference can be drawn from his silence.—Knowles v. People, 15 Mich. 408.

¶ 657. Neglect by a prisoner to give evidence on his preliminary examination cannot be made ground of presumption against his innocence on the ensuing trial.—Templeton v. People, 27 Mich. 501.

§ 141. Inference from incriminating possessions or facts.

Admissibility of incriminating facts of flight, concealment, falsification, or possession, see post §§ 172-174, 251-255.

Instructions on inferences to be drawn, see post § 431.

Weight of inference and lessening weight as time wears on, see post ¶ 1392.

¶ 658. The possession of recently stolen property raises a presumption that the possessor is guilty of the theft.—People v. May, 199 Mich. 574.

¶ 659. The presumption of guilt arising from the possession of recently stolen property is not a conclusive one and may be overcome by evidence.—People v. May, 199 Mich. 574.

¶ 660. The more remote the theft in point of time, the weaker is the presumption of guilt arising from the possession of the stolen property.—People v. May, 199 Mich. 574.

¶ 661. Where one is charged with receiving stolen goods knowing them to be stolen, the mere possession of the goods by him, without evidence tending to show guilty knowledge, can have no tendency to establish his guilt, but must be presumed to have been innocent.—Durant v. People, 13 Mich. 351.

§ 142. Burden of proof and shifting of burden.

Burden as to insanity, see post § 143.
Burden as to intent, see post § 144.
Burden as to defenses, see post § 145.
Burden as to elements in specific crimes which are separately treated, see Assault § 9; Homicide § 43 et seq.; Larceny, II; Rape; Seduction.
In prosecutions for violating liquor laws, see Intoxicating Liquors, VI, B.
Weight and sufficiency of evidence to support burden, see post VIII, C.
Sufficiency and certainty of circumstantial proofs, see post § 305.
Presumption as to innocence, see ante § 131.
Instructions on burden of proof, see post § 405.

¶ 662. In criminal cases the burden of proof is upon the prosecution throughout to show that the accused is guilty of the offense charged.—People v. Millard, 53 Mich. 63; People v. Coughlin, 65 Mich. 704; People v. McWhorter, 93 Mich. 641.

¶ 663. The prosecution in a criminal action must show as part of its own case, unless respondent admits or shows it, that no theory of innocence can reasonably accord with the facts.—People v. Millard, 53 Mich. 63.

¶ 664. The burden is on the prosecution to prove that an offense was jointly committed as averred in the information.—Stuart v. People, 42 Mich. 255.

§ 143. ——As to sanity or insanity of accused.

Presumptions and evidence as to sanity as civil issue, see Insane Persons, I.

¶ 665. Sanity being the normal condition of the mind, the prosecution in a criminal case may rest upon the presumption that the accused was sane when he committed the act until it is overcome by the defendant's evidence. But when any evidence is given which tends to overthrow that presumption, the jury are to examine, weigh and pass upon it with the understanding that, although the initiative in presenting the evidence is taken by the defense, the burden of proof upon this part of the case as well as upon the other is upon the prosecution to establish the conditions of guilt.—People v. Garbutt, 17 Mich. 9.

¶ 666. Evidence tending to show respondent's insanity does not throw upon the prosecution the burden of overbalancing it if it does not raise a reasonable doubt.—People v. Finley, 38 Mich. 482.

¶ 667. On the introduction of evidence tending to show the insanity of the accused, the burden rests on the people in a criminal trial, to satisfy the jury as to his sanity beyond a reasonable doubt.—People v. Eggleston, 186 Mich. 510.

§ 144. ——As to intent.

¶ 668. The burden of proof as to criminal intent lies upon the prosecution throughout.—Maher v. People, 10 Mich. 212; People v. Garbutt, 17 Mich. 9.

¶ 669. When a statute makes a particular offense to consist of an act committed with a particular intent, which act and intent constitute substantially an attempt to commit a higher offense than that which was accomplished, proof of the particular intent is as necessary as of the act itself; but not necessarily by direct and positive testimony. It may be inferred by any facts in evidence which satisfy the jury of its existence.—Roberts v. People, 19 Mich. 401; People v. Lilley, 43 Mich. 521.

§ 145. ——As to justification, excuse or other defense.

See also Homicide § 43.

¶ 670. Where there is evidence tending to show that defendant acted in self-defense, the burden of proof is upon the people to satisfy the jury that the homicide was not committed in self-defense, and that no reasonable belief existed in defendant's mind that he was in great bodily danger as the facts and circumstances appeared to him at the time.—People v. Coughlin, 65 Mich. 704.

B. RELEVANCY AND COMPETENCY.

1. In general.

§ 146. Relevancy and materiality in general.

Relevancy of evidence to particular issues, see post § 175 et seq.
Competency of particular kinds of evidence, see post § 151 et seq.
Relevancy of facts to other facts in evidence, see post § 147.
Details completing entire transaction, see post § 148.
Complementary parts of entire communication, see post § 149.
Things seen by jury on view as evidence, see post § 150.

Res inter alios acta, see post § 160.
Similar but unrelated facts, see post § 161.
Facts before or after crime or facts in issue, see post § 162 et seq.
Other offenses, acts and relationships, see post § 165 et seq.
Incriminating facts and possessions, see post §§ 172-174.
Remoteness of evidence in time from issues, see post § 162.
Relevancy and materiality of nonexpert opinions as test of admissibility, see post § 197.
Relevancy and materiality of nonexpert conclusions to make them receivable, see post § 197.
Relevancy and materiality of declarations to take them out of the hearsay rule, see post § 218 et seq.
Relevancy of admissions to the issues, see post § 256.
Relevancy of character evidence as determining its admissibility, see post § 268.
Relevancy of documents to make them admissible, see post § 282.
Variance of proof from allegations, see ante § 77 et seq.
Sufficiency of proofs, see post VIII, C.
Duty of state to call witnesses, see post § 349 et seq.
Materiality of testimony and oath in perjury and subornation, see ante § 43p, post § 324p; Crimes § 116.
Striking out evidence on irrelevancy or incompetency appearing after reception, see post § 366.
Admission of improper evidence as harmless error, see post § 540 et seq.
Relevancy in civil cases, see Evidence, III.
Scope and latitude allowable in examination, see Examination of Witnesses § 6.
Germaneness of cross-examination to direct or to issues in case, see Examination of Witnesses §§ 45, 46.
Questions too general in form, see Examination of Witnesses § 9.
Double and equivocal questions, see Examination of Witnesses § 8.
Question rather than improper answer as test for meaning and propriety of question, see Examination of Witnesses § 11.
Impropriety of leading or suggestive questions or questions assuming unproved facts, see Examination of Witnesses §§ 12-17.
Leading questions to woman subject of rape, seduction or similar crime, see Examination of Witnesses § 16.
Leading questions to accomplice testifying, see Examination of Witnesses § 16.
Use of interpreters, see Examination of Witnesses § 19.
Circumstances of the crime as proper matter for cross-examination, see Examination of Witnesses § 55.
Cross-examination as to collateral and immaterial matters, when and for what allowable, see Examination of Witnesses § 56 et seq.; Witnesses, VI, D.
Applicability in criminal cases evidence contained in Judi see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 208.

¶ 671. In determining the adm evidence it is indispensable to c object for which it is produce point intended to be established though evidence offered may have to prove a fact inadmissible or under the issue, it cannot be e that reason, if its tendency be al a fact which is within the issue, made relevant by the course of th tion.—People v. Doyle, 21 Mich.

¶ 672. A conviction will be se error in excluding from conside terial facts showing the circumsts which the act was committed.- Curtis, 52 Mich. 616.

¶ 673. In a trial for mansla trial court is not in error in allow defendant to prove that caused the attendance of witness did not swear.—People v. Bur Mich. 240.

§ 147. Facts relevant to facts in
See also post ¶ 1091.
Other acts and offenses and res tending to prove or disprov facts, see post § 160 et seq.
Rebutting or explaining facts, see 183.
Evidence to prove particular fact § 175 et seq.
Connecting proof to make corresp tween shoes and footprints see post ¶ 816.
Cross-examination on collateral terial matters as affecting cr witnesses, see Examination of § 56 et seq.
Admissibility of accused's lack dead bodies on issue of murder see Homicide ¶ 135.

¶ 674. Wherever a witness has a fact or transaction which, star and entirely unconnected with which led to or brought it about, pear in any degree unnatural or in itself, the previous facts whic are admissible, since without the be impossible for the jury prop preciate the testimony in referen principal transaction. This rule i applicable where the principal tra question is unlawful intercourse b sexes.—People v. Jenness, 5 Mic

¶ 675. In a prosecution for a assault, in which the assailant us a witness testified that more th before he had seen the defendant h handled knife, sharp on both ed allowable, against objection, to witness to be asked to describe such testimony would be very remote. Exception could not be taken to excluding the question put to a witness for the defense, whether such defendant was not a shoemaker, there being no showing of its relevancy in the trial court, though it was suggested above that such an occupation would account for the knife.—People v. Niles, 44 Mich. 606.

¶ 676. Where a certificate, purporting to be under the seal of a court of record, is alleged to have been forged, evidence of the falsity of the seal is relevant to the issue, as the falsity of the seal raises a strong presumption that the signature to the certificate is also false.—People v. Marion, 29 Mich. 31.

¶ 677. It was not error to admit proof of nonpayment and protest of a check, on a prosecution of forgery of such check, since it tended to show presentment and dishonor. —People v. Tollefson, 145 Mich. 444.

¶ 678. The testimony of the people tended to show that a bank check was given to respondent in payment for the goods; that respondent was arrested directly in front of the store where the goods were sold and the check given; that, upon being arrested, he threw a piece of paper into his mouth, and chewed it beyond recognition. The prosecution was permitted to introduce in evidence a blank check, taken from the check book of the purchaser of the goods, which he testified corresponded to the one he had given in payment for the goods. Held, that the testimony was admissible to show that the paper upon which the blank check was printed corresponded in color with that which was afterwards found in the form of a wad of paper on the sidewalk near where the respondent stood at the time of his arrest.—People v. Considine, 105 Mich. 149.

¶ 679. It was competent for the people to show that, about ten minutes after respondent's arrest, a wad, which looked like paper chewed up, was picked up near the store of the purchaser of the goods, still wet, there being enough from which the jury might infer the connection between this and the check given in payment for the goods, when taken in connection with the statement of the witness that respondent at the time of his arrest was seen to throw a piece of paper into his mouth.—People v. Considine, 105 Mich. 149.

¶ 680. In a criminal prosecution for larceny evidence that a witness, to preserve footprints corresponding to the shoes of accused, "ordered men not to walk approximately across the shrubbery beds," where the prints were impressed, is admissible.—People v. Breen, 192 Mich. 39.

¶ 681. Where in a prosecution for having possession of burglar's tools, it is shown that the defendant when arrested had certain implements in his possession, which implements are in court, the people properly introduced testimony as to the purpose for which such implements could be used.—People v. Jones, 124 Mich. 177.

¶ 682. The purpose for which tools found in possession of defendant's coindictees might have been used may be shown.—People v. Freelmame, 163 Mich. 336.

§ 148. Details of entire transaction.

See also ante ¶ 674.
Complementary parts of entire communication, see post § 149.
Facts amounting to res gestæ, see post § 241 et seq.

¶ 683. In a criminal prosecution it is proper to lay before the jury such circumstances as will give them a connected and intelligible view of what was discovered by acting upon them.—Ulrich v. People, 39 Mich. 245.

¶ 684. The entire train of connected facts can be shown in a case of an offense which was the termination of a continuous transaction.—People v. Knapp, 26 Mich. 112.

¶ 685. Three persons were attacked at once. One was killed outright, another was pursued, and all were fired at. The whole transaction lasted about two minutes. Held, that in a trial for the murder it was competent to give evidence of the whole transaction as an entirety, including what happened after the killing as well as before.—People v. Marble, 38 Mich. 117.

¶ 686. On a trial for homicide, where it appeared that the riotous assembly (of which the deceased was one) gathered at the time grew out of and was connected with one that had assembled in the same place the night before and with the same object, held, that all the proceedings and objects of both gatherings, together with the provocation to defendant and his acts, constituted one entire transaction and were admissible in evidence. —Patten v. People, 18 Mich. 314.

¶ 687. In a prosecution for embezzlement of the proceeds of a check, where the receipt of the check and the money was admitted but it was claimed that the money had been accounted for, it is proper to permit proof of the history of the check in question.—People v. Peck, 139 Mich. 680.

§ 149. Complementary parts of entire communication.

See also post ¶ 1087.
Entire conversation containing admission, see post § 264.
Admissibility of all portions of document or record, see post § 284.
Circumstances of time and place attending conversation or declaration, see post § 239.

Matters rebutting or explaining declaration, see post § 240.
Showing remainder of threat to prove that it was not serious, see post ¶ 1013.

¶ 688. Where in a murder trial admissions of the accused are offered in evidence by the state, defendant has a right to have the whole conversation admitted, whether the same consists of self-serving statements or not; the test being whether they form a part of the conversation proved by the people.—People v. Bowen, 170 Mich. 129.

¶ 689. In considering a statement proved to have been made by respondent the whole statement must be received; but the credit due to it, and to each part of it, is for the jury, who may believe one portion and disbelieve another, and may give it such credit as they deem it worthy of.—People v. Griffin, 77 Mich. 585.

§ 150. Things seen on view as evidence.

Purpose of view and restrictions thereon, see also post ¶¶ 1538, 1540.

¶ 690. In a prosecution for murder, where the jury viewed the place where the crime had been committed, held that they had the right to consider all they saw in the room having reference to tracks, imprints or marks testified to and mentioned by the witnesses in a general way.—People v. Winney, 196 Mich. 347.

§ 151. Competency in general and privileged matter.

[Note. The rules of competency and the cases illustrating them are treated post under the subdivisional headings, "best and secondary," "parol, etc.," "conclusions and nonexpert opinions," "expert opinions," "hearsay, etc.," "admissions and confessions," "character and reputation," "evidence addressed to the senses; real evidence," "documents as evidence." Cases which turned on the fitness of the evidence rather than on its relation to the issues have been treated as cases on competency and placed in the foregoing headings. For convenience the matter has been arranged in subdivisions as follows:

Best and secondary evidence, see post §§ 184-194.
Parol or extrinsic evidence to vary or show terms of writings, see post § 195.
Conclusions and nonexpert opinions, see post §§ 196-202.
Expert opinions, see post §§ 203-216.
Hearsay and declarations out of court and res gestæ, see post §§ 217-246.
Admissions and confessions, see post §§ 247-266.
Character and reputation, see post §§ 267-276.
Evidence addressed to the senses; real evidence, see post §§ 277-281.
Documents as evidence, see 300.]

Testimony by accused and self testimony, see post §§ 152,
Official knowledge or state secre § 154.
Evidence obtained by illegal mea see post § 155.
Testimony of witnesses not name ments, see post § 156.
Testimony of witnesses who viol exclusion, see post § 157.
Relevancy of evidence, see ante post §§ 158-174.
Things seen by jury on view, see
Competency of secondary proof § 193.
Necessity of proof of foundation inary facts before principal post § 359 et seq.

[Note. In many respects the ru petency are the same in cri civil evidence and on quest arise the topic Evidence sho sulted, bearing in mind, ho the two kinds of evidence separated to avoid the ser which might attend an effo both kinds in one topic.]

Competency in civil cases, see E et seq.
Competency of witnesses in gener nesses, II et seq.
Incompetency of witnesses by rea tion of confidence to accuse person, see Witnesses, V.
Effect of accomplice's interest to incompetent and statutory such incompetency as witnes nesses, III.
Testimony privileged because of witness to accused as husban torney, priest, physician, or fidence, see Witnesses, V.
Applicability in criminal cases of and regulations governing th evidence" contained in Judi see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 208.

¶ 691. In corroboration of an testimony as to his presence wi on the night of an alleged trespa of such accomplice may testify t not at home on the night the tr committed.—People v. O'Brien, 6

§ 152. Testimony by accused.

Self-criminating testimony by a post § 153.
Examination and statement of acc sentence, see post § 486.
Cross-examination of accused te witness, see Examination of §§ 79, 80.
False swearing by accused in h fense as perjury, see Crimes

¶ 692. The purpose of permitting the respondent in a criminal prosecution to testify on his own behalf is to enable him to present his own defense, hence questions directed to that end by exculpating himself are not improper.—People v. Quick, 51 Mich. 547.

§ 153. ——Compulsory self-crimination.

Compulsory tests in presence of jury by accused to measure footprints, see post ¶ 1306.

Confessions and admissions as self-crimination, see also post § 247.

Impropriety of comment on failure to testify or to produce evidence, see post § 385.

Mode of objecting to self-crimination, see post ¶ 1637.

Effect of suggesting privilege to cure improper questioning of accused, see post § 556.

Privilege to decline to answer self-criminating question, see Examination of Witnesses § 109.

Personal nature of privilege against self-crimination and disability of accused thereby to shut out accomplice's testimony, see Examination of Witnesses § 109.

Waiver of privilege against self-crimination, see Examination of Witnesses § 110.

Immunity of witness from prosecution under indictment founded on his own testimony, see Witnesses, I.

Statutory immunity from prosecution on testimony given in bankruptcy proceedings, see Witnesses, I.

Scope and range of cross-examination of accused testifying on his own behalf, see Examination of Witnesses §§ 79, 80.

Secrecy and privilege of proceedings before grand jury, see Grand Jury § 6.

¶ 693. It is not compulsory self-crimination to require accused on the stand in his own behalf to take an iron bar in the case as an exhibit and insert the bar in his pocket for the purpose of showing that in such position it would be under his arm, and to call on him to answer that it was under his arm, the theory of the prosecution being that the murder was done with an iron bar carried in a concealed way by accused, and the evidence in question merely tending to show the physical possibilities.—People v. Ecarius, 124 Mich. 616.

¶ 694. The question whether under Const. art. VI, § 32, providing that no person shall be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself, etc., defendant in a prosecution for violating a local option law could have been compelled to file reports of sales, or lawfully convicted if he failed to do so, was not material where the defendant did file such reports; and having been so filed, they were competent.—People v. Robinson, 135 Mich. 511.

¶ 695. A woman gave six hundred dollars to defendant to loan for her. Defendant forged a name to a note for that amount, and kept the note in his desk and retained the money, paying her the interest. The woman and defendant's partner broke open his desk and got the note. In a trial for forgery, the partner testified to this fact, and the note was offered in evidence. Held, the admission of this evidence was not in violation of Const. 1850, art. VI, § 32, as compelling defendant to be a witness against himself.—People v. Campbell, 160 Mich. 108.

¶ 696. A defendant in a prosecution for larceny is not compelled to give testimony against himself because his shoes are taken by an officer while he is in custody for the purpose of comparing them with certain footprints, and such officer is permitted to testify over objection that the shoes seemed to fit perfectly into the footprints.—People v. Breen, 192 Mich. 39.

§ 154. Official knowledge or state secrets.

¶ 697. It is not error to exclude a question to officers, they having testified that they were forewarned of a burglary and being in wait captured accused, asking them where they obtained their information that the burglary was planned. Such testimony is excluded on grounds of public policy.—People v. Laird, 102 Mich. 135.

¶ 698. A case might arise where a person claiming to have been innocently at the place where the crime was committed, at the solicitation of a person suspected of being the informant, would be entitled to inquire whether such person was the informant, although such matter is usually privileged as a state matter.—People v. Laird, 102 Mich. 135.

§ 155. Evidence obtained or discovered by illegal means or trick.

Document taken from possession of accused as self-crimination, see ante ¶ 695.

¶ 699. An officer found a letter among defendant's effects at his boarding house which tended to connect him with the crime in question. Held, it was admissible in evidence despite any illegal method the officer may have used to secure it.—People v. Trine, 164 Mich. 1.

¶ 700. Testimony of a witness who bought intoxicating liquor of respondent who was suspected and in order to secure his conviction under the liquor law is not incompetent where the prosecuting officers were not concerned in purchase.—People v. Murphy, 93 Mich. 41.

§ 156. Testimony of witnesses not named in indorsements on indictment or information.

Calling witnesses not named in indorsements, see post § 352.

¶ 701. In prosecuting for the forgery of an instrument it may be shown by the person named as taking the acknowledgment that he did not sign the paper; and the same may be shown by the person purporting to be a subscribing witness even though he be not named in the information.—People v. Sharp, 53 Mich. 523.

¶ 702. In a prosecution of manslaughter, the admission of evidence of a witness whose name was not on the information was not improper, when it appeared that such witness was an impeaching witness; and the judge should have permitted the endorsement of the name when requested. Under the circumstances, the reception of the evidence, with knowledge of the facts and against objection, was practically equivalent to an order for indorsement.—People v. McArron, 121 Mich. 1.

¶ 703. The testimony of witnesses whose names were not indorsed on an information may be received to impeach the character of the respondent in a criminal case, where the prosecuting attorney could not have known when the information was filed that such testimony would be material.—People v. Jansma, 181 Mich. 62.

¶ 704. In a criminal proceeding by indictment the testimony of witnesses is admissible though their names are not indorsed on the indictment, where they were not sworn before the grand jury, and fair notice is given of the purpose to use such witnesses.—People v. Hammond, 132 Mich. 422.

¶ 705. Failure of the foreman of the grand jury to indorse on the indictment, the name of a witness does not require the exclusion of his testimony where fair notice is given the other party.—People v. Hammond, 132 Mich. 422.

§ 157. Testimony of witnesses who violated rule for exclusion.

¶ 706. A witness who was a coconspirator in a bribery case in which all witnesses had been put under a rule of exclusion, was permitted to testify against objection, although he had in his possession for the purpose of indexing, some of the typewritten stenographer's notes of the testimony of another conspirator and had talked about such testimony with one of counsel for the people.—People v. McGarry, 136 Mich. 316.

¶ 707. A witness is not disqualified from testifying for the prosecution on rebuttal in a criminal case, by reason of his having remained in the court room after an order excluding witnesses, where it was not known or anticipated when the order was entered that his testimony would be required.—People v. Piper, 112 Mich. 644.

§ 158. Negative testimony.

Sufficiency of negative testimony to prove falsity of fact as pretended, see also post ¶ 1485.

Certificates of search of records and of absence of given record, see post § 293.

Absence of appearances at later time as evidence, see post ¶ 726.

Absence of record of payment of taxes, see also post ¶ 888.

¶ 708. It is competent to prove the nonshipment by a certain person of hogs from a certain town, by inquiring separately concerning all the channels of transportation.—People v. Clark, 10 Mich. 310.

¶ 709. Where a witness who resides in the county in which a power of attorney, that is alleged to have been forged, purports to have been executed and acknowledged, and who has dealt in lands and loans of money, and been in the habit of examining titles for fifteen years, testifies that there were not over twelve or fifteen notaries in the county, it is admissible, as far as it goes, as a basis for the additional evidence, that he had never heard of a notary in the county of the name signed to the certificate of acknowledgment.—People v. Marion, 29 Mich. 31.

¶ 710. Where one who had personally known every clerk of the county and court named in the certificate of authentication of an instrument alleged to have been forged testified that no person of the name signed to the certificate had ever held that office, and gave the names of the persons who had held it, the testimony was admissible to show that the pretended certificate was a forgery.—People v. Marion, 29 Mich. 31.

¶ 711. Where the genuineness of an instrument is contested, the sheriff's testimony that he is unable to find or hear of any such person as purports to have witnessed it is admissible as tending to show that the attestation was fictitious; the extent of the sheriff's search and opportunities affects the weight of his testimony, but not its competency.—People v. Sharp, 53 Mich. 523.

¶ 712. On a trial for larceny committed in a saloon, the saloon-keeper, a witness for the prosecution, being asked whether at the time of the theft respondent had any means of livelihood, answered that he could not swear that he did not have any. The bartender, who was also a witness, was asked what he knew about the respondent's having money the day before the larceny; and he answered: "I could not swear that he did not have any." Held, that the answers could have done no harm; and it seems that the questions were not improper.—People v. Herrick, 59 Mich. 563.

¶ 713. Upon a trial for polygamy, the certificate of the county clerk that he has diligently searched the records and is unable to find any record of any marriage between certain persons, is inadmissible to discredit positive testimony of the marriage ceremony and that the parties were reputed to be husband and wife.—People v. Goodrode, 132 Mich. 542.

§ 159. Admissibility for limited or specific purpose.

Evidence relevant for one and not for other purposes, see also ante ¶ 671.
Purpose for which evidence of other offenses is admissible, see post §§ 165-171.
Evidence of finding of poison in viscera of other corpse, see post ¶ 787.
Declarations to show why declarant was called as a witness, see post ¶ 1061.
Complaints and statements by woman as impeaching evidence on trial where she denies the act of intercourse, see post ¶ 1120.
[Note. There are numerous holdings that given evidence is admissible for impeachment but not on the issues. In most instances these holdings appear to mean only that the evidence is proper impeaching matter and admissible for that only. Hence they have been placed in Witnesses, VI, D, which see.]
Offer and reception for restricted purposes, see post §§ 346, 347.
Restricting use or application as condition of reception, see post § 347.
Instructions as to proper or permissible use, see post § 449.
Instruction against use for improper purpose, see post § 449.
Charge on using rebuttal testimony for impeachment also, see post ¶ 2142.

¶ 714. Proof of nonpayment and protest of a check, on a prosecution for the forgery of the same, is competent as evidence tending to show that the check was presented, and not paid; but is not evidence of the alleged forgery.—People v. Tollefson, 145 Mich. 444.

¶ 715. Where an information is filed under sections 11785 and 11786, Comp. L. 1897, charging two prior convictions, records of such convictions may be introduced in evidence for the purpose of establishing the same but for no other purpose.—People v. Campbell, 173 Mich. 381.

¶ 716. Upon a prosecution for robbery accompanied by an assault, the admission of evidence that one jointly charged with respondent had blood on his sleeve when arrested, soon after the robbery, is not error, where it is followed by evidence that the parties were seen together shortly before and after the robbery, and the jury are instructed to disregard such evidence unless they are satisfied that both parties were participants in the crime.—People v. Gillespie, 111 Mich. 241.

§ 160. Res inter alios acta.

Other offenses and acts by accused, see post §§ 165-167.
Other relations and acts of parties in sexual crimes, see post §§ 168-170.
Other crimes by accomplices, see post § 171.
Similar but unrelated facts, see post § 161.
Facts and conditions either before or after facts in issue, see post §§ 162-164.
Declarations and acts of accomplices and third persons out of court as evidence against accused, see post § 226 et seq.

¶ 717. In a prosecution for adultery the defendant was asked on cross-examination whether his wife had not made a complaint against the other party for the alleged offense, and he replied that he had heard so. Held, that this answer should not have been received in evidence.—People v. Knapp, 42 Mich. 267.

¶ 718. Where, upon a trial for an assault with intent to murder, there is testimony tending to show that another person, jointly charged with the assault, accompanied respondent to the place of its commission, evidence of the condition of such person shortly thereafter, tending to establish his complicity in the crime, is admissible as against respondent.—People v. Cleveland, 107 Mich. 367.

¶ 719. On trial for nuisance by keeping up a mill-dam it is competent for defendant to show that the former owners of the mill were indicted for keeping up the same dam, tried and acquitted; and that the question litigated on the former trial was whether the dam was a nuisance or not. The acquittal would be evidence that the dam was not a nuisance at that time, though not that it has not since become such.—Crippen v. People, 8 Mich. 117.

¶ 720. In a prosecution for rape the alleged victim should not be permitted to testify that the child claimed to have been the fruit of the intercourse had been taken away from her, unless it is claimed that respondent was in some manner connected with such taking away.—People v. Duncan, 104 Mich. 460.

¶ 721. Respondent was arrested with three others for committing a certain burglary, and demanded a separate trial. The other three were convicted. Held, it was proper in respondent's trial to introduce evidence showing for what purpose the tools found on the other three persons were used.—People v. Freelmame, 163 Mich. 336.

¶ 722. Where a robbery is committed by several persons acting in concert, it is proper on the separate trial of one of them to show that the plunder was found with one of the others, or in the cell where he had been locked up.—People v. Whitson, 43 Mich. 419.

§ 161. Similar but unrelated or disconnected facts.

As part of res gestæ, see post § 241 et seq.

Experiments conducted under supposedly similar conditions, see post § 164.
Similar crimes and offenses or relationships, see also post § 165 et seq.
Evidence of other killings and attempts or assaults to show cause of death, intent, common circumstances, etc., see post § 167.
Evidence of poisons used for other purposes to rebut poisoning, see Homicide ¶ 136.
Other death by same poison as evidence of common plan, see Homicide ¶ 141.
Comparisons to show negligence in manslaughter, see also Homicide § 51.

¶ 723. Testimony of prior like acts of negligence was incompetent in a prosecution for manslaughter as the result of negligence in leaving a boiler unattended.—People v. Thompson, 122 Mich. 411.

¶ 724. On a prosecution for the forgery of a deed evidence that other deeds were made or intended at the time of its apparent execution is foreign to the question of its genuineness and properly excluded. So is evidence of possession under such deeds.—People v. Van Alstine, 57 Mich. 69.

¶ 725. In a prosecution for stealing a dropped pocketbook at a saloon, the exclusion of testimony as to what the complaining witness had done, at another saloon, in dropping his pocketbook and charging theft, was not improper; such inquiries would properly belong to cross-examination of the complaining witness himself.—People v. Long, 44 Mich. 296.

§ 162. Antecedent and subsequent facts and conditions.

See also ante ¶ 719.
As to possession or lack of money or property that might have come from crime and as to source of money possessed, see post § 163.
Testimony based on experiments and comparisons after the fact, see post § 164.
Previous and subsequent sexual relations and acts of intercourse, see post §§ 168-170.
Previous negligence as evidence of negligence of like kind, see ante ¶ 723.
Photograph taken at other time, see also post ¶ 1349.
Reputation at earlier and later times, see also post ¶ 1288.
Belief as to identity entertained at time of testifying, see post ¶ 917.
Reputation of woman for chastity at time after seduction, see post ¶ 1279.
Financial conditions and resources as proper matter on which to cross-examine to rebut or explain direct evidence, see Examination of Witnesses § 48.

¶ 726. In a prosecution for an assault with intent to commit rape in a field of growing wheat, evidence that five or six weeks afterwards, and also after harvest, an examination of the ground was made and no sign of a struggle found, was properly excluded for remoteness.—Ulrich v. People, 39 Mich. 245.

¶ 727. In a prosecution for receiving and concealing stolen goods, it is proper to exclude as immaterial testimony on respondent's part that the officers acted in conjunction with the person who bought the goods from respondent; for the offense charged against respondent was receiving them and was committed before this means of detection was resorted to.—People v. Considine, 105 Mich. 149.

¶ 728. Evidence that an inmate of accused's house was reputed a common prostitute is not so remote as to be incompetent although it relates to reputation three years before, particularly where it covers a period down to the time the offense is charged to have been committed.—People v. Russell, 110 Mich. 46.

¶ 729. In a prosecution for murder, questions as to the clothing worn by the respondent at the coroner's inquest are irrelevant in the absence of evidence that he had not changed his clothing.—People v. Simpson, 48 Mich. 474.

¶ 730. In a prosecution for child murder it is admissible to show that a doctor analyzed the contents of the stomach of the child and found it contained morphine, although he testified that he could not tell when the poison entered the stomach, where it is shown that the body was prepared by an undertaker who did not use morphine, that the grave was undisturbed, that the stomach was sealed as soon as the body was exhumed and that there were no marks upon the body except those made by the undertaker.—People v. Quimby, 134 Mich. 625.

¶ 731. In a prosecution for keeping, in violation of the local option law, a place for the sale of intoxicating liquors, evidence of sales made as far back as three months before the date alleged in the information is admissible as bearing upon the character of the place at the time charged.—People v. Caldwell, 107 Mich. 374.

¶ 732. In connection with the statement of accused that deceased was murdered by a stranger just after deceased had finished filing a saw at a nearby place, it is proper to allow a witness to state that on the following day he examined the saw and that the appearance was that several teeth were newly filed and had not been used.—People v. Wolf, 95 Mich. 625.

§ 163. ——Financial condition and resources of defendant.

Admissibility to prove motive, see also post § 181.
Rebuttal and explanation of money affairs, see post § 182.

¶ 733. On a trial for larceny it is proper to show that defendant had no apparent means of livelihood and that witness did not know of defendant's having had any money the day before.—People v. Herrick, 59 Mich. 563.

¶ 734. Evidence that a respondent charged with robbery had received about the time of the offense moneys from various sources is immaterial where it was not claimed that the stolen money was found in his possession.—People v. Becker, 48 Mich. 43.

§ 164. ——Experiments and comparisons after the fact.

Experiments made after the fact as basis for nonexpert opinion, see post § 202.
Demonstrations and experiments in presence of jury, see post § 281.

¶ 735. Where it is charged that a pocket-book was stolen by being cut from the breast pocket of one's coat, the testimony of the tailor to whom the prosecutor carried the coat to be mended, as to experiments made to see whether such a pocket-book as he described could be taken out of the pocket in that condition, is admissible, especially where it appears that the coat has since been mended and again ripped open.—People v. Morrigan, 29 Mich. 4.

¶ 736. Evidence of experiments of lifting little girls of different weights over a rail fence to show that the testimony of the complaining witness in a prosecution for an assault with intent to commit a rape, to the effect that she was dragged over the fence by the accused, was not true, is inadmissible.—Ulrich v. People, 39 Mich. 245.

¶ 737. On a prosecution for assault with intent to do great bodily harm less than murder, evidence of experiments and observations, made by witnesses two months after an affray, and offered to show that certain witnesses who had testified to seeing the affray from the stoop of a neighboring dwelling-house could not have seen it, is inadmissible unless it is shown that no change had taken place in the surroundings of the location between the time of the affray and the time when the experiments and observations were made.—People v. Deitz, 86 Mich. 419.

¶ 738. Evidence of experiments made with ordinary whisky, and a liquid which respondent's counsel claimed to be of same character as that which they claimed had produced his involuntary intoxication, was properly excluded, in absence of testimony tending to prove identity of liquor drank by respondent with that experimented with.—People v. Slack, 90 Mich. 448.

¶ 739. Evidence of the results of experiments made to ascertain within what time a given pressure of steam could be raised in a boiler by the use of oil as fuel, being competent in a prosecution for criminal negligence in leaving steam boilers fired with oil unattended, whereby the high steam pressure generated caused an explosion resulting in death, it was not subject to the objection that the conditions under which the experiments were made were dissimilar from those which existed under the boiler in question.—People v. Thompson, 122 Mich. 411.

¶ 740. In an arson case it was held improper to permit two active young men, who at the instance of the prosecution, started to walk from a certain point to the place of the fire and back to the respondent's home, to testify as to the time within which they made the trip, for the purpose of convincing the jury that respondent, a man 70 years old and ill, could have made this trip, entered and fired the barn in question and returned home in the same time or a few minutes longer.—People v. Gotshall, 123 Mich. 474.

§ 165. Other offenses or criminal acts by accused.

To show system, plan, knowledge, or intent, see post § 166.
Evidence of other killings, attempts and assaults, see post § 167.
Evidence of other sexual relations and acts, see post §§ 168-170.
Evidence of other crimes by accomplices, see post § 171.
As res gestæ acts, see also post § 241 et seq.
Declarations and res gestæ statements involving other crimes, see post § 241 et seq., and especially post ¶ 1147.
Relevancy of admission of commission of other crimes, see post § 256.
Making of other deeds as bearing on forgery of alleged deed, see also ante ¶ 724.
Evidence of abortion to establish corpus delicti of manslaughter, see Homicide § 47.
Proof of former crimes as irrelevant to killing of officer in making arrest of accused on suspicion, see Homicide ¶ 171.
Cross-examination of accused as to other crimes and offenses, see Examination of Witnesses § 80.
Admissibility of evidence of other crimes to affect credibility of accused as a witness, see Witnesses, VI.
Cross-examination respecting other crimes and prosecutions to affect credibility, see Examination of Witnesses § 65.

¶ 741. As a general rule, in criminal cases, the commission of other, though similar, offenses by the defendant cannot be proved for the purpose of showing that he was more likely to have committed the offense for which he is on trial, or as corroborating the testimony relating to such principal offense.—People v. Jenness, 5 Mich. 305.

¶ 742. Evidence cannot be excluded merely because it proves a distinct offense as well as the one on trial.—People v. Marble, 38 Mich. 117.

¶ 743. On a prosecution for arson, evidence that there was a fire in a city where accused lived more than 32 years previously, and in which the whole city burned up, and questions as to how it started and whether accused was suspected of being the incendiary, are too remote.—People v. Gotschall, 123 Mich. 474.

¶ 744. Where, in a criminal prosecution for an aggravated assault the victim has stated on cross-examination that he has been arrested for being drunk, the question how many times he has been drunk since the assault is properly excluded as having no bearing on the issues involved.—People v. Sutherland, 104 Mich. 468.

¶ 745. Evidence that a person charged with burglary has committed the like offense in the same house before is inadmissible.—Lightfoot v. People, 16 Mich. 507.

¶ 746. In order to account for the whereabouts of accused earlier in the same evening, the state may show that he broke and entered the same house earlier in the night.—People v. Gibson, 58 Mich. 368.

¶ 747. At a trial for keeping a house of ill-fame, resorted to, etc., respondent's statements concerning her husband who was not living in the house, and her arrest many years before on a charge of prostitution, cannot be shown.—People v. Pinkerton, 79 Mich. 110.

¶ 748. In a prosecution for obtaining money by false pretenses based on respondent's borrowing money on a promissory note as security, represented good and collectible, it is error to admit evidence of other transactions where the respondent had borrowed small sums on like securities where there is nothing to show criminal conduct in any of them.—People v. Robertson, 129 Mich. 627.

¶ 749. In a prosecution for uttering a forged note which the prosecution claimed had in fact been signed by the purported makers, but was afterwards altered before being uttered, it was error to admit testimony as to other dealings between the parties leading up to the giving of the note in question, and the default of respondent in respect thereto; as respondent was thereby in effect put on trial for another and distinct offense.—People v. Bennett, 122 Mich. 281.

¶ 750. It is not error, in a prosecution for murder, to receive testimony from which the suspicion might arise that respondent had also been guilty of larceny, if such testimony is relevant to the charge of murder.—People v. Wilson, 55 Mich. 506.

¶ 751. Evidence that defendant, in a prosecution for murder, committed a certain burglary and stole certain revolvers and ammunition the night t erly admitted fo
ing that defenda committing such
196 Mich. 347.

¶ 752. In a pr
not error to excl of violence of de where not a part
Dowd, 127 Mich.

¶ 753. In a p
liquor law in fai
the admission of sales is not prop offense.—People

¶ 754. In a pr
Pub. Acts 1903, who commit any another male pe
of a felony, prev
tween the same relied on are ad probable that t
People v. Swift,

¶ 755. In a p
dence is inadmis defendant of an than that for wh
Schweitzer, 23 M

¶ 756. The fa rate larceny ten who has testifie
the defendant do —People v. Sch

¶ 757. Eviden similar goods is for larceny and
People v. Jacks,

¶ 758. In a pr
by respondent up evidence that he before, and that and other childre
on such occasion the prosecutrix y
v. Burwell, 106 M

§ 166. ——As sho or inten
Other abortions
miscarriage,
Other abortions
see post ¶ 7
Other neglects t
ante ¶ 723.
Other act of po of carelessne
post ¶ 1161.
Lodging complai time as res g
see also post

¶ 759. Previou
are admissible to or intent necessary to establish a particular offense.—People v. Henssler, 48 Mich. 49; People v. Wakely, 62 Mich. 297.

¶ 760. While it is a general rule that, on a trial for a felony, the prosecution will not be permitted to give evidence tending to prove respondent guilty of another distinct and independent felony, still, where a felonious intent is an essential ingredient of the crime charged, and the act done is claimed to have been innocently or accidentally done, or by mistake, or the result is claimed to have followed an act lawfully done for a legitimate purpose, or there is room for such an inference, it is proper to characterize the act by proof of other like acts producing the same result, as tending to show guilty knowledge, and the intent or purpose with which the particular act was done, and to rebut the presumption that might otherwise obtain.—People v. Seaman, 107 Mich. 348.

¶ 761. A distinct and remote crime of the same general nature as that for which accused is on trial, but in no way related to it, is not admissible to show intent, where the crime charged was wrong in itself, and the circumstances were not such as to support an inference of accident, mistake or inadvertence.—People v. Burke, 157 Mich. 108.

¶ 762. Evidence of a distinct offense committed by the accused in going home from the commission of the offense in issue is admissible as showing the intent of the first; and, it being all one transaction, the action and whereabouts of the accused during the whole trip are relevant.—People v. O'Brien, 60 Mich. 8.

¶ 763. The admission of the testimony of a witness in a case of manslaughter by abortion, that she had applied to the respondent to have an abortion produced on her, and that some acts were done towards accomplishing that purpose, violates the rule that where intent or guilty knowledge is a necessary conclusion from the act done, the possibility of accident being absent, proof of other offenses of a similar character is inadmissible, and constitutes reversible error.—People v. Lonsdale, 122 Mich. 388.

¶ 764. In a criminal prosecution of a person, under section 11581, Comp. L. 1897, for mutilating a horse by cutting off its tongue, testimony that respondent had mutilated other horses on previous occasions in the same way is incompetent, since such acts, even if proved, are wholly unnecessary to show a malicious intent.—People v. Minney, 155 Mich. 534.

¶ 765. In a prosecution for bribery in paying a village clerk money to induce him to issue fraudulent sparrow bounty certificates, testimony tending to show a conspiracy, and also to show prior similar transactions is admissible as tending to show the purpose of the payment upon which the prosecution was based.—People v. Gorsline, 132 Mich. 549.

¶ 766. In prosecuting for a particular burglary the people can show facts apparently connected with the act of breaking into other houses at the same time, if they tend to show that the several burglaries were parts of one scheme and that the person concerned in the others was therefore guilty of the offense for which the prosecution was instituted; the tendency of the evidence is a question for the jury.—People v. Mead, 50 Mich. 228.

¶ 767. An interval between two successive entrances of the same house on the same night by the same burglar does not prevent proof of what took place at the second visit in a prosecution for the crime; the two breakings constitute one continuous burglary, even though it began to be light before the burglar left the house the second time. But even if the second entrance were a separate transaction the fact could be shown by way of accounting for the whereabouts of respondent during the night.—People v. Gibson, 58 Mich. 368.

¶ 768. In a prosecution for breaking and entering a saloon with intent to commit larceny it is error to admit evidence of former convictions for larceny two or three years before for the purpose of showing intent without showing some connection between the offenses.—People v. Henry, 129 Mich. 100.

¶ 769. On a prosecution for entering a barn in the nighttime and stealing articles therefrom, testimony of other larcenies is admissible as bearing upon the question of intent.—People v. Nagle, 137 Mich. 88.

¶ 770. In a prosecution for embezzlement, evidence of previous acts of like character is admissible to prove intent.—People v. Hawkins, 106 Mich. 479.

¶ 771. In a prosecution of a deputy township treasurer for embezzling township funds, it is proper to show his dealings with village money as village treasurer, and that by reason of his default as village treasurer he found it necessary to replenish the account which he did with township funds.—People v. Sanders, 139 Mich. 442.

¶ 772. In a prosecution for obtaining an indorsement on the false pretense that the proceeds of the paper were to be paid to a specified person it was held allowable to show that respondent had previously obtained from the indorser sums which he claimed were to be paid, and afterwards said had been paid, to the same person, when in fact they had not been. Such evidence tends to show a systematic scheme for obtaining money on false pretenses.—People v. Henssler, 48 Mich. 49.

¶ 773. It is competent, upon a prosecution for obtaining a promissory note by the false pretense that it was a contract binding the makers to pay only upon the sale of certain machines for which they were to be given the exclusive agency in certain territory, to show, as illustrating the purpose or intent, that respondents, at about the same time, were engaged in like transactions with other parties, and had already sold to others the right which they represented they were conveying to the makers of the note.—People v. Summers, 115 Mich. 537.

¶ 774. The falsity of a pretense and the fraudulent design may be inferred from proof of numerous other like falsities done by accused and resulting in profit to him; and the fact that there is no proof that in them there was any guilty knowledge of the falsity does not make them inadmissible for this purpose on the supposition that they might have been false by mistake or deception, where that appears to be improbable.—People v. Hoffmann, 142 Mich. 531.

¶ 775. In order to show the falsity of other claims evincive of a system of defrauding the state, on an information for false pretenses it is proper to receive testimony that the services listed in those claims were not rendered and that fees and mileage of witnesses therein included were not paid by claimant and that such witnesses were not sworn.—People v. Hoffmann, 142 Mich. 531.

¶ 776. On the question whether accused had a fraudulent design to cheat the state in presenting a claim for coroner's fees for an inquest on a body stated in his claim to have been that of a "stranger" not belonging to this state, it is proper to admit other like claims with the like representation and containing other falsities, which he had equal opportunity and duty to know were false.—People v. Hoffmann, 142 Mich. 531.

¶ 777. Where, on the trial of a coroner indicted for obtaining fees for inquests from the state by false pretenses, there was evidence of other systematic false claims of like kind for fees, it was proper to receive testimony of a physician, reported as having been paid for making a post-mortem examination at one of those inquests, that he received no pay for it.—People v. Hoffmann, 142 Mich. 531.

¶ 778. On trial of one who posed as a medium, where it was claimed that accused duped his victim into procuring and wearing gold about his person, evidence of similar false pretenses with others is admissible.—People v. Ascher, 126 Mich. 637.

¶ 779. In a prosecution for uttering and publishing a forged order with intent to defraud, knowing it to be forged, evidence of the scheme and of frauds committed in pursuance of it is admissible to show the scienter, under proper instructions against permitting such evidence to prejudice the jury in other re the rule that evi that for which t proved.—Carver

¶ 780. In a p terfeit money it of guilty knowle
evening and in other instances though the pers identified with t pearance.—Peopl

¶ 781. In a p
where the quest ceipts is in issu complaining wit ceipts presented forgeries, since present receipt,
leged forgeries
Peck, 139 Mich.

¶ 782. Where illegal sale of l fenses to show
ness must be co
the same offense
—People v. Bull

¶ 783. Where keeping a place were kept, store
furnished in vi law, evidence re
the sixteen mon
the local option
mere keeping of
is not admissible of business as intent.—People

§ 167. ——Other
Other acts of vi
Evidence of ma son at sam delicti of m

¶ 784. On a t
twin infants wi night in good he
the morning wit
on each, testimo
other infant, an is properly admi
the one for the k held came to its apparent, from came to their d
People v. Foley,

¶ 785. Eviden wounds upon the ing by respond transaction that other person for on trial is admi
Mich. 70.

¶ 786. Whether, on trial of an information for an intent to kill by poisoning, it be competent to prove a recent attempt to poison, or who prepared food a few days prior to the attempt laid in the information, by which the same person was made ill, for the purpose of showing the criminal intent charged, quære.—People v. Doyle, 21 Mich. 221.

¶ 787. In a prosecution for murder alleged to have been committed by the administration of arsenic, the admission of evidence to show that there was found in the stomach of another who lived with the accused a small amount of arsenic and that he had died a few months previous to the person alleged to have been murdered is prejudicial error, where it was expressly disclaimed by the prosecution that there was a common plan or scheme embracing the killing of both and that no common motive was shown, and the jury had been instructed that the only purpose for which the evidence could be received was to show the presence of arsenic in the house and that it must be disregarded for every other purpose.—People v. Collins, 144 Mich. 121.

¶ 788. Testimony as to the effect of an explosion of certain boilers being competent in a prosecution for criminal negligence resulting in the explosion of such boilers, it was not error in describing the effect, to show that persons other than the one named in the indictment were killed or injured by the explosion.—People v. Thompson, 122 Mich. 411.

¶ 789. Although testimony as to the effect of an explosion of certain boilers was competent in a prosecution for criminal negligence resulting in the explosion of such boilers, it was error, in describing the effect, to show that persons other than the one named in the indictment who had been killed, were taken to hospitals and were detained there.—People v. Thompson, 122 Mich. 411.

¶ 790. Upon a trial for murder by shooting, testimony to show that respondent had drawn a revolver on other persons prior to the shooting, is admissible though it tends to show a statutory offense, since it would tend to lessen the credit to be given to his testimony that he shot because he believed his life to be in danger.—People v. Farrell, 137 Mich. 127.

¶ 791. Upon a charge of assault with intent to murder his wife, evidence that defendant went previously to the house of her parents, where she was staying, and assaulted them, is admissible when the evidence shows that the accused went there with the intent to kill his wife.—People v. Owen, 154 Mich. 571.

¶ 792. In a prosecution for assault with intent to kill and murder where the defense is temporary insanity as a result of using intoxicating liquors, evidence as to the conduct of the respondent from the time he purchased the revolver, up to the time of shooting (one hour), and the fact that he shot the officer who attempted to arrest him, and tried to shoot another but missed him are admissible, and do not amount to proving the charge by evidence of other distinct and subsequent offenses, but of proving the purpose and intent of respondent by his conduct before and after the time of the alleged offense.—People v. Haxer, 144 Mich. 575.

¶ 793. One who is on trial for manslaughter in committing an abortion may, where the proof of guilt is circumstantial, and where he claims the premature birth is due to accident, be shown to have performed other abortions in the same house, as bearing on his guilty knowledge and intent.—People v. Seaman, 107 Mich. 348.

¶ 794. In a prosecution for manslaughter in attempting abortion it is proper to show by a witness that accused, a physician, performed an operation on her for the avowed purpose of producing an abortion, his defense being that the operation charged was done as a necessity to save life.—People v. Hodge, 141 Mich. 312.

§ 168. Other relations and acts of parties in sexual crimes.

See also ante ¶ 674.
Relations of accused with other than subject of crime or accomplice therein, see post § 169.
Relations of subject of crime with others than accused, see post § 170.
Other unnatural or indecent carnal offenses, see also ante ¶ 754.
Other acts of intercourse between same parties in prosecutions for common law or statutory rape, see Rape.
Other acts between the parties in prosecutions for seduction, see Seduction, II.
Admissibility of declarations and complaints by victim of alleged rape or indecent assault, see post §§ 233, 244.
Previous attempt to institute prosecution as rebuttal of claim that prosecution was extortionate in object, see post ¶ 874a.
Comments of third persons on behavior as hearsay, see post ¶ 1052.

¶ 795. Proof of acts of criminal intercourse has no tendency to prove previous acts; it tends, however, to show the probability of subsequent acts.—People v. Clark, 33 Mich. 112.

¶ 796. In a prosecution for enticing a female away for purposes of prostitution, evidence of previous illicit relations and of the subsequent conduct of the parties is admissible as bearing upon defendant's intent in enticing her away.—People v. Carrier, 46 Mich. 442.

¶ 797. When adultery is charged, the acquaintance, conduct and familiarity of the parties are material subjects of inquiry, and pertinent to the issue, if not too remote.—People v. Girdler, 65 Mich. 68.

¶ 798. A prosecution for adultery must be instituted within a year after the offense; and evidence of acts which at most would raise only a suspicion of improper relations should not be admitted if they occurred more than a year before the commission of the alleged offense, unless they were shown to belong to a continuous series of improprieties.—People v. Davis, 52 Mich. 569.

¶ 799. In a prosecution for adultery, acts of familiarity committed two years before are too remote to be put in evidence. But acts within a short time before and very soon after the act complained of, if establishing a continuous intimacy, may be shown.—People v. Hendrickson, 53 Mich. 525.

¶ 800. In a prosecution for adultery with another's wife the people may show acts of intimacy between the parties that are prior to the time of the alleged offense, but not such as are subsequent.—People v. Fowler, 104 Mich. 449.

¶ 801. In a prosecution for adultery it is proper for the people to show acts of intimacy prior to the date charged, but testimony as to subsequent acts is incompetent.—People v. Davis, 175 Mich. 594.

¶ 802. In case of incest, a crime consisting of illicit sexual intercourse, which can only be committed by the concurrent acts of two persons of opposite sexes, evidence of previous familiarities and acts of intercourse is admissible, as tending to show concert, and a common design of both parties to commit the act charged, and habitually to indulge the criminal desire as opportunity might offer.—People v. Jenness, 5 Mich. 305.

¶ 803. Evidence of prior acts of sexual intercourse between a father and his daughter is admissible on his trial for the crime of incest committed at a later date.—People v. Cease, 80 Mich. 576.

¶ 804. In a prosecution for incest by accused with his daughter, an act of familiarity of a character evincive of a purpose of sexual intercourse, and acts of sexual intercourse at various times for period of eight years prior to commission of alleged offense may be shown.—People v. Skutt, 96 Mich. 449.

§ 169. ——Sexual relations of accused with others than subject of crime.

Weight of evidence of former relations between woman and man accused of abduction, see also post ¶ 1437.

¶¶ 805, 806. Evidence in a prosecution for statutory rape that defendant had had intercourse with a sister of complaining witness at a time when she was under the age of statutory consent is inadmissible, as such testimony, if true, would tend to prove defendant guilty of a distinct crime with which he was not charged in the information.—People v. Coston, 187 Mich. 538.

¶ 807. A witness, sister of prosecuting witness in a prosecution for statutory rape upon a child under the age of consent, who has testified to witnessing previous acts of sexual intercourse between defendant and her sister, should not be permitted to testify of her own similar delinquencies as reasons as to why she had not told her parents of the acts committed.—People v. Coston, 187 Mich. 538.

¶ 808. In a prosecution for statutory rape, a question asked of the defendant whether he had been responsible for the birth of a child by a woman employed in his office a number of years prior to the offense charged, held inadmissible to show that defendant had been guilty of similar offenses but admissible, in the discretion of the court, as affecting his credibility.—People v. La Londe, 197 Mich. 76.

§ 170. ——Sexual relations of subject with others than accused.

Other rape by accomplice on same girl, see post ¶ 813.

¶ 809. In a prosecution for rape upon a girl less than fourteen years old, testimony of intercourse by her with other men prior to the commission of the alleged offense is inadmissible, her character not being in issue, and such testimony not being competent as bearing upon her credibility as a witness.—People v. Abbott, 97 Mich. 484.

¶ 810. In a prosecution for having carnal knowledge of a girl less than fourteen years old, it is not error to refuse to permit respondent to show by the complaining witness that respondent had had sexual intercourse with her on an occasion previous to that fixed as the one upon which the offense was committed.—People v. Harris, 103 Mich. 473.

¶ 811. Where the prosecution in a trial for raping a girl under the age of consent has sought to show that she thereby contracted a venereal disease, respondent cannot show specific acts of lewdness with small boys nine months before, such evidence not tending to disprove that she contracted the disease as stated.—People v. Glover, 71 Mich. 303.

§ 171. Other crimes by accomplices.

Admissibility of declarations and admissive acts by accomplices, see post § 226 et seq.

¶ 812. It is error to admit testimony that an accomplice not called as a witness was once before arrested.—People v. O'Hare, 124 Mich. 515.

¶ 813. In a prosecution for aiding and abetting a rape on one particular occasion, evidence of a prior rape on the prosecuting witness by the same person in the respondent's house, and of the surrounding circumstances, and of what the respondent said when complaint was made to her, is admissible to show knowledge that the crime had been committed, to show her intent in doing acts relied on to prove the aiding and abetting, and to show probability that such acts of aiding and abetting were done.—People v. Neely, 171 Mich. 249.

¶ 814. In a prosecution for larceny on cross-examination of a witness for one of the respondents it is improper to show the conduct of a co-respondent relating to other goods alleged to have been stolen on other occasions.—People v. Huff, 173 Mich. 620.

§ 172. Incriminating facts and appearances.

Footprints, blood stains, and the like, see post § 173.
Possession of stolen goods, burglars' tools, or means of crime, see post § 174.
Sufficiency and weight of circumstances, see post § 305.
Associations and conduct with accomplices, see post § 224.

¶ 815. Testimony of witnesses in an arson case that they met a man of about the height and size of the respondent, of which height and size there were hundreds of others in the community, and whom neither of the witnesses placed within a mile of the fire, is incompetent as evidence that respondent was seen going towards the place in question before the fire and returning from it after.—People v. Gotshall, 123 Mich. 474.

§ 173. ——Footprints, blood stains, and the like.

Explanation of blood stains, see post ¶ 881.
Fitting shoes to footprints as self-crimination, see ante ¶ 696.
Evidence as to protection of footprints against obliteration, see ante ¶ 680.
Footprints seen by jury on view, see also ante ¶ 690.
Admissibility of testimony as to blood stains and tracks, see also Homicide § 46.

¶ 816. Testimony that a shoe offered in evidence, fitted the respondent in a robbery case, was competent where it appeared that articles stolen from the premises in question were found in the house where respondent lived with his father; that a billy made out of the butt end of a whip belonging to respondent was found near the place of the robbery and that until a few days after the robbery respondent wore pointed shoes, and that prior to the trial a pointed shoe was found concealed in the hay in a barn used by respondent and his father, and where tracks made by this shoe corresponded in measurements to pointed tracks found near the place of the robbery, and where the shoe was without objection tried on by the defendant.—People v. Keep, 123 Mich. 231.

§ 174. ——Possession of fruits of crime or of means for commission.

As to possession of weapons before crime, see also ante ¶ 675.
Evidence as to fitness of implements for felonious use, see also ante ¶¶ 681, 682.
Possession of articles not covered by indictment but stolen at same time, see also post ¶ 1148.
Evidence of theft of means to commit offense, see ante ¶ 751.
Evidence as to possession of stolen property by another, see also ante ¶ 722.
Possession by accomplices, see also post § 230.
Evidence as to purposes and uses of tools found on persons arrested for same burglary, see also ante ¶ 721.
Inference from incriminating possessions, see ante § 141.
Things themselves as evidence, see post § 278.
Acts accompanying possession as res gestæ, see post § 241 et seq.
Admissibility of evidence that one accused of killing had pistol or other means, see also Homicide § 46.

¶ 817. Possession of a satchel containing stolen property was held to have no tendency in itself to show one guilty of burglary.—People v. Gordon, 40 Mich. 716.

¶ 818. Possession of stolen goods may be shown, in connection with other evidence, upon a prosecution for burglary.—People v. Carroll, 54 Mich. 334.

¶ 819. In a prosecution for breaking and entering a store in the nighttime, evidence that the defendant some time after the crime had goods in his possession of the kind kept in the store, is not admissible in the absence of proof that the goods belonged to complaining storekeeper. (Moore and Hooker, JJ., dissenting.)—People v. Trine, 164 Mich. 1.

¶ 820. Testimony of the finding of burglar's tools, some time after an alleged burglary, on a farm is admissible where it is shown that defendant occupied the farm where the tools were found and that he was the only one living thereon and that he had worked the farm for two years up to the time of the burglary, though he spent part of this time at another place where his wife lived.—People v. Gregory, 130 Mich. 522.

¶ 821. On the trial of an indictment for rendering a counterfeit bill current as true, knowing the same to be counterfeit, evidence of the possession by defendant of counterfeit bills on other banks is inadmissible.—People v. Stewart, 5 Mich. 243.

¶ 822. The unexplained possession of goods recently stolen may be evidence of the larceny of the goods.—People v. Hogan, 123 Mich. 233.

¶ 823. Evidence, on a prosecution for larceny, of the finding in defendant's trunk, in which the specific property named in the indictment was secreted, of other property also stolen from the complaining witness, held competent as one of the circumstances of the finding of the property named and also as tending to identify the defendant with the transaction, and, in any event, not prejudicial in view of the court's charge to the jury.—People v. May, 199 Mich. 574.

¶ 824. In a prosecution for murder, testimony of a detective in another city concerning the arrest of the respondent for another crime and the finding of a 32 caliber revolver upon his person, is admissible in evidence where other evidence shows that the deceased was killed by a 32 caliber bullet.—People v. Higgins, 127 Mich. 291.

¶ 825. Testimony that a "billy" was found upon respondent's person at the time he was arrested is admissible in a prosecution for larceny.—People v. Machen, 101 Mich. 400.

§ 175. Evidence to prove particular facts and issue; corpus delicti or causes.

Evidence to prove particular crimes, see generally this division (VIII), ante §§ 146-174, post § 176 et seq. It is impossible to arrange cases on relevancy and competency of evidence according to the crimes involved, since to do so would entirely ignore the rules of evidence applied. It would likewise be impossible to make detailed and particular cross-references because they would be confusingly numerous. To ascertain what must be proved to establish a given crime, see Crimes, II, which treats of the elements of the several crimes, and see also the statutes defining the various crimes.

To prove marriage, relationship, identity, sanity, alibi or whereabouts, knowledge, intent, or motive, see post §§ 176-181.

[Note. Objections to evidence go to the competency of it or to some general principle of relevancy, as a rule, rather than to anything which identifies the ruling with a particular crime or issue. It is therefore obligatory to classify the paragraphs according to the principle on which the ruling turned. The section lines, ante and post, are designed to suggest such principle. Only those rulings which clearly turn on the relevancy of evidence to particular facts can be properly classified according to the facts or topics to be proved. The contention made must always control the classification.]

Other killings and attempts as evidence of cause, see ante § 167.

Nonexpert opinion as to ailment resulting in death, see post ¶ 929.

Medical opinions as to cause of death or bodily condition, see post § 206.

Reputation to prove status or character, see post § 274.

Proof of foreign ports, see po Issues presented dictment and
ante § 73.
Necessity of pr
proofs of g
Duty to call wi
licti, see pos
Sufficiency of evi
Mode of proving ties, see Ho Evidence in pr health laws,

¶ 826. Where
erty if he would the delivery of t
the burning may connection with ple v. Taylor, 2 I

¶ 827. On in burning a barn i persons were acc
barn with lights,
dence of how the
v. People, 29 Mic

¶ 828. Evidenc deceased girl and that respondent
ble, on a prosecu
show the act of i that she went to under an assum respondent were such assumed na
secreting her unt
though as indep might be incomp
Mich. 216.

¶ 829. The for be shown by tes porting to have that he did not
Sharp, 53 Mich.

¶ 830. In a p
1897, § 5324, for out a license, it of actual sales o showing that the
the business of h
ple v. Stewart, 1
232 U. S. 665, 58
476.

§ 176. ——Marria
Evidence of ma
riage, III.

¶ 831. In a pr testimony of the participated in foreign country respondent, altho sence of proof a try, to prove a valid marriage, is admissible to show that a ceremony was in fact performed, which, if followed by cohabitation, would establish the marital relation.—People v. Imes, 110 Mich. 250.

¶ 832. Evidence that respondent accused of adultery admitted having cohabited with complainant for some time after the ceremony is admissible on trial to prove marriage.—People v. Imes, 110 Mich. 250.

§ 177. ——Identity and qualities of things.

Other articles as evidence of identity, see post § 277.
Sufficiency of proofs of identity, see post § 319.

¶ 833. Where stolen property consisted of wool in fleeces, it was competent to prove, for purposes of comparison, the weight and quality of wool shown to a witness by defendant after the theft, and claimed by defendant to have been taken from his own sheep, such wool having been stored in defendant's house where the stolen wool was proved to have been carried and commingled with defendant's own wool.—People v. Pitcher, 15 Mich. 397.

¶ 834. In order to identify articles found in respondent's possession with those said to have been stolen from the store named in the information, testimony that the marks on tabs attached to them and on those previously in the store were alike was held admissible. —Cole v. People, 37 Mich. 544.

¶ 835. It is competent for a miller employed in a flouring mill from which sacks of flour have been stolen to testify that the flour found in respondent's possession is the same as that manufactured in the mill.—People v. Wood, 99 Mich. 620.

§ 178. ——Identity of accused or other persons.

Declarations of recognition at later time as evidence of identification, see also post ¶¶ 1086, 1090.
To identify accused as person near scene of arson, see also ante ¶ 815.
Res gestæ statements, see also post ¶ 1143.
Proof by private writings and books, see also post ¶ 1342.
Sufficiency of proof of identity, see post § 319.

¶ 836. Where it is sought to prove the presence of a person at a certain time or place by witnesses who testify that they saw him there, the vital question is whether the witnesses did see and identify such person at such time and place, and not whether they remembered seeing such person on a particular occasion.—People v. Lahnala, 193 Mich. 144.

¶ 837. In a prosecution for keeping a saloon open on Sunday, testimony that respondent kept the saloon in question and that the witness knew him tends to identify the respondent as the proprietor of the saloon.—People v. Blake, 52 Mich. 566.

¶ 838. In a prosecution for the larceny of an automobile, testimony of a witness, having a good opportunity of judging of the identity of the accused, that the man who placed the automobile in the rear of her house resembled the accused is admissible to establish the identity, although she could not say positively that the man was the respondent.—People v. Hammond, 177 Mich. 416.

¶ 839. In identifying the proprietor of a saloon it was held proper to ask a witness as to the contents of a license card which he testified he had seen in the saloon.—People v. Baumann, 52 Mich. 584.

§ 179. ——Sanity or insanity.

See also post ¶ 1279.
Acts and declarations indicative of sanity, see also post ¶ 1018.
Nonexpert conclusions and opinions, see post § 198.
Expert opinions, see post § 203.
Other attack as evidence of sanity and knowledge, see also ante ¶ 792.
Hearing of statements of others as arousing to insanity, see also post § 227.
Evidence in civil cases, see Insane Persons, I; and see also Wills, II.

¶ 840. Where insanity is made a defense it is competent to show a tendency to hereditary insanity on the part of the prisoner; also that a brother or sister has been insane. —People v. Garbutt, 17 Mich. 9.

§ 180. ——Alibi or whereabouts of person.

Identification of person at given time and place, see also ante § 178.
Evidence of commission of other crime to account for whereabouts, see also ante ¶ 746.
Rebuttal and explanation, see post § 182.

¶ 841. It is error in a criminal case to exclude testimony that will tend directly to weaken or strengthen the case made by the evidence on either side; as, e. g., testimony tending to establish an alibi and discredit state's evidence.—People v. Hare, 57 Mich. 505.

¶ 842. Where the defense to a charge of cattle-stealing was an alibi, circumstances stated by witnesses referring to occasions after the cattle were stolen and before they were sold were properly allowed to go to the jury under suitable instructions.—People v. La Munion, 64 Mich. 709.

¶ 843. Where respondent is charged with stealing cattle and seeks to show an alibi, the jury may be allowed to consider the testimony of witnesses who saw him in possession of the cattle, in connection with all other circumstances in relation to the question as to the time of their interview, the jury being charged that the facts must be found beyond a reasonable doubt.—People v. La Munion, 64 Mich. 709.

¶ 844. While it is unnecessary to charge in the information in a prosecution for statutory rape the exact date upon which the offense was alleged to have been committed, still where the exact date of the offense is fixed by the testimony, the defendant may show that at the time he was not present and could not have committed the offense alleged.—People v. Coston, 187 Mich. 538.

¶ 845. It is not relevant to a defense of alibi how the officers, forewarned of the criminal project, gained their information or from what source.—People v. Laird, 102 Mich. 135.

¶ 846. In showing an alibi counsel for accused may ask him about conversations with persons at times and places to which attention of an accomplice has been directed when questioned as a witness for the state, where the tendency of the evidence is inconsistent with guilt.—People v. Hare, 57 Mich. 505.

§ 181. ——Knowledge, intent and motive, or fraud.

See also post ¶¶ 1150, 1153.

Other crimes and offenses evincive of intent, knowledge, plan, or system, see ante § 166.

Other acts as evincive of intent in sexual crimes, see ante §§ 168-170.

Declarations and acts evincive of mental state, knowledge, intent, etc., see post § 218 et seq.

Declarative writings evincive of motive, see also post ¶ 1028.

Declarations of others heard by accused, see also post §§ 227, 228.

Conclusion evidence as to state of another's mind, see post § 198.

Conclusion evidence as to one's own thoughts and intents, see post § 199.

Evidence to show knowledge and intent of abortionist, see Homicide ¶ 158.

Ill feeling between parties as evidence of malice in murder, see Homicide § 49.

Inadmissibility of evidence of wife's bad associations in prosecution of husband for murder, see Homicide ¶ 146.

¶ 847. When guilty knowledge is an ingredient of the offense there need not usually be direct proof of actual, positive knowledge, but the jury may infer it from suspicious circumstances, such as apparently intentional neglect to make inquiry before engaging in a doubtful transaction.—Bonker v. People, 37 Mich. 4.

¶ 848. On the question what sources of information were available as to the fact of a person's late residence, city directories commonly in use and in possession of accused may be received.—People v. Hoffmann, 142 Mich. 531.

¶ 849. One conspirator is chargeable with the acts of another upon the principle that governs the case of agency, but that does not make him responsible for the antecedent knowledge of the other and impute it to him as guilty knowledge.—People v. Lay, 193 Mich. 476.

¶ 850. Where an offense is proved by circumstantial evidence, guilty knowledge may also be proved in the same way.. Where the wife and sister of the owner are shown to have burned his property, and there is no reason to believe that it was done to injure him, and the only probable motive was to defraud insurers, it is open to the jury to infer a knowledge of the insurance by the women, if they find no other reasonable way of accounting for their action.—Meister v. People, 31 Mich. 99.

¶ 851. It is not improper on an indictment for fraudulently burning a barn, without any allegation as to burning its contents, to show what was in it. The whole transaction should be open to the jury, and the fullness or emptiness of the barn might bear upon the motive to destroy it.—Hamilton v. People, 29 Mich. 173.

¶ 852. On indictment for fraudulently burning a barn evidence of a pending chancery suit concerning the title should not have been introduced to show a motive to defraud, when the time for taking proofs had expired some time before the fire, and the answer denied the equity of the bill. A fortiori, evidence of a suit brought subsequent to the fire was improper.—Hamilton v. People, 29 Mich. 173.

¶ 853. In a prosecution for burning a building with intent to defraud an insurance company, proof of loss sworn to by the defendant describing the house and barn and their contents was properly admitted for the purpose of showing the articles which were burned, having a bearing upon the defendant's motives.—People v. Mix, 149 Mich. 260.

¶ 854. In a prosecution for burning a building with intent to defraud an insurance company, where the proof of loss sworn to by the defendant was admitted to show the articles burned and their value, the defendant is entitled to show that the fire destoyed other property not included in the proof of loss, all such evidence having a bearing upon the defendant's motives.—People v. Mix, 149 Mich. 260.

¶ 855. Bad feeling between the parties does not bear on the question of burglary, especially where there are no recent threats or demonstrations tending that way.—People v. Bielfus, 59 Mich. 576.

¶ 856. In a prosecution of an officer of a corporation for embezzlement of funds of the corporation by taking an excessive salary, evidence that the increased salaries were never entered as such upon the books of the company, that the treasurer drew money with which they were paid from local banks on checks drawn to cash, and that the money so drawn and used by him was charged to a fictitious account and appeared upon the books as an account receivable is admissible as showing an intention of officers of the corporation to conspire to take money of the corporation illegally where there is other evidence of the defendant's bad faith.—People v. Lay, 193 Mich. 476.

¶ 857. Defendant was put on trial for false pretenses in procuring the indorsement of the prosecutor to a promissory note by the falsehood that a former note for the same amount, indorsed in like manner, was destroyed. Held, that evidence offered by the defendant that he was a partner of the prosecutor, that the latter was bound by agreement to indorse for him to an amount considerably larger than the two notes, but had refused to perform the agreement, and that the money obtained on the notes was used in their business for their joint benefit, was admissible, as tending to disprove the presumption of intent to defraud.—People v. Getchell, 6 Mich. 496.

¶ 858. In a prosecution for obtaining money by false pretenses the prosecution is not restricted to the exact transaction as it took place between the prosecutor and the accused, but can give evidence showing the steps preliminary thereto when tending to show the intent.—People v. Winslow, 39 Mich. 505.

¶ 859. In a prosecution for false pretenses the evidence for the people is not restricted to the exact transaction but may include the steps preliminary thereto when they tend to show the intent.—People v. Shelters, 99 Mich. 333.

¶ 860. On the question whether to the best of his information and belief accused certified that the bodies on which he had held inquests were not of persons belonging to the state, thereby receiving pay from the state for his fees and expenses, it was proper to introduce city directories in his library showing that they were listed as residents of his city; such directories are not proof that they were or were not strangers, but only of available information.—People v. Hoffmann, 142 Mich. 531.

¶ 861. On the question of guilty knowledge of the falsity of a statement that the person on whose body the accused as coroner held an inquest was a "stranger," and where other claims for fees for like inquests were introduced likewise false to show system and knowledge, the testimony of witnesses that the subjects of these other inquests had been residents of the city is admissible to show that available information of the facts existed.—People v. Hoffmann, 142 Mich. 531.

¶ 862. On a prosecution for obtaining money from the state by a false pretense that an inquest held was on the body of a nonresident, it was proper even if unnecessary to allow the state auditor to testify that in allowing the claim he relied on the false statement.—People v. Hoffmann, 142 Mich. 531.

¶ 863. Where defendant, charged with falsely representing that certain property was owned by him, had conveyed a half interest in such property to his father as security, and the father had subsequently joined with defendant in conveying the premises to a third person as security, the question of the interest of the father is immaterial in determining the truth or falsity of the representation.—People v. Andre, 153 Mich. 531.

¶ 864. The principal criminal element in forgery lies in the fraudulent purpose, and evidence of such of the circumstances as bear on the question of fraud is pertinent; the proofs of fraud must be substantially the same in criminal and civil cases.—People v. Marion, 29 Mich. 31.

¶ 865. A woman gave six hundred dollars to defendant to loan for her. Defendant forged a name to a note for that amount, kept the money, and paid her interest. In a trial for forgery, held, evidence that defendant never returned the money was admissible as bearing on the question of intent.—People v. Campbell, 160 Mich. 108.

¶ 866. Evidence tending to show criminal intimacy between the prisoner and the wife of the man whom he is charged with attempting to poison, and to show also that he sought to use her as an instrument in the attempt, is pertinent as bearing on the means and opportunity to commit the offense, and on the question of motive.—Templeton v. People, 27 Mich. 501.

¶ 867. On a prosecution of a physician for having prescribed intoxicating liquor while having good reason to believe that the patient intended to use it as a beverage, as indicative of the mental attitude of the accused, it is competent to prove the frequency of the applications made by one person and also the ease with which another by telephone procures a prescription of liquor.—People v. Humphrey, 194 Mich. 10.

¶ 868. Advice of counsel on the validity of a claim of a chattel as exempt is admissible in a prosecution for larceny to negative felonious intent in retaking property under claim of right from a person holding under an execution on it.—People v. Schultz, 71 Mich. 315.

¶ 869. One cannot rely upon counsel's advice to show that he has acted in good faith and had no larcenous intent unless he also shows that he has followed the advice by taking in the manner advised.—People v. Long, 50 Mich. 249.

¶ 870. Where a justice joined in marriage a girl who professed to be of the age of consent although she was apparently not, it was held competent to show that his family and her father's were neighbors and acquaintances, and that at the marriage he did not inquire for her parents, who were not present; these facts tend to show that he knew the marriage was unlawful.—Bonker v. People, 37 Mich. 4.

¶ 871. On a trial for the alleged wrongful removal from the office of the county clerk of an enrolled decree and the accompanying papers, there was no direct proof of such removal, but the case rested upon the facts that the papers were missing, and that respondent had an opportunity and a motive for taking them. The prosecution was allowed to show that in another criminal case, pending at the time the papers were alleged to have been taken, they were used as evidence against the respondent. Held, that the testimony was competent, as tending to show a motive on respondent's part for the removal.—People v. Bussey, 82 Mich. 49.

¶ 872. Where a respondent charged with wilfully carrying away papers from a public office presents himself as a witness in his own behalf, it is proper, as bearing upon the motive for the offense, to cross-examine him as to the alleged forgeries, evidence whereof is contained in the missing papers.—People v. Bussey, 82 Mich. 49.

¶ 873. In a prosecution for maliciously threatening to accuse another of the crime or perjury, testimony that such other person was in fact guilty of perjury is not admissible as bearing upon respondent's intent, or to disprove malice upon his part, or to impeach some other person.—People v. Whittemore, 102 Mich. 519.

§ 182. Rebutting and explaining facts.

See also ante ¶ 811.

Rebuttal and explanation of declarations made out of court, see post § 240.

Rebuttal and explanation of admissions, see post § 264.

Other abortions to rebut theory of miscarriage by accident or operation as necessity to save life, see ante ¶¶ 793, 794.

Explaining failure to testify of witness' own sexual delinquencies, see also ante ¶ 807.

Proper matters to be brought out in defendant's proofs, see post § 356.

Scope and subjects of rebuttal proofs, see post § 357.

Time for rebuttal and order of proofs, see post § 358 et seq.

Propriety of comment in argument on rebutting or explanatory evidences, see post § 386, ¶¶ 1772, 1778.

in another state. Held, that this testimony was admissible.—People v. De France, 104 Mich. 563.

¶ 877. In a prosecution for the unlawful sale of fermented cider, where defendant claimed that the cider was sweet and unfermented when sold, and that if it contained alcohol it was added by others after the sale, it was reversible error to exclude testimony tending to show that the parties to whom the sale was made had whisky in their possession and had opportunity to add it to the cider.—People v. Emmons, 178 Mich. 126.

¶ 878. On a showing that a certain kind of cutter was seen near the place of the larceny charged, and an offer by the defendant of evidence tending to show that he did not own such a cutter, it is within the discretion of the court to allow the prosecution to show, on rebuttal, that defendant did have and use a cutter like the one seen near that place.—People v. Maunausau, 60 Mich. 15.

¶ 879. A theft was committed by night. The thief was arrested on the spot, and another man suspected of planning the theft was arrested immediately afterward in the near neighborhood. Held, that upon the latter's trial he could introduce rebutting evidence that he was in the habit of frequenting that neighborhood day and night.—Saunders v. People, 38 Mich. 218.

¶ 880. Where a sheriff, a witness on a trial for larceny of a cow, was sworn to show where and how he located the skull of a cow, claimed to be that of the stolen cow, and to establish the custody of the skull from the time it was exhibited to the witnesses until the time it was produced in court, the court properly refused to permit the cross-examination of the sheriff as to whether he had associated with him a mind reader in his efforts to detect or apprehend the offender.—People v. Eagle, 189 Mich. 404.

¶ 881. The girl alleged to have been raped, having stated that she found blood on her garments after the act, may be asked whether before this time she had experienced her menses.—People v. Flynn, 96 Mich. 276.

¶ 882. On a prosecution for statutory rape on a ten-year-old girl whose parents were divorced and remarried, she living with her mother then married to accused, the defense being that the charge was instigated by the father's second wife to embarrass the girl's mother in prosecuting an application for further alimony, the defendant is entitled to show the prior understanding of the child's father and mother as to alimony which understanding was about to expire.—People v. Parker, 166 Mich. 587.

¶ 883. Where in a criminal prosecution for taking indecent liberties with a female child in his bedroom the respondent testified that it was because of his sickness that the presence of the child was required in his bedroom, and he had testified fully as to his physical condition, it was not error to exclude his evidence as to the cause of his illness.—People v. Harris, 144 Mich. 12.

¶ 884. In a prosecution for forgery, evidence is admissible to show whether the person accused, whose signature is the subject of comparison with the alleged forgery, was drunk or sober at the time it was made.—People v. Parker, 67 Mich. 222.

§ 183. ——Of defendant's unsworn statement.

¶ 885. After a defendant has made his statement the prosecution may give evidence within the proper limits of rebutting testimony to contradict it.—Burden v. People, 26 Mich. 162.

2. Best and secondary evidence.

§ 184. In general; what constitutes best and secondary.

Best evidence of ordinances, foreign laws, judicial proceedings, and private writings, see post §§ 185-187.

Occasions for and admissibility of secondary evidence, see post §§ 188-190.

Notice to produce and foundation proofs for secondary, see post §§ 191, 192.

Competency and sufficiency of secondary proofs, see post §§ 193, 194.

Absence of degrees in secondary evidence, see post § 194.

Irrelevancy of opinion as to population, necessity of proof of actual count, see post ¶ 919.

Best and secondary rule applied in civil cases, see Evidence § 137 et seq.

¶ 886. As a court must have judicial knowledge of the position and action of those who act as its officers, no better evidence of their official character is needed than proof that they openly act in court in such capacity; this is so held in a trial for perjury where it appears that the oath was administered by one acting as deputy clerk.—Keator v. People, 32 Mich. 484.

¶ 887. Eyewitnesses may testify to a marriage; their testimony is in most cases more direct and reliable than documentary evidence, which has never been regarded in law as the best.—People v. Perriman, 72 Mich. 184.

¶ 888. A deputy county treasurer may testify orally that a liquor tax has not been paid; such testimony cannot be objected to as not being the best evidence of nonpayment, for the county treasurer is not required to keep a record of those who pay, and the absence of defendant's name from the monthly report made to the county clerk is only presumptive evidence of nonpayment.—People v. Paquin, 74 Mich. 34.

§ 185. Statutes and ordinances.

¶ 889. The statute laws of other states must be proved by copies authenticated in some mode recognized by law.—People v. Lambert, 5 Mich. 349.

¶ 890. Foreign statutes should, when possible, be proved as provided for in the state laws and the acts of congress rather than by the testimony of a lawyer who has practiced within the jurisdiction where they are in force.—Kopke v. People, 43 Mich. 41.

§ 186. Judicial proceedings and writings.

Competency of record as document, see post § 287.

Propriety of secondary proofs where originals are lost, see post § 190.

¶ 891. The deposition of a respondent taken on his preliminary examination, and not claimed not to contain all of his testimony, is the best evidence of what he testified to, and, if in court, is the only admissible evidence of that fact.—People v. Hinchman, 75 Mich. 587.

¶ 892. A former conviction of a defendant on a criminal trial cannot be proved by parol. —People v. Burke, 157 Mich. 108.

§ 187. Private writings and documents.

Competency of writing as document, see post § 296.

¶ 893. On the trial of a respondent for forgery of a discharge of a mortgage, the original instrument is the best evidence, and ought, if possible, to be produced.—People v. Swetland, 77 Mich. 53.

¶ 894. A witness who testifies to having delivered certain goods, together with the shipping bills, to the respondent, cannot be permitted to state where the goods were billed from. The bills are the best evidence. —People v. O'Neill, 107 Mich. 556.

§ 188. Admissibility of and occasions for secondary evidence.

Records and writings out of reach of process, see post § 189.

Lost and destroyed writings, see post § 190.

Admission of secondary cured by later admission of primary, see post § 553.

Sufficiency of parol evidence that writ existed where killing occurred in attempt to execute it, see Homicide ¶ 213a.

Rule in civil cases, see Evidence § 137 et seq.

¶ 895. Oral statements of the defendant as to the value of goods insured, made to the agent of the insurance company, are not admissible in evidence upon defendant's trial for attempt to set fire to the insured goods, where the written application for insurance contains a statement as to the value of the goods, and is offered in evidence or is present in court 215.

¶ 896. A witne or not he has ma written document to be resorted to Lightfoot v. Peop

¶ 897. Seconda entries on the blo is no question necessity for proo v. Hurst, 41 Mic

§ 189. ——Public jurisdicti

¶ 898. Parol e prove a public simply that the d office and canno Lambert, 5 Mich

¶ 898a. Where for selling intoxi ing paid the rec the internal rev competent for th showing that the produced, where itself from its us work an inconver v. Lalonde, 171 M

¶ 899. Parol show the nature is without the ju forts having been v. Seaman, 107 M

¶ 900. On pr soliciting insuran essary to introdu application for i possession of the jurisdiction of th 50 Mich. 239.

§ 190. ——Lost o ings.

Proofs of loss § 192.

Admissibility in parol proof dence ¶ 683.

¶ 901. Seconda tries on the files sible if the loss counted for.—Pe

¶ 902. Parol p papers showing is admissible in v. Coffman, 59 M

¶ 903. Parol t telegrams is adm the original teleg the company lo v. Hammond, 13

¶ 904. Parol testimony of the contents of a telegram purporting to be in reply to one sent, is admissible without direct proof showing by whom sent, where it appears that the original has been destroyed.—People v. Hammond, 132 Mich. 422.

§ 191. Necessity and sufficiency of notice to produce.

In civil cases, see Evidence § 146.

¶ 905. When an alleged forged instrument is last shown in the hands of the person accused of forging or uttering it, secondary evidence may be given of its contents without notice to the accused to produce it; but otherwise where the evidence that such instrument was last in respondent's hands is doubtful.—People v. Swetland, 77 Mich. 53.

¶ 906. Where, on the trial of a criminal case, respondent's attorney states that he will not insist upon a written notice to produce a paper claimed to have been left with respondent, and which the people desire to introduce in evidence, and, on the following morning, says that he is unable to find any such paper, parol evidence of its contents is admissible.—People v. Pope, 108 Mich. 361.

§ 192. Foundation proof of loss, destruction or inaccessibility.

Loss, destruction or inaccessibility as reason for secondary proof, see ante §§ 188-190.
Parol proof of lost commitment to afford foundation for information, see ante ¶ 22.
Order of proofs of foundation facts and of evidence founded thereon, see post § 359.

¶ 907. A witness who has sufficiently explained his failure to preserve a document may properly be allowed to state its contents.—People v. Sharp, 53 Mich. 523.

¶ 908. A witness who testifies that he has made copies of certain letters but has lost or destroyed the copies, and that he cannot remember their whole substance but does remember a part, may be permitted to give their contents as far as he can do so. But his inability to remember the whole is a proper subject on which to comment to the jury.—People v. McKinney, 49 Mich. 334.

¶ 909. Proof that a letter had been intrusted to the prosecuting attorney and that he had looked for it where he believed he had reason to expect to find it sufficiently establishes the loss of the letter to admit parol evidence of its contents.—Stewart v. People, 23 Mich. 63.

¶ 910. Where books had disappeared under suspicious circumstances and all the testimony as to the search therefor is that of a witness who says he could not find them, but had made no inquiry for them, their loss is not sufficiently proved to admit parol evidence of their contents.—People v. Lange, 90 Mich. 454.

¶ 911. In a prosecution for official neglect and corrupt conduct in fraudulently altering the figures in a tabulated sheet containing the votes cast for and against a certain constitutional amendment, the testimony traced the book in which said tabulated sheet had been placed to a room in a hotel where it had been left temporarily by the legal custodian, and clearly showed that the sheet had been taken from said book in said room by some unknown person, and had not since been seen by the officer in whose custody it had up to that time been, and who was charged by law with its custody. Held that an objection to the admission of testimony as to the contents of said tabulated sheet, on the ground that it was secondary evidence, is without force.—People v. Clarke, 105 Mich. 169.

§ 193. Competency and sufficiency of secondary proofs.

¶ 912. Where it is sought, for purposes of impeachment, to introduce a long transcript of the stenographer's notes of testimony given in another court, and it appears that they were taken by different reporters and that one has transcribed the other's work, but that the transcript has not been compared with the original, there is no error in excluding the transcript from evidence, even though the reporter testifies that his own notes are literally correct, and that he knows that his transcript of the other's is an absolutely correct copy.—People v. McKinney, 49 Mich. 334.

§ 194. Degrees in secondary evidence.

¶ 913. There are no degrees in parol or in secondary evidence.—Knowles v. People, 15 Mich. 408; and see also Eslow v. Mitchell, 26 Mich. 500.

3. Parol or extrinsic evidence to vary or show terms of writings.

§ 195. In general.

[Note. The rule, that the parties to a writing designed to afford a memorial of what they have agreed or done cannot vary or contradict its terms by oral evidence that other terms were intended, is a rule of civil evidence; since in a prosecution the state is not a party to the writing and is not bound by it. See the civil cases treated in Evidence, V. The rule excluding oral evidence because it is secondary is not the "parol evidence" rule as here understood. It is treated ante § 184 et seq.]

Parol evidence as secondary evidence, see ante §§ 184-194.

¶ 914. On a prosecution of a cashier for embezzlement from his bank under Comp. L. 1897, § 11562, it having been accomplished by means of a paper directing payment of a sum signed by his initials and similar to but not amounting to a check, it is proper to receive extrinsic evidence that the paper was a mere memorandum and to show the circumstances attending its execution; and even had it been a check the accomplished object of it might have been shown, since the prosecution is not a suit between private parties based on the check.—People v. Messer, 148 Mich. 168.

4. Conclusions and nonexpert opinions.

§ 196. In general; what constitute conclusions and facts.

In civil cases, see Evidence, VI, A.
Dying declarations amounting to conclusions, admissibility, see Homicide ¶ 183.

¶ 915. The question whether a certain location is the place of business of another is a question of fact, and a statement of fact which may be made affirmatively by a witness. Although such a statement may be to a certain extent an inference from facts, counsel for the opposing side is not in a position to object to its admission unless he can show, on cross-examination, a want of sufficient knowledge on which to base the statement.—People v. Boos, 155 Mich. 407.

¶ 916. Where in a prosecution for assault with intent to kill, respondent's witness was asked how the complaining witness looked and acted, an answer that "It seemed that he was not very well pleased, that he was mad and angry," was incompetent, and was properly stricken out.—People v. Meert, 157 Mich. 93.

¶ 917. Where a witness is being questioned concerning identity he may be asked if there is any doubt in his mind and such question is not objectionable as evoking a conclusion of the witness at a time after that in question.—People v. Wallin, 55 Mich. 497.

§ 197. Relevancy and materiality of opinion or belief.

¶ 918. Where in a trial for murder a witness for the prosecution had testified that he saw deceased go with a gun towards the place of the killing, that he told him not to take his gun, and that when he heard the shot fired he stood up in his wagon to look, it was proper to refuse to allow him to be asked on cross-examination if he did not think at the time that deceased had shot respondent. What he thought is immaterial.—People v. Macard, 73 Mich. 15.

¶ 919. Where the defense in a prosecution for keeping a saloon open after hours seeks to establish that the hour was extended as the saloon was located in a township having a population not less than 1,000, as provided by Pub. Acts 1909, Act 291, as amended by Pub. Acts 1911, Act 170, How. 2nd Ed., § 5056, opinion evidence as to the population is inadmissibl an actual co People v. Wo

§ 198. Questio
clusi

One's own t
§ 199.
Ultimate issu Sufficiency of
as to san Inadmissibilit opinion o Questions for et seq.

¶ 920. The for nonexper sidered.—Eva

¶ 921. It i experts whet ists in a par
ple, 12 Mich.

¶ 922. Mor require the a ley, 38 Mich.

¶ 923. In erroneous to to the state saying that because he t better chance
People v. Do

§ 199. ——O
tent

Testimony o
post ¶ 9

¶ 924. The tency of a w erns in rape of a statuto
ness testifyi bath, 141 Mi

§ 200. ——U

Expert opini
§ 205.

¶ 925. Wh fully removi office, the ev
he was the
that he had that he had error to per his opinion had any in papers, and forgery agai
the jury to
Mich. 49.

¶ 926. In error to pe had become satisfied that the girl had been raped by respondent.—People v. Row, 135 Mich. 505.

§ 201. Knowledge or observation as basis for opinion.

Experiments and demonstrations to acquire knowledge and opinion, see post § 202.

Objection to opinion or cross-examination to impair it as proper mode of attack on sufficiency of observation, see post ¶ 1638.

¶ 927. What is required to show a "sufficient opportunity" to judge of sanity depends upon circumstances which may properly move the judicial discretion, and when, taken as a whole, they move the judicial discretion of the trial judge, by apprising him that the witness may, upon reasonable grounds, believe in respondent's competency, the opinion may be given.—People v. Borgetto, 99 Mich. 336.

¶ 928. A witness who is shown to have a sufficient acquaintance with a respondent, under circumstances that give a reasonable opportunity for judging, may testify that he saw nothing unusual or abnormal, or to indicate insanity.—People v. Borgetto, 99 Mich. 336.

¶ 929. A woman attending another woman who died in an alleged attempt at abortion may not give her opinion as to what ailed the deceased without proof of minute examination of the victim's person and the facts on which the opinion is based or proof of knowledge or experience in such matters.—People v. Olmstead, 30 Mich. 431.

¶ 930. The opinions of witnesses as to what is undue and unnatural excitement in time of battle cannot generally afford safe grounds for conclusions as to the person's mental condition years afterwards, unless it appears that the excitement completely mastered the intellect and deprived the person of accountability.—People v. Garbutt, 17 Mich. 9.

¶ 931. The right to express an opinion as to the sanity or insanity of a defendant in a criminal case is not confined to experts; but mere acquaintance with the person is not sufficient; the witness must show facts and circumstances which the court can say show the insane condition and when that is done the witness may express his opinion and it is for the jury to say how much weight should attach to it.—People v. Casey, 124 Mich. 279.

§ 202. ——Experiments made after the fact.

Experience sufficient to qualify expert, see post § 207 et seq.

¶ 932. Where respondent in a prosecution for murder alleges that his rifle fell from a stump and was discharged, killing deceased, it is not error to refuse to allow a witness to give his opinion as to experiments made with a double barreled shotgun which differs in length and construction from respondent's rifle.—People v. Auerbach, 176 Mich. 23.

5. Expert opinions.

§ 203. In general; proper subjects and scope.

Relevancy and materiality of the opinion to the issues, see post § 204.

Opinion on the ultimate issues in the case, see post § 205.

Opinion on cause of death and pathological and physiological questions, see post § 206.

Persons qualified as experts and proofs of qualifications, see post §§ 207-212.

Basis for opinion and form of questions, see post §§ 213-215.

Form of opinion, see post § 216.

Opinion as to qualifications of other experts, see also post ¶ 967.

Subjects for nonexperts, see ante § 198.

Competency of nonexpert opinion on sanity, see ante § 201.

Weight and credibility of opinions, see post § 312.

Charges on weighing and crediting expert testimony, see post § 436.

Harmless errors and errors cured in admitting or excluding opinions or examining witnesses, see post XV.

¶ 933. Expert testimony is legally admissible on the ground, only, that ordinary jurymen have no such special knowledge as will enable them to understand the facts shown, without interpretation.—People v. Hall, 48 Mich. 482.

¶ 934. It seems that expert testimony should be confined to scientific questions, and not deal with matters that are within the scope of common knowledge.—People v. Sessions, 58 Mich. 594.

¶ 935. Testimony of detectives as to whether a robbery could be committed as charged is properly excluded; the subject is not proper for experts. Theories of criminal possibilities should not be admitted to contradict facts sworn to by witnesses as within their knowledge.—People v. Morrigan, 29 Mich. 4.

¶ 936. Expert evidence is allowable only to enable the jury to understand the significance of facts which have been shown by testimony that needs scientific or peculiar explanation by those who comprehend it themselves apart from their mere knowledge of the statements of books. It cannot include mere hearsay statements of the written or spoken opinions of others whom the jury have no means of examining.—People v. Millard, 53 Mich. 63.

§ 204. Relevancy and materiality of opinion.

Proper subjects for opinions, see ante § 203, post §§ 205, 206.

Relevancy and competency of chemical analysis made after exhuming corpse, see ante ¶ 730.
Admissibility of expert testimony as to character of animal tissue found near scene of killing, see Homicide ¶ 122.
Medical evidence to prove abortion as corpus delicti of manslaughter, see Homicide § 47.

¶ 937. Where respondent in a prosecution for the forgery of a deed that purports to have been made by a woman since deceased has control of the deed and refuses to produce it until he makes his defense, but then produces with it a joint deed that is not properly in the case, but also purports to be signed by decedent and respondent together, it is proper for the prosecution to ask whether all the signatures to both deeds were written by the same person and were in respondent's handwriting, and whether decedent's alleged signature was in a woman's handwriting. It would even be justifiable for the prosecution to take the ground that the joint deed was also forged.—People v. Van Alstine, 57 Mich. 69.

§ 205. Opinion on ultimate facts of case.

Nonexpert opinions on ultimate facts in case, see ante § 200.
Asking directly as to causes instead of asking what might have caused a condition, see post ¶ 969.

¶ 938. The testimony of expert witnesses is dispensed with whenever the point is reached at which the tribunal is being told that which it is itself entirely equipped to determine without the witness' aid.—People v. Fritch, 170 Mich. 258.

¶ 939. In a criminal prosecution against a physician for causing death by abortion, it is improper to permit a medical expert to give as his opinion, in answer to a hypothetical question, that a criminal operation was performed, since it is the duty and province of the court, not that of expert witnesses, to advise the jury concerning the facts necessary to establish the crime.—People v. Fritch, 170 Mich. 258.

§ 206. Cause of death and pathological and physiological questions.

Qualifications of experts, see post § 208.

¶ 940. A medical expert testifying as to the cause of the death, in an action for manslaughter in a case of fatal abortion, who was present at the coroner's inquest and who made a post-mortem examination of the body, may be asked the question, "What, in your opinion, was the cause of the shock?" where he has testified that in his opinion death was caused by shock to the nervous system.—People v. Sessions, 58 Mich. 594.

¶ 941. In a prosecution for murder by means of arsenic it was held not error to permit expert witn not deceased died —People v. MacGre

¶ 942. On a pros a person whose boc with a gash in it, sician may be aske of his examinatio dence in the case, was inflicted bef whether the victim the effects of a pre other facts covered by evidence.—Peop ¶ 943. In a pros sician, upon a hyp condition of the b the death and also ination a few days in his opinion ca whether any disea those conditions.— 148.

¶ 944. Medical show the improbab an act of seducti Mich. 112.

¶ 945. In a pro held that a questic a physician, as to of age who had b back and a doubl consummate an with a girl 14 yea should have been People v. Coston,

§ 207. Persons co

On particular su
post §§ 208-21
Proofs of compete
Competency as la
Mode of objectior
petency, see p
In civil cases, see

¶ 946. One is n expert unless he ion formed from a study of the su thereon.—People ¶ 947. Firing a clothes does not expert as to the clothing at a cert calibre of the w the charge need witness should k at greater or l People, 38 Mich.

¶ 948. One wh a seal-skin cloak one winter, and priced such artic to its value.—Pri

§ 208. ——On bodily conditions, causes and effects.

Subjects proper for opinions, see ante § 206.

¶ 949. An undertaker is not necessarily an expert on physiological questions, and, unless he shows special knowledge entitling him to give an opinion, can only testify to specific facts.—People v. Millard, 53 Mich. 63.

¶ 950. Experts in chemistry are not necessarily experts in medicine, nor vice versa.—People v. Millard, 53 Mich. 63.

¶ 951. A practicing physician with a medical degree taken by study in course who has given the subject of poisons careful and discriminating study by reading and listening to lectures of instructors who have made a specialty of the subject, so that his study has resulted in the formation of a definite opinion, may express his opinion as to whether a given case is one of poisoning or not, although he has never had any actual experience in poisoning cases.—People v. Thacker, 108 Mich. 652.

§ 209. ——On agricultural, horticultural and veterinary questions.

¶ 952. A farmer of average intelligence who has resided for years in an apple-growing region, and who shows familiarity with the popular terms applied to cider in its process of aging, held competent to testify as to whether certain cider was fermented or not.—People v. Emmons, 178 Mich. 126.

¶ 953. In a prosecution under How. St. § 9391, for cruelly mutilating a horse by splitting his ear and otherwise cutting him with a knife where the question was whether a horse had the "blind staggers," a witness who saw the horse while suffering from an attack claimed to be of such disease, and who testifies that he has had considerable experience with horses and has seen several which had said disease, and is familiar with the symptoms, is competent to give an opinion upon such question.—People v. Bane, 88 Mich. 453.

¶ 954. A person accused of an assault with intent to kill a man on horseback was said to have struck a downward blow with a knife, cutting the man's clothes, wounding the horse, and cutting the hair off square across the wound. A witness who had farmed for seven years, during which he had doctored horses and performed surgical operations on them, and who claimed to have had experience in cutting live horse flesh and the hair on the horse, was asked whether the hair could be cut clean the full length of the wound. Held, that the question was properly ruled out, as the witness had not shown that he ever tried to cut hair in the way suggested; and it was not shown and was not supposable that in a surgical operation it would be important so to cut it.—People v. Niles, 44 Mich. 606.

§ 210. ——On foreign laws.

¶ 955. A minister of the gospel residing in Pennsylvania, authorized by statute to perform the marriage ceremony, and required as such to observe certain forms therein prescribed, is a competent witness to identify the book in which said statute is published, and to show the common acceptance of the publication as authority in the home courts.—People v. McQuaid, 85 Mich. 123.

¶ 956. One who had been a peace officer in another state, and who did not swear to any general knowledge of the laws of that state, but said he had, on account of a difficulty with his wife, looked into those laws, was held incompetent to testify what the written laws of that state were on the subject of marriage.—People v. Lambert, 5 Mich. 349.

§ 211. ——Preliminary proofs of competency.

Order of proof of competency and of opinion, see post § 360.

¶ 957. In a prosecution for violating a local option law by selling fermented cider, it is not error for the court to require a witness to first show his experience and observation before testifying as an expert as to whether or not cider put in the kind of bottle in evidence, would grow harder from day to day.—People v. Kinney, 124 Mich. 486.

§ 212. ——Competency as question for court.

¶ 958. The question of the competency of an expert witness is for the court and not for the jury.—People v. McQuaid, 85 Mich. 123.

¶ 959. It is the province of the court to determine the qualifications of nonprofessional witnesses to express an opinion.—People v. Kinney, 124 Mich. 486.

§ 213. Proper basis for expert opinions.

Basis of experts' opinions and form of questions calling for opinions in civil cases, see Evidence, VI, B, 2.

¶ 960. Expert testimony is not competent that is based on unsupported assumptions of fact; or upon evidence so lacking in certainty that the jury cannot see the exact basis of fact for the opinion called for; or upon facts not submitted to the expert, but taken by him from what he has himself heard on the trial.—People v. Millard, 53 Mich. 63.

¶ 961. Experts cannot be examined upon theories that are contrary to the uncontradicted facts of the case.—People v. Hall, 48 Mich. 482.

¶ 962. An expert cannot state that he has read or heard the testimony of a witness or witnesses and then give his opinion upon such testimony, without stating the particular points of the evidence upon which he rests his conclusion.—People v. Aiken, 66 Mich. 460.

¶ 963. A physician who has testified that he examined a body found in the water for the purpose of ascertaining the cause of death, but that he could not make a very extended examination owing to the offensive condition of the corpse, may give his opinion as to how the death occurred, whether by drowning or by other means.—People v. Barker, 60 Mich. 277.

¶ 964. Physicians who held a post-mortem examination of the body, and attended the coroner's inquest, were competent to testify as experts as to the cause of the death, in an action for manslaughter in a case of fatal abortion, because of their standing as persons learned in medical science.—People v. Sessions, 58 Mich. 594.

¶ 965. It was error to permit a witness to answer the question whether death from shock would be more likely to occur to persons fearing an injury, where such witness had testified as an expert in a criminal action, that death might be produced by fright and dread of sudden peril, there being no testimony on which to base such question.—People v. Sessions, 58 Mich. 594.

¶ 966. In a murder trial where insanity is set up as a defense, it is proper to refuse the expert opinion of a physician based in part on what he understands another physician has testified.—People v. Bowen, 165 Mich. 231.

¶ 967. While one expert may testify from knowledge as to the qualifications and authority of another expert, his opinion in regard thereto, based upon general reputation, is inadmissible.—People v. Holmes, 111 Mich. 364.

¶ 968. Testimony tending to prove the laws of a foreign country is improperly admitted where the means of knowledge of the witness are not shown.—People v. Loomis, 106 Mich. 250.

§ 214. Form and propriety of questions.

Form and construction of opinion, see post § 216.

In civil cases, see Evidence, § 298 et seq.

¶ 969. What caused a wound, testified to in a prosecution for murder, is an improper question to put to an expert, though it would be proper to ask him what might have caused it. The fact is for the jury, and is not mere matter of opinion.—People v. Hare, 57 Mich. 505.

¶ 970. In a prosecution for murder a physician, upon a hypothetical statement of the condition of the t

the death and als
ination a few days
in his opinion ca
whether any disea those conditions.—
148.

¶ 971. In a pr
§ 9391 for cruelly
ting him with a k
whether a horse l veterinary surgeo formed as to the
be asked whether disease named.—I 453.

§ 215. ——Of hyp
See also ante ¶ 94
Mode of objecting
¶ 1639.

¶ 972. A hypot an expert witnes criminal case need in the case, but m adduced by the pr
song, 116 Mich. 55

¶ 973. A hypotl medical expert as criminal action i therein stated, if able the witness t subject queried af
Mich. 594.

¶ 974. The hyp
ing that Mrs. Pe old, in a fair cor pregnant from fou
she was left by o'clock alive and he found her abou
wards, in her bed
under her head, arms straight at l and her clothes sti and that from th
it was discovered
detached, about t
tion lacerated, an
the other vital org found—what in y cause of death in asked a medical e slaughter in a ca
the testimony of post-mortem exan ranted the assum matter of the con
of the deceased.—
594.

¶ 975. In a pos important and un an autopsy and i death, as well as ness, should be in which the experts give their opinions as to the cause of death.—People v. Vanderhoof, 71 Mich. 158, per Morse, J., and Sherwood, C. J., two others concurring in the result.

¶ 976. In a criminal prosecution against a physician for causing death by abortion, a hypothetical question assumed that the body of the deceased had been dismembered in the office of the respondent and carried therefrom in an automobile; that it was placed in sacks with bricks and thrown into the stream; that the deceased had taken cotton root, possessed a catheter, and had an appointment with respondent about an operation. Held, it was error prejudical to respondent to permit an answer to such a question.—People v. Fritch, 170 Mich. 258.

¶ 977. In a prosecution for assaulting a female under sixteen years of age, it is improper to allow the prosecutor to put a hypothetical question to a physician called as an expert, as to whether one or two acts of intercourse three or four years prior to the occasion in question would account for the complainant's condition immediately after the alleged act of defendant, where in framing such hypothetical question the testimony of the complaining witness that she had had numerous acts of intercourse with a boy and with her stepfather prior to the time in question, was overlooked.—People v. Parker, 166 Mich. 587.

¶ 978. Long hypothetical questions reciting a great number of facts so presented as to require the witness to determine questions that should be left to the jury, and so long that neither jury nor witness can remember and take account of all the elements presented, are very objectionable.—People v. Brown, 53 Mich. 531.

¶ 979. In a murder trial where insanity is set up as a defense, a hypothetical question addressed to a physician as to his opinion of defendant's sanity is properly excluded where it covers more than eight pages and where defendant's attorney apparently attempts to set up as facts to be assumed the testimony as defendant's counsel understood it, and not as it really existed at the trial.—People v. Bowen, 165 Mich. 231.

§ 216. Form, responsiveness and construction of opinion.

¶ 980. An expert cannot state that he has read or heard the testimony of a witness or witnesses and then have his opinion upon such testimony, without stating the particular points of the evidence upon which he rests his conclusion.—People v. Aikin, 66 Mich. 460.

6. Hearsay and declarations out of court and res gestæ.

§ 217. In general; what is hearsay.

Proof of statements or acts to show mental state or attitude of declarant, see post §§ 218-221.
Former testimony by accused, see post § 222.
Form of the declaration, letters and writings, see post § 223.
Acts and associations as implied declaratiops or admissions, see post § 224.
Self-serving acts and declarations, see post § 225.
Declarations and acts of third persons, see post §§ 226-229.
Declarations and acts of coconspirators, see post §§ 230, 231.
Declarations and acts of victim or antagonist, see post §§ 232-235.
Former testimony by witnesses other than accused, see post §§ 236, 237.
Foundation proofs for admission of declarations, see post § 238.
Admissibility of attendant circumstances, time or place, see post § 239.
Rebuttal and explanation of declarations, see post § 240.
Res gestæ acts and declarations, see post §§ 241-246.
Admissive declarations and confessions, see post § 247 et seq.
Testimony as to appearance, manner and actions as conclusion, see ante § 196.
Testimony as to one's own age as a conclusion, see ante § 199.
Declarants and witnesses distinguished with respect to indorsing names on information, see ante ¶ 68.
Harmless errors and errors in admission or rejection cured by other matters, see post XV.
Hearsay rule and precedents in civil cases, see Evidence, VII.
Inadmissibility of hearsay to impeach witness, see Witnesses, VI, D.

¶ 981. Hearsay testimony is that kind of evidence which does not derive its credibility solely from the credit due to the witness himself but rests also in part on the veracity and competency of some other person.—People v. Albers, 137 Mich. 678.

¶ 982. Statements of fact given by a third person to a witness are pure hearsay and inadmissible in evidence.—Hamilton v. People, 29 Mich. 173.

¶ 983. Testimony of a physician on a trial for murder, that he had learned of improper treatment of deceased after the shooting, is inadmissible because hearsay where it appeared that he had learned of it not from observation but from information.—People v. Farrell, 137 Mich. 127.

¶ 984. Testimony of a witness in a prosecution for polygamy, based upon what the judge of probate had told him relative to the marriage, is inadmissible to establish the fact of marriage, because hearsay.—People v. Goodrode, 132 Mich. 542.

¶ 985. Where it appears that a witness who testifies to the cohabitation of certain parties as man and wife has not seen the rosecution for rape, the tes-other as to what her three-witnessed the alleged crime is incompetent.—People v.

22.

of the wife of a cocon-y prosecution, that when me at a certain time he money and that on his ave $700, was not hear-ble as a fact consistent had received $1,000 a eople v. McGarry, 136

a witness in a prosr as to what a little on coming from the e on the day of the
as hearsay; since bility of which is se, should ever be y.—People v. Ses-

ordinarily compe-ge, it was held prosecution for age where she her and had no
m relatives or ve her opinion rsons elicited
. Colbath, 141

resented by coroner as quest, that at the subnger" and t appear-t accused as taken tionable was one ground ccused puting nt in ace if quest and ngly

he nd ne
l, o

moment there was apparently a concurrence of opinion as to the identity of the person observed, and showing also that at the time each witness announced the identity of the person observed.—People v. Lahnala, 193 Mich. 144.

¶ 999. On the trial of a respondent for uttering a forged discharge of a mortgage, it was improper to receive in evidence the original mortgage and the accompanying notes showing interest payments thereon subsequent to the date of such discharge, and to permit the testimony of the mortgagee that he received these payments of interest from a third person in whose office such notes and mortgage were kept, without putting such third person upon the stand; since such testimony as to the payment of interest was hearsay.—People v. Swetland, 77 Mich. 53.

¶ 1000. In a prosecution for perjury, based on testimony in a bribery case that V. had not sent accused to offer the bribe, testimony of S. that he had requested V. to see accused in relation to the matter, is incompetent even though it does corroborate V.'s testimony, since its value rests in part on V.'s veracity in testifying that he did so see accused, and is therefore hearsay.—People v. Albers, 137 Mich. 678.

§ 218. Admissibility to show mental state of declarant.

To show knowledge, intent or motive, see post § 219.
Threats and ill feeling, see post § 220.
To show guilty consciousness, see post § 221.
Former testimony as admissible declaration, see post § 222.
Letters and writings as declarations, see post § 223.
Admissibility of evidence of other crimes and offenses to show system, plan, knowledge, or intent, see ante § 166.
Declaration of third persons to affect hearer with knowledge or to show mental effect on hearer, see post §§ 227, 228.
Declarations and statements of victim of rape or indecent assault, see post §§ 233, 244.
In civil cases, see Evidence § 329 et seq.

¶ 1001. On a trial for murder evidence was given by the prosecution which indicated strong mental agitation and excitement on the part of the prisoner, with an attempt to conceal it, near the supposed time of the murder. Held competent for the prisoner to prove the conversation had by him at the time, as bearing upon the question of his mental agitation and excitement, and tending to disprove the excitement, or to show its nature and extent.—Dillin v. People, 8 Mich. 357.

¶ 1002. In a murder trial for killing his wife, it is reversible error not to allow defendant to introduce in evidence a conversation in the presence of a third person, in which the wife showed him a postal card from another man, and to refuse to allow him to show the effect produced on his own countenance.—People v. Bowen, 165 Mich. 231.

§ 219. ——To show knowledge, intent or motive.

Threats and ill feeling as bearing on motive, see post § 220.
Declarative writings evidencing motive or intent, see post § 223.
Res gestæ acts and declarations, see post § 241 et seq.
Admissibility of acts to show guilty foreknowledge, see ante ¶ 847.

¶ 1003. Proof of previous conversations with respondent showing a desire to procure the burning of property by other persons is admissible to show a purpose of burning, and as bearing on the probabilities of their complicity in the fire actually set.—Meister v. People, 31 Mich. 99.

¶ 1004. Statements made and language used by a respondent charged with murdering his infant children which tend to show his motives and inducements in putting them away are competent.—People v. Foley, 64 Mich. 148.

¶ 1005. Where a conspiracy to defraud involves the personation of defendant by wearing his clothes, it is admissible to show that the defendant had proposed the scheme to a person not named in the information, but that it had actually been carried out by the confederate named.—People v. Arnold, 46 Mich. 268.

¶ 1006. In a prosecution for manslaughter in performing an abortion, where a witness testified to show criminal intent that accused had performed an abortion on her also, it was proper to allow her to testify that in the course of treating her accused proposed to her that she get what money she could from the man and divide with accused, and also that accused proposed to charge her less if she would assent to sexual intercourse with him.—People v. Hodge, 141 Mich. 312.

¶ 1007. In a prosecution for murder, evidence that about two weeks before the murder respondent said that he must hustle up to get some money, that he was going to get married, is admissible in connection with evidence that he supposed deceased to have money at the time of the killing having asserted such fact at the time.—People v. Wolf, 95 Mich. 625.

¶ 1008. In a prosecution for perjury alleged to have been committed on the trial of respondent's brother for murder, testimony that respondent offered money to witnesses to prevent them from testifying upon the former trial, and that he proposed to secrete them to avoid service of subpœna, is admissible to show corrupt motive and intent.—People v. Macard, 109 Mich. 623.

§ 220. ——Threats and ill feeling.

Threats as evidence in homicide cases, see Homicide § 48.

¶ 1009. In a prosecution for arson defendant's animosity to the owner of the property and threats made by him two years before against such owner may be shown.—People v. Eaton, 59 Mich. 559.

¶ 1010. In an arson case, where animosity against an insurance company which had insured the barn in question, was claimed to have been the motive for the crime, testimony of a witness for the prosecution amounting to a mere impression that he had a conversation with respondent about changing his insurance from the old company to a new one, does not rise to the dignity of evidence and should be excluded.—People v. Gotshall, 123 Mich. 474.

¶ 1011. Bad feeling between the parties does not bear on guilt of burglary where there are no recent threats or demonstrations tending that way.—People v. Bielfus, 59 Mich. 576.

¶ 1012. In a prosecution for malicious injury to a fence belonging to a church society, expressions indicating enmity, used by respondent against the minister or certain members, made at times when such persons were engaged in the business of the church, were competent on the question of malice.—People v. Ferguson, 119 Mich. 373.

¶ 1013. On a trial for murder it appeared that defendant, who had been drinking, threatened to knock down three men and kill one. That part of the threat relating to the knocking down was excluded. Held error; the threat as a whole tending to show braggadocio merely.—People v. Curtis, 52 Mich. 616.

¶ 1014. In a prosecution for threatening accusation of crime testimony relative to the arrest, at respondent's instance, of such other person for perjury, and the attempt on respondent's part to secure the execution of a deed by means of threats, is admissible as bearing upon respondent's intent.—People v. Whittemore, 102 Mich. 519.

§ 221. ——To show guilty consciousness.

¶ 1015. One of several persons accused of larceny showed some excitement while the boots of those accused were being measured to see if they corresponded to tracks found at the scene of the crime. Held, that on his prosecution this fact was inadmissible as bearing upon the question of his guilt, particularly when given by persons prepossessed against him; and People v. Wolcott,

¶ 1016. Proof th receiving property immediately after actions that he fe
sible as tending to People v. Pitcher,

¶ 1017. In a pr
story written by th
a close resemblanc
tion is admissible
Higgins, 127 Mich.

¶ 1018. In a pro intent to kill and is temporary insa intoxicating liquor duct and acts of t of his arrest is a consciousness of gu
Mich. 575.

§ 222. Former testi cused.

Former testimony
interest, see pc
Best evidence of davits, see ant
Admissibility of t mony, see post
Sufficiency of proo which perjury
¶ 1503.
Competency of im introducing st former trial a see Witnesses,

¶ 1019. The swo ant on his prelin charge of arson i he made contradic whereabouts on th
v. Eaton, 59 Mich.

¶ 1020. The pro are inadmissible u offered solely to testimony upon t
before the corone
Mich. 466.

¶ 1021. Respond
liminary examina evidence by the p —People v. Prague

¶ 1022. Previou
ant in relation t bribery case on t
witness in the tria competent, especi theory of the defe
People v. McGarry

¶ 1023. Where
Dr. B. has been and contends that he has had no preliminary examination, evidence taken on such examination is admissible to show that thereupon he gave Henry as his name.—People v. Beach, 93 Mich. 25.

¶ 1024. It is not error to permit the stenographer to read in full the testimony of one accused of perjury, as given at the trial upon which the crime is alleged to have been committed, where it all has a bearing, more or less remote, upon that part of his testimony which is the basis of the charge.—People v. Macard, 109 Mich. 623.

¶ 1025. In a prosecution for perjury alleged to have been committed upon a trial for burglary, it is proper, where the materiality of the testimony upon which the alleged perjury is based would not otherwise appear, to show by the jurors and the stenographer in the burglary case the nature of the defense there relied upon.—People v. Ostrander, 110 Mich. 60.

§ 223. Letters or other writings as declarations.

Writings as admissions or confessions, see post § 248.

Letters from third persons, see also post § 226 et seq.

Details of written narrative as indication of guilty knowledge, see ante ¶ 1017.

Preliminary proofs of relevancy, see also post ¶¶ 1131-1133.

¶ 1026. In a prosecution for bribing the warden of the state prison, a letter accompanying the bribe held admissible as part of the transaction although the signature thereto was not proved.—People v. Daily, 178 Mich. 354.

¶ 1027. It is error to prove the sale of a gun to a person by a record of the sale, where neither the sale nor the record was made by the witness.—People v. Lahnala, 193 Mich. 144.

¶ 1028. On the trial of a respondent for uttering a forged discharge of a mortgage, evidence of the execution of a mortgage upon part of the mortgaged premises a year after the date of the discharge, and of the presentation to the mortgagee of an abstract of title showing the discharge of the first mortgage, is competent as presenting a motive for the commission of the crime charged, and also tending to prove that the respondent knowingly uttered the forged discharge.—People v. Swetland, 77 Mich. 53.

¶ 1029. An unsigned paper in the handwriting of the accused purporting to set out and to describe the occurrence, and to dispose of the accused's property, is admissible in a prosecution for murder of her child, alleged to have been committed in conjunction with an attempted suicide.—People v. Quimby, 134 Mich. 625.

¶ 1030. In a prosecution against the supreme secretary of a mutual benefit society for obtaining money under false pretenses, in that he induced a person to become a member and to pay for insurance by falsely representing that the society had an indemnity reserve fund of $15,000, a circular signed by him, issued in the society's behalf, and reciting that the society had a large, increasing reserve fund is competent evidence against him.—People v. Shelters, 99 Mich. 333.

¶ 1031. Where, after certain property had been shipped to defendant, and before it had arrived at its destination, the prosecuting witness was shown a statement given by defendant to a bank, in which defendant's financial condition was stated, such statement may be submitted to the jury as tending to establish a false representation, where, in reliance thereon, the prosecuting witness neglected to stop the property in transit as he might have done.—People v. Andre, 153 Mich. 531.

¶ 1032. Where, in a prosecution for false pretenses in inducing the sale of certain property to defendant, defendant was charged to have made a false statement to a bank, which was not seen by the prosecuting witness until after the goods in question had been sold to defendant, such statement may be considered by the jury in determining the defendant's intention in making the false representation relied on by the prosecuting witness, and evidence as to the falsity of his statement is admissible.—People v. Andre, 153 Mich. 531.

¶ 1033. In a prosecution for false pretenses in misrepresenting financial condition, and thereby securing a sale of property, evidence as to a statement in bankruptcy proceedings, prepared by defendant's attorney for the purpose of securing a composition with creditors, is inadmissible, where the statement was prepared some time after the making of the alleged representations.—People v. Andre, 153 Mich. 531.

§ 224. Association and conduct with accomplices.

As res gestæ, see post § 241 et seq.

Conversations with and declarations by accomplices and third persons, see post § 226 et seq.

¶ 1034. A woman was prosecuted for killing her son-in-law with strychnine, and it was the theory of the prosecution that the victim's wife was accessory to the crime. Held, that it was not error to admit evidence that on the night after his death the two women slept together, and were heard whispering a long time after retiring.—People v. Bemis, 51 Mich. 422.

¶ 1035. On a trial for burglary it appeared that respondent and another, who had been convicted of the same crime, occupied a rented room together, both before and after the date of the crime, and were seen together on the evening thereof. Held, that evidence that they were seen together a week before was admissible.—People v. Burns, 67 Mich. 537.

§ 225. Self-serving acts and declarations.

See also post ¶ 1173.

Admissibility of self-serving direct testimony by accused, see ante ¶ 692.

Res gestæ declarations, see post § 241.

Res gestæ declarations accompanying possession, see post § 242.

Fabrication of exculpatory appearances as admission, see post § 251 et seq.

In civil cases, see Evidence, VII, D.

¶ 1036. Evidence that a person charged with larceny has previously attempted to purchase a chattel similar to that stolen has no tendency to disprove theft, and is not admissible for that purpose.—Foster v. People, 18 Mich. 266.

§ 226. Declarations, acts and conversations of third persons.

Admissibility as bearing on knowledge, information, reasoning, or mental state of hearer, see post §§ 227, 228.

Evidence of commission of other crimes by accomplices, see ante § 171.

Admissibility of accusatory statements by third persons, see post § 229.

Declarations of accomplices and coconspirators, see post § 230 et seq.

Complaints and statements by victims or antagonists, see post § 232 et seq.

Record made by third persons, see also ante ¶ 1027.

Res gestæ declarations, see post § 243 et seq.

Statements inculpating others as res gestæ, see post § 241, ¶ 1143.

Admissions by accomplices and privies of accused, see post § 262.

Mother's testimony of what her small child told her of a witnessed act, see also ante ¶ 993.

Testimony as to what child said of a killing, see also ante ¶ 995.

¶ 1037. While the admissions or declarations of an accused party are competent, the statements of another are purely hearsay, unless made under such circumstances, in the presence and hearing of the accused, that his acquiescence in such statements can be plainly inferred from his demeanor or conduct.—People v. O'Brien, 68 Mich. 468.

¶ 1038. In a prosecution for assault with intent to kill and murder, it is not error to refuse evidence offered by defendant of a conversation between the complaining witness and two of his own employees, taking place some time before the assault, where there is no offer to show that such conversation was brought to the knowledge of the respondent.—People v. Klise, 166 Mich. 1.

¶ 10
counse
ant c proper of a w made the cr

¶ 10 dence of def show to the that h goverr murde immat at the way.—

¶ 10 cused
the cr other at the behalf preser to sho attent on the 468.

¶ 10 fusal
by on posed of res respor acy h witne evider
Mich.

¶ 10 ent's persor find th were, such with arrest the c merel revers the id son c
v. Gil

¶ 10 anoth the v twitte broth
Fowle

¶ 10 memb
of the collec
ner s

leged to have been made that the note was still in process of collection, are not admissible on the ground of agency.—People v. McBride, 120 Mich. 166.

¶ 1046. In a prosecution for the larceny of certain railroad bonds, which respondent, as the people's evidence tended to show, had sent by express to a friend in another city, mailing instructions to deposit them in a safety-deposit vault, the friend testified that the package containing the bonds was received during his absence from the store where he was employed; that, upon his return, the parcel boy notified him of the receipt of the package, and witness told him to open it; that, upon the attention of the witness being called by the cashier to a letter which had been received for him, he recognized the handwriting, read the letter, and then told the boy not to open the package, but took it, and left the store. The testimony of the cashier and the parcel boy as to what occurred at that time agreed substantially with that of the witness. Held, that the testimony of the cashier and the boy related to what occurred on the receipt of the package, rather than to the conversation then had, and bore upon the character of the letter received by the first mentioned witness, and was admissible.—People v. Parsons, 105 Mich. 177.

¶ 1047. Upon a trial for causing a pregnant woman's death by procuring a miscarriage the testimony of a physician summoned to attend the woman that he understood certain money paid to him was paid on respondent's behalf is hearsay and inadmissible, and the fact that the witness is hostile to the prosecution does not justify the admission of it.—People v. Abbott, 116 Mich. 263.

¶ 1048. In the trial of a husband for shooting his wife, evidence of expressions of affection for the husband made by the wife in the interval preceding her death are admissible to show the degree of culpability she attached to his act.—People v. Alexander, 161 Mich. 645.

¶ 1049. A circus performer went to a dance and was pitched upon by some of the participating citizens. He shrieked, "Hey, Rube!" and at this signal a lot of other circus men rushed in and a fight followed in which the town marshal was killed by one of the circus men, as was supposed. Held, that on the latter's trial it was proper to exclude as hearsay and immaterial what one of the witnesses had heard of the citizens being drunk and of their having trouble with the marshal.—People v. Murray, 52 Mich. 288.

¶ 1050. In a prosecution for larceny of a watch from the person it is error to allow a saloonkeeper to testify that while accused and others were in the back room of his saloon with the door slightly open a policeman came in and said to witness that the men in the back room were crooks, whereupon witness informed the policeman that they had a watch they wanted to sell, telling the policeman to go and get them if he wanted them, and that the policeman lacked the courage to do so.—People v. Cahill, 147 Mich. 201.

¶ 1051. Where it is claimed in defense that representations of deformed human bodies or parts, the exhibition of which is prohibited by Act 103; P. A. 1903, § 2, How. 2nd Ed., § 5293, except in certain cases, were kept for sale and not for exhibition, it is proper in a prosecution for a violation of such act to exclude a letter to one of the respondents alleged to relate to the sale thereof, where there is already testimony introduced to the effect that respondents had tried to make a sale several times.—People v. Kennedy, 176 Mich. 15.

¶ 1052. Where, in a prosecution for rape, a witness for the people has testified that about a year before the alleged offense, while the victim was at her house, she noticed respondent taking hold of her arm and "pulling her around," further testimony that witness' husband spoke of it at the time, is hearsay and incompetent.—People v. Duncan, 104 Mich. 460.

¶ 1053. The admission in a prosecution for rape of testimony that since the case has been commenced a reward had been offered the prosecuting witness to stop the prosecution is prejudicial error in the absence of a showing that defendant procured the offer to be made, or that it was made with his approval or acquiescence.—People v. Long, 144 Mich. 585.

§ 227. ——To show knowledge of or mental effect on hearer.

See also post ¶ 1067.
To show information affecting hearer, see post § 228.
Reported statements as bearing on malice aroused in hearer, see also Homicide ¶ 152.

¶ 1054. In an indictment for murder, where the defendant sets up temporary insanity as a defense, any facts within his own knowledge or any conduct that he must have personally known, and any reports, true or false, that were brought to him, which would tend to produce in his mind suspicion or belief in her infidelity, are competent, and unless privileged are admissible.—People v. Bowen, 165 Mich. 231.

¶ 1055. In a trial for wife murder, where defendant sets up temporary insanity, evidence as to the truth of reports of the wife's infidelity is inadmissible as tending to raise collateral issues.—People v. Bowen, 165 Mich. 231.

¶ 1056. In a prosecution for murder by arsenic poisoning, arsenic having been found by a post mortem examination, it is admissible to show by a witness the contents of a page in a book shown to accused.—People v. Millard, 53 Mich. 63.

¶ 1057. On a trial for murder where respondent claimed that he shot deceased because he feared his life was in danger, testimony that deceased stated as he approached respondent and was only four or five feet away, that he intended to bid respondent "good night" is admissible.—People v. Farrell, 137 Mich. 127.

¶ 1058. In a prosecution for exhibiting representations of deformed human bodies or parts in violation of Act 103, Pub. Acts 1903, sec. 2, How. 2nd Ed. § 5293, it is not error to admit a conversation between the complaining witness and one of the respondents immediately after he had seen the exhibits as such conversation is material to show knowledge by such respondent that the witness had viewed the exhibits.—People v. Kennedy, 176 Mich. 15.

¶ 1059. In a murder trial for killing his wife, a husband has the right to testify to the contents of letters from others addressed to her, but received and read by him (provided it is not through her permission, if there be such) which would tend to support the defense of insanity, provided a proper foundation for secondary evidence is laid.—People v. Bowen, 165 Mich. 231.

§ 228. ——To show information or reason for action.

To show that hearer had knowledge or was affected mentally, see ante § 227.

¶ 1060. Where respondent is charged with murdering one of an officer's posse attempting to arrest him, evidence that the officer had been told that respondent had threatened to resist arrest, and that the officer requested the posse to accompany him to respondent's house as he feared resistance because of previous threats, is admissible to show the reason of the precaution taken by the officer and as showing the circumstances of the killing.—People v. Gosch, 82 Mich. 22.

¶ 1061. In a prosecution for seduction, the defense called a witness to show that complaining witness had had illicit intercourse with him and hence was not chaste at the time alleged. The witness denied such acts and counsel, claiming surprise, offered to show that witness had stated otherwise to counsel before called as a witness. Held that this was permissible, not for the purpose of positive proof, but to show why the witness had been called.—People v. Payne, 131 Mich. 474.

¶ 1062. In a prosecution for false pretenses, inducing a sale of goods on credit, evidence that the complaining witness was informed over the telephone of respondent's financial stateme bank and to whi ness was admiss to such witness, tent to prove tha People v. Andre, ¶ 1063. Evider the accused and mediately before the offense, is co made no physica ple, 24 Mich. 1.

§ 229. ——Accusi See also ante ¶

¶ 1064. In a of an automobil a witness to te the defendant at of which theft and had accused bile in question, Mich. 416.

¶ 1065. That larceny of an could not remer sation affords witness to testi defendant about in issue, and ac tomobile in que 177 Mich. 416.

§ 230. Declaratic plices

Flight or resist see post § 2

Antecedent acts ante ¶ 849.

Conversations v of fixing al

Res gestæ decl § 241 et se

Admissions by accused, see

Preliminary pr see post § 2

¶ 1066. Wher in one commor ever is said or the prosecution while it is st against all th Pitcher, 15 Mic ¶ 1067. Wher the declaration tors before the declarations an coconspirators, tion of one of Mol, 137 Mich.

¶ 1068. In tr petent to conne by evidence of ments. The danger that one may be unjustly prejudiced by the statements of another must be guarded against by proper instructions.—People v. Saunders, 25 Mich. 119.

¶ 1069. The acts and declarations of one conspirator before the conspiracy was formed, or after its object has been accomplished, not in the presence or hearing of the other conspirators, and not brought to their knowledge and ratified by them, are not admissible against them.—People v. Parker, 67 Mich. 222.

¶ 1070. On the trial of a conspiracy to extort money from a firm by entrapping it into a violation of the revenue laws, it was held that the statements of one of the defendants, made on the day after the making of complaint against the firm and while it was still pending, that he expected to make several hundred dollars out of it, and that another of the defendants was concerned with and instigated it, are admissible against such other defendant, where he has been connected with the conspiracy by independent evidence. —People v. Saunders, 25 Mich. 119.

¶ 1071. Upon the separate trial of one jointly charged with burglary it was competent to show what was said in his presence by the other person jointly charged as to the purchase of railroad tickets for the purpose of leaving the city shortly after the crime was committed, in which purchase and use of the tickets both seemed equally interested; and where accused was afterwards arrested in the city to which the ticket read.—People v. Dow, 64 Mich. 717.

¶ 1072. In a prosecution for burglary against one of three parties, it was competent to show what property was found upon the persons of all three of the men arrested for the same transaction.—People v. Wilson, 133 Mich. 517.

¶ 1073. The wife of an accomplice cannot be allowed to corroborate his testimony by stating where her husband told her he stayed on the night of the commission of the alleged offense.—People v. O'Brien, 60 Mich. 8.

¶ 1074. On a trial for burning a barn to defraud insurers, evidence should not have been received against one of the defendants of a false statement made by another defendant after the fire to the import that the barn was not insured, as it was no part of the res gestæ, and could not aid in defrauding the insurers.—Hamilton v. People, 29 Mich. 173.

¶ 1075. Where M. is prosecuted for adultery with A.'s wife, communications between the wife and her mother not in M.'s presence and to which he was not privy are inadmissible, as is also a letter claimed to have been written by the wife to M., but which he is not shown to have read.—People v. Montague, 71 Mich. 447.

¶ 1076. In a prosecution for adultery, conversations in respondent's absence with the woman with whom he is charged to have had intercourse is, as to him, hearsay and inadmissible.—People v. Fowler, 104 Mich. 449.

¶ 1077. Testimony that the woman with whom respondent is charged to have committed adultery stated in absence of accused that he had had sexual intercourse with her, is inadmissible, being hearsay.—People v. Imes, 110 Mich. 250.

¶ 1078. In a prosecution for bribery, in which a conspiracy to corruptly obtain municipal action of which the bribery with which defendant was charged was an incident, conversations between certain of the conspirators in furtherance of the project were admissible though had when defendant was not present.—People v. McGarry, 136 Mich. 316.

¶ 1079. In a prosecution for bribery, in which a conspiracy to corruptly obtain municipal action of which the bribery with which defendant was charged was an incident, a letter from one of the conspirators to another stating what had been done in relation to the party whom defendant was charged to have bribed, was competent: where there was testimony showing defendant's connection with the parties prior to the date of the letter.—People v. McGarry, 136 Mich. 316.

¶ 1080. In a prosecution for bribery where a conspiracy has been shown, testimony of a conversation between two of the conspirators after the conspiracy had been abandoned, is admissible where it related to devising means to avoid exposure.—People v. Mol, 137 Mich. 692.

¶ 1081. Respondent was acquitted of an attempt to bribe in connection with an alleged conspiracy. Subsequently he was prosecuted for perjury in testifying in his own behalf at the bribery trial. Held, that evidence otherwise inadmissible would not be admitted on the ground that he was a party to the conspiracy, since his acquittal in the bribery case was conclusive of that question. —People v. Albers, 137 Mich. 678.

¶ 1082. Upon a prosecution for manslaughter in causing the death of a pregnant woman by procuring a miscarriage by means of instruments, statements made in respondent's absence by the midwife who was alleged to have performed the operation, that she was in the habit of performing them for the purpose of abortion and miscarriage, and describing the methods adopted, are inadmissible, she not being under indictment, so as to make them admissions.—People v. Abbott, 116 Mich. 263.

¶ 1083. A. called at an express office for a package addressed to B. and containing a watch alleged to have been stolen by C. Held, that on the prosecution of C. for the larceny it was proper for the defense to question A. as to directions left with A. by B. for receiving mail and express matter addressed to B.—People v. Lyons, 49 Mich. 78.

§ 231. ——Flight or resistance to arrest by accomplice.

¶ 1084. In a prosecution for burglary it was shown that the stolen property was found near the respondent and another person in a barn where they slept on the night it was taken, and that when the arrest took place the other person resisted and escaped. Held, that the resistance and flight might properly be considered by the jury.—Cummins v. People, 42 Mich. 142.

¶ 1085. Upon the trial of one of several persons jointly charged with crime, evidence that they all escaped from jail after their arrest is admissible.—People v. Cleveland, 107 Mich. 367.

§ 232. Complaints and statements by victim or antagonist.

In rape and indecent assault cases, see post § 233.

Belated complaints and reasons for delay, see post § 235.

Details and particulars of complaint, see post § 235.

Complaints as res gestæ, see post § 245.

Declarations in extremis amounting to res gestæ but not to dying declarations, see post §§ 245, 246.

Dying declarations, see Homicide, VII, B.

Written ante mortem statements as dying declarations, see Homicide, VII, B.

Rebuttal and explanation of dying declarations, see also Homicide § 60.

¶ 1086. In a prosecution for burglary a woman who slept in the house where it was committed testified that she saw the burglar plainly enough to recognize him afterwards, and that two days afterwards while with her husband she saw respondent and told her husband she believed him to be the man. The husband testified that on that occasion she recognized the respondent, and added that she recognized him as being the man that was in her bedroom at the time of the burglary: that he told her to be sure, and she said she was sure. Held, that the additional statement was hearsay and inadmissible.—People v. Mead, 50 Mich. 228.

¶ 1087. After respondent and decedent had had some words of difficulty in a saloon about an hour before the killing, decedent went out of the saloon and had a conversation with B. and P. concerning the trouble in the saloon, respondent standing 150 or 200 feet from decedent. B. testified that decedent said he would not be beaten and bruised by that bully; that he was too big for him; that he was not able to fight him, and, furthermore, did not hav to aid him (sho that he then sa
"What did you p by letting that big for me; I d
don't intend to.
protect myself w
of his pocket);
anything to do w
take him to Bay away from you?"
ments were comp
of the prosecutio
before the jury cedent's state towards responde
versation, includ
missible.—People

¶ 1088. On a cent liberties wi doubtless be com her daughter's e appearance at t
at that time she ill treatment the
to permit her to with her daught
fense.—People v.

¶ 1089. Where and battery, the respondent cont
after the assault
by, it is error f evidence of the
at that time b showing him to Yund, 163 Mich.

¶ 1090. In a was a question persons, it was tify that, on th
ted, the victim
respondent, and respondent's pre persons who ro is not evidence shows that the identity was co
55 Mich. 497.

¶ 1091. On th
robbery, unless cuting witness claims to have defense cannot him to show co
where he obtai
Mich. 43.

¶ 1092. In a testimony of th told detectives c place need not ticulars of his phy, 56 Mich. 5

§ 233. ——In rape cases and indecent assaults on children.

See also ante ¶ 1088.

Belated complaints and reasons for delay or silence, see post § 234.

¶ 1093. Evidence that the prosecutrix made immediate complaint after the offense is important, and facts showing her appearance—marks of violence or other indications of outrage—and also that she had reason to fear damage to life or limb if she resisted the assault upon her, are admissible, even though the facts show a former complete offense of a similar character.—Strang v. People, 24 Mich. 1.

¶ 1094. In a prosecution for rape, a question to the complaining witness as to whether she had told the priest or any one else of the outrage is not objectionable.—Maillet v. People, 42 Mich. 262.

¶ 1095. Whether it would be error to allow the prosecutrix on a charge of rape to state what she had told to others about the affair when she first disclosed it, quære.—Maillet v. People, 42 Mich. 262.

¶ 1096. In a case of assault with intent to ravish, the girl's statement to her father immediately after the alleged injury, and her appearance, would be admissible in evidence for the prosecution even upon the trial.—People v. Lynch, 29 Mich. 274.

¶ 1097. In a prosecution for an assault with intent to commit rape, statements made by the complaining witness soon after the assault, to the officer who arrested respondent, as to prior acts of familiarity between herself and respondent, are competent.—People v. Goulette, 82 Mich. 36.

¶ 1098. The complaining witness in a prosecution for an assault with intent to commit rape on a female under the age of sixteen years, may testify as to what she told a relative about the occurrence immediately after the commission of the alleged assault.—People v. Harrington, 186 Mich. 482.

¶ 1099. An uncle of the complaining witness in a prosecution for an assault with intent to commit rape on a female under the age of sixteen years, may testify as to what she told him about the occurrence immediately after the alleged assault.—People v. Harrington, 186 Mich. 482.

¶ 1100. In a prosecution for assault with intent to commit rape upon a 12-year-old girl, evidence of complaints made by her almost immediately after the offense was admissible.—People v. Rich, 133 Mich. 14.

¶ 1101. Statements made by the prosecutrix out of court and in the absence of the accused, as to the latter's guilt, are hearsay, and not admissible on a trial for rape.—People v. Ayers, 186 Mich. 366.

¶ 1102. One who, on hearing the screams of a girl who claimed to have been ravished, immediately went to the house to which she had fled, may testify as to her appearance.—People v. Jansma, 181 Mich. 62.

¶ 1103. Statements of the alleged victim as to her consent, to the intercourse through fear of threats, and as to the force used, made in respondent's presence, are admissible in connection with his failure to deny them.—People v. Flynn, 96 Mich. 276.

¶ 1104. Statements of a complaining witness as to defendant having taken improper and indecent liberties with her person are admissible as tending to corroborate the testimony of complaining witness, the fact that she complained of the conduct of the accused being admissible, but the details of the complaint being inadmissible.—People v. White, 194 Mich. 172.

¶ 1105. In a prosecution for taking indecent and improper liberties with the person of a girl, the testimony of the witness that she remembered the complaining witness having spoken to her about what she claimed that the accused did to her, is properly excluded as having the effect of a statement of the details where the complaining witness precedes such witness on the witness stand and informs the jury what her claims were.—People v. White, 194 Mich. 172.

¶ 1106. Statements made by the complaining witness in a prosecution for having taken indecent and improper liberties with the person of a girl, made to a playmate in the course of a dispute between the complaining witness and such witness as to which girl's grandfatner the accused was, do not constitute a complaint, but are mere hearsay and are improperly admitted in evidence.—People v. White, 194 Mich. 172.

§ 234. ——Belated complaints and reasons for delay.

¶ 1107. Delay in making complaint is not a fact belonging to the res gestæ, but is only material as bearing upon the credibility of the prosecutrix; and that is for the jury.—Turner v. People, 33 Mich. 363.

¶ 1108. Notwithstanding several months' delay, not only the fact of making complaint but what the victim said may be shown, and her delay in complaining does not bear on the admissibility of the evidence, but on its weight; delay in the case of a young girl is sufficiently excused by fear of chastisement for telling.—People v. Gage, 62 Mich. 271.

¶ 1109. A mother may testify as to a statement made to her by her child, eleven years old, thirteen days after an alleged rape upon her, as to who committed the offense, it appearing that the child had concealed the matter through fear that her mother would whip her.—People v. Glover, 71 Mich. 303.

¶ 1110. In a prosecution for rape it is proper to show by the victim's mother that two days after the alleged rape her daughter's appearance and behavior were such that she insisted on knowing what the matter was, and the daughter told her.—People v. Brown, 53 Mich. 531.

¶ 1111. It is not error to admit the statement of the victim's sister that she made complaint to her next morning that the prisoner on trial and another person named forced her in her chamber the evening before; the persons so implicated having themselves admitted intercourse.—Brown v. People, 36 Mich. 203.

¶ 1112. It is competent for the mother of the prosecutrix, on a trial for carnally knowing a woman under the age of consent, to testify that her daughter, upon arriving home some days after the assault, told her what had occurred.—People v. Bernor, 115 Mich. 692.

¶ 1113. In a prosecution for ravishing a girl nearly fourteen years old, her testimony to a conversation had five months after the alleged offense with a woman with whom she was then living is inadmissible where it does not appear that her previous silence was induced by threats by respondent, but, as claimed, only on his suggestion that it would be better to keep still.—People v. Duncan, 104 Mich. 460.

¶ 1114. On a trial for rape claimed to have been committed upon respondent's stepdaughter during her mother's absence, the alleged victim may testify that because of the respondent's threats to kill her if she made such complaint she did not complain to her mother on the latter's return on the evening of the day of the offense.—People v. Ezzo, 104 Mich. 341.

¶ 1115. A complaint made by a prosecutrix of the commission of rape upon her by accused within twenty-four hours after the commission of the alleged assault and as soon as she could reach her mother by train, held admissible in evidence.—People v. Ayres, 195 Mich. 274.

¶ 1116. A complaining witness in a prosecution for statutory rape, a child 14 years of age, may be permitted to give her reasons why she had not told her parents of the alleged assault upon her.—People v. Coston, 187 Mich. 538.

§ 235. ——Detailed statements by victim.

See also ante ¶¶ 1088, 1092, 1104, 1105.

¶ 1117. In a prosecution for rape, it was improper to permit a witness to narrate in detail a long conversation she had with the girl, when, three months after the commission of the offense, she complained to her of the outrage.—People v. Row, 135 Mich. 505.

¶ 1118. Testim prosecutrix in a p intent to commit r
ter told her regar
to her by respond to tell her folks not admissible und dence of complai
the commission
Dowell, 136 Mich.

¶ 1119. Where t statements of the
before a justice,
the trial to make ple, and are only a
for purposes of
Nichols, 159 Mich.

¶ 1120. On a c cific and detailed trix under oath g
fore a magistrate
ment alone, whe that the prisoner course with her.— 290.

¶ 1121. Circum
tailed by the pro ments made to th
sible except as br
tion.—People v. M

§ 236. Former test

Former testimony
Former testimon defendants, s
Testimony as ad
him on his ov
Purposes for whi
ceivable, see Competency of tr
on preliminar
Preliminary proo script, see pc
Reading from tra in argument contradiction
post § 389.
Admissibility of cases, see Ev Impeachment by trary testimo

¶ 1122. The te trial of a crimin
if necessary, upo
ness has meanw placed before the
as the witness w
v. Sligh, 48 Mich

¶ 1123. The te deceased, taken tion in a criminal wise unobjection on proof of the
67 Mich. 95.

¶ 1124. The deposition of a witness taken upon the preliminary examination of a respondent is admissible on the trial as original evidence.—People v. Kennedy, 105 Mich. 434.

¶ 1125. On a second trial for rape where the prosecutrix testifies that her evidence on the first trial as to the guilt of the accused was false, her former testimony is admissible only as affecting her credibility.—People v. Ayers, 186 Mich. 366.

¶ 1126. The efforts made to secure an absent witness, or the reason why his deposition was not obtained, should be shown to warrant reproducing his testimony on a former trial.—People v. Long, 44 Mich. 296.

¶ 1127. The testimony of other witnesses at the former trial proved under the stenographer's oath may be read in evidence, where its purpose is expressly limited to showing the materiality of the alleged false testimony for which accused is charged of perjury.—People v. Macard, 109 Mich. 623.

¶ 1128. Where the prosecutrix on a second trial for rape testifies that her evidence of the first trial as to the guilt of the accused was false, her previous testimony is not admissible as substantive proof of the guilt of the accused.—People v. Ayers, 186 Mich. 366.

§ 237. ——Testimony of accomplices and co-defendants.

¶ 1129. Where respondent and another were charged with larceny and respondent was being tried first, testimony of the other given in the police court cannot be read in evidence after such other has been excused from answering on the ground that it might incriminate him, there being no charge of conspiracy, the effect of such proceeding being to get his testimony into the record without any opportunity of cross-examination.—People v. Hutchings, 137 Mich. 527.

¶ 1130. In a prosecution against respondent for conveying a weapon adapted to aid a prisoner to escape, evidence, against respondent's objection, of the files and proceedings in the prosecution against him and also the files and proceedings against the prisoner for attempted murder, while in an effort to escape, is improperly received where the proceedings were taken after the offense charged against respondent was complete, if one was committed, he being no party to the proceedings and not bound by them.—People v. Fox, 142 Mich. 528.

§ 238. Foundation proofs.

Necessity that declaration should have been heard by accused to charge him therewith, see ante § 226 et seq.

Admissibility of letter without proof of signature, see ante ¶ 1026.

Order of proofs of foundation facts and of declarations themselves, see post § 359.

Sufficiency of identification of former testimony to support reading it in argument to point out discrepancy of testimony on trial, see post ¶ 1787.

¶ 1131. Evidence as to the contents of a letter written by a person implicated in the crime, who has turned state's evidence, is inadmissible where its relevancy is not established by preliminary questions.—People v. Evans, 150 Mich. 443.

¶ 1132. In a prosecution for seduction the mother of the girl testified that after defendant's arrest he came to the mother in Louisville to induce her to go to Detroit. Held, it was not reversible error to admit in evidence two letters and telegrams on this subject, sent by defendant to the mother, without proof that defendant sent them, where on their face they showed a connection with the previous conversation with the mother.—People v. Adams, 162 Mich. 371.

¶ 1133. In a prosecution under Pub. Acts 1911, Act No. 62, How. 2nd. Ed. § 5299, prohibiting certain classes of immoral advertising, a letter, "in reply to your recent letter," sent by defendant to an advertising distributor, together with a blank form to be sworn to by the distributor, and a copy of the advertising pamphlet, which was annexed to the information, purporting to have been issued by defendant, are admissible in evidence in connection with testimony that an agent of the distributors had distributed similar pamphlets, and that the pamphlets had been received by residents.—People v. Kennedy, 176 Mich. 384.

¶ 1134. The acts and declarations of one charged as a conspirator are not admissible in evidence until a prima facie case of conspiracy is shown.—People v. Parker, 67 Mich. 222.

¶ 1135. Stenographer's minutes of former testimony cannot be received to supply the testimony of an absent witness if they are not shown to be correct.—People v. Sligh, 48 Mich. 54.

¶ 1136. Testimony of a stenographer that, by the aid of his minutes, he can give, "just as it was given in court," the testimony taken at a former trial, is sufficient proof of the correctness of such minutes.—People v. Macard, 109 Mich. 623.

§ 239. Circumstances, time or place of declarations.

See also post ¶ 1168.

Admissibility of entire statement, see also ante ¶ 689.

Complementary portion of threat to show that it was boastful, see ante ¶ 1013.

¶ 1137. On a trial for murder, testimony by the sheriff of a conversation with respondent shortly after the shooting, is admissible though the sheriff was permitted to state that the conversation occurred in the saloon where respondent was bartender, and hence justified a subsequent argument that the law requiring the saloon to close at 10 o'clock was violated; since his testimony would have been incomplete had he not been permitted to state where the conversation occurred.—People v. Farrell, 137 Mich. 127.

§ 240. Explanation and rebuttal of declaration or statement.

Circumstances attending conversation or statement, see ante § 239.

Rebuttal and explanation of admissions, see post § 264.

¶ 1138. In a coroner's records was a statement by a doctor that deceased on whom accused held an inquest was a "stranger." It was not used before the coroner's jury but was prepared by the coroner or his clerk and signed by the doctor on request for the purpose of having a showing that deceased was a stranger to the state of Michigan, so that the fees could be collected from the state. It was untrue that deceased was a stranger, and when called by the people the doctor testified that deceased was according to her information a resident of Michigan. Held, proper to allow her to testify that by "stranger" in her signed statement she meant that deceased was a stranger to her, the issue being whether accused had guilty knowledge of the fact and presented the claim as part of a system of fraud, and her interpretation being the only reasonable one her statement would bear.—People v. Hoffmann, 142 Mich. 531.

¶ 1139. A woman physician who attended a woman at an emergency hospital and there discussed the circumstances of the woman's shooting and the place of her residence, and who testifies that she there signed a statement in which it appeared that the sick woman was a "stranger" in the presence of and at the request of accused, a coroner, indicted for falsely claiming fees from the state on the ground that the woman was not of Michigan and that he had held an inquest on her body, may testify to those facts and explain that she meant merely that the woman was a stranger to the signer; though another witness has testified that it was he, the coroner's clerk, to whom the statement was given and that another physician was present, since the jury might find that it was in fact made to accused and, if so, the testimony tended to show that he knowingly falsified.—People v. Hoffmann, 142 Mich. 531.

¶ 1140. Where, in a prosecution for assault with intent to kill, respondent testified that he had heard the complaining witness was a dangerous man, evidence was admissible on rebuttal to show the reputation of the latter for being a peaceable, law-abiding citizen.—People v. Meert, 157 Mich. 93.

drinking together at public houses, held, that every occurrence, every remark, and the whole conduct of the prisoner from the time he and the deceased came together until the consummation of the crime, were competent evidence, as part of the res gestæ, to enable the jury to determine whether any crime was committed, as well as to inform them of its degree.—People v. Potter, 5 Mich. 1.

¶ 1145. On a prosecution for manslaughter by abortion a communication from accused to the father of the woman, stating that she was sick and wanted her mother to go to see her, is res gestæ, where he being the father of the unborn child enticed the woman to leave her home and go to another town and there submit to an abortion in consequence whereof she became sick and died.—People v. McDowell, 63 Mich. 229, per Sherwood, J., and Campbell, C. J., Morse and Champlin, JJ., assenting to the principle, dissented from the application because the communication was by message to the father of the accused and was by him transmitted to the father of the woman, and being testified to by the latter was hearsay; but they concurred in the result, deeming the error harmless.

¶ 1146. A witness for the prosecution on a trial for homicide which resulted from certain riotous assemblages, having testified fully in reference to the proceedings of the assemblage on the night previous to the homicide, and that defendant had confessed to having struck deceased on the second night, denied on cross-examination that he had stated to different persons soon after that he was present as a "horner," but was merely a looker-on, and took no part in the matter whatever. Held, that such statements related to the res gestæ, and their contradiction was competent.—Patten v. People, 18 Mich. 314.

¶ 1147. In a prosecution for murder, testimony of a detective of another city concerning the circumstances of the arrest of the respondent for another crime, robbery, and his statements and conduct at that time, are admissible notwithstanding the charge and arrest was for a different crime.—People v. Higgins, 127 Mich. 291.

¶ 1148. On a prosecution for larceny, it seems that testimony of the finding of property, stolen at the time alleged, in the possession of accused, is admissible as part of the res gestæ though some of the articles were not described in the information.—People v. Nagle, 137 Mich. 88.

¶ 1149. In a prosecution for an assault and battery, alleged to have been committed by the proprietor of the house where a spiritualistic seance was being held, upon one who had been invited there to investigate, evidence that prior to the assault, which was provoked by the investigator's striking a match, the medium had been tied to a chair, and a "dark circle" formed, was admissible as part of the res gestæ.—People v. Hughes, 116 Mich. 80.

¶ 1150. Upon the charge of uttering as genuine a forged power of attorney, proof that both the power, and the deed purporting to be executed in pursuance of it, were in the handwriting of one who was concerned with the defendant in the fraud and shared in the fruits of it, is proper as part of the res gestæ and also as bearing upon guilty knowledge.—People v. Marion, 29 Mich. 31.

¶ 1151. Where the superintendent of a corporation was in the habit of forwarding invoices of lumber purchased to the home office, and of receiving checks payable to the order of the vendors for delivery to them, and was prosecuted criminally for the alleged forgery of the indorsement on one of said checks, testimony respecting the invoices, the drawing and forwarding of the checks, their payment by the bank, and their condition when presented for payment, is relevant to establish the forgery and uttering of the paper.—People v. Kemp, 76 Mich. 410.

¶ 1152. That respondent forged and uttered other checks at or before the time of forging the check set forth in the information is competent as part of the res gestæ to show the fraudulent character of respondent's act in passing the paper alleged to have been forged.—People v. Kemp, 76 Mich. 410.

¶ 1153. In a prosecution for selling liquor to a minor under Pub. Acts 1887, No. 313, § 13, respondent may show all that transpired between him and the minor at the time of the selling, as part of the res gestæ and as bearing upon the intent.—People v. Welch, 71 Mich. 548.

¶ 1154. Upon a trial for larceny it is competent to show as part of the res gestæ that respondent was seen with a newspaper in one hand, while his other hand was among the ladies' dresses, feeling of their pockets, and that the witness notified officers of respondent's movements, which caused them to watch him.—People v. Machen, 101 Mich. 400.

¶ 1155. In a prosecution for the larceny by a bookkeeper of certain bonds belonging to his employers, the people were properly permitted to show that on a certain morning, two days after the time the theft was alleged to have been committed, and after time to secrete the bonds in another city, the attention of the employers was called by respondent to the condition of the vault in which the bonds had been kept; that upon examination they found that the combination lock had been removed from the outer door of the vault, that certain books and vouchers which were in the vault the day before had been taken, and that the bonds were gone.—People v. Parsons, 105 Mich. 177.

¶ 1156. On the trial of a conspiracy to extort money from a firm by entrapping it into a violation of the revenue law, evidence is admissible of facts so inseparably associated in time that each is intimately connected with the res gestæ of the other; as where it was attempted to show that the party complaining of the violation complained, at the same time and place, of another firm for the same offense.—People v. Saunders, 25 Mich. 119.

¶ 1157. On a trial for resisting an officer while he was arresting accused for disturbing a religious meeting, evidence that the meeting was more or less disturbed all that evening may be admissible as part of the res gestæ.—People v. Rounds, 67 Mich. 482.

¶ 1158. In a trial for larceny from the person a prosecuting witness who has identified a bank bill found on the defendant may testify that he had described the bill to one of the detectives previously; under the circumstances this is part of the res gestæ rather than a mere hearsay declaration.—People v. Morrigan, 29 Mich. 4.

¶ 1159. In a prosecution for murder, evidence that the defendant had purchased morphine, that she intended to commit suicide and take her children with her, together with evidence that she and the children were found suffering with the symptoms of morphine poisoning, and that both children subsequently died, is sufficient to entitle her admissions made at the time of the discovery to be admitted as part of the res gestæ.—People v. Quimby, 134 Mich. 625.

¶ 1160. To show circumstances of killing one of officer's posse attempting to make arrest, evidence that officer had been told that respondent threatened to resist arrest, and that officer requested posse to accompany him, as he feared resistance because of previous threats, is admissible.—People v. Gosch, 82 Mich. 22.

¶ 1161. In a prosecution under the statute punishing the careless use of firearms, based on the shooting of a boy by defendant, evidence that defendant just before the shooting pointed the gun at another boy who was present, is admissible as part of the res gestæ and as tending to show the absence of malice.—People v. Dudley, 131 Mich. 261.

¶ 1162. On a trial for murder it was proper to admit testimony of two witnesses as to matters that occurred at the house of the accused two hours after the alleged murder; that the wife of the accused had shown the witnesses through the rooms of the house and that the accused had there furnished them with cider, although he had not fol-missible as part of the res gestæ.—People v. McBride, 120 Mich. 166.

¶¶ 1168, 1169. Statements of the wife of one charged with murdering his infant children, made in his presence, which are necessary to a full understanding of what he said, may be testified to by a third party as part of the res gestæ.—People v. Foley, 64 Mich. 148.

¶ 1170. Evidence that the mother of a person accused of manslaughter ordered him to make certain children go away, held admissible, it appearing that the children had annoyed the mother, and that the accused attacked one of the boys and killed him immediately after the mother directed him to make them go out, and consequently the statement of the mother was a part of the res gestæ.—People v. McArron, 121 Mich. 1.

¶ 1171. A statement of a mother of an accused to the effect that she said, "Now see what you have done," held admissible as a part of the res gestæ, in a prosecution for manslaughter where the accused killed a boy while driving children away from the premises, as, directed by the mother, and such statement was also admissible to explain a remark of the son who swore and said, "I will show him."—People v. McArron, 121 Mich. 1.

¶ 1172. In a manslaughter case, evidence of a remark made by the defendant's wife to a third person in defendant's presence, after a fight, asking him not to let defendant go at the "old man" any more, was properly admitted.—People v. Hossler, 135 Mich. 384.

§ 244. ——Acts and statements of accomplices.

See also ante ¶ 1150.
As to possession of goods stolen, see also ante ¶ 1166.
Acts and declarations after abandoning conspiracy but for purpose of avoiding discovery, see ante ¶ 1080.
Declarations and acts of accomplices and coconspirators, see also ante § 230 et seq.
Of third persons other than accomplices, see ante § 243, post §§ 245, 246.
Statements by other party to adultery, see also ante § 230.

¶ 1173. Where, upon N.'s trial for rape, there is evidence that two men went together to the house where the offense was committed, one of whom escaped, while the other (O.) was captured, testimony by a witness who was present at the time of the capture, that O. (who has pleaded guilty) said a few minutes thereafter, "How came I here? Oh, I know; N. brought me here," is hearsay and is not admissible as part of the res gestæ to establish N.'s identity.—People v. Newton, 96 Mich. 586.

¶ 1174. The dying declaration of the woman in childbirth, offered on a prosecution for incest, to the effect that the respondent was responsible for her condition, is not admissible.—People v. Stison, 140 Mich. 216.

¶ 1175. The acts and admissions of coconspirators are admissible as part of the res gestæ to prove guilt of one charged with bribery.—People v. Salsbury, 134 Mich. 537.

§ 245. ——Acts and statements of victims or subjects of crime.

See also ante ¶ 1048.
Declarations by woman of purpose and reason for going to where abortion was performed, see ante ¶ 1142.
Res gestæ of victim's possession of money, see ante ¶ 1164.
Belated complaints and reasons for delay in complaining, see ante § 234.
Complaints and statements by victims and antagonists as hearsay, see ante § 232 et seq.
Acts and declarations of accomplices and coparties, see ante § 244.
Admissibility of complaints made by woman or girl alleged to have been raped, see also Rape.

¶ 1176. A complaint made to bystanders within three minutes after the commission of a crime of violence (such as robbery) is immediate enough to be regarded as a part of the res gestæ.—Lambert v. People, 29 Mich. 71.

¶ 1177. A complaint of robbery made to a policeman immediately after its alleged occurrence is admissible on the prosecution as part of the res gestæ. So, also, are the statements made at the same time by the accused. —Driscoll v. People, 47 Mich. 413.

¶ 1178. In a prosecution for murder it was shown that deceased died of a wound in the head inflicted by some sharp instrument during a fight with respondent. Held, that his ante-mortem statement to the doctor who dressed his wound—neither of them at the time considering the wound to be dangerous —that respondent made the wound with a knife, was incompetent, not being part of the res gestæ.—People v. O'Brien, 92 Mich. 17.

¶ 1179. Upon a trial for murder by poisoning, a physician whom the deceased consulted about a month before her death may testify as to what she told him about her present condition but not as to what she narrated about her previous symptoms.—People v. Foglesong, 116 Mich. 556.

¶ 1180. Spontaneous statements made by a person shortly after being shot, as to the occurrence, are admissible on a trial for murder, as part of the res gestæ.—People v. Johnson, 186 Mich. 516.

¶ 1181. What a person said immediately after being shot as to whether he ever had a gun, is not admissible on a trial for murder, as part of the res gestæ.—People v. Johnson, 186 Mich. 516.

¶ 1182. In a prosecution for assault with intent to do great bodily harm less than the crime of murder, evidence of what the assaulted person said shortly after the accident to a minister to whose house he was taken to be cared for, is admissible.—People v. Hennard, 162 Mich. 225.

¶ 1183. Testimony by a female companion of the alleged victim, who escaped while she and said victim were being taken in a buggy to the place where the offense was said to have been committed, that the last witness knew of the victim after witness jumped from the buggy the other girl was "hollering" for help, was admissible as part of the res gestæ, as was her testimony as to which way the buggy went after she left it, and also her testimony that after leaving the buggy she was at police headquarters a while before going home.—People v. Flynn, 96 Mich. 276.

¶ 1184. Statements of a complaining witness as to defendant having taken indecent and improper liberties with her person which are made about one week after the occurrence are not admissible as part of the res gestæ, because made too long after the event. —People v. White, 194 Mich. 172.

§ 246. ——Acts and statements of woman killed by abortion.

Declaration of woman dying in childbirth inculpating party in incest, see ante ¶ 1174.

¶ 1185. Upon a trial for manslaughter resulting from abortion, evidence of a statement by the deceased girl of what respondent had said or done some days before she related it, in regard to her taking medicine, etc., is inadmissible; it not being a dying declaration or res gestæ, it is hearsay.—People v. Aikin, 66 Mich. 460.

¶ 1186. In a criminal prosecution against a physician for causing death by abortion, the declarations of woman made to third persons the day before the alleged operation as to her pregnancy and purposes are admissible against defendant for the purpose of showing the fact of pregnancy and the corpus delicti.—People v. Fritch, 170 Mich. 258.

¶ 1187. In a criminal prosecution against a physician for causing death by abortion, it is proper to permit a witness to testify as to the inquiries which the deceased made of her in requesting to be referred to a doctor, for the purpose of proving the fact of pregnancy and the corpus delicti.—People v. Fritch, 170 Mich. 258.

¶ 1188. In a criminal prosecution against a physician for causing death by abortion, the statements of the deceased made after her visit to defendant, which were but recitals and conclusions from statements made to her by defendant, are not admissible for the purpose of proving the fact of pregnancy.—People v. Fritch, 170 Mich. 258.

¶ 1189. In a criminal prosecution against a physician for causing death by abortion, a witness testified that the deceased asked to be referred to a doctor, and referred the witness to respondent. Held, it was not proper to state why the deceased made the inquiry or to express her opinions and what she had heard concerning the respondent for the purpose of proving the fact of her pregnancy.—People v. Fritch, 170 Mich. 258.

¶ 1190. In a criminal prosecution against a physician for causing death by abortion, it is not proper to permit a witness to testify what the deceased told her the respondent had said on the occasion of the visit of the deceased to his office.—People v. Fritch, 170 Mich. 258.

7. Admissions and confessions.

§ 247. In general; nature and form of confession or admission.

Implied or tacit admissions, see post § 250 et seq.
Admissions in form of writing or printing, see post § 248.
Admissions contained in former testimony or pleas to indictments, see post § 249.
Relevancy of admission to the issues, see post § 256.
Admissions by accomplices, see post § 262.
Admissions by prosecuting witness, see post § 263.
Rebuttal and explanation of admissions, see post § 264.
Confessions, voluntariness or coercion, see post §§ 257-261.
Weight and effect as proof, see post § 313.
Admissions to avoid continuances, see ante § 125.
Direction of verdict on confession of accused on the stand, see post ¶ 1872.
Harmless errors in admission or rejection and cure of errors, see post XV.
Erroneous admission of evidence cured by admission of guilt, see post § 555.

¶ 1191. Where, after his arrest, and before his trial, one accused of crime makes a written confession before a notary, under oath, the introduction of the confession in evidence at the trial is admissible, and is not compelling the accused to be a witness against himself, nor is it prohibited by section 32, art. 6 of the Constitution.—People v. Owen, 154 Mich. 571. (Moore, and McAlvay, JJ., dissenting.)

¶ 1192. That the statement of the respondent to the officers at the time of his arrest was taken down stenographically does not render inadmissible previous and different oral statements to them not included in the written report.—People v. Ponsford, 181 Mich. 659.

¶ 1193. A man was indicted for burning a barn to defraud insurers; a statement made by him several months after the burning, "that he had a good insurance on his house, and it might go to blazes with the barn," was not an admission that he burned the barn.—Hamilton v. People, 29 Mich. 173.

¶ 1194. Respondent's saying, after a homicide, "I guess I am all right yet, for they cannot prove it, when no one saw me do it," is not a confession of guilt, and should not be regarded as such in instructing the jury. —People v. Peterson, 93 Mich. 27.

¶ 1195. A statement by a physician to a prosecuting attorney after his arrest for illegally prescribing intoxicating liquor while having good reason to believe the patient intended to use it as a beverage, that he guessed he was "in wrong" as far as a certain patient was concerned, that he wanted to get rid of the matter as quickly as he could, and that he "didn't want it to get into the papers," held not to be a confession or admission of guilty knowledge or belief.—People v. Humphrey, 194 Mich. 10.

¶ 1196. In a bribery case where it was claimed that the only evidence of the bribery was to be found in extrajudicial confessions of parties who were particeps criminis, and that therefore there was no competent proof of the corpus delicti; all testimony that the party charged to have been bribed received a bribe was competent, and as there was a conspiracy, all that defendant said in plotting, planning and carrying it out was res gestæ and did not fall within the definition of confessions, although it might be statements of transactions to his confederates, if they were transactions in furtherance of the enterprise.—People v. McGarry, 136 Mich. 316.

¶ 1197. Upon the trial of a township treasurer for unlawfully appropriating to his own use money received by him in his official capacity, a conversation between him and his successor, after he himself had ceased to be treasurer, may be shown as an admission on his part of a shortage in his accounts.—People v. Seeley, 117 Mich. 263.

§ 248. Writings, prints or records as admissions.

¶ 1198. A death certificate and a sworn certificate made by one who therein described himself as "medical practitioner" and "Dr." are admissible to show that he held himself out as such practitioner.—People v. Phippin, 70 Mich. 6.

¶ 1199. In a prosecution for adultery respondent's letters to one whom he addresses therein as his wife are admissible to prove her marriage to him.—People v. Imes, 110 Mich. 250.

¶ 1200. Evidence of what one person showed to another in print is admissible if it would have been proper to show what he said to him.—People v. Millard, 53 Mich. 63.

¶ 1201. Printed reports of the state officers, printed by the state printer under their direction, are evidence against such officers. —People v. McKinney, 10 Mich. 54.

¶ 1202. On the trial of an information under Comp. L. 1857, § 5771, How. St. § 9149, the account books kept in the office of defendant during his official term, and purporting to show all his receipts and disbursements as state treasurer, are admissible to show that the sums alleged to have been embezzled have not been credited to the state; and this notwithstanding no part of the books is in his handwriting.—People v. McKinney, 10 Mich. 54.

¶ 1203. On the trial of a township treasurer for embezzlement, the record required by How. St. § 739 to be kept by the township clerk, showing the amount charged as received by the respondent from his predecessor, and the other items of his receipts and expenditures during his term of office, are competent evidence; and if it further appears that said record and said items were before the township board and respondent when settlements were made with him, and that he was satisfied with the account, except one item, which was allowed him, the testimony, taken together, is sufficient to establish the receipt of the money charged in the account as having been received by the respondent from his predecessor, and the other items charged against him in the settlement.—People v. Flock, 100 Mich. 512.

¶ 1204. The practice of taking the sworn testimony, in writing, before a notary, of one accused of crime, is useless and not to be commended.—People v. Owen, 154 Mich. 571.

§ 249. Admission by testimony or pleas in other trials.

Admissibility of former testimony in general, see ante § 222.

¶ 1205. The testimony of a witness given upon a codefendant's trial is competent, as an admission, on his own subsequent trial for participation in the same crime, although he did not testify as a witness on his own behalf.—People v. Gallagher, 75 Mich. 512.

¶ 1206. A voluntary plea of guilty by an accused person on preliminary examination, though unnecessary to be made, is such a confession of guilt as may properly be submitted to the jury in connection with like confessions made to others and with the surrounding circumstances.—People v. Gould, 70 Mich. 240.

¶ 1207. In a prosecution for being a disorderly person in that he was a drunkard, evidence of prosecution for drunkenness and plea of guilty on several occasions during the time covered by the complaint is competent as admissions of fact.—People v. Radley, 127 Mich. 627.

§ 250. Implied or tacit admissions.

Falsehood, fabrication, suppression, or concealment as admission, see post §§ 251, 253.
Pleading guilty to lesser offenses, see post § 252.
Flight or resistance to arrest, see post § 254.
Surrendering or abstaining from possible flight, see post § 255.
Offers or attempts at suppression of prosecution by third persons, see also ante § 226.
Admissibility of statements of third persons accusing defendant, see ante § 229.

¶ 1208. Where a man was prosecuted for forging a deed that purported to have been made to him by his putative wife, since dead, it was relevant to show that when her estate was inventoried the land deeded was spoken of in his presence as belonging thereto and that he did not claim it, but stated that some of his money had gone to its purchase, and asked if he could maintain a claim against the estate for the amount.—People v. Van Alstine, 57 Mich. 69.

¶ 1209. On the trial of a person for murder, it is competent for the people to show where he went and what he did after he had testified before the coroner's jury and before his arrest.—People v. Stewart, 75 Mich. 21.

¶ 1210. Stenographer's notes of evidence given in an extradition proceeding, growing out of acts for which a charge of bribery was lodged against respondent, held inadmissible in the prosecution for bribery to show that defendant then admitted the charge by silence.—People v. Daily, 178 Mich. 354.

¶ 1211. Where a respondent was charged with larceny in recapturing mortgaged property replevied from him, it was error to allow the prosecutor to read in evidence a paper which he had drawn up and introduced at the preliminary hearing, calling upon reerty immediately to sale upon such claim under the mortgage, and to bring the property immediately to sale upon such claim after due public notice, and to inform the person from whose possession he had taken the property of the time and place of such sale, since such testimony was irrelevant.—People v. Hillhouse, 80 Mich. 580.

§ 251. ——False or fabricated exculpations.

Pleading to minor offense, see post § 252.
Surrender or abstention from flight, see post § 255.

¶ 1212. In a prosecution for breaking and entering a store in the nighttime, the conduct of a defendant is always admissible, e. g., his falsifications regarding the property found in his possession, or his whereabouts at the time the offense was committed, attempts to abscond, etc.—People v. Trine, 164 Mich. 1.

¶ 1213. Where the prosecution had shown, in a trial of forgery, that, in a chancery cause relating to the mortgage alleged to have been altered, the defendant had endeavored to explain the apparent alteration by comparing the mortgage with a certain other paper, the prosecution was also allowed, by way of refuting this explanation, to show corresponding alterations in the other paper. Evidence of the falsity of such an explanation is pertinent and material, and cannot be objected to on the ground that the evidence which the prosecution had introduced of the defendant's explanation was foreign to the issue, and that the prosecution was therefore bound by and could not disprove it.—Perkins v. People, 27 Mich. 386.

¶ 1214. In a prosecution for seduction, evidence that the defendant procured false depositions and that they were all signed in the same handwriting is admissible, even though he does not use them in his defense.—People v. Adams, 162 Mich. 371.

§ 252. ——Pleas of guilty to minor offenses.

¶ 1215. Where the defendant after an alleged crime goes to two justices of the peace and offers to plead guilty of the charge of assault and battery, evidence of this fact is admissible to show the conduct of the defendant after the offense, it being a voluntary act without any inducement being offered him.—People v. Mulvaney, 171 Mich. 272.

§ 253. ——Falsification or suppression of evidence.

Exclusion of inference from failure of accused to testify, see ante § 140.
Silence at extradition proceedings, see also ante ¶ 1210.

¶ 1216. Evidence that the defendant has attempted to suppress testimony or induce perjury, is admissible and tends to show guilt in a criminal prosecution.—People v. Salsbury, 134 Mich. 537.

¶ 1217. On the issue whether accused had guilty knowledge of the falsity of a statement made by him, his affidavit for a continuance, deposing that a certain absent witness would testify to a statement made to accused on which his statement was based, may be received against him; where all the circumstances and the testimony of the said witness taken on the trial tend to show that the affidavit was knowingly false. It is a circumstance evincive of guilt like the fabrication of false exculpations by accused.—People v. Hoffmann, 142 Mich. 581.

§ 254. ——Flight, concealment or resistance to arrest.

Flight or resistance by accomplice, see ante § 231.

Comments in argument on inferences from attempted flight or falsification, see post § 384.

¶ 1218. The absconding of the party charged as principal, and his concealment after his return, may properly be regarded, in connection with evidence that defendant desired him to leave, as circumstances bearing upon defendant's guilt.—People v. Pitcher, 15 Mich. 397.

¶ 1219. Evidence of the resistance of the accused when arrested is admissible.—Hall v. People, 39 Mich. 717.

¶ 1220. It is proper to show in a criminal case what was done at the time respondent was arrested, and that he resisted the officer. —People v. Burns, 67 Mich. 537.

¶ 1221. Testimony from the prosecution about respondent's being found at the time of his arrest hiding behind some barrels, and that he at first denied his name when asked what it was, was improperly admitted where he denied that he was hiding, and where it did not appear that he knew the sheriff or his deputy, or that there was a warrant out for him, or that he was charged with crime. —People v. Burns, 67 Mich. 537.

¶ 1222. Testimony that the respondent in a robbery case escaped from jail, was properly admitted as against objection on the ground that respondent was at the time of the escape serving for another misdemeanor, and that to make such testimony competent the escape must relate to an attempt to avoid trial of an offense for which the accused was on trial; it appearing that the respondent knew at the time of the escape that he was under arrest for the robbery and would be placed on trial for the offense.—People v. Keep, 123 Mich. 231.

¶ 1223. In a prosecution for an assault with intent to commit murder, the subsequent flight and concealment of defendant cannot be considered as evidence of his guilt.—People v. Cismadija, 167 Mich. 210.

§ 255. ——Surrender or abstention from flight.

¶ 1224. Evidence that one charged with crime voluntarily surrendered after having escaped from jail is inadmissible to remove the inference of guilt arising from the fact of his escape.—People v. Cleveland, 107 Mich. 367.

§ 256. Relevancy of admission to issues.

See also ante ¶¶ 1208, 1211.

Admission of cohabitation as evidence of marriage, see also ante ¶ 832.

Sufficiency of foundation proof of corpus delicti, see post § 266.

¶ 1225. Evidence of an admission by the accused as to the commission of similar larcenies at other times as a business is incompetent on a trial for larceny.—People v. Lapidus, 167 Mich. 53.

¶ 1226. In prosecution for assault, admissions of defendant as to assaults on other persons on occasions distinct from that for which he was on trial, are inadmissible.—People v. Klise, 156 Mich. 373.

¶ 1227. The defendant's admission that he is the brother of the girl's mother, and his treatment as such by the family, are competent evidence in prosecution for incest.—People v. Jenness, 5 Mich. 305.

¶ 1228. Conversations with respondent, after his arrest upon a charge of bastardy, tending to show the act of sexual intercourse, are admissible in a prosecution for seduction.—People v. Hubbard, 92 Mich. 322.

§ 257. Voluntariness; inducement or coercion.

Effect of making statement to or in presence of officers, see post § 258.

Statements made by mistake or not meant to be heard, see post § 259.

Statements obtained by trick or deception, see post § 260.

Voluntariness as court or jury question, see post § 261.

Foundation proofs of voluntariness, see post § 265.

Voluntariness of pleas of guilty, see ante § 113.

¶ 1229. Proof of a confession is never admissible unless it is voluntarily made.—People v. Brockett, 195 Mich. 169.

¶ 1230. A confession to be voluntary must be the free will and accord of defendant without coercion whether from fear of any threat of harm, or inducement by hope of reward, or methods known as "sweating."—People v. Brockett, 195 Mich. 169.

¶ 1231. It is only where statements are drawn from a prisoner by some artifice, promise or threat which induces the hope of benefit, or acts upon his fears, or are made under compulsion, that the law precludes their being used as admissions. If they are free and voluntary, then the motive or intent of the accused in making such statements is not material, as regards their admission in evidence.—People v. Swetland, 77 Mich. 53.

¶ 1232. The written statement of a respondent charged with murder is admissible for the prosecution where the record discloses no undue influence in obtaining it.—People v. Foley, 64 Mich. 148.

¶ 1233. A confession obtained by a private person by saying to the accused: "I know your father, and you had better tell me so I can tell him so that he can help you," is not obtained by duress where there is no reason to believe that the person obtaining it, or the father of the accused, could influence the prosecution.—Ulrich v. People, 39 Mich. 245.

¶ 1234. Confessions of guilt are inadmissible when persons, apparently acting by authority, obtain them by making respondent believe that he will get off easier by making them. So held where the confessions were made to persons who were allowed access to the prisoner's cell after midnight.—People v. Wolcott, 51 Mich. 612.

¶ 1235. A confession was obtained from a weak-minded person under arrest for crime by telling him that the best thing he could do was to own up, giving him drink, and tak ing him in irons to a lawyer's office where he was interrogated with bolted doors and in the presence of those who were hostile to him, and where his answers were taken down in writing and sworn to. Held, that the confession was not voluntary and could not be used against him.—Flagg v. People, 40 Mich 706.

¶ 1236. Admissions made by a respondent charged with rape were not made under duress because so made in the presence of the father of the injured girl in question, who was very excited and made threats against respondent; and in any event there was no error as respondent was sufficiently guarded by a charge stating the effect of admissions made under duress.—People v. Rich, 133 Mich. 14.

§ 258. ——Statements made to officers.

Offering to plead guilty to minor crime, see ante § 252.

Impropriety of taking sworn testimony on being accused of crime, see also ante ¶ 1204.

¶ 1237. An admission of guilt obtained from an accused person by pressure exerted by public officers, is not admissible against him.—People v. Prestige, 182 Mich. 80.

¶ 1238. Voluntary statements of an accused person to public officers made at the time of his arrest are admissible against him. —People v. Ponsford, 181 Mich. 659.

¶ 1239. A confession of crime is not rendered inadmissible by the fact that it was made to and in the presence of police officers, unless induced by threats, promises, or other circumstances amounting to duress.—People v. Owen, 154 Mich. 571.

¶ 1240. To subject an accused person to a severe "grilling" for several hours, and to use pressure for the deliberate purpose of obtaining an admission of guilt to be used against him, is a practice not included among the duties of prosecuting attorney, pears that he volunteered the talk; that it was suggested to him by the officer that he should do his talking with the attorney for his employers, whose property he was charged with having stolen, that he was under no obligation to talk with the witness; and that the only suggestion that savored of possible advantage to the respondent was that he might, by talking with the attorney, avoid trouble and notoriety.—People v. Parsons, 105 Mich. 177.

¶ 1249. Respondent objected to the admission in evidence of a statement made by him to the prosecuting attorney while in custody, and taken down by a stenographer, on the ground that it was made in the course of the preliminary examination, and, under the statute creating the court, inadmissible. An extended colloquy followed between the court and the counsel for the respective parties as to the circumstances under which the statement was made, during which respondent's counsel made the further claim that the statement was involuntary. The statements made during the colloquy were unchallenged by respondent, and tended to negative either that they were involuntary or that they were made on a preliminary hearing, and he offered no testimony upon the subject. Held, that the objections were properly overruled.—People v. Clarke, 105 Mich. 169.

¶ 1250. A confession is not voluntary which is obtained after compelling an accused to sleep for two nights upon the cement floor of a cell and persistently importuning him during such period of confinement to make a confession.—People v. Brockett, 195 Mich. 169.

¶ 1251. The mere fact that a defendant accused of murder makes statements while in jail to the prosecuting attorney in reply to questions, does not create the presumption that said statements were made involuntarily.—People v. Sartori, 168 Mich. 308.

¶ 1252. A deputy sheriff told a defendant that he had better tell him the truth about the alleged crime, so that if defendant was innocent, the officers might know it. Defendant then made statements which by their falsity tended to connect him with the crime. Held, said statements were admissible, no promise of leniency having been made.—People v. Trine, 164 Mich. 1.

§ 259. ——Statements by mistake or not meant to be heard.

See also ante ¶ 1246.

¶ 1253. Statements by one under arrest for murder, and under the control of officers who were unduly exciting his fears, made to a newspaper reporter whom he took to be a lawyer, are inadmissible, even if no inducement was held out to him.—People v. Stewart, 75 Mich. 21.

¶ 1254. An officer may testify to a conversation overheard by him between the respondent in a criminal case and his counsel in the jail.—People v. Durfee, 62 Mich. 487.

§ 260. ——Statements obtained by trick or artifice.

See also ante ¶ 1253.

¶ 1255. While respondent was in jail, the deputy sheriff arranged for one Wilcox, a friend of respondent, to visit him for the ostensible purpose of cutting his hair, but for the real purpose of getting information against him. At Wilcox's suggestion, respondent wrote a letter to be delivered to his wife, in which he made admissions of guilt. Wilcox turned this letter over to the officer. Held, it was admissible in evidence against the respondent as a confession.—People v. Dunnigan, 163 Mich. 349.

§ 261. ——As court or jury question.

Charges on voluntariness, see post § 444.

¶ 1256. It is the province of the court to determine in a case free from doubt whether a confession is voluntary or not before admitting or rejecting the same as evidence; but in case of conflict of testimony, or where there is room for doubt, the court should submit the question to the jury, with instructions that if they are satisfied that inducements were used they should disregard the confession.—People v. Barker, 60 Mich. 277.

¶ 1257. Where the preliminary testimony clearly shows that a statement of an accused person at the time of arrest was voluntarily made, it is the duty of the court to admit it, but if in doubt to admit it and leave it to the jury under proper instructions to determine whether voluntarily made.—People v. Prestige, 182 Mich. 80.

¶ 1258. Where the preliminary testimony makes it clear either that the statement claimed to have been made as an admission or confession is voluntary or involuntary, it is the duty of the trial court to admit or reject it, but if the testimony leaves the question in doubt it is the duty of the court to admit it and leave the question to the jury under proper instructions to determine whether it was voluntarily made.—People v. McClintic, 193 Mich. 589.

¶ 1259. Evidence of respondent's statements or confessions to an officer is competent where the question whether they were freely and voluntarily made is fairly submitted to the jury.—People v. Howes, 81 Mich. 396; People v. Robinson, 86 Mich. 415.

¶ 1260. Where a statement made in jail by one charged with rape, to the effect that he had intercourse with the alleged victim, was testified to by the sheriff as voluntary, while respondent did not testify at all as to the interview, it was for the jury to decide whether it was voluntary.—People v. Flynn, 96 Mich. 276.

§ 262. Admissions by accomplices or privies.

Admissibility of third persons' and accomplices' declarations in general, see ante § 226 et seq.

¶ 1261. While the admissions or declarations of an accused party are competent, the statements of another are purely hearsay, unless made under such circumstances, in the presence and hearing of the accused, that his acquiescence in such statements can be plainly inferred from his demeanor or conduct.—People v. O'Brien, 68 Mich. 468.

¶ 1262. Where two are jointly indicted, and one on the trial of the two admits his own guilt, the admission has no force as evidence against his codefendant.—People v. Stevens, 47 Mich. 411.

¶ 1263. On the joint trial of persons accused of crime the admissions of one made in the other's absence may be admitted as evidence against him, but the jury must be cautioned not to allow them to prejudice the corespondent.—People v. Maunausau, 60 Mich. 15.

¶ 1264. A conspiracy may be shown by the detached acts and statements of the individual conspirators, and in a prosecution therefor the admissions of a confederate after the offense was committed are admissible to prove his own participation, the jury being cautioned not to permit his confessions to prejudice others.—People v. Arnold, 46 Mich. 268.

¶ 1265. Statements made in respondent's absence by a person not charged as an accomplice are inadmissible in aid of the prosecution.—People v. Lyons, 49 Mich. 78.

§ 263. Admissions by prosecuting witness.

¶ 1266. In a prosecution for larceny an offer to show that the deceased prosecuting witness had made a settlement of the money taken by the accused is inadmissible inasmuch as the prosecuting witness is not a party to a criminal case, and therefore his admissions or contradictory statements cannot be introduced as affirmative or original evidence. It was essential to the admissibility of this testimony for impeachment, that the prosecuting witness' attention should have been first called to it.—People v. Peck, 147 Mich. 84.

¶ 1267. Evidence that the prosecutrix had admitted sexual intercourse with another person than the defendant is not admissible in a trial for seduction as proof of a substantive fact, nor to show by itself a want of virtue, though it might be used as impeaching testimony after the proper foundation had been laid for its introduction.—People v. Brewer, 27 Mich. 134.

§ 267. In general; character of accused.

Relevancy of character or trait, see post § 268.
Reputation and personal knowledge or opinion distinguished, see post § 269.
Common rumor or loose talk, see post § 270.
Single instances, see post § 271.
Customs and habits of persons, see post § 272.
Character or reputation of other persons, things and places, see post §§ 273-276.
Weight and effect of character evidence as proof, see post § 816.
Instructions on character evidence, see post § 445.
Character and reputation affecting credibility of witness, see Witnesses, VI, D.

¶ 1273. In every criminal trial the defendant is entitled to prove good reputation, and the jury are at liberty to give it such weight as they think it entitled to.—People v. Garbutt, 17 Mich. 9; Hamilton v. People, 29 Mich. 195; Watson v. Watson, 53 Mich. 168, 177.

¶ 1274. Evidence of good character is admissible not only in a case where doubt otherwise exists, but may be offered for the purpose of creating a doubt.—People v. Jassino, 100 Mich. 536; People v. Humphrey, 194 Mich. 10.

¶ 1275. The character for chastity of a female defendant in a criminal case can be put in issue only by her, and when not so done it cannot be injected into the case by cross-examination, or by rebuttal of such cross-examination improperly allowed.—People v. Connelly, 157 Mich. 260. (Hooker, Grant and Montgomery, JJ., dissenting.)

¶ 1276. It is not competent for the prosecution, on the trial of a criminal case, to introduce evidence that tends only to prove a general disposition to commit crime.—People v. Potter, 5 Mich. 1.

§ 268. Relevancy to issues.

To rebut statements or declarations as to character of person, see ante § 240, ¶ 1140.
Opinion of one expert as to another's qualifications based on reputation, see ante ¶ 967.
Admissibility of evil repute in prosecution for keeping or letting house for disorderly purposes, see also post ¶¶ 1465, 1467.

¶ 1277. Defendant's reputation as a good soldier in the army is irrelevant in a case of homicide.—People v. Garbutt, 17 Mich. 9.

¶ 1278. In a prosecution for perjury it is error to exclude testimony tending to prove that respondent's reputation for truth and veracity is good, and the fact that counsel does not state the purpose of such testimony does not justify its exclusion, the purpose being obviously one bearing on one of the issues in the case.—People v. Albers, 137 Mich. 678.

¶ 1279. In a trial for seducing and debauching an unmarried woman, she being prosecuting witness, evidence of her reputation for morality and virtue at the time of the trial is inadmissible, as her reputation at that time would be injuriously affected by the offense itself when made known.—People v. Brewer, 27 Mich. 134.

¶ 1280. Testimony in a trial for murder that deceased was reputed to be a woman of loose character is inadmissible to sustain respondent's theory that he was rendered insane by reason of a venereal disease communicated to him by her.—People v. Beverly, 108 Mich. 509.

¶ 1281. In a prosecution for larceny, it is competent to inquire into defendant's reputation for honesty in the community where he resides. The inquiry in each case should relate to the trait of character involved in the crime charged.—People v. Ryder, 151 Mich. 187.

§ 269. General reputation or personal knowledge of witness.

¶ 1282. It is not error in a prosecution for perjury to refuse to permit witnesses to give their opinion, based on personal knowledge and not on reputation, of respondent's character for honesty and integrity, it being a settled rule of the common law that such testimony is inadmissible.—People v. Albers, 137 Mich. 678.

§ 270. Rumor and common talk.

¶ 1283. Reputation cannot be shown by rumors at a distance.—People v. Pinkerton, 79 Mich. 110.

§ 271. Single and specific instances.

See also post ¶ 1292.
Single act to rebut good character, see post ¶ 1296.
Admissibility of specific instances of violent temper observed by accused as bearing on killing in self-defense, see also Homicide § 52.

¶ 1284. Specific instances of good conduct held not admissible to show the reputation of a defendant in a prosecution for seduction.—People v. Bollman, 178 Mich. 159.

§ 272. Customs and habits of persons.

Of associates, victims and third persons, see post §§ 273, 274.

¶ 1285. On a trial for robbery the prosecuting witness testified that he was taken by the prisoner to a house of ill-fame, and thence into the street where he was robbed. The defense then sought to show that the prisoner was not accustomed to visit such places. Held immaterial.—People v. Becker, 48 Mich. 43.

¶ 1286. Testimony by the wife of a respondent on trial for burglary that he had left her, that he had admitted he had another wife living, and that he got drunk and abused her—she being called as a witness by the people, and it not appearing that she had any knowledge of the offense or of respondent's connection therewith—is prejudicial and requires reversal.—People v. Betts, 94 Mich. 642.

§ 273. Character of associates, victims and third persons.

Evidence of known dangerous character of deceased to show killing in self-defense, see Homicide § 52.

Quarrelsome character as evidence on alleged killing in self-defense, see Homicide § 52.

¶ 1287. In a prosecution for keeping a house of ill-fame, evidence that one of the inmates of the house had borne the reputation of being a common prostitute is admissible.—People v. Russell, 110 Mich. 46.

¶ 1288. Evidence in a prosecution for keeping a house of ill-fame that one of the inmates of the house has borne the reputation of being a common prostitute, is not so remote as to be incompetent although it relates to reputation three years before, particularly where it covers a period down to the time the offense is charged to have been committed.—People v. Russell, 110 Mich. 46.

¶ 1289. The bad character of a woman on whose premises a person was arrested charged with an assault committed elsewhere cannot be shown upon the prosecution of such person for such offense, in the absence of any showing implicating the woman.—People v. Sweeney, 55 Mich. 586.

¶ 1290. Where there is no pretense that the killing was in self-defense, but rather that defendant had followed the deceased for the apparent purpose of shooting him, evidence showing that deceased was reputed to be a quarrelesome man, that he carried weapons and threatened to use them on defendant, is inadmissible.—People v. Garbutt, 17 Mich. 9.

¶ 1291. Upon a trial for murder, evidence that deceased was reputed to be a woman of loose character is inadmissible in support of the theory that respondent was rendered insane by reason of a venereal disease communicated to him by the deceased.—People v. Beverly, 108 Mich. 509.

¶ 1292. Upon a trial for murder, respondent cannot show that deceased on one occasion held up the officials of a railroad train, even though respondent had been informed of such fact before he shot deceased, since such evidence related to a specific act of violence and was inadmissible.—People v. Farrell, 137 Mich. 127.

§ 274. Reputati relatio

¶ 1293. Offic formed a marr is presumptive People v. Perri ¶ 1294. Und St. § 9222, wh existence of ar be presumed u actually engag evidence of ge munity of the other state, an the business t missible as ten facto a bank bank."—Jennin

§ 275. Reputati

¶ 1295. In house of ill-fa the house as s ing a convicti admissible in c —People v. Wl

¶ 1295a. In house of ill-far tation of the l the informatio of value to pro in connection v dence that the agement had date of the in continued up charged in Wheeler, 142 M

§ 276. Rebuttal

¶ 1296. In s of the good ch be met by evid mitted an act c son at another cumstances.—P 732.

¶ 1297. In s sault and bat ness had testi tion was good, ination if the had not prese ployer saying spondent was not permit the in the colloqu was made ap petition had b was error.—Pe

¶ 1298. A ci committed in s tending to sho of his fellows cross-examinat of this circus, how many different fights with outsiders have you been engaged in?" was proper in rebuttal.—People v. Murray, 52 Mich. 288.

9. Evidence addressed to the senses; real evidence.

§ 277. In general; articles subject of or connected with crime.

Burglars' tools and other incriminating articles, see post § 278.
Comparisons of handwriting, see post § 279.
Exhibition of person or corporal injuries, see post § 280.
Demonstrations and tests in presence of jury, see post § 281.
Things seen by jury on view, see ante § 150.
Real objects and experiments as evidence in civil cases, see Evidence, IX.
Seizure and keeping of property or evidence found on prisoner at time of arrest, see Arrest § 26; Crimes § 36.

¶ 1299. Articles remaining in a store after a burglary committed therein are admissible to identify similar articles found in the possession of the party charged with the crime, by showing that all bear like evidences of shop wear or exposure.—People v. Van Dam, 107 Mich. 425.

¶ 1300. In a murder case it is not error to permit the counsel for the people to exhibit the clothing of the murdered man to the jury, it being proper to show the circumstances under which the crime was committed, and how near to each other the parties were at the time of the killing, and it being claimed that the clothing exhibited some evidence of such fact.—People v. Wright, 89 Mich. 70.

§ 278. Incriminating articles; burglars' tools.

Proof of fact of possession as relevant evidence, see ante § 174.
Admissibility of guns, pistols and weapons in homicide, see also Homicide § 46.

¶ 1301. Admission in evidence of burglar's tools found in defendant's possession on his arrest nearly four years after the commission of the offense for which he was being tried, is reversible error.—People v. Courtney, 178 Mich. 137.

¶ 1302. The sheriff's testimony that he was told by the chief of police in the city where defendant was arrested that certain burglar's tools were taken from his room, held insufficient to admit such testimony and the tools as admissions, where it merely appeared that defendant was present when the tools were taken, and no acquiescence of any kind was shown.—People v. Courtney, 178 Mich. 137.

§ 279. Comparisons of handwriting or documents by jury.

Admissibility and competency of document for comparison, see post § 285.
Questioning experts on handwriting by comparison, see Evidence § 297.
Writing name in presence of jury for purpose of showing ability to write, see post ¶ 1307.
Overcoming expert testimony by comparison of writings by jury, see post ¶ 1395.

¶ 1303. In a prosecution for larceny, where a draft was properly in evidence, and respondent introduced certain receipts, it is not error to permit a comparison of the handwriting on the two documents.—People v. Hutchings, 137 Mich. 527.

¶ 1304. The genuineness of the seal of a court of record may be proved or disproved by comparison.—People v. Marion, 29 Mich. 31.

§ 280. Exhibition of person or of corporal injuries.

Inspection of person in civil cases by jury on question of identity or resemblance, see Evidence § 573.

¶ 1305. In a criminal prosecution for assault the person upon whom the assault was made may be allowed to exhibit his injuries to the jury.—People v. Sutherland, 104 Mich. 468.

§ 281. Demonstrations and tests by accused or witness.

Requiring demonstrations and tests as compelling self-crimination, see ante § 153.
Nonexpert opinions based on subsequent experiments, see ante § 202.
Testimony based on experiments and comparisons made after the fact in issue, see also ante § 164.

¶ 1306. A prisoner on trial for a crime cannot be required, against objection, to try on a shoe to determine whether tracks found at the scene of the offense were his own; nor, if he objects, can he properly be required to measure the shoe after trying it on. But if he tries it on without objection, the ruling that he must measure it is not prejudicial error, as any witness could do it is well as he.—People v. Mead, 50 Mich. 228.

¶ 1307. Where, on a trial of a person for forgery, the defense is that the note was drawn by the defendant and delivered to a third party, who returned it, signed apparently by the payor by her mark, and that the defendant purchased it in good faith, and the payor denies signing the note, and testifies that she can write, it is error to permit the payor to write her name upon a piece of paper and allow the prosecution to introduce the paper in evidence for the purpose of showing that she can write; since the effect may go beyond such purpose.—People v. Schick, 75 Mich. 592.

10. Documents as evidence.

§ 282. In general; relevancy and materiality.

Documents connected with the crime, see post § 283.

Admissibility in whole or in part, see post § 284.

Documents for comparison of writing, see post § 285.

Particular public and official records and writings, see post §§ 286-295.

Private writings, see post § 296.

Medical and scientific books, see post § 297.

Maps and diagrams, see post § 298.

Pictures and portraits, see post § 299.

Authentication of documents and foundation proofs to admit them, see post § 300.

Purposes for which public records or writings may be received, see also post §§ 287, 288.

Matters provable by private books and writings, see also post § 296.

Admissibility of other writings as res gestæ of forgery, see ante § 241.

Falsity of seal as relevant to impeach document, see also ante ¶ 676.

Admissibility of document as court question, see also post ¶ 1321.

Mode of offering documents and extent of matter put in evidence by offer, see post § 341.

Best and secondary evidence, see ante §§ 184-194.

Writings as hearsay, see ante § 223.

Writings or prints as admissions or confessions, see ante § 248.

Admission of document as infraction of right to confront witness, see post § 340.

Production and inspection of documents before trial or offer in evidence, see ante § 103.

Harmless errors in admission or rejection and cure of errors, see post XV.

Reading from documents in argument to jury, see post § 389.

Taking documents and papers to jury room, see post § 460.

Competency of documents as evidence in civil cases, see Evidence, VIII.

¶ 1308. On an issue of whether criminal abortion was the cause of death in an action for manslaughter, diagrams of the female organs found in a medical book were inadmissible where they did not apply to the case and state of facts under the issue being presented.—People v. Sessions, 58 Mich. 594.

¶ 1309. In a prosecution for assault and battery growing out of the presentment of a drain petition for signature, it is not error to refuse to compel production of the petition, it being irrelevant to the crime.—People v. Kenyon, 93 Mich. 19.

§ 283. Documents subject of or connected with the crime.

Document related to subject of quarrel in which assault occurred, see also ante ¶ 1309.

forged can only be made with such writings as are part of the files of the cause or as are legally in evidence for some other purpose than that of such comparison. Hence probate files including the will cannot be put in evidence in a prosecution for forging a deed to obtain a proved signature of the grantor who was also the testator.—People v. Parker, 67 Mich. 222.

¶ 1317. A diary taken from a prisoner upon proof merely of admissions that it belonged to him cannot be admitted in evidence as a basis for comparison in handwriting to prove forgery by him of other instruments. Possession and ownership of a document do not authorize the inference that the owner can write, or that he wrote the matter contained in it.—Van Sickle v. People, 29 Mich. 61.

§ 286. Public records.

Judicial records and transcripts, see post § 287.
Deed and title records, see post § 288.
Record of preliminary examination or depositions taken thereat, see post §§ 289, 290.
Coroner's verdict and minutes, see post § 292.
Official certificates of search or of contents of records, see post § 293.
Certificates of marriage, birth, death, etc., see post § 294.
Statute books and law reports, see post § 295.
Portions of records, see ante § 284.
Foundation proofs of character and authenticity of the record, see post § 300.
Best and secondary evidence of records, see ante § 186.
Public reports and documents as admissions by official preparing them, see ante § 248.
Certificates, records and official documents as evidence in civil cases, see Evidence, VIII, C.

¶ 1318. The record kept by the clerk of the state house of correction pursuant to How. St. §§ 9771, 9772, is a public record, and may be introduced in evidence whenever its contents are material to the issue, or certified copies thereof may be introduced.—People v. Kemp, 76 Mich. 410.

¶ 1319. "Official registers," e. g., a record of licenses, when produced as evidence and shown to come from the proper official depository, are as a rule admissible in evidence without further attestation.—People v. Davis, 171 Mich. 241.

¶ 1320. The weather record kept at a signal station of the United States is saved from being hearsay evidence by the presumption arising from its being an official document.—People v. Dow, 64 Mich. 717.

§ 287. ——Judicial records and transcripts.

Best evidence of judicial proceedings and writings, see ante § 186.
Records of preliminary examination and depositions taken down thereat, see post §§ 289-291.
Modes of proving judgments and judicial doings, see also Evidence § 545 et seq.
Civil judgments as evidence or estoppel in criminal cases, see Former Adjudication § 12.
Criminal judgments as res adjudicata, see Former Adjudication §§ 10, 11.
Transcript of former testimony as memoranda to refresh memory of witness, see Examination of Witnesses § 24.
Minutes of testimony on preliminary examination as memoranda to refresh memory, see Examination of Witnesses § 24.
Warrant and papers as evidence on claim of lawful resistance of arrest, see Homicide § 52.
Writ and papers pertaining thereto as evidence on claim of lawful defense of property in prosecution for homicidal assault, see Homicide § 52.

¶ 1321. In proving a divorce, in a prosecution for adultery, the entire chancery record may be introduced if its legal result is all that is made known to the jury. The fact of the decree and its validity are for the court alone and to be determined from the record.—People v. Broughton, 49 Mich. 339.

¶ 1322. In a prosecution for desertion and abandonment of a wife and minor child evidence consisting of a complaint and warrant in a prior similar case in which there was no conviction against the same defendant is admissible for the purpose of fixing the date of the first arrest where there is testimony in the case as to acts happening just before and after the first arrest.—People v. Schelske, 187 Mich. 497.

¶ 1323. In a prosecution for perjury alleged to have been committed upon a trial for murder, the papers returned by the examining magistrate in the murder case may be introduced in evidence for the purpose of showing the regularity of such proceedings.—People v. Macard, 109 Mich. 623.

¶ 1324. It seems that the judgment in a suit in which perjury is alleged to have been committed, is inadmissible as evidence of guilt or innocence in a prosecution for the perjury.—People v. Albers, 137 Mich. 678.

§ 288. ——Deed and title records.

See also ante ¶¶ 1310, 1311.
Portions of road record, see ante ¶ 1315.

¶ 1325. How. St. § 5685, making the record of conveyances, and other instruments authorized to be recorded, prima facie evidence, does not apply when the question of the forgery of the original instrument is in issue either in a criminal or civil suit.—People v. Swetland, 77 Mich. 53.

§ 289. Records of preliminary examination.

¶ 1326. It is proper though not necessary for the prosecution in a criminal case to introduce the warrant and return of the examining magistrate, said instruments being part of the case, and every juror being presumed to know that a certificate of probable cause is usually necessary to such proceedings.—People v. Case, 105 Mich. 92.

§ 290. Transcripts of depositions given on preliminary hearing.

To prove testimony given on which perjury is predicated, see post ¶ 1503.

Incompetency of reporter's transcript when not authenticated by reporter who took the notes, see also ante ¶ 912.

Reading from depositions in argument to jury, see post § 389.

Taking down and signing testimony on preliminary hearing, see Arrest, VII.

¶ 1327. The deposition of a witness upon preliminary examination is not competent evidence of the commission of the offense.—People v. Lindgren, 128 Mich. 694.

¶ 1328. The deposition of the complaining witness taken at the preliminary examination cannot be used as substantive evidence on the trial of a criminal cause, where the deponent may be produced as a witness.—People v. Harrington, 186 Mich. 482.

¶ 1329. The testimony of a girl alleged to have been raped by accused, which she gave on the preliminary examination and which was then reduced to writing, is admissible as impeaching evidence only, when she testifies on trial, and is not in that event substantive evidence on the issues; as against her contrary testimony at the trial it will not sustain a conviction.—People v. Miner, 138 Mich. 290.

¶ 1330. Where on a second trial for rape the prosecutrix testifies that her evidence on the previous trial as to the guilt of the accused was false, her affidavit made before a justice of the peace before the issuance of a warrant for the arrest of the accused, is not admissible as substantive proof of the latter's guilt.—People v. Ayers, 186 Mich. 366.

¶ 1331. Where on a second trial for rape the prosecutrix testifies that her evidence on the previous trial as to the guilt of the accused was false, her affidavit made before a justice of the peace previous to the issuance of a warrant, is admissible only as affecting her credibility.—People v. Ayers, 186 Mich. 366.

¶ 1332. A defendant's deposition on his preliminary examination may be introduced in evidence by the prosecution upon the trial. —People v. Prague, 72 Mich. 178.

¶ 1333. In a trial for murder, a witness at the time of the trial was about to be confined, and coul a deposition bef
The defendant
by counsel, and examine her. A the defendant
the court sugge witness be take gestion defend was not error t sition taken bef
Droste, 160 Mi

§ 291. ——Read
tion.

Proper practice
Arrest, VII

¶ 1334. It is mony on prelim notes and a t over to the wit
Mich. 334.

¶ 1335. Whe preliminary ex criminal comp oath and was the witness be so certified wa warrant and o
circuit court,
with How. St.
67 Mich. 95.

§ 292. Coroner

¶ 1336. The ner are inadm icide if offere spondent's tes statements be Coughlin, 67 M

§ 293. Certifica record

Admissibility on exister
ante § 158

Sufficiency of with searc
§ 319, ¶ 14

Insufficiency o trate sear reported

¶ 1337. Upo certificate of diligently sear to find the re certain person
no such marr
v. Goodrode, 1

§ 294. Certific

Eyewitness te of marria

Authenticating

Conclusiveness
¶ 1367.

Modes of proving marriage, see ante § 176; and see generally Marriage, III.

¶ 1338. A foreign certificate of marriage is inadmissible in a criminal prosecution for adultery.—People v. Imes, 110 Mich. 250.

¶ 1339. A certificate of marriage is admissible in a prosecution for adultery, when accompanied by proof of the identity of the parties.—People v. Isham, 109 Mich. 72.

§ 295. Statute books and law reports to prove laws.

Best evidence of foreign statutes and ordinances, see ante § 185.

¶ 1340. Under Comp. L. 1871, § 5935, How. St. § 7508, admitting as prima facie evidence authoritative printed copies of the statutes of any of the United States, the Revised Statutes of New York for 1852 were admitted as prima facie evidence of the law of marriage as it stood in that state in 1869, it not being shown that any change had intervened.—People v. Calder, 30 Mich. 85.

¶ 1341. The construction placed upon a state's marriage laws by the court of last resort of such state may be shown by the published reports of the court.—People v. McQuaid, 85 Mich. 123.

§ 296. Private books and writings.

Bills, notes, mortgages, etc., connected with or the subject of the crime, see ante § 283.

City directory as evidence of source of information, see ante ¶¶ 848, 860.

Best and secondary evidence, see ante § 187.

Private books as documentary evidence in civil cases, see Evidence, VIII, A, B.

¶ 1342. Where the existence of a certain person was in issue in a suit, and testimony was introduced tending to show that he worked for a certain party, then deceased, at a given date, and the books kept by such employer showed his accounts with his other employees during the period stated, but the name of such person did not appear thereon, such books are admissible in evidence, the absence of such name being a circumstance which it was competent to show.—People v. Kemp, 76 Mich. 410.

¶ 1343. The pass books and signature book of a savings bank are admissible, with the testimony of bank officers, as original documents and res gestæ in showing the existence of deposits.—People v. Hurst, 41 Mich. 328.

¶ 1344. The cash blotter is no part of the bank books, but simply a memorandum for the cashier or teller, and changes in its entries are not evidence of embezzlement by the banker.—People v. Wadsworth, 63 Mich. 500.

¶ 1345. On the question whether accused falsely pretended with design to cheat the state in rendering a claim for coroner's fees that deceased was a "stranger not belonging to this state," whereas she was and had been a resident, it was not error to introduce and read from city directories in possession of accused and proved to be correct showing her residence and the place thereof; since it would thus appear that if the directories were consulted they afforded information contrary to that certified, and if not consulted, being commonly used sources of information, but instead of it devious and unpromising sources were resorted to, an inference against belief in the truth of the facts stated would arise.—People v. Hoffmann, 142 Mich. 431.

§ 297. Medical and other scientific books.

Relevancy to issues, see also ante ¶ 1308.

In civil cases, see Evidence § 511.

Use of books in examining witness, see Examination of Witnesses § 75.

¶ 1346. The statements of a medical book cannot properly be put in evidence as authority on medical questions, though testimony as to what it says, if actually admitted, can be contradicted by producing the book.—People v. Millard, 53 Mich. 63.

§ 298. Maps and diagrams.

Relevancy to issues, see also ante ¶ 1308.

Use in examining witnesses, see Examination of Witnesses § 18.

¶ 1347. In a prosecution for larceny from a safe, a plan of the room in which the safe stood, which was shown to be approximately correct although it did not contain some of the details, was admissible to show that a witness standing at a certain point could see respondent at the safe.—People v. Mindeman, 157 Mich. 120.

§ 299. Pictures and portraits.

As documents in civil cases, see Evidence § 505.

¶ 1348. In a prosecution for burglary, where respondent after his arrest had denied being at the place in question and had claimed to be a resident of a certain city, a picture which the chief of police testified was shown to respondent after his arrest, and which respondent at first had denied but later admitted being a picture of himself, was properly admitted in evidence for the purpose of showing the falsity of statements made by respondent as to his identity.—People v. McDonald, 133 Mich. 366.

¶ 1349. In a prosecution for larceny a photograph of the defendant taken shortly after the theft is admissible in evidence to identify the defendant, where the evidence shows that he has put on glasses since that time and that he declined to remove them before the jury.—People v. Carey, 125 Mich. 535.

§ 300. Authentication and foundation proofs.

See also ante ¶ 1317.

Connecting proofs, see also ante ¶ 1322.

Self-proving nature of clerk's certificate to acknowledgment, see also post ¶ 1489.

Order of proofs of foundation facts and of the document, see post § 359.

¶ 1350. Writings are not admissible in evidence as public records without proof of their official character. The recitals contained in them of the character of the officers whose acts they are offered to prove are not evidence for such purpose.—Hall v. People, 21 Mich. 456.

¶ 1351. A weather record kept at United States signal station is not admissible in a criminal case unless the observer who took it is called to confront accused, though in civil cases it might be admitted as a public record.—People v. Dow, 64 Mich. 717.

¶ 1352. The record made in another state of a certificate of marriage, which certificate bears no date, and neither declares when the marriage took place nor shows where the minister who performed the ceremony resided, and which appears to have been recorded nearly three years after the alleged marriage, and after a prosecution for bigamy on a subsequent marriage has been commenced, is entitled to no consideration, and is not admissible as evidence for any purpose.—People v. Lambert, 5 Mich. 349.

¶ 1353. Upon a trial for rape upon a girl whose age was disputed, an unproved, unauthenticated paper purporting to be a certificate of marriage (How. St. § 859) of the girl's parents, and to have been made by a justice of the peace, but which was not filed in the county clerk's office until fifteen years after its date, while the trial was in progress, such delay being unaccounted for, was inadmissible.—People v. Etter, 81 Mich. 570.

¶ 1353a. In a prosecution for keeping open a saloon on Sunday in violation of the statute, the testimony of the prosecuting attorney as to the liquor dealer's bond and his license is properly admissible where he identifies the records and testifies that he found them in the county treasurer's office, although he states on cross-examination that all he knows of the records is what some one else told him.—People v. Davis, 171 Mich. 241.

C. QUANTITY, DEGREE AND SUFFICIENCY OF PROOF.

§ 301. In general; overcoming reasonable doubt.

Number of witnesses required, see post § 302.

Weight and credibility of evidence, see post § 303.

Conclusiveness of proofs, see post § 304.

Circumstantial proofs, see post § 305.

Sufficiency of proofs of particular elements of the crime, see post §§ 306-309.

Sufficiency of proofs of particular facts, see post §§ 319-322.

Sufficiency of proof of included lesser offenses, see post § 323.

Sufficiency of proofs of particular crimes, see post §§ 324-324w.

Instructions on reasonable doubt, see post § 406.

Insufficiency of evidence or contrariety of evidence to verdict as ground for new trial, see post § 477.

Necessity of exception or objection to failure of evidence, see post § 516.

Defect or lack of proof as harmless error, see post § 545.

Errors in evidence rendered immaterial by sufficiency of other competent evidence, see post § 551 et seq.

Sufficiency of bill of exceptions to show all the evidence for purpose of reviewing sufficiency, see post § 595.

Preponderance rule in civil cases, see Evidence, X.

Proof of criminal acts in issue civilly, see Evidence §§ 578, 585.

Sufficiency of evidence to support issuance of warrant, see Arrest § 13.

Sufficiency of evidence to justify binding over, see Arrest § 34.

¶ 1354. A verdict in a criminal case cannot properly rest on a mere preponderance of conflicting evidence, but should be based on proof that leaves no reasonable doubt of guilt.—People v. Sligh, 48 Mich. 54.

¶ 1355. The jury in a criminal action should acquit if they cannot all agree, beyond a reasonable doubt, that respondent was guilty as claimed by the prosecution.—People v. Hare, 57 Mich. 505.

¶ 1356. The rule of reasonable doubt is not confined to felonies.—Elliott v. Van Buren, 33 Mich. 49.

¶ 1357. A reasonable doubt is not a mere imaginary, captious or possible doubt, but a fair doubt based on reason and common sense, and growing out of the testimony in the case; it is such a doubt as will leave one's mind, after a careful examination of all the evidence, in such a condition that he cannot say he has an abiding conviction to a moral certainty of the defendant's guilt.—People v. Finley, 38 Mich. 482.

¶ 1358. A reasonable doubt is not farfetched, speculative or arbitrary, but is such that, after looking over the testimony and considering all the facts proved to their satisfaction, and the natural circumstances surrounding the facts, the jury are still unable to say that the accused is guilty.—McGuire v. People, 44 Mich. 286.

¶ 1359. Reasonable doubt is such a doubt as leaves one's mind, after a careful examination of all the evidence, in such a condition that he cannot say he has an abiding conviction to a moral certainty of respondent's guilt.—People v. Flynn, 96 Mich. 276.

¶ 1360. A "reasonable doubt" is a fair doubt growing out of the testimony as distinguished from an imaginary, captious or possible doubt; an instruction to the effect that it must be an "obstruction of an insurmountable character" is erroneous.—People v. Burke, 157 Mich. 108.

¶ 1361. It is only necessary that the jury should be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt of the guilt of a person charged with crime, and it is not necessary for the court to charge that the elements of the offense must be proved to a moral certainty.—People v. Coulon, 151 Mich. 200.

¶ 1362. The authority of an agent to attempt to suppress testimony or induce perjury in the interest of a defendant in a criminal prosecution may be shown by circumstances and need not be proved beyond a reasonable doubt.—People v. Salsbury, 134 Mich. 537.

¶ 1363. Conviction should not be claimed upon evidence showing only part of the res gestæ or whole transaction, if it appears that the evidence of the rest is attainable.—Hurd v. People, 25 Mich. 405.

§ 302. Number of witnesses required.

In perjury cases, see post ¶ 1500 et seq.
Duty to call witnesses for state, see post § 349 et seq.

¶ 1364. Except in case of some peculiar offenses a fact need not be proved by more than one witness.—Knowles v. People, 15 Mich. 408.

§ 303. Weight and credibility.

Of presumptions, see post § 311.
Functions and provinces of court and jury in weighing and considering evidence, see post § 397.
Charges on weighing and crediting evidence, see post § 433 et seq.
Charges on weight and credibility of testimony of accused, see post § 440.
Taking case from jury on insufficiency or lack of evidence, see post § 399.
Credibility of witnesses in general, see Witnesses, VI.
Impeachment and contradiction or corroboration of impeached witnesses, see Witnesses, VI, D.

¶ 1365. The weight of evidence is a question for the jury.—People v. Pitcher, 15 Mich. 397.

¶ 1366. In seeking to prove a sequence of facts, the establishment of any one of them often aids in establishing the others, the average mind requiring less proof of a fact naturally following another established or admitted fact, so that an apparent agreement of several persons that a fact exists gives additional weight to the testimony of each when they later testify to personal knowledge of such fact.—People v. Lahnala, 193 Mich. 144.

§ 304. Conclusiveness of proofs.

Conclusiveness and effect of presumptions, see post § 311.
Conclusiveness of criminal judgments as res adjudicata, see Former Adjudication § 10.
Conclusiveness of civil judgments offered as evidence in prosecutions, see also Former Adjudication § 11.

¶ 1367. In a prosecution in this state for bigamy defendant offered in evidence the record from a court of another state of a divorce from his first wife, which recited that the parties resided in that state. Held (by two of the three justices sitting), that the prosecution could show that the parties did not so reside, and that the suit was fraudulent and collusive.—People v. Dawell, 25 Mich. 247.

¶ 1368. The prosecution is bound in a criminal action by the testimony upon which the theory of its case rests.—People v. Hare, 57 Mich. 505.

§ 305. Circumstantial proofs.

To prove conspiracy, see post ¶ 1464.
Circumstances regarded as admissible, see ante § 146 et seq.
Admissibility of conclusions of witness based on narrated circumstances, see ante §§ 198 et seq., 203-206.
Conclusiveness and effect of presumptions, see post § 311.
Instructions on reasonable doubt in circumstantial proofs, see post § 406.

¶ 1369. Where conviction is sought upon evidence purely circumstantial, every material circumstance or link in the chain of testimony must be proved beyond a reasonable doubt. People v. Foley, 64 Mich. 148; People v. Aikin, 66 Mich. 460.

¶ 1370. A conviction may be based on circumstantial evidence; but circumstances cannot be presumed.—People v. Foley, 64 Mich. 148.

¶ 1371. If any of the facts or circumstances established is inconsistent with the hypothesis of guilt, such hypothesis cannot be true.—People v. Aiken, 66 Mich. 460.

¶ 1372. In criminal cases not only must each of the facts from which an inference is drawn be proved beyond any reasonable doubt, but the inference itself must be such as admits of no other rational conclusion.—People v. Sessions, 58 Mich. 594.

§ 306. Corpus delicti.

Insufficiency of confession alone, see post § 314.

Reasonable doubt as to corpus delicti in murder cases, see Homicide § 61.

¶ 1373. Direct proof of the corpus delicti cannot always be obtained. It and the defendant's guilt can rest together on one foundation of circumstantial evidence.—People v. Hawksley, 82 Mich. 71.

¶ 1374. In the absence of direct evidence of the cause of death, the jury in a prosecution for murder should acquit if the fact of death can be accounted for upon any reasonable theory other than that of respondent's guilt.—People v. Stewart, 75 Mich. 21.

¶ 1375. Where in a prosecution for breaking and entering a store in the nighttime, there is testimony showing the breaking and entering and the stealing of the property of the complaining witness in the nighttime, prima facie proof of the corpus delicti is established, and evidence to connect defendant with the transaction is then admissible. —People v. Trine, 164 Mich. 1.

§ 307. Venue or place.

¶ 1376. The omission by the state treasurer to charge himself with the receipt of moneys in the county where his office is required to be kept, or a denial of its receipt there, would be evidence to go to the jury of embezzlement in that county.—People v. McKinney, 10 Mich. 54.

¶ 1377. Evidence that a theft was committed in the township of Dorr is sufficient evidence of venue in a prosecution before a justice of the peace of Allegan county.—People v. Grimm, 182 Mich. 643.

§ 308. Responsibility or complicity of accused.

See also ante ¶ 1375.

In proving conspiracy, see post § 324c.

In proving keeping of disorderly house, see post § 324d.

In aiding in concealment of stolen goods, see post ¶ 1507 et seq.

In homicide, see Homicide § 68.

¶ 1378. No one can be convicted, even under a joint information, without proof of his individual guilt.—People v. Lange, 56 Mich. 549.

¶ 1379. Two men were jointly indicted and tried for a burglary. The theory of the prosecution was that one of them broke and entered the building while the other was present aiding and abetting. The one supposed to have broken and entered admitted his guilt on the trial. Held, that it was still necessary to give evidence as to the other which should cover the whole case.—People v. Stevens, 47 Mich. 411.

¶ 1380. A person charged with arson is also charged with being personally present where he could commit the offense; and on a plea of not guilty the prosecution have the burden of proving the fact beyond reasonable doubt, whether the doubt arise from a defect in the evidence for the prosecution or from the impression produced by the evidence for the defense.—People v. Fairchild, 48 Mich. 31.

¶ 1381. In a prosecution for obtaining property by the assignment of a fabricated mortgage and accompanying note, proof by comparison of handwritings, that the signature to the assignment and the indorsements on the note were in the same handwriting as the body of the mortgage, and that the signatures were forged, is not sufficient to connect the respondent with the offense if it is not also shown, as a basis for the comparison, that the handwriting in any paper is actually his.—People v. Cline, 44 Mich. 290.

¶ 1382. Where a plea of not guilty is interposed to an information for arson the jury must acquit, if on the whole evidence they have a reasonable doubt as to any material fact covered by the essential averments, including the actual participation of the accused.—People v. Fairchild, 48 Mich. 31.

¶ 1383. On the trial of a conspiracy to extort money from a firm by entrapping it into violating the revenue laws by selling to them a larger quantity of liquor than the law allows, evidence that one of the defendants advised the others, before the purchase of the liquor, as to what the law applicable to the case was, and continued consulting with them after they had succeeded in the plot, and then endeavored to persuade the accused to settle the prosecution by the payment of a large sum of money, is sufficient to warrant the submission of the case to the jury as to such defendant.—People v. Saunders, 25 Mich. 119.

¶ 1384. The connection of accused, indicted as one aiding and abetting a burglary, is sufficiently shown by evidence that he was loitering about the office building in which the crime was committed, that his presence there as a stranger in the city and at the times in question, and especially at the time of the commission of the crime, was such that it could not be accounted for otherwise than on the hypothesis that he knew what was going on and was there to keep a watch. —People v. McDonald, 133 Mich. 366.

¶ 1385. On an information for feloniously burning a building with intent to defraud an insurance company, the circumstantial evidence that the defendant unsuccessfully endeavored to procure others to burn the building, and when he failed he said he would burn it himself, that he placed a jug containing either kerosene or gasoline in the house, and so arranged that it could readily be ignited, that after the building burned he endeavored to divert suspicion to others by procuring false testimony, and that the building was insured for more than its value was sufficient to justify the finding of the jury that the defendant was actually and personally present at the burning or set fire to or burned the building, and this is so despite the fact that there were witnesses who swore that he was four miles away at the time the building was burned.—People v. Mix, 149 Mich. 260.

¶ 1386. In a criminal prosecution against two colored women jointly for stealing money from the person of the prosecuting witness, a white man, who was in company with another white man at the time of the theft, the latter being engaged in conversation by one of the defendants, while the other, during a conversation with the prosecuting witness, picked the latter's pocket, evidence held sufficient to sustain a conviction of both defendants.—People v. Smith, 196 Mich. 459.

§ 309. Specific intent or knowledge and other qualifying elements.

Inference of absence of malice on information for careless use of weapons, see post ¶ 1512.

Weight of presumption as to intent, see post § 311.

¶ 1387. Where an intent is made the gist of an offense that intent should be shown by such evidence as, uncontradicted, will fairly authorize it to be presumed beyond a reasonable doubt.—People v. Getchell, 6 Mich. 496.

¶ 1388. Conviction in a criminal prosecution involving the question of intent (such as larceny) cannot be based upon counsel's admissions.—People v. Hall, 86 Mich. 132.

§ 310. Defensive proofs; particular defenses.

Sufficiency of alibi proofs, see post § 320.

Sufficiency of proofs of insanity, see post § 321.

¶ 1389. The defense of an alibi is as legitimate as any other, and the witnesses who testify to it are entitled to like credit with others.—People v. Hare, 57 Mich. 505.

¶ 1390. Proving an alibi does not impose the burden of showing that the accused was absent at the very time at which the evidence for the prosecution tends to show the offense was committed, nor need it absolutely preclude the possibility of his being at both places.—Stuart v. People, 42 Mich. 255.

§ 311. Conclusiveness and effect of presumptions.

Presumptions as to complicity of parties in transaction, see ante § 132.

Presumption arising from possession of incriminating goods, see also ante ¶¶ 659, 660.

¶ 1391. The presumption that one intends the consequences of his acts, though a weighty circumstance, is not conclusive in the case of a crime the gist of which is the intent itself.—People v. Sweeney, 55 Mich. 586.

¶ 1392. Possession of stolen goods immediately after the theft may sometimes be almost conclusive of guilt, but the presumption weakens as the period of time between the theft and the possession increases, and may scarcely arise at all if others besides the accused have had equal access with himself to the place where the goods were found.—Gablick v. People, 40 Mich. 292.

§ 312. Expert and opinion evidence.

Misleading effect of allowing experts to sit within railing during taking of testimony, see post ¶ 1531.

Weight and sufficiency of expert testimony in homicide cases, see also Homicide, VII, C.

Weight and credibility in civil cases, see Evidence § 600.

¶ 1393. Facts shown by credible testimony cannot be overcome by evidence of opinions; and a jury must not form its own opinion in disregard of such testimony.—People v. Millard, 53 Mich. 63.

¶ 1394. While the testimony of experts is not always the most reliable, and, comparatively, it has been held to have little value, such witnesses are to be judged from the same standpoint as other witnesses, and the fact that they are employed, or that they differ in their conclusions, does not justify the assumption, as a matter of law, that their testimony is open to suspicion.—People v. Seaman, 107 Mich. 348.

¶ 1395. Where the jury in a prosecution for forgery has the alleged forgery before it for inspection, together with genuine writings, it is not to rely solely on the testimony of experts, but must use its own judgment in deciding upon the effect of a comparison of the papers as evidence in the case.—People v. Gale, 50 Mich. 237.

¶ 1396. Testimony of experts is to be judged for credibility as that of other witnesses is to be judged, having regard to the possibilities of bias, prejudice and pride of opinion.—People v. Vanderhoof, 71 Mich. 158, per Morse, J., and Sherwood, C. J.

§ 313. Confessions and admissions.

Foundation proofs to admit confession, see ante §§ 265, 266.

Sufficiency of proof of corpus delicti to support admission of confession, see ante § 266.

Necessity and sufficiency of corroboration, see post § 314.

Charges on confessions and admissions, see post § 444.

¶ 1397. Evidence consisting of admissions by accused on the stand, held to justify a conviction under Comp. L. 1897, § 11591, making it a crime for an officer of a corporation to embezzle its funds, he having been its secretary and having used its funds for personal accounts.—People v. Butts, 128 Mich. 208.

¶ 1398. A conviction in a case involving the question of intent cannot be based upon the admissions of counsel that such intent existed.—People v. Hall, 86 Mich. 132.

§ 314. ——Necessity for and sufficiency of corroboration.

Order for reception of corroborating proofs, see post § 363.

¶ 1399. In a prosecution for an attempt to murder the respondent's unsupported confession is not sufficient evidence of the corpus delicti.—People v. Lane, 49 Mich. 340.

¶ 1400. The corpus delicti cannot be proved by the naked extrajudicial confession of the accused.—People v. Lapidus, 167 Mich. 53.

¶ 1401. It is the general rule that the corpus delicti may not be proved by the naked extrajudicial confession of the accused. —People v. Ranney, 153 Mich. 293.

¶ 1402. An extrajudicial confession by a respondent charged with adultery, of a marriage with the complaining witness, is not alone sufficient to establish the marriage.—People v. Isham, 109 Mich. 72.

¶ 1403. In a prosecution for keeping a policy-shop the corpus delicti is sufficiently proved outside of respondent's confession, by his being found with materials for the game in a room where the game was going on.—People v. Hess, 85 Mich. 128.

¶ 1404. In a prosecution for larceny of diamonds from a safe, evidence that someone without authority removed the diamonds under such circumstances as to warrant the inference of larceny, was a sufficient proof of the corpus delicti to authorize the admission of evidence tending to implicate the accused.—People v. Mindeman, 157 Mich. 120.

¶ 1405. On an indictment for obtaining money by false pretenses, in issuing a worthless check, the confession of the accused that he knew that the check was worthless is sufficiently corroborated where it is shown that defendant applied to a hotel keeper to cash the check, that the check was cashed, and respondent received the money, that the check was forwarded in the usual course of business to the bank upon which it was drawn, was returned unpaid, and that the hotel keeper had never received his money; and this is true without regard to whether the corpus delicti, which must be proved by facts in addition fession of the accu consisting of mere specific injury or o with somebody's l of loss.—People v.

§ 315. Unsworn sta

¶ 1406. A defen the consideration o it such credit, in v all the circumstar titled to.—Maher Durant v. People, People, 13 Mich. 5 Mich. 710.

¶ 1407. The sta trial for a crimina to make one, may in view of all the affect its credit, n that he is not req claim any protecti nificant omissions. Mich. 224.

§ 316. Character ev

Sufficiency of evid repute, see als Instructions on ch § 445.

¶ 1408. A pers entitled in all cas mony to his good dence of his guilt sonable doubt he r standing his goo Mead, 50 Mich. 22

§ 317. Accomplice

Order for offer a rating proofs, In prosecutions fo where she is ¶ 1409. The cre like that of any o a question for the such testimony al —People v. Jenne v. People, 15 Mich. 23 Mich. 301; Peo

¶ 1410. A pers can be convicted evidence of an a lagher, 75 Mich. 5

¶ 1411. A perso be convicted upon complice without firmation from Nunn, 120 Mich. 5

¶ 1412. An acc as to his presence of an alleged tres by testimony of at home on the night the trespass was committed.—People v. O'Brien, 68 Mich. 468.

¶ 1413. Respondent was prosecuted for perjury in testifying in his own behalf in a prosecution for bribery, the testimony in question being that V. did not send him to offer the bribe. Upon objection that the conviction should not stand because secured by the uncorroborated testimony of V., held that the testimony of respondent and another witness at the trial for bribery might be looked to for corroboration.—People v. Albers, 137 Mich. 678.

§ 318. Conflicting and contradictory testimony.

In perjury cases, see post ¶ 1500 et seq.
Direct testimony opposed by opinions, see ante ¶ 1393.
Insufficiency of cumulative or contradictory evidence to warrant new trial for newly discovered evidence, see post § 478.
Conclusiveness on review of verdict based on conflicting testimony, see post §§ 633-635.
Impeachment by proof of contradictory statements, see Witnesses, VI, D.

¶ 1414. Where one not the legal custodian of a public record who testified that the record which he produced and offered in evidence was the official record, further answered on cross-examination that all he knew of the records was what someone else told him, the effect of such apparently inconsistent statements goes to the sufficiency and probative force of the evidence, and is a question of fact for the jury.—People v. Davis, 171 Mich. 241.

§ 319. Sufficiency of proofs of particular facts; identity, title, incorporation, etc.

Identity and existence of person, see also post ¶ 1484.
Proofs of title to and demand for money or property in embezzlement, see post ¶ 1473 et seq.
Sufficiency of identification of stolen goods received by accused, see post § 324r, ¶ 1505 et seq.
Modes of proving identity, see ante §§ 177, 178.
Presumptions as to particular facts, see ante § 130 et seq.
Sufficiency of secondary proofs, see ante §§ 193, 194.
Failure of proof by variance, see ante § 77 et seq.
De facto incorporation of principal of agent prosecuted for embezzlement, see also Crimes § 72.

¶ 1415. Identity of common names and of residence in cities or long settled localities is not enough to establish identity of persons where the personal liberty of others depends on the fact.—People v. Cline, 44 Mich. 290.

¶ 1416. Identity is not necessarily proved by direct evidence, but may be proved by circumstances all pointing towards one person.—People v. Stewart, 163 Mich. 1.

¶ 1417. In a prosecution for arson a conductor of an electric line testified that a woman asked him if his car stopped at a place near the premises in question; that after receiving his reply, she boarded the car and got off at that place; and that the woman was the respondent. At the trial the conductor was not able at first to pick out the woman and his testimony as to how he identified her was somewhat incoherent. Held, his evidence was sufficient to go to the jury.—People v. Stewart, 163 Mich. 1.

¶ 1418. Identification of stolen fleeces with those found in the accused person's possession is completely shown by their agreement in number, by this person's acknowledgment that he had taken the fleeces stolen, and by his not making effort after his arrest to recover the wool or its value.—People v. Taylor, 93 Mich. 638.

¶ 1419. In a prosecution for receiving a quantity of scrap brass knowing it to have been stolen, evidence that the brass and a horse and wagon were taken at the same time; that the wagon, when afterwards found, had a broken axle; that respondent was seen on the road near by with a broken-down wagon laden with heavy material; that an expressman was employed, who conveyed the contents of the wagon, which proved to be scrap brass, to a certain place, where it was sold by respondent and melted down by the purchaser,—is sufficient to go to the jury upon the question of the identity of the property sold with that stolen.—People v. Kiley, 107 Mich. 345.

¶ 1420. The testimony of the complaining witness that one of the razors found in respondent's possession had a rivet similar to that in one stolen from him, and that he had never seen any other razor with such a rivet, was sufficient to go to the jury upon the question of the identity of the property.—People v. Moloney, 113 Mich. 536.

¶ 1421. Respondents were tried for burglarizing an office located four miles outside the city, in which office a company had left some caps, dynamite, and fuse. Shortly after the crime, articles of a similar kind were found near the place where respondents were arrested, under some weeds. These articles were not positively identified as those in the office. Held, there was sufficient evidence on this point to warrant submitting the question of the identity to the jury.—People v. McDonald, 163 Mich. 552.

¶ 1422. The fact that flour found in respondent's possession was in sacks labeled with the name of the owner of a mill from which flour had been stolen, and was of the grade there manufactured, was some evidence tending to show that it was of the same quality as that stolen.—People v. Wood, 99 Mich. 620.

¶ 1423. In a prosecution for forging a deed of land, the title of the person named as grantor may be proved by the record of a deed to him, and by the testimony of the register of deeds that a careful examination of the records fails to show any transfer of the land since such deed to him, save the alleged forged deed.—People v. Parker, 67 Mich. 222.

¶ 1424. Existence of a de facto corporation was shown, where an attempt to organize a labor association under Pub. Acts 1897, No. 13, was made, articles were prepared accordingly, and the incorporators assumed to be a corporation and to act as such.—People v. Carter, 122 Mich. 668.

¶ 1425. The nonexistence of a marriage record is not shown by the testimony of a witness to the effect that she went to one whom she supposed to be a magistrate, and that he instituted a search, and told her there was no such record.—People v. Loomis, 106 Mich. 250.

§ 320. ——Alibi or whereabouts.

Degree of proof required and credit allowable to defense of alibi, see also ante ¶¶ 1389-1390.

¶ 1426. In a prosecution for arson, respondent's witnesses testified with great positiveness that the fire occurred at 7 p. m. In such case it would have been impossible for respondent to have reached the place in question at that time after getting off a car near by. The people's witnesses fixed the time of the starting of the fire at from 7:15 to 7:30. Held, the positive value of respondent's evidence on this point did not prevent the case from being a proper one to go to the jury.—People v. Stewart, 163 Mich. 1.

¶ 1427. Respondent was convicted of arson in setting fire to buildings belonging to her and insured in her favor. The conductor on an electric line testified that respondent took the car and alighted at a place near the buildings in question at 6:56 p. m. There was evidence that she boarded a car at another stop near said buildings to return at about 8:10 p. m., and that the fire started about 7:15 or 7:30 p. m. The tracks of a woman were found three days later in and about the premises in question. Respondent failed to account satisfactorily as to her whereabouts at the time of the fire. Held, there was sufficient evidence coupled with other circumstances to warrant the submission of the case to the jury.—People v. Stewart, 163 Mich. 1.

§ 321. ——Sanity, insanity or mental incapacity.

Indicia and evidences of insanity in general, see Insane Persons, I.

¶ 1428. Evidence that soon after the shooting the defendant said, "Stand back, don't come near me"; that about two hours afterwards, responding to a physician's question as to what had happened, said, "There was a little crowd and they tried to press me, and I had to defend myself," this physician testifying that the defendant at the time had the mental condition of a rational man, but badly excited; and that defendant, after being arrested, felt his hip, spoke of his revolver, and expressed a wish for a butcher knife to defend himself with, is not sufficient to support a request for an instruction that the defendant should be acquitted if at the time of shooting he was in a state of delirium and unable to reason, and entertained the delusion or fancy that the persons about him were in some way seeking to injure him and believed it necessary to use revolver to defend him from supposed attack.—People v. Slack, 90 Mich. 448.

§ 322. ——Possession of incriminating articles.

Probative effect of fact of incriminating possession in burglary cases, see also post ¶ 1448.

¶ 1429. Respondents were tried for burglarizing an office. The alleged stolen goods were found two days after the crime within two feet of where the respondents were when they were arrested. Held, it was proper to leave to the jury the question whether respondents were in possession of said property.—People v. McDonald, 163 Mich. 552.

§ 323. Proof of lesser and included offenses.

Conviction for lesser offense as conforming to or varying from indictment for greater, see ante § 80.

Proof of felony as proof of misdemeanor, see also Crimes § 9.

Sufficiency of proofs of lesser assaults and assaults included in homicidal attempts, see Assault § 10; Homicide §§ 65, 66.

Provision against acquittal for misdemeanor charged when proof shows felony, see Comp. L. 1915, § 15742.

¶ 1430. Every forcible resistance to an officer involves an assault, and if the higher charge is not made out there may still be a conviction for the assault covered by it.—People v. Haley, 48 Mich. 495; People v. Warner, 53 Mich. 78.

¶ 1431. Even though the evidence on the part of the people under an information charging robbery, if believed, showed that respondent was guilty of robbery, he still could be convicted of the lesser offense of assault with intent to rob.—People v. Blanchard, 136 Mich. 146.

§ 324. Particular offenses; necessary and sufficient proofs.

[Note. The specific crimes in so far as touched by precedents on the sufficiency of proof are arranged in alphabetical order following. A similar arrangement of precedents on sufficiency of the charging parts of indictments and informations occurs, ante §§ 43a-43u, and one on the propriety of instructions and requests occurs, post §§ 455a-455w. The matters so arranged are such as were deemed to be peculiar to the crime in question and not of application to other crimes as well. It is often difficult to say whether an opinion passes on the sufficiency of proof or on the substantive elements of the crime. Sometimes both are passed on. Where the decision seemed to pass on sufficiency of proofs the case was placed in the appropriate section following. A search of both places will always be advisable whichever class of precedents be desired.]

General rules for determining sufficiency of proofs, see ante §§ 301-305, 311-318.

Proofs of general elements of crimes, e. g., corpus delicti, venue, complicity of accused, intent, and knowledge, see ante §§ 306-309.

Proofs of defenses, see ante § 310.

Proofs of particular facts, see ante §§ 319-322.

Proofs of included offenses, see ante § 323.

Sufficiency of case founded on evidence introduced by defendant after people rested, see also post ¶ 2833.

In prosecutions under liquor laws, see Intoxicating Liquors, VI, B.

Evidence tending to prove particular issues, see post §§ 175-181.

Material and necessary issues to be proved, see ante § 73.

Variances of proofs from allegations, see ante § 77 et seq.

Degree of proof required in bastardy proceedings, see Bastards § 10.

§ 324a. Abandonment and desertion.

Elements of the crime, see Crimes § 38.

¶ 1432. To sustain an allegation that the child was confided to the defendant it is not necessary to show that it was delivered into his immediate and manual custody; if it were delivered to some other person employed by him to receive it, and upon the faith of representations made by him to the mother, inducing the belief on her part that it would be under his control and direction, it would be sufficient.—Shannon v. People, 5 Mich. 71.

¶ 1433. To make out a case of wife abandonment under the criminal statute, Act No. 144, Pub. Acts 1907, it is not necessary to establish that the wife has become a public burden.—People v. Stickle, 156 Mich. 557.

¶ 1434. In order to convict for deserting and abandoning a wife and minor child under Pub. Acts 1907, No. 144, How. St., 2nd Ed., § 11539, it is necessary that the jury be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt as to an act of desertion and an abandonment of the wife and a refusal or neglect to provide for them.—People v. Schelske, 187 Mich. 497.

¶ 1435. In a prosecution for deserting and abandoning a wife and minor child under Pub. Acts 1907, No. 144, How. St., 2nd Ed. § 11539, evidence held sufficient to find defendant guilty where he did not support his family for two years after an absence of six months, although he had not formed the intention prior thereto of separating himself from his family, and had contributed to their support during such six-month period. —People v. Schelske, 187 Mich. 497.

¶ 1436. Evidence in a prosecution for wife and child desertion and abandonment that the husband contributed a small sum of money extending over a period of six months held as tending to prove that defendant did not intend to abandon his family.—People v. Schelske, 187 Mich. 497.

§ 324a. Abduction and enticement.

Elements of the crime, see Crimes § 39.

¶ 1437. Evidence of former illicit relations is significant though not conclusive evidence of its bearing upon the intent of one who is charged with enticing away a female for prostitution; but it may properly be dispensed with where proof of their subsequent conduct is conclusive as to the unlawful intent.—People v. Carrier, 46 Mich. 442.

§ 324a. Adultery.

Sufficiency of confession as proof, see ante ¶ 1402.

Proofs of marriage in bigamy, see post ¶ 1443 et seq.

Elements of the crime, see Crimes § 41.

Sufficiency of proof of adultery in divorce, see Divorce § 69.

¶ 1438. In a prosecution for adultery it is not enough to show the prior marriage of the accused to a woman under the legal age, without showing that she acquiesced in the marriage on arriving at the age of consent and before the offense.—People v. Bennett, 39 Mich. 208.

¶ 1439. In a prosecution for adultery a sufficient showing is made that the complaint was made by one authorized by Comp. L. 1897, sec. 11690, How. 2nd Ed., § 14775, providing that, "No prosecution for adultery shall be commenced but on the complaint of the husband or wife," where the complaint is signed by a person offered as a witness by the people, and counsel for respondents states that such person is an incompetent witness because the evidence shows that he is the husband of one of the respondents, and by consent the case has been made prima facie that he is married to such respondent, and where also the record of his marriage to said respondent is received in evidence.—People v. Davis, 175 Mich. 594.

§ 324a. Arson and burnings.

Proof of presence and responsibility of accused, see ante ¶¶ 1380, 1382, 1385.

Elements of the crime, see Crimes § 42 et seq.

¶ 1440. In an information charging an attempt to burn insured property with intent to injure the insurance company, an allegation that the insurance company which it was intended to defraud is a corporation having a right to do business in this state is unnecessary, and the incorporation therefore need not be proved; and, it having appeared that the company was engaged in doing business in this state, it seems that it was unnecessary to show affirmatively that the company had complied with our statutes in reference to foreign insurance companies.—People v. Jones, 24 Mich. 215.

¶ 1441. An actual insurance must be proved where respondents are charged with burning insured property with intent to defraud the insurer: and where it is claimed that the insurance was made through an agent, the agency must be proved; where created by written authority, the writing should be produced or accounted for unless there is evidence of ratification; and where an alleged agent had only acted by correspondence and interviews with others who purported to be agents, and he had no personal knowledge as to their position or authority, and had only corresponded with the insurer by reporting to a person who assumed to be secretary, but of whose authority as such there was no other proof, the agency was not proved.—Meister v. People, 31 Mich. 99.

¶ 1442. It was sufficient evidence to go to the jury in an arson case that defendant, who had a tenant whom he could not get rid of had threatened to burn him off, that defendant was seen going towards the house with a can partly full of kerosene and coming back with the can empty, and that shortly after that the house was seen in flames.—People v. Burridge, 99 Mich. 343.

§ 324a. Assault and battery.

Elements of the crime and sufficiency of the proofs, see Assault, I.

§ 324b. Bigamy and polygamy.

Proofs of marriage in adultery, see ante ¶ 1438.

Elements of the offenses, see Crimes § 48.

¶ 1443. Where the first marriage is alleged to have taken place in another state, proof of a valid marriage according to the laws of that state must be given. And there being evidence that the law of that state on the subject is in statute form, it cannot be presumed, against the innocence of defendant, that the statute is like our own.—People v. Lambert, 5 Mich. 349.

¶ 1444. A defendant cannot be convicted of bigamy where the only evidence of the first marriage is proof of the cohabitation of the parties as man and wife, and their statements that such marriage had taken place.—People v. Lambert, 5 Mich. 349.

¶ 1445. Upon a trial for polygamy, a former valid marriage is shown by testimony of the accused and his alleged first wife showing the performance of a marriage ceremony between them followed by their living together as husband and wife.—People v. Goodrode, 132 Mich. 542.

§ 324b. Bribery, embracery and corruption of agents.

Elements of the crime, see Crimes § 50.

¶ 1446. Payment of money to a prosecuting attorney to influence him to put a case over the term is not evidence that it was done corruptly within the meaning of Comp. L. 1897, sec. 11311, if such money was paid by one somewhat ignorant of court practice under the belief that such attorney had a right to demand and receive it for his trouble and costs.—People v. Bilitzke, 174 Mich. 329.

§ 324b. Burglary, breaking and entering, and attempts.

Proof of complicity in burglary, see also ante ¶ 1379.

Proof of connection with burglary, see also ante ¶ 1384.

Sufficiency of identification of stolen articles with those traced to accused, see ante § 319.

Unlawful possession of burglar's tools, see post § 324b, ¶¶ 1459-1461.

Elements of the crimes, see Crimes § 51 et seq.

¶ 1447. The statutory offense of burglary cannot be made out without a clear proof of the breaking.—People v. McCord, 76 Mich. 200.

¶ 1448. In a prosecution for burglary it seems that the mere possession of articles stolen is not prima facie evidence of guilt of the burglary.—Stuart v. People, 42 Mich. 255.

¶ 1449. Where the only evidence against respondents convicted of burglary is the possession by them of the stolen property, the conviction must be set aside.—People v. McDonald, 163 Mich. 552.

¶ 1450. A conviction for statutory burglary from a store is unwarranted by testimony which identifies neither place, person, nor property, and which purports to describe talk, to which the witness paid little attention, "about somebody's getting in, and he taking the stuff out after they handed it out to him." Nor is it justified by testimony that defendant had complained that he had not been given a "square whack at the Fremont deal" when there was no proof that the deal was a burglary or that any burglary had been committed at Fremont.—People v. Butler, 55 Mich. 408.

¶ 1451. Evidence that fleeces were stolen from a barn which was locked about nine o'clock the night before, the theft being discovered about sunrise, that 12 of the fleeces were taken and others were scattered about, that marks of the hitching and standing of a horse and buggy were found near by, that accused after daylight drove to a house and asked to leave some bags there, is sufficient to sustain a verdict that an entry into a barn with intent to commit larceny was made after daylight; since it was necessary to have light to select the best fleeces.—People v. Taylor, 93 Mich. 638.

¶ 1452. The testimony of the people tended to show that respondent, while in the building on the day preceding the burglary, raised the window through which the entry was made just enough to remove the bolt by which it was fastened from the slot prepared for that purpose, and on the following night completed the raising of the window sufficiently to enable him to enter the building, it could not be contended that such testimony changed the offense from burglary.—People v. Dupree, 98 Mich. 26.

¶ 1453. Evidence that the owner of the dwelling-house claimed to have been entered, on his return thereto, found a door, which his son testified he had bolted after his father left the house, unbolted and open, and a window, which the son testified was closed, open, and respondent in the house, is sufficient to show a breaking.—People v. Curley, 99 Mich. 238.

¶ 1454. A conviction for burglary is sustained by evidence that a mill was broken and flour stolen, that there were tracks of men leading from the window of the mill to the road, whence there were tracks of a wagon with one wheel out of alignment and of a horse with three unshod feet and one foot with a broken shoe, that similar flour was afterwards found in possession of one of accused though such flour was not locally obtainable, that another accused had a horse and wagon capable of making the tracks, and that on the evening of the burglary they and the other accused were seen in a one-horse wagon going towards the place of the crime.—People v. Wood, 99 Mich. 620.

¶ 1455. Conviction for burglary is sustained, where it appeared that one of two persons who committed the burglary in question was shot dead and immediately thereafter a window crashed and another person was heard running away; that respondent upon being arrested the next morning was shown the dead person and at first denied acquaintance with him and then admitted that he was his best friend; that the deceased and respondent had been seen together in the afternoon of the burglary going towards another place from which a pair of shoes and two shirts were afterwards found to have been stolen, and that the shoes were found on the feet of the deceased when he was shot, and the shirts were on respondent when he was arrested, and there was testimony tending to show that the deceased and respondent were seen together late on the night of the burglary, and he falsely accounted for a cut on his hand when arrested.—People v. Hogan, 123 Mich. 233.

¶ 1456. A conviction under an information charging respondent with having in the nighttime broken and entered a dwelling-house with intent to commit larceny, was sustained where it appeared that the breaking was into a barn which was within an inclosure surrounding the dwelling of the owner in question as well as the barn; the contention that since the taking effect of Pub. Acts 1899, Act No. 34, the common law offense of burglary was restricted to the breaking and entering of the actual dwelling-house of another not being sustained, as such law did not do away with the common law offense of burglary.—People v. Griffith, 133 Mich. 607.

¶ 1457. Evidence of the stealing of two large horse blankets, a set of single harness, a bridle, and a pair of hopples, from buildings on a farm, there being other farmers living within forty rods of the buildings, and there being evidence that the property was in the buildings when night set in, but had disappeared and could not be found the next morning after daylight, supports a finding of burglary in the nighttime.—People v. Tracy, 121 Mich. 318.

¶ 1458. The offense of an attempt to break and enter a dwelling was not shown to have been committed by one who proposed to another to break into a house and get money, and accordingly met such other person at a saloon and loaded a revolver there which he threatened would kill a man unless he got his money that night, and who thereafter went into a drug store and purchased chloroform to be used in the commission of the crime, and was arrested on emerging from the drug store with the chloroform and with slippers to be used in entering the house, in his possession.—People v. Youngs, 122 Mich. 292.

§ 324b. ——Unlawful possession of burglars' tools.

¶ 1459. Proof of possession and of a general intent to use, in the felonious manner mentioned in the statute, in the county where the prosecution is instituted is sufficient to support an information under How. St. § 9175 relating to having burglars' tools in possession.—People v. Edwards, 93 Mich. 636.

¶ 1459a. Defendant was tried under 3 Comp. L. 1897, § 11589, for having burglars' tools in his possession. There was testimony that tended to show that the instruments found in defendant's possession were used by burglars, and that they were used for picking locks and opening doors; that the defendant was a burglar and sneak thief by occupation, and had been for years; that he called on an inmate of the jail; and that he claimed to be in haste to leave town, and gave different places as his destination. Held, there was sufficient evidence to go to the jury to show on the part of the defendant a knowledge of the adaptation and design of the tools in his possession for criminal purposes.—People v. Jefferson, 161 Mich. 621.

¶ 1460. Section 11589, 3 Comp. L. 1897, makes it a crime for a person to have certain implements and tools in his possession for purposes of theft. Held, to sustain a conviction there must be proof of knowledge of possession of the implements, of knowledge of their adaptation to and design for the criminal purpose, and of an intent to use them for such purpose.—People v. Jefferson, 161 Mich. 621.

¶ 1461. Where a person accused of having burglars' tools in his possession contrary to 3 Comp. L. 1897, § 11589, admits that he is taking such tools to a named place, there is sufficient proof of his knowledge of possession to establish that element of the crime.—People v. Jefferson, 161 Mich. 621.

§ 324c. Conspiracy.

Proof of responsibility or part in conspiracy, see also ante ¶ 1383.

Conspiracy to obstruct business maliciously, see post ¶ 1498.

Elements of the crime, see Crimes § 58.

¶ 1462. There can be no conviction for conspiracy aside from the confessions of individuals, unless there is independent evidence of the participation of the different persons charged.—People v. Arnold, 46 Mich. 268.

¶ 1463. On an information for conspiracy to falsely accuse a person of arson, if the proof is directly to the effect that the defendants resorted to peculiar methods shown in contriving for the arrest of another for a crime they knew he did not commit, there is evidence sufficient to justify the submission to the jury of the question of the defendants' intent.—People v. Dyer, 79 Mich. 480.

¶ 1464. In a prosecution for perjury alleged to have been committed upon a trial for burglary, evidence of a conspiracy between respondent and others to give such false testimony, for the purpose of aiding the respondent in the burglary case, need not be express to justify its submission to the jury, since proof of a conspiracy, from its very nature, must often be made by circum-

the house was resorted to by men, and that respondent spent a considerable portion of her time there, where she was arrested, and interposed on behalf of a girl who was also arrested, saying that she was the cook; and that on another occasion, when a visitor called for beer, she replied that she did not have any in the house, tends to support a conviction.—People v. Wright, 90 Mich. 362.

¶ 1469. It is not necessary to prove, on a prosecution for keeping a house of ill fame, the bad reputation of men who resorted to the house, where their acts were of such a character as to warrant the inference that they went there for immoral purposes, and the inmates are shown to have been women of evil reputation.—People v. Russell, 110 Mich. 46.

¶ 1470. Respondent was tried under Comp. L. 1897, § 11697, for keeping a house of ill fame. Respondent rented the rooms in the building in question to various occupants, resided elsewhere with his family; carried a key to the building; hired the help to do the hall and room work and paid the same; went there every day and saw the building; and "had entire charge of the building just as though my wife and family lived there." There was evidence that he directed custom to the place. Held, he was properly convicted under said section instead of being tried under section 11699, relating to the leasing of property to be used as a house of ill fame.—People v. Hoek, 169 Mich. 87.

¶ 1471. Evidence held sufficient to show that defendant kept a house of ill fame, the evidence not being set out or reviewed.—People v. Peroni, 169 Mich. 110.

¶ 1472. Held, in a prosecution for keeping a house of ill fame, that the evidence as to the character of the house was for the jury and supports a verdict of guilty.—People v. Martin, 176 Mich. 381.

§ 324e. Embezzlement.

Sufficiency of proof of incorporation of principal of accused, see ante ¶ 1424.
Elements of the crime, see Crimes § 68 et seq.
Necessity of proof of intent to embezzle, see also Crimes § 74.

¶ 1473. In a prosecution against an agent and officer of a labor association for embezzling money of the association, the omission to prove a demand for the money was not fatal in view of respondent's admission that the money of the association was gone and that he lost it on horse races.—People v. Carter, 122 Mich. 668.

¶ 1474. In a prosecution against an agent and officer of a labor association for embezzling money of the association, testimony that the respondent receipted for the money as treasurer, and that it was intended by the depositor to be applied to the purchase of stock in the association, was evidence that the money in question was that of the association and that it was received by respondent in the course of his duties.—People v. Carter, 122 Mich. 668.

¶ 1475. A conviction of embezzlement cannot be sustained upon evidence that complainant deposited money until arrangement could be made for him to purchase the interest of defendant's partner in the bank, though the money was handed to defendant at the bank and by him turned into the bank and was lost through the bank's failure, it appearing that it was intended that the money should be deposited.—People v. Nielsen, 130 Mich. 670.

¶ 1476. Where money has been sent to a broker with specific instructions to buy certain stock, it is in the nature of a special deposit or trust and an intention to create the relation of debtor and creditor is not shown by a letter from the broker stating that the amount had been placed to the sender's credit.—People v. Karste, 132 Mich. 455.

¶ 1477. On Oct. 13th plaintiff sent a check to a broker with instructions to purchase certain stock therewith. The broker deposited the check, and on Nov. 14th received instructions cancelling the first order and to use the money in buying certain other stock. The broker wrote that he placed the order. Between the two dates the broker's balance had at times been less than the amount of the check, but on Nov. 14th was greater. Held, that the jury was justified in finding that the broker had the funds on hand on the latter date.—People v. Karste, 132 Mich. 455.

¶ 1478. In a prosecution for embezzlement a clear case is presented where it appears that the defendant had obtained a number of shares of stock from the complaining witness under the representations that he had a purchaser therefor and had given his receipt for the stock, the defendant being a stock broker, and in payment therefor had tendered him a check but there were no funds in the bank to meet it, it further appearing that he had sold all the stock and received the money therefor.—People v. West, 146 Mich. 537.

¶ 1479. In a prosecution for embezzlement from a fraternal insurance society, evidence showing that records of the society, kept under the direction of respondent, showed a balance of several thousand dollars, while the bank records showed a balance to the credit of the society of only a few hundred dollars, and that respondent stated from time to time to warrant holders that there was no money on hand to meet their demands, was sufficient to authorize a conviction, notwithstanding evidence of transfers of record, and such proof is not essential in a prosecution for the forgery of such certificate.—People v. Marion, 29 Mich. 31.

¶ 1490. On a prosecution for the forgery of a mortgage with the purpose of defrauding, everything tending to explain the fraud and its extent and character can be shown, such as matters relating to the ownership and value of the premises which the mortgage purported to cover. And respondent's representation to the persons defrauded that he was the owner of the mortgaged property, together with the preparation of the papers, their retention for signature, and their return signed, constitute a sufficient chain of facts to prove forgery as well as uttering.—People v. Sharp, 53 Mich. 523.

¶ 1491. Evidence of the general reputation of the existence of a bank in another state, and that its bills pass current, being admissible, its weight is for the jury, who may be satisfied with it.—Jennings v. People, 8 Mich. 81.

¶ 1492. Proof that a deed was forged and that the defendant procured its acknowledgment by false personation, and that he undertook to raise money on it, and proof that would authorize an inference that he procured it to be recorded, together with proof that he undertook to raise money on it, warrant a conviction for uttering a forged deed.—People v. Dane, 79 Mich. 361.

¶ 1493. In a prosecution for forging a deed of land, the title of the person named as grantor may be proved by the record of a deed to him, and by the testimony of the register of deeds that a careful examination of the records fails to show any transfer of the land since such deed to him, save the alleged forged deed.—People v. Parker, 67 Mich. 222.

§ 324f. Criminal frauds.

Embezzlement, see ante § 324e.
Forgery and false pretenses, see ante § 324f, ¶¶ 1483-1493.
Elements of the statutory offenses, see Crimes § 86 et seq.

¶ 1494. Actual knowledge and intent to defraud must be shown in order to warrant the conviction of a respondent under Laws of 1887, Act No. 9 (How. St. § 9209d), which makes it a criminal offense to give knowingly a false pedigree of any animal with intent to defraud.—People v. Umlauf, 88 Mich. 274.

§ 324h. Homicide and homicidal assaults.

Nature and elements and degrees of the crimes, see Homicide.
Weight and sufficiency of evidence in homicide cases, see Homicide, VII, C.

§ 324i. Indecency and obscenity.

Elements of statutory offenses against decency and of offenses characterized by obscenity, see Crimes §§ 95, 96.
Adultery, see ante § 324a.

¶ 1495. The purpose for which an obscene picture was obtained is an essential element of the offense, and must be proved, for it cannot be presumed; and where the evidence fails to show that respondent did more than to sit for the negative, and where such sitting only appears from the fact that the negative was found in the possession of photographers, together with negatives made by them of her residence, a verdict of not guilty should be directed.—People v. Ketchum, 103 Mich. 443.

¶ 1496. In a prosecution for a violation of Act 103, Pub. Acts 1903, sec. 2, How. 2nd Ed., § 5293, prohibiting certain exhibitions of deformed human bodies or representations thereof, except for scientific purposes before members of the medical classes, where the exception is negatived in the complaint and warrant and there is evidence tending to show that the exhibition was not made to one included in the exception, it is not error to deny a motion by defendant for a directed verdict on the ground that the evidence did not show that the complaining witness was not included in the exception.—People v. Kennedy, 176 Mich. 15.

§ 324i. Insurance, unlawful agency or business.

Burning to defraud insurer, see ante ¶¶ 1440, 1441.
Elements of statutory insurance crimes, see Crimes § 97.

¶ 1497. Laws 1881, Act No. 148 (How. St. § 4354), makes it unlawful for any person as "agent" to solicit business for an insurance company without obtaining the certificate of authority from the commissioner of insurance provided for by Comp. L. 1871, § 2987 (How. St. § 4290), which makes the term "agent" include any acknowledged agent or any other person who shall in any manner aid in transacting the insurance business of any company not incorporated by state law. Held, that evidence that one man filled out for another a blank application on which insurance was effected by a policy issued by a company which he assumed to represent fairly tended to show that he was acting as agent for the company.—People v. Howard, 50 Mich. 239.

§ 3241. Larceny.

Embezzlement, see ante § 324e.
Obtaining property by false pretenses, see ante § 324f.
Obtaining property by robbery, see post § 324r.
Breaking and entering with intent to steal, see ante § 324b.
Elements of the crime and sufficiency of evidence, see Larceny.

§ 324m. Malicious obstruction of business.
Elements of the offense, see Crimes § 106.

¶ 1498. A., the chief engineer of a railroad company, was charged with conspiring with B. and C. and others to obstruct the business of a corporation by operations incident to building a bridge for the railroad across a canal owned by such corporation. Held, that the fact that B. and C. were A.'s subordinates in the employ of the company, and were subject to his orders, did not make him the sole mover in the matter so as to destroy any preconcerted action, the evidence showing that they acted in concert, and failing to show that B. and C. acted under A.'s orders or that A. acted under the orders of the railroad company.—People v. Petheram, 64 Mich. 252.

§ 324m. Medicine, unlawful practice of.
Elements of the offense, see Crimes § 108.

¶ 1499. There was sufficient evidence that accused advertised or held himself out as practicing medicine, when he exhibited a sign as "Dr. ——, Magnetic Healer," and was called to visit two sick persons, and treated them as a magnetic healer and made a certificate of death for one and a medical practitioner's sworn statement, and also made a report of infectious diseases.—People v. Phippin, 70 Mich. 6.

§ 324p. Perjury, subornation and false swearing.
Elements of the offenses, see Crimes § 115 et seq.
Materiality of the testimony as basis for prosecution for perjury, see Crimes § 116.

¶ 1500. A conviction for perjury cannot be sustained merely upon the contradictory sworn statements of the defendant, but the prosecution must prove which of the two statements is false, and must show that statement to be false by other evidence than the contradictory statement.—People v. McClintic, 193 Mich. 589.

¶ 1501. On a prosecution for perjury committed on a preliminary hearing in giving testimony directly contradictory of the oath on which the warrant issued, the proof suffices where the magistrate testifies to the statements made to obtain the warrant and there is nothing to contradict it, and where the other testimony is proven; since it is not necessary that the existence of grounds for the issuance of warrants be reduced to writing.—People v. McClintic, 193 Mich. 589.

¶ 1502. In a prosecution for endeavor to procure perjury under Comp. L. 1897, § 11308, a conviction will be sustained by testimony that the respondent arrested upon the charge of bastardy had met the complaining witness by appointment, that he had handed her a letter containing the false testimony for her to sign, had said that he would settle the matter and that he g ised more every mo gether to the court to her, "all I had t not the father of th court room and I tol false."—People v. Cl

¶ 1503. Where the of testimony upon a police justice, which for perjury alleged at such examination, nographer who took he believes it to be where such transcri offered in support o defendant testified a without objection, s to show that the d
mony as charged.—
Mich. 166.

§ 324p. Poor law off
Elements of the offe
see Crimes § 11
Of crime of transpo
ment, see also C

§ 324r. Rape and ass Elements of the off assault or attem
dence to prove t

§ 324r. Receiving or Sufficiency of proof
ceived as those
Elements of the offe
The stealing and Larceny.
Necessary proof in stolen goods, th
tion, see also C

¶ 1504. The fact felonious reception, make out the crime
—People v. Montag

¶ 1505. In a p stolen property (a have been stolen, it left her house durin being locked; that her pocket-book, wh upon the stand, rif
the same evening
from the stand dr kept; that she coul saw the weapon, b testified to having s that on the arrest o
later, a revolver, wl
as hers, was found he told conflicting s
one of them being a man whom he kn before, because he bought it; that he and advised the o

stealing the revolver if he thought best. Held, that the circumstances were sufficient to sustain a conviction.—People v. Oblaser, 104 Mich. 579.

¶ 1506. In a prosecution for receiving stolen property, evidence that the barber shop of the complaining witness was broken open in the nighttime, that, when he came there in the morning, nothing was in the place, and that the articles were lost, which belonged to him, consisted of those described in the information, was sufficient to justify a finding that the property was feloniously taken.—People v. Moloney, 113 Mich. 536.

¶ 1507. An indictment, under R. S. 1846, chap. 154, § 20, How. St. § 9142, for aiding in the concealment, etc., is supported by proof of acts of the aider, which will assist the principal felon in converting it to the use of the thief, or which will aid him in preventing its recovery by the owner; and it is not necessary to prove that the property was actually hidden or secreted anywhere.—People v. Reynolds, 2 Mich. 422.

¶ 1508. Evidence that a sealskin sacque was found in defendant's possession, and was one of a lot manufactured and placed on sale by a certain firm; that on Dec. 23, 1887, a woman whom defendant afterwards registered at a hotel as his wife called at the store of said firm in the evening, tried on several cloaks, and finally ordered one sent to a hotel, which was done, and the sacque brought back; and that the loss of the sacque was not discovered until Jan. 18, 1888, though an inventory of the stock was taken Jan. 1, does not establish the fact of a larceny sufficiently to warrant conviction upon a charge of receiving and concealing stolen goods knowing them to have been stolen, it not being shown that the woman took anything from the store or had opportunity to do so without discovery.—People v. Montague, 71 Mich. 318.

¶ 1509. Where, under an information in two counts, the first for stealing a horse, the second for aiding in its concealment knowing it to have been stolen, the evidence tends to show that the accused, though not present at the taking, knew the horse was stolen; that he was actively engaged in assisting the sale of it; that he represented to some persons that it was his, and to others that it was his associate's; and that when arrested he claimed to the sheriff that "we bought the horse," there is evidence to sustain a conviction under the second count.—People v. Harris, 93 Mich. 617.

§ 324r. Robbery and assaults with intent to rob.

Elements of the offenses, see Crimes § 126.

¶ 1510. Where a person on trial for robbery admits the forcible taking, but explains it as an attempt to get back property taken from himself, the question of his good faith depends entirely on whether he simply meant to get back what he believed to be his own. His being intoxicated is a fact which it is proper for the jury to consider.—Driscoll v. People, 47 Mich. 413.

¶ 1511. Where one is charged with assault and robbery under Comp. L. 1897, § 11484, and pleads guilty but explains in his examination by the court that he did not intend to kill if resisted, a conviction and sentence thereunder cannot be sustained under Comp. L. 1897, § 11485, defining assault with intent to rob.—People v. Scofield, 142 Mich. 221.

§ 324s. Seduction.

Elements of the offense and sufficiency of proofs, see Seduction.

§ 324w. Weapons, carrying or carelessly using.

Elements of the statutory offenses, see Crimes § 133 et seq.

¶ 1512. In a prosecution under the statute punishing the careless use of firearms, the jury may legitimately infer the absence of malice from testimony that defendant and two other boys met in a cornfield where the other boys were at work; that defendant had a gun and the boys were looking at it; that after about 30 minutes one of the boys claimed he must go to work when defendant put a shell in the gun and said, "Look out, or I will shoot you," and simultaneously did shoot and seriously injure the boy.—People v. Dudley, 131 Mich. 261.

¶ 1513. Respondent was convicted under section 11510, Comp. L. 1897, of discharging intentionally without malice a firearm aimed at certain persons. The evidence showed that he came out of his place of business upon the street; that said persons were standing on the opposite side of the street; that respondent said to them: "You fellows will get your eye full; I will get you sons of bitches"; that he then re-entered his shop and in a few minutes came out armed with a revolver; that said persons immediately started to run; that respondent followed them and called out: "Halt, or I will get you"; and that respondent fell and upon arising fired his revolver towards them. Held, the statute being designed to punish a class of acts done carelessly and the evidence tending to show malice and ill will on the part of respondent, his conviction could not stand.—People v. Peterson, 166 Mich. 10.

IX. TRIAL AND TRIAL PRACTICE.

A. NATURE, TIME, MODE, AND CONDUCT OF TRIAL.

§ 325. General nature and modes of trial.

Separate or joint trials, see post § 326.
Publicity of trial, see post § 327.
Presence of accused, counsel and judge, see post § 328.

Improper persons within railing, see post § 331.
Terms and time for trial, see post § 329.
Suspension, adjournment or interruptions of trial, see post §§ 332, 333.
Attendance and functions of attorneys, see post § 330.
Taking view of place by jury, see post § 335.
Making stipulations and admissions, see post § 334.
Receiving statement by accused, see post § 336.
Reception and exclusion of evidence and order of proofs, see post, IX, B.
Indorsing names of witnesses and adding further names, see ante §§ 20, 21.
Time allowable for and manner of argument to jury, see post, IX, C.
Irregular or improper remarks and conduct by judge in course of trial as error, see post § 395.
Conduct and custody of jury during view, see post § 457.
Communications from jury to court after retirement, see post § 462.
Return of jury into court after retirement to deliberate, see post § 463.
Arguments and conduct of counsel and remarks affecting trial, see post, IX, C.
Provinces of the court and the jury and questions belonging to each, see post, IX, D.
Instructions and requests, see post, IX, E.
Custody of jury, conduct and deliberations, see post, IX, F.
Verdict and rendition of same into court, see post, IX, G.
Sentence or judgment, rendition of same and recording and entering, see post, XI, XII.
New trials and motions in arrest, see post, X.
Practice to preserve rulings and questions arising on trial for review on error or otherwise, see post, XIV.
Trials for misdemeanors before justices and minor courts, see post, XVIII.
Review of trial practice and rulings by error, exceptions or certiorari, see post, XV, XVI.
What are regarded as criminal prosecutions, see also ante § 1.
Nature of proceedings for commitment of juvenile delinquents, see Incompetents § 6; Constitutional Law ¶ 881.
Nature and mode of proceedings for violation of municipal ordinances, see Municipal Corporations, XVI, B.
Civil or criminal nature of bastardy proceedings, see Bastards §§ 4, 6.
Nature of contempt proceedings, civil or criminal, see Contempt § 18.
Quasi-criminal nature of disbarment proceedings, see Attorneys § 5.
Civil nature of capias of fraudulent debtor proceedings, see Civil Arrest §§ 1, 23.
Right to jury trial and essentials of same, see Constitutional Law §§ 209, 210; Jury, I.
Competency and qualifications and selection of jurors, see Jury.

within this state shall be public, and every citizen may freely attend the same."—People v. Murray, 89 Mich. 276.

§ 328. Presence of accused, counsel and judge.

Right to be present at taking of view, and waiver of right, see post § 335, ¶¶ 1540, 1541.

At giving of additional instructions after retirement and return into court, see post § 454.

Colloquy on return of jury into court after retirement in absence of accused but in presence of his counsel, see post ¶ 2255.

Right to have communications received from jury after retirement made known to counsel, see post ¶ 2252.

Presence on return of jury into court for information or rereading of testimony, see post § 465.

On examination of prisoner before sentence on plea of guilty, see post § 486.

Presence at sentence by justice to imprisonment, see post ¶ 2994.

Duty of attorneys to attend, see post § 330.

Showing in record as to presence of accused, see post § 500.

Presumption as to judge's attendance from recitals in record as to adjournment, see post ¶ 1524.

Polling the jury on return of verdict, see post § 469.

Right to confront witnesses, see post §§ 339, 340.

Absence of attorney as ground for continuance, see ante § 121.

¶ 1519. After the regular conviction of a person charged with crime he can no longer insist on being personally present in court for further proceedings, such as the disposition of a motion for a new trial.—People v. Ormsby, 48 Mich. 494.

¶ 1520. Where one on trial for a felony, who is out on bail, fails to appear at the hour to which court has adjourned pending the deliberations of the jury, a verdict rendered in his absence is valid, notwithstanding the provision of How. St. § 9568, that no person indicted for a felony shall be tried unless personally present during the trial.—Frey v. Calhoun Circuit Judge, 107 Mich. 130.

¶ 1521. Where, during argument of counsel to the jury in a criminal case, the trial judge was in a room adjoining the court room where he could hear the argument, held that his absence from the court room did not justify the reversal of the case in the absence of any showing that prejudice resulted to the defendant therefrom.—People v. Kimbrough, 193 Mich. 330.

§ 329. Terms and time for trial.

Time to institute prosecution and limitations on prosecution, see ante, II.

Time and term for filing information or indictment, see ante § 13.

Time and term for motion for new trial or motion, see post § 480.

Time for procedure for review, see post § 5[illegible] et seq.

Postponements and continuances, see ante VI.

Postponement for purpose of preparation, see ante § 121.

Objections for first time on review to improper time for trial, see post § 513.

Constitutional provision as to speedy trial, see Constitutional Law § 199.

Offering bribe to postpone or frustrate prosecution, see Crimes § 50.

General law as to terms and places for court, see Courts, II.

Right to speedy trial, see Const. art. II, § 19.

Time for trial, statutory provision, see Comp. L. 1915, § 15731.

¶ 1522. The statute requiring that when a defendant arraigned in the county court requested to be tried before the circuit judge such judge should, on the first day of the next term, assign a day for the trial, was, as to time, directory only.—People v. Doe, 1 Mich. 451.

¶ 1523. Judgment will not be set aside on the ground merely that respondent was examined and arraigned for trial at the same term, though bound over to answer "at the next term."—People v. Mason, 63 Mich. 510.

¶ 1524. Even if Comp. L. 1897, § 303, requires an ending of the term at the end of five days, when the judge does not appear at the beginning of the term, the court will not assume that the judge was not present each day, although no business was done; and there was no presumption in the case in question that the judge did not attend on a record showing adjournment on a certain day to a day stated and the signature of the trial judge to it.—People v. McGarry, 136 Mich. 316.

¶ 1525. On a court journal showing as of a day in term that the court "thereupon adjourned," it cannot be said that the adjournment was sine die, but only that it was without a definite day to reconvene; and the court was not thereby at an end for the term precluding resumption of business.—People v. McGarry, 136 Mich. 316.

¶ 1526. The constitutional privilege of a speedy trial is not violated by the lapse of twenty-one days between the first adjourned day and the trial, where defendant was allowed to go upon his own recognizance and was not deprived of his liberty in any way.—People v. Shufelt, 61 Mich. 237.

§ 330. Attendance and functions and duties of attorneys and officers.

General duty and functions of prosecuting attorney and assistants, see Attorneys §§ 62-66.

¶ 1535. A trial court cannot interfere with a lawful stipulation which the parties enter into presumably for their own advantage.—People v. Murray, 52 Mich. 288.

¶ 1536. Conviction, in a case involving the question of intent, cannot be predicated upon the admissions of counsel and a conviction of larceny was set aside because thereof.—People v. Hall, 86 Mich. 132.

§ 335. View of locus by court or jury.

Things seen on view as evidence, see ante § 150.

Provisions for ordering view by jury, see Comp. L. 1915, § 15825.

¶ 1537. The matter of a jury viewing the place where an alleged crime has been committed is discretionary with the court.—People v. Winney, 196 Mich. 347.

¶ 1538. The purpose of a jury viewing the place where an alleged crime has been committed is to enable the jurors to comprehend more clearly by the aid of visible objects the evidence already received, and not to secure new evidence.—People v. Winney, 196 Mich. 347.

¶ 1539. It is improper to permit a witness to testify as to the location of objects, or as to any other material point, in the presence of the jury while they were viewing the place where an alleged crime has been committed.—People v. Winney, 196 Mich. 347.

¶ 1540. A respondent who is at liberty on bail during his trial for murder may waive his right to accompany the jury while they are viewing the premises where the death occurred, but the jury in no case should take anything in the nature of evidence in his absence.—People v. Auerbach, 176 Mich. 23.

¶ 1541. In a prosecution for murder respondent has a right to accompany the jury during a view of the premises where the death occurred, though the court said substantially that nobody but the officers could attend, with the exception of one other person named.—People v. Auerbach, 176 Mich. 23.

§ 336. Statement or testimony by accused.

Weight and effect as proof, see ante § 315.

Admissibility of evidence to rebut unsworn statement, see ante § 183.

Statement by accused in trial before justice, see post § 654.

Examination of accused for reasons, if any, against sentence, see post § 486.

¶ 1542. Laws 1861, Act No. 125, permitting a respondent to make an unsworn statement to the jury, is repealed by Laws of 1881, Act No. 245 (How. St. § 7545), permitting him to testify as a witness in his own behalf.—People v. Robinson, 86 Mich. 415.

¶ 1543. Laws 1861, Act No. 125, provided that nothing therein should "be construed as giving the right to compel a defendant in criminal cases to testify," but that any such defendant should "be at liberty to make a statement to the court or jury, and may be cross-examined on any such statement." Held, that such defendant was not entitled to be sworn as a witness in his own behalf, but only to make his statement without oath.—People v. Thomas, 9 Mich. 314.

¶ 1544. The purpose of permitting the prisoner to make an unsworn statement was to give him an opportunity to make full explanation to the jury in respect to the circumstances given in evidence which are supposed to have a bearing against him, and to make such further statements as he may deem material.—Annis v. People, 13 Mich. 511.

¶ 1545. Defendant being on trial for the larceny of a mare made his statement in reference to material points in the case, but said nothing on the subject of the mare alleged to have been stolen. His counsel thereupon, without defendant's knowledge, submitted to the court for approval in writing a suggestion as follows: "I call your attention to the subject of the stolen mare, so that you may make a statement in reference to it or not." The judge refused to permit the suggestion to be made. Held, that defendant was entitled to this assistance from his counsel, and that the suggestion in the manner proposed should have been allowed.—Annis v. People, 13 Mich. 511.

¶ 1546. Where several are jointly indicted but tried separately, the privilege of making a statement is confined to the one on trial.—Grimm v. People, 14 Mich. 300.

B. RECEPTION AND EXCLUSION OF EVIDENCE.

§ 337. In general; regulating and limiting examination.

Separation and exclusion of witnesses from court during examination of other witnesses, see post § 338.

Confrontation of witnesses by accused, see post §§ 339, 340.

Offering and introducing evidence and witnesses, see post §§ 341-348.

Duty of state to call witnesses, see post §§ 349-351.

Calling witnesses whose names are not indorsed, see post § 352.

Objections and rulings thereon, see post §§ 353-355.

Scope and subjects of defensive and rebuttal evidence, see post §§ 356, 357.

Order and sequence of proofs and reception out of order, see post §§ 358-364.

Exclusion or striking out of evidence, see post §§ 365, 366.

Recalling witnesses and opening case for further proofs, see post §§ 367, 368.

Reading testimony at preliminary examination to witness as basis of present examination, see ante ¶ 1555.

¶ 1556. Const. art. VI, § 28, securing to the defendant in a criminal prosecution the right "to be confronted with the witnesses against him," does not apply to the proof of the facts in their nature essentially documentary, and which can only be proved by the original or by a copy officially authenticated in some way; and especially not when the fact to be thus proved only comes up collaterally.—People v. Jones, 24 Mich. 215.

¶ 1557. A certificate of marriage, signed only by the minister or officiating officer, or the record thereof, cannot avail as evidence of the marriage in a criminal prosecution for bigamy, where the defendant is entitled to be confronted with the witnesses against him.—People v. Lambert, 5 Mich. 349.

¶ 1558. It is improper to admit in evidence against the respondent in a criminal case, for the purpose of showing the state of the weather at a particular time, the official record kept at the United States signal station, without the presence on the witness stand of the man who made the observations and the record. Accused has the right to confront the witness.—People v. Dow, 64 Mich. 717.

¶ 1559. Witnesses in civil cases are not required by any constitutional rule to be produced in open court, and in equity the prevailing practice is against it, depositions being taken when witnesses cannot be present. But the constitution does not permit this to be done in criminal cases.—People v. Sligh, 48 Mich. 54.

¶ 1560. Respondent's constitutional right to be confronted with the witnesses against him is not infringed by the admission, in a trial for rape, where the prosecuting witness is dead, of her deposition taken on the preliminary examination before the justice where respondent was present.—People v. Dowdigan, 67 Mich. 95.

¶ 1561. A conviction cannot be set aside for the admission of a deposition in pursuance of a voluntary stipulation by the parties or their counsel, even if the respondent is represented only by counsel assigned to him; in making such a stipulation the respondent waives his constitutional right to be confronted by the witness.—People v. Murray, 52 Mich. 288.

¶ 1561a. The right to confront witnesses is not denied by reading the testimony of a witness, properly proved by the stenographer, which the witness gave at a former trial of accused on the same information, where the witness at the time of the second trial is by reason of sickness not able to attend.—People v. Farrell, 146 Mich. 264.

§ 341. Offers and introduction of proof.

Duty to admit offered confession and submit voluntariness to jury, see also ante § 2[illegible]
Improper offers prejudicial to accused as error, see post § 342 et seq.
Repeating offers as error, see post § 348.
Election between counts, see ante § 46 et seq.
Election of counts to meet objections, see ante §§ 65, 66.
Offer of evidence as election to rely on count to which it relates, see ante § 48.
Preliminary proofs of competency as expert, see also ante § 211.
Reception of evidence on promise to supply connecting evidence, see post § 364.
Objections and rulings thereon, see post § 353.
Objection proper to reach too narrow offer, see post ¶ 1636.
Exclusion of evidence offered out of time, see post § 365.
Reading from documents and writings in evidence as a part of argument to jury, see post § 389.
Necessity and sufficiency of offer to make question for review, see post §§ 514, 523.
Admission of improper evidence as harmless error, see post § 540 et seq.
Production and inspection of documents before trial, see ante § 103.
Admissions by counsel, see ante § 334.

¶ 1562. Where respondent in a criminal case seeks to show good faith by putting in evidence a conversation between himself and his counsel, his offer must be distinct as to the nature of the conversation in order to render it admissible; and there should also be an offer to show that respondent followed the advice given.—People v. Long, 50 Mich. 249.

¶ 1563. In a prosecution for aiding and assisting a girl to leave the state knowing her to be a subject of the industrial home for girls, without the consent of the board of control of such home, the introduction of the commitment is sufficient to bring into evidence an indorsement of the approval of the circuit judge thereon since this is a part of the commitment and hence did not require to be offered separately.—People v. Kuney, 137 Mich. 436.

¶ 1564. A conviction will not be reversed because the prosecuting attorney, in making proof of the service upon respondent of notice to produce a certain paper in his possession which the people desired to introduce in evidence, was permitted to read such notice in the presence of the jury.—People v. Brown, 110 Mich. 168.

§ 342. Offer of incompetent witness.

¶ 1565. Where the wife of a defendant in a criminal case is called to the witness stand without the consent of the defendant, and the defendant is forced to prejudice himself with the jury by objecting to her testimony, de m r t ritr acc l i co ıicl te e nal oge ne

l b hn

a eat gal ecu ha len r t cl for j sse

pre ıe od erp ssi en tra a per lly w we lon

tric

pro

fc

a tl t t ood
a e cl 7 ol

po ide

ic

¶ 1576. In a prosecution for larceny, certain testimony in regard to the possession of the stolen property after the time of the alleged theft was held proper to go to the jury on proper instructions to meet the uncertainty of time and the claim of an alibi.—People v. Le Munion, 64 Mich. 709.

¶ 1577. Evidence in a wife murder trial tending to show incompetently that accused had sustained improper relations with another woman ought to be given to the jury, when proper as impeaching a witness, under an instruction to consider it only for that purpose.—People v. Foglesong, 116 Mich. 556.

¶ 1578. Where a witness for the defense admitted his friendly relations with the accused a letter showing witnesses' connection with him wherein he posted accused and gave information concerning the efforts of the police to arrest him is properly admitted to discredit him, even though statements of facts made therein might be incompetent as evidence, where the court discriminated clearly between the proper and improper use of the letter.—People v. Thorne, 148 Mich. 203.

¶ 1579. In a prosecution for manslaughter, where a witness wanted to correct his testimony, it was proper for the court to exclude statements made by the attorney for the accused, as such statements were unimportant, the material thing being whether the witness wanted to correct his evidence.—People v. McArron, 121 Mich. 1.

§ 348. Repeating offers and questions after ruling.

Necessity of renewing objections to save question for review, see post § 525.
Repetition of questions and requestioning witnesses, see Examination of Witnesses § 29.

¶ 1580. Where the court in a murder trial has excluded certain evidence, it is improper for defendant's counsel persistently to attempt to get the evidence before the jury by leading questions, and his offers of such proof should be submitted in writing to the court.—People v. Bowen, 165 Mich. 231.

§ 349. Duty of state to call witness or adduce proofs.

Where witness is accomplice or under indictment for same crime, see post § 350.
Production of witness without swearing or examining as a sufficient calling, see post § 351.
Calling witnesses not named on information, see post § 352.
Necessity of indorsement of names of witnesses on informations, see ante § 20.
Necessity of request to call state's witnesses to save objection for review, see post § 519.
Nonproduction of state's witness as harmless error, see post § 538.

¶ 1581. Prosecuting attorneys are sworn ministers of justice, bound to protect the innocent as well as to see that guilty are punished; they must stand indifferent as between the accused and private interests; and they cannot suppress testimony.—People v. Evans, 72 Mich. 367; People v. Swetland, 77 Mich. 53; People v. Bussey, 82 Mich. 4[illegible]. People v. Deitz, 86 Mich. 419.

¶ 1582. The public prosecutor has no right to suppress testimony that favors respondent.—Wellar v. People, 30 Mich. 16; People v. Gordon, 40 Mich. 716.

¶ 1583. A prosecuting attorney is not at liberty to call only such witnesses as are most favorable to the prosecution, when there are others who are in a situation to know, and do in fact know, as much about the transaction.—People v. Etter, 81 Mich. 57[illegible].

¶ 1584. In a homicide, and in cases where analogous reasons exist, those witnesses who were present at the transaction, or who can give direct evidence on any material branch of it, should always be called by the prosecution, except, perhaps, where they are too numerous; the fact that the witnesses may not be favorable to the prosecution is no excuse for not calling them, although it may authorize the prosecuting attorney to press them, when necessary, with searching questions.—Wellar v. People, 30 Mich. 16.

¶ 1585. The prosecution is bound to call all the eyewitnesses to the transaction, unless the number was so great as to make the testimony merely cumulative.—People v. McCullough, 81 Mich. 25.

¶ 1586. The prosecution must call as a witness a person who was present in the room where the shooting which resulted in the homicide for which respondent is on trial took place.—People v. Harper, 83 Mich. 273.

¶ 1587. The refusal of the prosecution to call as witnesses all persons who witnessed the affray in which an assault complained of was committed is ground for reversal.—People v. Deitz, 86 Mich. 419.

¶ 1588. In a prosecution for assault and battery the court has power to compel the prosecution to call as a witness one who has seen the affray where there are few such witnesses.—People v. Kenyon, 93 Mich. 19[illegible].

¶ 1589. It is the duty of a prosecuting attorney to call all eyewitnesses unless in cases of misdemeanor the testimony will be merely cumulative.—People v. Upton, 169 Mich. 31.

¶ 1590. Generally, all attainable witnesses should be called for the prosecution before the prisoner is put to his defense, unless their evidence is merely cumulative.—Hurd v. People, 25 Mich. 405.

carrying the body home, where the prosecutor claimed that they knew nothing about the res gestæ, but offered to produce them.—People v. McArron, 121 Mich. 1.

§ 352. Calling witnesses not named on information.

Indorsements of names, addition or striking names, and time and showing for leave to indorse, see ante §§ 20, 21.

Competency of testimony of witnesses not named, see ante § 156.

Mode of objection to testimony, see post § 355.

Right to object that rebuttal testimony might have been given in chief, see also post ¶ 1645.

¶ 1618. Where the prosecuting attorney shows that he had not known before trial began that a certain person was a material witness, such person may be sworn on behalf of the people, even though his name had not been indorsed upon the information as that of a witness.—Hill v. People, 26 Mich. 496.

¶ 1619. Where an immaterial matter testified to by a witness for the people is denied by respondent, the prosecution cannot introduce witnesses in rebuttal whose names are not indorsed on the information.—People v. Deitz, 86 Mich. 419.

¶ 1620. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 11934, it is error in a criminal case to permit the people to swear a witness in rebuttal without the name of such witness being indorsed upon the information and without requiring any showing as to why it was not indorsed.—People v. Casey, 124 Mich. 279.

¶ 1621. Where on a trial for uttering an alleged forged instrument the persons whose names purported to be affixed as witnesses were not produced nor their names indorsed on the information, and where no showing was made that the names were fictitious, their testimony was a necessary part of the people's case, which could not be omitted without good excuse.—People v. Swetland, 77 Mich. 53.

¶ 1622. Where, in a prosecution for keeping a saloon open after hours, three witnesses testify in behalf of the people that, after the hour for closing, they, in company with three women, whose names are not indorsed on the information, went into a room back of the bar-room kept by respondent, and there purchased lager beer of respondent's barkeeper, it is not error for the court to deny respondent's motion to place the names of the women upon the information, and produce them as witnesses for the people; it appearing that the prosecution has not failed to put all parts of the transaction before the jury by the testimony of the three men, and that the introduction of the testimony of the women would be merely cumulative.—People v. Kindra, 102 Mich. 147.

¶ 1623. After witnesses for the pe testified that they were in responde room after hours with three women gone fully into the facts and after ent had rested, one of the women w and examined as a witness for th Her name was not on the indictme testimony corroborated that of the t but was taken under respondent's that it was more prejudicial to hin would have been had it been take in the trial. Held, that the time o the witness was within the discretio court.—People v. Kindra, 102 Mich.

¶ 1624. It was not error to refuse pel the prosecution to produce an certain witness who was present a preceding the one in which the dece killed, whose name was not indorse information, where, although defenda that the witness was present on the in question, the application was n until the people had rested and a witness was fifty miles away.—P Hossler, 135 Mich. 384.

¶ 1625. Whether the people should pelled to produce a witness who is to in the testimony, but who is not sary witness for the people's case, i ter within the sound discretion of court.—People v. Plummer, 189 Mic

¶ 1626. In a prosecution for un selling liquor, the refusal of the tri to require the people to produce a who was not necessary to the peopl but in whose possession was found the marked money paid for liquor from respondent, held not an abuse cretion.—People v. Plummer, 189 M

§ 353. Objections and rulings on offers tions.

Specification of grounds of object post § 354.

Argument of objections and offers in of jury as error, see post § 373.

Improper remarks in passing on ob see post § 395.

Objections to witnesses, see post § 3

Grounds and reasons for striking dence, see post § 366.

Motion to strike or cross-examin proper mode of reaching ambig swers, see post ¶ 1676.

Objection or demurrer to reception evidence, see post § 401.

Mode of taking and preserving objec exception to ruling or otherwise pose of review by writ of erro tions or certiorari, see post, XI

Making objections in civil cases, s V. C.; Saving Questions.

Objection on review for first time t of witness was not indorsed, § 511.

Objection on review for first time ness signed deposition on hearin within this state shall be public, and every citizen may freely attend the same."—People v. Murray, 89 Mich. 276.

§ 328. Presence of accused, counsel and judge.

Right to be present at taking of view, and waiver of right, see post § 335, ¶¶ 1540, 1541.

At giving of additional instructions after retirement and return into court, see post § 454.

Colloquy on return of jury into court after retirement in absence of accused but in presence of his counsel, see post ¶ 2255.

Right to have communications received from jury after retirement made known to counsel, see post ¶ 2252.

Presence on return of jury into court for information or rereading of testimony, see post § 465.

On examination of prisoner before sentence on plea of guilty, see post § 486.

Presence at sentence by justice to imprisonment, see post ¶ 2994.

Duty of attorneys to attend, see post § 330.

Showing in record as to presence of accused, see post § 500.

Presumption as to judge's attendance from recitals in record as to adjournment, see post ¶ 1524.

Polling the jury on return of verdict, see post § 469.

Right to confront witnesses, see post §§ 339, 340.

Absence of attorney as ground for continuance, see ante § 121.

¶ 1519. After the regular conviction of a person charged with crime he can no longer insist on being personally present in court for further proceedings, such as the disposition of a motion for a new trial.—People v. Ormsby, 48 Mich. 494.

¶ 1520. Where one on trial for a felony, who is out on bail, fails to appear at the hour to which court has adjourned pending the deliberations of the jury, a verdict rendered in his absence is valid, notwithstanding the provision of How. St. § 9568, that no person indicted for a felony shall be tried unless personally present during the trial.—Frey v. Calhoun Circuit Judge, 107 Mich. 130.

¶ 1521. Where, during argument of counsel to the jury in a criminal case, the trial judge was in a room adjoining the court room where he could hear the argument, held that his absence from the court room did not justify the reversal of the case in the absence of any showing that prejudice resulted to the defendant therefrom.—People v. Kimbrough, 193 Mich. 330.

§ 329. Terms and time for trial.

Time to institute prosecution and limitations on prosecution, see ante, II.

Time and term for filing information or indictment, see ante § 13.

Time and term for motion for new trial motion, see post § 480.

Time for procedure for review, see post § 580 et seq.

Postponements and continuances, see ante, VI.

Postponement for purpose of preparation, see ante § 121.

Objections for first time on review to improper time for trial, see post § 513.

Constitutional provision as to speedy trial, see Constitutional Law § 199.

Offering bribe to postpone or frustrate prosecution, see Crimes § 50.

General law as to terms and places for court, see Courts, II.

Right to speedy trial, see Const. art. II, § 19.

Time for trial, statutory provision, see Comp. L. 1915, § 15731.

¶ 1522. The statute requiring that when a defendant arraigned in the county court requested to be tried before the circuit judge, such judge should, on the first day of the next term, assign a day for the trial, was, as to time, directory only.—People v. Doe, 1 Mich. 451.

¶ 1523. Judgment will not be set aside on the ground merely that respondent was examined and arraigned for trial at the same term, though bound over to answer "at the next term."—People v. Mason, 63 Mich. 510.

¶ 1524. Even if Comp. L. 1897, § 303, requires an ending of the term at the end of five days, when the judge does not appear at the beginning of the term, the court will not assume that the judge was not present each day, although no business was done; and there was no presumption in the case in question that the judge did not attend on a record showing adjournment on a certain day to a day stated and the signature of the trial judge to it.—People v. McGarry, 136 Mich. 316.

¶ 1525. On a court journal showing as of a day in term that the court "thereupon adjourned," it cannot be said that the adjournment was sine die, but only that it was without a definite day to reconvene; and the court was not thereby at an end for the term precluding resumption of business.—People v. McGarry, 136 Mich. 316.

¶ 1526. The constitutional privilege of a speedy trial is not violated by the lapse of twenty-one days between the first adjourned day and the trial, where defendant was allowed to go upon his own recognizance and was not deprived of his liberty in any way.—People v. Shufelt, 61 Mich. 237.

§ 330. Attendance and functions and duties of attorneys and officers.

General duty and functions of prosecuting attorney and assistants, see Attorneys §§ 62-66.

Contempt by counsel by delaying proceedings by absence on trial day, see Contempt § 3, ¶ 6.
Administrative and judicial functions in the prosecution, powers of the prosecuting attorney, see Constitutional Law § 64.
Power to ask and make amendments, see ante § 68.
Conduct of preliminary examination for competency, see post ¶ 1547.
Necessity of presence at trial, see ante § 328.
Authority and functions on review, see post § 582.
Appearance and functions of prosecuting attorney in trials before justices, see post § 649.
Approval of prosecution as factor in justice's jurisdiction, see ante § 92.
Duty to call state's witnesses, see post § 349 et seq.
Duty to withhold improper offers prejudicial to accused, see also post ¶ 1573.
Asking improper disparaging or discrediting questions as error, see post § 343.
Insulting and intimidating witnesses as error, see post § 393.
Opening statements and final arguments to jury, see post, IX, C.
Duty of court to prevent improper arguments and remarks tending to prejudice jury, see post § 370.
Duty to refrain in argument from asserting personal knowledge and belief or experiences, see post § 378.
Effect of misstating principles of law in argument, see post § 387.
Suggesting in argument that court's instructions be ignored, see post ¶ 1782.
Objections to qualifications of attorneys, see ante § 102.
Right of accused to counsel for defense, see Comp. L. 1915, § 15623; Const. art. II, § 19.

¶ 1527. It is the duty of the public prosecutor to see that the person charged with crime receives a fair trial, so far as it is in his power to afford him one, and it is likewise his duty to use his best endeavor to convict persons guilty of crime; and in the discharge of his duty an active zeal is commendable, yet his methods to procure conviction must be such as accord with the fair and impartial administration of justice.—People v. Dane, 59 Mich. 550.

¶ 1528. The agreement of the attorney-general or of the prosecuting attorney of the proper county for the continuance of the hearing of a criminal case in the supreme court is binding upon both of those officers.—People v. Bussey, 80 Mich. 501.

¶ 1529. Attorneys are officers of the court, and it is their duty to be in court upon the trial of causes duly set for trial, of which they have had due notice.—In re McHugh, 152 Mich. 505.

§ 331. Presence railing.

¶ 1530. In a p
the evidence wa accused entered the night of the mit the offense o
an unsuccessful
the action of t sheriff to escort room and seat tl
in close proximi was giving her where there was them and their have affected th presented.—Peop

¶ 1531. The bar during a n occupied by doct
an expert witne not to justify r ground that th created that suc
special weight.—
Mich. 330.

§ 332. Suspensio
Interruptions a
post § 333.
Continuance or begun, see a

¶ 1532. It is temporarily susp to investigate a nesses in the ca
Mich. 537.

¶ 1533. The c
the progress of mine the legal
People v. Parke

§ 333. Interrupti Arresting witne
ante ¶ 1534.
Surrender of ac
jury as har

¶ 1534. The jury of one of his leaving the tice, and should Wolcott, 51 Mic

§ 334. Stipulatio Insufficiency of tablish inte
Asking further doubt crea charge, see Power of prose general to ante ¶ 1528
General law of Admissions in c cases, see T

¶ 1535. A trial court cannot interfere with a lawful stipulation which the parties enter into presumably for their own advantage.—People v. Murray, 52 Mich. 288.

¶ 1536. Conviction, in a case involving the question of intent, cannot be predicated upon the admissions of counsel and a conviction of larceny was set aside because thereof.—People v. Hall, 86 Mich. 132.

§ 335. View of locus by court or jury.

Things seen on view as evidence, see ante § 150.

Provisions for ordering view by jury, see Comp. L. 1915, § 15825.

¶ 1537. The matter of a jury viewing the place where an alleged crime has been committed is discretionary with the court.—People v. Winney, 196 Mich. 347.

¶ 1538. The purpose of a jury viewing the place where an alleged crime has been committed is to enable the jurors to comprehend more clearly by the aid of visible objects the evidence already received, and not to secure new evidence.—People v. Winney, 196 Mich. 347.

¶ 1539. It is improper to permit a witness to testify as to the location of objects, or as to any other material point, in the presence of the jury while they were viewing the place where an alleged crime has been committed.—People v. Winney, 196 Mich. 347.

¶ 1540. A respondent who is at liberty on bail during his trial for murder may waive his right to accompany the jury while they are viewing the premises where the death occurred, but the jury in no case should take anything in the nature of evidence in his absence.—People v. Auerbach, 176 Mich. 23.

¶ 1541. In a prosecution for murder respondent has a right to accompany the jury during a view of the premises where the death occurred, though the court said substantially that nobody but the officers could attend, with the exception of one other person named.—People v. Auerbach, 176 Mich. 23.

§ 336. Statement or testimony by accused.

Weight and effect as proof, see ante § 315.

Admissibility of evidence to rebut unsworn statement, see ante § 183.

Statement by accused in trial before justice, see post § 654.

Examination of accused for reasons, if any, against sentence, see post § 486.

¶ 1542. Laws 1861, Act No. 125, permitting a respondent to make an unsworn statement to the jury, is repealed by Laws of 1881, Act No. 245 (How. St. § 7545), permitting him to testify as a witness in his own behalf.—People v. Robinson, 86 Mich. 415.

¶ 1543. Laws 1861, Act No. 125, provided that nothing therein should "be construed as giving the right to compel a defendant in criminal cases to testify," but that any such defendant should "be at liberty to make a statement to the court or jury, and may be cross-examined on any such statement." Held, that such defendant was not entitled to be sworn as a witness in his own behalf, but only to make his statement without oath.—People v. Thomas, 9 Mich. 314.

¶ 1544. The purpose of permitting the prisoner to make an unsworn statement was to give him an opportunity to make full explanation to the jury in respect to the circumstances given in evidence which are supposed to have a bearing against him, and to make such further statements as he may deem material.—Annis v. People, 13 Mich. 511.

¶ 1545. Defendant being on trial for the larceny of a mare made his statement in reference to material points in the case, but said nothing on the subject of the mare alleged to have been stolen. His counsel thereupon, without defendant's knowledge, submitted to the court for approval in writing a suggestion as follows: "I call your attention to the subject of the stolen mare, so that you may make a statement in reference to it or not." The judge refused to permit the suggestion to be made. Held, that defendant was entitled to this assistance from his counsel, and that the suggestion in the manner proposed should have been allowed.—Annis v. People, 13 Mich. 511.

¶ 1546. Where several are jointly indicted, but tried separately, the privilege of making a statement is confined to the one on trial.—Grimm v. People, 14 Mich. 300.

B. RECEPTION AND EXCLUSION OF EVIDENCE.

§ 337. In general; regulating and limiting examination.

Separation and exclusion of witnesses from court during examination of other witnesses, see post § 338.

Confrontation of witnesses by accused, see post §§ 339, 340.

Offering and introducing evidence and witnesses, see post §§ 341-348.

Duty of state to call witnesses, see post §§ 349-351.

Calling witnesses whose names are not indorsed, see post § 352.

Objections and rulings thereon, see post §§ 353-355.

Scope and subjects of defensive and rebuttal evidence, see post §§ 356, 357.

Order and sequence of proofs and reception out of order, see post §§ 358-364.

Exclusion or striking out of evidence, see post §§ 365, 366.

Recalling witnesses and opening case for further proofs, see post §§ 367, 368.

Taking testimony by deposition, see post § 369.
Impropriety of witness' testifying during taking of view, see ante ¶ 1539.
Misconduct of judge in interrupting examination, see post § 395.
Things seen by jury on view as evidence, see ante § 150.
Sending or allowing books, papers or exhibits to be taken to jury room, see post § 460.
Suspending trial to investigate bribery and subornation, see ante § 332.
Election between counts, and time and manner of electing, see ante § 46 et seq.
Harmless error in improper offers or examination, see post § 544.
Improper exclusion of evidence or witness as harmless error, see post § 542.
Erroneous admission or exclusion of evidence cured by other evidence or action, see post § 552 et seq.
Exclusion of evidence cured by later reception or offer to receive, see post § 559.
Reviewableness of discretionary rulings on questions of examination and reception of proof, see post § 628.
Number of counsel permitted to examine and change in counsel conducting examination, see Examination of Witnesses, § 4.
Questions by judge to witness, see Examination of Witnesses § 5.
Refreshing memory of witness, see Examination of Witnesses, § 20 et seq.
Exhibition of memorandum for refreshment of memory of witness to witness and counsel before using, see Examination of Witnesses § 26.
Witness reading from book used to refresh memory and admissible in evidence, see Examination of Witnesses § 28.
Reading former testimony on pretense of refreshing memory as error, see Examination of Witnesses ¶ 118.
Leading questions to accused by his counsel, see Examination of Witnesses, § 17.
Discretion to regulate and control cross-examination, see Examination of Witnesses § 38.
Right to cross-examine notwithstanding admission in open court of disputed fact, see Examination of Witnesses § 35.
Practice in civil cases, see Trial, V.
Subpoenas to witnesses, see Witnesses, I.
Provision for employment and compensation of interpreters, see Comp. L. 1915, § 15915.

¶ 1547. Preliminary examination by a court of witnesses to determine the admissibility of the declarations of a deceased party as dying declarations may be conducted by the court itself or by the prosecuting attorney in the court's presence, and it is discretionary with the court as to conducting such examination in the presence of the jury.—People v. Cutler, 197 Mich. 6.

¶ 1548. It is improper for the court to dismiss a witness summarily where the counsel for accused expresses a desire to cross-examine further and the assigned rea the court for such action is that "I wait."—People v. Kindra, 102 Mich.

§ 338. Separation and exclusion of wi

Seating expert witnesses within rail taking of testimony, see also ante Competency of testimony of witnesse violated rule, see ante § 157.

¶ 1549. The exclusion of witnesse the court room during a trial is wholl in the discretion of the court.—Pe Burns, 67 Mich. 537.

¶ 1550. In a criminal case the co fused to exclude from the court roo ing the examination of other witne witness for the people, who, being a tive, had caused respondent's arrest; was allowed to remain and suggest prosecuting attorney facts relating testimony. Held, that there was no al discretion.—People v. Burns, 67 Mich.

¶ 1551. Respondent's request, in a homicide, that the witnesses may be ined separately and not in one an presence, should be granted, if seas made.—People v. Hall, 48 Mich. 482.

¶ 1552. Refusal of the request of a on trial for larceny that one of th officers who arrested respondent be ex from the court room while the other i fying, is not error, being entirely with discretion of the court.—People v. M 101 Mich. 400.

¶ 1553. It is matter of discretion to a witness for the prosecution to rem court during the trial.—People v. Cor 105 Mich. 149.

§ 339. Confrontation of witnesses.

Validity of laws affecting right of a see Constitutional Law, IX.
Right to confront witnesses, see Co 1915, § 15623; Const. art. II, § 19

¶ 1554. Evidence against a person a or convicted of a penal offense can received in his absence for the purp imposing or increasing his sentence.- Fowler, 49 Mich. 234.

¶ 1555. This right of confrontation violated by allowing the prosecution a witness whom it is compelled to call adverse, to read to such witness, and t rogate him upon his testimony befo examining magistrate; respondent been confronted by, and having cross ined, such witness upon the preliminar amination.—People v. Case, 105 Mich

§ 340. ——Documentary and depositi dence.

Competency of depositions taken on inary hearing and of other docu see ante § 282 et seq.

Reading testimony at preliminary examination to witness as basis of present examination, see ante ¶ 1555.

¶ 1556. Const. art. VI, § 28, securing to the defendant in a criminal prosecution the right "to be confronted with the witnesses against him," does not apply to the proof of the facts in their nature essentially documentary, and which can only be proved by the original or by a copy officially authenticated in some way; and especially not when the fact to be thus proved only comes up collaterally.—People v. Jones, 24 Mich. 215.

¶ 1557. A certificate of marriage, signed only by the minister or officiating officer, or the record thereof, cannot avail as evidence of the marriage in a criminal prosecution for bigamy, where the defendant is entitled to be confronted with the witnesses against him.—People v. Lambert, 5 Mich. 349.

¶ 1558. It is improper to admit in evidence against the respondent in a criminal case, for the purpose of showing the state of the weather at a particular time, the official record kept at the United States signal station, without the presence on the witness stand of the man who made the observations and the record. Accused has the right to confront the witness.—People v. Dow, 64 Mich. 717.

¶ 1559. Witnesses in civil cases are not required by any constitutional rule to be produced in open court, and in equity the prevailing practice is against it, depositions being taken when witnesses cannot be present. But the constitution does not permit this to be done in criminal cases.—People v. Sligh, 48 Mich. 54.

¶ 1560. Respondent's constitutional right to be confronted with the witnesses against him is not infringed by the admission, in a trial for rape, where the prosecuting witness is dead, of her deposition taken on the preliminary examination before the justice where respondent was present.—People v. Dowdigan, 67 Mich. 95.

¶ 1561. A conviction cannot be set aside for the admission of a deposition in pursuance of a voluntary stipulation by the parties or their counsel, even if the respondent is represented only by counsel assigned to him; in making such a stipulation the respondent waives his constitutional right to be confronted by the witness.—People v. Murray, 52 Mich. 288.

¶ 1561a. The right to confront witnesses is not denied by reading the testimony of a witness, properly proved by the stenographer, which the witness gave at a former trial of accused on the same information, where the witness at the time of the second trial is by reason of sickness not able to attend.—People v. Farrell, 146 Mich. 264.

§ 341. Offers and introduction of proof.

Duty to admit offered confession and submit voluntariness to jury, see also ante § 261.
Improper offers prejudicial to accused as error, see post § 342 et seq.
Repeating offers as error, see post § 348.
Election between counts, see ante § 46 et seq.
Election of counts to meet objections, see ante §§ 65, 66.
Offer of evidence as election to rely on count to which it relates, see ante § 48.
Preliminary proofs of competency as expert, see also ante § 211.
Reception of evidence on promise to supply connecting evidence, see post § 364.
Objections and rulings thereon, see post § 353.
Objection proper to reach too narrow offer, see post ¶ 1636.
Exclusion of evidence offered out of time, see post § 365.
Reading from documents and writings in evidence as a part of argument to jury, see post § 389.
Necessity and sufficiency of offer to make question for review, see post §§ 514, 523.
Admission of improper evidence as harmless error, see post § 540 et seq.
Production and inspection of documents before trial, see ante § 103.
Admissions by counsel, see ante § 334.

¶ 1562. Where respondent in a criminal case seeks to show good faith by putting in evidence a conversation between himself and his counsel, his offer must be distinct as to the nature of the conversation in order to render it admissible; and there should also be an offer to show that respondent followed the advice given.—People v. Long, 50 Mich. 249.

¶ 1563. In a prosecution for aiding and assisting a girl to leave the state knowing her to be a subject of the industrial home for girls, without the consent of the board of control of such home, the introduction of the commitment is sufficient to bring into evidence an indorsement of the approval of the circuit judge thereon since this is a part of the commitment and hence did not require to be offered separately.—People v. Kuney, 137 Mich. 436.

¶ 1564. A conviction will not be reversed because the prosecuting attorney, in making proof of the service upon respondent of notice to produce a certain paper in his possession which the people desired to introduce in evidence, was permitted to read such notice in the presence of the jury.—People v. Brown, 110 Mich. 168.

§ 342. Offer of incompetent witness.

¶ 1565. Where the wife of a defendant in a criminal case is called to the witness stand without the consent of the defendant, and the defendant is forced to prejudice himself with the jury by objecting to her testimony.

reversible error is thereby committed.—People v. Trine, 164 Mich. 1.

¶ 1566. Where the offering of an attorney as a witness against his client charged with perjury and the asking of questions convey an intimation that if the attorney was permitted to testify his evidence would not sustain the evidence of the client, the mere fact that the accused was compelled to interpose an objection upon the ground of privilege tends to prejudice him with the jury, and that the attorney did not testify to any prejudicial fact will not preclude a reversal. —People v. Dahrooge, 173 Mich. 375.

§ 343. Questions tending to disparage or suggest improprieties.

Offer of improper character evidence in presence of jury as error, see also ante ¶ 1297.

¶ 1567. It is error in a criminal case for the prosecuting attorney to attempt, in the cross-examination, to throw discredit upon witnesses for the defense by asking questions not with the design of eliciting facts but to cast suspicion upon the character and credibility of such witnesses.—People v. Gotshall, 123 Mich. 474.

¶ 1568. Attempts in an arson case to discredit respondent by asking questions designed to convey to the jury the impression that the prosecutor believed that respondent was guilty of other like crimes, are improper and the practice is condemned.—People v. Gotshall, 123 Mich. 474.

¶ 1569. Propounding in good faith improper questions to impeach a witness is not reversible error.—People v. Tubbs, 147 Mich. 1.

¶ 1570. Defendant in a criminal case set up an alibi. The prosecuting attorney in examining his alibi witnesses asked them if, in a trial of defendant on another charge, they did not witness to an alibi, and made other irrelevant insinuations calculated to arouse a prejudice against said witnesses. Held, this constituted reversible error.—People v. Lieska, 161 Mich. 630.

§ 344. Evidence capable of improper use.

Offers of evidence not admissible for some purposes, see post § 346.

¶ 1571. On a trial for receiving stolen goods it is error to allow the prosecution to introduce under the pretext of rebuttal the minutes of respondent's testimony on the trial of another person, for an entirely different crime, in the shape of a long and rambling cross-examination upon matters irrelevant to either record, the purpose being to assail injuriously respondent's general history, and to infer perjury from the conviction of the other prisoner; error.—People v. Moyer, 77 Mich. 571.

¶ 1572. In a prosecution for murder, where the people are forced to call the mother of defendant as a witness, it is error to admit testimony ostensibly to impeach witness implying that the mother was an accomplice in the crime, where the intended impeachment is not as to the witness' competent testimony, but as to testimony which is immaterial, the effect being to create a false issue between the people and the witness, and by suggestion and inference making the defendant and the witness stand together, so that if the false issue is determined favorably to the people, defendant will be correspondingly affected.—People v. Lahnala, 193 Mich. 144.

¶ 1573. Where respondent in a criminal case is unpopular and there is great feeling and prejudice in the community against him, it is the special duty of the prosecuting attorney to see that the respondent has a fair trial and not to introduce in evidence matters which would permit the jury to entertain an unjust suspicion of the character and truthfulness of the witnesses for the defense and it is the duty of the judge to restrain attacks upon such witnesses.—People v. Gotshall, 123 Mich. 474.

§ 345. Evidence not offered on preliminary hearing.

¶ 1574. A ruling that "it is the duty of a respondent, when he has a good defense in the nature of an alibi, to interpose that defense at the earliest moment possible, and a respondent should offer his defense of an alibi before the examining magistrate, with a view to saving himself anxiety and trouble, and the people the great expense of a trial," is held erroneous, especially in the absence of any showing that the witnesses sworn on the trial on that subject were present or obtainable at the examination.—Sullivan v. People, 31 Mich. 1.

§ 346. Evidence admissible for restricted purposes.

Offers of evidence capable of improper use, see ante § 344.

Admissibility for some and not for other purposes, see ante § 159.

¶ 1575. Where an information contains two counts, one for larceny and the other for receiving the stolen goods, it is error to submit under the second count evidence of distinct larcenies of similar goods, as it tends to show respondent to be a common thief, and prejudices him upon the charge in the first count.—People v. Jacks, 76 Mich. 218.

§ 347. ——Reception with caution or limitations on purpose.

Instructions as to proper uses, see post § 449.

Instruction against misuse of evidence, see post § 449.

Admissibility for limited or specific purpose, see ante § 159.

¶ 1576. In a prosecution for larceny, certain testimony in regard to the possession of the stolen property after the time of the alleged theft was held proper to go to the jury on proper instructions to meet the uncertainty of time and the claim of an alibi.—People v. Le Munion, 64 Mich. 709.

¶ 1577. Evidence in a wife murder trial tending to show incompetently that accused had sustained improper relations with another woman ought to be given to the jury, when proper as impeaching a witness, under an instruction to consider it only for that purpose.—People v. Foglesong, 116 Mich. 556.

¶ 1578. Where a witness for the defense admitted his friendly relations with the accused a letter showing witnesses' connection with him wherein he posted accused and gave information concerning the efforts of the police to arrest him is properly admitted to discredit him, even though statements of facts made therein might be incompetent as evidence, where the court discriminated clearly between the proper and improper use of the letter.—People v. Thorne, 148 Mich. 203.

¶ 1579. In a prosecution for manslaughter, where a witness wanted to correct his testimony, it was proper for the court to exclude statements made by the attorney for the accused, as such statements were unimportant, the material thing being whether the witness wanted to correct his evidence.—People v. McArron, 121 Mich. 1.

§ 348. Repeating offers and questions after ruling.

Necessity of renewing objections to save question for review, see post § 525.
Repetition of questions and requestioning witnesses, see Examination of Witnesses § 29.

¶ 1580. Where the court in a murder trial has excluded certain evidence, it is improper for defendant's counsel persistently to attempt to get the evidence before the jury by leading questions, and his offers of such proof should be submitted in writing to the court.—People v. Bowen, 165 Mich. 231.

§ 349. Duty of state to call witness or adduce proofs.

Where witness is accomplice or under indictment for same crime, see post § 350.
Production of witness without swearing or examining as a sufficient calling, see post § 351.
Calling witnesses not named on information, see post § 352.
Necessity of indorsement of names of witnesses on informations, see ante § 20.
Necessity of request to call state's witnesses to save objection for review, see post § 519.
Nonproduction of state's witness as harmless error, see post § 538.

¶ 1581. Prosecuting attorneys are sworn ministers of justice, bound to protect the innocent as well as to see that guilty are punished; they must stand indifferent as between the accused and private interests; and they cannot suppress testimony.—People v. Evans, 72 Mich. 367; People v. Swetland, 77 Mich. 53; People v. Bussey, 82 Mich. 49; People v. Deitz, 86 Mich. 419.

¶ 1582. The public prosecutor has no right to suppress testimony that favors respondent.—Wellar v. People, 30 Mich. 16; People v. Gordon, 40 Mich. 716.

¶ 1583. A prosecuting attorney is not at liberty to call only such witnesses as are most favorable to the prosecution, when there are others who are in a situation to know, and do in fact know, as much about the transaction.—People v. Etter, 81 Mich. 570.

¶ 1584. In a homicide, and in cases where analogous reasons exist, those witnesses who were present at the transaction, or who can give direct evidence on any material branch of it, should always be called by the prosecution, except, perhaps, where they are too numerous; the fact that the witnesses may not be favorable to the prosecution is no excuse for not calling them, although it may authorize the prosecuting attorney to press them, when necessary, with searching questions.—Wellar v. People, 30 Mich. 16.

¶ 1585. The prosecution is bound to call all the eyewitnesses to the transaction, unless the number was so great as to make the testimony merely cumulative.—People v. McCullough, 81 Mich. 25.

¶ 1586. The prosecution must call as a witness a person who was present in the room where the shooting which resulted in the homicide for which respondent is on trial took place.—People v. Harper, 83 Mich. 273.

¶ 1587. The refusal of the prosecution to call as witnesses all persons who witnessed the affray in which an assault complained of was committed is ground for reversal.—People v. Deitz, 86 Mich. 419.

¶ 1588. In a prosecution for assault and battery the court has power to compel the prosecution to call as a witness one who has seen the affray where there are few such witnesses.—People v. Kenyon, 93 Mich. 19.

¶ 1589. It is the duty of a prosecuting attorney to call all eyewitnesses unless in cases of misdemeanor the testimony will be merely cumulative.—People v. Upton, 169 Mich. 31.

¶ 1590. Generally, all attainable witnesses should be called for the prosecution before the prisoner is put to his defense, unless their evidence is merely cumulative.—Hurd v. People, 25 Mich. 405.

¶ 1591. The rule requiring the prosecution to call every attainable witness where testimony is needed to disclose any part of the transaction is to prevent the suppression of evidence, and does not make it always necessary to call all witnesses, particularly where their testimony would be only cumulative, and the offense is not a crime of violence.—Bonker v. People, 37 Mich. 4.

¶ 1592. The prosecution may refuse to call a witness whose name is indorsed upon the information, where proof of the fact to which he was to testify has become unnecessary.—People v. Berry, 107 Mich. 256.

¶ 1593. The prosecution is not obliged to call a witness whose name was placed upon the information at respondent's request, such witness being present in court.—People v. Resh, 107 Mich. 251.

¶ 1594. The prosecution in a criminal action is not obliged to call all the witnesses that are named on the information.—People v. Quick, 51 Mich. 547.

¶ 1595. The prosecution in a criminal case cannot be required to call respondent's wife as a witness in order that she may be cross-examined, even though her name has been indorsed on the information as one of the witnesses for the prosecution.—People v. Wolcott, 51 Mich. 612.

¶ 1596. On the trial of a youth for the larceny of a pocket-book the fact that an officer had seen the prisoner's father search him immediately after the theft and take from him what seemed to be a goldpiece and put it into his own pocket, was a part of the res gestæ; and the prosecution was not bound to call the father as a witness, as it was not claimed that he knew anything more about the transaction than the finding; and as he was actively aiding the defense, his position in regard to the facts was not such as to make him a necessary witness for the prosecution to protect defendant against a false accusation.—People v. Long, 44 Mich. 296.

¶ 1597. Where felonious homicide is charged it is both the right and the duty of the prosecution to give evidence of all the circumstances surrounding the discovery of the body of deceased which have any bearing upon the manner of the death, and any tendency to show whether it was natural, accidental or felonious. Such evidence is a necessary preliminary to any which shall be offered to connect any particular person with the homicide.—Brown v. People, 17 Mich. 429.

¶ 1598. In a case of homicide the prosecution must connect the prisoner with the injury claimed to have been the cause of death, and must give all the testimony in its power going to prove the corpus delicti.—Wellar v. People, 30 Mich. 16.

¶ 1599. A keep through his doo crowd out and in another man were side. Held, that sault with intent to demand that t
poenaed the stra
should put him
People, 39 Mich.

¶ 1600. A pers was named as a against another f prosecution did they were bound and that the accu
efit of every infe from its suppress
Mich. 716.

¶ 1601. In a stolen goods the a witness a perso were afterwards berg, 39 Mich. 54

¶ 1602. In a p
the person the r
quire the prosecu
ticular witness upon the informa
where there was was present at th
—People v. Hens

¶ 1603. Where main question is tion cannot refu
nesses present at testimony of such of the people's
Etter, 81 Mich.

¶ 1604. Respo not complain tha ness at the pre though named o called by the pro part of the affr mother, who clai
affray, was so ca
rights were full amination.—Peop

¶ 1605. On th
keeping a house
two men, one of the house and t on the part of h tending to show that the refusal
the prosecuting
ion as a witness tion testified to charged, and on stances in proof.
362.

¶ 1606. Where sault with inte

complaining witness testifies that, at the time the shot which inflicted the injury complained of was fired, but one person aside from respondent and himself was in the room where the shooting occurred, and that witness did not see the shot fired, and the evidence as to who fired it is purely circumstantial, it is the duty of the prosecuting attorney to call and examine said third party as a witness; and this is so even though such third party is respondent's sister, it appearing also that she was the betrothed of the complaining witness.—People v. Germaine, 101 Mich. 485.

¶ 1606a. In a criminal prosecution for selling intoxicating liquors without having paid the tax required under Comp. Laws, 1897, § 5385, men named by a witness for the prosecution as being present at respondent's place of business when he drank liquor there, and as drinking liquor there themselves, are not res gestæ witnesses within the meaning of the rule which requires that such witnesses shall be produced and examined by the prosecuting attorney.—People v. Moore, 155 Mich. 107.

§ 350. ——Accomplices and witnesses under indictment for same crime.

¶ 1607. It is not obligatory upon the prosecution to call an accomplice of respondent as a witness, under the rule requiring the production of eye witnesses of the transaction.—People v. Resh, 107 Mich. 251; People v. Baker, 112 Mich. 211.

¶ 1608. Respondent cannot insist upon the prosecution's calling as witnesses for the people two of his accomplices whose names were indorsed on the information; especially where their testimony would be merely cumulative.—People v. Considine, 105 Mich. 149.

¶ 1609. Three respondents were jointly informed against for manslaughter, and demanded separate trials. The theory of the prosecution was that the deceased came to his death by being hit with a stone thrown by one of the respondents. No concert of action was shown between them, and, at the time the stone was thrown, the other two were some distance from the one who threw it, and were nearer to the deceased, and, according to the testimony of some of the witnesses, had their hands raised, but the witnesses did not testify that they struck the deceased. The testimony failed to show any marks or bruises upon the person of the deceased. Held, that it was the duty of the prosecution either to put the two respondents on trial first, or tender them as witnesses for the people on the trial of the third respondent, and thus enable him to cross-examine them if he so desired.—People v. McCullough, 81 Mich. 25.

¶ 1610. There is no rule requiring the prosecution to call accomplices as witnesses; that rests largely in the sound discretion of the prosecuting officer.—People v. McCullough, 81 Mich. 25.

¶ 1611. It was prejudicial error for the court, after refusing to require the prosecution to produce the only supposed eyewitness of the murder, to testify as to the identity of the criminal, subsequently, after both parties had rested, to order such witness to testify, when the defense, by attacking this witness and developing the theory that she was implicated in the crime, had furnished an incentive to her to color her testimony.—People v. Harper, 145 Mich. 402.

§ 351. ——Production of witnesses without swearing or examining.

¶ 1612. The fact that the name of a witness is indorsed upon an information as one of the people's witnesses does not of itself involve any necessary obligation to do any more than to have the witness in court ready to be examined.—Wellar v. People, 30 Mich. 16.

¶ 1613. The prosecuting attorney should not only have all persons who witnessed the affray present in court but should have them sworn in behalf of the people, and he may then examine them much or little, as he chooses, thus affording respondent an opportunity of cross-examination without prejudice by bias.—People v. Deitz, 86 Mich. 419.

¶ 1614. The prosecution upon a trial for murder having rested without calling certain witnesses, whose names were indorsed upon the information, respondent's counsel demanded that they be called and examined, so that he could cross-examine them. Held, that by producing said witnesses, and tendering them to the defense for cross-examination, the prosecuting attorney performed his full duty, it appearing that none of them was an eyewitness to the transaction.—People v. Pope, 108 Mich. 361.

¶ 1615. The prosecuting attorney is not obliged to place upon the stand one whose name is indorsed on the information, unless such person is a res gestæ witness; his duty in the premises being fully performed by producing the person in court, and giving respondent an opportunity to examine him.—People v. Grant, 111 Mich. 346.

¶ 1616. Upon a trial for assault and battery, the prosecuting attorney does all that is required of him when he calls the witnesses who were present at the time the offense is claimed to have been committed, swears them on behalf of the people, and tenders them to the defense for cross-examination; he cannot be compelled to examine them as to the affray.—People v. Hughes, 116 Mich. 80.

¶ 1617. In a manslaughter error cannot be assigned upon the failure of the prosecutor to call two witnesses who aided in carrying the body home, where the prosecutor claimed that they knew nothing about the res gestæ, but offered to produce them.—People v. McArron, 121 Mich. 1.

§ 352. Calling witnesses not named on information.

Indorsements of names, addition or striking names, and time and showing for leave to indorse, see ante §§ 20, 21.

Competency of testimony of witnesses not named, see ante § 156.

Mode of objection to testimony, see post § 355.

Right to object that rebuttal testimony might have been given in chief, see also post ¶ 1645.

¶ 1618. Where the prosecuting attorney shows that he had not known before trial began that a certain person was a material witness, such person may be sworn on behalf of the people, even though his name had not been indorsed upon the information as that of a witness.—Hill v. People, 26 Mich. 496.

¶ 1619. Where an immaterial matter testified to by a witness for the people is denied by respondent, the prosecution cannot introduce witnesses in rebuttal whose names are not indorsed on the information.—People v. Deitz, 86 Mich. 419.

¶ 1620. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 11934, it is error in a criminal case to permit the people to swear a witness in rebuttal without the name of such witness being indorsed upon the information and without requiring any showing as to why it was not indorsed.—People v. Casey, 124 Mich. 279.

¶ 1621. Where on a trial for uttering an alleged forged instrument the persons whose names purported to be affixed as witnesses were not produced nor their names indorsed on the information, and where no showing was made that the names were fictitious, their testimony was a necessary part of the people's case, which could not be omitted without good excuse.—People v. Swetland, 77 Mich. 53.

¶ 1622. Where, in a prosecution for keeping a saloon open after hours, three witnesses testify in behalf of the people that, after the hour for closing, they, in company with three women, whose names are not indorsed on the information, went into a room back of the bar-room kept by respondent, and there purchased lager beer of respondent's barkeeper, it is not error for the court to deny respondent's motion to place the names of the women upon the information, and produce them as witnesses for the people; it appearing that the prosecution has not failed to put all parts of the transaction before the jury by the testimony of the three men, and that the introduction of the testimony of the women would be merely cumulative.—People v. Kindra, 102 Mich. 147.

magistrate without having it read, see post § 511.
Necessity of objection in trial court to save question for review, see post § 514 et seq.
Sufficiency of objections to save question for review, see post § 523.
Specification necessary to save question for review, see post § 523.
Waiver or cure of objections, see post § 551 et seq.
Construction of answer of witness on objection or motion to strike, see Examination of Witnesses § 31.
Reframing questions to avoid objections or to elicit better answer, see Examination of Witnesses § 31.

¶ 1627. The rule that only the questioner may object for irresponsiveness of answer may be different when testimony is taken by deposition, as counsel may in such case lose the opportunity of putting further questions to follow it up.—Hamilton v. People, 29 Mich. 173.

¶ 1628. A defendant tried separately may object to any testimony concerning the acts or sayings of another defendant, when there has been no evidence introduced to connect them together in a conspiracy, and no assurance that such proof will be made.—Hamilton v. People, 29 Mich. 195.

¶ 1629. Where a power of attorney as described in an indictment for forging the names of the attesting officers has not been preceded by proof of forgery of at least one of the names thereon, it is proper to object to the introduction of the paper itself in evidence on the ground that it is not the paper described in the indictment, notwithstanding it might be read and the evidence introduced afterwards if the court so ruled.—People v. Marion, 28 Mich. 255.

¶ 1630. It seems that an objection to a question that it is leading should be taken before the question is answered.—Morrissey v. People, 11 Mich. 327.

¶ 1631. Whether or not, in a trial for larceny from the person, it is an admissible method of identifying a bank-bill found on the defendant, for the prosecuting attorney to pick it up by itself and show it to the witness for identification, quære. But where the witness has previously recognized the bill without objection, the objection to this method of identification comes too late to have any force.—People v. Morrigan, 29 Mich. 4.

¶ 1632. On a trial for robbery a fellow prisoner of the accused testified to an account of it given by the latter, and named other prisoners who were present. One of these was asked as to conversations with the accused in the presence of the witness, but the questions were ruled out as not referring to the particular conversation. He was at length allowed to answer that he heard a statement by the accused in the witness' presence, and counsel for the respondent dropped the inquiry at that point, although no adverse ruling had been made. Held, that as no one understood there was any objection to testimony which would contradict the witness or explain what he referred to, there was no error in the previous rulings, which were not meant to exclude proper questions.—McGuire v. People, 44 Mich. 286.

¶ 1633. Where the answer to a question admissible as preliminary inquiry contains incompetent or immaterial matter, the proper practice is by motion to strike out such matter and not by general objection.—People v. Pope, 108 Mich. 361.

§ 354. ——Specification of grounds.

Mode and sufficiency of objection to hypothetical question to save question for review, see post ¶ 2460.

¶ 1634. Objection to admission of testimony must state a reason against its admission.—People v. Summers, 115 Mich. 537.

¶ 1635. An objection to the admission of any evidence on the ground that the justice never acquired jurisdiction to issue his warrant, and that the complaint, warrant or information did not charge any offense known to the laws of the state, is too general, even in a criminal trial.—People v. Haas, 79 Mich. 449.

¶ 1636. An objection for incompetency and immateriality will present the question whether a newspaper article offered in evidence ought to be received where all of it is not included in the offer.—People v. Coughlin, 67 Mich. 466.

¶ 1637. It seems that a general objection for incompetency and irrelevancy will not raise the question that offered evidence is self-incriminatory.—People v. Ecarius, 124 Mich. 616.

¶ 1638. An objection that a question calling for the judgment of a witness as to whether respondent was sane or insane was too narrow, and should have included all of the observations of the witness during the entire period of his acquaintance, is overtechnical, when respondent's counsel did not take the trouble to modify the evidence by cross-examination.—People v. Borgetto, 99 Mich. 336.

¶ 1639. Objections to a hypothetical question must be stated specifically to the trial court showing the precise fact omitted.—People v. Foglesong, 116 Mich. 556.

¶ 1640. An objection to testimony of physicians on the ground that it was "incompetent as the record stands" and "because there is nothing in this record that qualifies it and makes it competent, and it is after the fact also," does not raise the question that such physicians are incompetent to testify because it had not been made to appear that they had the qualifications required by Comp. L. 1897, § 5280, and hence such question will not be considered on appeal.—People v. Farrell, 137 Mich. 127.

¶ 1641. In a prosecution for rape, the testimony of a mother as to remarks made to her by her three-year-old son who witnessed the assault will be held incompetent without considering whether the objection to it was technically correct.—People v. Beech, 129 Mich. 622.

§ 355. Objections to witnesses.

Necessity of taking objections to witnesses below, see post § 514.
Forcing objections to competency as prejudicial error, see ante § 342.
Mode of objecting to competency of witnesses in general or to their competency because of privileged relationship, and waiver of such objections, see Witnesses, II-V.

¶ 1642. After a witness has been sworn and examined his testimony cannot be objected to on the ground that his name does not appear on the information.—People v. Harris, 95 Mich. 87.

§ 356. Scope and subjects of defendant's evidence.

See also post ¶ 1666.
Evidence on defense not touched in preliminary hearing, see ante § 345.
Relative order and sequence of proofs offered by the state and accused, see post § 358 et seq.
Scope and subjects for cross-examination and redirect, see Examination of Witnesses, II, III.
[Note. The relevancy and competency of evidence to a particular issue made by or pursued by defendant is treated ante VIII, B.]

¶ 1643. If the prosecution fails to go fully into evidence of the res gestæ it is the right of defendant to do so, either by cross-examination of the people's witnesses or by the testimony of his own.—Patten v. People, 18 Mich. 314.

§ 357. Scope and subjects of rebuttal.

Explanation of explanatory testimony, see also ante ¶ 883.
Calling witnesses not named on information to give rebutting evidence, see ante § 352.
Order and sequence of proofs, see post § 358 et seq.
Order of proofs in rebuttal, see post § 362.
Proper matter for redirect examination, see Examination of Witnesses, III.

¶ 1644. Where a witness has testified on the introduction of the people's case to his acquaintance with respondent, and to circumstances showing some opportunity to judge as to his mental condition, it is unnecessary to repeat such testimony in connection with the opinion of the witness as to the sanity of the respondent, given on rebuttal of the defense of insanity.—People v. Borgetto, 99 Mich. 336.

¶ 1645. Respondent cannot complain that the testimony of a witness not indorsed on the indictment was taken in rebuttal instead of in chief, where it only developed by the testimony of other witnesses that such witness was present with them at the time of the offense and where her testimony was merely corroborative of the other testimony and was objected to only on the ground that it was prejudicial by reason of being taken at the time instead of earlier in the trial.—People v. Kindra, 102 Mich. 147.

¶ 1646. Defendant gave evidence tending to show an alibi. To meet this the prosecution gave evidence tending to contradict it. To rebut this defendant offered to prove that the witnesses for the prosecution were mistaken as to the time when an occurrence sworn to by them, and supposed to be inconsistent with the alibi, took place. This evidence was rejected by the court on the ground that defendant should have given it as a part of his evidence in chief to establish the alibi. Held error. This late evidence formed no part of the alibi, and did not become material or relevant until the prosecution put in evidence to contradict it. It then became defendant's right to rebut.—Brown v. People, 17 Mich. 429.

§ 358. Order and sequence of proofs.

Reception out of order, when proper or permissible, see post §§ 359-364.
Exclusion of offer made out of time, see post § 365.
Proper subjects for defendant's proofs, see ante § 356.
Recalling witness or reopening case, see post §§ 367, 368.
Rules applied in civil cases, see Trial, V.
Necessity of first showing foundation for dying declarations, see also Homicide ¶¶ 187, 196.

¶ 1647. It is especially important in criminal cases that the proper order for the admission of testimony be observed and th the connection of the defendant with a f be established before permitting the i duction of evidence of the fact.—Peo Morgan, 124 Mich. 527.

¶ 1648. The order of proof in cases is to some extent, if not wh the judicial discretion, and t admission of evidence in a brib ing a conspiracy to corruptly pal action of which the br was an incident, before there was other evidence showing defendant's complicity, was not error.—People v. McGarry, 136 Mich. 316.

¶ 1649. The prosecutor in a murder case cannot be confined to proving dying declarations made at one time if there were others made at other times and all were competent; nor can he be confined to proving what was said at one time where the statement was reduced to writing and signed at another.—People v. Simpson, 48 Mich. 474.

§ 359. Reception of evidence out of order.

Various classes of proofs receivable out of order, see post §§ 360-363.

Reception on condition that connecting evidence be adduced, see post § 364.

Exclusion of offer made out of time, see post § 365.

Necessity of objection to proofs out of order to save question for review, see post § 518.

Harmless error in taking proof out of order, see post § 546.

¶ 1650. It is within a trial court's discretion, even in a murder case, to admit evidence out of its strict order.—People v. Wilson, 55 Mich. 506.

¶ 1651. The order in which the testimony of a physician in a prosecution for homicide, as to the appearance of the corpse and the cause of death, should be received, is within the discretion of the court.—People v. Hare, 57 Mich. 505.

¶ 1652. The court, after refusing to allow a witness to testify in a murder trial as to statements of another witness, in impeachment of testimony, on the ground that the proper foundation had not been laid, erred subsequently in refusing to allow the foundation questions to be put on the ground that the whole matter had been traversed.—People v. Harper, 145 Mich. 402.

§ 360. ——Testimony of witness before proofs of qualification.

¶ 1653. The admission of testimony of an expert witness, before an opportunity has been given opposing counsel to examine him as to his competency, lies in the discretion of the court.—People v. Kimbrough, 193 Mich. 330.

§ 361. ——Evidence as to guilt before proof of corpus delicti.

¶ 1654. No evidence of motive, and no testimony beyond the main issue itself, should be allowed before the corpus delicti has been shown, and this is particularly necessary, so far as the testimony can be separately given, in prosecutions for homicide.—People v. Hall, 48 Mich. 482; People v. Millard, 53 Mich. 63.

¶ 1655. An objection against allowing a witness to identify an instrument alleged to be forged until after it had been shown to be false only concerns the order of proof, which is within the discretion of the trial court.—People v. Marion, 29 Mich. 31.

¶ 1656. Evidence that a man on trial for poisoning his wife had formerly had illicit relations with another woman is not admissible, if at all, until the testimony concerning the corpus delicti is all in.—People v. Millard, 53 Mich. 63.

¶ 1657. Where the corpus delicti depends for its existence upon respondent's acts and intent, it need not be proved before proving respondent's admissions.—People v. Swetland, 77 Mich. 53.

¶ 1658. Where the corpus delicti on a murder trial could be proved only by circumstantial evidence and the circumstances by which it could be established were so interwoven with the testimony tending to establish the defendant's connection with the crime that it was difficult to show one without showing the other, held that the failure to establish the corpus delicti before the introduction of proof of the defendant's guilt was not reversible error, though some items of testimony, tending to establish the corpus delicti, might have been separated and introduced first.—People v. Kimbrough, 193 Mich. 330.

¶ 1659. Upon a trial for uttering a forged indorsement of a check, the check and the invoices of the goods in payment for which it was drawn are admissible in evidence to show the uttering of it, and forgery in connection with evidence of the condition they were in when presented and paid. The corpus delicti need not be otherwise first proved.—People v. Kemp, 76 Mich. 410.

¶ 1659a. There was no abuse of discretion, on a prosecution for forgery of a check, in admitting such check in evidence before the people had proved the forgery; where it does not appear that the admission of the check at such time was prejudicial to the defendant.—People v. Tollefson, 145 Mich. 444.

¶ 1660. It is not necessary to prove the corpus delicti beyond a reasonable doubt before evidence connecting defendant with the crime is admissible.—People v. Trine, 164 Mich. 1.

§ 362. ——Matters in chief, in defense and in rebuttal.

Subjects for defense and rebuttal, see ante §§ 356, 357.

¶ 1661. The evidence on which the prosecution relies in a criminal case must all be put in, if possible, before the prosecution rests, though testimony that could not be had earlier may be admitted afterwards on cause shown. But none of that which properly belongs to the case in chief can be reserved until after the defense rests, to be then introduced as rebutting evidence.—People v. Quick, 58 Mich. 321.

¶ 1662. It is error to permit the prosecuting attorney to prove his principal case under the head of rebutting evidence.—People v. Hillhouse, 80 Mich. 580.

¶ 1663. On a trial for murdering one who was assisting to arrest respondent, the officer who sought to make the arrest and the deputy county clerk may testify as to the time of such officer's appointment and his acceptance and qualification, and the court has discretion to admit such testimony in rebuttal.—People v. Gosch, 82 Mich. 22.

§ 363. ——Impeaching or corroborating proofs.

¶ 1664. Impeaching testimony against a person not yet called as witness cannot be admitted.—People v. Whitson, 43 Mich. 419.

¶ 1665. After a case has been closed on both sides, a dispute arose as to what a witness had sworn to, and he was recalled to repeat it, and stated it as the judge understood him to have sworn before. One of the parties then proposed to call a witness to contradict him on the fact sworn to, but the judge refused to allow it. Held no error.—People ex rel. Dickinson v. Sackett, 14 Mich. 320.

¶ 1666. Where, on the cross-examination of one of the people's witnesses in a criminal case, part of his testimony taken on the preliminary examination is read to him, and he denies so testifying, the testimony, if used for the purpose of impeachment, should be reserved and offered in evidence as a part of respondent's defense.—People v. Oblaser, 104 Mich. 579.

§ 364. Reception on promise to supply connecting evidence.

Propriety of objection to document where it might be received and connecting proof afterward supplied, see ante ¶ 1629.

Failure to furnish connecting evidence as ground for striking, see post § 366.

Instruction against consideration of evidence when connection is not supplied, see post § 450.

¶ 1667. Where the theory of the people in a prosecution for murder was that the defendant shot the deceased believing him to be the husband of a woman at whose farm the defendant worked and with whom it was claimed that he had criminal relations, and that the purpose of this woman and the defendant was to obtain insurance for $1,000 upon the life of the husband, but there was no evidence that the defendant knew of the insurance, it was error to permit evidence that the husband's life was insured, upon the unfulfilled promise of the prosecuting attorney that he would connect this evidence with a statement of the defendant that there was a thousand dollars in it for anyone who did away with the husband.—People v. Morgan, 124 Mich. 527.

¶ 1668. In a criminal prosecution against a father for manslaughter of his child, alleged to have been effected by a course of ill treatment by defendant and his second wife and by malnutrition, held that the admission of evidence of a neighbor that she heard the cries of a child being whipped in defendant's home was proper, where the trial judge stated that he would strike out the testimony unless it was connected with defendant, that testimony as to what the mother did was immaterial, that the charge was that the defendant by his cruel conduct, etc., was responsible for the death of the child and that it would be idle to charge him with acts that were committed by someone else.—People v. Eaton, 196 Mich. 715.

§ 365. Exclusion of evidence offered out of time.

¶ 1669. A defendant has always a right to suppose that evidence will be offered and received in its logical order, and he is not bound to meet it before it becomes relevant to the case.—Brown v. People, 17 Mich. 429.

¶ 1670. It is not a matter of discretion with the court to reject evidence because it was not offered before the proper time for its admission.—Brown v. People, 17 Mich. 429.

§ 366. Striking out evidence.

[Note. None of the matter turning on the relevancy of evidence or its competency has been retained here, even though the question was raised by a motion to strike. See such matter, ante VIII, B.]

Striking as proper practice where improper matter is contained in partly proper answer, see ante ¶ 1633.

Illness preventing completion of cross-examination as ground, see post ¶ 1678.

Reception of evidence subject to be strick if not connected or supported by pro foundation, see ante § 364.

Instruction against consideration of evid ruled out, see post § 450.

Necessity of motion to strike to save tion for review, see post § 514.

Necessity of motion to strike volunte swer to save objection on re post § 515.

Cure of errors in evidence by st evidence, see post § 561.

Necessity of renewing objection by moving to strike, see po ¶ 1671. The refusal of the strike out a statement made ent to the officers at the tim not error, where such state with his testimony in his tarily given on the trial ford, 181 Mich. 659.

¶ 1672. While it is competent for a court to admit evidence which will not be relevant unless brought home to the prisoner by further proof, if such further proof is not given the court cannot refuse to strike out the evidence.—Dillin v. People, 8 Mich. 357.

¶ 1673. Where, in a prosecution for assault with intent to do great bodily harm less than the crime of murder, the testimony offered by respondent does not show a present intention of inflicting the threatened injury, but merely shows that the threat was conditional, depending for its execution upon the action of the injured party, and that the parties have for three years since been friends, evidence of such a threat has no tendency to show ill-feeling, and should be stricken out.—People v. Deitz, 86 Mich. 419.

¶ 1674. In a prosecution for murder where it is alleged that deceased's wife and respondent were on friendly terms, that deceased was heavily insured, and that the wife was the beneficiary, it is prejudicial error to refuse to strike out the evidence on the subject of life insurance where such subject is considered a strong element in the case, and there is no evidence that respondent had knowledge of the insurance at the time of the death of deceased.—People v. Auerbach, 176 Mich. 23.

¶ 1675. The defendant in a criminal case cannot complain of the action of the court in refusing to strike out testimony which is drawn out on the cross-examination of a witness.—People v. Maczulski, 194 Mich. 193.

¶ 1676. Where a witness testifying through an interpreter, gives an ambiguous answer on the subject of reputation, the court does not err in refusing to strike out the answer, but it is the duty of the objecting attorney to cross-examine the witness as to his meaning, pursuant to a suggestion of the court.—People v. Meert, 157 Mich. 93.

¶ 1677. One witness, who purchased a bottle of beer of the man in the buggy, testified that it was his impression that it was respondent from whom he purchased the beer, but that such impression was gained wholly from what he heard the boys say at the time. A motion to strike out all of his testimony was denied. Held, that, if the motion had been directed to the striking out of the testimony as to the impression of the witness regarding the identity of the party, it should have been granted—not because the statements of the boys, made under the circumstances they were, right at the buggy, and as a part of the occasion of purchasing the beer, were not admissible as a part of the res gestæ, but because the jury should have been left to draw whatever inferences might be drawn from the facts testified to; but that the motion was broader than this, and sought to exclude the entire testimony of the witness, part of which was admissible, and was properly denied.—People v. Stanley, 101 Mich. 96.

§ 367. Recalling witnesses for further examination.

Reopening case for further proofs, see post § 368.

Recross-examination and redirect-examination of witness and re-examination in chief, see Examination of Witnesses.

¶ 1678. Where a witness becomes ill before her cross-examination is finished, so that it cannot be completed, the remedy is by motion to strike out her testimony, and an exception to the refusal of the court to compel the production of the witness for further cross-examination will not be sustained.—People v. Pope, 108 Mich. 361.

¶ 1679. In a criminal case, where a child ten years old called by the prosecution stated that she did not know the nature of an oath, and thereupon counsel for defendant having been told that they might examine her, stated that they did not care to ask any questions, it was not error for the court thereafter to refuse to permit the witness to be recalled and cross-examined, as an opportunity of examining the witness as the defendant's witness had thus been given.—People v. Hossler, 135 Mich. 384.

§ 368. Opening case for further proofs.

Practice in civil cases, see Trial, V.

¶ 1680. The trial court may, in the exercise of a sound discretion, reopen a criminal case for the purpose of admitting testimony on behalf of either the prosecution or defense, and such discretion is not abused where opportunity is afforded to object to the testimony as it is offered, and to put in any further testimony which the introduction of evidence so admitted may make necessary.—People v. Blake, 157 Mich. 533.

§ 369. Taking testimony by depositions.

Deposition as denial of right to confront witness, see ante § 340.

Competency of transcript of testimony taken on preliminary hearing, see ante § 290.

Admissibility of former testimony or of testimony taken down at preliminary examination, see ante §§ 222, 236.

Reading from depositions in argument to jury, see post § 389.

Practice in taking depositions for civil cases, see Depositions.

Taking down testimony in preliminary examination, see Arrest, VII.

Provision for commission to examine witnesses out of state, or to take testimony conditionally, see Comp. L. 1915, § 15736 et seq.

¶ 1681. The prosecution in a criminal case cannot take proofs outside of the state, though the respondent may do so.—People v. Howard, 50 Mich. 239.

¶ 1682. A deposition did not, upon its face, show that any interpreter was employed, but it was shown by oral proof that one was employed and properly sworn; held, that it could not be objected that there was nothing to show that the interpreter was sworn to interpret truly.—People v. Dowdigan, 67 Mich. 95.

C. ARGUMENTS, REMARKS AND CONDUCT OF COUNSEL, JUDGE AND OTHERS.

§ 370. In general; regulation and control.

Time allowable to counsel for statements and arguments, see post § 371.
Opening statements, see post § 372.
Law arguments and colloquies on offers and motions, see post § 373.
Final arguments to jury, see post §§ 374-391.
Making argument after waiving it, see post § 392.
Misconduct in insulting and intimidating witness, see post § 393.
Interruptions of counsel, see post § 394.
Improper remarks by judge, see post § 395.
Duty to be zealous but fair in prosecuting, see ante § 330.
Direction of verdict on concession of counsel without argument, see post ¶ 1872.
Manner of objecting to and disposing of objections for impropriety, see also post ¶ 1805.
Improper remarks in reproving counsel or cautioning him, see post § 395.
Necessity of objection at time to save question of improper argument for review, see post § 520.
Necessity for ruling on objections to make question on review, see post § 524.
Necessity of record showing of the argument, objection thereto and action or opportunity to court to act on objection in order to save question for review, see post §§ 595, 596.
Harmless error in restricting argument, see post § 547.
Briefs and arguments on review in supreme court, see post § 589.
Arguments of counsel and opening statements in civil cases, see Argument of Counsel.

¶ 1683. A trial judge should prevent the abuse of the functions of counsel.—People v. White, 53 Mich. 537.

¶ 1684. The trial court must keep counsel within the boundaries of legitimate argument, and must see to it that no injustice is done to the respondent by the prosecutor's intemperate language or improper conduct.—People v. Lange, 90 Mich. 454; People v. Montague, 71 Mich. 447.

¶ 1685. The trial court has ample power and a large discretion in relation to remarks of counsel.—People v. German, 110 Mich. 244.

§ 371. Time allowable to counsel.

¶ 1686. On a trial for assault with intent to murder, the time to be occupied by respondent's counsel in addressing the jury should, within the time limits of Circuit Court Rule 63 (first rules), be left discretionary with such counsel when acting in good faith.—People v. Labadie, 66 Mich. 702.

¶ 1687. Under Circuit Court Rule 63 (first rules) as amended in 1885, providing that counsel shall be allowed no less than one hour, if desired, to sum up the case, and not more than two hours, unless the court shall otherwise order, it is error for the court to limit the argument on each side to one hour in a criminal case in which two counsel are engaged for the defense who request longer time where the trial had lasted two days and six witnesses' names were on the information besides two sworn for the defense.—People v. Labadie, 66 Mich. 702.

¶ 1688. In a prosecution for the illegal sale of liquor in local option territory, limitation of an hour on each side for argument was not error.—People v. Van Alstyne, 157 Mich. 366.

¶ 1689. Under 1897 C. C. Rule 24, subd. b, providing that counsel upon either side of a case shall be allowed at least a half hour argument, and that no more than two hours shall be allowed unless the court otherwise orders, the stopping of the argument for respondent in a criminal case at the end of thirty-five minutes was discretionary.—People v. Smith, 122 Mich. 284.

§ 372. Opening statements.

Error in opening statement cured by evidence or charge to jury, see post § 563.
Interrupting opposing counsel, see post § 394.
Election between counts and time and manner of electing, see ante § 46 et seq.

¶ 1690. Circuit Court Rule 24 as to the duty of plaintiff's counsel to make an opening statement is merely directory.—People v. Koharski, 177 Mich. 194.

¶ 1691. In a prosecution for the illeg sale of intoxicating liquor, counsel for defense has the right in his opening s ment to the jury to state his unders ing of the law as bearing upon the that will be brought out in defense.— v. Smith, 177 Mich. 358.

¶ 1692. The prosecuting attorney ing the case laid great stress on th and narrow means of the comp ness, and the necessity of us means to obtain proof to overc ger that respondent's wealth might enable him to secure Reference was also made to say, and to an imaginary which was never attempte an objection by responden ceived by an outbreak of laughter and applause. Held, that the conviction should be set aside.—People v. Montague, 71 Mich. 447.

¶ 1692a. Where the prosecuting attorney, in opening the case, said to the jury that one reason why he was "more prejudiced against" respondent was "because he had committed perjury in another court for the purpose of assisting one of his fellow-prisoners," and where the court, upon objection being made, said that considerable of that had come under his own notice, respondent was entitled to a new trial.—People v. Moyer, 77 Mich. 571.

¶ 1693. The prosecuting officer's duty is to explain to the jury the nature and elements of the issue that they are to try, and not to make statements that will not be supported by the evidence.—People v. Fowler, 104 Mich. 449.

¶ 1694. In a prosecution for adultery, the prosecuting attorney, in opening the case to the jury, stated that the people would show that, in the winter prior to the commission of the alleged offense, respondent was found, by the husband of the woman with whom the adultery was alleged to have been committed, concealed behind the door of her sleeping room. No evidence was given on the trial in support of said statement. Held, that if the statement was made in good faith, and on the trial the prosecuting attorney found that his proofs did not substantiate the statement, a conviction should not, for that reason alone, be set aside.—People v. Fowler, 104 Mich. 449.

¶ 1695. Upon the trial of a druggist for an unlawful sale of intoxicating liquors, the prosecuting attorney offered to show that the complaining witness, who claimed to have procured the liquor, immediately thereafter related the circumstances to a third person, whom he proposed to call for the purpose of showing that the sale occurred at the time charged in the information. Upon objection to the statement of the proposed testimony in the presence of the jury, the court ruled that it was the right of counsel to state to the court what he proposed to prove, but that the jury should disregard his statement, and declared the testimony inadmissible for the reason that the name of the proposed witness was not indorsed on the information. The only testimony to support a conviction was that of the complaining witness; that of respondent and of the only other person claimed to have been present being in direct denial. Held, that the remarks were, under the circumstances, prejudicial to respondent. —People v. Abell, 113 Mich. 80.

¶ 1696. A statement by the prosecuting attorney in his opening to the jury upon the trial of a woman for the murder of her husband, that respondent had procured an assignment to herself of certain policies of insurance on her husband's life, is not prejudicial, although it afterwards appears that, instead of the policies having been assigned to her, she was the beneficiary named therein.—People v. Pope, 108 Mich. 361.

¶ 1697. In a prosecution for assault, remarks by the prosecuting attorney, that it is expected to be proven that the intent in making the assault was to do great bodily harm and defendant is charged in a charitable way less than the crime of murder, and that defendant is a man, a large percentage animal, are not commended but will not reverse where it is not satisfactorily shown that prejudice resulted.—People v. Singer, 174 Mich. 361.

¶ 1698. The failure of the prosecuting attorney in a murder case to prove all that he had stated in his opening statement he would prove, is not ground for reversal.—People v. Ecarius, 124 Mich. 616.

¶ 1699. Reversal will not be granted upon isolated extracts from the opening statement of the prosecuting attorney which were expressly made to explain reasons why certain witnesses would be produced, and not to influence the jury.—People v. Shoemaker, 131 Mich. 107.

¶ 1700. In a prosecution against a physician for causing death by abortion, a statement by the prosecuting attorney that he could show defendant continued the practice of causing abortions to the very hour of his examination, and that he was then in the practice, is improper.—People v. Fritch, 170 Mich. 258.

§ 373. Law arguments and colloquies in presence of jury.

Making argument to jury in guise of arguments on requests for instructions, see also post ¶ 1800.

Offering and arguing on character evidence in jury's presence, see also ante ¶ 1297.

Reception of testimony with exclusion of counsel's statements accompanying offer, see ante ¶ 1579.

Improper remarks cured by corrective charge to jury, see post § 564.

¶ 1701. In a prosecution for murder, where the accused in cross-examination had been asked if she had not stolen a muff, and other goods from the store of a certain merchant, whether the goods had been charged to her and upon demand she settled for them and she had denied it all, it was prejudicial error for the prosecuting attorney in rebuttal to call the merchant with his books, to proceed to the point of impeachment, to argue in the presence of the jury the right to impeach, and to use in his argument alleged hypothetical statements covering the very facts claimed to exist.—People v. Collins, 144 Mich. 121.

¶ 1702. It is not reversible error for counsel to make certain argument to the court in the presence of the jury, where what was said does not disclose to the jury the result of a trial in the justice's court, and whatever facts were disclosed were in support of the argument addressed to the court and based upon the record, and it was not evident how the disclosure could have prejudiced the defendant.—Quinlan v. Heyboer, 171 Mich. 228.

¶ 1703. Language of the prosecutor in which he combined objection to the introduction of proof of a release, respecting collateral matters and dealings which passed from the complaining witness to one accused of embezzling her funds, with a protest against its introduction and with notice that if it was admitted the prosecution would go into all that led up to the release, and would thereby show that accused got other money from complaining witness and her mother to a large amount giving nothing for it, is not subject to objection by the defendant whose counsel nevertheless went into such matters and invited it; though the colloquy put before the jury the fact that there was a claim that accused had defrauded complaining witness out of other funds than those charged.—People v. Thorne, 148 Mich. 203.

¶ 1703a. In a criminal prosecution for selling intoxicating liquor without having paid the tax required, the sheriff of the county having testified that at the time of the arrest respondent stated that he had paid the tax, and exhibited a federal license, the prosecuting attorney demanded counsel for respondent to produce the license. Upon refusal, the court sustained counsel for respondent in refusing to produce the paper, but stated that there was nothing improper in the request of the prosecuting attorney. Held, that respondent was in no manner prejudiced by the oral demand, or by what the court said upon the subject.—People v. Moore, 155 Mich. 107.

§ 374. Final arguments to jury.

Particular methods and matter of argument, see post §§ 375-389.
Prejudicial effect of particular improprieties in argument, see post §§ 375-389.
Statements, quotations and readings as part of argument, see post §§ 378, 387-389.
Answering and closing arguments, see post §§ 390, 391.
Making argument after waiving same, see post § 392.
Duty of court to regulate and control, see ante § 370.
Aggravation of errors in trial by argument to jury, see also post § 534.
Instructions cautioning jury not to be influenced by improper argument, see post § 451.
Improper argument regarded as harmless error, see post § 548.
Improper argument cured by corrective charge, see post § 564.
Opening address and statements by counsel, see ante § 372.
Arguments to justice or to jury in trials before justices, see post § 654.
Arguments in civil cases, see Argument of Counsel.

¶ 1704. The argument of the case belongs to the close of the testimony, and not to the opening, and must be based on what actually appears in proof.—People v. Montague, 71 Mich. 447.

¶ 1705. In the argument of criminal cases attorneys have no more justification for departing from proper practice than in other cases.—People v. McArron, 121 Mich. 1.

¶ 1706. If the argument of counsel is general in character, and does not appeal to the individual juror's prejudices or passions although it is heated, it is not prejudicial and the court correctly allows it to be given.—People v. Neely, 171 Mich. 249.

¶ 1707. An argument of the prosecuting attorney as to the defense of an alibi, held not prejudicial to the respondent.—People v. Frontera, 186 Mich. 343.

§ 375. ——Appeals to jurors' knowledge or prejudice.

Charge as to being moved by personal feelings, see post § 448.

¶ 1708. A prosecuting attorney urged the jury to apply their common sense to the evidence. Held, that this was not appeal to use imagination and to go outside of the legitimate proof to draw unwarranted inferences.—People v. Ringsted, 90 Mich. 371.

¶ 1709. It is prejudicial error to permit the prosecuting attorney to request the jury to act "as detectives" in considering the evidence; it being the jury's duty, after retiring for deliberation, to give respondent the benefit of every reasonable doubt.—People v O'Brien, 96 Mich. 630.

§ 376. ——Abusive and inflammatory langu

Appealing to jurors' personal knowledg experiences and feelings, see ante
Assumption of prejudicial facts not in see also post § 381.
Abusive comments on or aspersions nesses, see post § 377.
Provoked and invited abuse, see p
Incitement of prejudice in opening see ante § 372.

¶ 1710. Error does not lie o the prosecuting attorney of m language in reference to the argument to the jury; it is the trial judge will restrain due limits.—People v. Winsl

¶ 1711. Where the prosecuting attorney, in his closing address, assumed to instruct the jury on the law of the case as one authorized to do so, stated his personal convictions on the evidence, and introduced irrelevant and prejudicial matter to inflame the jury, the conviction was set aside.—People v. Montague, 71 Mich. 447.

¶ 1712. Reversal will not be granted because the prosecuting attorney in his closing address to the jury called the defendant a "monumental liar and bluffer," where it cannot be said that there was no evidence to justify the remarks.—People v. Shoemaker, 131 Mich. 107.

¶ 1713. In a prosecution of a deputy township treasurer for embezzlement, a statement by the prosecuting attorney in his argument that the treasurer committed a gross indiscretion in trusting defendant, and that he put his trust in "this young thief," is legitimate.—People v. Sanders, 139 Mich. 442.

¶ 1714. The characterization by the prosecutor in his argument, of the respondent as a "bad man," and "as bright a man of his kind as was ever before any jury on earth," was not error, where the defense had argued that there was no evidence that the respondent was a bad man; it being proper for the prosecutor to draw inferences from the circumstances and conduct.—People v. McDonald, 133 Mich. 366.

¶ 1715. In a prosecution for seduction, statements by counsel in argument, designating the defense as "brutal, cowardly and contemptible," and stating that counsel had raked "the purlieus of hell" for evidence against complaining witness, and that defendant gloried in the ruin he had wrought, and that if she had a father or brother, defendant would not be on trial, are improper.—People v. Payne, 131 Mich. 474.

¶ 1716. The characterization by the prosecuting attorney in a rape case of the defendant as "this thing here" and "that brute" is not reversible error where the entire testimony, including that of defendant, showed him to be of the character described.—People v. Lambert, 144 Mich. 578.

§ 377. ——Abuse and disparagement of witness.

See also post ¶ 1726.
Abuse of accused, see ante § 376.
Abuse of witness or intimidation during trial, see post § 393.
In answering arguments and in provoked or invited arguments, see post §§ 391, 392.

¶ 1717. It is not error, though it may be bad taste, for the prosecuting attorney, in commenting on the testimony of a witness, to say to the jury that he had lied.—Driscoll v. People, 47 Mich. 413.

¶ 1718. Where on a trial for selling liquor to a minor the prosecuting attorney in his address to the jury said of one of the defendant's witnesses "he has admitted that he drinks, and I don't know that a man who drinks is any more to be believed than the man who sells the liquor," and also said of respondent "you know what to expect of a man engaged with such a thing, you understand this saloon business—what to expect of them," such remarks were erroneous.—People v. Kahler, 93 Mich. 625.

¶ 1719. Remarks by a prosecuting attorney, accompanying a request to swear impeaching witnesses whose names are not indorsed on the information, calculated to impress the jury with the belief that the people are prepared to impeach the respondent by his own neighbors, and that, while the procurement of witnesses for that purpose is usually difficult, it is an easy matter in his case, are indefensible, as is his action in recalling the respondent after the refusal of the court to admit the proposed impeaching testimony, and questioning him as to whether he had not been impeached in other cases, and if, in a number of other instances, his neighbors had not been brought into court for the purpose of impeaching him.—People v. Cahoon, 88 Mich. 456.

¶ 1720. In a case where the defense was insanity, the prosecuting attorney, speaking of the testimony of respondent's expert witness, who was in charge of a private insane asylum in the city where the trial was being held, and who had testified that respondent was insane, said, in substance, that the motive of the witness was to assist his hospital. Held, that respondent's case could not have been prejudiced.—People v. Margeson, 99 Mich. 146.

§ 378. ——Assertions of personal knowledge, belief or experience.

See also ante ¶ 1711.
Suggesting what witnesses might have testified had they been called, see also post ¶ 1766.

¶ 1721. A prosecuting attorney cannot be permitted to assert to the jury, "under the solemnity of his official oath," his belief in the guilt of a respondent since such an expression of personal opinion is both improper and prejudicial in its tendency.—People v. Quick, 58 Mich. 321.

§ 1722. It is improper, and ground of reversal, for a prosecuting attorney to make a statement to the jury of a material fact as of his own knowledge which has not been introduced in evidence.—People v. Dane, 59 Mich. 550.

¶ 1723. It is not proper for the prosecuting officer to tell the jury that he believes that the respondent is guilty, but he may rightfully argue from the testimony the fact of his guilt, and may state to the jury what evidence convinces him.—People v. Hess, 85 Mich. 128.

¶ 1724. Where the prosecuting attorney in his address to the jury, on a trial for murder, said, "As I felt that the defendant should not be convicted of any greater offense than manslaughter, and with my associate have so advised the court, and asked an instruction to that effect; so, if I believed the defendant was not guilty of the crime of manslaughter, or if I had a reasonable doubt of his guilt of that offense, I would not stand before you and ask you to convict him," such remarks did not require a reversal; defendant should have requested a charge to remove the effect of any supposed prejudicial influence.—People v. Welch, 80 Mich. 616.

¶ 1725. A prosecuting attorney cannot be said to have expressed an opinion as to the guilt of a respondent charged with larceny, by stating to the jury that if they believe the testimony of certain witnesses, corroborated by the facts as they are found concerning the stolen property, he thinks they would be justified in convicting respondent, if they have no reasonable doubt about it.—People v. Hanifan, 98 Mich. 32.

¶ 1726. Where the testimony in a criminal case is conflicting, the result depending upon which witnesses the jury find to be truthful, it is not error requiring reversal for the prosecuting attorney to state, in his argument to the jury, that he believes the evidence shows the witnesses for the defense to be "a lot of liars."—People v. Wirth, 108 Mich. 307.

¶ 1727. For the prosecuting attorney to tell the jury in his argument on the trial of a criminal case that he believes that the evidence submitted shows the respondent guilty beyond all reasonable doubt, is not erroneous.—People v. Ponsford, 181 Mich. 659.

¶ 1728. A statement by a prosecuting attorney to the jury that he knows from personal knowledge that a witness told the truth, is fatal error.—People v. Nichols, 159 Mich. 355.

¶ 1729. Upon a prosecution for keeping a place for the sale of intoxicating liquors in violation of the local option law, the contents, occupants and appliances of respondent's place of business, and their adaptability to traffic in liquor, are proper matters of inquiry, and the prosecutor, therefore, does not err in his argument by stating, "I submit to you" that the room which respondent is charged with keeping was fitted up for the express purpose of violating the law.—People v. Barnes, 113 Mich. 213.

¶ 1730. In a criminal prosecution for selling intoxicating liquor without a license, violation of the Local Option Law (§ 5412, Comp. Laws, 1897), it is error for the court to permit the prosecuting attorney to refer to the respondent as a person addicted to the excessive use of intoxicating liquors.—People v. Converse, 157 Mich. 29.

§ 380. ——Allusion to other offenses and prosecutions.

Accusing witness of other crimes, see also post ¶ 1770.
Provoked or invited allusions, see post § 391.

¶ 1737. Where, in a prosecution for keeping a saloon open after hours, respondent was called as a witness in his own behalf, and testified that he had once been convicted of a like offense, his case cannot be said to have been prejudiced by the remark of the prosecuting attorney, in his closing argument to the jury, that the case followed another case, in which respondent pleaded guilty.—People v. Kindra, 102 Mich. 147.

¶ 1738. A statement made in argument by the prosecuting attorney, to the effect that respondent was committing adultery every day, the object being to discredit the respondent because of immoral relations, is not ground for reversal, though it was not proved that either respondent or the woman with whom he was traveling was married, where they were registered at hotels as man and wife, and were not married to each other.—People v. Ranney, 153 Mich. 293.

§ 381. ——Assumption of facts not in proof.

See also ante ¶ 1738.
Treating facts as admitted, see post § 382.

¶ 1739. It is error to permit the prosecuting attorney in his remarks to the jury to inflame their minds by dwelling upon an assumed fact which no evidence tends to support.—People v. Aikin, 66 Mich. 460.

§ 382. ——Treating facts as admitted.

Documents procured by illegal means, see ante § 155.

¶ 1740. It is not error for the prosecuting attorney in argument to say that it is undisputed "that this sort of conduct had been going on between the defendant and his daughter from the time she was eight years old," where several witnesses in a prosecution for incest testified to acts of sexual intercourse between them during that period and they were not impeached and no evidence was introduced by accused.—People v. Skutt, 96 Mich. 440.

§ 383. ——Comment on evidence.

Comment on inferences, see post § 384.
Comment on failure to testify or adduce proofs, see post § 385.
Comment on witnesses and credibility, see post § 386.
Comment in argument on weakness of foundation proofs for secondary evidence. see also ante ¶ 908.
Misstating evidence. see post § 387.

¶ 1741. Where, in a prosecution for carnally knowing a girl of fifteen, respondent's general character has been put in issue by the defense, it is proper for the prosecution to comment thereupon.—People v. Mills, 94 Mich. 630.

¶ 1742. For the prosecuting attorney in his argument to the jury to comment on the testimony in the case, and to draw warrantable inferences therefrom, is not improper.—People v. Cona, 180 Mich. 641.

¶ 1743. In a manslaughter case there was evidence that immediately after the shooting the defendant had no injury upon his face and that later, after he had been thrown headlong from a rig, there was such injury, defendant's plea being one of self-defense. Held, the prosecuting attorney was justified in arguing to the jury that the defendant got the bruise on his head from falling out of a rig on his right side.—People v. Collins, 166 Mich. 4.

¶ 1744. In a murder case where the clothing of the victims has been put in evidence for the purpose of showing the circumstances of the crime and the nearness of the parties at the time of the killing, it is proper to comment on the clothing as evidence of such facts.—People v. Wright, 89 Mich. 70.

¶ 1745. Upon a prosecution for larceny of money alleged to have been obtained on a forged draft, where the draft and certain receipts are in evidence, it is not error to permit counsel in his argument, to call attention to similarities in the handwriting on the two documents.—People v. Hutchings, 137 Mich. 527.

¶ 1746. The use by the prosecuting attorney in a murder case of the words "If this man goes free, no jury sitting in this box will find the murderer," is not objectionable, if it was under the circumstances to have been but a logical summing up of the effect of the testimony.—People v. Ecarius, 124 Mich. 616.

¶ 1747. Courts will be very slow to reverse a case for the language employed by a prosecutor in argument when in his judgment and that of the trial court it is based upon the evidence in the case.—People v. Tubbs, 147 Mich. 1.

§ 384. ——Comment on inferences.

See also ante ¶¶ 1742, 1743.

¶ 1748. Counsel for the prosecution in a trial for larceny argued to the jury that it should consider why respondent did not go to his father for certain money in reference to which subject testimony had been given;

whether his failure to do so was because he knew his father had no confidence in him, and whether that lack of confidence was due to his idle habits or vagabond life; and he insisted that a son brought up by an honest and respectable father should be as certainly convicted, if guilty of a crime, as if he were the son of the greatest rascal in the community. Held, not sufficiently objectionable to be error.—People v. Harrison, 93 Mich. 594.

¶ 1749. The prosecuting attorney may properly comment on the flight of the companion of accused on escape from arrest, where it appeared that they had slept in a barn on the night of a burglary and that the stolen property was found near where they slept.—Cummins v. People, 42 Mich. 142.

¶ 1750. Comments by the prosecutor in his argument, upon the respondent's attitude after his arrest, in reference to his denial of his identity and as to explaining his whereabouts, were fair argument.—People v. McDonald, 133 Mich. 366.

§ 385. ——Commenting on failure to testify or to adduce proofs.

Comment on failure to call wife of accused, see also ante ¶ 655.
Provoked and invited comments, see post § 391.
Remarks by court touching on failure to testify, see also post § 395, ¶ 1813.
Improper comment on failure to testify cured by corrective instruction, see post § 565.

¶ 1751. The refusal of a witness to answer a question tending to criminate him cannot be commented on by counsel or considered by the jury.—Carne v. Litchfield, 2 Mich. 340; Foster v. People, 18 Mich. 266; People v. Maunausau, 60 Mich. 15.

¶ 1752. In a prosecution for embezzlement comments by the prosecuting attorney and the court concerning the failure of the accused to take the stand when he had taken advantage of his privilege under Const. 1909, art. II, sec. 16, and Comp. L. 1897, § 10211, How. Ann. St., 2nd Ed., § 12855, constitute reversible error in the absence of remarks by counsel for accused which would justify the criticism of the prosecutor.—People v. Lay, 193 Mich. 17.

¶ 1753. The prosecuting attorney, after refusal to call and swear a witness who was present at the assault for which respondent was on trial, cannot comment upon the fact that such witness was sworn upon a preliminary examination, or that he was present in court and was not called by respondent.—People v. Deitz, 86 Mich. 419.

¶ 1754. In a prosecution for adultery with another's wife the prosecuting attorney has no right to attempt to prejudice respondent by referring in his closing argument to the fact that the wife has not been sworn as a witness in the case, and the court should direct the jury not to weigh that fact against respondent.—People v. Fowler, 104 Mich. 449.

¶ 1755. A remark of the prosecutor, in a prosecution for obtaining money under false pretenses and representations, that "there has no excuse been offered," held not error, as a comment on the fact that the defendant had not testified in his own behalf as to the truth of his representations that certain goods sold had been shipped.—People v. Perry, 197 Mich. 47.

¶ 1756. A public prosecutor has no right to urge to the jury that respondent's failure to discredit an adverse witness by the testimony of others, instead of relying alone on cross-examination, is significant against him, and that he could show the facts if they existed.—People v. Quick, 58 Mich. 321.

¶ 1757. The failure of a witness for the defense to prove the existence of a third person cannot properly be used as an argument by the prosecution; though if the existence of such person is material to the defense the failure of the defense to show it is a proper subject of comment.—People v. Lyons, 49 Mich. 78.

¶ 1758. A prosecuting officer ought not to allude before the jury to the fact that respondent has put himself upon his privilege and declined to answer a question, even though it concerned a collateral inquiry of questionable relevancy; but such a remark is not sufficient ground for disturbing a verdict against respondent.—People v. Wilson, 55 Mich. 506.

¶ 1759. The right of the prosecuting attorney to comment upon the failure of a party to produce witnesses is not an unqualified right, and depends upon the circumstances of the case, and it applies to a deposition taken by the party and not used, and to a complices and other witnesses within the control, or with whom they have been clos associated, especially where such witne are in a position to speak on matters da ing to such party, already in evide People v. McGarry, 136 Mich. 316.

¶ 1760. Comment by the prosecuti ney upon the non-appearance of a to the effect that he did not know v that was dragging witnesses aw no foundation, is prejudicial to t ent.—People v. Gottshall, 123 M

¶ 1761. A statement by the "Defendant's counsel, when h people's witnesses and God ones who knew the contents forgot his client, whom it grams were sent to, and sent one of them" is not commenting upon defen the stand in his own behalf, where the jury were instructed that the fact that he did not take the stand should not weigh against him in any manner.—People v. Hammond, 132 Mich. 422.

¶ 1762. The rule forbidding the prosecutor from commenting upon the failure of defendant to take the stand, is not infringed by a statement that the testimony of the people's witnesses stands undisputed.—People v. Hammond, 132 Mich. 422.

¶ 1763. For a prosecuting attorney in argument to remark that there were some things about a witness' testimony which he would like to have shown but was not permitted to do so, and that counsel for defense knew what they were and that they would not be safe for his case, is reversible error when not rebuked by the court and when no reference is made thereto in the charge to the jury.—People v. Cahill, 147 Mich. 201.

¶ 1764. To argue that "defendant has not taken the stand, and he does not need to if he don't want to," violates Comp. L. 1897, § 10211.—People v. Cahill, 147 Mich. 201.

¶ 1765. Where a declaration of the father of accused exculpating him was wrongly admitted as an implied admission by accused, who was present, and the father then in court was not called in behalf of accused, it was error to allow counsel to argue that failure to call the father should raise an inference against accused, there being nothing in the case to show that the father could have testified in any way that would have thrown light on the case or have aided accused.—People v. O'Brien, 68 Mich. 468.

¶ 1766. It is improper for counsel to refer, in their arguments, to witnesses whose testimony has been excluded by the court, or to suggest what they might have testified to if placed upon the stand.—People v. De France, 104 Mich. 563.

¶ 1767. It seems that failure to call witnesses, who could have corroborated the wife of accused in a material element of time in a claimed alibi, is a legitimate subject of comment by the prosecuting attorney.—People v. Smith, 106 Mich. 431.

¶ 1768. The omission on preliminary examination to call a complaining witness in a case of seduction is not to be criticized on the trial.—People v. Clark, 33 Mich. 112.

§ 386. ——Comment on witnesses and credibility.

Abusive comment on witnesses, see ante § 377.
Provoked and invited comments, see post § 391.

¶ 1769. A statement by the prosecuting attorney in his closing argument to the jury that the people are not bound by the testimony of a witness whom they were compelled to call, except so far as such testimony is believed by the jury to be true, is not objectionable.—People v. Harper, 83 Mich. 273.

¶ 1770. Argument by the prosecuting attorney in a prosecution for larceny warrants reversal where there is nothing in the evidence to warrant his charges that a witness for respondent was guilty of either larceny or receiving stolen goods from respondent with knowledge that they were stolen.—People v. Huff, 173 Mich. 620.

¶ 1771. In a prosecution for assault with intent to do great bodily harm, it is not reversible error for the prosecuting attorney to state that it may fairly be inferred from the evidence that the people's witnesses were telling the truth, and that unless a verdict is found against defendant, the people will not have had their just dues.—People v. Kirk, 151 Mich. 253.

¶ 1772. Where it was sought to discredit a justice's testimony by showing that his docket was written at different times with different colored inks, it is proper for opposing counsel in argument to point out to the jury that the different shades of ink appear at the several times of adjournment.—People v. Kenyon, 93 Mich. 19.

¶ 1773. Upon a prosecution for larceny, it is error to permit the attorney for the people to use the expression "invidiously" in regard to a character witness for respondent, "a pal of his," there being nothing in the record to show that respondent had done anything requiring him to have a "pal."—People v. Hutchings, 137 Mich. 527.

¶ 1774. It is not improper for the prosecuting attorney in a criminal case in undertaking to explain in argument the discrepancies between the testimony that the complaining witness gave on the trial and that given on the preliminary investigation, as shown by the justice's return, to suggest that the justice who wrote in longhand did not write everything that the witness had testified to.—People v. De Camp, 146 Mich. 533.

¶ 1775. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 10211, providing that in a criminal case the court shall not permit any reference to or comment upon defendant's failure to testify, it is objectionable for counsel to state in his argument in a prosecution for seduction where defendant did not testify, that there was no one who saw what occurred except "this girl, this boy, and the all-seeing eye of God," and that there was not a word to prove that the girl's story was not true.—People v. Payne, 131 Mich. 474.

¶ 1776. Where impeaching evidence was elicited on cross-examination of a defendant in a criminal case, relating to his false swearing as to his pecuniary responsibility on a liquor bond, the subsequent argument by the prosecution that the testimony proved the commission of perjury, was not error.—People v. Gray, 135 Mich. 542.

¶ 1777. In a prosecution against a foreigner for murder, it is not reversible error for the state's attorney to argue to the jury that people of a foreign country are more apt to side with live men than with the dead, where there is evidence to sustain this contention with respect to the particular witnesses which the state's attorney and the jury had before them at the time.—People v. Sartori, 168 Mich. 308.

¶ 1778. In a prosecution for seduction, a witness for defendant testified in contradiction of the complaining witness that he had had intercourse with her at the house of his brother-in-law, where she was at the time assisting witness to take care of the sister of the brother-in-law. The prosecution asked him if his brother-in-law had not sued him for board; and, upon objection, stated that he proposed to show that such suit had been brought and witness had defended by claiming a per diem for nursing plaintiff's sick sister, and added "now he is testifying that this woman was helping" and then he swore that he had no assistance at such nursing. Held, that the explanation by the prosecution was proper.—People v. Jensen, 66 Mich. 711.

§ 387. ——Misstatement of law or evidence.

Assumption of facts not in proof, see ante § 381.

Treating facts as admitted which are not, see ante § 382.

Misstatement or overstatement in opening address, see ante § 372.

¶ 1779. Language of a prosecuting attorney in his argument to the jury, based upon the theory that the prosecution had made out a case of probable guilt, and that the burden of proof was then shifted upon respondent to overcome it, is objectionable.—People v. Lange, 90 Mich. 454.

¶ 1780. Misstatements of the evidence by a prosecuting attorney in a homicide case, are not prejudicial error where the court causes the stenographer's notes to be read to the jury and cautions them to rely only on the evidence given in the case.—People v. Swartz, 118 Mich. 292.

¶ 1781. It is not a ground for reversal that the prosecuting attorney in argument to the jury made a statement of law which was incorrect, where the statement was in good faith on a subject which he had a right to comment on.—People v. Boyd, 151 Mich. 577.

¶ 1781a. In an action for violation of the liquor law requiring saloons to be closed on Sundays, a claim made in good faith by the prosecuting attorney, in his argument to the jury, that under a certain state of facts the People would be entitled to a conviction under the statute, although not unassailable, is not reversible error.—People v. Boyd, 151 Mich. 577.

¶ 1782. It is reprehensible conduct meriting immediate discipline for counsel in his argument to the jury to state that they may ignore instructions of the court.—People v. Howard, 179 Mich. 478.

§ 388. ——Reading statutes and decisions.

¶ 1783. In a prosecution under the statute prohibiting the opening of saloons, etc., on Sunday, it is not improper for the prosecuting attorney to read parts of the statute, laying particular stress upon the passage, "It shall not be necessary to prove that any liquor was sold."—People v. Ringsted, 90 Mich. 371.

§ 389. ——Reading from depositions and documents.

See also ante ¶ 1735.

¶ 1784. It is proper to deny respondent's counsel permission to read, on the argument to the jury, extracts from medical books that have not been made evidence in the case.—People v. Glover, 71 Mich. 303.

¶ 1785. Where, upon respondent's offering in evidence a part of the deposition of a witness taken upon the preliminary examination, the court rules that the entire deposition must be received, to which ruling no exception is taken, it is not error to permit the prosecuting attorney to read therefrom in his argument to the jury.—People v. Smith, 106 Mich. 431.

¶ 1786. The deposition of the complainant witness made at the preliminary examination, held properly read to the jury by t prosecuting attorney in his argument, wh the deposition was introduced by the cou for the respondent for the express pu of reading it to the jury in his argu although not so used by him.—People rington, 186 Mich. 482.

¶ 1787. In a prosecution for hom reading of previous testimony of at the coroner's inquest cannot b from counsel's argument to the ground that it is not sufficient as such, where it has been ob ceived in evidence without o ple v. Dowd, 127 Mich. 140.

¶ 1788. In a prosecution wrongful prevention of co ment from the use of pre a witness at the coroner dicial error where the testimony before the c mony at the trial mi credibility in the hands of the jury—People v. Dowd, 127 Mich. 140.

§ 390. Answering and closing arguments.

¶ 1789. In a prosecution for rape, closing argument by the prosecuting attorney that, after the case was closed, the testimony all in, defendant's attorney had declaimed against the prosecuting witness and pilloried her as a young prostitute, a liar, and an evil thing, held reversible error, where the record failed to show defendant's attorney had made such attacks on the complaining witness' character but tended to show he had called her a liar.—People v. La Londe, 197 Mich. 76.

§ 391. ——Provoked or invited arguments.

¶ 1790. After provoking comment and criticism counsel for the respondent cannot have a reversal because charges and insinuations are resented and criticisms made.—People v. Mills, 94 Mich. 630.

¶ 1791. A conviction will not be reversed for improper remarks of the prosecuting attorney in his argument to the jury, where they were made in reply to the argument of respondent's counsel.—People v. Savant, 112 Mich. 297.

¶ 1792. A conviction will not be reversed because of the improper remarks of the prosecuting officer in his argument to the jury, where they were provoked by the intemperate language of respondent's attorney, and where the jury was instructed that all such remarks should be disregarded.—People v. Parmelee, 112 Mich. 291.

¶ 1793. During his argument, the prosecuting attorney, referring to respondent's counsel and his argument, stated that said counsel had said that respondent had as good a record as any one in the court room, and added, "Why don't he show it?" No evidence of good character had been given. Held, that the statement of the prosecuting attorney was invited by respondent's counsel, who, in referring to the question of good character, went outside of the record.—People v. Oblaser, 104 Mich. 579.

¶ 1794. A reference by the prosecuting attorney in his argument to the fact, appearing in evidence without objection, that at the time of respondent's arrest for the offense charged he was in jail for another offense, is not such an abuse of legitimate argument as to justify a reversal, where the statement was apparently made in reply to the argument on behalf of respondent that he had led a life of usefulness.—People v. Smith, 106 Mich. 431.

¶ 1795. Where the remarks of prosecuting attorney in his final argument to the jury are in answer to the argument of opposing counsel and not for the purpose of calling attention to the fact that respondent did not testify in the case there is no prejudicial error.—People v. Boyd, 174 Mich. 321.

¶ 1796. In a prosecution for assault, argument of the prosecuting attorney concerning the punishment apparently in reply to an argument of defendant's counsel is not error, nor is it error for the court thereafter to make an accurate statement of the law and of the duty of the court concerning the matter of punishment which supports the general proposition that the jury should not be concerned therewith.—People v. Singer, 174 Mich. 361.

¶ 1797. Complaint cannot be made of language used by a prosecuting attorney although severe where it was made in response to that of the attorney for the defense, and it seems to have been justified by the evidence.—People v. West, 146 Mich. 537.

¶ 1798. Intemperate language of prosecution was held not prejudicial in the light of repeated provocation by the defendant's counsel.—People v. Salsbury, 134 Mich. 537.

¶ 1799. For counsel in argument in a murder case to call the story of a witness "a damnable yarn," and to say that the accused was as "vicious as a rattlesnake and active as a hornet," and that if affairs of this kind should go unrebuked and are justified by the verdict of a jury, each man would better protect himself, and they would better discharge officers, and buy ammunition for the purpose of self-protection, said in the heat of argument and at the end of a hotly contested case, is not reversible error.—People v. Tubbs, 147 Mich. 1.

§ 392. Making argument after waiving same.

¶ 1800. Where the prosecuting attorney, after his suggestion to respondent's counsel that the case be submitted without argument had been agreed to, argued questions of fact to the jury under the pretense of answering respondent's requests for instructions, and told the jury that there could be no doubt as to the facts or the law, such conduct was ground for reversal, especially where he had already prejudiced the jury by persisting in leading questions and imputations on the witnesses.—People v. O'Brien, 96 Mich. 630.

§ 393. Insulting and intimidating witnesses.

Asking insinuating and discrediting questions, see ante § 343.

Abusive language in argument to jury, see ante § 377.

¶ 1801. The use of improper and insulting language to and about witnesses by the counsel on the trial of a criminal case is an abuse and is not to be tolerated.—People v. Bielfus, 59 Mich. 576.

¶ 1802. Where the trial court, against objection, permitted the prosecuting attorney to treat respondent's witness offensively, and to assert repeatedly that the witness was not telling the truth, and that he was testifying contrary to his former testimony—no foundation being shown for such impeachment, and the jury not being cautioned on the subject—the conviction was set aside.—People v. Carr, 64 Mich. 702.

¶ 1803. It is error to permit the prosecuting attorney to criticize respondent's witnesses in the presence of the jury by asking them whether they know the penalty of perjury, or by asserting that they are swearing falsely, no foundation being laid for such impeachment.—People v. O'Brien, 96 Mich. 630; People v. Carr, 64 Mich. 702.

¶ 1804. Mere impudence to a witness is not ground for reversal.—People v. Roat, 117 Mich. 578.

§ 394. Interruptions of counsel.

Improper remarks in reproving counsel for interruptions, see post § 395.

¶ 1805. The interruption of an opponent's opening to the jury to raise questions of its competency, or the restriction of such an opening by the court, is unjustifiable unless in very clear cases of abuse; and any question raised upon it should be disposed of summarily and without argument.—People v. Wilson, 55 Mich. 506.

§ 395. Remarks and conduct by judge.

Harmlessness of improper remarks by court, see post § 548.

¶ 1806. A long examination by the court of the principal witness for the prosecution after he had been cross-examined by respondent's counsel, coupled with the remark that an objection by respondent's counsel to certain questions was made because the facts would be prejudicial to respondent, was held objectionable as tending to prejudice respondent's rights and as conveying to the jury the idea that if the facts were drawn out as proposed by the court, they would be injurious to respondent's case.—People v. Hull, 86 Mich. 449.

¶ 1807. In a prosecution for highway robbery, the conduct of the trial judge in continually interrupting the defendant's counsel in his examination of witnesses, in using language tending to belittle such counsel and to prejudice defendant in the estimation of the jury, held such error as to require a new trial.—People v. Leonzo, 181 Mich. 41.

¶ 1808. A retort by the court, "Don't interrupt counsel's argument," when counsel for accused took exception to a proper summing up by the prosecutor, though needlessly discourteous, is not ground for reversal, where the record shows that numerous trivial objections might have tried the judge's patience.—People v. Ecarius, 124 Mich. 616.

¶ 1809. The statement by the court to respondent's counsel on a criminal trial in the words, "Now listen: no more interruptions; take your exceptions to his (the prosecutor's) argument if you have got any to make; he didn't interrupt you; let him finish," is not error, when justified by frequent interruptions of the prosecutor's argument to the jury.—People v. Cona, 180 Mich. 641.

¶ 1810. In overruling objections to testimony in a manslaughter trial on the ground that it was immaterial, the court said he thought the testimony material and said to defendant's counsel: "Do not be so quick about taking your exception." Held, the remarks did not constitute prejudicial error.—People v. Burkhart, 165 Mich. 240.

¶ 1811. A remark of the trial judge in a criminal case in admitting a plan in evidence that he did so because he thought the situation could be cleared up, was not a comment on the weight of the evidence.—People v. Mindeman, 157 Mich. 120.

¶ 1812. A prosecuting counsel commented adversely upon the prisoner's neglect on preliminary hearing to put in his defense of an alibi; the prisoner's counsel objected, and the judge in overruling the objection, and in the jury's presence, made certain remarks to the prisoner's counsel in adverse criticism of such neglect; held, that on error these remarks are to be treated precisely as if addressed to the jury and embodied in the charge. Whether a prisoner's neglect to put in an alibi before the examining magistrate may ever be commented on against him on the trial and considered by the jury, quære.—Sullivan v. People, 31 Mich. 1.

¶ 1813. Where, in a prosecution for ravishing a girl less than fourteen years old, she has testified that she had never before had intercourse with any man, that it did not hurt her at all, that no blood followed, and that she was not lame or sore the next day, it is error to permit the jury to infer from remarks to them that accused is forbidden from contradicting her by a physician's testimony that the natural result of such intercourse would be a flow of blood, soreness and lameness.—People v. Duncan, 104 M 460.

¶ 1814. Comments by the court in of a colloquy with counsel for accus failure to produce an alleged witn sold the stolen goods to accused, w ments evinced a belief on the p court that there was no such pers the story of accused and oth was a fabrication, and state court that counsel had been g fessional practice in aiding of perjury, are error.—Peop Mich. 515.

¶ 1814a. In a prosecu liquor store in violation law, where evidence fendant used liquor to excess, a remark of the judge, in overruling an objection to testimony, that if defendant was drunk all the time in a prohibition town it would show that he had whisky to give to someone else, was error.—People v. Converse, 157 Mich. 29.

D. PROVINCE OF COURT AND JURY; QUESTIONS OF FACT; TAKING CASE OR ISSUE FROM JURY.

§ 396. In general; duty of jury to follow instructions.

Weighing and considering the evidence, see post § 397.
Particular questions and crimes as presenting court or jury questions, see post § 398.
Directing verdict and practice on motion to direct, see post §§ 399, 400.
Demurrer to reception of any evidence, see post § 401.
Instructions encroaching on province of the jury, see post § 429 et seq.
Cautionary instruction on duty to obey instructions, see post ¶ 2180.
Propriety of remarks and alleged misconduct by judge, see ante § 395.

¶ 1815. Certainty in the law, as far as attainable, is necessary for private and public security, and this can only be had by leaving it to the courts to declare the law, and not by leaving it open to the varying opinions of different juries.—Hamilton v. People, 29 Mich. 173.

¶ 1816. The jury is bound to receive the law from the court in criminal as well as civil cases. They are only judges of law and fact in the sense that their verdicts are not always open to correction when they choose to disregard the law.—Hamilton v. People, 29 Mich. 173; People v. Mortimer, 48 Mich. 37; People v. Waldvogel, 49 Mich. 337.

¶ 1817. The jury are, in criminal cases, judges of the law as well as of the facts, in the sense that a verdict of acquittal may be found in spite of the direction of the court, and that the court cannot enter a different verdict or order a new trial.—People v. Neumann, 85 Mich. 98.

¶ 1818. In criminal as in civil cases it is the duty of the court to instruct the jury upon the law, and the jury should accept the ruling and be governed by it.—People v. Repke, 103 Mich. 459.

¶ 1819. It is for the court to say what testimony is admissible and for the jury to say what weight shall be given to it.—People v. Goodrode, 132 Mich. 542.

¶ 1820. The question of the sufficiency of an indictment cannot be referred to the jury as one of fact.—People v. Cook, 10 Mich. 164.

¶ 1821. The jury must accept the law from the court and be governed thereby.—People v. Mortimer, 48 Mich. 37; People v. Waldvogel, 49 Mich. 337.

¶ 1822. It is the duty of the jury to follow the instructions of the court as given upon the law in criminal cases.—People v. Smith, 145 Mich. 530.

§ 397. Considering and weighing evidence.

See also post ¶ 2074.
Admissibility as court question, see ante ¶ 1819.
Credibility of accomplice testimony as jury question, see also ante § 317; post ¶ 2126.
Order of inquiry in considering confessions, see also post ¶ 2164.
Duty to admit confession and submit voluntariness to jury, see ante § 261.
Instructions on weighing and considering evidence and on drawing inferences, see post § 430 et seq.
Questions of sufficiency and weight of evidence open on review to appellate court, see post § 633 et seq.
Credibility of witness in general as jury province, see Witnesses, VI.

¶ 1823. The weight of conflicting evidence is for the jury in criminal as well as in civil cases.—People v. Pitcher, 15 Mich. 397; People v. Henssler, 48 Mich. 49; People v. De Fore, 64 Mich. 693.

¶ 1824. A comparison of evidence by offsetting that which is given for one party against that which is given for his adversary, and subtracting one from the other, is weighing the evidence, and is solely for the jury.—People v. Howard, 50 Mich. 239.

¶ 1825. In an information for obtaining a note by means of a false accusation, charging that the representation was relied upon, where the prosecuting witness attempted to explain his testimony given in another case, indicating that he knew that he did not rely upon the representation, the reasonableness of the explanation was for the jury, as at most the discrepancy affected the witness' credibility.—People v. Stockwell, 135 Mich. 341.

§ 398. Particular questions and crimes.

Voluntariness of confession as court or jury question, see ante § 261.
Competency of experts as law question, see ante § 212.
Admissibility of document as court question, see ante ¶ 1321.
Directing verdict, see post §§ 399, 400.
Sufficiency of alibi proofs to go to jury, see also ante ¶¶ 1426, 1427.
Sufficiency of proof connecting accused with stolen goods to take question to jury, see ante ¶ 1429.
Opinions of witnesses on issues within the province of the jury, see ante §§ 200, 205.
Sufficiency of evidence of the various crimes, see ante §§ 324a-324w.

[Note. The paragraphs in this section from and after paragraph 1835 are arranged in order corresponding to alphabetical order of the crimes involved. For a like arrangement of cases on sufficiency of the evidence, see ante §§ 324a-324w.]

In assault and battery cases, see Assault § 11.
In homicide cases, see Homicide § 70.
In larceny cases, see Larceny, II.
In rape cases, see Rape.
In seduction cases, see Seduction, II.
In prosecutions under liquor laws, see Intoxicating Liquors, VI.
Court and jury questions in prosecutions for violations of health regulations, see Health § 3.
Jury questions in civil cases, see Trial, VI: and see specific topics treating of subject to which the question relates.

¶ 1826. The fact of guilty knowledge should be left to the jury to determine from all the circumstances.—Bonker v. People, 37 Mich. 4.

¶ 1827. Felonious intent is a question for the jury to determine from all the facts and circumstances shown.—People v. Griffin, 77 Mich. 585.

¶ 1828. Where an information for assault with intent to do great bodily harm less than the crime of murder, includes the lesser offense of simple assault and battery, the question of criminal intent is one of fact for the jury.—People v. Durham, 170 Mich. 598.

¶ 1829. Where the law has defined what shall be reasonable time, the question of such reasonable time, the facts being found by the jury, is one of law for the court; but where the law has made no such definition the question is for the jury.—Maher v. People, 10 Mich. 212.

¶ 1830. Whether the provocation was adequate or reasonable, and whether a reasonable time had elapsed for the passion to cool and reason to resume its control, are questions of fact for the jury.—Maher v. People, 10 Mich. 212.

¶ 1831. Where a person charged with larceny pleads the statute of limitations and there is some evidence tending to show that he was absent from the state after the larceny, the question whether there was any period during the six years when he was usually and publicly a resident within this state, under How. St. § 9507, is for the jury.—People v. Price, 74 Mich. 37.

¶ 1832. Evidence of experiments to prove that liquor had been tampered with, in a prosecution for murder, held insufficient to support a request for an instruction on the subject of involuntary intoxication and temporary insanity.—People v. Slack, 90 Mich. 448.

¶ 1833. Where, on the trial of a woman for keeping a house of ill fame, a witness testifies to her calling a certain inmate "a pimp" or "her pimp," it is error for the court to determine which language was used, that being a question for the jury.—People v. Gastro, 75 Mich. 127.

¶ 1834. The question whether a warrant on a criminal charge was, within the time prescribed by statute, issued and delivered to an officer to be served, is for the jury.—People v. Clement, 72 Mich. 116.

¶ 1835. Whether one accused of setting fire to a mill was, as claimed by him, merely jesting when he made a statement capable of being construed as a threat to burn it, is a question for the jury.—People v. Pichette, 111 Mich. 461.

¶ 1836. Where one is prosecuted under How. St. § 9134, for breaking and entering in the nighttime a store not adjoining a dwelling-house, etc., the question whether the store was adjoining to or occupied with a dwelling-house is a question of fact for the jury.—People v. Shaughnessy, 89 Mich. 130; People v. Smith, 92 Mich. 10.

¶ 1837. It is a question of fact and not of law whether a space in the rear of a building used for living quarters by subtenants of a merchant and the store room in the front of the building are not "adjoining to or occupied with" each other, where there is a partition with a door separating them and, though the sublease gives no permission to pass through the store, there is evidence that on various occasions the sublessees were allowed to pass through it and the merchant was allowed to pass through the living quarters. The prosecution was for burglary under How. St. § 9134.—People v. Shaughnessy, 89 Mich. 130; People v. Smith 92 Mich. 10.

¶ 1838. Where a merchant enters his s in a city at the usual hour in the mor though it be after daylight, and finds t has been broken open and entered fr front door or window, it cannot be matter of law that the crime might h committed after daylight, and that a respondent, charged with breakir tering the building in the nighttin acquitted.—People v. Dupree, 98

¶ 1839. In a prosecution for entering a store in the nigh dence indicated that the act time between 9 p. m., the the store, and 7 a. m., the it. The sun rose after 7 was daylight before that question was for the jur was committed in the nighttime.—People v. Trine, 164 Mich. 1.

¶ 1840. Enough having been proved to sustain an inference of fraudulent intent in a prosecution for embezzlement under Comp. L. 1897, § 11570, consisting in the conversion to his own use by accused of money supplied for purchasing corporate stock, the submission of that issue to the jury was proper although there was evidence of a relationship thereafter of debtor and creditor respecting the transaction.—People v. Thorne, 148 Mich. 203.

¶ 1841. In a prosecution for larceny by embezzlement under Comp. L. 1897, § 11570, where the accused converted to his own use money supplied him with which to purchase mining stock, the court properly submitted the intent to the jury when the evidence showed there had been misrepresentation regarding the stock as an inducement to purchase, that all of the money turned over was not required or used in payment for the stock, and that the stock had never been either received by the accused or delivered to the prosecuting witness, but had been sent in the name of the accused to a local bank with a collection charge against it, which he did not conceal or deny.—People v. Thorne, 148 Mich. 203.

¶ 1842. In a prosecution of an officer of a corporation for embezzlement of funds of the corporation by receiving an excessive salary, held that it was a question for the jury whether the accused knew of the company's insolvency at the time he signed an annual report which showed an impairment of the corporation's capital where he stated that he never read the report and did not know what it contained and did not know of the company's insolvency.—People v. Lay, 193 Mich. 476.

¶ 1843. In a prosecution for embezzlement it appeared that respondent had collected and retained certain funds. Respondent claimed he had a joint interest in the funds as compensation for such collection, while his employer testified that no compensation was payable until the funds were paid over. Held, that the case was properly submitted to the jury.—People v. Wolff, 157 Mich. 242.

¶ 1844. Where an indorsement was obtained by false pretenses resting on positive statements to which surrounding facts gave color, it could not be charged, as matter of law, that no offense had been committed in obtaining it on the ground either that the pretenses were such as would not impose on persons of ordinary prudence, or that other considerations, known to the respondent, aided them.—People v. Henssler, 48 Mich. 49.

¶ 1845. In a prosecution for false pretenses, the question as to whether the defendants honestly believed the representations is for the jury.—People v. Bird, 126 Mich. 631.

¶ 1846. In a prosecution for obtaining goods on credit under false pretenses of financial standing, where the evidence of the value of property owned by defendant was conflicting, the question of such value was one for the jury.—People v. Andre, 157 Mich. 362.

¶ 1847. Where a principal forwarded to an agent a check on receipt of an invoice of lumber alleged to have been purchased by the agent, payable to the vendor's order, and on the trial of the agent for the alleged forgery of the vendor's name to the check the testimony was conflicting as to the existence of any such person as the vendor, which question was fully gone into upon both sides, it became one solely for the jury to determine under the testimony.—People v. Kemp, 76 Mich. 410.

¶ 1848. Guilty knowledge that paper is forged may be found if the jury is satisfied that the accused had reason to believe it was; but the inference is for the jury and does not follow of necessity.—Carver v. People, 39 Mich. 786.

¶ 1849. In a prosecution for incest where the woman testified on trial that she consented, detailing the circumstances, but her testimony taken on the preliminary examination was also put in evidence wherein she stated that on the date of the commission of the crime, accused, her father, threatened to kill her if she ever told of it, and that she would not otherwise than in fear have submitted, whether the intercourse complained of as incest took place under such circumstances as to constitute the crime of rape was properly left to the jury.—People v. Skutt, 96 Mich. 449.

¶ 1850. In a prosecution under Pub. Acts 1911, Act No. 62, How. 2nd Ed. § 5299, prohibiting the advertising of treating "venereal diseases," "lost manhood," and "lost vitality," it was properly left to the jury to determine whether the publication complained of contained words that were synonymous with or equivalent to those terms.—People v. Kennedy, 176 Mich. 384.

¶ 1851. On a trial for perjury in which the claim that defendant made a statement at the time that he was examined as a witness before a justice in a criminal case which was contradictory to a statement made after the complaint was made and before the warrant was issued when he was examined by the justice as a witness, held that the question whether the statement made by the defendant before the magistrate at the time of his first examination, and other statements in the presence of the other witnesses were not freely made or were induced by duress and the exercise of the "third degree" and were not true in fact should have been submitted to the jury.—People v. McClintic, 193 Mich. 589.

¶ 1852. What constitutes prize fighting is a question of law.—People v. Taylor, 96 Mich. 576.

¶ 1853. If the evidence that the respondent, in violation of § 11510, Comp. L. 1897, How. Ann. St., 2nd Ed., § 14559, relating to the careless use of firearms, pointed and fired a gun at a passing street car and injured a passenger, is controverted, it should be submitted to the jury.—People v. Kreidler, 180 Mich. 654.

§ 399. Directing verdict.

See also post ¶ 1993.
Direction on concession of counsel, see also post ¶ 1872.
Demurrer to reception of any evidence, see post § 401.
Peremptory or binding charges on probative effect of evidence, see post § 429 et seq.
Instructions invading province of jury or improperly taking questions from jury, see post § 429 et seq.
Direction of verdict for wrong reason as harmless error, see post § 535.
Instructions to convict of certain degree of homicide or to acquit, see also Homicide § 76.
In civil cases, see Directing Verdict.

¶ 1854. It is only where there is no evidence, upon a material point, that the court can take the case from the jury.—People v. Eaton, 59 Mich. 559.

¶ 1855. Where, upon a prosecution for a misdemeanor, the facts are admitted or undisputed, and the only question is one of law as to whether the facts proved constitute the offense charged, the court may properly direct the verdict.—People v. Elmer, 109 Mich. 493.

¶ 1856. Only when the facts are undisputed should the court say that under the law no crime has been committed.—People v. Hubbard, 92 Mich. 322.

¶ 1857. In a criminal prosecution if upon the conceded or undisputable facts there is no ground to sustain a verdict of guilty, the court should direct a verdict for respondent.—People v. Minney, 155 Mich. 534.

¶ 1858. Where all the facts essential to a conviction are admitted, there is nothing for a jury to pass upon and it is not error for the court to direct a verdict of guilty.—People v. Ackerman, 80 Mich. 588.

¶ 1858a. There is no error in directing a verdict in a criminal prosecution where the facts proved will sustain a conviction as a matter of law.—People v. Neal, 143 Mich. 271.

¶ 1859. A verdict of guilty may be directed in a criminal case when the facts are uncontroverted.—People v. Damskey, 180 Mich. 664.

¶ 1860. Whenever there is no question of intent in a criminal case, and no inferences about which reasonable men might differ, and when, upon the admitted facts, the only question to be determined is whether under the law the statute has been violated, the trial judge may state to the jury that the law applied to such undisputed facts shows defendant to be guilty of the offense charged, and that it is their duty so to find under the facts and law.—People v. Neumann, 85 Mich. 98.

¶ 1861. An acquittal will not be directed in an arson case although the testimony for the prosecution rests entirely upon very unsatisfactory evidence as to the identification of respondent, as it cannot be said that there was no evidence for the jury to act upon.—People v. Gotshall, 123 Mich. 474.

¶ 1862. In a prosecution for malicious injury to a fence, where the testimony indicated that the use made of the land by respondent was not inconsistent with the use made of the property by the owner, and that an adverse right was not built up, the refusal to direct a verdict on the ground that the proceeding was an attempt to try disputed rights was not error.—People v. Ferguson, 119 Mich. 373.

¶ 1863. Respondent in a prosecution for assault with intent to do great bodily harm less than the crime of murder was the father of the boy alleged to be assaulted. The evidence showed that respondent and the boy were in the barn together; that the boy stated that he was struck by something, and upon recovering consciousness at first thought his father hit him, but later thought it might have been the horse; and that the father went away in a buggy soon afterwards and sent the horse and buggy back. The circumstances created the suspicion that the boy and the other witnesses were seeking to absolve the respondent at the trial. Held, the court properly refused to direct a verdict for respondent.—People v. Hennard, 162 Mich. 225.

¶ 1864. In a prosecution under Comp. L. 1897, § 5395, How. St., 2nd Ed., § 5074, for keeping a saloon open on Sunday where it was undisputed that defendant's son had entered such saloon on Sunday, it was proper for the trial judge to direct the jury to return a verdict of guilty.—People v. Damskey, 180 Mich. 664.

¶ 1865. In a criminal prosecution for keeping, storing and possessing intoxicating liquor in other than his own residence, where defendant was professedly engaged in the sale only of nonintoxicating liquors in a room of a building, the remainder of which was his mother's residence, but had at one time been engaged in the sale of intoxicating liquors, and liquor was found under the floor of his mother's room, which defendant claimed belonged to his mother, although it had originally belonged to him while in the saloon business, because he had transferred it to her in satisfaction of a debt, held that the court did not err in refusing to direct a verdict.—People v. Calliari, 196 Mich. 475.

¶ 1866. The fact that the people have been at large expense in the prosecution should have no weight with the court in leaving the case with the jury where the evidence is insufficient to sustain a conviction.—People v. Montague, 71 Mich. 318.

§ 400. ——Practice and procedure on direction of verdict.

Recalling jury to direct verdict according to undisputed evidence, see post § 452, ¶ 2195.

Recalling jury to direct verdict after disagreement, see also post § 453, ¶ 2198.

Necessity of motion to direct verdict to save defect of proof for review, see post § 516.

Necessity for remand for new trial where verdict directed on motion of both parties is erroneous, see post ¶ 2917.

¶ 1867. In criminal cases upon a plea of not guilty, the trial court may instruct the jury that it is their duty to bring in a verdict of guilty, but it is error to go further, and compel them to do so.—People v. Doyle, 160 Mich. 423.

¶ 1868. Where, at the close of the evidence in a prosecution for misdemeanor in the unlawful sale of liquor, the court instructed the jury that they should find a verdict of guilty as charged against respondent, without leaving their seats, and stating to the counsel for defendant that if they wished to lodge exceptions before sentence he would give them an opportunity to do so, and that they might go to the supreme court to see whether he was right or not, such charge compels the jury to render a verdict of guilty, and a conviction by them will be set aside.—People v. North, 153 Mich. 612. (Grant, C. J., and Montgomery and Hooker, JJ., dissenting.)

¶ 1869. Respondent was tried for violating the local option law. The court instructed the jury that under the facts respondent was guilty, and directed the clerk to take a verdict against the respondent. Held, such course violated respondent's constitutional right to a jury trial.—People v. Curry, 163 Mich. 180.

¶ 1870. In a prosecution for a violation of the local option law where none of the facts is in dispute, it is proper to charge the jury as to the law applicable to the admitted facts, to advise them that their duty is to find a verdict of guilty and then to permit them to retire and deliberate.—People v. Hatinger, 174 Mich. 333.

¶ 1871. In a prosecution for a violation of Local Acts of 1885, Act No. 329, forbidding the use of spears, firearms, nets and jacks in taking fish from Gun Lake, it was held not error to have refused an instruction to acquit the defendants; but where the court, the facts on respondent's trial for a misdemeanor being undisputed, discharged the jury and directed the clerk to enter a verdict of guilty, thus giving the jury no opportunity to follow, or to refuse to follow, the court's direction to enter such a verdict, the conviction was reversed.—People v. Collison, 85 Mich. 105.

¶ 1872. Where defendant has testified to his own guilt, and his counsel has remarked, after a ruling of the court, "Of course that ends the case," it is not error to direct a verdict of guilty without argument to the jury.—People v. Richmond, 59 Mich. 570.

§ 401. Demurrer or objection to reception of any evidence.

Objection to reception of any evidence for want of legal warrant or accusation, see also ante ¶ 1635.

¶ 1873. One who is tried on an information for an offense for which no information is allowable has a right to decline to introduce evidence and to claim discharge.—Byrnes v. People, 37 Mich. 515.

¶ 1874. In a prosecution for keeping open a saloon on Sunday in violation of the statute regulating the sale of intoxicating liquors, an objection to the introduction of any evidence in the case for the reason that the return of the magistrate purporting to contain all the evidence taken on the preliminary examination disclosed no testimony to the effect that defendant was a saloon keeper within the meaning of the statute, it not being shown that he had filed a bond or taken out a license, is properly overruled where it does not come until after the jury is sworn.—People v. Davis, 171 Mich. 241.

E. INSTRUCTIONS AND SUBMISSION THEREOF.

§ 402. In general; duty to instruct and necessity for request.

Giving instructions on motion of court itself, see post § 403.

Charges required in absence of any request, see post § 404 et seq.

Necessity for request to correct improper argument, see also ante ¶ 1724.

Duty to instruct on diverse theories of the case, see post § 423.

Duty of jury to follow instructions, see ante § 396.

Mode and sufficiency of request, see post § 417.

General requisites and scope of charge, see post § 404 et seq.
Form, phrasing and manner of charge, see post § 411 et seq.
Construction and effect of charge as a whole, see post §§ 415, 416.
Applicability and conformity of charge to issues and evidence, see post § 422 et seq.
Assumptions and misstatements in charge, see post §§ 427, 428.
Encroachment or invasion of jury province, see post § 429 et seq.
Charging on evidence or weight of evidence, see post § 433 et seq.
Undue emphasis or prominence or singling out, see post §§ 442, 443.
Charges on confessions and admissions and character, see post §§ 444, 445.
Admonitory and cautionary charges, see post § 446 et seq.
Instructions on the specific offenses arranged in alphabetical order of crimes, see post §§ 455a-455w.
Propriety of granting, denying or modifying requests and grounds or reasons for grant, denial or modifications, see post §§ 419-421.
Propriety of denying request where same matter is covered by charge in other parts or terms, see post § 419.
Refusal of requests because incorrect in law, see post § 419.
Right to give request in words different from request but of equivalent meaning, see post § 420.
Repeating or adding instructions after retirement of jury, see post §§ 452-454.
Necessity of request, ruling thereon, and exception to ruling to save question for review, see post §§ 521, 524, 526.
Right to raise question on review without exception, see post § 526.
Harmless error in charging or refusing to charge, see post § 549.
Instructions or refusal to instruct cured by verdict, see post § 567.
Mode and sufficiency of assignments of error in charge, see post § 586 et seq.
Instructions in civil cases, see Instructions.
Statutory duty and power of court as to charging jury, see Comp. L. 1915, § 14573.

¶ 1875. The omission of specific instructions for the respondent in a criminal case is not error if they were not asked for and the charge was not misleading.—Driscoll v. People, 47 Mich. 413; People v. Willett, 105 Mich. 110.

¶ 1876. Where a defendant in a murder trial claims that another did the deed, and requests no instruction on the question of self-defense, no error is committed in omitting it.—People v. Droste, 160 Mich. 66.

¶ 1877. Where a criminal case for murder is tried on the theory of murder while attempting to rob, and the defense is an alibi, and no instruction that defendant might under the information be found guilty of manslaughter, is requested, any claim of error on the part of the trial court in failing to give such an instruction is untenable.—People v. Page, 198 Mich. 524.

¶ 1878. The court may properly direct the jury's attention to the character of an accomplice's testimony, but failure to do so when a proper request is not presented is not error requiring reversal.—People v. Considine, 105 Mich. 149.

¶ 1879. Reversal of a conviction will not be had because the trial judge failed in his instructions to comment on the credibility of an accomplice used as a witness against defendants, no requests for such comment being preferred.—People v. Dumas, 161 Mich. 45.

¶ 1880. Failure of the charge to call the attention of the jury to the denial of the charges by the respondent in a prosecution for rape was not error, where respondent stood contradicted by four witnesses and no request to charge upon the point was made by his attorney.—People v. Smith, 122 Mich. 284.

§ 403. Instructions on court's own motion.

Power to charge of own motion, see Comp. L. 1915, § 14573.

¶ 1881. On facts justifying it, it is correct for the court on his own motion to charge that if accused and another were associated in planning and perpetrating the crime, the guilt of accused would not be lessened by the fact that the other also was guilty.—People v. Parsons, 105 Mich. 177.

§ 404. General requisites and scope of char

Form, phrasing and manner of charge, post § 411 et seq.
Construction and effect of charge as a w
see post §§ 415, 416.
Applicability of instructions to issues evidence, see post § 422 et seq.
Encroaching on province of jury and ing on weighing and considering e see post § 429 et seq.
Undue emphasis or prominence to case, see post §§ 442, 443.
Assumptions and misstatements
see post §§ 427, 428.
Admonitions and cautions in char
§ 446 et seq.
Charges on specific crimes, see 455w.
On presumptions, burden of p
sonable doubt, see post §§
On burden and sufficiency c fenses, see post § 407.
On alibi, insanity and intox
§§ 408, 409.
On participation or comp
abetting, see post § 4
Defining "good faith," see Duty to charge on presu than that of innoc
et seq.

Necessity of request for specific instructions, see ante § 402.
Giving additional instructions requested by jury without further complementary charges, see post ¶ 2196.
Further charge as to agreement after return into court, see post § 453.
Omissions supplied by construction from charge as a whole, see post § 416.
Definition of Latin term supplied by intendment from other parts of charge, see post ¶ 1977.

¶ 1882. In a criminal prosecution the trial judge should, even though no request be made, instruct the jury by covering the general features of the case, defining the offense, and indicating what is essential to prove to establish the particular offense.—People v. Prinz, 148 Mich. 307.

¶ 1883. A judge is not obliged, in charging a jury, to comment on facts at all; but may, if he chooses, confine himself strictly to laying down such rules of law as must guide their action.—People v. Wallin, 55 Mich. 497.

¶ 1884. Even in the absence of requests from counsel, the trial court should see to it that the case goes to the jury in a clear and intelligent manner, so that they may clearly understand what they are to decide; and the law applicable to the facts should be fully stated.—People v. Murray, 72 Mich. 10.

¶ 1885. The defense in a criminal case cannot insist that the judge shall charge the jury argumentatively or comment on the evidence, or point out the weak points in the case for the prosecution so far as they involve questions of fact and not of law. It can only demand that the instructions on the legal points shall be correct, and that the evidence shall not be commented upon or presented in an incorrect or unfair way.—People v. Crawford, 48 Mich. 498.

¶ 1886. A charge undertaking to define prize-fighting should use language that can be interpreted by one unskilled in the profession of prize-fighting, and that will enable a court of review to ascertain whether respondent was prejudiced by the terms employed. So held of the use of the term "knock out."—People v. Taylor, 96 Mich. 576.

§ 405. ——On presumption of innocence and burden of proof.

On burden of proof of voluntariness of confession, see post ¶ 2167.
Cure of omission by charge as a whole, see post § 416.

¶ 1887. The presumption of innocence is present in every criminal case, and the jury should be so instructed, and that it stands good until overcome by evidence convincing the jury beyond a reasonable doubt of respondent's guilt.—People v. De Fore, 64 Mich. 693.

¶ 1888. The charge may omit a definition of reasonable doubt where respondent asks no explanation of the term.—People v. Waller, 70 Mich. 237.

¶ 1889. In the absence of requests to charge on the part of respondent's counsel it is the duty of the trial court to see that the presumptions of law in favor of the accused are clearly and impartially laid before the jury.—People v. Murray, 72 Mich. 10.

¶ 1890. It is the duty of the court to instruct as to the presumption of innocence in a criminal case.—People v. Rogulski, 181 Mich. 481.

¶ 1891. Failure to charge that the respondent on trial for homicide was entitled to the presumption of innocence is not reversible error, in the absence of a request upon the subject, where the court fully cautioned the jury as to the burden of proof, and the rights of the respondent.—People v. Rogulski, 181 Mich. 481.

¶ 1892. In all criminal cases, whether the defense charged is statutory or one recognized at the common law, the presumption of innocence obtains in favor of the respondent, and the failure of the court so to instruct the jury, whether requested to do so or not, is reversible error; and this rule applies to statutory misdemeanors where intent is not an element of the offense charged.—People v. Potter, 89 Mich. 353.

¶ 1893. A conviction will not necessarily be reversed in every case where, there being no request for an instruction on the point, and the court's attention not being called thereto, the jury is not informed in so many words that the presumption of innocence remains with the accused until he is proved guilty.—People v. Graney, 91 Mich. 646; People v. Smith, 92 Mich. 10.

¶ 1894. In a trial for murder a request for an instruction is valid that goes to the jury's starting out with the presumption of the defendant's entire innocence, which presumption must be overcome by evidence so convincing that they can say, beyond any reasonable doubt, that the defendant is guilty.—People v. Stewart, 75 Mich. 21.

¶ 1895. A charge which states that the prosecution must satisfy the jury, beyond a reasonable doubt, of respondent's guilt, and that the evidence should be plain and satisfactory in proportion as the crime is detestable (respondent being informed against for the crime against nature), and that the jury must acquit respondent unless satisfied that his guilt has been strictly and impartially proved,—that it is true beyond a reasonable doubt,—informs the jury, in substance, that the presumption of innocence is with respondent until the jury finds that he is proved guilty beyond a reasonable doubt.—People v. Graney, 91 Mich. 646.

¶ 1896. An instruction, that "the law presumes every man innocent of the crime charged, and of every offense included in the formal charge, that this presumption surrounds and abides with him throughout the entire trial, and should be borne in mind at each successive step in your deliberations as to your verdict," coupled with instructions, both general and special, that the prosecution must, by proofs, establish respondent's guilt beyond a reasonable doubt, and that the jury must give respondent the benefit of all reasonable doubts, and of the presumption of innocence, to which the law entitles him, is sufficiently specific as to the presumption of respondent's innocence without telling them to start with that presumption uppermost in their minds.—People v. Willett, 105 Mich. 110.

¶ 1897. An instruction as to the presumption of innocence held sufficient, in the absence of a request for more specific instructions.—People v. Rogulski, 181 Mich. 481.

¶ 1898. In a criminal prosecution an instruction that the burden of proof rests on the people and "a man comes into court clothed with the presumption of innocence and he stands innocent in your minds until the people or the prosecuting attorney have convinced you of his guilt beyond a reasonable doubt" held to be erroneous.—People v. McClintic, 193 Mich. 589.

¶ 1899. It is error to charge that if satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt of defendant's guilt by the evidence of the prosecution, the jury should examine the defendant's evidence, because the presumption of evidence having been removed the burden is then on him to restore the original presumption of innocence.—People v. McWhorter, 93 Mich. 641.

¶ 1900. Where on a trial for murder it was admitted that respondent was guilty of manslaughter, but the theory of the defense was that he was innocent of the higher offense charged because of a want of criminal intent, a charge which gives to respondent the presumption of innocence of such intent, and the benefit of any reasonable doubt the jury might entertain as to the intent with which he acted, is not open to objection that the court did not instruct the jury that the presumption of innocence was with the respondent.—People v. Harper, 83 Mich. 278.

¶ 1901. An instruction in a prosecution for an assault with intent to commit murder, which in the definition of murder states that defendant could not be found guilty if there is evidence to convince the jury beyond a reasonable doubt that he did not premeditate the crime or that he did not intend to kill when the shots were fired by him, is erroneous as placing the burden of proof on defendant to convince the jury beyond a reasonable doubt that he did not premeditate the crime.—People v. Cismadija, 167 Mich. 210.

§ 406. ——On reasonable doubt.

Sufficiency of the charge taken as a whole, see post §§ 415, 416.
Omission or defect supplied by construction from charge as a whole, see post § 416.
Charging on circumstantial proofs, see also post § 434.
On reasonable doubt of alibi, see also post ¶ 1923.
In perjury case, see also post § 455p.
On information for careless use of weapons, see also post ¶ 2231.

¶ 1902. In a criminal prosecution it is not error for the court in his charge to the jury to omit a definition of "reasonable doubt," where respondent asks no explanation of the term.—People v. Waller, 70 Mich. 237.

¶ 1903. Juries are presumed to have common sense enough to need no metaphysical explanations of what will constitute a "reasonable doubt." It is not desirable in jury trials to introduce such subtleties and technicalities of language as are more likely to confuse than to instruct them.—Hamilton v. People, 29 Mich. 173; People v. Stubenvoll, 62 Mich. 329.

¶ 1904. A charge that the prisoner's guilt must be proved to the exclusion of all reasonable doubt, and that he is entitled to acquittal if the testimony can be reconciled with any rational theory other than his guilt, is as much as he is entitled to.—Hall v. People, 39 Mich. 717.

¶ 1905. An instruction defining reasonable doubt as a doubt built upon substantiality, or as having a reasonable basis, is not erroneous.—People v. Cox, 70 Mich. 247.

¶ 1906. An instruction that a respondent is presumed to be innocent of the offense charged in the information; that such presumption surrounds him until removed by evidence that satisfies the jury beyond any reasonable doubt of his guilt: that by proof beyond a reasonable doubt is meant such proof as precludes every reasonable hypothesis except that of guilt: that it is proof to a moral certainty, as distinguished from an absolute certainty: that it is not proof beyond all imaginary doubt, but is such proof as satisfies the judgment and conscience of the jury, as reasonable men applying their reason to the evidence before them, that the crime charged has been committed by the respondent: so satisfies them as to leave no other reasonable conclusion possible—correctly and clearly covers the entire subject of reasonable doubt.—People v. Ezzo, 104 Mich. 341.

¶ 1907. Instruction upon the law of reasonable doubt held sufficient.—People v. Lalonde, 171 Mich. 286.

¶ 1908. An instruction to the jury in a criminal case, that if a certain fact is true, respondent is not guilty, and that the jury should say so, or, if it have a reasonable doubt about it, it should say so, is equivalent to an instruction that, if the jury has a reasonable doubt upon the subject, it should acquit.—People v. Pichette, 111 Mich. 461.

¶ 1909. The court properly refused to instruct the jury in a criminal case that if a reasonable doubt of any of the facts necessary to convict the accused was raised in the minds of the jurors by the evidence itself, or by the "ingenuity of counsel" upon any hypothesis reasonably consistent with the evidence, it should acquit.—People v. Wells, 112 Mich. 648.

¶ 1910. An instruction defining reasonable doubt as a fair doubt growing out of the testimony, not a mere imaginary or possible doubt, but a fair doubt based on reason and common sense, such as may leave the minds of the jury in a condition that they cannot say that they have an abiding conviction to a moral certainty of the truth of the charge made against the accused, is proper.—People v. Swartz, 118 Mich. 292.

¶ 1911. A charge in a prosecution for perjury, that "Whatever would convince you beyond a reasonable doubt in the judgment which you use in your ordinary affairs of life, is all that is necessary to convince you sitting as jurors in any criminal case," is misleading since it might lead to the notion that they might convict on such evidence as would convince their judgment in the ordinary affairs of life.—People v. Albers, 137 Mich. 678.

¶ 1912. A charge defining reasonable doubt (too long to be set out here, but containing the expression "To be reasonable, a doubt must be founded upon reason, and must be created, not by an outside source, but must grow out of the evidence in the case"), held not to have been misleading in that it excluded a doubt arising from the want of evidence or that it required the jury to be able to assign a reason for the doubt; where a request by accused on the same subject was given and in view of the charge as a whole, notwithstanding might with propriety have been refused if requested in the exact language as that used.—People v. Hoffmann, 142 Mich. 531.

¶ 1913. It is error to charge that proof beyond a reasonable doubt does not require the jury to be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt "of each link in the chain of circumstances relied on" to establish guilt, and that it suffices if taking all the testimony together the jury is satisfied beyond such a doubt; where the court had refused to charge that proof of any material fact inconsistent with guilt would require an acquittal.—People v. Aikin, 66 Mich. 460.

¶ 1914. In a trial for murder the defendant may properly request an instruction defining a reasonable doubt as such a doubt, arising out of the evidence, that one cannot say to a moral certainty that he is guilty, and that acquittal must follow the failure of any other reasonable explanation of the death of the decedent than the guilt of the defendant.—People v. Stewart, 75 Mich. 21.

¶ 1915. An instruction as to the effect of a chain of circumstances, and the necessity of proving each material fact, in order to convict for manslaughter, held improperly refused, as the conviction of the accused depended upon a number of facts, all of which should be proved beyond a reasonable doubt.—People v. McArron, 121 Mich. 1.

¶ 1916. An instruction in a rape case stating that it was not essential that "every fact and every circumstance and every link in the chain must be proven beyond a reasonable doubt" was not error when taken together with a clear definition of the meaning of reasonable doubt; where the case did not depend upon circumstantial evidence but upon the direct statement of the injured girl in question and that of respondent.—People v. Rich, 133 Mich. 14.

¶ 1917. An instruction that the burden is upon the people to prove respondent's guilt beyond a reasonable doubt and that he is presumed innocent until he is proved guilty, and that all of the jury must be satisfied of his guilt beyond a reasonable doubt in order to convict, is all that is required.—People v. Curtis, 97 Mich. 489.

¶ 1918. A general charge in a prosecution of larceny reciting the elements of offense and circumstances, to the effect that the jury must be convinced beyond a reasonable doubt of defendant's guilt, without impressing each juror with that fact, held sufficient.—People v. Hammond, 177 Mich. 416.

§ 407. ——On burden and sufficiency of proof of defenses.

Sufficiency of charge as a whole to overcome defects, see post § 416.

On defenses of alibi, insanity and intoxication, see post §§ 408, 409.

¶ 1919. An instruction that the defense of insanity must be established by the accused on a criminal trial by a preponderance of the testimony, is erroneous.—People v. Eggleston, 186 Mich. 510.

¶ 1920. In instructing the jury as to the evidence of an alibi the judge told them that the defense, if made out, was perfect and was conclusive of respondent's innocence, and that they must be satisfied of respondent's guilt by proofs beyond reasonable doubt, but that as the proof of the alibi was in conflict with the direct proof offered by the prosecution, they should weigh the testimony thereof in connection with the other testimony in the case and consider it as met or explained by that of the defense, and determine whether, in view of all the testimony, the witnesses to an alibi were mistaken or that they were able to say from the testimony of the prosecution, as explained by that of the defense, that there was no reasonable doubt that respondent was guilty. Held, that it could not be said that the jury might have been misled by this charge into thinking that the alibi must be affirmatively shown, and that a reasonable doubt of the prisoner's presence would not warrant his acquittal.—People v. Pearsall, 50 Mich. 233.

¶ 1921. On an issue whether respondent took the horse, for the larceny of which he was tried, from a stable or from the roadside where it was at large, it was error to charge that if the jury believes beyond reasonable doubt that the horse was taken without running at large in the road, and that defendant supposed the possessor had allowed it to run at large and thus gave up his possession, there can be no conviction of larceny. It is enough that such facts appear by a preponderance of proof.—People v. Hillhouse, 80 Mich. 580.

¶ 1922. An instruction that the defense in a rape case claimed that the charge in question was a conspiracy and that there was no truth in it whatever, and that such evidence went into the case to be considered with other evidence and that the defense was not required to have a theory except as they saw fit to adopt one, and that the defense rested upon the plea of not guilty, and that the burden of proof remained with the prosecution, where it started, goes as far as the evidence on such alleged conspiracy warranted, it being weak and doubtful.—People v. Rich, 133 Mich. 14.

§ 408. ——On alibi.

Instruction sufficient with remainder of charge, see post ¶ 1981.

On burden of proving alibi, see ante § 407.

¶ 1923. Where respondent interposes an alibi, it is proper for the court to direct the attention of the jury to the nature of such defense, and to instruct them that all of the evidence bearing thereon should be carefully considered, "and if, in view of the evidence, the jury have any reasonable doubt as to whether the defendant was at some other place at the time the crime was committed, they should give the defendant the benefit of any doubt, and find him not guilty."—People v. Resh, 107 Mich. 251.

¶ 1924. An instruction in a criminal case that the jury should carefully scrutinize any evidence in relation to an alibi, for the reason that an alibi is a defense that is easily proved and hard to disprove, is not erroneous. —People v. Tice, 115 Mich. 219.

¶ 1925. An instruction is correct as to an alibi claimed as a defense to a criminal action in which time was not of the essence and the offense was charged under a videlicet as occurring "heretofore to wit" on a day mentioned, where such defense is properly defined, and the weight to be given it where the time of the commission of the offense is not of the essence is correctly stated under the facts.—People v. Swift, 172 Mich. 473.

§ 409. ——On insanity or intoxication.

Sufficiency of charge as a whole, see post § 416.

Request embracing charge encroaching on jury, see post ¶ 1990.

On burden of proof of insanity, see ante § 407.

Charge on insanity, see also Crimes ¶ 65.

Charge on intoxication as affecting conscious intent, see also Crimes ¶ 72.

¶ 1926. It is not error to charge in connection with other instructions, that mental unsoundness, to constitute a defense, must be the result of disease and not of the respondent's having allowed his passions to run until they have become uncontrollable.—People v. Durfee, 62 Mich. 487.

¶ 1927. Where the defense is that the homicide was committed after an assault by deceased upon respondent so aggravated in nature as to render the latter temporarily insane, the testimony offered in support of such defense should be treated with the same respect as that offered to establish any other fact, and the use, in the charge to the jury, of language calculated to convey the impression that the defense of insanity is unworthy of consideration is error requiring reversal.—People v. Holmes, 111 Mich. 364.

¶ 1928. A charge that if respondent was too drunk to be capable of forming the statutory intent he would be free from the statutory guilt, but not otherwise, is as much as he can ask.—People v. Haley, 48 Mich. 495.

¶ 1929. Under an information charging respondent with intentionally and without malice discharging a firearm, it is error to instruct that although the respondent might be so intoxicated that he was incapable of forming an intent, he might still be guilty of the offense charged.—People v. Peterson, 166 Mich. 10.

¶ 1930. An instruction on a prosecution for burglary that the voluntary intoxication of the accused irrespective of its degree, would not relieve him from criminal liability, is erroneous.—People v. Eggleston, 186 Mich. 510.

§ 410. ——On participation, aiding and abetting.

Substantive law on aiding and abetting and principals and accessories, see Crimes § 10 et seq.

¶ 1930a. A charge on principalship is correct, which tells the jury, "if he was there for the purpose, intending to aid and encourage the commission of this crime, he would be equally guilty with the person or persons who inflicted the mortal wound."—People v. Repke, 103 Mich. 459.

¶ 1931. It is not error to instruct the jury that if, at the time of the killing, respondent actively participated, met, went forward or aided, either by being present on guard or by counselling and encouraging others to commit the crime while thus present with that intent, he is equally guilty with those who inflicted the mortal wound.—People v. Repke, 103 Mich. 459.

¶ 1932. Upon the trial of one of those jointly charged with the offense, an instruction that, if respondent did not participate in the assault, he should be acquitted, unless it was part of the arrangement between the parties that the assault should be committed if necessary to accomplish the robbery or to protect themselves from capture or injury while attempting it, sufficiently protects the rights of the respondent.—People v. Cleveland, 107 Mich. 367.

¶ 1933. It was error for the court to instruct the jury in a trial for robbery, where the evidence tended to show a brutal assault by respondent and two others upon the complainant, during which his vest was torn off, and his pocket-book containing money taken therefrom, that it made no difference which one of the assailants tore off the vest, that from the fact the vest was torn off the jury might determine for what purpose it was taken off; where there was no testimony of any opportunity for, or in fact, of any conference, before the attack between respondent and his coassailants, beyond the fact that on a sudden word of attack the assault was committed, nor of the subsequent possession by any of them of the pocket-book or money; since such instruction was practically telling the jury that men who combine for an assault are liable for any felony committed by one of them, whether participants in the actual felonious design or not, which is not sound law.—People v. Foley, 59 Mich. 553.

¶ 1934. In a prosecution for an assault with intent to rob, the evidence indicated that in a saloon brawl the defendant joined in an assault upon one Mundt. In the general fracas Mundt was robbed of his pocketbook and money. The court charged to the effect that if defendant joined in the assault he was guilty of the crime charged, although some other person in the fracas did the act of robbing. Held, that this instruction was erroneous as making defendant liable for the crime in question without proof that he shared the specific intent to rob.—People v. Belton, 160 Mich. 416.

¶ 1935. A charge to the effect that if several persons conspire to commit "any unlawful act" and murder results, all are guilty, is improper as including a conspiracy to commit a misdemeanor, which, if resulting in murder, would only involve the active conspirator.—People v. Koharski, 177 Mich. 194.

§ 411. Form, phrasing and manner of charge.

Use of emphatic words, see post § 412.

Narratives, recitals and quotations, see post § 413.

Argumentative charges, see post § 414.

Accompanying charge with remark that court might discharge accused as error, see also post ¶ 2879.

Inflammatory instruction describing atrocity of murder, see Homicide ¶ 237.

Repeating charge to jury after retirement, see post §§ 452, 454.

Submission of additional instructions after retirement, see post §§ 452-454.

Necessity of written charges and forbiddance of oral charges or modifications, see Comp. L. 1915, § 14575.

Provision for reading charge to jury and filing same as part of record, see Comp. L. 1915, § 14575.

¶ 1936. The style and spirit of a charge are not open to criticism by the supreme court if the charge is correct.—Keator v. People, 32 Mich. 484.

¶ 1937. In giving requests of a party to instruct, it is proper for the court to give such instructions not as coming from said party, but as representing the law as laid down by the court.—People v. Lewis, 166 Mich. 513.

¶ 1938. A charge on the failure to resort to all available means to produce a witness for the defense, whom defendant testified had sold the stolen goods to defendant, is error where it amounted to a partisan argument against accused.—People v. O'Hare, 124 Mich. 515.

§ 412. ——Use of emphatic words.

Undue emphasis or prominence to specific matters, see post § 442.

¶ 1939. In the prosecution of a person for keeping a drug store for the illegal sale of liquor, an instruction to the jury that it was his duty to make such sales in "perfect good faith * * * not good faith but perfect good faith" goes too far. Only good faith is required and there are no degrees of good faith. Such an instruction is reversible error because of the emphasis on the distinction.—People v. Thompson, 147 Mich. 444.

§ 413. ——Narrative recitals and quotations.

¶ 1940. Where there is evidence in a criminal case tending to support the judge's version of the facts, and the fair construction of it is not misleading, his direct narration of the facts in his charge, though hardly proper, is not clearly ground for disturbing the judgment.—People v. Clarkson, 56 Mich. 164.

¶ 1941. If the charge to the jury in a criminal prosecution specially refers to and narrates any of the testimony given by the people's witnesses, it should also refer to the testimony and explanations relating to the same subject on respondent's part.—People v. Murray, 72 Mich. 10.

¶ 1942. A trial judge has a right to introduce into his charge the remarks of the supreme court or other authority or author as to the value of expert evidence and to read them to the jury.—People v. Niles, 44 Mich. 606.

§ 414. ——Argumentative and hypothetical charges.

See also ante ¶ 1938, post ¶ 2061.
Supposititious charge, see also post ¶ 2068.
Duty to charge on theory or hypothesis supportable by evidence in the case, see post § 423.

¶ 1943. Argumentative instructions are not permissible.—People v. Brown, 142 Mich. 622.

¶ 1944. The court may properly refuse to give a requested instruction when it is clearly argumentative.—People v. Thorne, 148 Mich. 203.

¶ 1945. An instruction is objectionable if it is argumentative and if it tends to impress upon the jury that in the court's opinion respondent has not testified truthfully.—People v. Hull, 86 Mich. 449.

¶ 1946. While, within bounds, requests to charge may properly allude to the effect of certain testimony, they should not be argumentative.—People v. Hanaw, 107 Mich. 337.

¶ 1947. Argumentative requests to charge, covering a question which has been fully argued to the jury, are of doubtful propriety.—People v. Palmer, 105 Mich. 568.

¶ 1948. A charge which as a whole is eminently fair, will not be condemned as argumentative and as unnecessarily condemning the admitted conduct of the parties where the part objected to was given to avoid possible danger that testimony of earlier transactions might be misapplied by the jury, and to limit the offense to the one charged in the information.—People v. Gorsline, 132 Mich. 549.

¶ 1949. To allude to the testimony of the attending physician that when attending he had not contemplated the possibility of arsenical poisoning, and to leave it to the jury to decide if death was due to that cause, is error; where the effect is an argument that the theory of the defense is false and that such was the cause of death.—People v. Vanderhoof, 71 Mich. 158, per Morse, J., and Sherwood, C. J., tw result.

¶ 1950. In a pro by a negro upon a is erroneously ar that prosecutrix must draw on the model man to look family way, and i with a colored ma the jury can consi edges she is in a f man, and asks, " a young girl to con —People v. Brown,

¶ 1951. Where, sault with intent less than the crin claims he was not tion at the time a criminal intent, it court in an argu mate an opinion, a ple v. Durham, 17

¶ 1952. The inst for assault, with i girl 13 years of gumentative wher very conflicting, a her extreme youth rassment and conf fair, and in answ People v. Dupree,

¶ 1953. Instruct tective testifies in erroneous as argu the feeling agair largely with peop may be caught in people are law-ab detectives, and th mitted secretly, a conceal themselves fault with.—Peopl § 415. Construction a whole.

Argumentativeness see also ante
Denial of requests same in char § 419.
Construction on re see also post
Presumptions on the charge, se

¶ 1954. Where i of a charge is cor tion in which it predicated thereo Mich. 1.

¶ 1955. The ch whole to determin —People v. Neely,

¶ 1956. Although an excerpt from a charge is objectionable in itself, if when read in connection with the whole charge it fairly presents the case, error cannot be assigned thereon.—People v. Campbell, 173 Mich. 381.

¶ 1957. Error cannot be predicated upon detached sentences in a charge, which when construed with the rest are not objectionable.—Driscoll v. People, 47 Mich. 413.

¶ 1958. In a prosecution for embezzlement where the charge to the jury is full and fair, and preserves every substantial right of the accused, it will not be considered erroneous on the ground that isolated sentences may be subject to criticism.—People v. Lay, 193 Mich. 17.

¶ 1959. Where a full and correct charge was given, certain introductory phrases and cautionary comments on the mode employed in impeaching testimony were held not prejudicial.—Keator v. People, 32 Mich. 484.

¶ 1960. In a prosecution for an assault with intent to murder, the complaining witness testified that the respondent had struck at him as he was sitting on horseback, and had cut his clothes and the horse; the defense suggested that the complaining witness might have inflicted the wound himself, and the judge charged that if it was not done at the time sworn to by the prosecution it remained for the other side to show when and where it was done. He also charged that the case for the prosecution must be made out, not by a mere preponderance of evidence, but beyond a reasonable doubt. Held, that the former suggestion, though loosely made, might be regarded as meaning only that the defense could advance by suggestion or argument any theory as to when and where the injury was committed, if not as alleged by the prosecution, but not as requiring them to show when and where it was done, as that would be irrelevant if the prosecution did not establish defendant's guilt at the time and place and in the manner alleged.—People v. Niles, 44 Mich. 606.

¶ 1961. A charge, that the interest of the witnesses for accused might be considered as affecting the weight of their testimony, is not objectionable as omitting to similarly charge the jury respecting the state's witnesses, where other parts of the charge fully cover that feature of the case, leaving the credibility of all the witnesses solely with the jury.—People v. DeFrance, 104 Mich. 563.

¶ 1962. Upon a trial where respondent offered no evidence, the circuit judge, in the course of a charge which fairly and fully instructed the jury upon the questions of reasonable doubt and presumptive innocence, said, "You have heard the testimony for the prosecution; that is all there is to this case—the testimony for the prosecution." Held, that this language, taken in connection with the rest of the charge, could not be construed as an intimation that the people's case had been established.—People v. Machen, 101 Mich. 400.

¶ 1963. A charge in a prosecution of a druggist's clerk for selling beer to be used as a beverage—that the law allows druggists to sell liquor for medicinal, etc., purposes "and for that alone," and that "the law absolutely forbids the sale of liquor by druggists to be used as a beverage or to be drank on the premises"—does not mislead the jury into believing that conviction may be had for the distinct offense of selling it "to be drank on the premises," other parts of the charge having told them that "the vital question" was sale as a beverage.—People v. Hilliard, 119 Mich. 24.

¶ 1964. An instruction to the jury in a prosecution for rape is not erroneous because the court said, "the people should be protected against such outrages if they have been perpetrated," when he concludes the sentence with the statement that "every citizen should be protected against being convicted of such an outrage if he is not guilty," and no harm could result to the defendant thereby.—People v. Lambert, 144 Mich. 578.

§ 416. ——Effect to cure erroneous part or omission.

See also post ¶ 2230.

Sufficiency of charge in substance equivalent to request, see post § 420.

Sufficiency of charge given to cover refused request, see also post ¶ 2012.

Charge singling out particular witnesses, see also post ¶ 2148.

Charge on confessions taken with remainder of instructions, see also post ¶ 2165.

Cure of error in instructions by other acts or outcome of the trial, see post §§ 566, 567.

¶ 1965. In a prosecution for murder an erroneous instruction cannot be held to be cured by the general charge unless it clearly appears it could not have prejudiced the jury.—People v. Holmes, 111 Mich. 364.

¶ 1966. In a trial for an assault with intent to do great bodily harm less than the crime of murder, where defendant did not ask for particular instructions, no errors based on the omission to give instructions would be considered on appeal where the court's charge fairly covered the case.—People v. Robinson, 152 Mich. 41.

¶ 1967. Isolated portions of the charge concededly covered by other portions of the charge in which the correct rule was given, do not constitute error where on the entire charge the jury was not misled.—People v. Farrell, 146 Mich. 264.

¶ 1968. Even though not specifically requested, an instruction that the law presumes every man innocent until proved guilty should always be given; and the absence of such instruction is not supplied by an instruction that all the material facts essential to constitute the crime charged must be proved beyond a reasonable doubt before respondent can be convicted.—People v. Macard, 73 Mich. 15: People v. De Fore, 64 Mich. 693.

¶ 1969. Where the jury has been instructed that it must be satisfied, beyond all reasonable doubt, that respondent has committed the offense with which he is charged, he is not prejudiced by an omission to charge that respondent is presumed to be innocent; the court having already stated, in the jury's presence, that in a criminal prosecution nothing can be presumed against respondent.—People v. Parsons, 105 Mich. 177.

¶ 1970. Failure to instruct the jury as to the presumption of innocence is not error that requires reversal where the court's attention was not called to the omission, and where the charge as given was explicit to the effect that respondent's guilt must be proved beyond a reasonable doubt.—People v. Ostrander, 110 Mich. 60.

¶ 1971. Where witnesses had refused to answer whether they had had sexual intercourse with the prosecutrix, a charge that "the case, so far as these questions and answers were concerned, should stand in the minds of the jury as if the questions had not been asked, or the same as if they had been answered in the negative," though erroneous standing alone, because it gives a refusal to answer the effect of a positive denial, could work no harm in the absence of the fact of such intercourse, and is cured by a further charge that the refusal to answer was a failure of proof as to those witnesses, and that the jury were not at liberty to suppose, imagine or infer what would have been the answers to these questions if they had been given.—People v. Brewer, 27 Mich. 134.

¶ 1972. An instruction, in a prosecution for murder, where the evidence showed a quarrel between the defendant and the deceased because of the defendant paying attentions to a niece of the deceased, who was his housekeeper, the defense being self-defense, which gives the jury the impression that the defendant could not act upon his own belief of danger, and that he could not escape it in any other way than to do as he did do if he was mistaken and could in fact have escaped, is erroneous and confusing, although the jury are told in another charge that they might judge of the circumstances as they appeared to the defendant, as the giving of a correct charge does not cure the error, and the acts of the jury in being unable to agree and asking for further instructions as to justification for the shooting, showed their confusion.—People v. Bennett, 121 Mich. 241.

¶ 1973. A charge case where self-de unless such facts
ble cause have be fense in the case,
ground of self-defe
reversible error w tions had been give and it was appare
have been misled
Mich. 1.

¶ 1974. In a pro incite to perjury against one arrest
tardy and charged ture of the compl stating that he w child, an instruct
"if the testimony
whole, satisfies yo
evidence that he child, it is your du dicial error on a words "preponde where subsequentl court states the r ically requires th
yond a reasonable of the child.—Pec
130.

¶ 1975. An exce court touching re
which would cau ordinary affairs o error when taker which preceded a
Davis, 171 Mich.

¶ 1976. Where inal prosecution jury should give s of the accused as circumstances as them to be entitle same as that of a to add as request rational, natural weigh the testimc held not erroneo fairly covered the the accused.—Pec

¶ 1977. Use of done, as the boo
charge on malic defining the Lati
the complementar full and correct,
that any unlearn
ple v. Borgetto, 9

¶ 1978. In a liquor-selling, cri
the liquor traffic error, if any, ma of the charge.—I 244.

¶ 1979. An instruction, in a prosecution for illegal sale of liquor by a druggist, to the effect that no druggist had the right to sell liquor in the county without acting in perfect good faith in view of the surrounding circumstances, was not erroneous in placing upon respondent the burden of establishing his good faith, instead of requiring the people to establish his bad faith, in view of the remaining portion of the charge fully stating the presumption as to innocence, and the requirement that the jury must be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt as to respondent's guilt.—People v. Shuler, 136 Mich. 161.

¶ 1980. It is error for a judge to tell the jury that if he were in their place he should give no weight to the testimony of a certain witness and very little to that of another; and the error is not cured by his saying that they are sole judges of what the evidence is and of the weight of the testimony of every witness, and that it did not belong to him to say to them that they must or must not believe it.—People v. Lyons, 49 Mich. 78.

¶ 1981. Although an instruction to the jury upon the defense of an alibi might, if standing alone, or so separated from the rest of the charge as to impress the jury with the idea that such defense was to be considered by itself, have been regarded as holding that the burden was upon respondents to establish the alibi, yet the jury could not have been misled in view of the repeated instructions, both before and after, that the prosecution in a criminal case has the burden of proof, and that guilt must be established beyond a reasonable doubt.—People v. Fuhrmann, 103 Mich. 593.

¶ 1982. In a prosecution for murder, upon the defense of insanity an instruction which might be said to be somewhat obscure on the question, was held to be cured by the general charge setting out explicitly the proper tests.—People v. Quimby, 134 Mich. 625.

¶ 1983. Words, let fall by the court instructing the jury in a larceny case, implying that the defendant admits the possession of the goods, cannot mislead, if followed by an instruction to acquit, if the testimony of the defendant, in view of all the facts and surrounding circumstances, raises a doubt in their minds as to his guilt.—People v. Walters, 76 Mich. 195.

¶ 1984. A statement of the court in a prosecution under the statute punishing the careless use of firearms, made in the course of the trial, that "All that is necessary to constitute this offense is the fact that this young man pointed the gun at the other young man and that he was shot and maimed," is harmless where the charge given fully covered the law applicable to the case.—People v. Dudley, 131 Mich. 261.

¶ 1985. Where, upon a trial for abortion, the jury must have understood from the whole charge that the fact of a criminal abortion was not admitted, a statement that there was no dispute as to there having been an "abortion" in another part of the charge, to denote a miscarriage, whether proceeding from criminal or accidental causes, is not error.—People v. Aikin, 66 Mich. 460.

¶ 1986. Where the defendant on a charge of criminal assault to do great bodily harm less than murder testified that he struck the person with his knife, but did it in self-defense, it is not error for the court to state in his charge that the "assault" is admitted, when from the context it is evident that by "assault" the court meant simply that defendant "struck" the person and not that the crime was admitted as charged.—People v. Van Driesche, 154 Mich. 158.

¶ 1987. Instruction, on a prosecution for larceny, as to the presumption of guilt arising from the possession of recently stolen property held not misleading, when considered as a whole, on the question of the burden of proof, especially since there was direct and positive proof of the defendant's guilt and the presumption was not relied on to make a prima facie case.—People v. May, 199 Mich. 574.

¶ 1988. An instruction, in a prosecution for keeping a house of ill-fame, that if the inmates of the house were prostitutes, and if males were seen frequenting the house at night, the jury might convict, is not error where the charge further stated that the males must have resorted to the house for the purpose of prostitution or lewdness, and that it was the use of the house, and not merely the reputation of its inmates, that the statute was intended to reach.—People v. Russell, 110 Mich. 46.

¶ 1988a. Where an information in a prosecution under the local option law has been amended, confining the offense to intoxicating liquors, the failure of the trial court in his charge to call attention to such amendment is not error where the court and counsel overlooked the matter and nothing in the charge as given could have misled the jury.—People v. Adler, 169 Mich. 322.

§ 417. Manner, sufficiency and time of requests.

Necessity for request to make instruction essential, see ante § 402.

Numerous and frivolous requests, see post § 418.

Charging substance of request, see post § 420.

Making argument to jury in guise of requests and argument thereon, see ante ¶ 1800.

Provisions as to time and manner of filing requests, see Comp. L. 1915, § 14574.

¶ 1989. It is the duty of counsel to call the attention of the court specifically to points on which they desire the jury to be instructed.—People v. Ezzo, 104 Mich. 341; People v. Murphy, 145 Mich. 524.

¶ 1990. A request for an instruction that, if respondent is insane, he is irresponsible, and should be acquitted, is too broad and is properly refused, his responsibility for the act charged being a question for the jury.—People v. Beverly, 108 Mich. 509.

¶ 1991. After argument to the jury in a criminal case had begun, the state handed certain requests to instruct to the court. Defendant's attention was not called to them, and no argument was had upon them. The record did not indicate that the charges were given. The charges as requested contained no error. Held, no reversible error was committed.—People v. Reycraft, 156 Mich. 451.

¶ 1992. The court cannot lay down an unbending rule that all requests to charge shall be submitted before the argument is begun.—People v. Garbutt, 17 Mich. 9.

¶ 1993. A person was charged with embezzlement to an amount exceeding $25, but there was no proof that part of the money came to his hands and the remainder was less than $25. Held, that a request for an acquittal was too broad, but that respondent should have had the benefit of the defect in proof under the request, and, as a punishment for felony was unwarranted, he was entitled to a new trial.—People v. Parkhurst, 49 Mich. 22.

§ 418. ——Numerous and frivolous requests.

¶ 1994. On a prosecution for receiving a bribe as a member of the board of education, it is improper to embarrass the trial by numerous requests bearing only on the question whether other officials were also guilty of like offenses, they not being coindictees and their acts having been put in evidence only to show whether defendant was guilty as charged.—People v. Liphardt, 105 Mich. 80.

¶ 1995. It would not be commendable practice for the court in a criminal case to give numerous unnecessary requests which might more properly go as matter from counsel direct to the jury, and thus allow himself to be made the mouthpiece of counsel.—People v. McGarry, 136 Mich. 316.

§ 419. Propriety of grant, denial or modification of requests.

[Note. Where the propriety of refusing a request turns on its sufficiency, correctness or applicability, the question is the same as if an instruction was being considered for its propriety. Cases of this kind have been treated accordingly and will be found in the appropriate sections in this division, ante §§ 404-414, post §§ 422-455w.]

Deviation from or conformity to exact words of request, see post § 420.

Marking as "given § 421.

Right to have i jects, see ante

Denial because ar
§ 414.

Refusal because or issues, see

Refusal because o of jury, see p

Refusal because dence or witn

Propriety of qua character, se

Form of requeste
ing from cou sel, see ante

¶ 1996. There cific instructions clearly and corre
them that are pr
Mich. 31; Peop
People v. Hare, 5
bard, 92 Mich.
Mich. 256; Peopl
People v. Gorslir
Van Alstyne, 157
169 Mich. 87; Pe
23; People v. Kr
v. Smith, 192 M
193 Mich. 144; P
589; People v. A

¶ 1997. It is quests where th
given in the gene
76 Mich. 218.

¶ 1998. It is ecution to refu
"they alone we law," such not
Sanders, 139 M

¶ 1999. A spe and the refusal charge actually jury the questio true since the a 6484), relative before.—Fisher

¶ 2000. A ve exception becau to charge, if t properly covere tually given. T refusal of instr not read in the
to the judge i
"refused" if
Saunders, 25 M

¶ 2001. Refu give a proper r belonging to e not prejudicial given was not stance, and w benefit of his good reputation.—Campbell v. People, 34 Mich. 351.

¶ 2002. It is not error to refuse a charge requested in a criminal case, where portions of the charge given fully state the rule of law embodied in the request, in different verbiage.—People v. Mindeman, 157 Mich. 120.

¶ 2003. It was not error to refuse certain requests asks by counsel in a criminal case where the court gave some of those asked and also gave a general charge which did not omit anything essential to defendant.—People v. Hilliard, 119 Mich. 24.

¶ 2004. It is not error to refuse requests, some of them not warranted by the record, the others given together with the general charge having omitted no essential thing in favor of accused.—People v. Hilliard, 119 Mich. 24.

¶ 2005. The failure to give written requests in a criminal case is not error where, so far as the requests were applicable to the case, those that were proper statements of the law were fully and clearly stated.—People v. Slayton, 123 Mich. 397.

¶ 2006. Refusing requests to charge is not error where all the requests which were good law were fully covered in the general charge.—People v. Hutchings, 137 Mich. 527.

¶ 2007. The failure of the court to charge in an instruction on the burden of proof in a prosecution for desertion and abandonment of a wife and child that the defendant's failure to provide necessary and proper food, shelter and clothing should be found beyond a reasonable doubt, held not prejudicial where the court in other parts of the charge had stated clearly the nature of the offense and its necessary elements.—People v. Schelske, 187 Mich. 497.

¶ 2008. Under a charge that the rules governing evidence generally applied to the respondent, and that the jury were at liberty to give his testimony such weight as it was entitled to in view of the facts and circumstances in the case, and referring to the interest which a witness might have as bearing upon his credibility, error could not be assigned upon the refusal of the court to instruct upon the question of the weight to be given to respondent's testimony.—People v. Rich, 133 Mich. 14.

¶ 2009. It is not error to refuse to give a requested instruction, in a prosecution for larceny, that the jury could not consider testimony of other larcenies as any evidence of the larceny alleged, and that in arriving at a verdict they had no right to consider any testimony as to any offense other than the one charged, where the court had repeatedly stated that accused could be convicted only for the offense charged and there was no claim that testimony of other larcenies could be considered except upon the question of intent.—People v. Nagle, 137 Mich. 88.

¶ 2010. A requested instruction as to the defense of an alibi, held sufficiently covered by the general charge of the court.—People v. Frontera, 186 Mich. 343.

¶ 2011. It was not error in a prosecution for rape, to refuse to instruct that in considering the question of resistance the jury could take into consideration the relative size and strength of the parties, where there was no evidence as to the relative sizes and strength, and the judge in his charge fully covered the necessity of resistance, and the question of consent.—People v. Lambert, 144 Mich. 578.

¶ 2012. It was not assignable error in a prosecution for failure to remove screens and other obstructions from defendants' saloon on Sunday, under Comp. L. 1897, § 5409, for the court to refuse defendants' request to charge the jury that if they found from the evidence that such obstructions were so removed "as to give a free, fair, and open view of the bar and places in the room where liquors were usually sold or kept for sale," on such day, they must acquit defendants, where the court instructed the jury that if such obstructions are so removed that "a person could have a free, fair, open view as much as they could have if they were entirely removed as a person passes along the street or along the sidewalk, it is a compliance with the law, otherwise not."—People v. Smith, 145 Mich. 530.

§ 420. ——Deviation from exact words or qualified giving.

¶ 2013. Accused has no right to have requests given in the very language in which they are framed, even if they are correct in law and applicable to the evidence.—People v. Parsons, 105 Mich. 177.

¶ 2014. Embodying points in the general charge is preferable to the giving of separate requests.—People v. Salsbury, 134 Mich. 537.

¶ 2015. The action of a court in giving the substance of requested charges which is material and proper, in a general charge which is clear and fair and guards the rights of the accused, is to be commended.—People v. Swartz, 118 Mich. 292.

¶ 2016. The defendant's requests for instructions in a criminal trial should, if found correct, be given in their own language.—People v. Stewart, 75 Mich. 21.

¶ 2017. It is not error to refuse to give an instruction in the language of the request if it is substantially given in the charge and in such manner that the jury could not be misled by the refusal.—Ulrich v. People, 39 Mich. 245; People v. Parsons, 105 Mich. 177.

¶ 2018. As a general rule where the law has been clearly and correctly stated by the trial court in a homicide case in the charge as given, a refusal to give such requests in the exact words as presented will not be error.—People v. Sauerbier, 173 Mich. 521.

¶ 2019. A respondent in a criminal case cannot complain that his requests to charge were not given in the exact language in which they were presented, where the trial judge carefully and correctly stated the law as applicable to the facts in the case and the different theories of counsel.—People v. Weaver, 108 Mich. 649; People v. Quimby, 134 Mich. 625.

¶ 2020. Where a request upon the law of reasonable doubt as proffered is proper, it is not error for the trial court to refuse to give it as framed, if the question which it raises is substantially covered by the charge given. —People v. Lalonde, 171 Mich. 286.

¶ 2021. The refusal to instruct that there was no testimony tending to show concerted action between three defendants in a prosecution for robbery, and that neither could be held responsible for what anyone else did in the circumstances, was not error where the jury were charged in substance that they must consider the case of each defendant separately and must be satisfied as to the guilt of each, beyond a reasonable doubt.—People v. Blanchard, 136 Mich. 146.

¶ 2022. Where the court turned over to the respective attorneys their special requests to be read by them to the jury, saying that he would afterward charge them generally upon the law of the case "and in some respects for the purpose of modifying some of the requests now granted," a conviction was not reversed, there having been no objection at the time and it appearing that the jury was not misled.—People v. Harper, 83 Mich. 273.

¶ 2023. A statement by the court in giving proper requested instructions in a trial for murder, that these requests were given as respondent's theory of the case, is prejudicial error since respondent had the right to have them given as the law to govern the jury in their deliberations.—People v. Farrell, 137 Mich. 127.

§ 421. ——Marking as "given," "refused," etc.

See also ante ¶ 1991.

¶ 2024. In a prosecution for the illegal sale of intoxicating liquor, a request for a charge marked "Refused except as covered in the general charge," instead of marking each request "refused" or "given," sufficiently complies with Comp. L. 1897, § 10245, How. 2nd Ed., § 11839, since Pub. Acts 1901, Act 52, How. 2nd Ed., § 12960, permits a review thereof without the necessity of taking an exception.—People v. Smith, 177 Mich. 358.

§ 422. Applicability and conformity to issues and evidence.

On diverse theories and included offenses, see post §§ 423, 424.

Charging on matters not in evidence, see post § 425.

Ignoring parts of case or evidence, see post § 426.

Sufficiency of evidence to go to the jury, see ante VIII, C.

Questions proper for jury, see ante § 398.

Sufficiency of evidence of insanity to warrant charge thereon, see also ante ¶ 1428.

Presumption as to proper application of charge by jury, see post § 627.

¶ 2025. A request to charge upon an assumption of facts which the jury would not be warranted to find should be refused.—Fisher v. People, 20 Mich. 135.

¶ 2026. A trial court, in charging the jury in a criminal case, cannot be limited to a part of the evidence and required to instruct them if they find the facts to be as stated therein, and that nothing further was done, they must acquit; the court is entitled to go further and instruct the jury that if they find the respondent did as the evidence tends to show he would be guilty.—People v. Howard, 50 Mich. 239.

¶ 2027. Where defendant was charged in the information with having entered a store in the nighttime with intent to commit larceny, and evidence was produced to show that larceny was committed, an instruction that defendant is charged with having broken into a named person's store, with intent to commit a felony therein, and is charged further with having committed larceny in said store after breaking and entering the same, is not erroneous, as it cannot be presumed that the jury was misled.—People v. Marks, 90 Mich. 555.

¶ 2028. In a prosecution for seduction the information charged the offense as of Oct. 22, and the proof showed it as of Sept. 22. The court charged with reference to the proof of the offense on Sept. 22. Held proper where it appeared that complaining witness before the magistrate fixed the date as Oct. 22 and also fixed it as on an evening after she had attended a show, and it later appeared that she was mistaken as to the date, it having been Sept. 22.—People v. Payne, 131 Mich. 474.

¶ 2029. On a trial for murder, it is error to refuse to instruct that if respondent was laboring under such defect of mind and reason as not to know the nature of his acts, and was incapable of forming a criminal intent, he could not be convicted and that it was incumbent upon the people to prove the criminal intent and his mental capacity of forming such intent, where there was some evidence tending to support such theory.—People v. Muste, 137 Mich. 216.

¶ 2030. The court did not err if the charge as to the acts which occurred at the time of the alleged aiding and abetting conformed to evidence.—People v. Neely, 171 Mich. 249.

¶ 2031. Under a charge made under a videlicet, that bribe money was paid on a stated day, it was not error to tell the jury that defendant's conviction did not necessarily depend on their ability to find that he paid the money in question on the day stated, and that it would be sufficient if they were convinced that it was paid on some other day about that time.—People v. McGarry, 136 Mich. 316.

§ 423. ——Divergent theories of case.

Charging on theory of lesser degree or included offense, see post § 424.

Duty and propriety of charging on differing theories as to cause of death in homicide cases, see Homicide § 73.

¶ 2032. The defendant in a criminal prosecution is entitled to have the theory of his defense clearly recognized in the charge.—People v. Cummins, 47 Mich. 334.

¶ 2033. Neither judge nor jury is strictly confined to the theory of either the prosecution or the defense in a criminal case if other theories are consistent with the facts. And a casual suggestion in the charge, involving a different theory and implying the possible guilt of some other person, is not clearly prejudicial to respondent, and ought not to be made the subject of an exception unless objection is made to it at once so that the judge can correct it if he sees fit.—People v. Wallin, 55 Mich. 497.

¶ 2034. Instruction should be given directing jury's attention to circumstances sustaining respondent's theory.—People v. Marks, 90 Mich. 555.

¶ 2035. It is error for the court in its charge to the jury in a criminal case to ignore the theory of the defense supported by respondent's testimony which, if believed, would necessitate an acquittal.—People v. Hicks, 98 Mich. 86.

¶ 2036. Where respondent's requests to charge are inconsistent with the theory of the prosecution and the evidence which supports it, and are based on a different hypothesis unsupported by evidence, they are properly refused.—Maillet v. People, 42 Mich. 262.

¶ 2037. It is error for the court, on the trial of a respondent for rape, where the whole theory of the defense is that the charge of the prosecutrix is fabricated, to instruct the jury upon the theory that respondent claims a want of sufficient resistance on her part to constitute the offense, as shown by her failure to make an outcry or resistance at the time, or complaint afterwards, which evidence was drawn out upon her cross-examination.—People v. Evans, 72 Mich. 367.

¶ 2038. Under an information charging, in separate counts, rape and improper liberties with the person of a female child, where the evidence does not exclude either theory, the case may properly be submitted to the jury upon both counts.—People v. Walker, 113 Mich. 367.

¶ 2039. Where, in a prosecution for burglary, circumstances appear which tend to sustain the theory of the defense that the prosecution's witnesses were the guilty parties, and that they conspired to charge respondent with the crime so as to shield themselves, the court should direct the jury's attention thereto and to the defendant's claim.—People v. Marks, 90 Mich. 555.

¶ 2040. Giving the jury the two "theories" of the prosecution, to wit, first, that accused "purposely" overturned a boat and threw deceased into the water, and second, that it was "unintentionally" overturned in an attempt to commit rape, is not open to criticism because the second count charged a wilful attempt to ravish in course whereof the boat was overturned, the word "theories" not having been used in the sense of "count," and the second count not having charged that the boat was "purposely" overturned.—People v. Willett, 105 Mich. 110.

¶ 2041. Death having resulted from a bystander's kicking a man whom respondent, in an altercation, had knocked down, the prosecution claimed a concert of action between the bystander and respondent, which the latter denied, claiming that he had no reason to expect or anticipate assistance, and that he did not induce it. Held, that respondent was entitled to a proper submission of his theory, and to an acquittal if the jury found it correct.—People v. Elder, 100 Mich. 515.

§ 424. ——On lesser degrees and included offenses.

¶ 2042. On a prosecution for resisting an officer who was attempting to serve a warrant on the defendant while the latter was in his own house, where the defendant claimed that the warrant was void, held that, as under the information the defendant was either guilty of resisting an officer or not guilty of anything, it was not error for the court to refuse to charge that the defendant might have been guilty of a simple assault.—People v. De Meaux, 194 Mich. 18.

¶ 2043. In a prosecution under How. St. § 9314b, for taking improper liberties with the person of a female child, where the evidence shows respondent to have been guilty either of the offense charged or of no statutory offense, it is error to instruct the jury that they may convict respondent of an assault and battery.—People v. Sheffield, 105 Mich. 117.

§ 425. ——Charging on matters not in evidence.

Charging on inference without support in evidence, see also post ¶ 2089.
Invoking personal feelings or judgment of jurors, see post ¶ 2186.

¶ 2044. A charge unsupported by any evidence in the case is erroneous.—People v. Jones, 24 Mich. 215.

¶ 2045. Instructions not supported by evidence are properly refused.—People v. Gosch, 82 Mich. 22.

¶ 2046. A request to charge that if the person who swore out the warrant for respondent's arrest was so intoxicated that he was unfit to do business, and if the officer who attempted to make the arrest knew it, then the warrant was void in the officer's hands, was properly refused where the only testimony on this subject was that the person took one drink several hours before swearing out the warrant.—People v. Gosch, 82 Mich. 22.

¶ 2047. In a prosecution for assault with intent to do great bodily harm, where the evidence failed to raise the question of intoxication, it is not error to refuse an instruction that if defendant was too intoxicated to be able to form a specific intent, he must be acquitted.—People v. Kirk, 151 Mich. 253.

¶ 2048. In the absence of evidence of character, a charge that defendant is presumed to be of good character, is properly refused.—People v. Kemmis, 153 Mich. 117.

¶ 2049. An instruction that an accused should be acquitted if acting in self-defense is properly refused where the evidence does not warrant such charge.—People v. Williams, 118 Mich. 692.

¶ 2050. On a trial for murder where the deceased had a right to enter upon the land and work and there is no evidence that on the occasion when the killing took place anything was being done by the deceased not within his right to enter the land, the court may properly refuse to charge as to trespassing beyond the distance to which the deceased could go.—People v. Tubbs, 147 Mich. 1.

¶ 2051. Where the prosecution alleges a conspiracy between respondent and deceased's wife to kill deceased on account of his heavy life insurance, and the evidence is not sufficient to carry the question to the jury, it is prejudicial error to charge as to the alleged friendly relations between respondent and deceased's wife, the opportunity for an agreement concerning the killing and the early inquiries made by them as to the life insurance.—People v. Auerbach, 176 Mich. 23.

¶ 2052. It is error to charge that the omission of a person on trial for adultery to summon the other party to the act as a witness must be taken against him, especially if there is nothing to show that respondent knows the latter's whereabouts.—People v. Hendrickson, 53 Mich. 525.

¶ 2053. A charge to the jury upon a trial for polygamy that if the parties went through a sham ceremony then it was no marriage, is erroneous where there was no allegation nor testimony of any sham marriage, the people claiming that no marriage was in fact performed between the parties.—People v. Goodrode, 132 Mich. 542.

¶ 2054. Where all of the testimony adduced upon a prosecution for assault with intent to murder tends to show that the assault was made in the furtherance of a common purpose on the part of several persons to perpetrate a robbery, it is not error to refuse an instruction as to the rule obtaining where an assault is committed by a co-conspirator in an attempt to escape.—People v. Cleveland, 107 Mich. 367.

¶ 2055. In a prosecution under Comp. L. 1897, § 11584, making it a crime to wilfully destroy a building, an instruction that if the respondent made it a pretense that the building blocked access to his premises but his motive was revenge or wantonness or malice, the act would come within the statute, is erroneous where there is no evidence to support it.—People v. Severance, 125 Mich. 556.

§ 426. ——Ignoring parts of case or of evidence.

See also post ¶ 2210.

¶ 2056. A charge to the jury that ignores the undisputed testimony of an acquitted co-respondent as to the identity of stolen coin, is erroneous.—People v. Marks, 90 Mich. 555.

¶ 2057. An instruction as to an identification of stolen coin from the discoloration thereof, is erroneous, if in disregard of uncontradicted testimony.—People v. Marks, 90 Mich. 555.

¶ 2058. Where the defense of temporary insanity proceeds upon the theory that it was induced by the operation of strong drink upon a mind rendered unsound by an injury to the brain, it is error to leave the question of criminal responsibility to be determined upon the facts of the injury and mental unsoundness alone, or upon the effect of intoxication apart from the other facts.—People v. Cummins, 47 Mich. 334.

¶ 2059. Upon an information for rape the court, in instructing the jury, defined the necessary elements of the crime, and, it appearing that none but respondent and the complaining witness was present at the commission of the offense, the court charged, "the people's case is established, as is claimed, by the testimony of the complaining witness. * * * It will be for you to say whether that is true under the instructions which I have given you." There was corroborative evidence of her story. A further charge was given: "In stating what the claim of the prosecution was, I referred to the testimony of the complaining witness only; I did not mean to exclude from your consideration any fact in the case which is before you as evidence," etc. Held, not objectionable as permitting a conviction solely on the testimony of the complaining witness.—People v. Bates, 70 Mich. 234.

¶ 2060. In a prosecution for embezzlement of township funds by a deputy township treasurer, it is not error to refuse to instruct that defendant could not be found guilty if he paid out for township orders, or had deposited in the bank, all the moneys received by him, since this excludes the claim that he drew from the bank and embezzled the funds.—People v. Sanders, 139 Mich. 442.

¶ 2061. An argumentative instruction in a criminal case to the effect that a phase of the defense, which was supported by evidence, may be disregarded by the jury, is improper.—People v. Jansma, 181 Mich. 62.

§ 427. Assumptions and misstatements of fact.

Sufficiency of evidence to support charge on theory assuming its truth, see ante § 422 et seq.

Charging on diverse theories, assuming either to be proved, see ante § 423.

Misnaming a statement as a "confession" or "admission," see post § 428.

Reference to a striking as an "assault," see ante ¶ 1986.

Reference to miscarriage as "abortion," see also ante ¶ 1985.

Correctness and propriety of charge as a whole, see ante §§ 415. 416.

Assumptions overcome by charge as a whole, see ante § 416.

Assumption that weapon was loaded, see also Homicide ¶ 239.

Erroneous reference in homicide case to related killing as "murder," see Homicide ¶ 226.

¶ 2062. It is error for the charge to assume as undisputed or admitted a fact that is controverted.—People v. Schick, 75 Mich. 592.

¶ 2063. A statement in a charge that a fact, important as evidence, was admitted, is reversible error where it had in fact been expressly denied by defendant in his testimony.—People v. Gorsline, 132 Mich. 549.

¶ 2064. In a criminal prosecution a request to charge assuming that a witness had changed his testimony without giving any reason is properly refused when as a matter of fact he had given a reason.—People v. Fox, 142 Mich. 528.

¶ 2065. Where upon a person's trial for larceny the undisputed testimony shows that some of the goods found in his possession were stolen, and where, without denying the fact, he seeks to explain such possession, it is not prejudicial error for the court to state to the jury that such fact is admitted.—People v. Walters, 76 Mich. 195.

¶ 2066. It is error in a prosecution for murder to charge that special attention should be given to the course of the bullet through the body, and that it is admitted that the bullet passed through horizontally when no such admission is made.—People v. Auerbach, 176 Mich. 23.

¶ 2067. A court can hardly know judicially that unchaste women in the streets are "apt to demonstrate acts of rudeness, or, in some way, throw out inducements for persons": hence such a charge is erroneous, since it usurps the functions of a jury in assuming a fact not judicially known to be true.—People v. Wells, 112 Mich. 648.

¶ 2068. In a criminal case a statement in the instructions that "it is possible and very likely that he tried to commit it so nobody else would see him," is error.—People v. Snyder, 173 Mich. 616.

¶ 2069. A defendant on trial for an attempt to commit rape, having stated under the statute that "all the allegations of the prosecutrix were false and untrue, and that he had never insulted her in his life," it was error to charge "that the statement of defendant does not, however, directly deny the assault. This silence would go far to confirm the testimony of the plaintiff." His assertion that "all her allegations"—of which the assault was one—were false and untrue, was a direct denial of the assault.—De Foe v. People, 22 Mich. 224.

¶ 2070. On a prosecution for receiving stolen goods, where it was not disputed that the crime, if committed, took place in a certain city, it was not reversible error in instructing the jury in relation to elements of the offense, to state that the place where the crime was committed must be established and that such place was in the designated city and was not disputed.—People v. Mullis, 200 Mich. 505.

¶ 2071. On a prosecution for receiving stolen goods, where it was an undisputed fact that the goods were stolen by a witness for the state who had previously pleaded guilty to larceny of the goods, it was not reversible error to instruct that the goods were stolen and that it was undisputed that they were stolen by the witness.—People v. Mullis, 200 Mich. 505.

¶ 2072. On a prosecution for receiving stolen goods, where the undisputed evidence showed the value of the goods to be over twenty-five dollars, it was not reversible error to charge that the goods were of the admitted and undisputed value of over twenty-five dollars.—People v. Mullis, 200 Mich. 505.

§ 428. ——Allusion to statement as "confession" or "admission."

Assumption that fact is conceded, undisputed or proved, see ante § 427.

¶ 2073. It is error in a criminal case for the trial court to instruct the jury as to the weight to be given to a statement introduced in evidence as a confession of defendant and assumed by the court to be such a confession, where an examination of the statement in question indicates that it is not an admission of the guilt of the offense charged or of any knowledge of or connection with the alleged crime or the circumstances leading up to it.—People v. Rohl, 166 Mich. 315.

¶ 2073a. Where at the time defendant in a prosecution for an assault with intent to commit murder voluntarily surrendered himself to the officers he admitted his participation in the affray, but claimed to have acted in self-defense and that his revolver was accidentally discharged, it is error for the court in its charge to refer to such statements as a confession.—People v. Cismadija, 167 Mich. 210.

§ 429. Encroaching on jury province.

Charging that fact is admitted or established when it is not, see ante § 427.

Charging on inferences to be drawn or which are admissible on the evidence, see post § 430 et seq.

Charging on the weighing and considering of evidence or on its weight and effect, see post § 433 et seq.

Narrating evidence in way of inducement to charge, see ante § 413.

Directing verdict, see ante §§ 399, 400.

¶ 2074. The weight to be given to testimony, and all inferences to be drawn therefrom, are exculsively for the jury; and it is error for the court to weigh the testimony for them, or draw inferences from it.—People v. Gastro, 75 Mich. 127.

¶ 2075. A charge that a respondent has admitted all that was necessary to convict him, if not so insane or intoxicated as to be able to form no intent, and pointing out that his conduct did not indicate any lack of reasoning power, is erroneous, being practically an instruction to convict.—People v. McCord, 76 Mich. 200.

¶ 2076. It is proper to refuse to charge that the crime is not made out where there is a question fo

People v. Burns

¶ 2077. A req
facts the jury
fused when it
ord that the qu jury.—People v.

¶ 2078. It is to charge whic exclusively with People v. Jones

¶ 2079. The brother testified act of adultery.
improper condu mony was by the family and of defendant's ent's visits at and to his ask husband and wi
ter than her fa
he would come so close. It ap her husband b had returned or Held, that it
struction that dence to conv
there was no except the te ness and his bi
—People v. Mo

¶ 2080. Whe melted down was evidence t wagon, that ac
similar wagon, taken from tha the jury that had charge of sold it, the id sufficiently co
Mich. 345.

¶ 2081. Upo of ill fame a spondent and well behaved should take t to their chast
they would be rudeness, or,
ducements, w ing the prov
Wells, 112 M

¶ 2082. In only evidence ted in the aft that the undi fense at that conviction to ted at that t neous.—Peopl

¶ 2083. In where the de

in breaking and entering the houses in question, acted under the belief that his companion had authority from the owner to do so, and where the testimony presented an issue of fact as to such authority, it is proper for the court to refuse an instruction that defendant's companion had such authority, this question being one for the jury.—People v. Evans, 150 Mich. 443.

¶ 2084. In a prosecution for highway robbery, the judge in his charge said that the officers took defendant into custody when they found him fleeing. Held, such statement was error, it being for the jury to determine whether the defendant was fleeing or not.—People v. Leonzo, 181 Mich. 41.

§ 430. Charging on drawing inferences and presumptions.

On presumption of coercion by husband of accused, see post ¶ 2209.

Instructions as to intent presumable in homicide or homicidal assault, see Homicide §§ 74, 78.

¶ 2085. The court should instruct the jury in reference to the presumptions of law applicable to the case, distinguishing those which are conclusive from those which are disputable.—People v. De Fore, 64 Mich. 693.

¶ 2086. It is the duty of the trial judge, in a criminal case, to instruct the jury in reference to the presumptions of law applicable to the case before them, distinguishing those which are conclusive from those which are disputable.—People v. Karamol, 173 Mich. 354.

¶ 2087. The weight of evidence is for the jury to decide; but where the circumstances must determine whether the evidence does or does not supply a presumption of guilt, the jury should be instructed as to their bearing upon such presumption.—Gablick v. People, 40 Mich. 292.

¶ 2088. It is going beyond the province of the court, on an issue of intent in a criminal proceeding, to suggest to the jury how far any extent of violence indicates an intent to do more than commit violence.—People v. Foley, 59 Mich. 553.

¶ 2089. In a trial for letting a house for purposes of prostitution it is error to allow a jury to infer guilt from the amount of rent received, when there is no evidence in the case to show it to be extravagant. They cannot consider such a point without proof.—People v. Saunders, 29 Mich. 269.

§ 431. ——On inferences from flight, concealment, falsification, or incriminating possessions.

Correctness of charge taken as a whole, see ante § 416, ¶ 1987.

¶ 2090. It is proper to refuse an instruction that the defendant having made false and contradictory statements concerning his whereabouts at the time of the crime was not sufficient to warrant a conviction; the question is for the jury.—People v. Stewart, 75 Mich. 21.

¶ 2091. The jury is not to be instructed to draw "unfavorable inferences" in a prosecution for receiving and concealing stolen goods, from the fact that the officers were afterwards present attempting to detect the crime through the intervention of the purchaser of the stolen goods.—People v. Considine, 105 Mich. 149.

¶ 2092. A jury were instructed that they might consider as evidence of guilt the fact that the stolen article was found in the defendant's possession within a short time after it was missed; that he was in a situation to enable him to steal it; and that he made no explanation to account for his possession as an honest one; it expressly stated, however, that the explanation referred to was not explanation by way of statement. Held, that the charge was not open to the objection that it left the jury to presume against the defendant because he elected not to make a statement on the trial to explain how he got possession.—People v. Wilson, 30 Mich. 486.

¶ 2093. Where in a prosecution for larceny the defendant's testimony and his theory accounting for the possession of the stolen goods have been submitted to the jury under instructions that if they raise a reasonable doubt as to his guilt he should be acquitted, it is not error to refuse to instruct the jury that possession of stolen goods is only presumptive evidence of guilt.—People v. Walters, 76 Mich. 195.

¶ 2094. An instruction that the possession of stolen property found with persons accused of burglary is not even prima facie evidence of that crime, but adding that if the jury found that whoever broke and entered a certain mill stole the flour therefrom, then in whosesoever possession the flour was found shortly after, it would be evidence of larceny, and the jury would be justified in finding such person guilty of burglary as well as of larceny, is proper.—People v. Wood, 99 Mich. 620.

¶ 2095. Where the burglary can only be inferred from a larceny, and but a small portion of the goods stolen is found in respondent's possession, the jury should be charged not to convict unless clearly satisfied of the larceny.—People v. Bielfus, 59 Mich. 576.

¶ 2096. In a prosecution for larceny, an instruction calling attention to the testimony of a witness identifying the defendant as one who was seen in possession of the property and stating that if this testimony is true it raised a strong presumption of guilt, is not error where the truth of the testimony is left to the jury.—People v. Carey, 125 Mich. 535.

§ 432. ——On failure or refusal to testify or produce proofs.

Sufficiency of charge as a whole, see ante § 416.

¶ 2097. No inference is to be drawn from the fact that the defendant in a criminal action was not sworn as a witness, and the jury have no right to take into consideration or to pass upon the matter; and the court was not in error in so instructing the jury.—People v. Murphy, 145 Mich. 524.

¶ 2098. Inasmuch as a person accused of crime is protected in his right under the statute not to testify, the jury upon his request should be informed of that right to prevent the creation of the presumption of guilt by reason of his silence, and it is prejudicial error for the court to refuse to give an instruction that no presumption of guilt can be indulged in by the jury because of his failure to testify.—People v. Provost, 144 Mich. 17.

¶ 2099. Where a witness testifies fully on his direct examination, and refuses to answer a fair question on cross-examination not in any way directed against his character, or put for the purpose of impeachment, or to affect his credibility because of any wrong or criminal act on his part, on the ground that such answer may criminate him, it is not error for the court to refuse to instruct the jury that such refusal must not be considered as in any way discrediting his testimony, or to charge that the testimony could not be given such credit as the jury thinks it deserves.—People v. Gallagher, 75 Mich. 512.

¶ 2100. A request that no inference can be drawn against an accused because he does not take the stand in his own behalf should be given as a matter of law, and it is reversible error to refuse it even though the attention of the jury had not been called to the fact that he had not testified.—People v. Messer, 148 Mich. 168.

¶ 2101. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 10211, providing that the failure of a defendant in a criminal case to testify in his own behalf shall raise no presumption against him, an instruction of the court that such failure shall not be given unfair consideration constitutes reversible error as implying that the jury may give to such fact some consideration so long as it is fair.—People v. Mitchell, 164 Mich. 583.

¶ 2102. In a criminal case it is improper for a court in his charge to state to the jury what a defendant might have proved had he taken the stand in his own behalf.—People v. Peterson, 166 Mich. 10.

§ 433. Charging on dence or cr

On weighing and evidence and w 441.

Charges on confessi post § 444.

Charges on charact evidence, see p

Singling out or en dence, see post

Necessity of reques ibility and wei

Necessity and duty et seq.

Necessity and suffi den of proof, p and reasonable

Necessity and suffi ciency of proof et seq.

Argumentative cha

Sufficiency of the see ante §§ 41

¶ 2103. A jury weight to give to t 39 Mich. 717.

¶ 2104. A jury not be instructed dence given by th prosecution where with.—People v. F

¶ 2105. It is n refuse to instruct dence has a cert might be sustaine v. Coughlin, 67 M

§ 434. ——On cir

¶ 2106. In a t cumstantial evide prosecution, the d the jury instructe or necessary link been proved in or —People v. Stew

¶ 2107. An in guilt is sought t stantial evidence, stance" proven is ent's guilt, he sh erly refused. (S Stewart, 75 Mich guishes.)—People

¶ 2108. A requ every circumstan no more than in do not warrant fused as equival —People v. Fole

§ 435. ——Uncon ceded fa

¶ 2109. It is e they should cons the complaining witness as established simply because she has testified to them and has not been contradicted.—People v. De Fore, 64 Mich. 693.

¶ 2110. It is not error for the court in a criminal case to recite the conceded facts in his charge to the jury, and to refuse an instruction that the ultimate determination of such questions rests with them, and that they are not absolutely bound by the opinion of the court thereon.—People v. Hawkins, 106 Mich. 479.

¶ 2111. An instruction is correct which states that facts sworn to by the complaining witness which are not contradicted are undisputed, but which leaves the determination of the disputed points in the testimony to the jury.—People v. Bryan, 170 Mich. 683.

¶ 2112. Where the complaining witness' testimony as to the amount of money in his possession at the time of the robbery, and that he was in the neighborhood of the alleged crime on that night, and that he was robbed by a colored woman, is not contradicted, it is not error for the court to instruct the jury that these facts are undisputed.—People v. Bryan, 170 Mich. 683.

¶ 2113. The jury in a criminal case may decline to accept as true the testimony of any witness if, after considering all the testimony and surrounding circumstances, they do not believe his testimony; and a charge that it is their duty, as a matter of law, to accept undisputed testimony as true, unless in itself of such a conflicting nature as to discredit it, is erroneous.—People v. Mindeman, 157 Mich. 120.

§ 436. ——On expert and opinion evidence.

¶ 2114. Where all the experts in a murder case testified that death on the hypothesis presented resulted from arsenical poisoning, and the claim of defendant accused of poisoning her husband is that she was unable to hire experts, it is error to charge that the way to contradict expert testimony is by the testimony of other experts and that the jury has no right to disregard testimony of credible witnesses without proof.—People v. Vanderhoof, 71 Mich. 158, per Morse, J., and Sherwood, C. J., two others concurring in the result.

¶ 2115. An instruction that the testimony of expert witnesses is exposed to a reasonable degree of suspicion, and that, by giving too much weight thereto, juries have been induced to render unwarrantable verdicts, is error, where respondent relied upon such testimony to support his theory that death resulted from natural causes.—People v. Seaman, 107 Mich. 348.

¶ 2116. It is not proper for the court to refer to the testimony of expert witnesses as "boughten testimony."—People v. Jennings, 132 Mich. 662.

§ 437. ——Interest, bias or knowledge affecting credibility.

On bias of policemen and detectives, see post § 438.
On bias and interest of accomplices, see post § 439.
On interest of accused, see post § 440.
Singling out or omitting particular witnesses and charging on credibility, see post § 443.
Sufficiency of instructions as a whole, see ante §§ 415, 416.

¶ 2117. Upon a prosecution for the larceny of one's own property from a person who had a lien upon it, the trial judge might properly comment to the jury upon respondent's omission to take proper legal proceedings.—People v. Long, 50 Mich. 249.

¶ 2118. A charge may caution the jury to consider the relations the prosecuting witness and the defendant bore to the case in determining what weight to give their testimony.—People v. Herrick, 59 Mich. 563.

¶ 2119. Where the trial judge in his charge did not allude to the fact that a quarrel had occurred between respondent and his alleged victim prior to her making the complaint, it was held that respondent's rights were sufficiently guarded by the general charge that the jury should carefully consider the testimony of the complaining witness, her appearance and manner of testifying, her age, and all other things bearing upon her testimony and credibility, and from her evidence and that of respondent, and all of the evidence in the case, endeavor to arrive at a true and just verdict.—People v. Harris, 103 Mich. 473.

¶ 2120. An instruction in a robbery case stating that the credibility of the witnesses was for the jury and that the interest of each and his manner of testifying should be considered, and also the opportunities each had for observing what was going on, because some had excellent opportunities for so observing and some had very little, was not subject to the objection that it cautioned the jury against the testimony of the defendants.—People v. Blanchard, 136 Mich. 146.

§ 438. ——Testimony of policemen and detectives.

Singling out officers for commendation, see also post ¶ 2161.
Argumentative instructions respecting detectives, see ante ¶ 1953.

¶ 2121. Where the fact of employment to testify as detectives is established, it is error to refuse a request to charge that, in determining the credit that should be given to the testimony of such witnesses, the jury should consider the fact that they are "hired witnesses."—People v. Rice, 103 Mich. 350.

¶ 2122. Where, upon a prosecution for a violation of the local option law, it appears that the complaining witness purchased liquor from respondent for the purpose of obtaining evidence against him, an instruction that such fact should be considered by the jury, in determining the credit to be given to his testimony, is sufficiently favorable to respondent, and it is not error to refuse instructions in that connection referring to such witness as a "spy" and a "hired witness," and reciting that "he was willing to and did ask respondent to violate the law for the sole and express purpose of making a case and instituting a criminal prosecution against him."—People v. Bennett, 107 Mich. 430.

¶ 2123. The fact that detectives to whom an unlawful sale of liquor was made purchased on a promise of reward for respondent's conviction is important only as it bears upon their credibility, and the court is therefore justified in refusing an instruction which simply denounces their conduct as scandalous and reprehensible.—People v. Everts, 112 Mich. 194.

¶ 2124. While in a criminal case it may be the duty of the court to direct attention to the testimony of a police agent employed, not to secure evidence of a crime already committed, but of one to be committed by the procurement and connivance of the agent, it is not the right of respondent to have the jury advised to regard such testimony either favorably or unfavorably.—People v. Plummer, 189 Mich. 415.

¶ 2125. Instructions to the jury that "The police department is an important part of the machinery of our government, and it is well enough to bear in mind that your homes, your lives, and your property would not be safe but for the police department and officers. It does not follow that because an officer testifies in the court room that his testimony is to be discarded, or any suspicion cast upon it, unless there is something about it which calls your attention to it," are not objectionable where the attorneys for defendant made a severe attack upon the police officers.—People v. Shoemaker, 131 Mich. 107.

§ 439. ——Accomplice's testimony.

Necessity of request for instruction on credibility, see ante § 402.

¶ 2126. The credibility of one who has turned state's evidence against an accomplice is for the jury to determine; and the court should not do more than call their attention to the nature of such testimony and the motives and temptations that may affect such witnesses.—People v. Jenness, 5 Mich. 305; People v. Wallin, 55 Mich. 497; People v. Hare, 57 Mich. 505.

¶ 2127. The jury cannot be instructed that they are bound to accept and credit testimony of an accomplice, either standing alone or more or less corroborated. It is their province to determine whether he is to be credited at all, and if so to what extent.—Hamilton v. People, 29 Mich. 173.

¶ 2128. One of the prosecution's witnesses under arrest for the same charge as that for which respondent was on trial testified that she was present when the larceny was committed, that she protested against its commission and had nothing to do with it, but received a part of the money. Held, that it was not improper for the court to charge that it was for her interest to show that somebody was the guilty party, and that if they found from the evidence that she and respondent together stole the money respondent would not be relieved thereby, but both would be guilty.—People v. Harrison, 93 Mich. 594.

¶ 2129. It is error to charge the jury in a criminal case that the testimony of an accomplice, if corroborated, is to be taken as true.—People v. Shaver, 107 Mich. 562.

§ 440. ——Testimony of accused.

Charging on credit to be given to specific portion of testimony, see post ¶ 2154.

¶ 2130. The jury in a criminal case may be instructed to take into consideration, in weighing the testimony given by the accused in his own behalf, the interest he necessarily has in the result.—People v. Calvin, 60 Mich. 113.

¶ 2131. It is not error to instruct the jury in a criminal case that, in weighing respondent's testimony they may "consider his relation to the offense" charged.—People v. Resh, 107 Mich. 251.

¶ 2132. It is erroneous to instruct the jury that where the defendant's statement conflicts with the testimony of an unimpeached witness they must believe the latter in preference.—Durant v. People, 13 Mich. 351.

¶ 2133. A conviction of larceny was reversed for language in the instructions to the jury that might have led them to believe that they could reject defendant's statement merely because it was not supported by other testimony.—People v. Arnold, 40 Mich. 710.

¶ 2134. An instruction to the jury that in estimating the weight to be given to the prisoner's statement they "should consider whether it is consistent with the other facts proven to their satisfaction, and whether it is corroborated or not by the other proofs, facts or circumstances of the case," is not objectionable as laying down an arbitrary or artificial rule on the subject.—People v. Jones, 24 Mich. 215.

¶ 2135. In a prosecution for murder an instruction that if respondent's statements were found to be inconsistent with his conduct before and after the killing, the jury should take his statements with such weight as they might appear to have under such inconsistent circumstances, was held not seriously objectionable.—People v. Harper, 83 Mich. 273.

¶ 2136. A request in a prosecution for larceny to charge the jury that the testimony of the defendant is to be tested the same as other witnesses and that if natural, rational and consistent it may outweigh the testimony of all other witnesses, should be given if it is not covered by the general charge.—People v. Hammond, 177 Mich. 416.

¶ 2137. An instruction in a criminal case that the jury has the right to believe a man accused of crime, when he testifies, as against other sworn testimony, if they think that his testimony deserves such respect, is not erroneous when given in connection with other instructions setting forth the correct rule.—People v. Parker, 166 Mich. 587.

¶ 2138. In a criminal prosecution where the accused was the only witness on his own behalf an instruction that if the jury did not believe the testimony of the accused then they should not return a verdict in accordance with his testimony and that they were to return a verdict according as to whether or not they believed or disbelieved the witness, held erroneous, as, even though the jury did not believe the testimony of defendant, still if they were not convinced by the people's case that defendant was guilty it would be their duty to return a verdict of not guilty.—People v. White, 194 Mich. 172.

§ 441. ——Impeached or falsified testimony.

On contradiction of accused by unimpeached witnesses, see ante ¶ 2132.
Correctness or propriety of charge taken with other parts of instructions, see ante § 415, ¶ 1959.

¶ 2139. Where a conviction for seduction depended almost entirely upon the testimony of the prosecutrix, who admitted that she had sworn falsely in some respects, it was proper to instruct the jury to consider her contradictory statements and her admission.—People v. Hubbard, 92 Mich. 322.

¶ 2140. In the examination preliminary to prosecution for seduction the prosecutrix testified that defendant had offered her no inducement and made no promise, but on the trial she testified he had protested his love and talked to her of marriage. Held, that it was reasonable to caution the jury, which had an opportunity to observe her, to consider her embarrassment on the examination, and her youth and degree of intelligence, and determine whether she would have volunteered to tell all that defendant had said to her about love and marriage, and whether she would consider it as a promise, unless her attention was called to it, and to charge them that if they were satisfied that she had told the truth on the trial and that defendant had induced her to consent they should find him guilty.—People v. Thompson, 37 Mich. 518.

¶ 2141. A requested instruction that if the jury find that any witness has wilfully sworn falsely to any material fact they may disregard his entire testimony is properly refused.—People v. Breen, 192 Mich. 39.

¶ 2142. Where a witness for the purpose of proving an alibi testified that accused was present in a certain place on the day in question and there gave a note which witness paid to accused at a certain city on a certain day later, and the note bore an indorsement of that day, but another witness testified that on the last-named day accused was elsewhere, such testimony being received as rebuttal, the jury was properly instructed that the latter testimony might be considered as bearing on the credibility of the former witness to the alibi.—People v. DeFrance, 104 Mich. 563.

¶ 2143. An instruction that respondent's testimony is to be scanned and tested the same as that of "other witnesses," and, if rational, natural, and consistent, it may outweigh the testimony of "other witnesses," is not open to the criticism that the court should have used the language "any other witness or witnesses," instead of "other witnesses," the language used being applicable to any other witness and to all other witnesses.—People v. Willett, 105 Mich. 110.

¶ 2144. It is not error in the court to refuse to charge that if a witness has wilfully testified falsely in one particular he must be wholly discredited. A charge that any such testimony should seriously affect all that the witness has sworn to, and that no credit should be given to any fact depending upon his statement alone, but that when corroborated by other proof or circumstances it might receive such credit as it appeared to the jury to deserve, is unobjectionable.—Knowles v. People, 15 Mich. 408.

¶ 2145. An instruction which leads the jury to suppose that it may convict on the testimony of a witness who has been conclusively shown by impeaching evidence to be unworthy of belief is erroneous.—People v. Lyons, 51 Mich. 215.

§ 442. Emphasizing or singling out parts of evidence.

Charging on testimony of particular witnesses, see post § 443.
Use of emphatic words or forms of speech, see also ante § 412.

¶ 2146. It is better to avoid directing the jury's attention to specific bits of evidence or to particular witnesses unless necessary.—People v. Finley, 38 Mich. 482.

¶ 2147. The omission to give requests for instructions which tend to distract the jury by calling special attention to metaphysical subtleties or particular testimony is not error.—People v. Finley, 38 Mich. 482.

¶ 2148. Where the charge in a criminal case, taken in its entirety, carefully conserves the rights of the defendant, prejudicial error cannot be based upon the fact that particular portions thereof give undue prominence to testimony of certain witnesses and that other parts are argumentative in character.—People v. Eagle, 189 Mich. 404.

¶ 2149. It is error for the court to point out particular testimony and instruct the jury that, if they believe it, it is "pretty strong evidence" in favor of the guilt of the accused, without cautioning them not to be influenced by such opinion, and instructing them that they are the exclusive judges of the weight of the testimony, and of what facts it tends to establish.—People v. Gastro, 75 Mich. 127.

¶ 2150. In a prosecution for burglary it is error so to dwell upon the question of the defendant's intoxication as to imply that it is the only inquiry open, where there are other questions of fact in dispute and where the breaking is not shown.—People v. McCord, 76 Mich. 200.

¶ 2151. Where there is evidence in a murder trial based on the theory of killing to obtain life insurance, the fact that four years before, when the deceased was sick, and carrying a large amount of insurance payable to respondent, the latter properly administered medicine to him, although an overdose would have caused his death, does not warrant a specific charge that such fact should be considered as evidence of a lack of intent at the time of the murder declared on. A request to so charge was therefore properly refused as singling out for emphasis one item of evidence.—People v. Pope, 108 Mich. 361.

¶ 2152. In a poisoning case it is error to give undue prominence in the charge to the testimony and the theories of experts that death was due to arsenical poisoning, ignoring facts ascertained by an autopsy which indicated organic weaknesses accountable for death.—People v. Vanderhoof, 71 Mich. 158, per Morse, J., and Sherwood, C. J., two others concurring in the result.

¶ 2153. Where in a prosecution for illegal and immoral advertising, a letter sent by defendant to advertising distributors is admitted in evidence, a charge to the jury adverting to such fact is proper.—People v. Kennedy, 176 Mich. 384.

¶ 2154. Where in a manslaughter trial, only a portion of defendant's testimony is contradicted, it is not error for the court to refer to said portion in charging the jury that in judging the credibility of defendant's testimony they are to consider that he is under inducement to tell that story which will most redound to his credit.—People v. Burkhart, 165 Mich. 240.

¶ 2155. The quotation by the court in its charge to the jury in a prosecution for breaking and entering a store, of the testimony of a witness in relation to the location of the premises, held not injurious where there was no dispute, under the testimony, as to the store's not being adjoining to or occupied with a dwelling-house.—People v. Roat, 117 Mich. 578.

§ 443. ——Charging on testimony of particular witnesses.

See also ante ¶ 2149.

Charges on credit to be given to particular classes of witnesses, see ante §§ 436-440.

¶ 2156. Where several witnesses testify to the same facts the court cannot single out a particular witness and instruct the jury what conclusion to come to if they do not believe him.—People v. Simpson, 48 Mich. 474.

¶ 2157. Instructions respecting the credibility of a witness are not matter of right if they involve no question of law. And it is not necessarily an abuse of discretion to direct attention, in the case of one witness, to facts that would detract from his credibility, and not to do so in the case of another.—People v. Wallin, 55 Mich. 497.

¶ 2158. It is not error in a criminal case to refuse specific instructions based upon the testimony of certain witnesses, unless such testimony forms the sole basis upon which conviction can be had. Where, however, t result depends upon the testimony of single witness, it is proper for the cour instruct the jury that, if they disbelieve testimony, or if it does not convince th respondent's guilt beyond a reasonable they should acquit.—People v. Pop Mich. 361.

¶ 2159. A charge which brings salient points of the people's testi ferring by name to the witnesse giving equal consideration to r testimony, is objectionable. If th trasts testimony it must clear do it without prejudice.—Peop 105 Mich. 169.

¶ 2160. Where in a crimin in his instructions refers t defendants, as witnesses, in trial, but fails to comment of an accomplice used as state other than to dire the jury to the anteced nesses, the charge is ploiting one of the a disadvantage of the mas, 161 Mich. 45.

¶ 2161. In a prosecution for highway robbery, it was held reversible error for the trial judge to commend the police officers who made the arrest and who were witnesses in the case.—People v. Leonzo, 181 Mich. 41.

§ 444. Charges on confessions and admissions.

Instructions as to determining voluntariness of confession, see also ante ¶ 1256.

Misnaming statement as a "confession" or "admission," see ante § 428.

¶ 2162. An instruction that the jury cannot consider respondent's admissions unless found beyond a reasonable doubt to have been made freely, without hope of favor or fear of consequence, and that the burden is on the people to show them to have been voluntary, is sufficiently favorable to respondent.—People v. Swetland, 77 Mich. 53.

¶ 2163. Where respondent's testimony tends to show that a statement in the nature of a confession was secured through undue influence exercised over him by the prosecuting attorney, or by inducements held out by the latter, it is error for the court not to instruct the jury, as requested, that a confession so obtained is involuntary.—People v. Clarke, 105 Mich. 169.

¶ 2164. In a criminal action where the basis of conviction is an alleged confession which confession is alleged to have been made under the influence of promises and threats, the jury must be instructed that it is their duty to first determine whether the confession was made voluntarily or under threats and promises, and an instruction which rests the right to convict upon proof of the making of the confession regardless of whether voluntary or under threats or promises is erroneous.—People v. Maxfield, 146 Mich. 103.

¶ 2165. A sentence in a charge on confessions—it is generally agreed that deliberate confessions of guilt are among the most effectual proofs in the law—is not error where embodied in a full and explicit charge on the various factors to be considered in weighing and valuing confessions.—People v. Borgetto, 99 Mich. 336.

¶ 2166. An instruction as to statements made by the accused at the time of his arrest, requiring caution in considering them, is improperly refused in a prosecution for manslaughter, as the jury should fully understand the importance of such statements, and the reasons for them.—People v. McArron, 121 Mich. 1.

¶ 2167. In a prosecution for assault with intent to rob, an instruction that the so-called confession and statement of the accused before a police officer must be most carefully scrutinized and weighed, and that the burden of proof was upon the people to show that the statement was made voluntarily without any influence being exerted by the officer, either by threats or promises of any kind, held improperly refused.—People v. Brockett, 195 Mich. 169.

§ 445. Charges on character and effect of character evidence.

¶ 2168. A defendant in a criminal case is entitled to have a proper requested instruction given to the jury as to the effect to be given by them to testimony tending to show his good character.—People v. Parker, 166 Mich. 587.

¶ 2169. The jury may be charged that it can consider respondent's character as bearing upon his guilt or innocence, and also whether a person with a good character would be less liable to be guilty of crime than a person of bad habits and character.—People v. Harrison, 93 Mich. 594.

¶ 2170. Where a respondent introduces evidence of his good character, which the prosecution does not attempt to rebut, it is prejudicial error for the court to instruct the jury that, while the law permits him to make such proof, the people are prohibited from showing his bad character.—People v. Marks, 90 Mich. 555.

¶ 2171. An instruction limiting the effect of proof of good character to cases where there is an even, or nearly an even, conflict of evidence, as to respondent's guilt, is erroneous.—People v. Van Dam, 107 Mich. 425.

¶ 2172. It is error to instruct the jury in a criminal case that a man's good character is a valuable thing under all circumstances; that it is proper evidence to be considered by the jury in doubtful cases to determine whether or not a man having that good character would commit the offense charged; that it often avails, and should avail, to acquit a man under such circumstances; but that, when there is positive proof of the commission of an offense, good character cannot avail to overthrow that proof.—People v. Jassino, 100 Mich. 536.

¶ 2173. Where, in a prosecution for burglary, the sole disputed question of fact is as to respondent's presence at the scene of the burglary, and there is positive evidence on both sides of the question, it is error to instruct the jury that, if they find that there is positive evidence that respondent did commit the offense, they are to pay no attention to the evidence which he has introduced tending to show his previous good character, such evidence being entitled to consideration in determining the disputed question.—People v. Laird, 102 Mich. 135.

¶ 2174. In a criminal case an instruction that a man's character is a valuable asset under all circumstances, that it is proper evidence to be considered in doubtful cases to determine whether or not a man having that good character would commit such an offense, that it often avails and should avail to acquit a man under such circumstances, that when there is positive proof of the commission of an offense good character cannot avail to overthrow that proof, held to be erroneous.—People v. Humphrey, 194 Mich. 10.

¶ 2175. A qualification of an instruction in a manslaughter case as to the good character of the accused, to the effect that such character may be sufficient to raise a reasonable doubt, and that it must always be considered with the other testimony, held not erroneous, as the original instruction practically directed an acquittal by stating that evidence of good character should be considered sufficient in all cases to raise a doubt of guilt even against positive testimony.—People v. McArron, 121 Mich. 1.

§ 446. Cautions and admonitions to jury.

Particular cautions and admonitions, see post §§ 447-451.
As to agreement and unanimity, see post § 447.
As to personal feelings and judgment unbased on evidence, see post § 448.
Against improper use or consideration of evidence, see post §§ 449, 450.
Against improper argument or remarks by counsel, judge or others, see post § 451.
Against inference from failure to testify, see ante § 432.
Against religious prejudice, see also post ¶ 2225.
Instructions as to weighing and crediting classes of testimony and as to factors affecting credibility, see ante § 433 et seq.
Cautionary and corrective instructions to cure errors in evidence, argument and conduct of trial, see post §§ 562-565.
In civil cases, see Instructions, VI.

¶ 2176. On a criminal prosecution, a charge telling the jury that it was their sworn duty to arrive at a verdict, held prejudicial to the defendant and reversible error.—People v. De Meaux, 194 Mich. 18.

¶ 2177. A charge that the verdict of the jury should be one that would satisfy their consciences that they had done justice to the people and that such a verdict would satisfy the people is not to be regarded as impressing the jury with the idea that they must render a verdict to satisfy the people.—People v. Harper, 83 Mich. 273.

¶ 2178. An instruction on a criminal trial that the questions for the jury to determine "are cold, plain questions of fact," is not erroneous as leading the jury to think that respondent accused of keeping a house of illfame is bad, and should be found guilty on general principles.—People v. Wells, 112 Mich. 648.

¶ 2179. An instruction to a jury to answer the special questions put to them, keeping in mind that the answers should be consistent with their general verdict, though carelessly expressed is not necessarily open to the criticism that it requires the jury to conform the findings to the verdict; it may simply mean that the verdict should be in accord with the facts as found.—People v. Murray, 52 Mich. 288.

¶ 2180. The court was justified in instructing the jury, in a criminal proceeding, that they were bound to follow the instructions given them by the court as to the law, and that if they were to render a verdict in violation of the law or in disregard of the evidence they would be liable to prosecution for perjury, where, counsel for defendants, had stated in their argument, that the jury would be justified if they saw fit in rendering a verdict in defiance of the evidence and the law.—People v. Smith, 145 Mich. 530.

¶ 2181. Where defendants in a criminal case are charged as joint wrongdoers, the jury must be cautioned that the conviction of one is not to be considered in dealing with the other.—People v. Sligh, 48 Mich. 54.

§ 447. ——As to agreement and unanimity.

See also ante ¶ 2176.
Requests for special findings on interrogatories, see post § 470.

¶ 2182. A request for an instruction that each juror must hold his own judgment, uninfluenced or persuaded by others, is properly refused; the law permits jurors to deliberate and to discuss the evidence, and does not contemplate that, upon retiring, the judgment of each juror shall be irrevocabl made up.—People v. Wood, 99 Mich. 620.

¶ 2183. Defendant is entitled to an instr tion that to warrant a verdict of guilty jurors must unanimously find that he mitted the act testified to.—People v. ols, 159 Mich. 355.

¶ 2184. It is not error to refuse to the jury in a criminal case that if deliberations one or more of the jur consulting with the rest, retains a r doubt as to respondent's guilt, the j not find respondent guilty.—Peopl 97 Mich. 489.

¶ 2185. A charge which state the jurors has an individual equal to each and every otl that the testimony must be possible with the innocence because under the law the that he is innocent is r Swift, 172 Mich. 473.

§ 448. ——As to person ment of jurors.

Argumentativeness of jurors' personal fe

¶ 2186. An instruc to act as if the ma' the jurors themselves or their families is improper, since it requires the jury to judge the case as if they or their families were either accusers or accused.—Carver v. People, 39 Mich. 786.

§ 449. ——Against misuse of evidence for improper purpose.

See also ante ¶ 716.
As to using rebuttal evidence for impeachment also, see ante ¶ 2142.
Admissibility for limited or restricted purpose, see ante § 159.
Offer and reception for restricted and proper purposes, see ante § 347.

¶ 2187. In a criminal case, where a witness had testified to statements made in respondent's absence to his wife, it was error to fail to tell the jury that the testimony was competent, not as affirmative evidence against respondent, but as impeaching evidence affecting the credibility of such wife, who had denied making the statements.—People v. Row, 135 Mich. 505.

¶ 2188. Where in a criminal prosecution evidence of the previous relations between the complaining witness and the accused is admitted for the purpose of determining the credibility of such witness, the jury should be properly cautioned and instructed as to the only purpose for which such testimony can be considered by them.—People v. Durham, 170 Mich. 598.

¶ 2189. If, in a prosecution for aiding and abetting the commission of the crime of rape, the court distinctly states that evidence of a former rape by the same party in respondent's home was admitted to show the relations between the parties, no error is committed.—People v. Neely, 171 Mich. 249.

¶ 2190. In a prosecution under Act No. 198, Public Acts 1903, providing that male persons who commit any act of gross indecency with another male person shall be deemed guilty of a felony, an instruction correctly states the manner in which evidence of previous offenses should be considered which charges that the defendant cannot be found guilty unless it is found beyond a reasonable doubt that he committed the specific offense relied on and that the other acts can only be considered as bearing on the relationship between the parties so far as the relationship throws light on the specific offense.—People v. Swift, 172 Mich. 473.

§ 450. ——Against consideration of evidence ruled out or conditionally admitted.

¶ 2191. Where evidence is received which is only to be made pertinent by further evidence, and such further evidence is not given, it is not error to instruct the jury to disregard it.—People v. Pitcher, 15 Mich. 397.

¶ 2192. Respondent was tried for assault with intent to do great bodily harm less than murder. As a defense he set up that he was rendered temporarily insane by learning that the victim of the assault had had improper relations with his wife. In rebuttal, the state was permitted to show that the wife had been on other occasions guilty of like improper conduct, upon the assurance that it would prove defendant's knowledge thereof, which knowledge it failed, though acting in good faith, to establish. The court announced in the presence of the jury that the evidence should be stricken out, but did not call the jury's attention to the point in his charge. Held, no reversible error was committed.—People v. Sharp, 163 Mich. 79.

§ 451. ——Against improper argument or remarks.

¶ 2193. On an appeal from a conviction of burglary a new trial was granted because after the prosecuting attorney had in the course of his argument told the jury that the defendant was entitled to the reasonableness of every doubt, "but gentlemen of the jury, if I had any belief or any doubt that was reasonable in the face of this testimony, as your prosecutor, I would tell you so," the trial court refused a requested instruction that the jury must not consider the belief of the prosecuting attorney, or his impression of the testimony, such refusal consisting in his entirely ignoring the request in his charge.—People v. McGuire, 89 Mich. 64.

§ 452. Additional or repeated instructions after retirement.

¶ 2194. If convinced for any reason that the instructions given to the jury should be amended, corrected or enlarged, the trial judge ought to give additional instructions.—People v. Hoffmann, 142 Mich. 531.

¶ 2195. Where in a prosecution for keeping a saloon open after hours the evidence of guilt is undisputed, it is proper to recall the jury from their deliberation and instruct them to bring in a verdict of guilty.—People v. Worges, 176 Mich. 685.

¶ 2196. Where the court has instructed a jury fully as to the various phases of a homicide case and the jury asks for further instructions upon the matter of provocation and as to the distinction between murder and manslaughter, such instructions may be given without giving instructions as to matters for which no request was made, such as reasonable doubt and self-defense.—People v. Sauerbier, 173 Mich. 521.

§ 453. ——Further charge as to reaching agreement.

Urging or coercing agreement, see post § 466.

¶ 2197. An instruction in a criminal case that the jurors should try to be persuaded, its substance having a tendency to make the jurors feel that they should give way to honest convictions upon the merits and agree with the majority though they had a reasonable doubt of the guilt of an accused, held erroneous, especially where such a jury had been unable to agree for some time and where the evidence was in direct conflict.—People v. Engle, 118 Mich. 287.

¶ 2198. In a prosecution for violation of the liquor law, where the report of sales did not comply with the law, but where the issue was whether the illegal sales were in fact made, and where respondent introduced no testimony, it was error to direct the jury to find a verdict of guilty after they had reported that they could not agree.—People v. Remus, 135 Mich. 629.

¶ 2199. Where the jury came in after being out for a time, instructions by the court that it might be a proper thing for a minority to consider with seriousness whether it might be wrong, and a majority right; that it was probable sometimes a minority is right, and a majority wrong; that no juror should yield his well-grounded conviction or violate his oath; that if, on further consideration, a juror cannot conscientiously yield, he ought not to do so,—are not open to the objection that they call for a majority verdict.—People v. Coulon, 151 Mich. 200.

§ 454. ——Presence of accused or counsel.

Rereading charge in absence of accused as harmless error, see post § 550.

¶ 2200. Where the jury in a criminal case returned into court, and no new instruction was given, and only a simple paragraph of the charge—which was in respondent's favor—was read over, when the jury again retired and returned a verdict of guilty, held, that these proceedings, though in the absence of respondent and his counsel, did not prejudice him.—People v. La Munion, 64 Mich. 709.

¶ 2201. Respondent is entitled to his counsel's presence when the jury is further instructed; but where it is impossible to secure counsel's attendance when the jury needs further direction, there can be no reversal unless such instructions, being taken down by the reporter, contain manifest error.—People v. Robinson, 86 Mich. 415.

§ 455. Instructions on particular offenses.

[Note. For convenience the precedents of instructions on the substantive law of particular crimes are arranged in the following alphabetical sequence. A like arrangement of the substantive law of crimes occurs in Crimes, II, which also may be consulted. Where the decision turned on some principle of the law of instructions susceptible of application to all crimes or to a general class of crimes the case has been compiled in one of the sections which precede, to wit, §§ 402-454.]

Instructions required in absence of any request, see ante § 404 et seq.

On intoxication preventing specific intent, see ante § 409.

On aiding and abetting or participating, see ante § 410.

Sufficiency of the charge taken as a whole, see ante §§ 415, 416.

Instructions in assault and battery cases, see Assault § 11.

In prosecutions under liquor laws, see Intoxicating Liquors, VI, B.

§ 455a. Abandonment.

¶ 2202. Defendant was prosecuted for wife abandonment under Act No. 144, Pub Acts 1907. Held, respondent was entitled to have the jury instructed, in accordance with his request, that "abandonment or desertion under the statute, means to separate from wrongfully, without intention of again resuming marital relations."—People v. Stickle, 156 Mich. 557.

§ 455a. Abduction and enticement.

¶ 2203. Charge in case of abduction given at length and sustained.—People v. Bristol, 23 Mich. 118.

§ 455a. Adultery.

¶ 2204. Upon a prosecution for adultery, an instruction that sexual intercourse must be proved is sufficient, without going into particulars regarding penetration and emission.—People v. Payment, 109 Mich. 553.

§ 455a. Arson and burnings.

¶ 2205. A., indicted for burning a barn, had offered B. certain property if he would burn C.'s barn, and B. said he would do it if D. would consent. A. did not withdraw his offer. Held, sufficient for a charge that to constitute a completed contract, or a "hiring" to burn another's property, it was not necessary that B. should have informed A. of D.'s assent before doing the act.—People v. Taylor, 2 Mich. 250.

§ 455b. Bribery and corruption.

¶ 2206. Though the main charge in a prosecution for attempting to corrupt a prosecuting attorney contrary to Comp. L. 1897, § 11311, presented the question of the corrupt intent, failure to state the necessary connection between the act of offering and the corrupt intent is reversible error where it seems likely that the jury were misled thereby.—People v. Bilitzke, 174 Mich. 329.

§ 455b. Burglary.

¶ 2207. An instruction defining certain acts as breaking is not erroneous as omitting the element of felonious intent, where such intent must be presumed to have been understood from the residue of the charge.—People v. Evans, 150 Mich. 443.

¶ 2208. Where a building which was the object of burglary is spoken of by witnesses as a "shop," and the evidence shows that it was a shop within the common and approved usage of the language, an instruction that the building was a shop within the meaning of the section defining burglary (§ 11547, 3 Comp. L. 1897) is correct.—People v. Wycoff, 150 Mich. 449.

§ 455d. Disorderly houses and persons.

¶ 2209. In a prosecution for keeping a house of ill-fame against a married woman there is no error in refusing to give an instruction that whatever the respondent did as to keeping the house was presumed to have been done under the coercion of her husband, for no such presumption exists.—People v. Wheeler, 142 Mich. 212.

§ 455e. Embezzlement.

¶ 2210. It is error to instruct the jury in a prosecution for embezzlement that the mere retention of money, or its expenditure for the purposes of the firm for which respondent was selling cigars, with authority to make collections, in excess of the amount agreed upon for his expenses, if accompanied by a bare failure to report or accurately account for the money, is sufficient to convict, as it leaves out the important question of criminal intent,—the design to wrong, cheat, or defraud the owner,—which is a necessary element of the crime of embezzlement.—People v. Bauman, 105 Mich. 543.

¶ 2211. Since an act of appropriation or diversion from the uses of the state might be done by the treasurer without at any time being personally present where the money happened to be, it was held not error for the court to charge the jury that it was not necessary that the money should have been in the county where the treasurer's office is required to be kept to warrant their finding that he embezzled it in that county.—People v. McKinney, 10 Mich. 54.

¶ 2212. Where, on an indictment for embezzlement, it appeared the defendant was paid the money he was charged with embezzling on a certain date prior to the date charged in the indictment, and there was evidence that after such payment and before such date he falsely wrote the party to whom the money belonged that the debtor desired further time for payment, and within six months after the date charged in the indictment he forwarded by mail to the party "interest" on the money, a charge that the jury might find a completed embezzlement within six months after the date charged in the indictment was supported by the evidence, and so within How. St. § 9421, allowing proof of embezzlement within such six months.—People v. Gould, 118 Mich. 75.

¶ 2213. In a prosecution for embezzlement of a promissory note framed under Comp. L. 1897, § 11570, an instruction is correct which states that the respondent "fraudulently" intended to convert the note, and it is not necessary to instruct that respondent "feloniously" intended to do so.—People v. Gregg, 170 Mich. 168.

¶ 2214. In a prosecution for embezzlement, a charge that the gist of the crime of embezzlement is the breach of trust, is not erroneous where it is coupled with the instruction that respondent was not guilty unless he converted the funds of his employer to his own use with felonious intent.—People v. Wolff, 157 Mich. 242.

§ 455f. False pretenses and cheats.

¶ 2215. In a prosecution against a member of a township board for obtaining money by presenting false or invalid orders, it was not error to charge that even if the other members of the board made some examination for themselves and did not move in reliance upon what respondent did, still if the real cause was the fraud of respondent, then it was the moving cause, and the false pretenses as to the issuance of the orders had been established.—People v. Luttermoser, 122 Mich. 562.

¶ 2216. A charge (too long to be set out here) held to have sufficiently instructed the jury, in a prosecution for false pretenses by presenting to the state auditor a false claim for fees, that accused's knowledge of the falsity of the fact untruly stated must be found beyond a reasonable doubt.—People v. Hoffmann, 142 Mich. 531.

¶ 2217. Where an information for obtaining money on false pretenses charges several distinct and separate pretenses or representations, instructions to the jury that if they find that any of the pretenses charged were made, and were false and fraudulent, and were part of the moving cause which induced complainant to part with his money, and that he would not have parted with it but for such false pretenses, they might find the defendant guilty, are to be construed as assuming that each distinct pretense set up was a valid ground of charge on which a conviction might rest, if found false and fraudulent and operative in any degree to cause the complainant to part with his money.—People v. Jacobs, 35 Mich. 36.

§ 455f. Forgery, counterfeiting and uttering.

¶ 2218. Upon a charge of uttering a forged instrument, requests for instructions as to who should be deemed the forger are immaterial.—People v. Marion, 29 Mich. 31.

¶ 2219. Under a statute punishing the offense of uttering and publishing forged instruments knowing them to be forged, it is error to charge that the accused should be convicted if it was found that he uttered the instrument having reasonable cause to believe it was forged.—Carver v. People, 39 Mich. 786.

¶ 2220. A woman gave six hundred dollars to defendant to loan for her. Defendant kept the money, signed the name of some person to a note, and retained the note. In a trial for forgery, the court instructed on the question of intent that if defendant kept the note to show to the woman for the purpose of deceiving her and working a fraud on her, he was guilty. Held, the charge was correct.—People v. Campbell, 160 Mich. 108.

¶ 2221. In a forgery case, defendant requested the court to charge on the question of intent that to find defendant guilty it was not enough that there was the purpose to deceive; that there must be the purpose to prejudice the rights of some person. Held, the instruction was properly refused.—People v. Campbell, 160 Mich. 108.

§ 455h. Health law violations.

Instructions in prosecutions for violations of health regulations, see Health § 3.

§ 455h. Homicide and homicidal assaults.

Instructions on substantive law and elements of murder, manslaughter and assaults with intent to kill and with intent to do great bodily harm less than murder, see Homicide §§ 72-81.

Instructions in homicide cases not peculiar to homicide but turning on general law of criminal instructions, see ante §§ 402-454.

§ 455i. Indecency and obscenity.

¶ 2222. In a prosecution for exhibiting representations of deformed human bodies or parts in violation of Act 103, Pub. Acts 1903, sec. 2, How. 2nd Ed., § 5293, a charge is proper which states that there are three elements which go to constitute the offense: first, the exhibition of the representations; second, that they were representations which would be indecent in the case of living persons if exposed as claimed; and third, that they were not so exhibited or used before members of the medical profession or medical classes.—People v. Kennedy, 176 Mich. 15.

§ 455l. Larceny.

General law of instructions not peculiar to larceny, see ante §§ 402-454.

Instructions on substantive law of larceny and matters peculiar to that crime, see Larceny, II.

§ 455m. Medicine, unlawful practice or acts.

¶ 2223. In a prosecution against a practitioner of medicine under Act 164 of 1907 for causing an immoral advertisement to be inserted in a newspaper, a charge to the effect that defendant was guilty if she was the procuring cause of having the advertisement published, and that it was not necessary to convict to find that she personally had it published, held not erroneous.—People v. Kowalski, 179 Mich. 368.

§ 455m. Mutilating or maiming animals.

¶ 2224. In a prosecution under Comp. L. 1897, § 11581, for fastening a strap about the tongue of a horse belonging to another and pulling on it with such force as to maim the animal in an attempt to induce it to work, the court's instruction to the ju express malice toward the owner of th was unnecessary, the only malice r being that which the law might imp the circumstances of the injury, was —People v. Tessmer, 171 Mich. 522.

§ 455o. Obstructing justice; resisting

¶ 2225. On a trial for resisting a who tried to arrest accused for distu Salvation Army meeting, in view of prejudice against such denomination, proper to charge that all religious wo are protected alike, the humblest as those who worship in costly temples. v. Rounds, 67 Mich. 482.

§ 455p. Perjury, subornation and fal ing.

¶ 2226. Where, in a prosecution jury alleged to have been committe trial of a criminal cause, the fact testimony was given as charged, an was false, is undisputed, an instructi jury that the only question for the mination is whether respondent testi estly, in the belief of the truth of t ment, as by him contended, and th jury has a reasonable doubt that he testified to a falsehood, it should sufficiently favorable to the resp People v. German, 110 Mich. 244.

¶ 2227. In a prosecution for p which it was claimed that a witn criminal prosecution for the illega intoxicating liquor made a stateme time of the examination before th which was contradictory to his made at the time of his examinatio purpose of issuance of the warra quested instruction that in consid guilt or innocence of defendant the fore it could convict, must find tha ple had proved beyond a reasona that the matters sworn to were fal and that the defendant knew at th made these statements under oath were false, held improperly refuse v. McClintic, 193 Mich. 589.

¶ 2228. In a criminal prosecutio jury an instruction that the jury find defendant guilty of testifying the testimony of only one witness was necessary that strong corrobo cumstances of such a character fairly turn the scale and overcom of the party charged should be pr improperly refused.—People v. Mc Mich. 589.

§ 455r. Rape and assaults and attem

General law of instructions in crin see ante §§ 402-454.

Instructions on substantive law o on matters peculiar to that Rape.

§ 455s. Seduction.

General law of instructions in criminal cases, see ante §§ 402-454.

Instructions on substantive law of seduction and on matters peculiar to that crime, see Seduction, II.

§ 455t. Threats and blackmail.

¶ 2229. A charge leaving it to the jury whether one accused of threat to accuse of crime had made a threat of "criminal action, or not," is not objectionable as having permitted the jury to convict on proof of a threat to make only a public nonjudicial accusation, where no such question was mooted at the trial and there was no specific request to charge thereon.—People v. Frey, 112 Mich. 251.

¶ 2230. A charge in a prosecution for threats to accuse a crime of perjury—"It would not be necessary that the precise words should be used that he (the respondent) would complaint of him (the complaining witness), or charge him with the commission of perjury. If he used language which clearly imported that intention * * * it would be sufficient"—is proper in connection with a further charge setting out the threat as understood to have been to send complaining witness "to the penitentiary for life," and leaving it to the jury to determine whether or not it was a threat to send him to prison for perjury.—People v. Whittemore, 102 Mich. 519.

§ 455w. Weapons, possession or misuse.

¶ 2231. An instruction that the respondent could not be convicted of a violation of § 11510, Comp. L. 1897, How. Ann. St., 2nd Ed., § 14559, relating to the careless use of firearms, unless the jury were satisfied of his guilt beyond a reasonable doubt, gave him all protection which the law requires.—People v. Kreidler, 180 Mich. 654.

¶ 2232. In a prosecution under Pub. Acts 1911, No. 274, § 1, How. 2nd Ed., § 14760, for carrying a revolver concealed on the person without a permit, an instruction that the law prohibits any person carrying any dangerous weapon concealed on the person without a permit, and that it was immaterial whether or not the revolver was loaded, was correct.—People v. Williamson, 200 Mich. 342.

F. CUSTODY OF JURY, CONDUCT AND DELIBERATIONS.

§ 456. In general; privacy and seclusion.

Custody and conduct during taking of view, see post § 457.

Bailiffs or sheriff in custody of jury, see post § 458.

Intruding on or communicating with jury, see post § 459.

Books, exhibits and substances or articles in jury room, see post §§ 460, 461.

Communications with court after retirement, see post § 462.

Return of jury into court, see post § 463.

Additional instructions or rereading testimony, see post §§ 464, 465.

Urging or coercing verdict, see post § 466.

Discharging jury, see post § 467.

Conduct of jury in rendering directed verdict, see ante § 400.

Allowing jury to disperse and reassemble to admit of continuance, see also ante ¶ 610.

Arrest of trial to investigate qualifications of juror, see ante § 332, ¶ 1533.

Necessity of objection below to save question of impropriety for review, see post § 522.

Inadmissibility of juror's affidavits in support of motion for new trial, see post § 482.

Practice in civil cases, see Trial, VIII.

Right to jury trial, qualifications and selection of jurors, swearing and impaneling jury and challenges, see Jury.

Induction of new juror after jury is sworn as error vitiating verdict reached, see also Crimes ¶ 107.

¶ 2233. New trial need not be granted on the ground that the jury were not kept in a private place until they rendered their verdict, if in fact they agreed upon it before leaving their room.—People v. Francis, 52 Mich. 575.

¶ 2234. It is within the discretion of the court to direct that the jury in a criminal case remain in the custody of an officer during the trial.—People v. Considine, 105 Mich. 149.

¶ 2235. A conviction will not be reversed because the jury were permitted to see one of respondent's witnesses confined in jail, in the absence of a showing of prejudice.—People v. Beverly, 108 Mich. 509.

¶ 2236. There is no constitutional or common-law right of an accused person to have jurors kept together until a verdict is returned into court except in capital cases.—People v. Duffek, 163 Mich. 196.

¶ 2237. Comp. L. 1897, §§ 11960-11962, requiring jurors to remain together until their verdict is rendered into court, applies only to murder cases.—People v. Duffek, 163 Mich. 196.

§ 457. Custody and conduct during taking of view.

¶ 2238. In a prosecution for murder it is not error to permit or direct a view by the jury of the premises where the crime was committed, but it must be properly guarded from separation or outside communications.—People v. Hull, 86 Mich. 449.

¶ 2239. A jury while going to and returning from the premises where the alleged offense was committed should be kept under an officer's supervision so that no person can communicate with them, or express any opinion, or give any direction in their hearing.—People v. Hull, 86 Mich. 449.

¶ 2240. Permitting jury to separate while viewing premises, in respondent's absence, held error.—People v. Hull, 86 Mich. 449.

¶ 2241. Where a juror, while viewing the premises where the alleged offense was committed, drank liquor procured at a bar on such premises owned by the principal witness for prosecution, such misconduct was held, in connection with other errors, to require a new trial.—People v. Hull, 86 Mich. 449.

§ 458. Competency and disqualification of bailiff or sheriff.

Unsworn officer as assistant, see also post ¶ 2245.

Provisions as to custody of juries and for oath of officer in charge, see Comp. L. 1915, § 15833.

¶ 2242. A sheriff entered the complaint upon which respondent was tried for manslaughter, and he testified in behalf of the people; he also had the jury in charge during their deliberations. Held, that there was no impropriety in these facts.—People v. Coughlin, 65 Mich. 704.

¶ 2243. The fact that the custodian was a witness for the people will not work a reversal.—People v. Beverly, 108 Mich. 509.

§ 459. Intruding on or communicating with jury.

Precautions during view, see ante § 457.

Discharge for tampering with jury, see post § 467.

Drinking intoxicants while on view, see also ante ¶ 2241.

¶ 2244. A verdict in a criminal case may be set aside and a new trial granted if the officer who attended the jury remained in the jury room during their deliberations.—People v. Knapp, 42 Mich. 267.

¶ 2245. A new trial will not be granted in a criminal case on the ground that the officer in charge of the jury was assisted by another officer, who was not sworn, and who said nothing more than "Good morning" to them, where it does not appear that respondent was prejudiced, and where any presumption of injury is overcome by affidavits.—People v. Beverly, 108 Mich. 509.

¶ 2246. A new trial should be granted where the prosecuting attorney has furnished liquor and cigars during the trial to members of the jury, and where there have been conversations by different persons in the presence of the jury tending to influence the latter.—People v. Montague, 71 Mich. 447.

§ 460. Books, papers and exhibits in jury room.

Tasting or sampling of liquor in evidence, see post § 461.

Reading from documents in argume see ante § 389.

Provisions for receipt of letters papers during trial after ins same by judge, see Comp. § 15834.

¶ 2247. The question of permitti and documents in a case to be ta jury room for consideration of t one of discretion with the trial c ple v. La Londe, 197 Mich. 76.

¶ 2248. Upon a trial for rape it allow the evidence taken at the p examination and reduced to writin original written complaint of the ing witness, to be sent to the jury r testimony in criminal cases must b open court, and in the presence cused.—People v. Dowdigan, 67 Mi

¶ 2249. It is not error for the c the jury have retired to consult of dict, to permit them to have th defining the offense in their room, the same is objected to by defend sel.—Findley v. People, 1 Mich. 23

¶ 2250. Where defendant is on keeping a house resorted to for p prostitution, it is not reversible e low an exhibit, consisting of a li phone numbers with the given women who visited the house, to to the jury room, though such prac commended.—People v. Tibbetts, 628.

§ 461. Tasting or testing substanc dence.

Drinking intoxicants while on vie ing deliberations, see also an 2246.

¶ 2251. In a prosecution for local option law by selling ferme where a bottle of the cider sold dence and a witness who put the c bottle gave evidence tending to sh was in about the same conditio sold by the respondent, it was no the court to tell the jury that taste the cider if they wanted to, not showing that they did so, an tasting of it by the jury would no error.—People v. Kinney, 124 Mic § 462. Communications with court ment.

Showing of improprieties in sup tion for new trial, see post §

¶ 2252. Where the court in a c receives a communication from th it has retired, and makes no st to the nature of the communicati not answer it, it is within the co tion to withhold the contents t counsel.—People v. Sauerbier, 17

§ 463. Return of jury into court.

Return into court with verdict and rendition of verdict, see post IX, G.

Additional instructions after retirement, see ante §§ 452-454.

Form, matter and substance of instructions additional to original charge, see ante §§ 452, 453.

¶ 2253. The jury in a criminal case has a right to be brought before the court at any time it desires.—People v. La Munion, 64 Mich. 709.

§ 464. ——Rereading testimony.

Objection for first time on review to rereading testimony, see post ¶ 2455.

¶ 2254. The compliance with the request of the jury after it retired in a prosecution for illegal sale of liquor, for information as to certain testimony which had been produced before them, was a matter of discretion.—People v. Shuler, 136 Mich. 161.

§ 465. ——Presence of accused or counsel.

Necessity of presence of accused at giving of additional instructions, see ante § 454.

¶ 2255. In a manslaughter case the jury retired and some hours later were brought in because of word sent by the foreman to the judge, and a colloquy occurred between the judge, the foreman, and the jurors. The respondent was not present, but his counsel was, and gave no intimation to the court until the jury were sent back that his client was not present. Held, nothing in the situation called for a reversal of a verdict for manslaughter.—People v. Burkhart, 165 Mich. 240.

¶ 2256. In a criminal prosecution for larceny upon the jury's return to the box and their request, the testimony of a witness may be read to them in the absence of the defendant where his counsel is present and consents to its being so read.—People v. Carey, 125 Mich. 535.

§ 466. Urging or coercing verdict.

Charges on agreeing and additional charges after failure to agree, see ante §§ 447, 453.

Instructions as to unanimity and reconciliation of individual views, see ante § 447.

Urging and coercing jury in trial before justice, see post § 655.

¶ 2257. A trial court has no power to compel a verdict of guilty in a felony case, when some of the jurors are not willing to render such a verdict.—People v. Warren, 122 Mich. 504.

§ 467. Discharging jury.

Reviewableness of discretion as to discharging jury, see post § 631.

Discharge as former jeopardy, see Crimes § 25.

¶ 2258. Under Const. art. VI, § 29, a jury impaneled, accepted, and sworn cannot be discharged except for inability to agree, or for some other overruling necessity, which courts hold to constitute a mistrial.—People v. Parker, 145 Mich. 488.

¶ 2259. The court cannot arbitrarily discharge a jury upon rumors of improper conduct, or of attempts to corrupt one or more of them.—People v. Parker, 145 Mich. 488.

¶ 2260. The court may discharge a jury without prejudice to a new trial, when it appears, upon an examination, that a juror was disqualified when sworn and accepted, or by subsequent conduct has become disqualified; and such conduct on the part of a juror is overruling necessity essential to constitute a mistrial.—People v. Parker, 145 Mich. 488.

¶ 2261. It is the duty of the court in a criminal action, after the case has been submitted, not to discharge the jury so long as there is any reasonable probability that they can agree; though the court is justified in accepting their statement that they cannot agree as proper evidence in determining the question.—People v. Parker, 145 Mich. 488.

¶ 2262. It is justice to a juror that he have a hearing before a jury is summarily discharged because of misconduct charged against him.—People v. Parker, 145 Mich. 488.

¶ 2262a. In a trial for an assault with intent to do great bodily harm less than murder, the trial judge learned that a juror, after the state's and a part of the defendant's evidence was in, stated in a saloon that when he had his "mind made up, it will take more than they have got now to change it." Held, the court properly dismissed the jury and continued the case until the next term.—People v. Sharp, 163 Mich. 79.

G. VERDICT AND RENDITION AND RECEPTION.

§ 468. In general.

Announcement of verdict and polling of the jury, see post § 469.

Contents and findings of the verdict, see post §§ 470-472.

Responsiveness and conformity to several counts, see post § 472.

Construction and effect, see post § 473.

Amendment and correction, see post § 474.

Duty to follow instructions in reaching verdict, see ante § 396.

Instructions as to verdict to be reached and agreement on same, see ante § 446 et seq.

Urging or coercing verdict, see ante § 466.

Grounds for directing verdict, see ante § 399.

Mode of rendition and entry when verdict is directed, see ante § 400.

Rendition in absence of accused out on bail, see ante § 328.

The sentence and judgment on the verdict, see post XI.
Verdicts in homicide cases, see Homicide § 82.
General verdict on merits as essential part of constitutional jury trial, see Constitutional Law § 209.
Verdicts in trials with jury before justice, see post § 655.
General law of verdicts in civil cases, see Verdicts.

¶ 2263. The verdict of a jury in a criminal case should be and must be each individual juror's own verdict and the result of his own conviction.—People v. De Meaux, 194 Mich. 18.

¶ 2264. Opinions and conclusions of individual jurors cannot be inquired into.—People v. Knapp, 42 Mich. 267.

§ 469. Announcement and polling of jury.

Amendment of sealed verdict on polling jury, see also post ¶ 2289.

¶ 2265. It is error to refuse to permit the jury to be polled.—People v. Remus, 135 Mich. 629.

¶ 2266. The fact that a prisoner on trial has consented to a sealed verdict does not deprive him of the right to poll the jury on their bringing in such verdict.—Stewart v. People, 23 Mich. 63.

¶ 2267. The response of three jurors, on the jury being polled and asked if "this is your verdict," "it is now," does not show that it was not their voluntary verdict; though it appears that after deliberating the jury was called into court and asked if it was a question of fact on which they were differing, that on replying that it was they were sent back with further instructions to decide on the evidence alone and to be honest and fair with each other and endeavor to reconcile their views under the law and the evidence, weighing each side carefully, and with a further definition of a term or phrase in the case, that thereafter they were again recalled and one additional request proffered by accused was given and one refused, that thereafter a third request from accused for additional instructions was filed but not given, that later on their own request they were called into court and the instructions repeated and others given, and that again they were recalled at their own request and furnished with some papers in evidence and other evidence read to them and were instructed on a question asked by one of them, and that shortly afterward they returned the verdict.—People v. Hoffman, 142 Mich. 531.

¶ 2268. Whether or not a jury has separated before returning a verdict in court, it is the right of any juror to assent publicly to the verdict which is announced.—People v. Duffek, 163 Mich. 196.

§ 470. Specifications and findings.

Sufficiency of specification, see also post ¶ 2287.
Recommendations to mercy, see post § 471.
Specification of degree of homicide, see Homicide § 82.
Findings and specifications in civil cases, see Verdicts, II, III.
Provision for specifying finding of insanity when acquittal is on that ground, see Comp. L. 1915, § 15826.

¶ 2269. Under the constitution the jury in a criminal case has the right to render a general verdict.—People v. Marion, 29 Mich. 31; Underwood v. People, 32 Mich. 1.

¶ 2270. The statute providing for putting special questions to the jury does not apply to trials in criminal cases.—People v. Marion, 29 Mich. 31.

¶ 2271. Comp. L. 1897, § 10237, authorizing answers to special questions to control a general verdict, does not apply to criminal cases.—People v. Tessmer, 171 Mich. 522.

¶ 2272. A general verdict of guilty in a prosecution under Comp. L. 1897, § 11581, should not be reversed on special findings by the jury in answer to questions, that the injury was not inflicted because of malice toward the owner of the horse involved and that it was inflicted in anger on the refusal of the horse to do its work.—People v. Tessmer, 171 Mich. 522.

¶ 2273. A jury in a murder case may pass specially, if it choose, upon the sanity of the accused, but cannot be compelled to do more than render a general verdict on the merits, that is, "guilty," or "not guilty."—Underwood v. People, 32 Mich. 1.

¶ 2274. A man was prosecuted for neglect to support his wife, and a general verdict of guilty was rendered. His counsel submitted a request for a special finding as to whether the prisoner was then, and for about four months last past had been, well and sufficiently supporting his wife according to his means, and each juror answered, "Yes." Held, that under the special finding there should have been no judgment on the general verdict, and that the respondent should be discharged.—People v. Piper, 50 Mich. 390.

¶ 2275. As any limitation upon the jury's right in a criminal case to find a general verdict is against the policy of the law, it is not error for the court to refuse respondent's request that a special question be submitted to the jury.—People v. Roat, 117 Mich. 578.

¶ 2276. The court can add nothing to a special finding or infer any facts which the jury have not inferred and set forth. The court can only draw the legal conclusions from the facts found.—People v. Wells, 8 Mich. 104.

§ 471. Recommendations to mercy.

As indication of impropriety in reaching verdict, see post ¶ 2316.

¶ 2277. A verdict of guilty with recommendation to mercy does not violate public policy or entitle respondent to a new trial.—People v. Long, 44 Mich. 296.

§ 472. Several counts and included offenses.

Instructions cautioning jury as to joint and several verdicts, see ante ¶ 2181.

General verdict on indictment with one good and some bad counts, see ante § 55.

Construction to sustain verdict as one for lesser crime, see post § 473.

Proofs of greater or lesser crimes as variance from allegations, see ante §§ 80, 81.

Conviction for lesser offense when greater would have been sustainable, as favorable error, see post § 536.

Verdict for lesser offense as cure of errors pertaining only to greater offense, see post § 567.

¶ 2278. A jury may acquit of the principal charge and find the prisoner guilty of an offense of lesser grade if contained within it.—People v. McDonald, 9 Mich. 150.

¶ 2279. In this state, on an indictment for an offense which includes a lesser, the defendant, though acquitted of the higher, may be convicted of the lesser, and this though the one is a felony and the other is a misdemeanor.—Hanna v. People, 19 Mich. 316.

¶ 2280. It is no objection to a conviction for the lesser offense that the information was based upon a preliminary examination by a justice for the higher.—Hanna v. People, 19 Mich. 316.

¶ 2281. Where the complaint and warrant upon which a preliminary examination is had, and the information filed, fail to charge an offense sufficiently, but contain a full description of a lesser one of the same nature, they will sustain a conviction of the lesser offense.—People v. Calvin, 60 Mich. 113.

¶ 2282. How. St. § 9546, which provides that an indictment (information) for larceny may contain a count for obtaining property by false pretenses, or for embezzlement, or for receiving, having in possession, or aiding in concealing the same property, knowing it to have been stolen, and that the jury may convict of either offense, clearly requires the verdict to point out the crime of which the defendants are found guilty, and will not bear the construction that a conviction can be had on all the charges at once by a general verdict.—In re Franklin, 77 Mich. 615.

¶ 2283. A general verdict of guilty of an indictment for forging and uttering a mortgage, its acknowledgment, and the bond carries conviction of the forgery as well as the uttering, they being parts of one transaction.—Van Sickle v. People, 29 Mich. 61.

¶ 2284. A general verdict is bad if it may have been based on either of two inconsistent distinct counts, one of which was bad because not covered by the complaint and was therefore improperly contained in the information.—People v. Aikin, 66 Mich. 460.

¶ 2285. Where an information contained two counts, one setting forth an assault with intent to kill and murder, and the second with intent to do great bodily harm, a verdict finding the defendant guilty under the second count was proper, where the jury concluded that there was no intent to kill, but there was intent to do great bodily harm, and such a verdict will not be set aside, where the evidence was conflicting, the defendant himself admitting the use of the pitchfork, but denying the threat to kill. The jury was not compelled to accept either account of the affray in all its details.—People v. Cahoon, 88 Mich. 458, distinguishing People v. Partridge, 86 Mich. 243, where the respondent was charged with an offense from the commission of which the intent is presumed, and in a second count with a lesser offense, without an intention to commit the crime charged in the first count.

§ 473. Construction and effect of verdict.

See also ante ¶ 2276.

General verdict on charge in two or more counts of which one is bad, see ante § 472.

Cure of errors by verdict, see post § 567.

Presumptions on review, in favor of verdict, see post § 624.

Conclusiveness of verdict as finding of fact on the reviewing court, see post § 633.

Effect of verdict for offense within inferior jurisdiction, see ante ¶ 495.

Exclusion of affidavits of jurors to impeach verdict on motion for new trial, see post § 482.

Conformity of sentence to verdict, see post § 490.

Variance of proofs from allegations, see ante § 77 et seq.

Construction of verdict as part of the record on error or other review, see post § 612 et seq.

Conviction or acquittal of one as bar to other degree, see Crimes § 21.

¶ 2286. Where the information in a prosecution for assault and battery is insufficient in that it does not charge a battery a verdict finding the defendant guilty of the offense of assault and battery should be sustained as a conviction for an assault.—People v. Andre, 194 Mich. 524.

¶ 2287. The signed verdict of a jury read: "Assault with intent to do great bodily harm less than the crime of murder." Held, the language sufficiently expressed a verdict of guilty.—People v. Duffek, 163 Mich. 196.

¶ 2288. A respondent charged in the first count of an information with the offense of carnally knowing and abusing a female child under fourteen years of age, and in the second count with having committed an indecent assault upon her without committing or intending to commit the crime of rape, was convicted upon the second count. Held, that he was thereby acquitted of the first charge, and that, as the evidence showed the offense, if any, to have been what was charged in the first count, the conviction was erroneous.—People v. Partridge, 86 Mich. 243.

§ 474. Amendment and correction of verdict.

Propriety of exceptions before sentence to review conviction, see post ¶ 2695.
In civil cases, see Verdicts, V.

¶ 2289. In a prosecution for assault with intent to do great bodily harm less than the crime of murder, the court instructed the jury that if they reached a verdict during the night they might sign and seal the same, give it to the bailiff in charge of them, and separate for the night, returning into court in the morning. At 3 a. m. March 10th the jury signed and sealed the following verdict: "Assault with intent to do great bodily harm less than the crime of murder." At the opening of court one juror was ill and only eleven appeared. At the opening of court the next morning, March 11th, all the jurors appeared. The foreman stated that they had made an error in the form of the verdict. The sealed verdict was given back to them and they inserted the words: "We, the undersigned jurors, find the respondent, Andrew Duffek, guilty of." They returned this verdict into court and the jury was polled. Held no right of defendant was violated.—People v. Duffek, 163 Mich. 196.

X. NEW TRIAL AND MOTION IN ARREST.

§ 475. New trial in general.

Grounds and discretion of court to allow or deny, see post §§ 476-479.
Time for motion, see post § 480.
Motion and showing, see post §§ 481, 482.
Amendment and correction of sentence and judgment in trial court, see post § 498.
Motion for new trial as mode of saving questions for review, see post § 530.
Reversal and remand for new trial, see post § 636 et seq.
Retrial after review and remand, see post XVII.
Discharge and grant of new trial as jeopardy barring further prosecution, see Crimes §§ 25, 26.
New trials in civil cases, see New Trial.
Provisions for granting of new trials by trial court, see Comp. L. 1915, § 15836 et seq.

§ 476. Grounds and propriety of new trial.

Improper custody of jury as ground, see also ante ¶ 2233.
Misconduct in taking view, see also ante ¶ 2241.
Interference with jury during deliberations, see also ante § 459.
Conviction for felony on proof making out lower grade only, see also ante ¶ 1993.
Affidavits and showing of the grounds and objections, see post § 482.
Introduction of additional grounds into motion by amendment, see post § 481.
Propriety of remand on error for new trial, see post § 636 et seq.
Statutory grounds for new trial, see Comp. L. 1915, § 15836.

¶ 2290. As at common law new trial in cases of felony was not granted, and as the statutes allow it to be had in two ways only, (1) on exceptions sustained by the supreme court, and (2) by the trial court at the term at which trial was had or at the next term, leave to apply for a new trial on the ground of newly-discovered evidence cannot be granted where a new trial has been refused on exceptions and after such next term has elapsed.—People v. Marble, 38 Mich. 309.

¶ 2291. New trials are purely statutory, and courts have no right to annul the statute. At the common-law there was no new trial.—Frazer v. Judge of Recorder's Court, 112 Mich. 469.

¶ 2292. Where one has been convicted of selling liquors without paying tax, there is no abuse of judicial discretion in denying a new trial urged on the ground that the local option law had been adopted before the trial but after the commission of the alleged offense.—People v. Wade, 101 Mich. 89.

¶ 2293. A new trial will not be granted in a criminal case for the disqualification of a juror who did not disclose on his examination that on the day following a murd he called on an errand of his own at t house where occurred an assault by the ceased on the respondent preceding the ing, where the fact of the killing was cussed, but not the details, without the knowing that the respondent had be cused thereof, and without his expres opinion as to the former's guilt or in —People v. Ponsford, 181 Mich. 65

¶ 2294. In a criminal prosecutior ing, storing and possessing i liquor in other than his own res that a motion for a new trial or of the absence of witnesses wh the testimony of a witness fo tion that such absent witness ing beer in the residence mother was properly denie the trial, no request was m no effort was put forth to tendance, and it was not were not in the county c at the time, and it did no or all of these witnesse oath, deny the testimo the prosecution.—Peo Mich. 475.

§ 477. ——Verdict against evidence or unsupported by evidence.

Sufficiency of evidence on review, see post § 685.

¶ 2295. A motion for a new trial was properly denied where the case was to be determined on disputed facts, and there was evidence to support the verdict rendered.—People v. Mulvaney, 171 Mich. 272.

§ 478. ——Newly discovered evidence.

For absence of witnesses who would rebut or contradict state's witnesses, see ante ¶ 2294.

Time for application, see post § 480, ante ¶ 2290.

Showing on motion for new trial, see post § 482.

¶ 2296. Where a father has been convicted of murdering his two-year-old child by a succession of whippings, the main convicting testimony being that of a woman hired to care for the child, and who, according to such testimony, had herself never whipped it, it is error to refuse to grant a motion for a new trial based on newly-discovered evidence that she had in fact beaten the child several times in respondent's absence, and, on one occasion, two days before its death.—People v. Hamilton, 76 Mich. 212.

¶ 2297. In a prosecution for murder upon the defense of insanity, it is not error to refuse to grant a motion for a new trial upon the ground that the only surviving sister of the respondent had become insane since the trial, where it was shown on trial that the respondent's brother and her father were insane.—People v. Quimby, 134 Mich. 625.

¶ 2298. A denial of a motion for new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence, after conviction for murder, will not be reversed on appeal where the newly discovered evidence consists solely of an affidavit of an accomplice, upon whose testimony the conviction was based, that his testimony at the trial was false and giving a different version of the affair.—People v. Nunn, 120 Mich. 530.

¶ 2299. The refusal of a motion for a new trial of a murder case, based on the ground of newly-discovered evidence, is not an abuse of discretion, when based on affidavits made more than two months after the killing, which cast doubt on the identity of the respondent as the person who did the killing, where he was positively identified at the trial, and doubt was cast upon some of the affidavits supporting the motion.—People v. Cona, 180 Mich. 641.

§ 479. ——Discretion to allow or deny.

See also ante ¶ 2299.

Reviewableness of discretion in passing on motion, see post § 632.

¶ 2300. A new trial is not a matter of discretion merely in a criminal case where one of the jurors was an alien and the prisoner was not aware of that fact until after verdict.—Hill v. People, 16 Mich. 351.

§ 480. Time for motion and action thereon.

See also ante ¶ 2290.

Time for grant of new trial by trial court, see Comp. L. 1915, § 15836.

¶ 2301. The provisions of Comp. L. 1897, § 11963, How. St., 2nd Ed., § 15134, that a motion for a new trial in a criminal case may be granted at the same or the next terms after conviction, is mandatory, and a motion made thereafter comes too late.—Nichols v. Houghton Circuit Judge, 185 Mich. 654.

¶ 2302. Circuit Court Rule 32, allowing two days after verdict within which to move in arrest of judgment, does not apply to criminal cases.—Cole v. People, 37 Mich. 544.

¶ 2303. The limitation by How St. § 9576, empowering the trial court to grant a new trial in a criminal cause at the same term at which the trial is held, or at the next term thereafter, cannot be avoided by the entry of orders extending the time in which the motion for new trial may be made. So held, at least, where the orders did not show that the prosecuting attorney consented to the proposed extension, and where no reason appeared why the motion might not have been made and disposed of within the statutory period.—Frazer v. Judge of Recorder's Court, 112 Mich. 469.

¶ 2304. A motion for a new trial made on the first day of the second term following that at which a criminal trial was held is too late, although the application was made on a holiday and the term, although set to begin on such holiday, did not in fact begin until the following day.—People v. Ayres, 195 Mich. 274.

¶ 2305. A motion for a new trial may be denied where made more than a year after the case was tried, as How. St. § 9576 contemplates that applications for a new trial should be made speedily, especially where there is no abuse of discretion in refusing the new trial.—People v. Swartz, 118 Mich. 292.

¶ 2306. The representatives of the people cannot waive the want of jurisdiction of the court to entertain a motion for a new trial in a criminal case after the expiration of the term following conviction.—Nichols v. Houghton Circuit Judge, 185 Mich. 654.

§ 481. Motion and amendments.

Time for the motion and for decision thereon, see ante § 480.

Necessity of presence of accused at hearing of motion, see ante § 328, ¶ 1519.

Affidavits and showing on the motion, see post § 482.

Necessity of exceptions to denial of motion to save question for review, see post § 526.
Motion and order thereon as proper matter for bill of exceptions, see post § 592.
Order granting or denying new trial as question reviewable by certification, see post § 575.
Propriety of review of new trial motion on exceptions before sentence, see post § 603.
Necessity and sufficiency of record showing of new trial motion and order for review, see post § 597.

¶ 2307. A ground for a new trial in a criminal case not germane to those stated in the original motion cannot be introduced by amendment after the expiration of the time limited by Comp. L. 1897, § 11963, How. St., 2nd Ed., § 15134, for the granting of a new trial.—Nichols v. Houghton Circuit Judge, 185 Mich. 654.

§ 482. Affidavits and showing for new trial.

¶ 2308. Affidavits of jurors cannot be used to impeach their verdict. So held where several of the jurors made affidavits that a verdict of guilty was rendered in a criminal case for the sole purpose of saving the county the costs of the prosecution, the complainant not having given security for costs.—People v. Stimer, 82 Mich. 17.

¶ 2309. Affidavits of jurors in a criminal case cannot be received to impeach their verdict.—People v. Swift, 172 Mich. 473.

¶ 2310. In a prosecution for arson, two jurors made affidavits to the effect that the jury considered the failure of respondent to take the stand as a witness in her own behalf, and that they consented to the verdict of conviction largely for that reason. Held, the court properly refused to consider these affidavits in hearing a motion for a new trial.—People v. Stewart, 163 Mich. 1.

¶ 2311. Where the affidavits, offered to show that the jury was spied on through the keyhole and coerced by instructions evoked by what was overheard of their deliberations, cast no doubt on the verdict for the causes assigned, it is not error to refuse to hear them and to strike them out; even if under other conditions such affidavits might be used for that purpose.—People v. Hoffmann, 142 Mich. 531.

¶ 2312. Affidavits of jurors, that while they were deliberating the officer in charge looked through the keyhole of the door and spied on them and listened, and that additional instructions given by the court without their request were on the subject they were discussing when spied on, that the fact of the spying was commented on in the jury room by jurors, are not taken out of the rule that such affidavits will not be received in impeachment of their verdict and brought under the rule that affidavits may be received to show that there was interference with their deliberations; where counter affidavits of officers denied the spying and stated that the discussion in the jury room became so animated that they could be heard 30 feet or more beyond the room, and where on the court's being advised of it the officers were instructed to clear the outer room of all but the officers, and where no officer entered the room.—People v. Hoffmann, 142 Mich. 531.

¶ 2313. It was not error to deny a motion for a new trial on the ground that by his examination of the voir dire and by affidavits it appeared that a juror was partial and had not answered honestly the questions on the voir dire, where there were counter affidavits, making an issue for the trial court.—People v. Hoffmann, 142 Mich. 531.

¶ 2314. It is not error in a criminal case to refuse a new trial moved for upon counsel's affidavit that the jury, while considering their verdict, read a newspaper article relating to the trial, and that counsel had been informed by some of the jurors that the article influenced jurors in arriving at their verdict; it not appearing how counsel knew the jurors had the paper, and what he was told by jurors as to the effect reading it had upon the verdict being hearsay and incompetent.—People v. Martin, 116 Mich. 446.

¶ 2315. Affidavits held not to present grounds for granting a new trial in a criminal case, because of newly-discovered evidence.—People v. Frontera, 186 Mich. 343.

¶ 2316. A delay of seven hours in agreeing to a verdict is not uncommon, nor are recommendations to mercy, especially with youn offenders, and they do not indicate that th verdict was obtained by improper means. People v. Lang, 44 Mich. 296.

§ 483. Arrest of judgment.

Defect in information warranting arr judgment, see also ante ¶ 201.
Grammatical errors in indictment, s ante ¶ 323.
Time for motion, see also ante ¶ 23
Propriety of review of motion in exceptions before sentence, § 603, ¶ 2694.

¶ 2317. A motion in arrest has always been proper practice case.—People v. Rathbun, 10

¶ 2317a. The rule allowing verdict within which to mo judgment does not apply to Cole v. People, 37 Mich. 5

¶ 2318. Where, on the tion of a respondent of t his counsel entered a r arresting and staying ju for the reason that t jurisdiction to try the fense charged, as appeared by the records and files in the cause, but without further specifying the grounds of the motion, which the counsel refused to do on the request of the court, the refusal of said order, and the immediate sentence of the respondent, cannot be assigned as error.—People v. Wright, 89 Mich. 70.

XI. SENTENCE AND JUDGMENT, AND EXECUTION THEREOF.

§ 484. In general; power to sentence and limitations.

Time and stage of trial for sentence, see post § 485.
Examination of accused and inquiries as to measure of punishment, see post §§ 486, 487.
Requisites and validity of sentence, see post §§ 489-493.
Cumulative, concurrent and successive sentences, see post § 495.
Construction and effect of fixed and indeterminate sentences, see post §§ 496, 497.
Suspension of sentence, see post § 494.
Correction, amendment and resentence, see post § 498.
Execution of sentence and stay, see post § 499.
Record of sentence and warrant of commitment, see post XII.
Costs and fees, see post XIII.
Amount and kind of punishment as limitation on justices' jurisdiction, see ante § 91.
The verdict and rendition of same into court, see ante IX, G.
Place for imprisonment and power of courts to sentence to particular prisons and houses of correction, see Crimes §§ 28, 29.
Measure and limits of imprisonment term, see Crimes § 30 et seq.
Augmented punishment for second and subsequent offenses, see Crimes § 31.
Statutory authority to judges to pass sentences, see Comp. L. 1915, § 15856.

¶ 2319. Whether another than the trial judge has power in any case to give sentence where sentence has been omitted, quære.—Weaver v. People, 33 Mich. 296.

¶ 2320. How. St. § 9603 vests a discretion in the court to fine or imprison a respondent under § 2275 (for an offense against the liquor law), and the court's refusal, on the ground of want of power, to exercise such discretion, is error.—People v. Minter, 59 Mich. 557.

¶ 2321. Under the Local Option Law, Comp. L. 1897, § 5427, as amended by Pub. Acts 1899, No. 183, and Pub. Acts 1909, No. 107, How. 2nd Ed., § 5031, providing that any person who shall violate such act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and, upon conviction, may be sentenced to pay a fine and to imprisonment in the county jail, in the discretion of the court, discretionary power is given to the court to impose punishment either by fine or imprisonment and it is not error not to exercise the same.—People v. Harrison, 194 Mich. 363.

¶ 2322. The circuit cannot cannot impose a heavier penalty for an offense found on the trial to be properly cognizable by a justice of the peace than a justice could.—Brown v. People, 39 Mich. 57; Nelson v. People, 38 Mich. 618.

¶ 2323. On a conviction in the circuit court of a crime triable by a justice no greater punishment can be inflicted than could be imposed by the justice.—People v. Harrington, 75 Mich. 112.

§ 485. Time and stage of trial for sentence.

Pendency of motion in arrest, see ante § 483.
Nunc pro tunc amendment, see post § 498.

¶ 2324. The circuit court has the right to pass sentence in criminal cases without waiting for the settlement of any exceptions which may have been taken.—People v. Becker, 48 Mich. 43.

¶ 2325. A prisoner on bail awaiting sentence is on the same footing, so far as imprisonment goes, as if he were in confinement without bail; and if his sentence is delayed from time to time without his request until the full period of imprisonment to which he could be sentenced has expired, the court then loses jurisdiction to pronounce it and he is entitled to his liberty.—People v. Kennedy, 58 Mich. 372.

¶ 2326. The right to pronounce sentence, if once lost, is not revived by the request of the convict's counsel for further delay to enable him to prepare a case for review.—People v. Kennedy, 58 Mich. 372.

¶ 2327. A prisoner was released under suspended sentence and on his own recognizance in a nominal sum without sureties. No further proceedings were ever taken until more than a year after the expiration of his recognizance, when the judge of another circuit, sitting temporarily, passed sentence upon him. Held, that the prosecution had been practically abandoned, and that the sentence was unauthorized.—Weaver v. People, 33 Mich. 296.

§ 486. Examination of accused before sentence.

Showing for mitigation of punishment, see post § 487.
Examination on plea of guilty to ascertain voluntariness, see also ante § 114.
Record of examination on plea of guilty, see post §§ 504, 505.
Unsworn statement by accused to jury on trial, see ante § 336.
Asking prisoner for reasons against sentence as a sufficient examination as to voluntariness of his plea of guilty, see ante ¶ 579.

¶ 2328. It is not essential that the examination of the accused on passing sentence after his plea of guilty be conducted away from the presence of other persons, if it sufficiently appears to the judge that the plea was voluntary.—People v. Lewis, 51 Mich. 172, correcting People v. Stickney, 50 Mich. 99, in so far as it asserts that others must be excluded.

¶ 2329. A prisoner who had pleaded guilty was asked by the judge if he understood that if the plea was entered he would not be entitled to trial but would be subject to sentence. He said he so understood and wished the plea to be entered. He was sentenced the same day, the judge asking him if he had any reason to urge why judgment should not be passed against him, to which he answered that he knew of none. The judge made no other examination as to whether the prisoner's plea was voluntary, and this was in the presence of the prosecuting attorney and other officers of the court, but he made return that he was satisfied at the time from the prisoner's statements that the plea was voluntary. Held sufficient.—People v. Lewis, 51 Mich. 172, overruling as an inadvertent dictum, that examination in the presence of the officers of the court and other persons is not sufficient, uttered in People v. Stickney, 50 Mich. 99.

§ 487. Sbowing to ascertain proper measure of punishment.

Averments in indictment as to previous convictions, see ante § 35.
Record of investigation and approval of sentence to reformatory or house of correction, see post § 501.
Examination of docket by justice on conviction for vagrancy to ascertain and fix punishment as for first or second offense, see post § 656.
Intoxication as mitigation, see Crimes § 16.

¶ 2330. The facts showing satisfaction to mitigate punishment and that it is respondent's first conviction should be made to appear to the trial court before sentence, and otherwise respondent cannot avail himself after sentence of their existence in order to obtain a reversal.—People v. Hubbard, 86 Mich. 440.

¶ 2331. Under How. St. § 9143, a receiver of stolen property, if he would avoid imprisonment in the state prison, must show in the trial court before sentence that it is his first offense, and that he has made satisfaction to the injured party.—People v. Smith, 94 Mich. 644.

§ 488. Motion for and judgment of discharge.

Discharge of jury for inability to agree, see ante § 467.
Discharge of accused on vacating judgment where further prosecution is barred, see ante ¶ 613.
Propriety of judgment that prisoner be discharged on affirming or reversing sentence, see post § 639.
Dismissal or nolle prosequi, see ante § 127.
Record of dismissal or nolle, see post § 505.
Hearing on behalf of juror charged with misconduct, see also ante ¶ 2262.
Discharge of jury, quashal or nolle as bar to further prosecution, see Crimes § 25.

¶ 2332. There being no hard and fast rule as to how a pardon should be brought to the attention of the court before the passing of sentence, a formal motion to discharge the defendant upon the ground of his having been pardoned, was sufficient to require the court to discharge him, where the pardon itself had been left with the court some days before the hearing of such motion.—Spafford v. Benzie Circuit Judge, 136 Mich. 25.

§ 489. Requisites and validity of sentence.

Conformity to indictment and verdict, see post § 490.
On pleas of guilty, see post § 491.
Sentence on one or more counts, see post § 492.
Indeterminate sentences, see post § 493.
Cumulative, concurrent and successive sentences, see post § 495.
Suspension of sentence, see post § 494.
Record of sentence and judgment, see post XII.
Taxation of costs as part of sentence, se post § 509.
Proper judgment on error or exceptions, s post § 636 et seq.
Too small sentence as error favorable to cused, see post § 536.
Finality and sufficiency of judgment to port review, see post § 574.
Reviewableness of discretion in fixing p ment, see post § 630.
Sentence on trial before justice of court, see post §§ 656-658.
Proper punishments and measure th Crimes, I, E.
Validity of laws under constituti visions as to fines and punish Constitutional Law §§ 202-20
Nature of imprisonment as matt lative change or control, see Sentence and judgment in homic also Homicide § 83.
Necessity of finding of degree sustain sentence, see Hor
General provisions as to judg tences, see Comp. L. 19
Plea of guilt, confession, or tial basis for convicti 1915, § 15624.
Provisions as to punishme fine and imprisonmer Comp. L. 1915, §§ 15

¶ 2333. A sentence ir court under Laws 188 took effect October 3 committed on Septem —People v. Dane, 81

¶ 2334. A sentence lighter than it might have have been is not erroneous so long as it does not involve a kind of punishment different from that allowed by law.—People v. Rouse, 72 Mich. 59.

¶ 2335. A sentence to confinement in the county jail for thirty days and to pay a fine of $200 within that time, and in default of payment of the fine within the thirty days respondent to be confined in the county jail for one year, is bad.—Donnoly v. People, 38 Mich. 756.

¶ 2336. A judgment imposing a fine of $200 and $50 costs, and committing respondent until payment, not exceeding ninety days, cannot be attacked collaterally because of the costs where there is nothing to show they were more than were in fact incurred in the prosecution.—In re Johnson, 104 Mich. 343.

§ 490. ——Conformity to indictment and verdict.

Sufficiency of indictment to charge lesser offenses as included in crime, see ante § 80.
Amendment and correction of verdicts, see ante § 474.
Construction of sentence, see post § 496.
Sentence for second offense of larceny, see also post ¶ 2393.

¶ 2337. A sentence as for the crime of horse stealing to six years' confinement in the state prison, on conviction under an information for "grand larceny" which included other property besides the horse, is not authorized.—Boody v. People, 43 Mich. 34.

¶ 2338. An information for larceny, charging two former convictions and one former sentence, cannot sustain a sentence for more than five years, the maximum punishment for simple larceny. A longer sentence cannot be imposed under the second clause of How. St. § 9141, because the three convictions are not at the same term; nor under the first clause of that section, because this would necessitate rejecting an averment as to one of the convictions, and would thus make respondent liable for a greater penalty than that imposed by the section under which the information was drawn; nor under sec. 9424, as the information was expressed to be for a third offense; nor under sec. 9425, as the information averred only one former sentence.—People v. Ellsworth, 68 Mich. 496.

§ 491. ——On plea of guilty.

Record of examination, see post § 504.

¶ 2339. It is not necessary in a judgment on plea of guilty on information for receiving stolen goods to aver that prosecution is for first offense, or that the stealing was not simple larceny, or that respondent has not made restitution or satisfaction.—People v. Caulkins, 67 Mich. 488.

§ 492. ——Conviction under two or more counts.

Verdict on the several counts, see ante § 472.
Construction of sentence to apply it to count, see post § 496.
Validity of sentence based on one good count in indictment with bad counts, see also ante § 55.

¶ 2340. Where a respondent accused of stealing a horse has pleaded guilty to an information in two counts, one under the general statute for larceny and one under How. St. § 9180, punishing horse-stealing, a sentence as for the second offense of horse-stealing may be imposed.—People v. Morris, 80 Mich. 634.

§ 493. ——Indeterminate sentences.

Construction and effect of the sentence, see post § 497.
Amendment or correction as to terms, see post § 498.
Provisions of Indeterminate Sentence Law, see Comp. L. 1915, § 15859 et seq.

¶ 2341. A sentence "for the maximum and minimum period of five years" is not a compliance with Pub. Acts 1904, No. 136, § 1, requiring indeterminate sentences.—In re Cummins, 138 Mich. 39.

¶ 2342. The words "provided by law" contained in Pub. Acts 1903, No. 136, § 1, in the sentence "the term of imprisonment of any person so convicted and sentenced shall not exceed the maximum term provided by law for the crime for which the person was convicted and sentenced," mean fixed by sentence rather than provided by statute; and do not require the court to fix a maximum sentence for larceny where the statute expressly fixes the maximum sentence.—In re Campbell, 138 Mich. 597.

¶ 2343. A judgment under the indeterminate sentence act need not fix the maximum penalty, that being provided by statute, but the court must fix a minimum penalty. —In re Downs, 147 Mich. 477.

¶ 2344. A sentence of fifteen years upon a conviction of rape is a sentence for a maximum term beyond which the person could not be legally detained in prison, and such a sentence complies with Pub. Acts 1903, No. 136, § 1, providing that in all cases where the maximum sentence, in the discretion of the court, may be for life or any number of years, the court shall fix the maximum sentence, the punishment for rape being imprisonment for life or any number of years under Comp. L. 1897, § 11489.—In re Manaca, 146 Mich. 697.

¶ 2345. The words "cases where the maximum sentence in the discretion of the court may be for life or any number of years" in Pub. Acts 1903, No. 136, § 1, providing for indeterminate sentences do not require the court to fix a maximum sentence for larceny as the maximum sentence is fixed at five years by Comp. L. 1897, § 11553.—In re Campbell, 138 Mich. 597.

¶ 2346. Under the Indeterminate Sentence Law (Pub. Acts 1905, Act No. 184, §§ 1, 2, 3), a prisoner convicted of an assault with intent to kill, the penalty for which may be imprisonment for life, is entitled to have a decision of the judge upon the maximum sentence, and a minimum fixed which shall not exceed half of it.—In re Richards, 150 Mich. 421.

¶ 2347. Under Pub. Acts 1905, Act No. 184, § 3, where the judge fixes a maximum penalty at seven years and a minimum penalty at six, the sentence is valid as a sentence only for a minimum term of three and one-half years and a maximum of seven.—In re Richards, 150 Mich. 421.

¶ 2348. Where a life sentence is imposed under the Indeterminate Sentence Law, it is not necessary to fix a minimum sentence.—People v. Dumas, 161 Mich. 45.

¶ 2349. Under the Indeterminate Sentence Law, Act No. 184, Pub. Acts 1905, the court in passing sentence must fix the maximum sentence for the period named in the statute for the offense charged, and where he names a shorter term, such portion of the term is a nullity and the term prescribed by statute stands as the maximum period, and it is immaterial that the short sentence has never been corrected and that the prisoner has treated it as valid and served out the period.—In re Evans, 173 Mich. 25.

¶ 2350. The Indeterminate Sentence Law (Pub. Acts 1905, No. 184), § 3 of which provides that in cases where the maximum sentence may be life or any number of years, the court shall fix both the minimum and maximum, does not conclude the court on a conviction of murder in the second degree under Comp. L. 1897, § 11471, fixing the punishment for murder of that degree as life or any term of years in the discretion of the court, from sentencing the person so convicted to life imprisonment without fixing a minimum sentence, but in such case the court may either sentence for life or a term of years, in which latter case only need it fix a maximum and minimum.—People v. Vitali, 156 Mich. 370.

§ 494. Suspension of sentence or parts thereof.

Stay of sentence, see post § 499.
Remission of forfeiture of bail, see Arrest § 52.
Uniform Probation Law, see Comp. L. 1915, chap. 65.

¶ 2351. A judge is not authorized to exercise the pardoning power by indefinitely suspending the sentence of a convicted criminal; and it is improper to present to him a petition for such suspension.—People v. Brown, 54 Mich. 15.

¶ 2352. Suspending sentence for a reasonable time is discretionary with the judge if good cause is shown for doing so; but an indefinite suspension lasting for about nine months is unreasonable though it is not necessarily ground for setting aside the conviction.—People v. Reilly, 53 Mich. 260.

¶ 2353. A trial judge can suspend sentence for a reasonable time for a proper purpose, such as to enable defendant to move for a new trial or take exceptions to the supreme court, or to enable the judge to inform himself as to what sentence he ought to inflict.—People v. Kennedy, 58 Mich. 372.

¶ 2354. A partial sentence cannot be imposed and the convict ordered to present himself at a future day to receive the remainder; the judgment or sentence when pronounced must embrace the whole measure of the punishment.—People v. Felker, 61 Mich. 110.

¶ 2355. Act No. 144, Pub. Acts 1907, provided that in the case of a person convicted of wife abandonment the court might suspend sentence where the defendant gives sufficient bond that he will support her. Held, the clause was not void as giving pardoning power to the courts.—People v. Stickle, 156 Mich. 557.

§ 495. Cumulative, concurrent and successive sentences.

¶ 2356. A prisoner was committed to prison for two terms of three months each for larceny. The form of the second sentence made it run from a date specified, unless the first sentence should sooner expire or the convict should otherwise be entitled to release, in which case it was to run for three months from that time. Held, that the sentence was too uncertain and indefinite as to the time of its commencement to be upheld in the absence of statute.—In re Bloom, 53 Mich. 597.

¶ 2357. Inasmuch as cumulative sentences are inoperative when it is uncertain at what time the prisoner's first sentence is to expire, where a prisoner convicted of an assault with intent to murder is sentenced to imprisonment for twelve years in the state prison (the authorities whereof are empowered to determine how much reduction upon sentence shall be allowed for good conduct), and at the same term of court is sentenced for larceny to a term of three years from and after the expiration of the first sentence; the second sentence is void.—In re Lamphere's Case, 61 Mich. 105.

¶ 2358. No crime is punishable by our law except by virtue of some statutory provision; and it seems that cumulative sentences, at least for felonies, are not authorized by law.—In re Lamphere's Case, 61 Mich. 105.

¶ 2359. Under Pub. Acts 1887, No. 132, § 3, a convict imprisoned in the state prison, convicted of a crime committed therein, may be sentenced to imprisonment to begin at the expiration of the term he was serving when such crime was committed, although the date of the expiration of such term is uncertain. —People v. Huntley, 112 Mich. 569.

§ 496. Construction and effect of sentence.

Requisites and validity of sentences, see ante §§ 489-493.

Alternative sentences, see also ante ¶¶ 2335, 2336.

Concurrence or succession of sentences, see also ante ¶ 2356.

Former conviction or acquittal as bar or as jeopardy, see Crimes, I, D.

Effect of invalidity of sentence to leave other good conviction standing as prior "conviction" and so sustaining augmented punishment on second conviction, see Crimes ¶ 156.

Effect of judgment on plea of guilty as conclusion of fact of guilt in civil action, see Former Adjudication ¶ 72.

Habeas corpus to discharge prisoner from illegal sentence and imprisonment, see Habeas Corpus.

¶ 2360. A sentence to imprisonment, whether to a designated prison or not, is supposed to be subject to and on the conditions imposed by statute at the time relating to the prisons and government of the inmates.—Rich v. Chamberlain, 104 Mich. 436.

¶ 2361. Error cannot be assigned upon the sentence of a respondent, upon conviction of murder in the first degree, to solitary confinement in the state prison for his natural life, the word "natural" being surplusage and not a restriction or limitation upon the word "life" affecting the meaning implied by the statute.—People v. Wright, 89 Mich. 70.

¶ 2362. A judgment upon a conviction for assault with intent to commit murder, for which the penalty is commitment for life or for a term of years, committing the convicted person to prison at hard labor for a period of not less than ten years, and recommending that the proper penalty would be for life may be sustained as providing for a maximum sentence of ten years, with a minimum sentence of five years under Act No. 184, Pub. Acts 1905, §§ 2, 3, How. St., 2nd Ed., §§ 15178, 15179.—In re Hamilton, 188 Mich. 499.

¶ 2363. A sentence to imprisonment for more than five years, upon a general verdict of guilty under an information for horse-stealing, contrary to How. St. § 9180, and for the larceny of the same horse under the general statute, and for receiving, and aiding in concealing, the stolen property, is void for the excess, since the finding of guilty under such an information, if valid, can only be made valid by confining it to the least offense charged.—In re Franklin, 77 Mich. 615.

¶ 2364. Where a justice orders respondent to pay a fine of fifty dollars and costs, the judgment impliedly calls for immediate payment.—People v. Parsons, 163 Mich. 329.

§ 497. ——Indeterminate terms and sentences.

See also ante ¶ 2362, post ¶ 2376.

Requisites of the sentence, see ante § 493.

¶ 2365. A sentence imposed for the maximum and minimum of five years under Comp. L. 1897, § 11556, imposed after, for a crime committed before, the Indeterminate Sentence Law (Pub. Acts 1903, No. 136), became operative, is valid, and will be considered as though such law had never been enacted; and the prisoner will not be deprived of his rights under Pub. Acts 1893, No. 118, and Pub. Acts 1895, No. 218, previously enacted. —In re Marion, 140 Mich. 219.

¶ 2366. The old statute requiring a determinate sentence was entirely repealed by the Indeterminate Sentence Law Pub. Acts 1903, No. 136, so as to make a sentence for larceny for a minimum of one year without any maximum sentence merely a minimum sentence with a maximum fixed by Comp. L. 1897, § 11553 relating to larceny.—In re Campbell, 138 Mich. 597.

¶ 2367. Under Pub. Acts 1903, No. 136, § 2, providing that upon sentence for a definite period instead of an indeterminate sentence it shall not be void but the prisoner shall be entitled to the benefits and subject to the liabilities of the act and that where no minimum is fixed it shall be one year, where not otherwise provided; one found guilty of larceny and sentenced for the "maximum and minimum period of five years" is to be treated as sentenced for a maximum of five years and a minimum of one year.—In re Cummins, 138 Mich. 39.

¶ 2368. A sentence under the Indeterminate Sentence Law of 1903 (Pub. Acts 1903, No. 136) is a mere nullity wherein it essays to fix a maximum term in addition to the minimum under a law which fixes the maximum (larceny); and accordingly the sentence is to be read as if only the minimum was fixed and the maximum left to the law.—In re Duff, 141 Mich. 623.

¶ 2369. Where the respondent was convicted on December 13, 1904, of forgery of a deed committed January 13, 1903, a sentence of "not less than eight nor more than ten years" under the Indeterminate Sentence Law of 1903 (Pub. Acts 1903, No. 136), is valid for the minimum term.—People v. Fisher, 144 Mich. 570.

¶ 2370. Under Pub. Acts 1903, No. 136, § 1, providing for indeterminate sentences, a sentence of not less than one year for larceny without fixing a maximum sentence does not entitle the respondent to a discharge upon the expiration of the minimum term, as Comp. L. 1897, § 11553, fixes the maximum for larceny at five years without any discretion in the court.—In re Campbell, 138 Mich. 597.

¶ 2371. One sentenced under an indeterminate sentence of not less than one year on a conviction of attempted larceny is not entitled to his discharge at the expiration of a year, inasmuch as the maximum penalty fixed by Comp. L. 1897, § 11784 is three years, and applies to supply the court's failure to fix it.—In re Downs, 147 Mich. 477.

§ 498. Correction, amendment and resentence.

Propriety of rendition of proper judgment in supreme court on error without remand for new trial, see post § 636.

Propriety of correction of judgment without new trial, see post § 637.

Reversal of excessive sentence as to excess only, see post § 637.

Remand on error for resentence, see post § 638.

Time for motion for new trial, see ante § 480.

Amendment of judgment to state degree of murder, see Homicide § 83.

Amendment of civil judgments, see Judgments, V.

¶ 2372. The imposition by the circuit court of a void sentence does not exclude authority to impose a valid one, where nothing has been done by way of executing the first sentence.—People v. Dane, 81 Mich. 36.

¶ 2373. Where the trial court has imposed an illegal sentence, it has power to substitute for it a legal sentence, notwithstanding the illegal sentence has been partly executed.—In re Vitali, 153 Mich. 514.

¶ 2374. Where a prisoner has been remanded to jail under a sentence valid in part, and void in part, he cannot be discharged on habeas corpus for want of a valid written commitment, but an order nunc pro tunc may be entered, correcting the sentence, and a proper commitment may be issued.—In re Richards, 150 Mich. 421.

¶ 2375. The trial court cannot set aside a valid sentence, and impose a new and different one after defendant has been remanded to jail to await execution of the sentence.—In re Richards, 150 Mich. 421.

¶ 2376. Upon conviction of petitioner of an assault with intent to kill, he was sentenced by the Recorder's Court of Detroit "to the Detroit House of Correction for a term of not less than six years, and the court recommends that the maximum term be not more than seven years over and including this date," and at a later date during the same term of court, and before the issuance of a commitment, the order was set aside and a sentence imposed directing that petitioner "be committed to the Detroit House of Correction for a term of not less than six years, and the maximum sentence be not more than twelve years." Held, that although the first sentence did not conform to the law because the maximum recommended was less than double the minimum fixed, the recommendation should be treated as a fixing of the maximum period, and that it could not be treated as surplusage, and therefore a nullity, justifying another sentence.—In re Richards, 150 Mich. 421.

¶ 2377. A convict sentenced to a life term for murder in the second degree is not entitled to discharge because the sentence does not comply with the provisions of Pub. Acts 1905, Act No. 184, § 3, relating to indeterminate sentences, but a legal sentence may be substituted for the illegal sentence.—In re Vitali, 153 Mich. 514.

¶ 2378. Where the record discloses a valid conviction and an irregular sentence for violation of the Local Option Law and defendant has been released on bail pending proceedings and nothing has been done by way of executing the first offense, the irregular sentence may be set aside and a new sentence imposed.—People v. Harrison, 194 Mich. 363.

¶ 2379. A court cannot after sentencing a minor to the reform school, on the ground of mistake in the convict's age, treat the sentence as void and proceed to give a new one.—In re Mason, 8 Mich. 70.

¶ 2380. After pronouncing sentence remanding the prisoner to jail to await execution, the court cannot vacate the tence and impose a heavier one for temped escape.—People v. Meservey, 7 223; People v. Kelley, 79 Mich. 320.

§ 499. Execution of sentence and sta

Stay or supersedeas pending revie § 585.

Time for sentence and proper st see ante § 485.

Effect of writ of error or excep and procedure for stay o post § 585.

Time for payment of fine, ¶ 2364.

Alternative provision for c fine is paid, see also ant

Warrant or mittimus for post § 506.

Propriety of imprisonme of fine, see Crimes §

Provisions as to execut warrant for executi § 15849 et seq.

¶ 2381. The autho cution of a sentence, is purely statutory, and its exercise must depend on compliance with the requirements of the statute.—People v. Fritch, 161 Mich. 111.

XII. RECORD OR MINUTES AND COMMITMENT.

§ 500. Requisites and sufficiency in general.

For sentences to reformatories and houses of correction, see post § 501.
For augmented punishment of habitual or second offenders, see post § 502.
For sentence after breach of parole, see post § 503.
As to showing on plea of guilty, see post § 504.
Of dismissal or nolle, see post § 505.
Warrant or mittimus, see post § 506.
Duplicates and copies of informations or indictments on file, see ante § 19.
Necessity of showing arraignment and pleas, see also ante ¶ 546.
Entry of plea nunc pro tunc, see ante ¶ 553.
Record for review on error or exceptions before sentence, see post XVI, C.
Matters proper for record and for bill of exceptions, see post § 592.
Matters presumable on the record, see post § 617 et seq.
Presumptions on the record as to presence of judge pursuant to adjournment, see ante ¶ 1524.
Record as documentary proof in other prosecution, see ante § 287.
Docketing case in misdemeanor trial before justice, see post § 650.
Sufficiency of indictment and record to show imprisonment for crime on prosecution for escape, see Crimes ¶ 309.
Record under Indeterminate Sentence Law, see Comp. L. 1915, § 15862.

¶ 2382. The failure of the record in a criminal case to locate the venue of a crime within the jurisdiction of the trial court is ground for reversal.—People v. Ayres, 162 Mich. 241.

¶ 2383. Where the record clearly shows the respondent's presence on the first day, and when the jury were impaneled and sworn and when the judgment was rendered it is sufficient to sustain a judgment of conviction. —People v. Fisher, 144 Mich. 570.

¶ 2384. A recital in a criminal record that the defendant upon arraignment stood mute clearly imports that he was requested to plead and declined to do so.—People v. Fisher, 144 Mich. 570.

¶ 2385. A journal entry of a certain day, reciting that the court "thereupon adjourned" with a subsequent addition of the words "until May 1st, 1902" and the signature of the judge, is conclusive of the facts, so it seems; although a clerk's certificate attached to the transcript states that on April 29th the entry was made of the added words without any intervening entry, and that they were added at the instance of another judge, called in, who requested the original judge to sign the record, if correct, and, if not correct, to correct and sign it.—People v. McGarry, 136 Mich. 316.

¶ 2386. A finding and commitment reciting a conviction of the common law crime of robbery describes no crime known to the law of Michigan inasmuch as the common law crime has been superseded by the statutory crime of robbery.—People v. Powler, 142 Mich. 225.

¶ 2387. Where, under an information for aiding a prisoner to escape from jail, laid under How. St. § 9245, the record of the sentence recited that respondent had been convicted of "jail-breaking," which How. St. § 9661, describes as the escape of any prisoner from jail, etc., the court on habeas corpus held that such "breaking" could be committed from the outside as well as from the inside, and sustained the sentence; and that it is not the duty of the courts to discharge prisoners, fairly and legally convicted, because of technical errors in the record of sentence or in the commitments.—In re Case of Parks, 81 Mich. 240.

¶ 2388. Misnomer of the offense in the entry of the order for judgment does not affect the conviction when the record shows what the offense really was.—Cole v. People, 37 Mich. 544.

¶ 2389. The mere misnomer of the place of confinement is no reason for invalidating the sentence and discharging a prisoner where there is no doubt about the place meant.—In re Burger, 39 Mich. 203.

§ 501. For sentences to houses of correction and reformatories.

¶ 2390. Under the statute which requires courts sentencing offenders to the reform school to certify to the keeper thereof the age of the person sentenced as nearly as can be ascertained by testimony, a court which has certified the age of a convict to be under sixteen years must be conclusively presumed, in all collateral inquiries, to have performed its duty correctly.—In re Mason, 8 Mich. 70.

¶ 2391. The age of a defendant sentenced to said house of correction should appear from the record of the case.—Edwards v. People, 39 Mich. 760.

¶ 2392. Comp. L. 1897, § 2197, requiring as a condition to commitment to the industrial school for boys, that the circuit judge review the proceedings and testimony, and that he indorse his approval or disapproval, was not complied with by an indorsement stating that the judge approved of the sentence as set forth in the warrant of commitment, without stating that he examined the testimony and proceedings.—In re Collins, 135 Mich. 91.

§ 502. For augmented punishment of habitual or second offenders.

¶ 2393. An information for larceny, charging two former convictions and one former sentence, cannot sustain a sentence for more than five years, the maximum punishment for simple larceny. A longer sentence cannot be imposed under the second clause of How. St. § 9141, because the three convictions are not at the same term; nor under the first clause of that section, because this would necessitate rejecting an averment as to one of the convictions, and would thus make respondent liable for a greater penalty than that imposed by the section under which the information was drawn; nor under section 9424, as the information was expressed to be for a third offense; nor under section 9425, as the information averred only one former sentence.—People v. Ellsworth, 68 Mich. 496.

§ 503. For sentence after breach of parole.

¶ 2394. Petitioner was convicted, and paroled under the Probation Law, Act No. 91, Pub. Acts 1903, as amended by Act No. 32, Pub. Acts 1905. He left the state with the consent of one of the judges of the recorder's court in which he was tried, and went into Missouri. He was brought back and sentenced, the judgment entry reciting that he had violated his parole, but not stating that the violation alleged consisted in his leaving the state. Held, there was nothing in this course to render the sentence invalid.—In re Satt, 164 Mich. 472.

§ 504. Showing as to examination on plea of guilty.

Sufficiency of record showing of examination before accepting plea of guilty, see post § 595, ante ¶¶ 576, 580.

¶ 2395. The judgment cannot be sustained on a record showing a plea of guilty and a sentence on the same day without anything to support an inference that any examination as to voluntariness was had.—Clark v. People, 44 Mich. 308.

¶ 2396. The record should show that accused pleading guilty was examined to ascertain whether the plea was voluntary or not, or at least should show such an interval between plea and sentence as to warrant the presumption that examination was made.—Edwards v. People, 39 Mich. 760.

¶ 2397. The validity of a sentence pronounced upon a plea of guilty does not depend upon its appearing of record in what manner the judge may have proceeded to satisfy himself that the prisoner acted freely in pleading guilty.—People v. Ferguson, 48 Mich. 41.

¶ 2398. Where the record shows that respondent, before pleading guilty, had consultation with counsel chosen by himself, and that the circuit judge had a private examination of the accused before sentence, it must be presumed that in accordance with statute the court was satisfied that the plea was voluntary.—People v. Ellsworth, 68 Mich. 496.

§ 505. Record of dismissal or nolle.

¶ 2399. The journal entry of an order in a criminal proceeding that "the prosecuting attorney filing reasons therefor," "he have leave not to file an information," is conclusive that he has filed reasons, and that the prosecution is at an end. He does not need leave to file reasons.—Spalding v. Lowe, 56 Mich. 366.

§ 506. Warrant of commitment; mittimus.

Warrant for commitment by justice or minor court, see post § 659.
Recommitment of prisoner out on bail on affirmance and remand, see post § 644.
Proceedings to require security to keep the peace, see post § 660.
Commitment for trial on preliminary hearing, see Arrest, VII.
Commitment of criminal insane, see Insane Persons, II.
Remand on habeas corpus after correction of commitment, see Habeas Corpus, ¶ 59.
Due process in laws for commitment of persons found insane and acquitted on the ground of crime, see Constitutional La § 150.
Detention under invalid commitment false imprisonment, see False Impri ment § 16.

¶ 2400. A commitment in a crimina reciting that a certain person was co of having on a specified date at a city and county then and there ac disorderly manner on one of th streets of said city, contrary to th an ordinance of the city, entitl dinance relating to disorderly p against the peace and dignity o of the State, does not recite a any offense known to law, an void upon its face.—Larson Mich. 492.

XIII. COSTS ANI

§ 507. In general; who lial

Taxation and retaxation,
Fees and amounts allow
Giving of security by c in jurisdiction of ju
Time for payment of fi tion of sentence,
Costs in trials before
Fees and expenses Counties §§ 31-3
Fees of counsel a county charge

What county liable for costs in case tried on change of venue, see Counties ¶ 129.
Power of county of origin to audit claim of county of trial for expenses of case tried on change of venue, see Counties § 44.
Necessity of effort to collect costs before resorting to claim against county, see Counties ¶ 136.
Application of moneys from fines to library purposes, see Counties § 38.
Costs in action on bail bond, see Arrest § 57.
Liability of prosecuting complainant for costs, see Comp. L. 1915, § 15907.
Nonliability of acquitted prisoner at liberty on recognizance, see Comp. L. 1915, § 15827.
Provision as to payment of expense of trial of persons for malfeasance in state office, see Comp. L. 1915, § 15916.

¶ 2401. Comp. L. 1897, § 12014, providing for a summary disposition of costs in criminal cases does not make the complaining party liable for costs where no security has been given. While the statute says he shall be liable when he has given security it does not say he shall be liable without security.—Board of Supervisors of Missaukee County v. Van Liew, 148 Mich. 520.

¶ 2402. Where a person acting in good faith makes a true statement of all the facts to the prosecuting attorney, who advises and authorizes criminal prosecution he is not liable to the county for costs incurred in a criminal prosecution begun by him but which is later nolle prossed.—Board of Supervisors of Missaukee County v. Van Liew, 148 Mich. 520.

¶ 2403. Where the city of Detroit was the real party in interest to a prosecution brought in the name of the people, costs, upon quashing the conviction, were awarded against the city.—Horn v. People, 26 Mich. 221.

¶ 2404. Copy of testimony need not be furnished by respondent in a criminal case as a prerequisite to settlement of bill.—Pope v. Judge of Recorder's Court, 107 Mich. 25.

§ 508. Fees and amounts allowable.

Counsel fees for taking writ of error as county charge, see Counties § 34.
Compensation and fees allowable to sheriffs, see Sheriffs, III.
Provisions fixing and regulating fees and costs in criminal cases, see Comp. L. 1915, chap. 274.
Provisions as to fee to attorney appointed by court, see Comp. L. 1915, § 15912.

¶ 2405. Prosecutions under the prohibitory liquor law and under the law prohibiting the sale of adulterated liquors were criminal prosecutions such as to charge the county with the sheriff's fees for services therein.—People ex rel. Mixer v. Manistee County Sup'rs, 26 Mich. 422.

¶ 2406. Under the statute (Comp. L. 1871, § 2141) providing for a fee not exceeding ten dollars to the attorney prosecuting a violation of the liquor law, he had no absolute right to that sum but only to such sum or less as should be fixed by the proper authorities, to wit, the supervisors.—People ex rel. Videto v. Jackson County Sup'rs, 31 Mich. 116.

¶ 2407. The attorney fee provided for by the prohibitory liquor law (Comp. L. 1871, § 2141) to be paid by the county where the prosecution is had in any township except that in which the prosecuting attorney resides, not being fixed in amount by the statute otherwise than by prescribing a maximum, is left as a discretionary allowance against the county, and the supervisors have exclusive authority under Const. art. X. § 10, to fix the amount of the fee. The statute contemplates that it is somehow to be fixed in advance, as by resolution establishing a rule and fixing amounts.—People ex rel. Videto v. Jackson County Sup'rs., 31 Mich. 116.

¶ 2408. The jurors' per diem in a criminal case cannot be added to the fine and costs.—People v. Kennedy, 58 Mich. 372.

§ 509. Taxation and retaxation.

¶ 2409. Costs against respondents in criminal cases need not be taxed by the clerk, but are preferably and commonly determined summarily by the court and included in the sentence.—In re Johnson, 104 Mich. 343.

¶ 2410. Const. art. X, § 10, which vests in the boards of supervisors, or in Wayne County, in the board of auditors, the exclusive power not subject to appeal, to fix compensation for services for, and to adjust all claims against, their respective counties, requires that such board, not the court, shall determine the "enlarged compensation" to be recovered by an attorney who, having been appointed to defend one accused of crime follows the case into the supreme court: (Overruling Springer v. Wayne Auditors, 99 Mich. 513, which held that the supreme, not the trial, court, fixed such compensation).—People v. Hanifan, 99 Mich. 516.

¶ 2411. Pub. Acts 1893, No. 96 providing that an attorney appointed to conduct the defense in a criminal case shall be entitled to receive from the county treasurer, on the certificate of the presiding judge, such an amount as the judge shall, in his discretion, deem reasonable compensation for the services performed, not exceeding the sum of $50, is not repugnant to Const. art. X. § 10, which vests in the board of supervisors the exclusive power to prescribe and fix the compensation for all services rendered for and to adjust all claims against the county (distinguishing People v. Hanifan, 99 Mich. 516); and it is the duty of the trial judge to fix the amount of such compensation, and to certify the same, in accordance with the statute.—Withey v. Osceola Circuit Judge, 108 Mich. 168.

XIV. SAVING QUESTIONS FOR REVIEW; EXCEPTIONS.

[Note. The practice in civil cases for saving questions for review is treated in a separate topic, Saving Questions for Review, which may afford instructive analogies and precedents, but because of the stricter procedure in criminal cases and certain differences in practice detailed cross-references to matters of similarity are omitted.]

§ 510. In general; necessity of objection or question below.

Necessity with respect to particular questions, see post §§ 511-522.
Sufficiency of objections, see post § 523.
Necessity and sufficiency of ruling on objection, see post § 524.
Necessity of renewing objections, see post § 525.
Necessity and office of exceptions and sufficiency of the exception, see post §§ 526-528.
Construction and meaning of exceptions, see post § 529.
Questions preservable by motion for new trial, see post § 530.
Waiver of errors and exceptions to rulings, see post §§ 531, 532.
Assigning the errors in the supreme court, see post §§ 586-588.
Declination to consider points not regularly saved and material to case, see post § 604 et seq.
Time for objections to form or preliminaries of indictments and informations, and waiver by delay, see ante §§ 59-61.
Sufficiency of record showing as to evidence received or excluded erroneously, see post § 595.
Necessity of showing by record the objections and exceptions taken, see post § 596.

¶ 2412. A question which the record in a criminal case shows was not raised below cannot be considered upon error.—People v. Graney, 91 Mich. 646; People v. Carter, 96 Mich. 583.

¶ 2413. The general rule that the supreme court will on review consider only such questions as were presented for the consideration of the trial court applies to criminal cases as well as civil cases.—People v. Prinz, 148 Mich. 307.

¶ 2414. The fact that a bill of exceptions in a criminal case may show that proof essential to a conviction was not offered will not be ground for disturbing a conviction upon writ of error, unless some question was made upon it in the court below.—Foley v. People, 22 Mich. 227.

¶ 2415. The c
liberty of the c to the indiscreti
but enjoins upc
ments shall not shows that the ings which re punishment, the lief even if ot exceptions take Murray, 72 Mic

§ 511. Defects i prelimi

Mode, sufficienc indictment Pleas to indi
ante V.
Raising questio
ceedings ir formation,

¶ 2416. An i bezzling, etc.,
allege that the one with inten
the crime was Held, that thi raised by dem could not be error.—People

¶ 2417. For cannot be obj error.—People

¶ 2418. Und tion that an i property is allege when,
of the prope
taken by den and comes t time on erro
644.

¶ 2419. A
How. St. § 1 should parti trespassed u tended to be defects is wa
in the supre
60 Mich. 8.

¶ 2420. An which charg a disorderly forth the da respondent f courts, is fa
lege that sai be raised fo court, respor to the infor jection to
Mich. 82.

¶ 2421. W
sufficiently

all the material elements constituting the crime of perjury, and specifically assigns perjury upon two paragraphs of the answer alleged to have been falsely sworn to, and then concludes with the allegation that "the answer was not true and that the defendant did not believe it to be true," an objection that the concluding allegation is too general, and is defective because it is not a specific averment, need not be passed upon by this court, for the reason that the information contains two specific assignments of perjury to which respondent raises no objection, and in such case an objection to an insufficient assignment should have been raised upon the trial, by an exception to evidence introduced under it.—Hoffman v. Allegan Circuit Judge, 150 Mich. 58.

¶ 2422. After conviction the examining magistrate's return cannot be objected to on the ground that it failed—in the absence of an express request—to specify which one of the offenses charged, viz., rape and assault with intent to rape, there was probable cause to believe defendant guilty of.—People v. Goulette, 82 Mich. 36.

¶ 2423. On exceptions to a conviction for resisting an officer arresting a person for breach of the peace, the prosecution cannot take the position for the first time in the supreme court that respondent was arrested without warrant for being intoxicated in a public street.—People v. Johnson, 86 Mich. 175.

¶ 2424. Unless defendant requires it he cannot object that the witness did not read over testimony before signing it on a preliminary hearing.—See People v. Gleason, 63 Mich. 626; People v. Dowdigan, 67 Mich. 95.

¶ 2425. An objection to the testimony of a witness on the ground that his name is not indorsed on the information cannot be made in the supreme court when not made below.—People v. De France, 104 Mich. 563.

§ 512. Disqualification of judge, counsel or assistant to prosecuting attorney.

¶ 2426. After a conviction in the recorder's court of Detroit when held by one of the Wayne circuit judges has been affirmed on exceptions before sentence without raising the question of such judge's right to hold that court, his right to pass sentence cannot be questioned on error.—People v. Dane, 81 Mich. 36.

¶ 2427. Where counsel has been assigned to a person on trial, and has acted without objection from his client, the latter's conviction cannot be set aside on the ground that counsel was not of respondent's choice.—People v. Murray, 52 Mich. 288.

¶ 2428. An objection that the prosecuting attorney had assistance on the trial is not meritorious where no objection was made until motion for a new trial, when the assisting attorney made affidavit that he had no private interest in the prosecution.—People v. Wood, 99 Mich. 620.

§ 513. Time of trial or denial of continuance.

Necessity of motion for postponement to procure witnesses as basis for motion for new trial for absence of them, see ante ¶ 2294.

¶ 2429. Where the trial of a murder case began 17 days after the assault, a claim that the accused was "railroaded" into prison and that the court erred in refusing to delay the case, is not tenable where no application for a continuance was made.—People v. Ecarius, 124 Mich. 616.

§ 514. Admission or exclusion of evidence.

Objection to volunteered answers, see post § 515.

Necessity of renewal of objection by motion to strike, see post § 525.

Necessity of exception to ruling, see post § 526.

Offers of evidence, requisites and sufficiency of offer, see ante § 341.

Taking and making objections to evidence, see ante §§ 353, 354.

Presumptions on the record as to error in admission or exclusion of evidence, see post § 619.

¶ 2430. An objection to evidence not made at the trial cannot be urged on error.—People v. Wolf, 95 Mich. 625.

¶ 2431. A motion to strike is necessary to save the question of allowing a faulty answer to stand over a bare objection that it was irresponsive.—People v. Lyle, 124 Mich. 184.

¶ 2432. An objection that the unsworn testimony of a child over ten years of age was improperly received cannot be made for the first time on appeal.—People v. Kemmis, 153 Mich. 117.

§ 515. Volunteered answers.

¶ 2433. In the absence of a motion to strike it out, an irrelevant statement volunteered by a witness in his answer to a question was held to be harmless error.—People v. Howard, 73 Mich. 10.

§ 516. Defects in proof.

Defect shown in bill of exceptions without objection, see ante ¶ 2414.

¶ 2434. The question, in a prosecution for murder, whether there was any evidence tending to establish malice, will not be considered on error in the absence of any ruling or exception raising the point.—Burden v. People, 26 Mich. 162.

¶ 2435. Where, upon the trial of a prosecution for selling liquors without having paid tax, no proof was offered to establish the adoption of local option in the county, and no point made that it had been adopted, the question cannot be raised for the first time on error.—People v. Wade, 101 Mich. 89.

¶ 2436. An objection that the evidence was insufficient to warrant respondent's conviction of the offense charged, and that the court should have directed a verdict of not guilty, cannot be urged for the first time on error.—People v. Smith, 106 Mich. 431.

¶ 2437. On a criminal prosecution for operating a theater without a license, contrary to the provision of a resolution of the township board, the contentions of respondent that such resolution had no application to him, and that the fee was unreasonable, cannot be considered if they were not raised in the lower court, especially where the terms of the resolution are not before this court.—People v. Richards, 150 Mich. 434.

§ 517. Errors in examination of witnesses.

¶ 2438. If no objections are made to questions asked in cross-examinations and no exceptions noted to the rulings of the court, no error can be assigned on appeal as to the admission of the testimony.—People v. Mulvaney, 171 Mich. 272.

¶ 2439. While an admonition to a quibbling witness in a criminal prosecution of what he might expect if it appeared that he was refusing to tell all that he knew, is a dangerous thing by reason of its implication, there should be an objection and an exception to present it for review.—People v. Case, 105 Mich. 92.

¶ 2440. In a prosecution for assault with intent to kill and murder, where defendant is convicted only of assault and battery, it is not reversible error to permit defendant to be cross-examined as to previous occasions upon which he had, under a claim of self-defense, drawn and threatened to use weapons, no objection being made or exception taken at the trial.—People v. Klise, 166 Mich. 1.

§ 518. Errors in order of proof or reception of evidence.

¶ 2441. Objection to the order of introduction of evidence cannot be first made on appeal.—People v. Kemmis, 153 Mich. 117.

§ 519. Failure to call state's witnesses.

¶ 2442. In a prosecution for murder, the failure of the prosecution to call as a witness one of the physicians who performed the autopsy on the victim and who removed from the body the bullet which was introduced in evidence cannot be taken advantage of for the first time on request for acquittal, if counsel did not regard this testimony of sufficient importance and benefit to the respondent to request the witness to be produced on the trial.—People v. Higgins, 127 Mich. 291.

§ 520. Erroneous argument or conduct of counsel.

Necessity for ruling on objection, see post § 524.

¶ 2443. Improper remarks made by the prosecuting officer in his address to the jury concerning the respondent cannot be assigned as error without some complaint made at the time.—People v. Haley, 48 Mich. 495.

¶ 2444. Objections to the argument of counsel to the jury will not be considered by the supreme court unless the trial court's attention was called to the matter, a ruling made and exceptions taken.—People v. Mulvaney, 171 Mich. 272.

¶ 2445. Exceptions to the argument of the prosecuting attorney need not be considered where no rulings were requested or made thereon.—People v. Singer, 174 Mich. 361.

¶ 2446. Unless the argument of the prosecuting attorney is so flagrant as to be clearly prejudicial to the respondent, a conviction will not be set aside where the attention of the trial court was not called to his argument, a ruling obtained, and an exception taken.—People v. Frontera, 186 Mich. 343.

¶ 2447. An improper argument by the prosecuting attorney contrasting foreigners with American citizens, held not so flagrant and prejudicial to the respondent as to justify the setting aside of a conviction, where the attention of the trial court was no called to the argument, a ruling obtaine and an exception taken.—People v. Fronte 186 Mich. 343.

¶ 2448. Where no objection is mad language used by the state's attorney ' the jury, as being prejudicial to defe and the court's attention is not dire it, defendant cannot complain in the court.—People v. Giddings, 159 Mic

§ 521. Failure to charge or error ir

Manner, time and sufficiency of r instructions, see ante §§ 417

¶ 2449. The sufficiency of a touched on points in the ca reviewed where the accused n for fuller instructions and no on them, the question being plemental brief that a ver stand if the record sho judge did not fully expl questions necessary to r the case.—People v. Car

¶ 2450. Where the cution for assault charge the jury on able doubt and presumption of innocence, and the defendant makes no exception or request for such instructions, the supreme court will not reverse for this omission.—People v. Yund, 163 Mich. 504.

¶ 2451. Where an information contained two counts, one for assault with intent to murder, and the other for assault with intent to do great bodily harm, the court charged that if neither of these intents was found the respondent must be acquitted. Held, that an objection, made for the first time on error, that the court should have charged that if there was no intent respondent might be found guilty of assault and battery, came too late and could not be considered.—People v. Raher, 92 Mich. 165.

¶ 2452. That the court in a prosecution for forgery failed to explain to the jury the meaning of the words "false" and "forged," and to caution the jury that the respondent's not testifying in his own behalf was not evidence of guilt, cannot be held error where the attention of the trial court was not called to such points by respondent's counsel.—People v. Warner, 104 Mich. 337.

¶ 2453. The defense that respondent was so intoxicated as to be incapable of the intent charged (to do great bodily harm less than murder) should be called to the attention of the trial court by a request to charge, and cannot be raised for the first time on error.—People v. Carter, 117 Mich. 576.

¶ 2454. The claim that there was no charge in the information or testimony to warrant an instruction was waived by the failure of counsel to call the attention of the court to the objection.—People v. Hinshaw, 135 Mich. 378.

§ 522. Questions on custody and conduct of jury.

¶ 2455. The action of the court in a criminal prosecution for rape in permitting the jury, after retiring, to return to the court and have the stenographer read all the testimony of the prosecutrix without having submitted to it the testimony of the defendant, does not constitute error where such testimony is ordered read by the court after a request by the jury, and no request is made by the defendant that his testimony be read to the jury, and no objection is made nor exception taken to the action of the court.—People v. Smith, 192 Mich. 355.

§ 523. Sufficiency of objections; specificness.

Specification and particularity in objections to informations and indictments, see ante § 62.
Objections on trial and sufficiency thereof, see ante §§ 353-355.
Specification necessary in objections to evidence, see also ante ¶ 354.
Particularity and specification in assignments of error, see post § 586 et seq.
Objections to competency of witnesses, see Witnesses, II.
Efficacy of motion for new trial to save question, see post § 530.

¶ 2456. An exception in a criminal case, based on an objection to testimony, for which objection no reasons are given, and the ground of which is not reasonably apparent, cannot be considered on a review.—People v. Moore, 86 Mich. 134.

¶ 2457. On an appeal from a conviction of rape where, when testimony was offered, the opposing attorney simply said "Objected to," without giving any ground, and the ground of his objection not being reasonably apparent, an allegation of error based thereon cannot be considered.—People v. Moore, 86 Mich. 134.

¶ 2458. An objection to the conduct of counsel in attempting to introduce incompetent evidence must be specific in order to constitute a basis for the assignment of error.—People v. Page, 198 Mich. 524.

¶ 2459. The mere noting of an exception to objectionable arguments in a criminal case without calling it to the attention of the trial court does not save the question for review.—People v. Maczulski, 194 Mich. 193.

¶ 2460. To lay the foundation for exceptions on the ground that a hypothetical question to an expert witness embraces facts not in evidence, the attention of the trial judge should be called to the specific objection that he may determine whether there is sufficient evidence tending to prove the assumed facts.—People v. Foglesong, 116 Mich. 556.

¶ 2461. Where the objection below to allowing the stenographer to read into the evidence the testimony of a deceased witness went to the competency only of the testimony regardless of the authentication, the objection that the prosecution failed to make preliminary proof of the accuracy of the minutes cannot be raised for the first time on appeal.—People v. Peck, 147 Mich. 84.

¶ 2461a. In a prosecution under the Local Option Law against two respondents, a revenue receipt was offered in evidence and objected to as being immaterial. On appeal error was claimed in said admission on the ground that while said receipt was admissible against one of the respondents, it was not against the other. Held, under the ground of objection made at the trial, said latter ground of objection could not be raised on appeal.—People v. Adler, 169 Mich. 322.

¶ 2462. In a prosecution for burglary, testimony of a street car conductor who "spotted" respondent with two others on his car, that he did not "size them up" as railroad men, was not assignable as error on the ground that such conductor was not shown to know how railroad men looked or dressed, as no objection was made upon any such ground.—People v. Wilson, 133 Mich. 517.

¶ 2463. An objection that an answer was not responsive does not raise the question that it volunteered incompetent matter in replying to the question.—People v. Lyle, 124 Mich. 184.

¶ 2464. On the court's declining to permit further cross-examination of a witness, the proper practice is to make known some reason why further cross-examination was desired and the subject thereof, cross-examination already having been extensive, and if then denied to except; otherwise the question is not saved.—People v. Kindra, 102 Mich. 147.

§ 524. Necessity and sufficiency of ruling on question.

On improper argument, see also ante § 520.
Necessity for renewal of objection where decision is reserved, see post § 525.
Necessity of exception to ruling, see post § 526.

¶ 2465. It cannot be urged that no ruling was made upon improper remarks of the prosecuting attorney where the record shows that respondent's counsel promptly objected and the court declined to rule and told such counsel to take an exception.—People v. Huff, 173 Mich. 620.

¶ 2466. Where counsel for defendant on a murder charge contents himself with taking exception to particular portions of the argument of the prosecuting attorney, without asking for or obtaining a ruling thereon by the court, such exception cannot be considered on appeal.—People v. Sartori, 168 Mich. 308.

¶ 2467. Where the attention of the trial court is called to an objection to the argument of the prosecuting attorney to the jury, a ruling requested, and no ruling is made, the effect of the refusal or failure to rule should be held to be the same as an adverse ruling.—People v. Sartori, 168 Mich. 308.

§ 525. Necessity of renewing objection.

¶ 2468. In a prosecution for murder a witness was called by the state, who acted as interpreter for defendant while the latter was being questioned at the county jail by the state, and was permitted without objections to testify as to what defendant said, and was cross-examined by defendant. After he had left the stand and another witness had been called, defendant moved to strike out his evidence on the ground that defendant was being compelled to testify against himself. The court reserved the decision. Defendant did not renew his motion and the court took no further action upon it. Held, the admission of the testimony did not constitute reversible error.—People v. Sartori, 168 Mich. 308.

¶ 2469. Defendant in a criminal prosecution cannot predicate error on the fact that certain testimony given by witness for the People on direct examination stated a conclusion, was hearsay and was not the best evidence where such fact was developed only on cross-examination, and, although the testimony was originally given under objection and exception, no motion to strike was made after the cross-examination.—People v. May, 199 Mich. 574.

§ 526. Necessity and office of exceptions.

To raise constitutional or jurisdictional questions, see ante §§ 510, 511.
To improper argument of counsel, see also ante ¶ 2444.
Where error works manifest injustice or denies fair trial, see post § 527.
Motion for new trial to save objections, see post § 530.
Sufficiency of exceptions, see post § 528.
Sufficiency of marking of requests to admit of review without exceptions, see ante § 421.
Power to sentence before settlement of exceptions, see ante § 485.
Suspension of sentence to permit preparation of exceptions for review, see ante § 494.
Necessity and office of the bill of exceptions, see post §§ 590 et seq., 604.
Exceptions before sentence as mode of review, see post §§ 569, 581.
Statutory dispensation with exceptions charge, see Comp. L. 1915, § 14576.

¶ 2470. Assignments of error canno considered if unsupported by excepti People v. Mills, 94 Mich. 630.

¶ 2471. Errors in a criminal case considered on appeal, must be excep People v. Van Driesche, 154 Mich.

¶ 2472. Where an information slaughter caused by abortion (Co § 7542, How. St. § 9107) was n its face as applied to ordinary assault, but was bad as app slaughter by abortion because averred, it was held that the sufficiency did not arise dir record but on the bill of ex fect not being apparent u came in; the error lay in viction on it.—People v. C 431.

¶ 2473. Admission of is not ground for setti if no exception was t cott, 51 Mich. 612.

¶ 2474. A ruling c to cannot be revie Summers, 115 Mich

¶ 2475. Admission of testimony over objection must be excepted to, or it cannot be reviewed.—People v. Summers, 115 Mich. 537.

¶ 2476. The sustaining of an objection to a question cannot be complained of in the absence of an exception.—People v. Hilliard, 119 Mich. 24.

¶ 2477. Not only must objection be made to the admissibility of evidence but an exception must be taken to the ruling of the court.—People v. Thorne, 148 Mich. 203.

¶ 2478. Assignments of error relating to the exclusion of testimony will not be considered on appeal where no exceptions were taken to the rulings of the court.—People v. Muste, 137 Mich. 216.

¶ 2479. Where the defendant made a motion to strike out certain testimony given on cross-examination, which was granted by the court, and neither party excepted to the ruling, there is no ground for the defendant to assign error on appeal.—People v. Mulvaney, 171 Mich. 272.

¶ 2480. Failure to except to the admission of evidence prevents a review of the question on error though a motion is made for new trial on that ground.—People v. Auerbach, 176 Mich. 23.

¶ 2481. An objection to the admission of testimony cannot be considered on error in a criminal case where no exception is taken.—People v. Breen, 192 Mich. 39.

¶ 2482. The court's neglect in criminal cases properly to charge the jury upon a material point may be taken advantage of on error without having been excepted to at the trial.—People v. Murray, 72 Mich. 10; People v. Macard, 73 Mich. 50; People v. McGuire, 89 Mich. 64.

¶ 2483. Where improper remarks by the prosecuting attorney had been excepted to, the court's neglect to grant a request made for the purpose of curing prejudicial effect of such remarks was held reviewable though no exception thereto was taken at the trial.—People v. McGuire, 89 Mich. 64.

¶ 2484. Failure to explain the elements to be proved in a statutory crime will not be reviewed, if not excepted to.—People v. Thorne, 148 Mich. 203.

¶ 2485. Additional instructions given after retirement may be reviewed like those first given.—People v. Hoffman, 142 Mich. 531.

¶ 2486. Though Comp. L. 1897, § 10247, permits, without exceptions, the review of errors in charging or refusing to charge the jury, the court has no authority to review a ruling ordering a juror to be sworn though he was not a taxpayer and such fact was brought to the attention of the court and counsel, where no exception was taken to such ruling.—People v. Albers, 137 Mich. 678.

¶ 2487. Where in a murder case no exceptions are claimed or filed to the reasons for the order or the order itself denying the motions for a new trial, the supreme court cannot consider said motions.—People v. Sartori, 168 Mich. 308.

§ 527. ——Errors affecting fairness of trial; manifest injustice.

Flagrantly improper argument, see also ante ¶¶ 2446, 2447.
Self-induced lack of fair trial by failure to object, see also post ¶ 2492.

¶ 2488. If the supreme court in a criminal case sees, upon a review of all the proceedings which have resulted in a respondent's conviction, that a fair trial has not been had, it is its duty, under the general superintending power and control over inferior courts conferred by its appellate jurisdiction, to set aside such proceedings and order a new trial, even though the proper objections and exceptions have not been taken.—People v. Murray, 72 Mich. 10.

¶ 2489. Where error is assigned on the court's charge, no instructions having been asked or exceptions taken, objections to the charge will not be considered unless they are substantial and calculated to do justice.—People v. Jensen, 66 Mich. 711.

¶ 2490. Where no request to charge has been made, and no exception for failure to charge the jury on a material point in a criminal case has been taken, the supreme court will not reverse unless a manifest injustice has been done.—People v. Brott, 163 Mich. 150.

§ 528. Sufficiency of exception.

Meaning, application and effect of exception, see post § 529.
Exception to argument as saving refusal to give cautionary charge to jury, see also ante ¶ 2483.
Reduction of exceptions to writing and settlement of bill, see post § 593.
Sufficiency of the bill of exceptions, see post § 592 et seq.
Necessity of showing error affirmatively by record or bill of exceptions, see post § 595.
Presumptions on the record, see post § 617 et seq.

¶ 2491. When the record shows that a prisoner on trial demanded, and, after refusal, insisted upon, the right to poll the jury, and protested against the record of the verdict without it, the absence of specific exception in any other form does not preclude the raising of this question.—Stewart v. People, 23 Mich. 63.

¶ 2492. One who makes no objection or exception to admission or exclusion of evidence cannot assign the rulings of the court thereon as error consisting in the lack of an impartial and fair trial; since if it was lacking the lack was due to the failure to object.—People v. O'Brien, 92 Mich. 17.

§ 529. Construction and meaning of exceptions.

Construction of the record and presumptions thereon, see post § 611 et seq.

¶ 2493. Where the witness refused to answer a question, and the court ruled that it need not be answered before an exception could be taken to the question, it cannot be insisted on appeal that the exception which was entered was meant to be to the language of the court, where such a claim is not warranted by the exception; and the language of the court is not objectionable.—People v. Mulvaney, 171 Mich. 272.

§ 530. Questions preservable by new trial motion.

See also ante ¶ 2480.

¶ 2494. It is a doubtful practice to save questions by specifying matters occurring at the trial as ground for new trial and then assigning each several ground as error entering into the denial of a new trial. Such practice raises the particular questions only by indirection, since the granting of a new trial is largely discretionary; but where the assignments were so made and treated as good, the court considered them.—People v. Frey, 112 Mich. 251.

§ 531. Waiver of errors.

Waiver and cure of objections to information or indictment, see ante § 65.
Waiver of objections by plea or trial to merits, see ante §§ 117, 118.
Waiver of exceptions or objections after making, see post § 532.
Errors in information or indictment waived by want of objection below, see also ante § 511.
Cure of error by subsequent action of objector himself, see post §§ 554, 555.

¶ 2495. Where, after the charge in a criminal case, the court inquires of the defendant's counsel whether the charge covers his points, and the latter replies that he is entirely satisfied, he waives his right to assign errors to the charge, even under the statute (Act No. 52, Pub. Acts 1901) which permits errors to be assigned, though not excepted to.—People v. Van Driesche, 154 Mich. 158.

¶ 2496. The refusal of the trial court subsequent to the passage of Pub. Acts 1881, No. 245, to allow respondent to make an unsworn statement, though objectionable was waived by his subsequently being sworn as a witness on his own behalf and testifying and being cross-examined.—People v. Reilly, 53 Mich. 260.

¶ 2497. Where an information was verified before the clerk of the court the objection that in signing the jurat he did not add his official title is waived if not taken before trial and conviction.—People v. Murphy, 56 Mich. 546.

¶ 2498. Objections to a complaint and warrant for maliciously trespassing upon improved lands for not describing the premises trespassed upon and the kind of grain intended to be destroyed are waived unless seasonably made below.—People v. O'Brien, 60 Mich. 8.

§ 532. Waiver and abandonment of objections or exceptions.

Waiver of the error or defect itself, see ante § 531.
Waiver of objection to mode of review, see post § 579.
Cure of error by subsequent action of accused, see post §§ 554, 555.
Waiver of objections to competency of witnesses, see Witnesses, II et seq.

¶ 2499. When a challenge to the array has never been presented to or passed upon by the court it will be considered as having been waived. For example, where during an argument upon the matter of such challenge it appeared it was not in writing, and the oral challenge was overruled, and counsel asked permission to file a written challenge later, and to have it treated as filed, and the court asked to see it when filed and it was filed three days later but had never been drawn to the attention of the court it was waived.—People v. Tubbs, 147 Mich. 1.

¶ 2499a. Where, in a prosecution for violation of the Local Option Act, the evidence is such as to require the court to submit to the jury the question of the respondent's intent to violate the act in furnishing liquor to a friend, respondent does not waive his right to have the question so submitted by insisting that he is entitled to a directed verdict.—People v. Slater, 164 Mich. 156.

XV. HARMLESS ERROR AND GROUND FOR REVERSAL.

§ 533. In general; technical or unsubstantial errors.

Wrong reasons for correct ruling as harmless error, see post § 535.
Errors favoring accused, see post § 536.
Self-committed or invited errors, see post § 537.
Particular errors and classes of errors in course of trial, see post §§ 538-550.
Curing errors by other incidents and rulings or by verdict, see post §§ 551-567.
Aggravation or mitigation of the error by condition of the case or of proofs, see post § 534.

Substantial nature of right to have names of witnesses indorsed on information, see ante §§ 20, 21.
Declination of points not material or necessary to proper decision of the case, see post § 607 et seq.
Necessity of showing in the record as to the effect of the error, see post § 595.
Presumptions on review as to harmfulness or harmlessness of error, see post § 627.
[Note. The harmless error doctrine as applied in civil cases is fully treated in the topic Harmless Error.]
Statutory rule against reversal except for error resulting in miscarriage of justice, see Pub. Acts 1915, No. 89.

¶ 2500. The court on appeal ought not to reverse a judgment for error in the admission or exclusion of evidence, where such error was without prejudice.—People v. Ryder, 151 Mich. 187.

§ 534. Aggravation or mitigation of error by other matters or strength of case.

¶ 2501. A conviction should be set aside that is based on directly conflicting testimony concerning a vital point, if rigid cross-examination has not been allowed.—People v. Long, 50 Mich. 249.

¶ 2502. Where, in a criminal action, defendant produced a witness who testified that the reputation for truth and veracity of a witness for the people was bad, error in refusing to allow him to answer the further question whether he would believe the latter under oath, will not reverse, where the evidence so clearly establishes guilt that the jury could not have been prejudiced.—People v. Ryder, 151 Mich. 187.

¶ 2503. Language of a prosecutor in a criminal case, although subject to criticism in some particulars, will not reverse where the court is of the view that had the jury not found the defendant guilty, it would have been a miscarriage of justice.—People v. Dowdall, 124 Mich. 166.

¶ 2504. The disregard of the rule as to the impeachment of witnesses by first interrogating as to the time, place and conversation had with a witness, is error warranting the reversal of a conviction for robbery committed about ten o'clock in the evening, where the defense is an alibi, and where the sister of the accused testifies that she left her home after supper, when the accused also left and returned about nine o'clock, going to bed at eleven o'clock, during all of which two hours the accused was present playing cards, and where no questions were asked such sister as to a conversation with another person who took the stand and swore that the sister stated to him that the accused was home all evening. The sister's evidence was very material, although the impeachment was as to an immaterial matter, and the jury were not instructed to disregard the testimony of the third person.—People v. Riede, 121 Mich. 700.

¶ 2505. In a prosecution for having carnal knowledge of a girl less than fourteen years old, a witness for the prosecution, after testifying that about a year before the commission of the offense, while the girl was at her house, she noticed respondent taking hold of her arm and pulling her around, added that her husband spoke of it at the time. In his closing argument the prosecuting attorney referred to the testimony as showing that respondent made improper overtures to the girl, and used it as a basis of a claim that the parties were guilty of undue intimacy. Held, that denial of respondent's motion to strike out the testimony respecting the husband's remark was made more harmful by the argument.—People v. Duncan, 104 Mich. 460.

§ 535. Wrong reasons for correct decision or ruling.

¶ 2506. The giving of a wrong reason for admitting testimony is not prejudicial error if the testimony was for any reason admissible, and the jury is properly instructed concerning the use to be made of the testimony.—People v. Collins, 144 Mich. 121.

¶ 2507. Where the trial court has directed a verdict of guilty, and the jury has followed such direction, and the facts are admitted or undisputed, so that the only question is one of law, applied to such facts, a new trial will not be granted if the supreme court is satisfied that the law was rightly applied.—People v. Neumann, 85 Mich. 98.

¶ 2508. A correct exclusion of offered impeachment on a bad objection that no foundation was laid and without objection to the form of the question, which was in bad form, is not reversible error.—People v. Considine, 105 Mich. 149, per Long, J., Grant, J., concurring, and Hooker, J., concurring in the result.

§ 536. Errors favoring accused.

Admission of improper evidence favoring accused, see post § 541.
Continuance by justice at request of accused for more than legal time, see post ¶ 2973.
Less than legal punishment as harmless error, see ante § 489.

¶ 2509. Sentencing to imprisonment in the state prison for a term less than the minimum fixed by the statute for the offense cannot be assigned as error being an irregularity beneficial to respondent.—People v. Burridge, 99 Mich. 343.

¶ 2510. One informed against for larceny of goods above the value of $25 cannot complain of a conviction upon a finding that the goods are worth less than that sum.—People v. Jacks, 76 Mich. 218.

§ 537. Self-committed or invited error.

Invited improprieties in argument, see ante § 391.

¶ 2511. One accused of perjury who had made application for a mandamus to compel the prosecuting attorney to indorse the names of two persons confined in the state prison, and to produce them as witnesses on behalf of the people at his trial, which application was denied, and who thereupon procured the depositions of the two convicts to be taken, cannot complain of the admission of the depositions in evidence where his attorney read them to the jury; he being under no compulsion to read them.—People v. Fay, 89 Mich. 119.

¶ 2512. The fact that erroneous language in an instruction is taken from a request prepared by defendant's counsel, does not cure the error.—People v. Cismadija, 167 Mich. 210.

¶ 2513. One who has brought out in his cross-examination damaging evidence is not in a position to complain of its introduction, where the court had permitted him full inquiry into details over the objection of the prosecuting attorney.—People v. Thorne, 148 Mich. 203.

§ 538. Particular errors and defects in procedure.

Immateriality of defects in indictments, see ante § 49 et seq.

Immaterial misnomer or misdescription in indictment, see ante § 51.

Impossible dates in indictment, see ante § 53.

Sufficiency of indictment with one good count, see ante § 55.

Waiver of objection to irregular indorsement of names of witnesses, see also ante ¶ 91.

Improper evidence before grand jury, see also ante ¶ 354.

Effect of absence of formal plea where trial was had on merits, see also ante § 105.

Improper custody of jury after agreement on verdict, see also ante ¶ 2233.

Wrong reason for correct ruling, see ante § 535.

Cure of errors by other incidents and rulings in trial, see post § 551 et seq.

Presumption as to harmfulness, see post § 627.

[Note. The section lines which follow describe the successive stages and incidents of trial in which the errors were committed. Consult them.]

Provision that judgment shall not be wholly but only partly reversed for excessiveness in punishment, see Comp. L. 1915, § 15857.

¶ 2514. A respondent is not prejudiced by the action of the prosecuting attorney in indorsing the names of several witnesses upon the information after it had been filed, where the only one of such witnesses sworn on the trial is one because of whose absence respondent moved for a continuance.—People v. Burwell, 106 Mich. 27.

¶ 2515. A conviction will not be reversed because of the failure of the prosecution to produce a witness whose name was indorsed upon the information, where it appears that such witness was beyond the jurisdiction of the court, and that all evidence of the transaction in regard to which he was to testify was stricken out by the trial judge.—People v. Berry, 107 Mich. 256.

¶ 2516. The surrender of a codefendant by the bondsmen and the taking of new bail in the presence of the jury held not prejudicial error in a prosecution for murder.—People v. MacGregor, 178 Mich. 436.

¶ 2517. The denial by the trial court of a motion for a change of venue for local prejudice will not be reversed on error where no difficulty was experienced in drawing an impartial jury, respondent having used no peremptory challenges.—People v. Burke, 157 Mich. 108.

§ 539. ——In formation of jury and rulings on challenges.

Swearing jury before order for separate trial of coindictees, see also Jury, V.

¶ 2518. Overruling a challenge for cause is harmless where the right to dismiss the objectionable juror by peremptory challenge is still open and is not used.—People v. Barker, 60 Mich. 277; People v. Aplin, 86 Mich. 393.

¶ 2519. An improperly sustained challenge for cause in a criminal case prejudices a respondent in no substantial right where it does not appear that the regular panel of jurors was exhausted, or that the people had exhausted their peremptory challenges, or that any objection was made by respondent to the competency or impartiality of the jury which was obtained.—People v. Fowler, 104 Mich. 449.

¶ 2520. A complaining witness and several jurors were the same in defendant's trial for larceny as in a preceding case against another person charged with an offense in no way connected with that of defendant. The trial court refused to permit a juror on his voir dire examination to state whether he had an opinion as to the credibility of the complaining witness, and overruled defendant's challenge for cause directed against the juror. Defendant did not exhaust his peremptory challenges. Held, no error was committed in permitting the juror to sit in defendant's case.—People v. Wright, 170 Mich. 154.

¶ 2521. It is reversible error to refuse to permit a juror upon his voir dire to answer the question "suppose that you ascertain that the testimony is evenly balanced in your mind (that is, as much upon one side as upon the other, and entitled to the same weight and credence), which way would you be inclined to lean—for or against the defendant?" and the fact that council has not or does not use peremptory challenges does not affect the question.—People v. Peck, 139 Mich. 680.

¶ 2522. Respondent is not aggrieved by the refusal of the court to permit a juror who has sat in a prior case involving the same transaction, to answer the question whether the fact of his sitting in the prior case and having heard the testimony, would affect his judgment in the pending case, where the testimony of the only witness who had also testified in the prior case, was improperly admitted.—People v. Albers, 137 Mich. 678.

¶ 2523. A conviction for murder will not be reversed on the ground that defendant's counsel was not allowed to examine a juror upon the condition of his health and his physical ability to sit during a long trial, where it appears the trial was short and the juror sat through it without apparent injury to his health, and it does not appear that his health or physical condition affected his verdict.—People v. Oblaser, 168 Mich. 227.

§ 540. ——Admission of improper evidence or witnesses.

Calling incompetent witness as harmless error, see also ante ¶ 1566.
Improper evidence favoring accused, see post § 541.
Volunteered testimony, see post § 543.
Improper order of receiving proofs, see post § 546.
Cure by admission of other proofs, see post § 552.

¶ 2524. The court must exclude irrelevant testimony, but when that is admitted which cannot influence the jury to believe the defendant guilty, or prejudice them against him or his witnesses, and the court can see that harm could not result, the judgment will not be reversed.—Strang v. People, 24 Mich. 1.

¶ 2525. A conviction will not be reversed for admitting testimony without which it is perfectly evident that a verdict of guilty should have been rendered.—People v. Owen, 154 Mich. 571.

¶ 2526. In a prosecution for larceny of a watch from a man asleep, there was no fatal error in allowing a witness to testify as to what the sleeper said when he woke up, or what those present said, if the remarks had no tendency to implicate any one.—Hall v. People, 39 Mich. 717.

¶ 2527. In a prosecution for keeping a house of ill-fame, it was in proof that an officer was furnished money by the county to be used in an effort to ascertain the character of the house, and that he made use of a man accompanying him to entrap the defendant. The officer testified to certain conduct between his companion and an inmate of the house. But as there were other circumstances, entirely disconnected from the officer in question, tending to establish respondent's guilt, a conviction was sustained.—People v. Wright, 90 Mich. 362.

¶ 2528. The coroner's clerk, called as a witness on a prosecution of the coroner for obtaining money of the state by a false claim that a person was a "stranger" on whose body an inquest was held, may as a witness testify that he took the statements of two doctors that deceased was a stranger for the purpose of making a showing that the state was liable for the fees, though it does not appear that he had any direction from or understanding with accused to take them for that purpose, where it also appears that the statements went into the coroner's records and from those records the reason equally well appears to the jury.—People v. Hoffman, 142 Mich. 531.

¶ 2529. In a criminal prosecution the fact that a deputy sheriff testified to a statement made by defendant's wife indicating his guilt is not prejudicial error where no objection was made thereto, and it was largely a repetition of the testimony of the witness upon cross-examination, and was partly adduced by defendant's counsel in support of the theory of the defense, and it was later contradicted by the wife, but would have been proper on rebuttal even under objection.—People v. De Camp, 146 Mich. 533.

¶ 2530. In a prosecution for murder, it is not reversible error to admit testimony as to an arrangement made between the deceased and one of the defendants for the former to go to a certain place and get a bicycle previously loaned to deceased by said defendant, where said evidence appears to be in nowise prejudicial to defendants.—People v. Sartori, 168 Mich. 308.

¶ 2531. Testimony of the complaining witness in a prosecution for an assault with intent to commit rape on a female under the age of sixteen years, as to what her uncle did towards learning the identity of the assailant on being told by her of the occurrence immediately after the alleged assault, held improper but not prejudicial to the respondent where the uncle merely tried to learn his name.—People v. Harrington, 186 Mich. 482.

¶ 2532. In a prosecution for seduction testimony that prosecutrix's mother was insane and that her father did not care for her after she was 14 years of age, is not admissible; but its admission, where preliminary simply, will not require reversal.—People v. Payne, 131 Mich. 474.

¶ 2533. On an indictment for obtaining money for a coroner's inquest from the state by false pretenses, immaterial testimony as to property possessed by the deceased is not prejudicial to accused.—People v. Hoffmann, 142 Mich. 531.

¶ 2534. It was harmless error to allow a physician to state on a hypothesis what would have been a proper fee for making a post mortem examination, where the issue was as to whether accused had defrauded the state by charging for a fee not paid for such service, and the testimony was that none was charged or paid, and where lay knowledge suffices to show that in one case no post mortem would have been necessary, while as to others the value of the service might vary.—People v. Hoffmann, 142 Mich. 531.

¶ 2535. In a prosecution under Pub. Acts 1911, Act No. 62, How. 2nd Ed., § 5299, prohibiting the advertisement of the treatment of "venereal diseases," "lost manhood," and "lost vigor," evidence of a physician as to what was meant in medicine by venereal diseases and that the other terms had no medical significance, is not prejudicial to the defendant.—People v. Kennedy, 176 Mich. 384.

¶ 2536. On a trial for larceny of a cow which a witness claimed to have bought from defendant, whom he had never seen before the sale, held that the action of the court in allowing the witness to show how and in what manner he subsequently identified the defendant, was harmless error.—People v. Eagle, 189 Mich. 404 (Bird, Moore, and Kuhn, JJ., dissenting).

¶ 2537. Where a respondent on trial for murder had been examined as a witness in his own behalf, to draw from him on cross-examination testimony that he had been divorced was not, even if improper, such error as to justify reversal.—People v. Parmelee, 112 Mich. 291.

¶ 2538. Where, in an action for larceny, counsel for the accused sought to obtain an admission from the prosecuting witness that he had tried to settle by obtaining from defendant certain sums of money, the admission on redirect examination of testimony of the witness as to offers of settlement from the defendant's wife and another, if error, is not prejudicial, it appearing that those persons had no authority to speak for defendant.—People v. Ryder, 151 Mich. 187.

¶ 2539. Certain letters and a photograph of defendant, in a prosecution for murder, admitted on his cross-examination to show his untruthfulness as a witness and the manner of man he was, held not relevant to the case and might well have been excluded, but its admission not reversible error.—People v. Winney, 196 Mich. 347.

¶ 2540. Upon a prosecution for taking improper liberties with the person of a female child six years of age, the admission of evidence that the complaining witness had stated that she had previously been subjected to similar treatment by another person, the accused having no connection therewith, is harmless error.—People v. Walker, 113 Mich. 367.

¶ 2541. In a prosecution for assault with intent to commit rape on a girl 13 years of age, the admission of testimony concerning a conversation between the girl, a detective and others immediately after the alleged assault in the absence of respondent is not prejudicial to him when none of the conversation is related.—People v. Dupree, 175 Mich. 632.

¶ 2542. It was not harmless to allow the wife to testify on a trial of the husband for murder of one of their children, where though he admitted the shooting it was not in such sense as to be equivalent to a plea of guilty on which the court might have determined the degree without submission to the jury of the evidence.—People v. Gordon, 100 Mich. 518.

§ 541. ——Improper evidence favorable to accused.

¶ 2543. One cannot complain because the opposing party offers in evidence a part only of a printed article or statement, where the admission of the rest could have had no other effect than to injure instead of benefiting the party objecting.—People v. Coughlin, 67 Mich. 466.

¶ 2544. The admission of the statement of an accomplice, explanatory of his condition shortly after a crime, is not prejudicial error, where they tended to exclude respondent's presence at the time to which they related.—People v. Cleveland, 107 Mich. 36

¶ 2545. The admission of incompetent mony in rebuttal by the people in a cution for murder held not prejudici where such testimony tended to sup plea of self-defense.—People v. C Mich. 6.

¶ 2546. The admission in a for wife desertion of evidence th had trouble with his father c wife, that he struck his father father swore out a warrant was not prejudicial error, w done was in defense of th against her.—People v. Sch 497.

¶ 2547. Where the fact in a prosecution for an to kill, clearly indicate mission of a written, defendant intended t saulted, and then to error, is not prejudi to prove the defens Owen, 154 Mich. 5 JJ., dissenting).

§ 542. ——Improper exclusion of evidence.

¶ 2548. Where in an indictment for embezzlement the good or bad faith of the defendant is, under the statute, immaterial, it is harmless error to exclude evidence on the part of the state of facts showing good faith.—People v. Glazier, 159 Mich. 528.

¶ 2549. On a trial for larceny of a cow, refusal to admit evidence by a stock buyer as to whether he thought that the skull produced in evidence belonged to any particular cow held not erroneous where the witness had already testified that he could not say.—People v. Eagle, 189 Mich. 404.

¶ 2550. Exclusion of testimony by a respondent as to his statement to his brother-in-law to whose house he went early in the morning after the alleged commission of the rape in question, and before leaving the state, that such brother-in-law had no authority to settle the case for him, was not injurious, where respondent had testified that he never authorized any one to settle the matter for him and that he wrote his brother-in-law not to settle.—People v. Rich, 133 Mich. 14.

¶ 2551. In a criminal prosecution against a father for manslaughter of his child, alleged to have been effected by a course of ill treatment by defendant and his second wife, and by malnutrition, where an expert medical witness for the People stated on cross-examination that the girl did not have pyemia, held that the exclusion of the answer to the further question as to how pyemia manifests itself, although improper, was not reversible error, under the circumstances of the case.—People v. Eaton, 196 Mich. 715.

¶ 2552. In a criminal prosecution against a father for manslaughter of his child, alleged to have been effected by a course of ill treatment and by malnutrition by defendant and his second wife, where the defendant's mother had testified that at the time she came to live as a member of the family the child was not strong and had a great deal of trouble with her stomach and vomited often, held that the exclusion of the answer to a further question as to what the child had eaten which made her sick was not prejudicial error, where it had occurred six or seven years before the child's death and the witness was allowed to testify fully as to her condition at that time.—People v. Eaton, 196 Mich. 715.

¶ 2553. The fact that a witness in a criminal action knows nothing of defendant's reputation in the community where he lives renders his testimony thereon valueless, and error in excluding a proper question put to him, is error without prejudice.—People v. Ryder, 151 Mich. 187.

¶ 2554. It was not reversible error to refuse to allow recall of a court stenographer to lay a foundation for impeachment by the testimony given on a former trial which the stenographer heard, where objection that no foundation was laid had been sustained but such objection was untenable, though one to the form of the impeaching question might have been made and was not made.—People v. Considine, 105 Mich. 149, per Long, J., Grant, J., concurring, and Hooker, J., concurring in the result without opinion on this point.

¶ 2555. Whether or not a communication from a sheriff to a detective employed to uncover crime is privileged as a matter of public policy, it was harmless to rule it out as privileged and also as immaterial, where the witness's testimony plainly showed that he had already answered as fully as he could about what his arrangement was with the sheriff and could not recollect what the sheriff said.—People v. Hilliard, 119 Mich. 24.

¶ 2556. It was not prejudicial error to strike out evidence of admission of guilt on the part of defendant, made after his arrest, on a prosecution for forgery, even though it is not clear that the ruling was correct; where it is not clear that the statements made by defendant implied guilt.—People v. Tollefson, 145 Mich. 444.

§ 543. ——Volunteered testimony.

Volunteered answer without motion to strike, see also ante ¶ 2433.
Cure of error by striking out answer, see post § 561.

¶ 2557. A witness cannot bring error into a case by volunteering inadmissible testimony that is immediately stricken out by the trial judge.—People v. Mead, 50 Mich. 228.

¶ 2558. On a prosecution for having burglar's tools in possession where a conversation was admitted to show the relations of accused to one B., and then that B. was a burglar, to show the intent with which the tools were possessed, an irresponsive answer, volunteered to a question about B.'s occupation, that B. was then in state's prison was improper, and should have been stricken out; but respondent not having moved to strike it out, was harmless error in view of respondent's own testimony.—People v. Howard, 73 Mich. 10.

¶ 2559. In a criminal prosecution for larceny of cattle, volunteered testimony concerning other thefts which is immediately stricken out by the court is not reversible error.—People v. Carey, 125 Mich. 535.

¶ 2560. The volunteered testimony of a witness that the name by which a respondent went was not his true name, was not error where the witness had not been asked about such matter and where upon being asked by the court whether he knew respondent's true name, he answered that he did not.—People v. Wilson, 133 Mich. 517.

§ 544. ——Improper examination and cross-examination or offers of proof.

¶ 2561. The error in allowing a witness to be asked questions which require him to state legal conclusions will not require a reversal if the conclusions are legally correct. —People v. Brown, 53 Mich. 531.

¶ 2562. The mere asking by the prosecution in a criminal case of incompetent questions which are ruled out by the court, and where the ruling is accepted without any statement of what is proposed to be proved, does not require reversal on the ground that they might have prejudiced the jury.—People v. Pyckett, 99 Mich. 613.

¶ 2563. The attempt of the state, in a criminal prosecution for murder, to introduce incompetent testimony does not constitute prejudicial error where the court promptly rules that it would not be competent and the jury is cautioned to pay no attention to it.—People v. Page, 198 Mich. 524.

¶ 2564. Accused on the stand admitted having been convicted of a prior assault upon the complaining witness, and was asked further questions regarding the details of such assault. Objections interposed to such questions were promptly sustained by the court, who also instructed the jury that the fact of such conviction was admissible solely as bearing upon the credibility of the witness. Held, that respondent was not prejudiced, even if it was error to ask such questions.—People v. Conley, 106 Mich. 424.

¶ 2565. Elicitation of answers from a defendant in a criminal prosecution on cross-examination by the prosecutor, concerning previous crimes committed by the defendant, in which the stating of details in such crimes was largely voluntary on the defendant's part, held not reversible error.—People v. Kimbrough, 193 Mich. 330.

¶ 2566. Compelling accused on the stand in his own behalf to place an iron bar in his pocket to show that it could thus have been carried in a concealed position preparatory to the murder, if self-criminatory, is harmless where the same demonstration might have been made by the prosecuting attorney taking the bar in the same manner.—People v. Ecarius, 124 Mich. 616.

¶ 2567. The fact that a witness was permitted to read from books in evidence is not error, where there is nothing to show that a false reading was made.—People v. Hoffmann, 142 Mich. 531.

§ 545. ——Omission of or defect in proofs.

¶ 2568. Respondent in a criminal action can hardly complain of the omission to give attainable evidence of res gestæ when enough to convict him has already been given without contradiction.—People v. Coffman, 59 Mich. 1.

¶ 2569. In a prosecution for malicious injury to a fence, where defendant claimed that the deeds to the land in question introduced in evidence failed to prove title as alleged, the point was unavailing where it also appeared that the ground had been occupied by the alleged owner for a longer period than that required by the statute of limitations.—People v. Ferguson, 119 Mich. 373.

§ 546. ——Improper order of proofs.

¶ 2570. Where the respondent has not been prejudiced, the admission of evidence out of its proper order does not constitute ground of reversal.—People v. Durfee, 62 Mich. 487.

¶ 2571. It is not necessarily reversible error to admit in rebuttal evidence for the prosecution that should have been offered in chief where such evidence could not have prejudiced respondent.—People v. Cox, 70 Mich. 247.

§ 547. ——Erroneous restrictions on argument.

¶ 2572. Respondent in a criminal case cannot complain of a limitation of time for argument, where his counsel did not use all the time assigned to him.—People v. Van Alstyne, 157 Mich. 366.

§ 548. ——Improper arguments, remarks and misconduct in trial.

Prejudicial nature and effect of improper arguments, see also ante § 374 et seq.

¶ 2573. A conviction in a criminal cas will not be reversed because of impassion arguments of the prosecuting attorney unl such arguments were unwarranted by evidence and probably contributed to the viction.—People v. Peck, 147 Mich. 84; P v. Sharp, 163 Mich. 79.

¶ 2574. A verdict will not be set a alleged improper remarks of the pro officer in his argument to the jury, clear case of abuse is shown, wh respondent's rights were prejudic v. Gosch, 82 Mich. 22.

¶ 2575. On assignments of er proper argument of counsel, resort will interfere by granti only where the attorney has the evidence and the line of ment, to the evident preju site party.—People v. Tubl ¶ 2576. A conviction w because of improper re cuting attorney which fluenced the jury.—Pe Mich. 371.

¶ 2577. A convicti because of alleged prosecuting attorn departed from the legitimate argume son would conclu diced thereby.—People v. Conley, 106 Mich. 424.

¶ 2578. Where in arguing a murder case before a jury, the prosecuting attorney fails to make a clear distinction between facts sworn to by witnesses and his own inferences therefrom, the judgment will not be reversed on this account, where it appears that in view of all the testimony the jury could have honestly reached no other verdict than the one returned.—People v. Oblaser, 168 Mich. 227.

¶ 2579. Remarks of counsel to the jury which on their face and unexplained are not very intelligible and appear somewhat unseemly, and which are in the nature of retorts in answer to comments of opposing counsel, held not ground for reversal.—People v. Davis, 171 Mich. 241.

¶ 2580. Remarks of the trial court to counsel in regard to the order of proof and admission of evidence in a murder trial, held not to have prejudiced the defendant.—People v. Kimbrough, 193 Mich. 330.

§ 549. ——Instructions and refusals or omissions to instruct.

¶ 2581. A judgment will not be reversed for an error in the charge that could not have misled the jury.—People v. Scott, 6 Mich. 287.

¶ 2582. Reversal will not be granted for wrong instructions to the jury upon an abstract point not called for by the case and wholly ineffective.—People v. Marble, 38 Mich. 117.

¶ 2583. There is a miscarriage of justice necessitating the reversal of a case where the trial court affirmatively denies by means of instructions to an accused the benefit of an elementary rule favorable to him upon which, by the giving of testimony which invoked the application of the rule, he relied.—People v. Humphrey, 194 Mich. 10.

¶ 2584. Where there is a plain conflict of testimony, and one side or the other must be believed without qualification, there is no room for a "reasonable doubt," and an error in defining it to the jury is immaterial.—People v. Marble, 38 Mich. 117.

¶ 2585. An instruction defining reasonable doubt as a doubt arising out of the facts and circumstances of the case, in maintaining which the jury could give some good reason, was regarded by two justices as harmless, though not, perhaps, strictly accurate, the facts being susceptible of but one conclusion.—People v. Stubenvoll, 62 Mich. 329.

¶ 2586. An instruction that the presumption of innocence continues to surround the respondent until removed by evidence convincing the jury, beyond a reasonable doubt, of his guilt of the offense charged in the information, "or any other offense," is not error requiring reversal, where there is no evidence of the commission of any offense other than that set forth in the information.—People v. Resh, 107 Mich. 251.

¶ 2587. A judge's favorable comments upon the character of witnesses, though scarcely proper, are not clearly erroneous if borne out by undisputed evidence.—People v. Gibson, 58 Mich. 368.

¶ 2588. In a criminal trial improper hypothetical questions containing in substance the ordinary facts about the crime to be proved by the People, and upon which the jury were as competent to pass as were expert witnesses, were permitted to be answered by medical experts. The judge in his instructions commended medical witnesses in general. Held, such commendation in connection with such hypothetical questions constituted error prejudicial to defendant.—People v. Fritch, 170 Mich. 258.

¶ 2589. In a prosecution for hawking and peddling without a license, the court stated to the jury that in his opinion the defendant had violated the statute. He, however, gave the jury the privilege of retiring to their room, selecting a foreman, and returning a verdict, which privilege the jury exercised, and found the defendant guilty. Held, the record having disclosed that the opinion of the court was undoubtedly correct, the conviction should not be reversed.—People v. Stewart, 167 Mich. 417. Reversed in 232 U. S. 665, 58 L. ed. 786, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 476.

¶ 2590. An inadvertent misstatement of an item of testimony by the trial judge in his instructions to the jury is not ground for a reversal, where the remark passed unchallenged at the time, and was apparently not prejudicial.—People v. Caldwell, 107 Mich. 374.

¶ 2591. Where the attempt had been made to show that one who had confessed to a crime was insane at the time of confessing, and the record clearly implied that there was no evidence of that fact, though it disclosed some evidence on the one hand that he was insane a day and a half or two days after, and on the other that he was never insane at all, the rulings of the trial court on the question of such insanity, and the burden of proof and the nature of the evidence on that subject, were held immaterial and not to be assigned for error.—Sullivan v. People, 31 Mich 1.

¶ 2592. Defendant was convicted of breaking and entering in the nighttime a store not adjoining or occupied with a dwelling house, with intent to commit larceny. The court gave no charge that the jury, to convict, must find that the store was not adjoining nor occupied with a dwelling house. No request to so charge was made and no exception for failing so to charge was taken. There was abundant evidence on the point. Held, the upper court would not reverse for failure so to charge, where it was evident the conviction was just.—People v. Brott, 163 Mich. 150.

¶ 2593. One convicted of keeping a house of ill-fame cannot complain that the jury was instructed that, "however bad she may be, or however guilty of other offenses, the question is whether she is guilty of the offense charged"; the instruction having been in her interest, to prevent undue weight being given to evidence which had appeared in the case affecting her character for chastity, and showing that she had previously been accused of selling liquor without a license.—People v. Wells, 112 Mich. 648.

¶ 2594. The objection of the defendant in a prosecution for keeping his saloon open on Sunday, to the charge of the court was properly overruled, where among other things, the court said: "If the saloon was open, and people went in and liquor was sold to them, then the saloon was open in the meaning of the law. It makes no difference whether the door was open or not. If they went into the restaurant and from there found any means of access to the saloon, then it was open for business. It makes no difference how many people were in there; the only question is, was the saloon open for business?" since such charge was too favorable for defendant.—People v. Cummerford, 58 Mich. 328.

¶ 2595. On a trial for selling liquor to a minor the minor testified that respondent's barkeeper sold him liquor in respondent's presence, so that respondent must have known of it. Upon this undisputed testimony the court charged that respondent would be liable whether he knew the liquor was sold or not. Held, that the charge, if erroneous, was harmless, because there was no question of ignorance.—People v. Riley, 71 Mich. 349.

¶ 2596. In a prosecution for keeping a saloon open on a legal holiday, an affirmative answer by the court to the abstract question by a juror as to whether it would be the duty of the jury to convict, even if the barkeeper of defendant went in simply to fasten the door and neither drank nor sold drinks, even if an incorrect answer, was not error in the absence of testimony that such barkeeper went in to fasten the door.—People v. Kriesel, 136 Mich. 80.

¶ 2597. On a prosecution for resisting an officer who was attempting to serve a warrant on the defendant, a statement by the court to the jury that it was admitted that the warrant was a good and sufficient one, held not prejudicial to the defendant since the question whether the warrant was good or bad was for the court to decide.—People v. De Meaux, 194 Mich. 18.

¶ 2598. Where the testimony of a respondent charged with carnally knowing a female child under the age of fourteen years showed the act was in October, it was harmless error for the court in its charge to refer to the date as October 16th.—People v. Ten Elshof, 92 Mich. 167.

§ 550. ——Erroneous practice in giving charge.

¶ 2599. Where the jury in a criminal case returned into court, and no new instruction was given, and only a simple paragraph of the charge—which was in respondent's favor—was read over, when the jury again retired and returned a verdict of guilty, held, that these proceedings, though in the absence of respondent and his counsel, did not prejudice him.—People v. La Munion, 64 Mich. 709.

§ 551. Curing errors.

[Note. In the sections following the particular classes of errors are arranged with descriptions of the cause or act by which they were cured.]

Error in admitting questions or evidence cured by other matters, see post §§ 552-557, 561, 562.

Error in excluding evidence cured by other matters, see post §§ 558-562.

Errors in respect to opening statements and arguments to jury cured by instructions or other matters, see post §§ 563-565.

Instructions or refusal to charge cured by other charge or by verdict, see post §§ 566, 567.

Cure of errors by verdict, see post § 567.

Waiver and cure of errors and defects in indictment or information, see ante § 65.

Cure of defects in count of indictment by election, see ante § 65.

Matters waived by pleading to or going to trial on merits, see ante §§ 117, 118.

Waiver of errors and of exceptions taken to rulings, see ante §§ 531, 532.

Sufficiency of defendant's evidence to sustain conviction notwithstanding objection made when People rested, see post ¶ 2833.

Matters aggravating error, see ante § 534.

Harmlessness of errors where peremptory challenges are not exhausted, see ante §§ 538, 539.

¶ 2600. The withdrawal of a former prosecuting attorney from a criminal prosecution after arguing a motion to quash the information and asking a few questions of a witness, even if shown to be in the employ of private persons interested in the prosecution, saves any question under an objection made to his taking part in such prosecution.—People v. Schick, 75 Mich. 592.

¶ 2601. The error in refusing counsel for accused leave to suggest a form of question on his examination was not cured by the defendant being afterwards allowed to go upon the stand and make a further statement, in which he said only, "I know nothing about the stealing, and had nothing to do with it"; as the defendant evidently needed the aid which counsel proposed to give as much at this time as he had needed it before.—Annis v. People, 13 Mich. 511.

§ 552. ——Admission of improper evidence by other proofs.

Admission of secondary evidence followed by primary evidence, see post § 553.
Cure by adduction of like evidence by accused, see post § 554.
Cure by admissions or concessions, see post § 555.
Cure by striking out or by instructions, see post §§ 561, 562.
Harmless answer curing improper question, see post § 557.

¶ 2602. Error in admitting evidence will not reverse where the facts it tends to prove are established by other good evidence.—People v. Adams, 162 Mich. 371.

¶ 2603. Receiving a dying declaration, if error, was harmless as to circumstances wherein it was in accord with undisputed facts.—People v. Beverly, 108 Mich. 509.

¶ 2604. A reversal will not be granted in a prosecution for burglary because an officer was permitted to testify that the wife of defendant stated to him that the room in which the stolen goods were found was hers, where the point was so fully covered by other evidence that no doubt could have existed in the mind of the jury even if this testimony had been excluded.—People v. Gregory, 130 Mich. 522.

¶ 2605. In a criminal case the fact that evidence other than an alleged improper confession is sufficient to sustain a conviction does not make the admission of such confession improperly extorted harmless, as it cannot be said what weight the jury gave to the confession in reaching their verdict.—People v. Brockett, 195 Mich. 169.

¶ 2606. On trial for resisting an officer while he was arresting accused for disturbing a religious meeting, evidence that accused disturbed it earlier in the evening before the officer came, was not prejudicial; where accused was permitted to show that he was assisting to preserve order before the officer's arrival and where the jury were charged not to consider it as bearing against accused.—People v. Rounds, 67 Mich. 482.

¶ 2607. Testimony of a witness in a prosecution for rape, that he found snow which had a red color produced by blood, at the scene of the alleged offense, was not subject to complaint on the ground of the witness not being an expert, where respondent in his testimony himself accounted for the condition as having been caused by his hand bleeding.—People v. Rich, 133 Mich. 14.

¶ 2608. In a prosecution of a woman for keeping a house of ill fame it was not reversible error to admit evidence that the respondent under an assumed name kept a personal bank and store account, where she offered no evidence in her defense and the undisputed testimony showed that there was no evidence that she was married except an understanding in the community that a man who lived with her was her husband, and the evidence failed to connect him in any way with the keeping of the house, and there was an abundance of testimony that the house kept by her was a house of ill fame.—People v. Wheeler, 142 Mich. 212.

¶ 2609. Admission of evidence that witness talked to defendant about another larceny than the one charged and accused him of it also is not cured by further testimony that defendant denied witness's accusation.—People v. Hammond, 177 Mich. 416.

¶ 2610. The fact that in a criminal prosecution for taking indecent liberties with a young female child, wherein there was also a count charging assault with attempt to ravish, the court permitted the city marshal to narrate a conversation with the child wherein she had told him of the details of the crime constituting the second count if immaterial is not prejudicial; where everything he had testified to was already in the case without objection, and especially so where the second count had been withdrawn and the court instructed the jury that they could not consider his testimony except the fact that she had made complaint to him.—People v. Harris, 144 Mich. 12.

¶ 2611. Whatever error there was in allowing the prosecutrix in rape, after testifying that the respondent had inveigled her into the wine room of a saloon, and while there, under threat that if she cried out she would be arrested for being in a saloon, accomplished his purpose, to testify as to statements made by a third man in the absence of respondent, to the effect that he claimed to have authority to arrest her for being in a saloon, was cured later by its being shown that, after leaving her, respondent went into the saloon proper, that the inmates joked him about "his girl," that he ordered beer for the boys at the bar, that respondent and such third man were together in the saloon, that he left respondent and went into the wine room and was there when respondent returned; and that he eluded the officer who sought to subpoena him and could not be found afterwards.—People v. Murphy, 145 Mich. 524.

¶ 2612. The introduction of a hotel register containing the signature of the defendant for comparison on a prosecution for forgery, was harmless error, where the objection is made for the first time in the court of review; and where an expert witness was allowed to testify from a comparison between the signature upon the check and that upon the register; and particularly where the evidence leaves no possible doubt of defendant's guilt.—People v. Tollefson, 145 Mich. 444.

¶ 2613. Where the prosecuting attorney in his opening statement and before any testimony had been presented told the jury that the only issue in the trial was the fact of a certain settlement alleged to have been made between the accused and the prosecuting witness, whether the accused had repaid the money he admitted having received, any error in admitting documentary proof tending to show the receipt of the money is harmless in view of the fact that there was an abundance of other testimony showing he had received the money.—People v. Peck, 147 Mich. 84.

§ 553. ——Admission of secondary evidence by reception of primary.

¶ 2614. Error in the admission of secondary evidence of the contents of an instrument is cured by the subsequent introduction of the original paper by the opposite party. People v. Pope, 108 Mich. 361.

¶ 2615. An assignment of error based upon the admission of testimony of the contents of certain letters, will not be considered where the letters themselves were afterward produced.—People v. Peck, 139 Mich. 680.

¶ 2616. The introduction of photographic copies of handwriting in a case of forgery is immaterial, whether right or wrong, if the originals are afterwards produced.—People v. Van Alstine, 57 Mich. 69.

¶ 2617. The admission in a prosecution for disorderly conduct of parol evidence of previous convictions is harmless error where respondent himself testifies that he has been confined in the house of correction several times for being drunk.—People v. Kelly, 99 Mich. 82.

§ 554. ——Adduction of similar proofs by respondent.

¶ 2618. Respondent in a criminal prosecution cannot complain of the admission for the prosecution of facts which the defense proved at a later stage of the case.—People v. Crawford, 48 Mich. 498.

¶ 2619. The admission, on the prosecution of an officer of a corporation for embezzlement of money of the corporation by receiving an excessive salary, of evidence given in bankruptcy proceedings on examination into the affairs of the bankrupt corporation, which is incompetent because of the immunity granted by 30 U. S. Stats. L. 548, is harmless error where the accused himself afterwards goes upon the witness stand and substantially reiterates all that was said before the referee.—People v. Lay, 193 Mich. 476.

¶ 2620. In a prosecution for rape it is immaterial whether the prosecutrix was intimidated by the state's attorney so as to give an answer in the affirmative to the question whether the defendant put his arms around her and kissed her on the night of the alleged rape where the defendant himself testified that as brother of the foster mother of the girl he had frequently kissed her.—People v. Smith, 192 Mich. 355.

§ 555. ——Admissions or concessions curing improper evidence.

¶ 2621. In a prosecution for assault and battery, error in permitting the jury to learn that a petition for defendant's discharge had been circulated by his fellow employees was harmless, where the defendant practically admitted his guilt.—People v. Green, 155 Mich. 524.

§ 556. ——Improper questioning of accused by suggestion of privilege.

¶ 2622. In the cross-examination of a prisoner on trial for crime, upon his statement to the jury, it is error to allow questions relating to matters outside of the statement, such as whether he had lived or been in certain places named, and whether he had not been arrested at one place on a charge of murder, and arrested also at other places, and put in jail at still other places. The error is not cured by instructing the prisoner that he may decline answering at his option, especially where the asking of the questions had been accompanied by the production, in sight of the jury, of several letters, in a manner calculated to convey an impression that they contained damaging disclosures which the prisoner must either admit or falsify the facts.—Gale v. People, 26 Mich. 157.

§ 557. ——Harmless answer to improper question.

¶ 2623. In a prosecution for manslaughter an accused cannot object to an answer to a question asked of a witness as to his arrest for the trouble where such answer was a mere denial which did not injure him.—People v. McArron, 121 Mich. 1.

§ 558. ——Improper rejection of proof; other proofs.

Exclusion cured by later reception to receive, see post § 559.
Refusal to call witnesses cured by ant's calling them, see post §
Waiver of right to make statement stand to testify, see ante ¶

¶ 2624. Error in excluding laration is cured by permitting by whom it was proposed to state afterwards what in the interview with dec
the declaration was mad
25 Mich. 405.

¶ 2625. Whether a tion was or was not comes unimportant

the witness testified upon the trial to the facts covered thereby.—People v. Smith, 106 Mich. 431.

¶ 2626. Whether an objection to documentary evidence in a criminal case was well or ill founded became unimportant where the fact to which the documentary evidence related was otherwise proven.—People v. Schoonmaker, 119 Mich. 242.

¶ 2627. Where detectives had testified that they were to be paid a certain sum per day for their work in looking up violators of the liquor law, under an arrangement with county officers including the sheriff, the exclusion of testimony of one of the detectives as to what the sheriff said to him was harmless where the witness had already stated that he could not recollect what the sheriff said to him, and it was evident that the question had already been answered.—People v. Hilliard, 119 Mich. 24.

¶ 2628. Upon a trial for receiving stolen goods a witness for the prosecution, who had taken part in the removal of the goods, was asked whether he knew he was criminally liable for what he did the night the goods were stolen. This was excluded as immaterial, but as other testimony by the same witness fully covered the question of his knowledge of the responsibility for his acts, it was held that the exclusion, though erroneous, was not prejudicial.—People v. Considine, 105 Mich. 149.

¶ 2629. The exclusion of evidence of restitution, in a prosecution for larceny, is not reversible error where the substance thereof was gone into later in the trial so that respondent was not prejudiced by the exclusion of the evidence at the particular time complained of.—People v. Hutchings, 137 Mich. 527.

¶ 2630. Exclusion of testimony of respondent's good reputation for truth and veracity, in a prosecution for perjury, is not cured by the admission of testimony that his general reputation and his reputation for honesty and integrity was good, since this does not show that the exclusion of the other testimony was not injurious.—People v. Albers, 137 Mich. 678.

§ 559. ——Exclusion of evidence cured by reception or offer to receive later.

Exclusion cured by striking other evidence, see post § 561.

¶ 2631. Where evidence is ruled out as not proper on cross-examination, the correctness of the ruling will not be inquired into on error, where it appears that the witness is afterwards called by the party offering the evidence, and examined fully on the subject.—Dillin v. People, 8 Mich. 357.

¶ 2632. Where error was committed in excluding evidence on cross-examination of the witnesses for a criminal prosecution, it was cured by allowing the defense to examine the witnesses fully in his own behalf on similar questions.—Burden v. People, 26 Mich. 162.

¶ 2633. Refusal to permit a question is immaterial if a question of the same import is afterward allowed and counsel are permitted to pursue the subject as fully as they see fit.—People v. Pearsall, 50 Mich. 233.

¶ 2634. An error committed in sustaining an objection to the admission of expert evidence as to whether a wounded man's body would remain in an upright position, when he had hold of a rod to steady himself, is cured by afterwards permitting an answer to the question.—People v. Swartz, 118 Mich. 292.

¶ 2635. The exclusion of evidence as to whether a witness ever saw a person accused of manslaughter before the trial, cannot be objected to on appeal where such evidence is subsequently admitted in the course of the trial.—People v. McArron, 121 Mich. 1.

¶ 2636. Error in refusing to allow a witness to testify that he intended to return the goods he took is not prejudicial where the court later reversed his ruling, and permitted the testimony, and followed this by correctly instructing the jury on the question of the intent essential to prove the crime.—People v. Wycoff, 150 Mich. 449.

¶ 2637. In a prosecution for murder of a husband by his wife, where plea of self-defense was filed, and the accused had testified to certain previous assaults by her husband upon her, the exclusion of the testimony of certain witnesses as to her appearance following such assaults, held not prejudicial error where the witnesses subsequently described her appearance.—People v. Cutler, 197 Mich. 6.

¶ 2638. Where an objection to a question in cross-examination is sustained, and substantially the same question is asked and answered without objection, error cannot be assigned in the supreme court on the ground that the point covered in the first question was not allowed in cross-examination, for the point in substance was admitted without objection.—People v. Neely, 171 Mich. 249.

§ 560. ——Refusal to call witnesses by defendant's calling them.

¶ 2639. The refusal of the prosecution to produce a witness whose name was indorsed upon the information is not ground for a reversal, where respondent himself afterwards placed the witness upon the stand, and obtained the benefit of his testimony.—People v. Resh, 107 Mich. 251.

§ 561. ——Errors in evidence by striking out.

Cautionary instruction in addition to striking out, see post § 562.

¶ 2640. In a criminal case if testimony once received under objections has a serious tendency against respondent the error is not cured by striking out.—People v. Pinkerton, 79 Mich. 110; People v. Fowler, 104 Mich. 449.

¶ 2641. An error of the trial court in a murder case in excluding the evidence offered by defendant to show an entire conversation, parts of which the state put in evidence as a confession, is not cured by a ruling striking out the testimony of one of the state's witnesses with respect to the conversation, where the testimony of the other witnesses is allowed to stand.—People v. Bowen, 171 Mich. 129.

¶ 2642. The error in improperly admitting a statement as a dying declaration, made when the declarant was not in extremis, where his knowledge as to who shot him was based on hearsay, is not cured by striking out the incompetent portions of the declaration, which, if admissible at all, was admissible in its entirety.—People v. Christmas, 181 Mich. 634.

¶ 2643. The letting in of testimony improper because lacking certainty is not error where it is immediately struck out, and the jury is cautioned to disregard it.—People v. Droste, 160 Mich. 66.

¶ 2644. Where, in answer to a question as to whether he knew the respondent, a witness for the people stated that he was "unlucky enough to get acquainted with him,' which reply was promply stricken out by the court, the failure of the court expressly to rebuke the witness, and to instruct the jury to disregard the statement, was not ground for reversal.—People v. Smith, 106 Mich. 431

§ 562. ——Errors in evidence by corrective instruction.

Instruction making harmless evidence of possession of stolen goods, see also ante ¶ 823.

¶ 2645. Striking out testimony that has been improperly allowed in a criminal case and cautioning the jury not to be influenced by it, do not necessarily obviate its effects.—People v. Wolcott, 51 Mich. 612.

¶ 2646. Error in permitting the introduction of immaterial evidence which is afterwards stricken out by the court is not prejudicial where the court cautions the jury that they must not consider the immaterial testimony.—People v. Swartz, 118 Mich. 292.

¶ 2647. In a prosecution for arson, the trial court permitted witnesses to state as their opinion that a certain woman seen by them at night on a road near the scene of the crime was the respondent. Later, when it appeared that there was but slight ground of fact to rest their opinion upon, the court § 564. ——Improper remarks and arguments cured by charge.

Cure of improper comment on failure to testify, see post § 565.
Cure of argument by verdict, see post § 567.
Charge of caution against improper remarks or argument, see ante § 451.

¶ 2654. Judgment will not be reversed because counsel for one party, in the argument to the jury, is permitted to take an erroneous view of the law, if the judge in his charge corrects the error and truly states the law on the point.—People v. Jenness, 5 Mich. 305.

¶ 2655. Where the prosecuting attorney in his argument in a criminal prosecution for selling liquor in violation of the local option law, assumes facts not in evidence and predicates guilt thereon, the error is not reversible where the court immediately instructs the jury to disregard the remarks and also does the same in his charge.—People v. Bedell, 162 Mich. 230.

¶ 2656. A conviction will not be reversed merely because of improper language by the prosecutor, where the court immediately stated, in the presence of the jury, that the language should not have been used, and where it was not of a character to work prejudice to the jury, in view of the statement by the court.—People v. Grant, 111 Mich. 346.

¶ 2657. A verdict in a criminal prosecution for homicide should not be set aside because of an improper remark by the prosecuting attorney, where the court properly controls the trial, checks the attorney who goes too far, and instructs the jury to disregard the improper remark.—People v. Swartz, 118 Mich. 292.

¶ 2658. A remark by the prosecutor in a murder trial of a woman for killing her husband that the relations between respondent and the man who did the killing were filthy and improper is cured by an instruction that there is no testimony to show improper relations between the parties, and that the argument of the prosecutor upon that point must be rejected.—People v. Pope, 108 Mich. 361.

¶ 2659. The expression of an opinion by the prosecuting attorney as to respondent's guilt is harmless where the jury was expressly instructed to disregard such opinion, except as it was supported by evidence.—People v. Pope, 108 Mich. 361.

¶ 2660. Comments by the prosecutor as to the contents of a paper of which only the front part and the face of the respondent's photograph were in evidence, were not error where promptly checked by the court before any harm could have been done to the respondent.—People v. McDonald, 133 Mich. 366.

¶ 2661. In a prosecution for murder, the statement of the prosecuting attorney to the defendant who is a witness for himself, that "we ascertained that what you said to us was not true" at once condemned by the court is not prejudicial error.—People v. Higgins, 127 Mich. 291.

¶ 2662. Where on a trial for murder the prosecuting attorney in his address to the jury recited admissions made by defendant while testifying in his own behalf, to the effect that he had been arrested a number of times for assault and battery, had been convicted of a certain offense, etc.; an instruction by the court that these admissions were not to be considered as bearing upon the question of defendant's guilt, but only upon his credibility as a witness, cured any error that might have arisen from the prosecutor's language.—People v. Welch, 80 Mich. 616.

¶ 2663. Where the trial court, in a criminal prosecution, referred by name to certain witnesses in its charge, without commenting upon their testimony, except to indicate that they were witnesses for the People, and concluded the charge with the admonition that their verdict should be based entirely upon the evidence actually produced before them and not the statements of attorneys or the court as to the testimony, held that such admonition cured any undue impression from such references.—People v. Cutler, 197 Mich. 6.

¶ 2664. In a criminal prosecution in a recorder's court, the mention by the court of the fact that respondent had been convicted in the police court, is not reversible error, where mention of the trial in the police court had been made by respondent's counsel, especially where the court expressly charged that the jury had no right to consider anything which had occurred in another court as bearing upon respondent's guilt or innocence.—People v. Green, 155 Mich. 524.

¶ 2665. In a prosecution for assault and battery, in his argument to the jury the prosecuting attorney stated that if they found defendant guilty they would only be doing what another jury had done in the justice's court before the case was appealed. The court immediately instructed the jury to disregard this remark. Held, the remark, though improper, was not ground for reversal.—People v. Yund, 163 Mich. 504.

¶ 2666. Where in a criminal case the respondent on the witness stand volunteers the opinion that he is about to be acquitted, it is not reversible error for the prosecuting attorney to retaliate with the opinion that respondent is about to be convicted, where the court rules that said retort is improper.—People v. Hoek, 169 Mich. 87.

¶ 2667. In a prosecution for keeping a house of ill-fame, the intimations by the prosecuting attorney in his argument that the women housed therein were prostitutes does not constitute reversible error when made in the heat of the trial in the midst of a series of objections, and when the trial court sustains said objections and states that the argument is improper.—People v. Hoek, 169 Mich. 87.

¶ 2668. In a prosecution for arson against a respondent for setting fire to her own buildings, there was evidence that the value of the buildings was considerably larger than the insurance thereon. The prosecuting attorney in his argument to the jury on the question of motive said, "It is common knowledge that people burn buildings for insurance." The court immediately directed the jury to "take nothing from that statement." Held, the remark did not constitute reversible error.—People v. Stewart, 163 Mich. 1.

§ 565. ——Improper comment on failure to testify or adduce proof by charge to disregard.

¶ 2669. It is error to permit the prosecuting attorney to comment to the jury upon the respondent's failure to call witnesses to testify as to his good character, and such error is not cured by instructing the jury not to consider the comment.—People v. Evans, 72 Mich. 367.

¶ 2670. The prosecuting attorney's error in commenting upon respondent's failure to testify in his own behalf was not considered ground for reversing a conviction where such comment was immediately retracted, and where the court, on the prosecutor's request, instructed the jury that such failure raised no presumption of guilt.—People v. Hess, 85 Mich. 128.

¶ 2671. It is improper to suggest the defendant's failure to testify in a criminal prosecution, but not prejudicial where immediately retracted and properly covered in the court's charge.—People v. Salsbury, 134 Mich. 537.

¶ 2672. A conviction will not be reversed because the prosecuting attorney, in his argument to the jury, commented upon respondent's failure to call the parents of his wife as witnesses to corroborate a material element of time in an alibi, where the court at once ruled that such comment was improper.—People v. Smith, 106 Mich. 431.

¶ 2673. Failure to charge when requested, that no inference should be drawn from the failure of accused to take the stand in his own behalf, is not cured by the response of the court to counsel in a colloquy, "I will say to the jury that no stress whatever is to be laid on the fact that defendant did not go on the stand," the colloquy itself having called the attention of the jury to such fact.—People v. Messer, 148 Mich. 168.

§ 566. ——Instructions or refusal to charge cured by withdrawal or other charge.

[Note. The so-called cure of error in a charge by other portions of the charge involves a misuse of the term "error," since taken as a whole the charge is or is not erroneous. If not erroneous there was no error to be cured. If erroneous as a whole it could not be cured by its own qualities. For these reasons the matter is treated as precedents on the "construction of the charge as a whole" and is classified ante §§ 415, 416.]

Instructions or refusal to instruct cured by verdict, see post § 567.

¶ 2674. Where the court, in a trial for polygamy, charged that there must be at least two witnesses besides the magistrate or minister present at a marriage ceremony, and that "it appears from the testimony that but one witness was present," the error is not cured by recalling the clause referring to the testimony and one witness, since it still left the charge as to what was necessary to constitute valid marriage.—People v. Goodrode, 132 Mich. 542.

§ 567. Cure of errors by verdict rendering them immaterial.

Verdict as curing erroneous amendment or addition of count, see also ante ¶¶ 373, 374.

¶ 2675. A ruling will not be reviewed o error when it has become immaterial by fa ure to convict on the point to which it lates.—People v. Knapp, 26 Mich. 112.

¶ 2676. A statement in argument th witness not called would have corrobo one who was called and testified as to bank books showed, though errone harmless, where the conviction of for embezzlement was based on an ite entered on the books but proved by timony of another witness.—People 148 Mich. 168.

¶ 2677. Where a prosecutor in case used evidence that had b stricken as a basis of argumen held that as the jury probably argument it did not furnish versal.—People v. Bollman, 1

¶ 2678. In a prosecution printed matter which was fact the court at first err to the jury the question instructed them it was t held of no consequence der any view of the convicted.—People v. T

¶ 2679. Where th charge the crime o murder, such error make are harmles victed of the lesser crime of assault with intent to do great bodily harm less than murder.—People v. Sharp, 163 Mich. 79.

¶ 2680. Where a defendant is convicted of the lesser offense of assault with intent to do great bodily harm less than the crime of murder, the upper court will not review alleged errors in the rulings and charge bearing on the crime of assault with intent to murder.—People v. Lieska, 161 Mich. 630.

¶ 2681. In a prosecution for an assault with intent to kill and murder, it is not reversible error to show what the respondent an hour after the assault said what he would have done at the time of the assault if he had thought of it, or what he would do to the complaining witness if he ever came upon his premises again, where the jury convicts respondent only of the offense of assault and battery.—People v. Klise, 166 Mich. 1.

¶ 2682. Where a respondent is convicted of manslaughter only, errors in the court's charge as to the crime of murder are harmless.—People v. Collins, 166 Mich. 4.

¶ 2683. Where the court instructs the jury correctly as to the distinction between murder in the second degree and manslaughter, an erroneous additional statement that the practical difference was one of maximum penalty is not prejudicial where the accused is convicted of manslaughter.—People v. Sauerbier, 173 Mich. 521.

¶ 2684. Where in a charge of assault, error is committed in admitting evidence of a defendant's prior conviction to show his intent with reference to the act in question, the error is harmless where the jury has acquitted the defendant of intent to do bodily harm.—People v. Hoffman, 154 Mich. 145.

¶ 2685. Where the verdict of the jury is the only one possible under the evidence, and there was ground for the argument that the accused had committed forgery and subornation of perjury to defend himself upon the charge upon which he was being tried, and the prosecuting attorney believed the charges to be true he was justified in using strong language and his argument is not ground for reversal.—People v. Peck, 147 Mich. 84.

XVI. REVIEW.

A. MODE AND RIGHT OF REVIEW.

§ 568. In general.

Error or exceptions as proper procedure, see post § 569.
Error or mandamus or habeas corpus as proper mode of review, see post § 570.
Certiorari as proper or available mode of review, see post § 571.
Review by reservation and certification of questions, see post § 572.
Reviewable decisions and judgments, see post § 574.
Reservable or certifiable questions, see post § 575.
Who entitled to review, see post § 576.
Jurisdiction and power to review, see post § 577.
Waiver of objection to mode of review, see post § 579.
Bail and recognizance pending review, see post § 578.
Procedure for review and procedure in supreme court pending review and judgment, see post XVI, B.
Record and bill of exceptions for review, see post XVI, C.
Hearing and reviewing the case and judgment on review, see post XVI, D.
Mode of saving questions by objection and exception below, see ante XIV.
Appeals from convictions before justices and minor courts, see post § 662 et seq.
Propriety of writ of error after judgment on exceptions and sentence below in order to make final judgment for writ of error to United States Supreme Court, see post ¶ 2943.
Mode and right of review in civil cases, see Appeal; Certiorari.
Mode of review of convictions for violations of ordinances, see Municipal Corporations, XVI, B.
Provision for writs of error in criminal cases, see Comp. L. 1915, § 14587.
Provision for review by exceptions to supreme court, see Comp. L. 1915, § 15837 et seq.
Right to writ of error for errors of record notwithstanding resort to exceptions, see Comp. L. 1915, § 15841.

¶ 2686. There are two statutory methods of review of criminal proceedings. One is by exception before sentence; the other, by a writ of error.—People v. West, 143 Mich. 586.

¶ 2687. Review on exceptions to proceedings in criminal cases is purely statutory.—People v. West, 143 Mich. 586.

¶ 2688. Where a writ of error is the means of review sought to review a criminal proceeding it is upon the assumption that the writ has a function to perform and that a judgment has been entered.—People v. West, 143 Mich. 586.

¶ 2689. Where exceptions before sentence is the method of review sought in a criminal proceeding, a writ of error performs no function, there being no judgment.—People v. West, 143 Mich. 586.

¶ 2690. Comp. L. 1897, §§ 11964-11968, providing for exceptions before sentence in criminal proceedings were designed to secure the right of bail until a conviction is determined in the supreme court unless the circuit judge is clearly of the opinion that the exceptions alleged are frivolous, immaterial, or intended for delay.—People v. West, 143 Mich. 586.

¶ 2691. Error is the proper remedy to review the validity of a judgment and sentence in a common-law criminal proceeding.—In re Coffeen, 38 Mich. 311.

§ 569. Error or exceptions.

Scope of errors open to review on error and exceptions respectively, see post §§ 602, 603.

Writ of error rather than certification of question where case has gone to judgment, see post ¶ 2702.

Proper mode of making final judgment after review and remand so as to have writ of error to United States Supreme Court, see post ¶ 2943.

Proper judgment in supreme court on exceptions, see post § 640.

¶ 2692. No writ of error is needed in a criminal case where there has been no judgment; the case comes up on the exceptions.—Patten v. People, 18 Mich. 314; People v. Knapp, 26 Mich. 112.

¶ 2693. No writ of error is needed where there has been no judgment; the case comes up on the exceptions.—People v. Knapp, 26 Mich. 112.

¶ 2694. The denial of a motion in arrest of judgment is reviewable on exceptions before judgment notwithstanding the failure of the trial court to give the reasons for such denial.—People v. Rathbun, 105 Mich. 699.

¶ 2695. A conviction will not be reviewed on exceptions before sentence.—Village of Lake Odessa v. Randall, 158 Mich. 205.

§ 570. Error or mandamus or habeas corpus.

Nature and office of mandamus and grounds for mandamus, see Mandamus.

Mandamus as means of review, see also Mandamus, II.

Habeas corpus as means of review, see Habeas Corpus, I.

Habeas corpus as remedy for imprisonment on wholly void sentence, see Habeas Corpus § 1.

¶ 2696. Mandamus lies, and is a more suitable process than a writ of error, to review a decision quashing an indictment.—People ex rel. Robison v. Swift, 59 Mich. 529.

¶ 2697. The alleged want of a preliminary examination, and the illegal arrest in another state, and transportation into this state, of a respondent who has been convicted and sentenced to state prison, cannot be considered on habeas corpus; the remedy being by writ of error.—In re Ellis, 79 Mich. 322.

§ 571. Certiorari.

Necessity of final judgment to support certiorari, see post § 572.

Waiver of objection to propriety of certiorari, see post ¶ 2714.

Certiorari in aid of writ of error to bring up full record, see post § 601.

Procedure on certiorari to recall transferred case, see ante ¶ 542.

Nature, office and propriety of certiorari, see Certiorari.

¶ 2698. Where, upon a trial for murder, the court ordered the officers to exclude from the courtroom all but "respectable citizens," such error is properly reviewable on certiorari rather than by bill of exceptions.—People v. Murray, 89 Mich. 276.

¶ 2699. In a prosecution for rape where a disputed question arose as to whether the offense charged was committed within the jurisdiction of the court, the judge charged the jury upon this question of fact alone, and upon their finding that the offense was committed within the jurisdiction of the court they were instructed upon the whole case, and rendered a verdict of guilty. Respondent applies for certiorari to review the conviction. Held, that since all the errors relied upon appear upon the face of the record, respondent's remedy is by writ of error, not certiorari.—People v. James, 15 Mich. 548.

¶ 2700. Where the court denied an appli tion for certiorari, brought by the respond in a criminal case on the denial of a mo to dismiss the case because the examin of the complaining witness did not show the offense charged was committed, and on Act No. 310, Pub. Acts 1905, pro that decisions on motions to quash wri jurisdictional grounds may be review writ of certiorari, upon the ground offense could be shown later in the tion to be filed by the prosecuting it did not intend to decide that grievance would be reviewed und —People v. Chamblin, 149 Mich.

§ 572. ——Necessity for final ju

See also ante ¶ 2700.

Finality of judgment to suppo general, see Certiorari § 2

¶ 2701. Certiorari will n the action of the circuit cou quash an indictment found prior to the final disposit the lower court.—People Mich. 583.

§ 573. Reservation or ce

Reservable and certifia § 575.

Provisions for report judge to suprer see Comp. L. 19

¶ 2702. After ju in a criminal ca raise in the supreme court the question of the constitutionality of a statute, on a certificate of the trial court, but must resort to a writ of error.—People v. Dickerson, 162 Mich. 400.

§ 574. Reviewable decisions and judgments.

Matters reviewable on exceptions, see also ante ¶¶ 2694, 2695.
Finality of judgment to support certiorari, see ante § 572.
Finality and completion of judgment for review in civil cases, see Appeal, III.
Review of habeas corpus judgment, see Habeas Corpus § 15.

¶ 2703. The discharge on habeas corpus of a prisoner convicted of a criminal offense is final, and the People cannot bring error to review it.—People v. Conant, 59 Mich. 565; People v. Fairman, 59 Mich. 568.

¶ 2704. An order by the circuit court judge ordering an appeal bond given by respondent in a criminal proceeding forfeited, because of his nonappearance is not a final order or determination.—People v. Stimer, 82 Mich. 17.

§ 575. Cases and questions reservable.

Certification as proper mode of review, see ante § 573.

¶ 2705. A motion for a new trial, on the ground that the verdict is against evidence, for the reason that the facts proved, or to prove which evidence was given, did not make out the crime, embraces both law and fact. A motion for a new trial on the ground that the verdict is against the weight of evidence presents a question of fact alone. And neither of these questions could be reserved for the opinion of the supreme court. —People v. Adwards, 5 Mich. 22.

¶ 2706. An assignment that "the court erred in that part of its charge where he charges the jury in relation to the crime of rape, because the same is contrary to law, and in this case misleading to the jury and contrary to the evidence," is too general to be considered.—People v. De Fore, 64 Mich. 693.

¶ 2707. An assignment "that the court erred in refusing to grant the request submitted by defendant's counsel, and in refusing to instruct the jury as stated in said several requests; that the refusal of each and every one of defendant's requests was error," is not too general.—People v. De Fore, 64 Mich. 693.

§ 576. Who entitled; review at public instance.

Constitutional right to review, see Constitutional Law § 206.
Right of People to writ of error to review quashals and certain other decisions less than acquittal or conviction, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 159.

¶ 2708. At the common law, and under our constitution, no writ of error or other proceeding lies on behalf of the public to review a judgment of acquittal in a criminal case, as no one can twice be put in jeopardy. —People ex rel. Robison v. Swift, 59 Mich. 529.

¶ 2709. Though error does not lie in behalf of the public to review a judgment of acquittal, proceedings that have not gone to trial may be reviewed.—People ex rel. Robison v. Swift, 59 Mich. 529.

§ 577. Jurisdiction and power to review.

Jurisdiction of supreme court in general, see Courts § 52 et seq.
Appellate jurisdiction in civil cases, see Appeal, II.

¶ 2710. Circuit court commissioners cannot review the judicial action of any court in holding persons convicted of crime, or issue writs of habeas corpus upon grounds involving judicial action.—In re Buddington, 29 Mich. 472; In re Burger, 39 Mich. 203.

§ 578. Bail and recognizance pending review.

Object of exceptions before judgment, see also ante ¶ 2690.
Grounds for allowing stay and bail, see post § 585.
Enlargement on bail pending writ of error, see Comp. L. 1915, § 14590.
Provisions for recognizance by accused pending exceptions, see Comp. L. 1915, §§ 15840-15842.

¶ 2711. Mandamus denied to compel the admission to bail of a respondent who, after reversal of conviction of murder, had been admitted to bail and, pending his second trial, had been ordered into custody.—Hull v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 87 Mich. 497.

¶ 2712. Where exceptions in a criminal case are transmitted to the supreme court for review before sentence, that court has no power to admit the defendant to bail.—People v. McKinney, 9 Mich. 444.

¶ 2713. Where a criminal case is pending in the supreme court on exceptions before sentence, the circuit judge, not having found that such exceptions were frivolous, cannot have the respondent—who is under bail—arrested and sentenced and refuse bail, since under How. St. § 9578, the signing of the bill of exceptions stays all further proceedings unless the judge shall find that the exceptions are frivolous, immaterial or dilatory.—In re Montague, 70 Mich. 157.

§ 579. Waiver of objection to mode of review.

¶ 2714. Whether certiorari is the proper process to bring up for review the alleged wrongful action of a circuit judge in sentencing to state prison a receiver of stolen property who claims to have made statutory satisfaction to the injured party, quære; but return having been made to the writ, the errors assigned upon such return were disposed of.—People v. Hubbard, 86 Mich. 440.

B. PROCEDURE FOR ERROR AND MATTERS PENDING REVIEW.

§ 580. In general; application, leave and issuance of writ.

For review on exceptions, see post § 581.
Authority and functions of attorneys on review, see post § 582.
Calendaring and setting cause for hearing, see post § 583.
Dismissal or abatement of cause, see post § 584.
Supersedeas and stay, a transfer of jurisdiction by taking review, and procedure for bail pending review, see post § 585.
Assigning and specifying the errors relied on, see post §§ 586-588.
Briefing and arguing the case, see post § 589.
Making up and contents of the record and bill of exceptions, see post XVI, C.
Proceedings after review, see post XVII.
Procedure in trial court to save question by objection and exception to ruling, see ante XIV.
Request for time to prepare for review as extending time for sentence, see ante § 485.
Suspension of sentence to permit preparation for review, see ante § 494.
Allowance and issuance of writ or error, see Comp. L. 1915, §§ 14587, 14588.
Notice of application for writ of error in capital cases, see Comp. L. 1915, § 14588.
Issuance of writ of error as of course in other than capital cases, see Comp. L. 1915, § 14589.

¶ 2715. The proper administration of the law demands of convicted persons diligence in determining the method proposed to be pursued to secure a review of the proceedings, and in advising the trial court thereof.—People v. West, 143 Mich. 586.

¶ 2716. Where a defendant seeks to have his cause reviewed by writ of error after sentence, the writ issues as a matter of course, and unless he desires an order staying execution of the sentence and enlargement on bail, no allowance of said writ or other order is necessary.—People v. Fritch, 161 Mich. 111.

§ 581. Procedure for review on exceptions.

Effect of exceptions to leave case pending in court below, see post § 585.
Needlessness of assignments of error, see post § 586.
Procedure on exceptions to supreme court, see Comp. L. 1915, § 15837 et seq.

¶ 2717. In order to obtain the review of a conviction of crime by exceptions before sentence, a compliance with the statute (Comp. Laws 1897, §§ 11964-11969, How. Ann. St., 2nd Ed., §§ 15135-15140) is essential.—People v. Macomber, 182 Mich. 59.

¶ 2718. The practice provide Comp. L. 1897, § 11964, How.
§ 15135, relating to exceptions cases to any opinion, direction o of the court in any matter of la and should be followed.—People
176 Mich. 381.

§ 582. Authority and functions of Fixing compensation for taking review, see ante § 509.

Duty of appointed attorney to fol review and right to enhanc services on review, see Com § 15913.

¶ 2719. Although it is a gener the attorney-general represents t the supreme court, that court m prosecuting attorney on applicat the quashing of an indictment (Public L. 1887, Act No. 72).—Pe
Robison v. Swift, 59 Mich. 529.

¶ 2720. Where the attorney-g pears for the people in a crimin confesses error, the supreme cou no attention to suggestions fron respect to the case.—People v. Bu 199.

¶ 2721. The management of cri in the supreme court remains un trol of the attorney-general, an ment by him for a continuance upon the prosecuting attorney n ing the duties laid upon the latt
Laws 1887, Act. No. 272.—People
80 Mich. 501.

¶ 2722. Laws 1887, Act. No. 7 § 559a), which makes it the prosecuting attorney to appear preme court in criminal cases re his county, is construed as re to furnish a brief and make the ment, but as leaving the manage case under the actual control of t general, under How. St. § 286 quires the attorney general to p defend all actions in the supre which the state is interested, o
People v. Bussey, 80 Mich. 501.

§ 583. Calendaring and setting f

Calendaring cases of civil natu
peal § 134.

¶ 2723. Criminal cases, when be noticed for hearing for the fir term, may, under Supreme Co be noticed for any day during weeks of the term, and when so on motion, be put on the docket
The requirement of rule 28 th given to the clerk six days bef day of the term does not apply t —People v. Nugent, 30 Mich. 50

§ 584. Dismissal or abatement of cause.

Dismissal for want of record showing of entered judgment, see also post ¶ 2747.

¶ 2724. A pardon granted after conviction but before sentence disposes of the case pending on bill of exceptions before the reviewing court.—People v. Marsh, 125 Mich. 410.

§ 585. Supersedeas and stay, transfer of jurisdiction, and bail pending review.

Power to admit to bail pending transfer of case or review, see also ante ¶¶ 2712, 2713.

Necessity of return of cause by certification of instructions given on exceptions to enable trial court to proceed further, see post § 641.

Stay of sentence, see ante § 499.

Effect of writ of error as staying proceedings, see Comp. L. 1915, § 14589.

Stay by filing exceptions to supreme court, see Comp. L. 1915, § 15838.

Effect of writ of error as stay, necessity of allowance by judge and order for stay, see Comp. L. 1915, §§ 14589, 14590.

¶ 2725. Notwithstanding exceptions taken the case still remains in the court below.—People v. McKinney, 9 Mich. 444.

¶ 2726. Where a criminal case is pending in the supreme court on exceptions before sentence, the circuit judge, not having found that such exceptions were frivolous, cannot have the respondent—who is under bail—arrested and sentenced, and refuse bail.—In re Montague, 70 Mich. 157.

¶ 2727. Except where the conviction is for treason or murder in the first degree, writs of error issue in criminal as well as in civil cases, as of course, and they do not stay or delay the execution of the judgment or sentence unless they are allowed by one of the justices of the supreme court or by a circuit judge "with an express order thereon for a stay of proceedings on the judgment or sentence" (Comp. L. 1897, § 10490).—People v. West, 143 Mich. 586.

¶ 2728. Where in a criminal case a writ of error without an order for stay of execution has been made and filed in the supreme court, and the case is shortly to be heard by said court, it will not grant an application for a stay of execution and admission to bail where there has been no petition for a writ of error containing an order for a stay.—People v. Fritch, 166 Mich. 576.

¶ 2729. Under the proceedings for the allowance of a writ of error, etc., a stay and admission to bail cannot be granted if it appears that the exceptions taken are frivolous, immaterial, or intended for delay only.—People v. Fritch, 161 Mich. 111.

¶ 2730. The supreme court will not grant a writ of error, stay sentence, and admit to bail a convicted defendant, where the trial court has refused such bail on the ground that the exceptions taken are frivolous and intended only for delay, and where the defendant presents neither a bill of exceptions nor the record, but only affidavits of their contents.—People v. Fritch, 161 Mich. 111.

¶ 2731. Where respondent has taken out a writ of error in a criminal case before sentence has been pronounced, and applied to this court to be admitted to bail and for an order staying proceedings until the determination of the writ by this court, no objection will be interposed by this court to the pronouncement of sentence, and the application will be denied without prejudice to its renewal after sentence in the court below.—People v. West, 143 Mich. 586.

§ 586. Assigning errors.

Specifications, grounds and reasons, see post § 587.

Reference or citation of page in record, see post § 588.

Pointing out errors in briefs and arguments, see post § 589.

Specification necessary to admit of certification of question for review, see ante ¶¶ 2706, 2707.

Briefing questions to preserve assignments, see post § 589.

Necessity for exceptions to support assignments, see also ante § 526.

Necessity of showing of error by the record, see post § 595 et seq.

Mode of assigning errors in charge or in refusal to charge, see Comp. L. 1915, § 14576.

Making and filing statement of errors relied upon on exceptions to supreme court, see Comp. L. 1915, § 15837.

¶ 2732. Errors relied upon by one who seeks reversal of a conviction should be assigned in advance.—People v. Wright, 90 Mich. 362; People v. Carter, 96 Mich. 583.

¶ 2733. An objection that an information for a third offense is defective in not averring prior convictions may be raised on error by assignments alleging error in the charge, authorizing a conviction as for a third offense, and in the sentence, imposing a punishment appropriate to such a conviction, and in excess of that which could be lawfully imposed for a first conviction; and this, notwithstanding respondent pleaded to the information before moving to quash for the reason stated.—People v. Buck, 109 Mich. 687.

¶ 2734. The supreme court will not consider whether a refusal to give a requested charge in a murder case was error, when the assignment sets out only a portion of the requested instruction.—People v. Sartori, 168 Mich. 308.

¶ 2735. The action of counsel in basing an assignment of error upon a partial extract from the charge, taken out of its connection, and in confining the discussion in their briefs to such part, where the part omitted clearly shows that the point raised is without merit, is criticized.—People v. Pichette, 111 Mich. 461.

¶ 2736. An assignment of errors is unnecessary on exceptions before sentence.—Wattles v. People, 13 Mich. 446; Patten v. People, 18 Mich. 314.

§ 587. ——Specifications, grounds and reasons for points.

¶ 2737. An assignment of error that "the court erred in his whole charge, as there was not testimony in the case to support the charge as given," is too general to merit attention on appeal.—People v. Adler, 169 Mich. 322.

¶ 2738. On error to a conviction for statutory rape the exclusion of questions as to the ages of prosecutrix's brothers and sisters based on a paper not put in evidence cannot be considered where the materiality of the questions was not explained to the trial judge when he ruled them out on that ground, and where the bearing and importance of the questions is not pointed out on error.—People v. Colbath, 141 Mich. 189.

§ 588. ——Citation of error by page in record.

Citations of record page in briefs, see post § 589.

¶ 2739. The entire charge of the court in a criminal case will not be examined on appeal in order to determine which portion fits any particular assignment of error, where the objectionable portions or paragraphs of the charge, or the pages of the record containing them is not shown.—People v. Ponsford, 181 Mich. 659.

§ 589. Briefs and arguments.

Relative duties of attorney general and prosecuting attorney in conducting and arguing case, see ante § 582.
Declination to consider points not properly briefed and argued and insisted on, see post §§ 609, 610.
Assigning the errors relied on, see ante §§ 586-588.
Arguments to jury, see ante IX, C.
Practice in civil cases, see Appeal, XI, E.

¶ 2740. The brief should point out that page in the record where improper evidence was introduced, or else cite the testimony, and the page where the question was raised, and should also show how it was damaging to respondent.—People v. Parmelee, 112 Mich. 291.

¶ 2741. Reference, merely, in the brief of objecting counsel to errors assigned to the charge as given by the court, without argument, is not good practice, though probably indicative that such assignments of error are not waived.—People v. Murphy, 145 Mich. 524.

¶ 2742. Under Supreme Court Rule 40, requiring appellant's brief to state clearly the errors relied on, a general statement of certain points relied on, with an announcement that these and kindred subjects will be discussed in their order, is insufficient, as it does not notify the court what errors are abandoned.—People v. Van Alstyne, 157 Mich. 306.

¶ 2743. Where, in an appeal from a conviction under the liquor law, the brief of appellant does not "contain a clear and concise statement of the facts of the case distinct from the argument, and of the errors upon which he relies," as required by Supreme Court Rule 40, the court is warranted in relying upon the statement in the brief for the People.—People v. Boyd, 151 Mich. 577.

¶ 2744. Omitting reference to the pages where assignments of error may be found is hazardous since the court cannot be expected to supply the omission through a search of the record.—People v. Sanders, 139 Mich. 442.

C. RECORD AND BILL OF EXCEPTIONS.

§ 590. In general.

Contents and sufficiency of the record proper and the bill, see post §§ 591, 592.
Preparation and settlement of bills of exceptions, see post §§ 593, 594.
Printing, form and style of record, see post § 598.
Record on exceptions before sentence, se post § 599.
Return to certiorari, see post § 600.
Additions and amendments of record, certiorari to complete record, see § 601.
Construction and effect of record whe sidered on review and presumpti the record, see post § 611 et seq.
Pointing out by assignments and cit in record where error appears, § 588.

¶ 2745. A bill of exceptions pany the writ of error in a crir Shannon v. People, 5 Mich. 36.

¶ 2746. The statute in refer tions in civil causes (R. S. How St. §§ 7611-7615) takes criminal causes where the S. 1846, chap. 166, How. St. applies to them where the silent, and, therefore, a b a criminal case, being s and filed with the clerk case is brought into t writ of error, a part of in that court.—Shan 36.

§ 591. Contents and sufficiency of record proper.

Certiorari ancillary to writ of error to bring up full return, see also Certiorari § 2.

¶ 2747. If neither the printed record nor original return shows the entry of judgment in the lower court an appeal will be dismissed by the supreme court.—People v. Macomber, 182 Mich. 59.

§ 592. ——Of bill of exceptions.

Showing required as to matters of error, see post § 595.
Showing required as to requests, objections and exceptions, see post § 596.
Showing of new trial motion and order thereon, see post § 597.

¶ 2748. A bill of exceptions in a criminal case should embrace every ruling raising a question of law, whether on the trial or in the proceedings preliminary thereto, by which the defendant claims that his rights were in any way prejudiced; and it is always proper, if the defendant requires it, to incorporate in the bill the proceedings upon a motion to quash the information.—People ex rel. Hamilton v. Calhoun Circuit Judge, 28 Mich. 268.

¶ 2749. While it is not desirable to include all the evidence in a criminal case, the bill should state the whole chain of facts which the evidence tends to prove, so that the bearings of the court's rulings can be understood by the supreme court.—Wellar v. People, 30 Mich. 16.

¶ 2750. Where the question raised by motion for a new trial in a criminal case is one of law and based on affidavits, the judge, if his decision is excepted to, should find the facts, and incorporate the motion, the facts and the decision thereon in the bill of exceptions for review.—Hill v. People, 16 Mich. 351.

¶ 2750a. Where the record upon exceptions to a conviction under the Local Option Law shows that the proceedings of the board of supervisors in relation to the adoption of the law were offered and received in evidence, respondent's counsel waiving the reading thereof, and a copy of the evidence so introduced is not returned, an objection that the court erred in instructing the jury that the law was in force within the county will be disregarded, the question as to the sufficiency of the proof in that particular being for the court, and not for the jury.—People v. Bennett, 107 Mich. 430.

¶ 2751. Prolixity and irrelevancy in a criminal record are subject to be rebuked by the supreme court.—People v. Millard, 53 Mich. 63.

¶ 2752. A needlessly prolix bill of exceptions is not excused by the fact that it was prepared by the stenographer of appellant's attorney.—People v. Van Alstyne, 157 Mich. 366.

§ 593. Preparation of bills.

Contents and sufficiency, see ante § 592.
Settlement and certification, see post § 594.
Duty to furnish copy of testimony in preparing bill, see also ante ¶ 2404.
Practice in civil cases, see Appeal, VI, D.

¶ 2753. The statute which requires exceptions in criminal cases to be "reduced to writing in a summary mode, and presented to the judge before the end of the term," as it respects the time for settling the exceptions, is directory, and it is sufficient if the exceptions be reduced to proper form within such reasonable and necessary time as the judge may allow.—Crofoot v. People, 19 Mich. 254.

¶ 2754. A respondent cannot be compelled to furnish a copy of the testimony as a prerequisite to the settlement of a bill of exceptions.—Pope v. Judge of Recorder's Court, 107 Mich. 25.

¶ 2755. When it is brought to the trial court's attention that it is desired to review a criminal case upon exception before sentence a reasonable opportunity should be given to prepare and settle exceptions.—People v. West, 143 Mich. 586.

§ 594. Settling and certification of record and bills.

Effect of conflict between record and certificate as to matters included, see post § 611.
Certification of exceptions before sentence, see post § 599.
Conclusiveness of record as settled, see post § 614.

¶ 2756. If the record is corrected by the addition of a word or certificate of the trial judge and affidavit of the court reporter, and, on notification to counsel, no objection is made, it will be presumed that the correction is accepted.—People v. Neely, 171 Mich. 249.

§ 595. Showing as to matters of error.

Necessity and sufficiency of showing as to objections and exceptions, see post § 596.
Necessity that error appear affirmatively, see post § 617 et seq.

¶ 2757. Judgment cannot be reversed for any error not affirmatively appearing in the proceedings.—People v. Jones, 24 Mich. 215.

¶ 2758. Where there is no foundation in the record for an assignment of error it will not be considered.—People v. Fisher, 144 Mich. 570.

¶ 2759. An assignment of error in permitting the indorsement of the names of certain witnesses on the information against objection and exception and permitting them to be sworn, will be ignored where there is nothing in the record or bill of exceptions to show that any of the witnesses testified, and it will not be presumed that after objection they testified or that their testimony was material and unfavorable to the respondent. —People v. Fisher, 144 Mich. 570.

¶ 2760. A refusal of change of venue sought because of prejudice against the accused, in a homicide case, is not shown to be erroneous where there was no serious difficulty in getting a jury, and there was no evidence that the jury was improperly influenced within or without the court room. —People v. Swartz, 118 Mich. 292.

¶ 2761. Abuse of discretion in refusing change of venue in a criminal case where local prejudice and prejudicial newspaper comment is relied on, is not shown where newspaper reports were like those usually appearing, and a year had elapsed since the alleged crime, and where no ruling was made on the motion till after examination of the jurors, the time spent in getting the jury and the fact that the defendant exhausted his peremptory challenges is not of controlling significance.—People v. Swift, 172 Mich. 473.

¶ 2762. The denial of a continuance in a criminal case cannot be said to have been an abuse of discretion on the part of the trial judge, where the application did not state what respondent proposed to prove by the witnesses whose presence he desired, and where several of them afterwards testified.—People v. Burwell, 106 Mich. 27.

¶ 2763. On a record not showing that the special prosecutor was a material witness at the second trial, where he prosecuted in lieu of the disqualified prosecuting attorney, or that he was otherwise disqualified, it cannot be said that his appointment was irregular, though it appears that on the first trial he did testify for the purpose of refuting a statement attributed to him by accused then a witness.—People v. Farrell, 146 Mich. 264.

¶ 2764. The subject of an alleged erroneous order appointing a special prosecutor might well be dismissed on error where the record fails to show the order appointing such prosecutor, but shows an announcement that the order would be made on the request of the prosecuting attorney.—People v. Auerbach, 176 Mich. 23.

¶ 2765. That respondent was compelled to go to trial before a jury of the term in which his two accomplices were tried and convicted cannot be assigned as error where the record does not show that any juror was prejudiced or incompetent.—People v. Betts, 94 Mich. 642.

¶ 2766. Error will not lie upon the overruling of respondent's challenge for cause, where it does not appear from the record that he exhausted his peremptory challenges, or that the challenged person sat as a juror. —People v. Rush, 113 Mich. 539.

¶ 2767. In a murder case, assigned error in not summoning a jury from the vicinage, cannot be heard where there was nothing in the record to indicate any trouble about getting a competent jury.—People v. Ecarius, 124 Mich. 616.

¶ 2768. Where the action of a judge in investigating the character of a plea of guilty is reviewed, his return should fully state the details of his inquiry.—People v. Lepper, 51 Mich. 196.

¶ 2769. Where any documentary evidence is excluded or a part is admitted, and the claim is that the whole should have been introduced, such evidence excluded or not introduced should be made a part of the bill of exceptions, so that the court above can judge whether it is admissible.—People v. Coughlin, 67 Mich. 466.

¶ 2770. Upon the trial of persons jointly informed against for conspiracy to cheat and defraud, the testimony of one of the respondents, voluntarily given upon the preliminary examination, is admissible as against him, and its admission will not be held erroneous as to his co-respondent where the record fails to indicate that the testimony was objected to as prejudicial to su respondent, or that the judge failed caution the jury against permitting it have such effect.—People v. Butler, 111 M 483.

¶ 2771. A person accused of sellir grade vinegar in violation of Publ 1897 No. 71, cannot contend that deprived of the right to produce as to the amount of solids in the where the record does not show person interested in the prosecu suit prevented him from gettin but does show that no pro for a sample was made.—Peop Grocer Co., 118 Mich. 604.

¶ 2772. To enable the su judge of the propriety of in jury in the court below, w assume the existence of bill of exceptions must evidence of those facts c there was such evidenc 8 Mich. 320.

¶ 2773. Inapplicabil not be considered w that not all of the People v. Dupree, f

¶ 2774. Excepti weight to be allo

ment on the trial will not be considered on a record which does not show that the prisoner made any statement.—Perkins v. People, 27 Mich. 386.

¶ 2775. Where the record in a criminal case does not show the charge of the court or that the court's attention was called to defendant's claim that the trial judge failed to explain the meaning of "preponderance of the evidence," the supreme court will not disturb a conviction on the ground of such failure.—People v. Ekola, 170 Mich. 158.

¶ 2776. On exceptions to a judgment in a criminal prosecution of an owner of a theater for operating same without the license required by resolution of the township board, the contention of defendant that the board had no authority to pass such resolution because the action was taken at a special meeting called for the purpose of considering a liquor bond, cannot be regarded, where the record of the proceedings of the township board is not a part of the record in the case.—People v. Richards, 150 Mich. 434.

¶ 2777. Where bill of exceptions only purports to state what testimony of certain witnesses tended to prove the supreme court cannot say error was committed in refusing to strike out such testimony as incompetent and immaterial.—People v. La Munion, 64 Mich. 709.

¶ 2778. On a record showing that after one of the witnesses for the people had been examined in chief, and cross-examined at some length, the court inquired of the prosecuting attorney if that was all of the witness, and that officer responded that he "was through with the witness some time ago," whereupon respondent's counsel stated that he desired to examine the witness. The court declined to wait for such examination, and dismissed the witness from the stand, and counsel for respondent took an exception to this proceeding, but did not advise the court what further questions he desired to ask of the witness; while the court should not have thus summarily dismissed the witness from the stand, yet the supreme court are unadvised as to whether respondent's rights were prejudiced by the action taken; and, under the circumstances, they are unable to say that there was any prejudice, the facts brought out on the direct examination seeming to have been fully covered by the cross-examination.—People v. Kindra, 102 Mich. 147.

¶ 2779. The question as to whether the verdict in a prosecution for assault with intent to commit rape was against the weight of the evidence, could not be reviewed where the record contained only the testimony of the prosecutrix.—People v. Toutant, 133 Mich. 520.

¶ 2780. Error assigned upon a statement of the prosecutor in his argument to the jury cannot be considered where the record fails to disclose what was said.—People v. Baker, 112 Mich. 211.

¶ 2781. In a prosecution for rape, under the defense of an alibi, an instruction telling the jury to "scrutinize any evidence in relation to the alibi. An alibi is a defense easily proven, and hard to disprove; therefore you will be careful and cautious in examining the evidence" is held not improper in the absence of the evidence from the record.—People v. Portenga, 134 Mich. 247.

¶ 2782. Arguments of the prosecutor will not be held error where the record does not show what were the arguments of counsel for accused, and where those of the prosecutor complained of and contained in the record and read by the supreme court appear to be in reply to those for accused.—People v. Farrell, 146 Mich. 264.

¶ 2783. An assignment of error, that the court erred in sentencing one J. M. B. after his plea of nonidentity without issue having been joined by the prosecuting attorney, is invalid where the record does not disclose any person by the name of J. M. B. was in any way connected with the proceedings, nor disclose that there was any plea of nonidentity.—People v. Fisher, 144 Mich. 570.

§ 596. Showing of requests, objections and exceptions.

Showing as to ruling on objection to argument, see also ante ¶ 2465.

¶ 2784. The record in a criminal case should show that the defects in the proceedings were pointed out to the trial court, and the supreme court ought not to be left to the briefs of counsel to ascertain what took place on the trial.—People v. Haas, 79 Mich. 449.

¶ 2785. Objections to improper statements in the argument of counsel in a criminal case were not considered, where the record failed to show an objection to the most objectionable of the statements.—People v. Gray, 135 Mich. 542.

¶ 2786. The refusal of the trial court to permit the review of a criminal case on exceptions before verdict cannot be held error, in the absence of a showing on the record on appeal of a motion for such permission, or a compliance with the statute permitting such a review.—People v. Ponsford, 181 Mich. 659.

¶ 2787. The question as to alleged objectionable argument is not before the supreme court where the record does not show that the attention of the court was called to the argument or that an opportunity was given the court to pass upon the objections made.—People v. Danenberg, 176 Mich. 337.

¶ 2788. In a trial for assault with intent to do great bodily harm less than the crime of murder, where defendant did not object to errors in the admission of testimony, and did not preserve the objectionable evidence in his bill of exceptions, the court on appeal cannot consider such errors.—People v. Robinson, 152 Mich. 41.

§ 597. Showing of new trial motion and order.

¶ 2789. Where in a criminal prosecution the record does not contain the reasons why the trial court has denied a motion for a new trial the supreme court will not review his action.—People v. Harris, 144 Mich. 12.

¶ 2790. The refusal of a new trial presents no question for review where the affidavits therefor, though given in the bill of exceptions, are not accompanied by any finding of the facts they are claimed to prove.—Mahoney v. People, 43 Mich. 39.

¶ 2791. Where the record in a criminal case nowhere shows the motion made for a new trial, or that the court was requested to file any reasons for overruling the motion, or that he actually filed same, the supreme court will not disturb the conviction as being against the evidence.—People v. Ekola, 170 Mich. 158.

¶ 2792. The refusal of a motion for new trial in a criminal case will not be reviewed on appeal where the record is silent as to whether the motion was ever heard or not and there are no exceptions to any refusal to grant such motion.—People v. Williamson, 200 Mich. 342.

§ 598. Printing, form and typographical style of record.

Rules in civil cases as to printing, see Appeal §§ 174, 231.

¶ 2793. On criminal cases certified to the supreme court upon exceptions it is the duty of the party excepting to cause the record to be printed.—People v. Bristol, 22 Mich. 299.

¶ 2794. It is not proper in preparing a record for appeal for parties to italicize certain clauses and paragraphs of the charge of the trial court.—People v. Adler, 169 Mich. 322.

§ 599. Record on exceptions before sentence.

Preparation of bill, see also ante ¶ 2755.

¶ 2795. A writ of error is not appropriate where a review of rulings below is sought before judgment. The record and proceedings should be certified to the supreme court by the clerk without any writ. But the clerk's certificate by way of return to the writ was held to be a sufficient with this requirement.—Patte Mich. 314.

§ 600. Return to certiorari.

Conclusiveness of return, see Return to certiorari in gen tiorari.

¶ 2796. None but the trial nounced sentence can make r of certiorari as to a compli requirements of How. St. pronouncing sentence upon a and such judge cannot mak his term of office has expi Brennan, 79 Mich. 362.

¶ 2797. Where an affidav tiorari to determine whether was voluntary set forth tha ing attorney had procured it hopes of leniency, the judge, turn to the writ, properly atta cuting attorney's affidavit tha way approached the accus Brown, 54 Mich. 15.

§ 601. Additions, amendments in aid of record.

Additions and amendments t in settling same, see ante Return as to examination b of plea of guilty, see also Extraneous or improper pap record as matters foreign post § 605.

¶ 2798. Where the record how a judge has performed duty of examining a prisoner of guilty, certiorari issues in of error to obtain a full retu Henning v. People, 40 Mich. Ferguson, 48 Mich. 41.

¶ 2799. The writ of certi priate to accompany the w criminal cases, if issued i v. Van Wagner, 51 Mich. 17

D. REVIEW AND JUD ERROR.

§ 602. In general; scope of r

Scope of review on exception Restriction of matters rev sidered to those regular shown by the record, see Declination of doubtful, un terial, and settled points 608.

Declination of points not b but not insisted on, see Construction and effect of see post §§ 611-616.

Presumptions on the reco court, see post §§ 617-6

Review of discretionary §§ 628-632.

Review of verdict and findings and of evidence, see post §§ 633-635.
Propriety of reversal and remand for new trial or resentence, or reversal and discharge, see post §§ 636-639.
Proper judgment on exceptions, see post § 640.
Questions reviewable on appeal from justice, see post § 664.

¶ 2800. Comp. L. 1897, §§ 11881 and 11882, providing that no challenge to the array of grand jurors, or to any person summoned as a grand juror, shall be allowed except on the ground that he is the prosecutor or complainant precludes objections on review to any other defect in the array or improper proceedings in finding an indictment.—People v. Salsbury, 134 Mich. 537.

¶ 2801. A decision of the trial court as to the impartiality of a juror may be reviewed upon error where it raises a legal question.—People v. Mol, 137 Mich. 692.

¶ 2802. On the review of the conviction of one who stood mute and presented no evidence but that of character, the questions for consideration are: Sufficiency of the information, which includes the proper charging of an offense within the statute and within the jurisdiction of the court in which the information was presented; proof beyond a reasonable doubt of each element of the crime charged; competency and materiality of the evidence to prove the crime charged; and propriety of the issues of fact submitted to the jury and the instructions.—People v. Hoffmann, 142 Mich. 531.

§ 603. ——On exceptions.

Reviewableness of verdict, see also post § 634.
Proper appellate judgment to be entered on review by exceptions, see post § 640.

¶ 2803. Where the case comes up on exceptions before sentence, the sufficiency of the information in matters of substance is involved to the extent, at least, of determining whether it charges a criminal offense.—People v. McKinney, 10 Mich. 54; Wattles v. People, 13 Mich. 446.

¶ 2804. It seems that a motion in arrest of judgment is a proper subject of exception.—People v. McKinney, 10 Mich. 54.

¶ 2805. Motion for new trial in a criminal case on the ground that one of the jurors was an alien. The motion was based on affidavits and denied. Held, that the ruling might be reviewed on exceptions.—Hill v. People, 16 Mich. 351.

¶ 2805a. When there is no dispute about the facts on which a challenge to a juror is based, whether for favor or for cause, the question presented by the challenge is a pure question of law reviewable on exceptions.—Holt v. People, 13 Mich. 224.

¶ 2806. A finding by a trial judge in overruling a motion for a new trial in a criminal case cannot be made a ground for the review of the facts by exceptions.—People v. Gale, 50 Mich. 237.

§ 604. Restriction to record and points regularly saved.

Necessity of affirmative showing in record to present error, see also ante § 595.
Matters shown by extraneous papers attached to record, see post § 605.
Necessity and sufficiency of showing in the record that the error occurred and that objection and exception were taken, see ante §§ 595, 596.
Review to secure fair trial or correct manifest injustice without exception, see also ante § 527.
Declination of points because not necessary or proper to decision, see post § 606 et seq.
Review disregarding question of proper mode or procedure, see also ante ¶ 2714.

¶ 2807. A new trial should not be granted on the suggestion that additional instructions given on the court's own motion were prompted by knowledge that came to him from reports of officers who overheard the deliberations and that they were coerced by such instructions, there being no way of carrying into the record the considerations which moved the court to so instruct, and the additional instructions given having been correct in law.—People v. Hoffmann, 142 Mich. 531.

¶ 2808. The right of appeal is statutory, and review and reversal for an error not raised in accordance with the statutes and rules of practice, is not a right of a defendant, but may be within the discretion of this court, though it is seldom exercised.—People v. Yund, 163 Mich. 504.

§ 605. ——Extraneous papers or affidavits attached to record.

Return of affidavits with record to trial court, see post ¶ 2942.

¶ 2809. Affidavits on which a motion for a new trial was based, though sent up with the record, form no part of it, and cannot be looked into for the purpose of determining whether the court erred in denying the motion.—Crippen v. People, 8 Mich. 117.

§ 606. Doubtful errors.

¶ 2810. Exceptions by the defense in criminal cases cannot be sustained where the action of the court was not clearly erroneous, and did not injure the respondent.—People v. Niles, 44 Mich. 606.

§ 607. Unnecessary or immaterial questions.

Errors made immaterial by verdict, see ante § 567.
Effect of pardon to abate case and make questions moot, see also ante ¶ 2724.

Harmless errors and cure of errors by subsequent incidents, rulings or evidence, see ante XV.

¶ 2811. Admissibility of the testimony given by accused before the coroner's inquest cannot be considered, where his deposition there taken was offered and excluded after argument, and all oral testimony on that point was stricken out, and the jury instructed to disregard it.—People v. Parmelee, 112 Mich. 291.

¶ 2812. Where a trial judge in imposing a sentence of both fine and imprisonment states that he is exercising his discretion, and thinks his sentence is just, it is not necessary to sustain the sentence that the supreme court decide whether the statute requires that both fine and imprisonment be imposed or permits that either may be imposed.—People v. Sharrar, 164 Mich. 267.

§ 608. Points already settled.

¶ 2813. Errors assigned, the law upon which are covered by previous decisions of this court, need not be considered.—People v. Thompson, 147 Mich. 444.

§ 609. Points not briefed or argued.

Points not insisted on, see post § 610.
Practice in civil cases, see Appeal §§ 226, 318.

¶ 2814. Errors assigned in a criminal case will be disregarded by the upper court where there is noncompliance with Sup. Ct. Rule 40, which requires that the brief of appellant "shall contain a clear and concise statement of the * * * errors upon which he relies," and where there is a failure in such brief to discuss questions raised by the various assignments.—People v. Jefferson, 161 Mich. 621.

¶ 2815. The supreme court need not consider questions which appear to be raised by exceptions and are referred to in the brief of appellant where Supreme Court Rule 40 is not complied with which requires that the brief of the party bringing a cause into such court shall contain a clear and concise statement of the facts distinct from argument, and of the errors he relies on, the questions involved and the manner in which they are raised.—People v. Martin, 176 Mich. 381.

¶ 2816. Where appellant's brief contains no statement of facts, nor of the errors upon which he relies, nor of the questions involved or the manner in which they are raised (Sup. Ct. Rule 40), only the fact that personal liberty is involved prevents affirmance without examination of the questions raised, and even then action of the court in giving the case consideration must not be regarded as a precedent.—People v. Peck, 139 Mich. 680.

§ 610. Points made but not insisted on.

¶ 2817. On appeal in a criminal case where a term intervened between the trial and the making of a motion for new trial but the point was not raised in the circuit or supreme court by the prosecution and both parties briefed the motion and counsel for the defense frankly call attention to the fact that unless failure by the prosecution to raise the point waives it that the court may feel that under former decisions the motion for new trial was too late, the court treated the point as waived though not satisfied that it should be done under the decisions.—People v. Swift, 172 Mich. 473.

§ 611. Construction and effect of record.

Effect of accusation and verdict and sentence as shown, see post § 612.
Effect of charge as set out, see post § 613.
Conclusiveness and contradiction of record and effect as a whole, see post §§ 614, 615.

¶ 2818. Assignments of error in a criminal case, based upon the insufficiency of evidence, cannot be considered where the record discloses that as to some of the important witnesses none of the testimony in chief and only part of the cross-examination was returned; even though the certificate of the trial judge states that all the evidence was returned.—People v. Slayton, 123 Mich. 397.

¶ 2819. In a prosecution for assault with intent to commit the crime of murder where it was claimed that the court ignored in his instructions the defendant's theory of self defense, the fact that the judge certifies that he heard no such argument, that counsel's argument was not taken down by stenographer, and that the theory of defense was not presented to him does not negative the fact that such argument was made to the jury, nor show that defendant waived the defense which the testimony left him free to make.—People v. Wright, 144 Mich.

¶ 2820. In a prosecution for assault with intent to do great bodily harm, the memory and recollection of the circuit judge on a motion for a new trial, as to improper remarks made by the prosecuting attorney, will be accepted, especially where the counsel's alleged statement is not given.—People v. Kirk, 151 Mich. 253.

§ 612. ——Of information, indictment or sentence.

On objections made by reason of defectiveness or insufficiency, see § 56 et seq.
Construction and interpretation with respect to issues necessary to be proved, see post § 613.

¶ 2821. Where respondent's counsel raises no question of the regularity of the charge to him upon both occasions when it was given until after the prosecuting attorney's argument is not limited to the charge as given in determining whether the charge was the information in the light of the evidence before the court when the question is presented.—People v. Peck, 147 Mich. 84.

¶ 2822. Rulings on either the forgery or the uttering may be complained of by accused under a verdict of guilty to an indictment for forging a mortgage, its acknowledgment, and the accompanying bond and for uttering them, since the verdict convicts of both crimes.—Van Sickle v. People, 29 Mich. 61.

¶ 2823. Judgment, upon conviction for assault with intent to commit murder, committing convicted person to prison for period of not less than ten years, and recommending that proper penalty would be for life, sustained as providing for maximum sentence of ten years, with a minimum sentence of five years.—In re Hamilton, 188 Mich. 499.

§ 613. ——Of charge as set out.

Presumptions as to propriety of the charge, see post § 622.

Construction of charge as whole and effect of entirety to overcome imperfections of parts, see ante §§ 415, 416.

¶ 2824. The language of a charge to the jury must be construed with reference to the facts in evidence upon which it is given. —People v. Scott, 6 Mich. 287.

¶ 2825. If a request to charge is susceptible of two interpretations, and the subject of it appears to have been fairly left to the jury by the judge, the charge will be sustained.—Fisher v. People, 20 Mich. 135.

¶ 2826. In a prosecution for statutory rape on a girl who testified in court and was shown to be 15 years old references in the charge to her as "the little girl" are not to be regarded as error by the supreme court; since the jury must have seen her and if she was little, as must be presumed, it was manifest, and if she was large the jury was not misled by such words.—People v. Colbath, 141 Mich. 189.

§ 614. ——Conclusiveness and contradiction of record.

Conflict between contents and certificate, see also ante ¶ 2818.

Presumptions on the record, see post § 617 et seq.

Of return to certiorari, see post § 616.

¶ 2827. There cannot properly be two informations on file in any case. Where the prosecuting attorney put two nearly alike on file in order to protect the people against the consequences of the loss of one, and, if the one in the record was defective, a judgment of guilty could not be supported by parol evidence that the defendant was actually tried upon the other.—Rice v. People, 15 Mich. 9.

¶ 2828. Unless before the hearing on writ of error some proceedings are taken to amend the record, it must be taken as settled by the circuit judge, and it will not be disturbed upon affidavits.—People v. O'Brien, 68 Mich. 468.

¶ 2829. Upon the trial of one charged with an assault with intent to murder the jury brought in a written verdict, signed by all the jurors, finding respondent guilty of an assault with intent to kill. This the court read aloud and then said to the jury: "You say that you find the prisoner guilty as charged in the information, and so say you all"; to which the jury nodded assent, and the verdict was so recorded. Held, that the written finding of the jury must control as to what the real verdict was.—Wright v. People, 33 Mich. 300.

¶ 2830. A claim that a prosecuting attorney expressed his opinion of the accused in such a way as to prejudice the jury will not be considered although the reporter's minutes sustain such claim, where the prosecuting attorney and eleven of the jurors make affidavit of a different statement which was entirely proper, and the arrangement of the court room and position of the parties would account for the misstatement.—People v. Swartz, 118 Mich. 292.

¶ 2831. A contention that respondent in a criminal case was prejudiced by the fact that persons were allowed to be sworn as witnesses for the people, although they had not observed an order of the court excluding witnesses from the court room, must fail where the record discloses that the trial judge satisfied himself that they had complied with the order, and there is nothing to indicate that he reached a wrong conclusion. —People v. Summers, 115 Mich. 537.

¶ 2832. Query, whether on a complaint in due form and sufficient to support a warrant for arrest, it is permissible to go back of the complaint to prove that there was no oral examination of complainant before issuing the warrant.—People v. Lynch, 29 Mich. 274.

§ 615. ——Consideration of record as a whole.

¶ 2833. A conviction under Comp. L. 1897, § 4514, for bringing a pauper into a county, may be supported on appeal by evidence introduced by the defendant which tends to strengthen the people's case, after moving for disposal of the case when the people rested. —People v. Barlow, 134 Mich. 394.

§ 616. Conclusiveness and effect of return to certiorari.

General rule as to conclusiveness of return to certiorari, see Certiorari § 56 et seq.

¶ 2834. A circuit judge's return to a writ of certiorari, issued to ascertain whether or not a plea of guilty was voluntary, is conclusive as to the fact, of which the judge is required to satisfy himself by private examination.—People v. Ferguson, 48 Mich. 41; People v. Brown, 54 Mich. 15.

¶ 2835. Where the record in a criminal case shows conviction upon plea of guilty and that investigation was made as to the voluntary character of the plea, it cannot be impeached by respondent's affidavit for certiorari in aid of the writ.—People v. Brennan, 79 Mich. 362.

¶ 2836. Objections that a respondent was unduly influenced to plead guilty, and that he was not sufficiently examined by the circuit judge to enable him to determine whether the plea was voluntary, are disposed of by the return of the judge to a writ of certiorari that he gave respondent a private examination in a private room, and that he then said his plea was voluntary, and that he had not been threatened, coaxed, or induced by any one to plead guilty.—People v. Luby, 99 Mich. 89.

§ 617. Presumptions on the record.

Presumptions on recitals as to adjournment that judge attended on reconvening of term, see ante ¶ 1524.

As to errors respecting particular incidents of trial or evidence, see post §§ 618-627.

Necessity of showing exhaustion of peremptory challenges in consequence of error in selection of jurors, see ante § 595.

Necessity of affirmative showing of error, objections and exceptions by the record, see ante § 595 et seq.

Presumptions in favor of justice's judgment or decision, see post § 664.

¶ 2837. Error will not be presumed; it must be affirmatively made out.—People v. Scott, 56 Mich. 154.

¶ 2838. Error must be affirmatively made out in criminal as well as civil cases; it cannot be based on a misapplication of the judge's remarks that would exclude evidence that they were not intended to affect, particularly if the ambiguity is the fault of counsel in not making their offer of proof explicit.—Maillet v. People, 42 Mich. 262.

¶ 2839. It will be presumed that jurors are qualified, and the burden of proving the existence of a disqualification is upon the party alleging it.—People v. Collins, 166 Mich. 4.

¶ 2840. All criminal proceedings being on behalf of the people, there is no legal presumption of any personal interference by private persons beyond what is made to appear.—Murphy v. Walters, 34 Mich. 180.

¶ 2841. If the return to a writ of error does not show an arraignment and plea, the omission cannot be supplied by a presumption of regularity.—Grigg v. People, 31 Mich. 471.

¶ 2842. Where a special prosecutor appeared and no objection was raised and the record does not affirmatively show that he was disqualified the court on appeal cannot presume he was disqualified.—People v. Harris, 144 Mich. 12.

¶ 2843. Where from the record in a prosecution for murder it does not appear whether the trial court made the proper examination to reach the conclusion that it was necessary to appoint a special prosecutor as provided by Comp. L. 1897, § 2563, How. 2nd Ed., § 1160, such course should be presumed on error in the absence of anything to the contrary.—People v. Auerbach, 176 Mich. 23.

§ 618. ——As to preliminary proceedings and information or indictment.

¶ 2844. In the absence of any showing in the record it will be presumed that the complaint and warrant upon which respondent was examined before the magistrate contained substantially the same averments found in the information.—People v. Calvin, 60 Mich. 113.

¶ 2845. Where witnesses were called for the prosecution whose names had not been placed upon the information, and the bill of exceptions did not purport to contain all the testimony given on proceedings had upon the trial, it was presumed that satisfactory reasons were given which induced the trial court to order the names placed upon the information.—People v. Durfee, 62 Mich. 487.

¶ 2846. A second information for fals pretenses made on the original complai after the first information was terminated a nolle prosequi will be assumed to h been in relation to the same transac where the examination under the comp is not returned on error.—People v. f well, 135 Mich. 341.

¶ 2847. Where the printed record show whether defendants in a crim were examined or waived ex whether they pleaded to the info stood mute, a variance betwee plaint and the information cann to show that they had no exam the charge stated in the inform v. Burke, 161 Mich. 397.

§ 619. ——As to admissibilit of evidence.

¶ 2848. Where in a crir of a memorandum by a liminary examination is proper, it will be presun jection is made, that examination no use wa v. Lahnala, 193 Mich.

¶ 2849. Where th the answers to the ception was taken.

any particular answer, or any prejudice to the plaintiff in error.—Jhons v. People, 25 Mich. 499.

¶ 2850. A conviction for burning insured property with intent to injure the insurers was not set aside because a witness for the prosecution was allowed, after the defendant's case was closed, to answer a question bearing upon the value of the property insured. The record did not show that the answer was not in rebuttal of evidence in defense, or that its allowance was beyond the legitimate discretion of the court.—Jhons v. People, 25 Mich. 499.

§ 620. ——As to sufficiency of proofs.

¶ 2851. Where the bill of exceptions does not purport to set forth all the evidence, it must be assumed that there was enough to warrant the conclusion of the court.—People v. Cline, 44 Mich. 290.

¶ 2852. Under Comp. L. 1897, §§ 11785 and 11786 providing for additional imprisonment when any person convicted and sentenced for an offense shall be shown to have been previously convicted, though a conviction as charged and a sentence are essential as a prerequisite to the additional sentence, it may be presumed that a sentence for 20 years on indictment for larceny from a dwelling is divided so as to give the maximum statutory period for the crime and 15 years as additional time, he having been convicted twice before.—In re Butler, 138 Mich. 453.

§ 621. ——As to argument and conduct of counsel and court.

¶ 2853. It is presumed that the trial judge will restrain counsel within due limits.—People v. Winslow, 39 Mich. 505.

¶ 2854. It cannot be assumed on appeal that an opening statement by a prosecuting attorney as to what he expected to prove was made in bad faith, though all was not proved, where an explanation was offered, and it is asserted that there was no bad faith.—People v. Swift, 172 Mich. 473.

¶ 2855. It cannot be said on appeal in a criminal case that arguments of counsel were not justified and that the trial court failed to properly exercise his discretionary control, though fragments of the argument set out in the record seem intemperate where the court in denying a motion for new trial said that such remarks were proper and were made in answer to incorrect statements of opposing counsel.—People v. Swift, 172 Mich. 473.

¶ 2856. It is the duty of prosecuting officers to place before the jury all the facts which, in their judgment, are admissible as bearing upon the question of respondent's guilt or innocence, and the fact that they are mistaken in some of the positions taken, and that the trial court rules against them upon their offers of certain testimony, by no means implies that the offers were in bad faith.—People v. De France, 104 Mich. 563.

¶ 2857. On the trial of a father for assaulting his daughter with intent to commit the crime of rape, the prosecuting attorney offered to show that respondent, prior to making the assault complained of, had committed similar acts upon the daughter, which offer was objected to and the objection sustained. Held, that, the offer having been made in good faith, and the proposed testimony objected to and excluded, there was no ground for saying that the judgment against the respondent should be reversed.—People v. Ricketts, 108 Mich. 584.

¶ 2858. The statement, in his argument to the jury in a criminal case, by the prosecuting attorney, that "there are better men now in state prison" than the respondent, is not reversible error, where the connection in which it was used does not appear, and such an argument might properly have been used in reference to the respondent's careless use of a firearm for which he was on trial.—People v. Kreidler, 180 Mich. 654.

§ 622. ——As to propriety of charge.

See also ante ¶ 2826.

¶ 2859. On exceptions every part of the charge of the court must be presumed to be correct, and to be warranted by the evidence, so far as the bill does not show the contrary.—People v. McKinney, 10 Mich. 54.

¶ 2860. A judge's charge in a criminal case is presumed to be warranted by the case made by the defense, if the bill of exceptions does not purport to give all the evidence and does not negative the submission of a theory which would support it.—People v. Niles, 44 Mich. 606.

¶ 2861. The charge of the trial judge, so far as given in the bill of exceptions, must be assumed to be correctly reported, but if only part of it is given it must be closely scrutinized to determine whether injury is done by the instructions when considered together.—People v. Niles, 44 Mich. 606.

¶ 2862. Where the charge of the court is not given, it cannot be assumed, though an instruction was denied, that the subject was not properly treated in the charge.—People v. Miller, 96 Mich. 119.

¶ 2863. A charge that it is conceded accused and his daughter had sexual intercourse about the time charged and that the People claim it was incest but the accused claims that it was such as to amount to rape, which was not then challenged by counsel for accused and which his brief does not challenge, will be presumed by the supreme court to have been correct on a record silent as to any protest.—People v. Skutt, 96 Mich. 449.

¶ 2864. Where the record on a criminal appeal does not contain the argument of counsel, the supreme court cannot say that it was improper for the court in its charge to say that there was no necessity for any person to become excited or angered, or to endeavor to force his personal opinions upon the jury, upon a contention being made that such language was an improper comment upon the argument.—People v. Wolff, 157 Mich. 242.

§ 623. ——As to conduct of jury.

¶ 2865. On interruption of a criminal prosecution to investigate a charge of bribery of witnesses in the case, the reviewing court will not presume that the jury, temporarily out of custody, violated their oaths by listening to outsiders or learning of the new development in the absence of evidence to that effect and no precautions having been asked by the defendant's counsel.—People v. Salsbury, 134 Mich. 537.

¶ 2866. While no court should hesitate to grant a new trial on a showing that an officer interfered with the deliberations of the jury, yet it is presumed that verdicts were properly rendered and that they occupied suitable quarters free from intrusion.—People v. Hoffmann, 142 Mich. 531.

§ 624. ——As to verdict.

¶ 2867. It cannot be assumed that a jury found a false verdict and compromised against conscience.—People v. Long, 44 Mich. 296.

¶ 2868. It will not be presumed on error that additional instructions given to the jury on being recalled after retirement were for the purpose of coercing a verdict.—People v. Hoffmann, 142 Mich. 531.

§ 625. ——As to formalities of imposing sentence.

As to examination on plea of guilty, see post § 626.

¶ 2869. Where the record showed the prisoner's presence when the jury was impaneled and sworn, and also when judgment was rendered, and that at the latter time, being asked whether he had anything to say why judgment should not be pronounced against him, he alleged no reason to the contrary, held, that he must be presumed to have been present during the intermediate proceedings, notwithstanding there were several entries of continuances from day to day which were silent on the subject.—Grimm v. People, 14 Mich. 300.

§ 626. ——As to examination on plea of guilty.

¶ 2870. Where a prisoner pleaded not guilty on arraignment, and four days later appeared in court and obtained leave to withdraw his plea, and thereupon voluntarily withdrew it and pleaded guilty, and six days afterwards, being arraigned for sentence, was asked if he had anything to say why judgment should not be pronounced, and made no objection, it was held that the application for leave to withdraw the plea of not guilty was a direct call upon the judge to satisfy himself, as required by statute, that the plea of guilty was voluntary, and that the circumstances made out a prima facie case that he did so.—People v. Ferguson, 48 Mich. 41.

¶ 2871. A plea of guilty cannot be supposed to have been made ignorantly or under compulsion where respondent had counsel and first pleaded not guilty, and, after a delay of three weeks, came into court and by leave of the court withdrew the plea and pleaded guilty, and it affirmatively appeared that the judge made inquiry to satisfy himself that his action expressed his real desire.—People v. Coveyou, 48 Mich. 353.

¶ 2872. Where the record shows that respondent, before pleading guilty, had consultation with counsel chosen by himself, and that the circuit judge had a private examination of the accused before sentence, it must be presumed that in accordance with statute the court was satisfied that the plea was voluntary.—People v. Ellsworth, 68 Mich. 496.

¶ 2873. It is presumed that a judge b fore sentencing a convict performs his du as to ascertaining the latter's age, unl the contrary is implied in the record of proceedings.—People v. Lewis, 51 Mich.

¶ 2874. In support of a judgment u plea of guilty it is presumed that r ent understood the information read and that the judge as required by rectly explained the charge against fore passing sentence, and that he pleaded guilty to all the inform tained.—People v. Morris, 80 Mi

§ 627. ——As to harmlessness from error.

Presumptions as to existence of error (not as to its h ante §§ 617-626.

Conclusiveness of the recor done, see ante § 614.

Necessity of showing th adjoining room and argument was har ¶ 1521.

¶ 2875. Unless it sonable doubt that t inal case could no the alleged error i such error is nc Sullivan v. Peop ¶ 2876. Evidence in support of an information for larceny of facts which were not only not a part of the res gestæ but were also res inter alios, and while they might support an inference of guilt were also liable to many other inferences consistent with innocence, is inadmissible, and though its mischievous effect be not apparent, a verdict which may have been influenced by it will be set aside.—People v. Williams, 24 Mich. 156.

¶ 2877. The law can never infer that a party has been injured in matters of testimony by anything but the admission of improper evidence or the exclusion of his own proofs.—Jhons v. People, 25 Mich. 499.

¶ 2878. A statement by the prosecuting attorney to the jury in a prosecution for larceny, that he knew that defendant was the man who took the money cannot be said to have been without prejudice, since it is impossible to tell what influence such statement had upon the mind of the jury. —People v. Dane, 59 Mich. 550.

¶ 2879. A statement in a charge in a larceny case, made after the court had impressed upon the jury the gravity of the offense, and the care they should exercise in their deliberations, that the judge might take it upon himself to discharge respondent, with which, however, the jury had nothing to do, is erroneous, being liable to provoke indifference in a proper discharge of the duty of the jury, prejudicial to respondent, and, as the court cannot certainly know but that such was the result, a new trial should be granted.—People v. Harris, 77 Mich. 568.

¶ 2880. Prejudicial error in the admission, in a criminal prosecution for murder, of evidence of former crimes of accused will not be presumed where the court grants a motion to strike out such testimony and the jury at once is instructed to disregard it, and such instruction is also repeated in the general charge.—People v. Page, 198 Mich. 524.

¶ 2881. If the charge contains an abstract proposition of law, having no particular reference to the evidence submitted, it will be presumed, although the language is general, that the jury properly applied it to the case before them.—People v. Reynolds, 2 Mich. 422.

¶ 2882. Where conflicting instructions, one of which is erroneous, are given in a criminal case, it will be presumed on appeal, that the jury followed the erroneous instruction.—People v. Brockett, 195 Mich. 169.

¶ 2883. In a prosecution for burglary a deputy sheriff testified that he followed the tracks of a vehicle from the scene of the burglary out upon the highway where he met two men in a buggy. He then stated what the men said to him about meeting a buggy, etc., which testimony on motion was stricken out. On appeal it was urged that the injury to the defense was not cured by striking it out. Held that the error, if error it was, was not such as to require a reversal, it being assumed that the jury would do their duty and disregard it.—People v. Gregory, 130 Mich. 522.

¶ 2884. Conviction on the charge of selling liquors without having executed the required bond, was reversed, where the prosecuting attorney had stated in his argument to the jury that the complaining witness had told him that respondent's counsel wanted respondent to plead guilty; there being no way of ascertaining whether this was cured by the court's instruction that the jury "was to try this case upon the law and the evidence, and not upon statements made between counsel," that they were to disregard such statement, that "whatever may have passed" between the prosecuting attorney and the complaining witness "upon the subject is not proper here, and could not be made the basis of a verdict."—People v. Treat, 77 Mich. 348.

¶ 2885. Asking for further instructions on the same subject and inability to agree tends to show that an erroneous charge wrought error though coupled with a correct one.—People v. Bennett, 121 Mich. 241.

§ 628. Discretionary rulings and findings.

Rulings on motion for change of venue, see post § 629.
Discretion as to kind and degree of punishment, see post § 630.
Discretion as to discharge of jury, see post § 631.
Discretion as to grant or denial of new trial, see post § 632.
Discretion in controlling arguments and conduct of counsel, see ante § 370.
Discretion as to reception of proofs out of order, see ante § 359 et seq.

¶ 2886. The orders disposing of motions for continuance and for change of venue are not reviewable within the discretion of the trial court.—People v. Boyd, 151 Mich. 577.

¶ 2887. A motion to quash an indictment is usually discretionary, and is not reviewable when it rests in discretion and not in right.—Hamilton v. People, 29 Mich. 173.

¶ 2888. The ruling of the trial judge in refusing to compel the prosecution in a liquor law violation case to furnish a bill of particulars, will not be reviewed on error.—People v. Remus, 135 Mich. 629.

¶ 2889. The discretion of the trial court controlling the introduction of collateral matter upon cross-examination will not be reviewed except in cases of abuse.—People v. McArron, 121 Mich. 1.

¶ 2890. In a prosecution for murder the permitting of leading questions asked by the prosecuting attorney is very largely within the discretion of the trial judge, and where counsel on both sides are given wide latitude in that respect, a conviction will not be reversed in the absence of strong evidence of abuse of discretion.—People v. Sartori, 168 Mich. 308.

¶ 2891. The granting of an order for a bill of particulars in a criminal prosecution for embezzlement is generally a matter resting in the sound discretion of the court, and its refusal is not assignable as error.—People v. McKinney, 10 Mich. 54.

¶ 2892. Where a misunderstanding arose between counsel in a case as to what papers had been agreed in open court by them to go to the jury room for consideration of the jury, held that the trial court was in position to know what agreements were made by counsel in open court and that the court's exclusion of certain papers could not be held erroneous.—People v. La Londe, 197 Mich. 76.

§ 629. ——On motion for change of venue.

See also ante ¶ 2886.

¶ 2893. An exercise of a court's discretion as to change of venue in a criminal case will not be disturbed on review unless a clear abuse of such discretion exists.—People v. Swift, 172 Mich. 473; People v. Gage, 188 Mich. 635.

¶ 2894. Under Act No. 67, Public Acts 1909, providing for change of venue "upon good cause shown," a clear abuse of the court's discretion in passing on such question may be reviewed and corrected on writ of error. —People v. Swift, 172 Mich. 473.

§ 630. ——Amount and kind of punishment.

¶ 2895. Where a penalty is within the statutory limit it is not reviewable on the ground of being excessive.—Cummins v. People, 42 Mich. 142.

¶ 2896. A sentence authorized by statute and within the exclusive province of the legislature to prescribe, cannot be objected to on error as excessive and unauthorized; for example, a sentence of imprisonment for two years in the Detroit house of correction upon a third conviction of disorderly conduct.—People v. Kelly, 99 Mich. 82.

§ 631. ——Discharge of jury.

¶ 2897. Appellate courts will not interfere with the action of trial courts in discharging juries, where facts are found upon which such action can be based; but the facts must be found and placed upon the record. —People v. Parker, 145 Mich. 488.

§ 632. ——Rulings on new trial motions.

¶ 2898. It is within the discretion of a trial judge to set aside the proceedings or vacate the verdict of a petit jury upon motion, on the ground of irregularities in the procurement of a grand jury or in its proceedings, and his action is not subject to review, unless, possibly, in a clear case of abuse.—People v. Reigel, 120 Mich. 78.

¶ 2899. In a prosecution for assault with intent to commit rape, where there were circumstances from which the jury were justified in drawing the inference of the specific intent charged, the court must find the case clear to justify it in overruling the decision of the trial judge who noted the appearance of the witnesses on the stand and refused a new trial.—People v. Marston, 135 Mich. 287.

¶ 2900. The appellate court in reviewing a denial of a motion for a new trial passes on the facts only to determine whether there was manifest abuse of discretion.—People v. Swift, 172 Mich. 473.

¶ 2901. Abuse of discretion in denying a motion for new trial in a criminal case is not shown though there are numerous contradictions in the testimony of the witness by whom the charges were made he being a young boy incompetent to meet by cunning or to evade the questions of counsel and where an alleged conspiracy on the part of the public officers who brought the action and the witnesses for the prosecution is not proved.—People v. Swift, 172 Mich. 473.

¶ 2902. Where in a criminal trial the evi dence is extremely conflicting, indicatir that certain witnesses on one side or t other knowingly testified falsely, the mar of examining witnesses and the general duct of the trial must necessarily b to the discretion of the trial judge reversal will not be had for insi questions and intemperate comment the trial court has not abused its d in permitting same.—People v. I Mich. 87.

¶ 2903. Although the suprem power under Pub. Acts 1893, review the action of the cir refusing a new trial in a m it will not be done if the satisfied that the trial cou new trial exercised its d erly.—People v. Ecarius, 1

¶ 2904. The supreme c the ruling of the tria grant a new trial in a ground of newly disc the evidence presente at the trial and is of the testimony g the trial, and wh offered by the w person whom it implicates has been safely acquitted.—People v. Harrison, 170 Mich. 159.

¶ 2905. The verdict of conviction in a murder case must be clearly against the great weight of the evidence to require the supreme court to overrule the decision of the circuit judge refusing a new trial.—People v. Sartori, 168 Mich. 308.

§ 633. Verdicts and findings on evidence.

Review of evidence, see post § 635.

¶ 2906. It is not the province of the supreme court to determine questions of fact in criminal cases where there is any conflict of evidence.—People v. Hubbard, 92 Mich. 322.

¶ 2907. The supreme court cannot review the evidence in a criminal case for the purpose of correcting an error of the jury. It can only interpose when there is a total want of evidence in some essential point, and then only to correct the error of law committed by the trial court in not instructing the jury that the evidence would not warrant a conviction.—People v. Henssler, 48 Mich. 49.

¶ 2908. Where there is any evidence whatever tending to sustain a charge made in any of the counts of an information, the supreme court will not, on review, attempt to weigh it or to say whether the jury ought or ought not to have considered it sufficient to sustain the charge.—People v. Howard, 50 Mich. 239.

¶ 2909. An exception to a verdict for want of evidence should be sustained if the supreme court finds that there is a total want of evidence on any essential point.—People v. Howard, 50 Mich. 239.

¶ 2910. The supreme court will not determine questions of fact in criminal cases where there is any conflict of evidence.—People v. Hubbard, 92 Mich. 322.

§ 634. ——On exceptions before judgment.

¶ 2911. The supreme court will not, on exceptions before sentence, review the evidence to determine whether it was sufficient to justify conviction, as that is a qustion for the jury where there is any evidence tending to support the finding.—People v. Henshaw, 52 Mich. 564; People v. Francis, 52 Mich. 575.

¶ 2912. The supreme court will not, on exceptions before sentence, review the evidence to determine whether it was sufficient to justify conviction, as that is a question for the jury.—People v. Moore, 52 Mich. 563.

§ 635. Sufficiency of evidence.

Presumption on the record as to sufficiency, see ante § 620.

Review of verdict or findings, see ante §§ 633, 634.

Reviewableness of discretionary rulings on motions for new trials, see ante § 632.

¶ 2913. A court of review ascertains whether there is any evidence to sustain a verdict by examining that which is most favorable for the prosecution and discarding all the rest.—People v. Howard, 50 Mich. 239.

¶ 2914. In criminal cases, where there is a conflict, the supreme court will not weigh the evidence to determine the guilt or innocence of the accused.—People v. Blanchard, 136 Mich. 146.

¶ 2915. Testimony that a complaint not under oath had been made is a mere conclusion which will not prevail against a statement of facts showing just what was done and that no complaint had been made; and a conviction for perjury based thereon will be reversed because of its thereby appearing that the oath was not made on a complaint which required or authorized it.—People v. Titmus, 102 Mich. 318.

§ 636. Grounds and propriety of remand for new trial.

Grounds for granting new trial in trial court, see ante § 476.

Correction of judgment without new trial, see post § 637.

Impropriety of reversal for nonprejudicial error, see ante § 533.

¶ 2916. Where the only error in a criminal case is in the judgment rendered there can neither be a new trial nor a new judgment rendered. Where, therefore, a prisoner is sentenced to imprisonment for a longer period than is allowed by law, the supreme court on error can only reverse the judgment and discharge the prisoner.—Elliott v. People, 13 Mich. 365; O'Neil v. People, 15 Mich. 275.

¶ 2917. Where in a criminal prosecution the court directs a verdict of guilty in pursuance of the requests of both the state and the defendant that this step be taken in order to test the constitutionality of the statute under which defendant is prosecuted, and where the record indicates that defendant did not intend to plead guilty but intended to preserve his exceptions, taken during the trial, including that to the refusal of the court to direct a verdict of not guilty, a mistrial results and the cause must be remanded.—People v. Angle, 170 Mich. 364.

¶ 2918. New trial was granted by the supreme court where respondent, charged with raping a young girl, was intoxicated at the time, where the victim was but slightly injured, and where respondent was unfairly tried and excessively sentenced; so that it appeared manifest that injustice had been done.—People v. Murray, 72 Mich. 10.

§ 637. Correction of judgment without new trial.

Provision for affirmance of excessive sentence in so far as valid, see Comp. L. 1915, § 15857.

Power of judges of supreme court to pass sentence, see Comp. L. 1915, § 15856.

¶ 2919. Under Comp. L. 1871, § 7998, How. St. § 9614, a sentence that is merely excessive is to be reversed for the excess only.—Brown v. People, 39 Mich. 57.

¶ 2920. Comp. L. 1871, § 7998 (How. St. § 9614), authorizing an excessive sentence to be affirmed so far as lawful, does not apply where there is any other reason for reversing it.—Boody v. People, 43 Mich. 34.

¶ 2921. The statute, providing for reversal of only the excessive part of the sentence does not apply to cases where a party is sentenced to imprisonment in the state prison for an offense punishable only by imprisonment in the county jail. There is such a difference in these kinds of imprisonment that one cannot in any case be substituted for the other, and an appellate court cannot know what term would have been given had the court below understood the respondent could only be imprisoned in the county jail. In such a case the erroneous judgment must be reversed entirely.—Wilson v. People, 24 Mich. 410.

¶ 2922. The punishment provided for horse-stealing by How. St. § 9180 can only be imposed when the information or indictment is expressly based on the statute; and where that is not the case the excess beyond the ordinary penalty for larceny will be remitted on review by reversing the judgment to that extent.—People v. Town, 53 Mich. 488; People v. Seller, 58 Mich. 327; and see People v. Jones, 49 Mich. 591.

¶ 2923. A sentence pronounced under an apparently erroneous view cannot be maintained by the supreme court on a different theory, as it would then become an original sentence.—Boody v. People, 43 Mich. 34.

¶ 2924. The supreme court cannot, on reversing a judgment on exceptions, proceed to give such judgment as the facts set forth in the bill of exceptions would warrant. The court can only consider those facts as they bear upon the rulings of the court below, and order a new trial if the exceptions are sustained.—Pond v. People, 8 Mich. 150.

¶ 2925. Where sentence for an attempted crime before the passage of the indeterminate sentence law, was erroneously imposed under that law, but it appeared that it would have been no less had it been imposed under the proper statute, the minimum imposed will be affirmed and the prisoner remanded to complete such term.—In re Lambrecht, 137 Mich. 450.

¶ 2926. The supreme court having a superintending control on error may not only reverse or affirm a judgment based on an erroneous sentence, but may give any suitable directions to the trial court, and may undertake to correct sentence in another way than by reversal of the judgment complained of.—People v. Farrell, 146 Mich. 264.

¶ 2927. Where a person had been convicted of one crime and sentenced for another and brings error and certiorari it is the conviction and not the judgment which is erroneous and in case of reversal a new trial will be ordered as in ordinary cases of reversal.—People v. Scofield, 142 Mich. 221.

¶ 2928. Comp. L. 1897, § 11984, providing that when in any criminal case the defendant shall be adjudged guilty and a punishment shall be imposed in excess of that allowed by law, "the judgment shall not for that reason alone be adjudged altogether void, nor be wholly reversed and annulled by any court of review, but the same shall be valid and effectual to the extent of the lawful penalty, and shall only be reversed or annulled * * * in respect to the unlawful excess," has no application; where one was first convicted on manslaughter on an information for murder and upon retrial after reversal of that was convicted and sentenced in form for murder as charged in the information. The statute applies only where the sentence and not where both the sentence and the conviction are erroneously excessive.—People v. Farrell, 146 Mich. 264. (Hooker, McAlvay and Blair, JJ., dissented on this point urging that a verdict of guilty "as charged" was a verdict for manslaughter, the only portion of the charge remaining open, and hence might be treated as a verdict correct in substance and legal intendment so that the only error apparent was in the sentence.)

§ 638. Reversal and remand for resentence.

Directions with remand, see also ante ¶ 2926.

Amendment and correction of sentence and judgment in trial court, see ante § 498.

¶ 2929. Where one has been convicted of manslaughter, and on a second trial on the same information had been convicted of murder, the trial court may treat the second verdict as one for manslaughter and impose sentence accordingly, and the supreme court on his failure to do so, should remand the record with instructions that it be done.—People v. Farrell, 146 Mich. 264. (Per Carpenter, C. J., Grant, Hooker, McAlvay, and Blair, JJ., concurring.)

¶ 2930. Where one had been convicted of manslaughter on an information charging murder, and on a second trial had been convicted of murder, the supreme court on error will reverse the second conviction and remand the cause with instructions that the trial court impose a sentence for manslaughter, on the ground that the second verdict was in effect a legal verdict for manslaughter. (Montgomery, Moore and Ostrander, JJ., dissenting on the ground that not only the conviction but the sentence also was erroneous, and a reversal should be followed by another trial.)—People v. Farrell, 146 Mich. 264.

¶ 2931. Where, ten days after conviction, respondent was, in the presence of, and without objection from, his counsel, sentenced for murder without being asked what he had to say why judgment should not be pronounced against him, it was held, that such question is now an idle ceremony, and that even if the sentence were erroneous for the omission it was not an error upon the trial, but simply one in imposing sentence, for which respondent would be remanded to be sentenced afresh.—People v. Palmer, 105 Mich. 568.

§ 639. Reversal and discharge of accused.

See also ante ¶ 2916.

Discharge of accused on vacation of judgment where further prosecution is barred, see also ante ¶ 613.

¶ 2932. A sentence of imprisonment exceeding the limit allowed by statute can, under Comp. L. 1871, § 7998, be reversed only for the excess, but if, on reversal, the proper time has already expired he is entitled to an immediate discharge.—People v. Parkhurst, 50 Mich. 389.

¶ 2933. Where the errors assigned in a case are all based on decisions of the court preceding the judgment, which is itself erroneous because not within the power of the court to impose, the supreme court will look into the errors assigned, and, if any of them are sustained, will reverse the judgment on that account, and order a new trial instead of ordering an absolute reversal for the error in the judgment itself.—Crippen v. People, 8 Mich. 117.

¶ 2934. The reversal of a criminal case for error in sustaining a demurrer to a plea of former conviction entitles respondent to a discharge.—People v. Cox, 107 Mich. 435.

¶ 2935. Appellate courts should be very slow to discharge a prisoner convicted upon the entire evidence, where the jury has had no opportunity to pass upon his guilt or innocence with the incompetent evidence eliminated, and the trial court has not passed upon it.—People v. Minney, 155 Mich. 534.

§ 640. Decision and judgment on review by exceptions.

See also ante ¶ 2924.

Effect of equal division, see also post ¶ 2941.

Effect of affirmance and nature of further proceedings below, see post ¶ 2939.

Effect as final judgment to support writ of error from United States Supreme Court, see post ¶ 2943.

Provisions as to judgment and decision and directions on exceptions to supreme court, see Comp. L. 1915, § 15841.

¶ 2936. Where a case comes up on exceptions before judgment, this court, after determining the questions of law, is required to "give directions as to a new trial or such other proceedings as right and justice shall require"; and where it is possible, though it does not affirmatively appear, that a certain writing was brought to the trial court's attention which would have rendered erroneous the admission of certain oral testimony prejudicial to defendant, the case will be certified back to the court below, with instructions that if such facts appeared a new trial should be granted; otherwise that judgment should be rendered on the verdict.—People v. Jones, 24 Mich. 215.

¶ 2937. If a criminal case is taken up on exceptions before sentence, and there is doubt as to the force of the evidence, the accused is not necessarily discharged, but the case may be remanded for new trial.—People v. Gordon, 39 Mich. 508.

¶ 2938. Where a defendant is entitled to acquittal on the ground that the facts in evidence, if they made out any offense at all, did not tend to establish the one charged, or that the respondent could not have been guilty under the statute, the supreme court, when the cause is brought to it on exception, will not order a new trial, but will direct a nolle prosequi to be entered.—People v. Gaige, 23 Mich. 93; People v. Chappell, 27 Mich. 486.

XVII. PROCEEDINGS AFTER REVIEW.

§ 641. In general.

Remand with directions to lower court, see ante §§ 638, 640.

Jeopardy of former trial as bar to further prosecution, see Crimes §§ 22-26.

¶ 2939. An affirmance of a criminal conviction before sentence is a final adjudication of the case, and nothing remains for the trial court to do but to impose sentence.—People v. Swenson, 166 Mich. 511.

¶ 2940. If embezzlement of a draft and embezzlement of the proceeds of it after it was cashed are distinct crimes under Comp. L. 1897, § 11570, where the information charges them as mere variants of the same transaction to meet the possibility of proof an implied acquittal of one based on conviction under the other does not follow, so as to restrict a retrial after reversal to that count on which conviction was had. The entire case is reopened.—People v. Peck, 147 Mich. 84.

¶ 2941. Where exceptions are certified to the supreme court before judgment in criminal cases the court below can take no further steps until instructions are certified back; and where the supreme court is equally divided on the question whether the act committed constituted any criminal offense, no further proceedings ought to be taken against the defendant.—People v. Braman, 30 Mich. 460.

§ 642. Return of mandate and files.

Certification back on exceptions, see also ante ¶ 2936.

Necessity of certification back of instructions given on exceptions before further proceedings in trial court, see ante ¶ 2941.

¶ 2942. Affidavits printed in respondent's brief, together with an affidavit of respondent which was filed by permission of the court with the clerk at the time of the argument, while they may not be considered, as not being a proper part of the record, may be returned with the remittitur and the attention of the trial court directed thereto.—People v. Lapidus, 167 Mich. 53.

§ 643. Subsequent review or writ of error.

¶ 2943. A criminal case was reviewed by the supreme court upon exceptions before sentence. The exceptions were overruled. Defendant, being duly sentenced, removed his case to the supreme court by writ of error for the avowed purpose of having his case finally adjudicated so as to enable him to apply to the supreme court of the United States for a writ of error. Held that although such course is unnecessary, the former adjudication by the supreme court being final, it would nevertheless pass upon the writ of error in order that defendant's right to have his case reviewed by the Supreme Court of the United States might not be imperiled through a holding by that court that it was without jurisdiction.—People v. Swenson, 166 Mich. 511.

§ 644. Discharge or recommitment of accused.

Discharge of prisoner on conviction on retrial for degree carrying shorter imprisonment than already served, see Crimes § 30, ¶ 151.

Recommitment to keep the peace after discharge on habeas corpus from former commitment, see Habeas Corpus ¶ 71.

¶ 2944. Where a defendant is committed to prison before taking an appeal, and after such appeal is admitted to bail, he should, upon affirmance of the conviction, be sent back under the original commitment to serve out his unexpired term.—People v. Adams, 162 Mich. 371.

XVIII. TRIALS BEFORE JUSTICES AND MINOR COURTS.

§ 645. In general; instituting prosecution.

Complaint or accusation, see post § 646 et seq.

Appearance by and functions of prosecuting attorneys, see post § 649.

Arraignment and pleas and docketing cause, see post § 650.

Continuances and postponements, see post § 651.

Jury trials and procedure for jury, see post § 652.

Trial and evidence, see post § 653.

Statements and arguments to jury or justice, see post § 654.

Verdict, sentence and judgment, see post §§ 655-658.

Warrant of commitment, see post § 659.

Costs and fees, see post § 661.

Appeals and appellate proceedings, see post §§ 662-666.

Certiorari and review and judgment thereon, see post §§ 668, 669.

Retrial or sentence after remand, see post § 667.

Proceedings to require security to keep the peace, see post § 660.

Jurisdiction of justices and police magistrates, see ante §§ 90-93.

Legislative power to confer jurisdiction or change that of justices, see Constitutional Law § 56.

Power to issue search warrants, see Searches and Seizures.

Prosecutions for violating ordinances, see Municipal Corporations, XVI, B.

Statutory provisions as to institution of complaints for prosecution before justices, see Comp. L. 1915, § 15770.

Provisions as to approval by prosecuting attorney or security by complainant, see Comp. L. 1915, § 15811.

¶ 2945. In cases where the offense complained of is within the justice's jurisdiction to try, no preliminary examination is required or allowable.—Byrnes v. People, 37 Mich. 515.

§ 646. Complaint or accusation.

Description and allegation of the crime, see post § 647.

Defects and objections to complaint, see post § 648.

When indictment is proper form of accusation for penalty, see ante § 3.

Requisites and sufficiency of complaint for warrant and not as an accusation for trial, see Arrest, Commitment and Bail, III.

Complaint in bastardy proceedings, see Bastards § 6.

Sufficiency of complaint to sustain commitment for trial, see Arrest, VII.

¶ 2946. The complaint must be reduced to writing, and must show in substance the commission of such an offense as the justice has jurisdiction to hear and try. It must allege the time when, and the county wherein, the offense was committed.—People v. Gregory, 30 Mich. 371.

¶ 2947. Printed forms of complaint, filled out by inserting names and dates, and containing general allegations only, sworn to as a matter of form by a policeman, are disapproved as failing to meet the constitutional requirement of probable cause to support a warrant.—In re Way, 41 Mich. 299.

§ 647. ——Descriptions and allegations of the crime.

Substantive averments necessary in informations or indictments, see ante I, B.
Sufficiency of averments of crime in complaint for arrest, see Arrest § 11.
Sufficiency of averment or description of crime in the warrant, see Arrest § 17.
Allegations to charge vagrancy, see also Crimes ¶ 445.

¶ 2948. A warrant for the arrest of a person for a crime triable by a justice must state the offense, and, in cases of larceny, the value of the property stolen.—People v. Belcher, 58 Mich. 325.

¶ 2949. In a complaint for larceny the value of the property must be stated.—Merwin v. People, 26 Mich. 298.

¶ 2950. Where a statute creating an offense makes an exception to its operation, a complaint thereunder must show upon its face that the accused does not fall within the exception.—People v. Telford, 56 Mich. 541.

¶ 2951. If a wilful entering upon another's improved land without his permission, with intent to destroy grain growing thereon, is clearly set forth in the complaint and warrant, it is enough to bring the case within How. St. § 9174, without averring that the intent was malicious.—People v. O'Brien, 60 Mich. 8; People v. O'Brien, 68 Mich. 468.

¶ 2952. The issue of a warrant is necessary, for it is upon the charge contained in it that the accused is to be tried; hence the complaint, and the warrant, which is required to contain the substance of the complaint, must set forth and describe the alleged offense fully and correctly.—People v. Lynch, 29 Mich. 274.

¶ 2953. A complaint before a justice was held sufficient which alleged under the proper venue that "on the 2d day of February, A. D. 1880, and for thirty days next preceding said day, at the city of Ionia, in said county, Lizzie L. Palmer is, and for said thirty days has been, a disorderly person within the meaning of section 1 of chapter 53 of the Compiled Laws of said state, for that she, the said Lizzie L. Palmer, at the city of Ionia aforesaid, is and was for said thirty days the keeper of a bawdy-house, contrary to the form of the statute," etc.—Palmer v. People, 43 Mich. 414.

¶ 2954. A complaint for selling or offering to sell, in violation of Pub. Acts 1913, No. 207, § 5, fresh fruits in packages which did not on their shown surfaces give a truthful representation of their contents, which fails to allege scienter is fatally defective.—People v. Frederighi, 192 Mich. 165.

¶ 2955. Breach of the peace must embrace some sort of violent as well as dangerous conduct; an undefined charge of breach of the peace, and nothing more, can lead to no trial.—Robison v. Miner, 68 Mich. 549.

§ 648. ——Defects and objections.

Waiver of defects by plea, see post § 650.
Amendments of warrant by justice or on appeal, see also post ¶ 3019.
Waiver of defect in complaint by treating case as one for circuit court and giving bail, see ante ¶ 367.
Amendment of warrant to show necessary element of crime, see Arrest § 18.

¶ 2956. Mere clerical errors in a warrant should be taken advantage of before trial of the cause where the complaint contains the omitted word.—People v. O'Brien, 68 Mich. 468.

¶ 2957. The word "there," left out of a warrant for a wilful trespass in relation to the "growing and being" of grain on the land, is a mere clerical omission, which corrects itself in the reading.—People v. O'Brien, 68 Mich. 468.

¶ 2958. Where the prosecution in a criminal proceeding before a justice does not demur or otherwise object to a special plea for either form or substance, the justice should not reject it on grounds which the prosecution seems disposed to waive.—Preston v. People, 45 Mich. 486.

¶ 2959. Where a warrant has issued upon facts positively sworn to by the complaining witness as within his knowledge, a want of personal knowledge on his part cannot be shown for the purpose of avoiding the warrant and defeating the jurisdiction that has already attached to try the offense.—People v. Schottey, 66 Mich. 708.

¶ 2960. A justice's jurisdiction is not affected by an omission to sign the return on a warrant, where it appears that the party was arrested and brought before him by an officer upon a lawful warrant, and pleaded not guilty, and made no motion to dismiss until the return day, nearly a week after the arraignment.—People v. Kenyon, 93 Mich. 19.

¶ 2961. The proceedings in a criminal case for larceny commenced by complaint before a justice of the peace were sufficient to give the circuit court jurisdiction, where, although the complaint did not state the year in which the alleged crime was committed, the year was correctly stated in the warrant, and although the complaint charged the crime upon affiant's belief, and not upon his knowledge, and no fault was found with the information. —People v. Van Every, How. N. P. 254.

§ 649. Appearance by and functions of prosecuting attorney.

Control or approval by prosecuting attorney, see also post § 649.
Sickness of prosecuting attorney as ground for continuance, see post ¶ 2969.
Approval as factor in jurisdiction, see ante § 92.
Appointment of assistant prosecutors, see Attorneys §§ 64-66.
Statutory provisions as to approval of prosecution, see Comp. L. 1915, § 15811.

¶ 2962. Prosecuting attorneys have no discretion to stop all criminal prosecutions before justices; but a justice should not, usually, hold a defendant to bail or convict him on trial when the prosecuting attorney in good faith advises him that no crime is made out.—Beecher v. Anderson, 45 Mich. 543.

¶ 2963. Where the prosecuting attorney had instructed a justice of the peace to entertain actions where security for costs had been filed, and had named, as prosecutor, a certain attorney who appeared at the justice's request and conducted the trial of a case before him in which such security was filed, on certiorari, there was no ground of reversal, it not appearing that the attorney acted in the interest of any private party, and no objection having been made to his appearance.—People v. Etter, 72 Mich. 175.

§ 650. Arraignment and pleas and docketing case.

Demand for jury trial or waiver of same, see post § 652.
Withdrawal of pleas and retrial of facts on appeal, see post § 665.
Reading charge and requiring plea thereto, see Comp. L. 1915, § 15773.

¶ 2964. A plea of former conviction in a justice's court need not be in writing.—Preston v. People, 45 Mich. 486.

¶ 2965. A prisoner in refusing to plead does not admit any authority in the court or waive any right to object to the jurisdictional sufficiency of the complaint against him; the entry by the justice of the peace of the plea of not guilty could not aid an invalid complaint or preclude the defendant from insisting on its invalidity.—People v. Gregory, 30 Mich. 371.

¶ 2966. Pleading to a complaint presented in justice's court waives the irregularity of omitting to issue a subpoena before serving the warrant.—People v. Allen, 51 Mich. 176.

¶ 2967. A claim that a justice is disqualified because of the fact that he held a clerical position with the industrial home for girls, the superintendent of which was the complaining witness in the proceeding, is waived by a plea justice.—Pe

¶ 2968. the peace failed to d one of the offense ch plaint. F writ of ce ceedings r viction we tion shoul regularitie
329.

§ 651. Co
Continuan inform Time for
L. 19

¶ 2969.
torney er adjournm tice for v days is n
Shufelt, 6

¶ 2970. journ a ing witn writing c accompar what the ple v. Sh

¶ 2971. the justi within o etc., shal which c such tim thirty d not lose reason o applicat consent return
Mich. 4

¶ 2972
the pea from D to Jan. prosecu
is comn cuting by tele to have defenda Weeks,

¶ 297 of the cured specifie that a tinuan was in spondent, and such adjournment might be had at his request without depriving the justice of jurisdiction.—People v. Parsons, 163 Mich. 329.

§ 652. Jury trials and procedure for jury.

Provisions as to trial by justice or by jury, see Comp. L. 1915, § 15774 et seq.

Making out jury list and summoning jurors, see Comp. L. 1915, § 15776 et seq.

¶ 2974. In trials before a justice the accused may expressly waive a jury, but his silence or neglect to demand a jury is not to be deemed a waiver.—Ward v. People, 30 Mich. 116.

¶ 2975. After pleading not guilty to a criminal complaint for a simple assault and battery a defendant, on being asked by the justice before whom he was brought if he wished a trial by jury, declared that he did not, and submitted to a trial without calling for a jury; held, that his trial was not in violation of his constitutional rights.—Ward v. People, 30 Mich. 116.

¶ 2976. Where a defendant in a criminal case triable before a justice of the peace is asked if he desires a jury, and replies, through his attorney, that the court can do as it chooses, as he shall put in no defense, and the prosecuting attorney gives a negative answer to a like question, a jury will be deemed to have been waived.—People v. Weeks, 99 Mich. 86.

¶ 2977. The right of trial by the court is substantial when expressly given by statute; and under How. St. § 7097, providing that if, in a criminal prosecution in justice's court, no jury is demanded by the accused, the court shall proceed to try the issue, and section 7099, providing that if the accused shall not have waived his right to a trial by jury, a jury shall be summoned, the accused has a right to a trial by the court without a jury, and it is error for the court to order a jury against his protest after he has waived one.—People v. Steele, 94 Mich. 437.

¶ 2978. An assault and battery case in justice court may be tried by a jury of only four persons, as the Const. art. VI, § 28, provides that a jury in courts not of record may consist of less than twelve men, and under Comp. L. 1897, §§ 1024, 1026, a jury might be entirely waived, and therefore the respondent could consent to a trial by less than six.—People v. Lane, 124 Mich. 271.

¶ 2978a. The provision in Comp. L. 1897, § 1026, "nor shall the jury consist of less than six persons," has reference solely to the selection of the jury and does not prohibit the trying of a defendant in justice court for assault and battery before a jury of four men.—People v. Lane, 124 Mich. 271.

§ 653. Trials and evidence.

Retrial of facts on appeal, see post § 665.

[Note. The relevancy and competency of evidence will be governed by the general law of criminal evidence, and, though the precedents thereon have almost all arisen in cases prosecuted by indictment or information; the cases collated, ante VIII, should be consulted.]

Relevancy and competency of evidence, see ante §§ 146, 151 et seq.

Degree of proof required, see ante § 301 et seq.

Sufficiency of proof of venue of crime, see ante ¶ 1377.

Urging or coercing jury, see post ¶ 2981.

Procedure before juries, see Comp. L. 1915, § 15782.

¶ 2979. In a prosecution before a justice with a jury for criminal slander the jury disagreed. On the second trial, a jury was waived and respondent found guilty on sufficient evidence. Held, it was immaterial what was proved on the first trial.—People v. Parsons, 163 Mich. 329.

§ 654. Statements and arguments to jury or justice.

Urging and coercing jury, see post ¶ 2981.

¶ 2980. A person on trial before a justice should make his statement to the jury at the proper time, before the prosecutor has summed up, and if he does not do so he cannot complain of the justice's refusal to allow him to do so afterward.—Palmer v. People, 43 Mich. 414.

§ 655. Verdicts.

Delivery and recording of verdict, see Comp. L. 1915, § 15783.

¶ 2981. After the jury in a criminal case in justice's court have announced their inability to agree, it is error to allow the prosecuting attorney, against defendant's objection, to question the jury as to the cause of disagreement, and to read law to them, and to state to them what verdict they may legally render; and a subsequent verdict must be set aside.—People v. Hicks, 72 Mich. 181.

§ 656. Sentence, judgment and entry of same.

Power of justices and inferior courts and magistrates to sentence to houses of correction, see Crimes § 29.

Binding out to apprenticeship, see post § 657.

Sentence to reformatory, see post § 658.

Necessity of examination on plea of guilty to ascertain if plea was free and voluntary, see ante § 114, ¶ 575.

Limit of punishment for offense within jurisdiction of justice, see also ante § 484.

Conformity of mittimus to judgment, see post § 659.

Judgment on appeal, see post § 666.

Statutory provisions as to sentences, see Comp. L. 1915, §§ 15784, 15808.
Discharge on verdict or finding of acquittal, see Comp. L. 1915, § 15785.
Provisions for execution and enforcement of judgment, see Comp. L. 1915, § 15787 et seq.
Requisites of docket entries in criminal cases, see Comp. L. 1915, §§ 15809, 15810.
Certificate of conviction and filing thereof, see Comp. L. 1915, § 15794 et seq.

¶ 2982. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 5927, it is the duty of justices of the peace when vagrants are brought before them, to examine their dockets and ascertain from the officers as far as practicable whether the offenders have been previously convicted, since the statute provides different punishment in such case.—Hutchinson v. Ionia Co. Sup'rs, 130 Mich. 62.

¶ 2983. A judgment rendered by a justice in criminal case is not valid unless the entry thereof on the docket is signed officially by the justice.—Howard v. People, 3 Mich. 207.

¶ 2984. The limit of imprisonment by a justice is three months, and the imposition of a fine will not permit a longer sentence, which, if imposed, is void for the excess.—People v. Harrington, 75 Mich. 112.

¶ 2985. A sentence by a justice of the peace for a violation of the liquor law imposed a fine of $50, and in default of payment, ninety days' imprisonment, unless said fine should be sooner paid. Held, that as How. St. § 2275, contemplated an immediate imprisonment, which might continue ninety days with or without payment of the fine and costs, the sentence was within the authorized punishment, but lighter than it might have been, and was valid.—People v. Rouse, 72 Mich. 59.

¶ 2986. Where the statute has prescribed, as the penalty for an offense, fine or imprisonment for a limited time, or both, a judgment that defendant pay a fine and stand committed until paid is void because adjudging an indefinite term of imprisonment.—Howard v. People, 3 Mich. 207.

¶ 2987. A justice's sentence "to pay a fine of $30, and in default thereof to go to jail for thirty days," was held bad for ambiguity if it be uncertain whether it orders imprisonment by way of compelling payment of the fine or imposes an alternative punishment.—Brownbridge v. People, 38 Mich. 751.

¶ 2988. A sentence by a police magistrate to pay the fine imposed and the costs of prosecution within twenty-four hours or suffer imprisonment for a period named is void.—People v. Carroll, 44 Mich. 371.

¶ 2989. Laws of 1881, Act No. 6 (How. St. § 7107), authorizes a justice, in cases where an offender shall be offense punishable at the d court, either by fine or i both, to award a condition order him to pay a fine v costs, within a limited time, thereof to suffer such imp provided by law and award —People v. Miller, 49 Mich.

¶ 2990. An alternative se tice to pay a fine or in de is void.—Brownbridge v. P 751; Donnoly v. People, 38 M
v. Carroll, 44 Mich. 371.

¶ 2991. A justice of the power to sentence persons him to the state house of c
Silverthorn, 73 Mich. 644.

¶ 2992. Where a justice o imposed a sentence in a c excess of that authorized the sentence is void as to and valid as to the extent which he was authorized re Kenney, 147 Mich. 678.

¶ 2993. Under Pub. Acts
§ 1, subd. 8, providing that v inal case before a justice sentence in excess of that is imposed it shall not be v valid to the extent of the a sentence of nine months of an assault and battery is months' imprisonment, that of the jurisdiction.—In re K 678.

§ 657. ——Binding out or a ¶ 2994. A person convict conduct cannot be bound ou tice, or committed to impri labor for any period, wit sonally present.—In re Fow

§ 658. Sentence to reformat

Sentence to state house o
ante § 656.
Proceedings for commitmen
linquents, see Incompet

¶ 2995. Laws 1867, p. 17
§ 9817), requires commit form school by police co approved by the proper c judge "upon a reviewal o or testimony taken or h
Held, that an approval o dered after a trial wher was taken in writing, the mitted for approval being itself, was not a compliance and that the imprisonmen
In re O'Leary, 25 Mich. 1

¶ 2996. A justice comm to the reform school u twenty-one, and the judge of probate approved the commitment. The extreme limit allowed by law is the age of eighteen, and the justice altered the commitment accordingly; and the amended process, which was not approved, remained the only warrant for detaining the prisoner. Held, that it was void and the prisoner must be discharged.—In re Amidon, 40 Mich. 628.

¶ 2997. To authorize the incarceration of a person in the reform school at Lansing the probate judge's certificate of approval must show that he has reviewed "the proceedings and testimony taken or had on the trial."—In re Pierce, 74 Mich. 239.

¶ 2998. Commitment to the industrial home for girls is insufficient where a finding by the magistrate as to the person's age is not certified—there being only a recital that the jury finds such person to be over ten years of age—and where no report of the county agent is attached (How. St. §§ 9836, 9895).—In re Gates, 93 Mich. 644.

§ 659. Warrant of commitment.

¶ 2999. A mittimus which recited a conviction for "the third offense of selling," etc., intoxicating liquors, contrary to the prohibitory liquor-law, was not open to the objection that it did not fairly import that the prisoner had been twice before convicted of a similar offense; the expression "third offense," as used in said law, signified the third offense that had been legally ascertained and determined, and in that sense it was equivalent to "third conviction"; in the use of terms in his mittimus the justice could not be required to be more technically accurate than the statute.—In re Buddington, 29 Mich. 472.

¶ 3000. A warrant of commitment must follow and correspond accurately with the judgment. Any material variation will render the commitment void and the justice liable.—La Roe v. Roeser, 8 Mich. 537.

¶ 3001. A fine was imposed by a justice of the peace, with imprisonment for ten days in default of payment. Payment not being made, the justice issued his warrant, directing that defendant be imprisoned until the fine was paid, or until he was discharged by due course of law. Held that, as the warrant did not follow the judgment, it was clearly in excess of jurisdiction, and void.—La Roe v. Roeser, 8 Mich. 537.

§ 660. Proceedings to require security to keep the peace.

Complaint for "breach of the peace," see ante ¶ 2955.

Sufficiency of proceedings to require security to keep the peace where sued for as malicious prosecution, see Malicious Prosecution, II.

Statutory provisions respecting proceedings to prevent crime, see Comp. L. 1915, chap. 265.

¶ 3002. Criminal recognizances to keep the peace must be executed by the accused personally.—In re Fowler, 49 Mich. 234.

§ 661. Costs and fees.

Office of security for costs, see also ante § 93.

Propriety of inclusion in sentence of provision for commitment until payment of fines and costs, see ante § 656.

County liability for fees and expenses in municipal and justices' courts, see Counties § 33.

Prosecutions in police court as criminal prosecutions within statutes governing application of moneys from fines, see Counties § 38.

Certification of finding to impose costs on complainant, see Comp. L. 1915, § 15785.

Provisions for entry of judgment for costs on failure to secure appeal, see Comp. L. 1915, § 15787.

Reporting to prosecuting attorneys on cases wherein People may be liable for costs, see Comp. L. 1915, § 15813.

¶ 3003. The police act of Grand Rapids requires the police justice to collect the costs imposed by him upon individuals, but not such costs as are payable by the county to the city under the act.—People ex rel. McBride v. Kent County Sup'rs, 38 Mich. 421.

¶ 3004. The trial fee of one dollar allowed to a police justice may be charged in all cases, however short the trial, but not where the case was dismissed or a nolle prosequi entered.—People ex rel. City of Grand Rapids v. Kent County Sup'rs, 40 Mich. 481.

¶ 3005. The act establishing a police court for Grand Rapids makes it discretionary with the police justice to require security for costs from the complaining witness in all cases. Held, that this cannot be limited to cases arising under the city charter and ordinances; and, to the extent of making the power discretionary, supersedes Comp. L. 1871, § 7488, How. St. § 9063, as to offenses generally; and that the auditing of costs by the board of supervisors cannot depend upon the way this discretion is exercised.—People ex rel. City of Grand Rapids v. Kent County Sup'rs, 40 Mich. 481.

¶ 3006. The county was liable for the sheriff's fees in prosecutions under the prohibitory liquor-law.—People ex rel. Mixer v. Manistee County Sup'rs, 26 Mich. 422.

¶ 3007. The sheriff's fees or compensation for conveying to the place of confinement a female prisoner convicted under How. St. § 9286, of keeping a house of ill-fame, and sentenced under How. St. § 9864, to imprisonment in the Detroit house of correction, are state charges, regardless of whether or not the county in which the conviction is had has a contract for the reception and retention of convicted persons in said house of correction.—Hursley v. Auditor-General, 90 Mich. 439.

§ 662. Appeals.

Appeal bonds or recognizances, see post § 663.
Questions reviewable, see post § 664.
Retrial of facts on appeal, see post § 665.
Judgment or relief on appeal, see post § 666.
Certiorari, see post §§ 668, 669.
Retrial or sentence after remand, see post § 667.
Sufficiency of proceedings to give jurisdiction on appeal, see also ante ¶ 2961.
Review of judgments for violating ordinances, see Municipal Corporations, XVI, B.
Legislative power to grant or deny appeal, see Constitutional Law § 191.
Statutory provisions for appealing, see Comp. L. 1915, § 15786 et seq.
Requisites of justice's return to appeal, see Comp. L. 1915, § 15786.
Provisions as to appeals from justice court of Saginaw, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 4, § 27.
Power to issue capias to compel appearance to appeal of appellant liberated on recognizance, see Comp. L. 1915, § 15832.

¶ 3008. The prosecution in the circuit on an appeal in a criminal case from the court of a justice of the peace rests finally upon the proceeding instituted before the justice, and if that is invalid for jurisdictional defects the prosecution on appeal is equally so.—People v. Gregory, 30 Mich. 371.

¶ 3009. Whether an appeal lies from a conviction in the police court of Detroit to the Wayne circuit court, quære, the court being equally divided on the question.—People ex rel. Jeschly v. Detroit Police Justice, 7 Mich. 456.

§ 663. ——Bonds or recognizances for appeal.

Refusal of recognizance for appeal as false imprisonment of prisoner detained in consequence, see False Imprisonment § 13.
Provisions of statute, see Comp. L. 1915, § 15786.

¶ 3010. Where a criminal proceeding is appealed from justice's court, the requirement in the recognizance that the accused shall prosecute his appeal to effect contemplates a prosecution in the usual way of trial and verdict.—People v. Richmond, 57 Mich. 399.

¶ 3011. A bond differs so essentially from a recognizance that an offer of a bond by a party desiring to appeal, under Laws 1861, p. 80, How. St. § 7109, from a conviction of a criminal offense before a justice, no matter what the amount or how good the sureties, would not impose upon the justice the duty of receiving or noticing it.—Guenther v. Whiteacre, 24 Mich. 504.

¶ 3012. Where one convicted of an offense before a justice tenders to him, for the purpose of making an appeal, a recognizance in the highest sum fixed by the statute, there is no occasion for the justice to fix the amount thereof, but he might, on examination of the sureties, reject them for insufficiency.—Guenther v. Whiteacre, 24 Mich. 504.

¶ 3013. It seems that in an action on a recognizance given on appeal from a justice's court the surety therein is not estopped from showing that there is no valid judgment in force against his principal.—People v. Carroll, 44 Mich. 371.

¶ 3014. A recognizance on an appeal from a justice's court cannot be said to have been given voluntarily when the judgment is void.—People v. Carroll, 44 Mich. 371.

§ 664. ——Questions reviewable.

On certiorari, see post § 668.

¶ 3015. The objection that the name of the county has been left out of the venue of a complaint cannot, if it has any merit at all, be raised for the first time on appeal from a justice, if the complaint states that the offense was committed at a specified place that is in fact within the county.—People v. Telford, 56 Mich. 541.

¶ 3016. A justice enters what he understands to be the substance of a plea in his docket, and if none but a plainly untenable objection has been taken to it, a court of review will presume that it was otherwise sufficient.—Preston v. People, 45 Mich. 486.

§ 665. ——Retrial on the facts.

¶ 3017. Plea of guilty may be withdrawn on appeal, and the case will be retried on its merits.—People v. Richmond, 57 Mich. 399.

§ 666. ——Judgment or relief on appeal.

¶ 3018. On an appeal from a justice's court to the circuit in a criminal prosecution for an assault and battery, the circuit court is confined to the same measure of punishment to which the justice is limited by statute.—In re Irvin, 29 Mich. 43.

¶ 3019. On appeal from a conviction by a justice the circuit judge cannot amend the warrant so as to state the value of the property taken in the larceny which is the subject of the prosecution, though the justice might have done so.—People v. Belcher, 58 Mich. 325.

§ 667. Retrial or sentence after remand.

¶ 3020. A person sentenced by a justice to ten days' imprisonment removed his case by certiorari, and afterwards obtained a stay of proceedings in order to take out a writ of error. The conviction was affirmed and the case remanded, after which the period of imprisonment ran four times before the sentence could be carried out. Held, that this did not divest the jurisdiction to put it into execution.—People v. Blake, 54 Mich. 239.

§ 668. Certiorari.

Certiorari under statute to review civil judgments by justices, see Justices of the Peace, VI.
Common-law certiorari to review justices' proceedings, see Certiorari.
Certiorari to judgments for violating ordinances, see Municipal Corporations, XVI, B.
General certiorari practice, see Certiorari.
Provisions for certiorari, see Comp. L. 1915, § 15797 et seq.

¶ 3021. Certiorari did not lie to remove to the circuit court a justice's judgment in a prosecution under the prohibitory liquor-law of February 2, 1855; appeal being the only remedy provided by that statute.—People v. Farwell, 4 Mich. 556.

¶ 3022. Upon the hearing of a certiorari from the circuit court to a justice of the peace in a criminal case, no errors are considered that are not made a ground for the allowance of the writ. No errors are assignable, but the case must be decided on the return.—People v. Hobson, 48 Mich. 27.

¶ 3023. Unless error appears by the return of the justice it cannot be made out otherwise.—People v. Hobson, 48 Mich. 27; People v. Hux, 68 Mich. 477.

¶ 3024. On certiorari from the circuit court a justice's return of what he knows officially must control the result on certiorari, and a judgment cannot be reversed except for prejudicial matter returned on his knowledge.—People v. Etter, 72 Mich. 175.

¶ 3025. On certiorari to review a conviction before a justice of the peace respondent can claim no error not shown by the return.—People v. Etter, 72 Mich. 175.

¶ 3026. Where the affidavit for certiorari charged that the officer who arrested and testified against the defendants was afterwards the attending officer in the jury room and remained with the jury during their deliberations, and the justice returned that he had no personal knowledge on the subject, but since the trial had been informed by some of the jurors that the charge was true, the justice's return of what he knew officially must determine the result, and that the conviction should stand.—People v. Etter, 72 Mich. 175.

§ 669. ——Review and judgment.

Retrial after remand, see ante § 667.

¶ 3027. A justice is not held to strict rules as to the reception of evidence in proceedings for disorderly conduct, and his rulings will not be reviewed by the supreme court on certiorari further than to see that injustice has not been done by them.—Palmer v. People, 43 Mich. 414.

¶ 3028. Objections to the sufficiency of a complaint and warrant for violation of the liquor law should be made before the justice who tries the complaint; and if not then raised certiorari will not ordinarily issue to inquire into their sufficiency.—People v. Heffron, 53 Mich. 527.

¶ 3029. The judgment to be enforced on an affirmance upon certiorari to a justice is that of the justice himself; the statutory provision that when it is affirmed the circuit court shall order it to be executed does not preclude such delays as may be necessary to take the case to the supreme court; nor do such delays divest jurisdiction to enforce it on final affirmance.—People v. Hobson, 48 Mich. 27; People v. Blake, 54 Mich. 239.

INDIGNITIES TO INFAMOUS CRIMES.

Cross-References.

Indignities—
To spouse as cruelty, see Divorce § 19.
As matter aggravating damages, see Damages § 160.
Indirect; Indirection—
Damages indirectly accruing, see Damages; Eminent Domain § 37 et seq.
Circumstantial or inferential proofs and evidence, see Evidence, III, X; Indictment, VIII, B, C.
Rules of pleading, see Equity, VII; Pleading, I; Indictment, I, B.
Individual Acts and Dealings—
Distinction between acts done as individual and those done as representative and liability respectively, see Agency; Estates of Decedents, X; Trusts, VIII; Corporations, XVII.
Rights of partners individually and dealings as individuals, see Partnership, IV, V, VII.
Indorsements—
On stock certificates for transfer, see Corporations § 276.
On negotiable instruments, see Negotiable Instruments.
As mode of transferring gift of note or chose in action, see Gifts § 17.
On executions, see Executions § 13.
On informations and indictments, see Indictment § 20.
On writs and process, see Process, I.
Inducement—
To action as element of estoppel or fraud, see Estoppel § 29; Fraud § 8 et seq.
Allegations by way of inducement, see Pleading; Equity, VII.

Indulgence—
In the sense of forbearance for a consideration, see Contracts, V; Suretyship, II; and see also references under Extensions; Forbearance.

Inequality—
As badge of fraud or undue influence, see Fraud, II; Fraudulent Conveyances, I; Gifts, IV; Wills, III.
Construction of wills in view of inequality in shares, see Wills, VI.

In Esse—
Construction of wills respecting persons and facts in esse, see Wills, VI.
Validity of future estates suspensive of power of alienation for want of takers in esse, see Perpetuities.

Inevitab
Nonl

Excu

Dist

Inexperi
Mut

Infamou
See
Conv

GBP
10/13/21